destroy that, to create imbalance, to try and improve on perfection. The only thing that needs improving is our awareness of that perfection and with that awareness and alignment, humanity will understand its place in this world and will cease to forge a mockery, a shabby imitation which can never surpass the truth and beauty which nature supplies. You are the centre link of the above and below, the “one thing” and with that understanding will come awareness of all your extensions and with that awareness will come content far beyond the pleasures of pursuing individuated egotism. Happiness and truth come from alignment with the universal fractal, the order which underlies all that can be abstracted, but sits on a throne of unspeakable egalitarian Chaos and on this throne you will find immortality, as you will be within all things everywhere, changing and remaining always the same.

Galaxies

Spinning points of existing material creates the force of recognizable stability from which crystallization is given a habitat to grow.

Spheres of Ursprache, the divine language of pure meaning,

That which is the centrifuge for fractalated abstract tangents cascading outward as constellations of meaning.

Radiating out from these growing branches of symbols is attempted understanding, received as only the most degraded essence of the original unmentionable point.

These meme paradigm structures can grow to amazing complexity, covering the entire surface of the sphere.

Their beauty is so staggering, that without the proper eye you forget the source, that they are the shadow of something much more powerful and overwhelming.

Gravities reach out extending to create perfect balance for the orbit of smaller spheres.

Like a pepperoni pizza there is nothing but systems each resembling the whole.

Leaking out is what refuses to be contained,

We must watch the watcher.

An unseen hand orchestrating the offspring of limitless nothing.

Repelling all suggestion of total personal comprehension this being fools itself, Nearly omnipotent except when it manages to obfuscate itself by isolating segments of consciousness from itself.

Such is the power of being able to do anything,

With no exhaustion of supply possible, demand drops completely.

Ironically the isolated ones see only limitation and know only demand,

The reason why the perceived separation was conceived.

Little did they know what would happen when all demands were met.

They didn't understand, it wasn't the things they wanted, but something worth wanting.

There are many Anarchists who find the very idea of any spiritual reality, any divine being offensive and preposterous, but I think this is largely due to a narrow view of what that can mean, or has meant, and largely due to hating the most popular religions, such as Christianity and Islam. To me nature is divine, and although not purely composed of atoms, the divine is all of nature, so what we call supernatural, if it has any existence in reality is by definition actually part of nature, anything that exists is natural, anything that exists then is divine. To love the divine is to love nature and to love reality and while we might not understand all of reality, or what is or isn't in fact part of nature, this is what Paganism, Alchemy, Shamanism and the Occult try to explore and to experiment with. Like branches of science they pertain to specialized aspects of nature, but these "spiritual" schools of thought and traditions try to keep a holistic view with what people understand to be "secular" and materialist science, it is just that they have integrated it with psychology and believe in things which a purely materialist science is not always capable of experimenting on. (If nature is divine then it is ultimately impossible to be secular) As nature is everywhere, is everything and created everything, and all things possible are within it, it is all powerful and omnipresent. Since nature contains all information, including us and our thoughts, but also the information which has never been recognized, than nature itself is in a very real sense all knowing, since something will always exist, nature is also immortal and since physics says that information cannot be destroyed, that omniscience is also eternal.

This distinction between natural and supernatural which many atheists hold today was ironically imposed by the Christian church so that they could hold absolute authority, even when the first scientists proved ideas thought by the church to be heretical. Even though some mystical traditions (in agreement with quantum physics) believe physical reality is an illusion, the illusion is part of reality as an illusion, nature has as part of it illusions, optical and otherwise, but there are also other non physical things which do exist, it is just that according to these traditions the forms of nature are relativistic, impermanent, and interconnected, or mutually interdependent forms of energy. Clearly nature exists in some way and so it is a mistake to argue the divine does not exist, even if you are a strict materialist rationalist, the Earth you stand on is divine whether or not you like to use that word.

Now some may argue that for the universe to be caused by the divine it must be an "intelligent" force according to a predetermined plan, but many religions do not define the creator as an intelligent being as westerners have been trained to think and where they do this is largely a metaphor. Any divine force that exists is itself nature, rather than creating nature as any such force which exists, which creates more nature is never separate from its creation in the totality of what we call nature. If the force has all qualities which we generally ascribe to divinity, being the source of all things and existing as all things, it is omnipresent and all powerful, using all possible forces and abilities, containing all awareness it is also all knowing, then such a force is by definition divine. Such a force has no need for planning anything; it could perhaps just change everything in an instant, but also if it knows everything then it knows the perfect way to make things and so planning is unnecessary, especially since science shows that some of nature exists outside of "time." Any divinity which did in fact exist would exist in nature and so nature is that which contains all things and is more primary than any conception of divinity could be, since such a conception itself would only exist in nature.

There is a misconception that all people who believe in a divinity believe as the Abrahamic traditions that divinity created reality, there is a variety of ideas but Hermeticism offers some of the most interesting that I have found. It states like other mystical traditions that there never was a "time" when reality did not exist, there was no beginning and there cannot be an end. In an infinite reality all things must always exist at all times, infinity is always infinite in all ways or else it is not infinity. Though the big bang may have occurred, science shows us now reality is not limited to this "universe," that no matter where we are in time, we are connected to all in that singularity which exists beyond time. Not to mention that the singularity which existed before the big bang was itself part of reality and so the big bang was not the start of existence, it was the unfolding of reality. Scientists say the big bang was created by "membranes" in a higher dimension hitting each other and that there are potentially endless other big bangs out there, but just how these membranes came about is anybody's guess. (Showing just how conditional science's grasp of reality actually is) The idea that reality was created is based on the assumption that time exists, but creation cannot occur outside the context of time. The word "beginning" is itself a reference to time and so the "beginning of time" is a redundant concept, there can be no beginning without time existing in the first place and so looking for a cause to the beginning of time is a fool's errand. (Especially since causality is also dependent on time existing) When something is created it is the time when it begins to exist, but the past present and future all exist within nature, the past is not destroyed and the future is not created and so nature is all that is, even when we are outside of time in the realms which mystics and quantum physicists speak of. If you take a more Gnostic or Buddhist view of things then physical reality is illusion and the start of the illusion was not really divine at all, but the true reality, the true nature is beyond it and is what we are striving for, but as I said the illusion is part of nature as well, it is still all one in the fullness of the void.

Natures "intelligence" would be so far outside of limited human intelligence that it would be unrecognizable to our own concepts of such things, it's mind would not be limited to abstractions, nor would it create things so much as grow itself, its body being the universe becoming more complex. Causality may provide reasons for things but all causes and effects are natural and so is part of the divine as well. Since nature is everything, nature is aware of everything at least in a Zen like sense of "no self," but that nature is not limited to an ego which so many humans prize is not a sign of its lack of holiness, but rather some of the proof of how sacred it is. It might be that humans are most of that western view of egoistic self awareness and it is very true we do not know everything about nature and so some might claim nature is not totally omniscient, but this would not change that nature is divine. If we think harder though we realize that parts of nature exist outside of time, in other non local quantum dimensions, so if in the future, if anything in nature ever does know all things about nature, it will be connected to this realm outside time and so through this non local realm nature is all knowing at all times. Even if we humans alone are responsible for this unfolding self awareness of nature, mirrored in our collective awareness of nature, this is still very much in line with many mystical philosophies, as we are the divine or nature remembering its true self. The more we can think of ourselves as part of nature, the more we can unfold our own personal self awareness, the more science can truly understand the nature which is supposedly separate, the better we will be at functioning within reality, within nature and so with each other and all life in a harmonious way.

To many people today the idea of worshipping nature is really stupid, why would anyone worship the sun or moon? Why should anyone worship the forest or Earth? The fact that some people don't understand any significance to this logic is pretty frightening, after all we are all literally dependent on nature, so if you aren't grateful about that then really you don't appreciate life itself. There are many, many good reasons to "worship" "nature" first of all like I said we are all dependent on it, without the sun we would freeze and die, and nothing would grow. Without the moon the tides decrease dramatically and the oceans would rise as its gravitational pull raises the water up and makes the Earth oblong. The moon also helps to stabilize us in orbit and so without it the climate would change so much (especially in the polar areas) that it is questionable whether humans could survive at all, what is known however is that we are much better off with it and for a number of reasons. All the universe is alive as far as I am concerned, from lava and water and other natural processes rocks and crystals are formed and dissolve or erode, from super nova's and the cores of the stars all matter is created, the universe is in a constant state of flux and transformation, it is all alive, all worth our love. Without nature we would have nothing, she is the mother to us all whether or not you want to think of her within the cultural context of what we call a "conscious being."

This so called struggle with nature is pathology, perhaps the deepest level of pathology there is, nothing that exists can be outside of nature as nature is all that exists, for some reason many humans don't seem to grasp how futile it is to deny that. To get more abstract let's look at some of the definitions of nature, "the world of living things and the outdoors, the forces and processes that produce and control all the phenomena of the material world, the essential characteristics and qualities of a person or thing, the natural or real aspect of a person, place, or thing.” All these things are worth exploring and loving, when we understand nature, our own nature or the nature of the world we understand all things. Yes the divine transcends the physical but as above so below, and so as the divine is in all things, by studying nature we can learn about it, but we also owe our respect and love to it. We should always seek out the fundamental quintessence of things and when we realize the fundamental nature of the natural world is life itself, then what masochist wouldn't worship nature?

As Alchemists and Pagans of old knew, it is through the study of nature and observable reality that we can learn to better understand the unseen divine, taking the opposite mindset of Christian theology that it is through the study of a “revealed” god that we can learn about reality. Through this study of nature and how various “elements” interact, an Alchemist can learn of nature's reflection as found in the metaphysical realms, but also in human psychology and so forth. The metaphors which are created to explain these findings, the formulas that describe and encode all the information, both the metaphysical and physical become the myths that when taken dogmatically are known as religions. The renaissance Alchemists that planted the seeds of scientific discovery did so through the interpretation of myth and mystical texts which seek to understand reality and it is from this melding of experimentation and divine revelation, that we get the essence of Alchemy and mysticism. From this practice of studying nature in order to understand the indivisible totality of all things, we get the bastard children of mysticism and the Occult, what we named religion and science, who quarrel amongst each other, both blind to the unifying bridge which is their original source.

You may not feel like worshipping the sun or moon but all should realize the importance of loving the nature of the sun and moon and what other natural things represent. We should all be thankful to the animals and plants that we eat and have great respect for the natural world which sustains and creates us all, to do otherwise is not only the closest thing to sacrilege I can think of, it's also suicidal. The physical is the tactile symbol of natural forces and so to understand those forces is crucial to spiritual growth and to love those forces is crucial to mental well being if we are to be in line with any kind of truth. Within Pagan mythologies are symbol systems rich with meaning beyond the literal worship of the sun and moon, to mock those who find meaning in such practices is often like mocking someone for finding meaning in a book when all we see are strange characters called letters. In the story of the Greek creation, Father Sky and Mother Earth fell in love and created life. Not only is this true in the sense of a simplistic literal scientific view of evolution where life forms from the forces and atoms of the atmosphere and Earth, but also as the metaphorical archetypes of the Male and Female principles of the universe. If you look at the widest basis for anything, you see the same interconnected link of the one underlying structure found everywhere else.

Without reverence of what creates and supports us we get delusions like it's a good idea to pollute until there is a patch of garbage in the pacific twice the size of Texas, to put poisons in the air, water and soil, to burn down the rainforest to grow soy plants for cows to eat so we can live off big macs until we are morbidly obese. There are all kinds of examples of how we have raped our mother and this stems from the idea that we are separate from nature, that we have the right to do whatever we want with it, rather than understand our place within her. We largely have the Abrahamic religions to thank for this view, so while some say a Pagan is corrupt and shallow, an ignorant primitive or worse, the belief that it's a good idea to destroy that which gives us life is really beyond foolish. Maybe we can transcend but it is absolute selfishness to not love the life forms that are all around in the natural world, everything is alive and so everything deserves our care and reverence. If you think you can transcend without realizing that love and taking responsibility for that love, then I think you are blinded by your own escapism and ironically this blindness will prevent that transcendence to a more etheric realm of nature.

Again I say, there is no thing in existence which is supernatural or unnatural, all things which exist, exist within nature, even if that's not physical nature, it is still natural, even if its created by humans, we are part of nature and so is everything we do. The difference is that many of the things we create are built on the death of the very systems needed to sustain life itself, it is often the synthetic mocking of the original creation found in the world and leading us further in to ignorance and madness. For all these reasons we must worship not our own creations, but the nature that allows, creates and supports all life and their creations and exists sustainably and immortally through its own natural cycles. To do otherwise is to seek nothing but death but death too is part of nature and so anyone who does not worship their understanding of nature is consciously ignorant. To worship nature is to worship reality and the discovery and understanding of it, it is to love life for life is the gift of nature and the means by which we know it. If you do not love nature, you do not love anything, you do not love yourself, you do not love your hate, you do not love nothingness, you do not love love and you will only love ignorance and denial and if that is what you really want to be, so be it, it is natural.

Panentheism and pantheism on the other hand makes everything sacred, makes a person want to live in equality and balance with everything. You are part of natures recycling system, it is all one process of which you are inextricably linked, and so it is in your best interests to live sustainably, within the perpetual rhythms of nature, building healthy relationships with the entire world around you. We are all united in one big physical and Alchemical reaction, you have ten times more single celled organisms, bacteria and the like than you do human cells making up your body, constantly interacting, moving and changing places with the micro organisms of the outside world. We are intimately involved with the environment and interacting with it at a microscopic level, changing our very bodies every 7 years, all outside of our awareness. Microorganisms breed so fast their evolution occurs at a much higher rate than other life forms and as the oldest known life forms with the highest populations, it is arguable they are the most advanced creatures on the planet. (Depending on how you want to define "advanced") Clearly microorganisms can change the chemistry of a body radically and so can potentially change the mindset of their host. How much of an influence they play in the creation of our consciousness is questionable, but there is no reason why some specific creatures could not affect us to a much higher degree then we currently understand. We can see some of the potential for this when someone gets sick, especially when they have a fever which produces hallucinations, so it is quite possible that small creatures can have profound effects on our minds in seemingly unrelated ways. It's quite possible our germs interact with outside germs so that the ecosystem as a whole can better sustain life and the needs of all creatures, given the continuous exchange who can really say where our bodies end and the "outside" creatures begin. It is a small mind that thinks it is contained within one body.

It could very well turn out that what we call "Shamans" are in part people who can intermediate with germs which have become personified as spirits, so that they can communicate to placate them through their understanding of Gaia. Some bacteria or virus cells could even work together as one "super organism," depending on how aware they are, they could be capable of all kinds of things we do not know because they escape our detection. Research has shown that some micro-organisms do communicate with each other using chemicals and work together, even going to war with each other in large groups, utilizing tactical problem solving skills, showing much more intelligence than what people have assumed. If such creatures have a spirit, as I believe everything does, then being infected by them would not be unlike being possessed by "evil spirits," which is precisely what Shamans and magicians have been saying all along. Everyday creatures of a "subtle" and "etheric" nature exist as clouds in the air or in water, communicating and interacting with a variety of benign or beneficial "spirits" to us, which live in and around us, breeding, exchanging and creating alliances, but also doing battle constantly. We eat, we secrete, bacteria and micro-organisms go in and out of us in the tens of billions throughout the day, who is to say the oldest existing ecosystem in existence does not still affect its genetic offspring? It is a common bias that awareness requires a brain such as ours and that other forms of consciousness could not be created through a different biological process, for some reason it is hard for some to believe that somewhere on the genetic tree of life, nature has found other means of instilling sentience.

There are many possible ways that the most ubiquitous ecosystem, that of micro-organisms is responsible for effecting creatures of a larger size often much more than we realize and there are many ways we could be interacting with these unconsciously. Could it be Shamans have found a way of interacting with bacteria by mimicking pheromone like chemicals that allow for a kind of communication? Certainly various plants and fungi could help with this, but there could be a variety of methods which allow for Shamans to interact with germs. For example it could be that energies generated within the Shaman, such as electromagnetism (or something yet to be understood) could provide them with a means of interacting with micro-organisms so as to drive them out of the body. Another possibility is that Shamans know how to direct the organisms that live within them to enter the bodies of others and defeat the infection/invasion of the evil "spirit." For example, in South America there are stories of a magickal phlegm and healing methods which support this.

At the same time another person could curse an individual perhaps sending out a spirit to infect their intended victim, if something like hair, or spit, or best of all blood belonging to the victim could be obtained, (as is traditional in many curses) then the curse would be all the more powerful since the germs you send to attack could learn about the immune system before invading the victim's body. As I said, in Shamanic cultures sickness is thought to arise from black magick, or the evil intentions of others, so it is perhaps each intention sends out micro-organisms in to the world, or communicates intentions to the germ community in order to manifest that reality, it could even be that these microorganism can affect the brains of others in order to communicate with their unconscious. While this no doubt sounds farfetched and may certainly be wrong, there is no doubt that science is nowhere near an understanding of the complex relationships that occur between the micro and macro organisms of the world, or how intimately we are related, or how this relates to the psycho-somatic effect.

Since there are so many microorganisms in each body, who is to say there aren't special kinds of cells which act as intermediaries to the Gaian body? If you go back far enough on the evolutionary tree of life, all species were all the same species once, we all have mitochondria in our cells providing our mothers DNA and were originally separate organisms, but if that's not strange enough, much of our DNA is thought to come from retrovirus's! So we should not underestimate the importance of germs, in fact given that a woman has all her eggs from the day she is born, just as her mother and grandmother right up the line, it could be argued it is all one process, one unfurling of DNA through woman, or female creatures and thus a kind of Gaia. Just because individual creatures do not share the exact same DNA, does not mean they are not united with us, we depend on each other for our survival and at the very least we are inextricably symbiotic. (Humans can have more than one set of human DNA in their body, making them a "chimera") A person is not totally defined by their DNA otherwise twins would always be the exact same person and so we should not be so quick to classify ourselves as individuals based on our differing DNA, we could just be vehicles for mitochondria.

We are undoubtedly made up of large numbers of cells, each independently alive in its own way, we define ourselves as a collection of these cells yet remain skeptical that our bodies could not act as cells within a greater body. In some way or another, maybe through things like pheromones I do believe we are constantly communicating unconsciously with the microscopic world and do not even realize it. (As we are with each other) Working with the rest of Gaia it could very well be that micro-organisms as part of the collective unconscious conspires to manifest events according to the intentions of the consciousness that inhabits a particular body. Through our air, water, food and excretions, the populations of various super-organisms travel the planet, clouds of micro-organisms each a separate but united super-organism, are each themselves a kind of cell in larger super organisms. These super organisms exist in a fractal kind of scale so that bigger and bigger super-organisms inhabit larger and larger regions, until whole ecosystems or bioregions are one organism, then on to a planetary level making up an entity we call in the west "Gaia."

The common idea of evolution is that we exist in a competition, that “life is survival of the fittest,” an idea that has been perpetuated not so much by scientists but by elitists to justify hierarchies as natural, but in many cases this is simply not true. (Not to mention the justification of eugenics and racism and any number of ignorant ideas) As Kropotkin pointed out, symbiosis and cooperation are found in the most successful species and are all over the world, complex plant societies and partnership with animals is generally the norm for an ecosystem. Humans have more potential for symbiosis with other organisms than any other creature and it is quite clear to me that any kind of long term happiness depends on us accepting our obligations to the rest of the life forms. We didn't evolve independently and alone and so we have evolved to live with other creatures, not only this but we have evolved so that we can all maximize our opportunities to benefit each other whenever possible, nature does not waste any potential to create more life. We aren't in some race to commit genocide against all other life forms, we are in a continuous development of genetic potential which necessitates that we are inextricably linked with our environment and so all other creatures.

Symbiosis provides far more potential for the successful propagation of genes than simply attempting to dominate all other creatures, since symbiosis is different life forms creating alliances, it allows for far more adaptability to changing environments and situations. Your heart does not compete with your liver and neither of them competes with your kidneys and in this same way different species do not necessarily compete with each other, though they may seek the same nourishment, they must ultimately work together if any is to be fed. Likewise the lungs do not feel it when you stub your toe or any pain felt elsewhere in the body, though they may react, they don't understand the causality behind their reaction and so we should not be surprised that we humans are often unaware of our unity with the rest of life, even though there are plenty of connections.

Is the concept of Gaia, that we are all cells in a super organism so hard to realize? The fact that this was once a globally agreed upon idea should bring up some questions for skeptics, why do so many diverse people agree? It's obvious enough why modern technological people do not see this, we have consciously made an effort to dominate and make war against nature and yet we wonder why unhappiness and all kinds of mental imbalances are so rampant. We are made of the Earth's molecules, we are all creatures dependent on DNA, we are all share common ancestors with the other life forms and we are all rooted in the same evolutionary process. You breathe in the same air as people thousands of years ago, you drink the same waters, you travel the same sun, you are in the same expanding universe, it is all one process, one body, one reaction, one story line, one revelation, I am Anatman.

The idea that humans are not animals is a complete denial of the most fundamental aspects of humanity and through the Christian tradition this idea has become central to what even secular people value and so it is one of the main factors in all their decisions. Humans are the posers of the animal kingdom, we pretend we are something else, something special, beyond nature, we pretend our shit don't stink, but we refuse to smell it like other animals. Maybe the reason so many animals smell shit is so they can remind themselves that everyone's shit stinks, no one is immune, we are all animals, flushing our shit away, pretending it isn't real doesn't mean it still doesn't stink if you smell it. All people with an ego are posers, that is the ego is based off pretence, it is the model we choose to present ourselves as for the purposes of social interaction, rather than the true and eternal self which is beyond abstraction and memes and so enlightenment is learning how to stop being a poser. (“I can't stand it, EEEego!, I can't stand it!”) Because they are in denial that they are animals, modern society is so detached from sanity that it cannot even remember it; it cannot understand what an authentic life in accordance with truth looks like and so it projects its delusions onto everything around it, destroying anything which might present an alternative to its madness. Solidarity with Indigenous peoples and their struggles is in my opinion the single best way to turn society in the direction that we should be heading, their societies are not only deserving of all that they demand, but they provide us with a sane model which we need to take on in order to save ourselves.

Activist work, especially in terms of magickal activism can be seen as a kind of communal Alchemy for society, it is the transmutation of the gross lead which is poison, to the spiritual gold of a healthy society. Alchemy is the application of the principle of harmonic resonance to change the energetic make up of the collective mind and the physical world. We need to literally deal with pollutants in the world in terms of environmentalism and so as Alchemists we should take that which we do not need, things like land fills and deforestation, toxic waste and weapons of mass destruction and turn these things into useful and healthy things like permaculture and sustainable infrastructure. We can change the pollutants of the mind too, there is a lot of transmutation to be done both on the inside and outside for the world, the inner is reflected in the outer, and our world shows just how messed up our minds really are.

It does not take a genius to figure out that on a finite planet if you do not give back to the Earth as much as you take you will run out. Obviously if something is finite, using it up keeps it from being sustainable and that any technology that is unsustainable should not be relied upon, especially if it destroys the sustainable systems which do exist. If each by-product and used part of a technology is not reusable or capable of being reintegrated in to the ecosystem, then the finite resources will eventually all be used, or the by-products will disrupt the environment until other systems are affected. Those who do not put back at least as much as they take from the Earth are responsible for making the world of humans unsustainable and those who persist in destroying beyond our ability to heal and regrow nature are responsible for bringing humanity that much closer to complete obliteration. Sustainability can only come through Alchemy, by which I mean all waste (lead) must be transmuted in to a form that is biodegradable to be reused by the ecosystem, or which we ourselves can through a sustainable means completely recycle for new purposes. So long as there is waste which cannot be transmuted it will pile up and bury us in our own garbage. Among other things, the accumulation of waste from production makes a system unsustainable, it is also the cause of pollution, all that is made unusable is the transmutation of gold in to lead, especially if something is also made toxic in process. Atoms pile up; any industry on a global scale can create lots of useless waste which must be dealt with sooner or later.

Luckily there is fungus which can eat plastic and others that can eat oil spills; nature is the perfect Alchemist generating life and awareness, while we in our vanity generate death. If life is to be sustained then we must act to make our lives sustainable and this requires that we attune ourselves to the rhythms and cycles of nature which allow for life to be perpetuated. It is not in the best interests of a predator to be so successful that it wipes out all of its prey; it is not in the best interest of buffalo to be genocidal to grass and have lots of offspring that will have no food. Ecosystems must have balance to be sustainable, and so in this way it is not competition that drives evolution, but symbiosis, the ability to fit into the ecosystem in a way that is not so overwhelming as to destroy a species' ability to live. Animals evolve to have relationships with the rest of nature and if a species like humans seek to abuse these relationships, then they are actively seeking out suicide.

When I talk about sustainability I should be clear that I do not mean that we should be trying to sustain our present lifestyle (which is impossible) or that we should focus only on creating infrastructure and means of production that can go on indefinitely. This word "sustainable" is definitely open to abuse and marketing propaganda by the very people environmentalists wish to stop. While we may currently be forced to rely on unsustainable means to keep billions of people from starving, it is true that if we wish to save the environment, basically everything but life support systems and scientific research and development should be stopped and the military is the first place to start. Scientific research should continue and in fact should be strengthened, not so that we can have toys, or even that we should implement the technology it creates any time soon, but that after many generations of perfecting new technology before we mass produce it, we could find a way to make the best sustainable infrastructure possible. New technology is developing so fast now that today's advances will soon be obsolete, so instead of mass producing each new tool, we should wait until we have perfected them. It could be we wasted so many resources and ecosystems by creating capitalist infrastructures, that we have prevented ourselves from reaching our full potential, but as we have never had one, it is unclear what is possible with science in a sane society. However primitivism and the idea that billions of people will quietly die without destroying what is left of the ecosystem is just as unrealistic as saying that we can continue doing what we are doing, or rely on the current technology to create a sustainable society.

More than this, it is not enough to stop using oil, it is not enough to stop cutting down the forests of the world, it is not even enough to simply give back to nature as much as we take so that we create a cycle that can go on indefinitely. While all these things are steps in the right direction, humanity needs to do more than be sustainable, we need to restore and heal the ecosystems that we have damaged so much. If we are only sustaining the present level of the environment that we have left then we are still leaving much of this world a wasteland, still leaving many species endangered, still leaving poison and misery for the other life forms to suffer from, so no, we should not sustain this death machine that we have created, we should sustain the maximum amount of life (with unmodified DNA) that we can. Our present way of living is not sustainable in any way, whether we want to become environmentalists or not, we live on a finite planet and there is no way around that, so it is we must dismantle our economies and focus on building up nature.

Sustainability commonly means in this context that we can only take a certain percentage of plants and animals from nature without exceeding their birth rates, as to do otherwise results in unsustainable population depletion and so we can see the level of sustainable production is determined by the present populations of our prey. So it is in our best interests to actually let nature recover, to take less than what is sustainable in order to let population growth occur as much as possible, so that in the long term we can take more from nature without disrupting the ecosystems. (We have a horrific amount of damage to heal) Environmentalism not only makes sense from the angle of human decency, respect for nature, pantheism and the desire to avoid being a total piece of shit to other forms of life, but believe it or not it is actually in our best interests to maximize our ability to live happily on this planet in the long term. If humans are to ever live in a truly sustainable way then we must end this modern notion that we are somehow separate from the ecosystem, that we can separate ourselves from nature.

We must look to make our societies fundamentally centred on the idea that what is good for us, is what is good for nature and that we cannot take out more than we put in, we cannot live outside of that balance. This should be common sense as $+X$ for humans = $-X$ for the environment, which for us is currently limited to this planet. We evolved to be part of an ecosystem and to go against the very forces that created us is a death wish and idiotic, you cannot endlessly take from a finite system and so we need to strengthen the ecosystem as much as possible if we are to participate in it, in a way that is not suicidal. Everything must become recyclable, everything reusable, everything a part of nature, everything accounted for in order to give back at least as much as we take. I do believe that science will allow for some pretty incredible sustainable technologies, but in the mean time we need to stop all unnecessary waste and production if we are to save this planet. If some piece of technology cannot be created with this in mind then it is not worth creating. Only when each person can say "I gave back to the world everything and more than I consumed," can we even begin to have a real "civilization."

The world is changing just like the Alchemist metaphor of distillation, a fire evaporates the water which is then condensed in pure form. Time is change and change is the death of something and its rebirth in to something else. All matter is constantly shifting, more importantly the energy that makes up all matter is changing form, the energy cannot be destroyed or created, it can only change form and in this way the physical universe is a giant process of transmutation, an Alchemical reaction. We must boil away, leaving all impurities before we can know the ecstasy of universal wholeness, boiling from the fires of passion and the desires of the ego, with each realization that a desire will not fulfil us, our water, our emotions go on to higher things through evaporation.

The true Alchemists were clever enough to encode their metaphors so that only those with divine wisdom could understand. The person who is impure took them literally in the quest for gold and the philosopher's stone and so wastes their time pursuing their ignorant intentions. To reiterate, the stone is among other things a metaphor for an unshakable philosophical foundation, gnosis which gives immortality and transmutes “lesser metals” into “gold.” The stone is achieved through direct experience with the divine, for after you have had that there is no real kind of speculation that could possibly bring the slightest doubt. The stone is another word for enlightenment and the gold is the wisdom you acquire and the love that lives in your heart.

Science knows how to take apart and deconstruct information but it does not know nearly so well as Alchemy how to put things back together in their whole. It is one thing to say you know about dissecting an issue but if it is killed in the process and you can only make a sewn up corpse without bringing it back, then there is something lacking in your understanding. You cannot dissect your way to wholeness and Occam’s razor can certainly be misused to dismiss anything too complicated. The word “science” means to split and it is the experimentation of reductionist philosophy, but Alchemy is based on the principle of “solve et coagula” or dissolve and coagulate. Among other things this means that we should dissect things in our reductionist analysis (science) but we should then also look at it as a holistic system, understand it as a whole that is greater than the sum of its parts. Alchemists acquire wisdom and self awareness from their work, where as scientists only acquire data and so miss the big picture. This means the scientist can be led to create all kinds of monstrous technology, without any real understanding of the implications of entrusting those who fund them with that knowledge.

As magick includes worldly actions, technology is a form of magick, it is just that science having been developed from Alchemy creates this magick in a very specific way. Scientists have made telepathy through many forms of electronics; with their silicone talismans and gold circuitry sigils of the magickal energy they call “electricity,” often utilizing crystals to broadcast or receive other forms of energy or otherwise modify it, we can also skry out visions on a TV when electrons or plasma is manipulated correctly. Information is sent in light through fibre optic cables, while other forms of concentrated light read information off of compact discs, ideas quite at home with any Qabbalist. It is not so much that our minds are like computers, its that computers are like our minds and so electronics and technology in general is a reflection of our own minds and is a manifesting emanation of it and since Occultism has managed to map the mind, we can see that technology mirrors magickal techniques. All energy, electrical or not is defined as the ability to do work and when work has an intention behind it and it is successfully carried out it is identical to Crowley's definition of magick, that is “change in accordance with the will” and so energy is also the ability to do magick. The etymology of the word “energy” originally meant “force of expression,” so if we create a sigil as an expression, the energy we put in to it is the force of our expression, so that we can do work in accordance with our will. The fact that there are rational reasons for actions happening by technology working successfully is not proof that it is not magick, since nature is sacred then causality as the processes of nature are also sacred works. So the rationality of technology is simply a key signature of the Alchemical school of magick that created it, it is one of the defining features rather than something which separates it and it is our ignorance of this which causes most of the problems.

As I have started to explain before, since we live in a consensus reality and our beliefs shape our reality, having a clear and consistent affirmation of the reality you want to manifest is crucial. By freeing yourself from contradictions and cognitive dissonance you can manifest a reality that is more powerful than one which lacks coherence. Contradictions in your beliefs create a reality that is inconsistent, working against itself, nullifying energy by forcing opposite manifestations to struggle for supremacy. Logic works to eliminate contradictions within your statements and so your thoughts manifest consistent realities and through it, your statement of intent becomes purified and singular in it's affirmation. When your affirmations manifest consistently and repeatedly they can be used to create paradigms, which through scientific consensus can be linked to other scientist's paradigms with relatively minimal contradiction, thus creating an ontology, an affirmation of a reality which is progressively being detailed. These coherent affirmations are much more effective at creating a consensus reality than the overtly contradictory affirmations of many people in religions, because while religious people believe they agree with each other, since literalists often use dogma with flawed logic and inconsistencies, their consensus reality is not unified, it is working against itself. While an Occult or mystical approach can use symbols which are on the surface somewhat contrary, this is because the magician actually understands the underlying logical consistency of a non literal interpretation. Since scientists have a well defined agreement about their affirmation with ideally no contradictions within their paradigm, (capitalism and materialist dogma currently create some problems) they can unite all the energy of those who believe in science to work magick of all kinds, what's more science does not require gnosis to understand and so can be taught to people more easily. Religions and mystical texts often rely on very ambiguous symbols, which can in metaphysical contexts be more accurate than precise scientific descriptions, but when interpreted in worldly terms, with worldly mind sets are often incoherently contradictory, creating the astonishing levels of ignorance found within fundamentalists.

Through experiments using a ritual procedure, scientist's divine information and technology which can be incorporated in to the body of scientific knowledge for people to use. Unfortunately because scientists generally do this unconscious of consensus reality or our unity with nature, we often do not have the wisdom to use this power for our own benefit. When we explain something to ourselves we tell a story, explanations of an experiment or causality are stories of how events unfold and through logic these stories can eliminate contradictions within themselves, allowing the mind to use its energy more effectively for manifestation. Science provides information which can be used to add incredible detail to their mythologies and models, all arranged in a linear mostly literal format for easier understanding and so deeper levels of potential consent for those who believe in them.

This school of magick which is generally backed by corporate and government black magicians already to some degree possesses the ability for nano technology, human cloning, genetic engineering in general, cyborg technology and has applications which will potentially lead to physical immortality in this plane of existence. Cloning and genetic technology, as well as robotics represent the ancient goal of creating homunculus, or golem to do work for you, but genetics also open the door to making mythical creatures like griffins, centaurs, other hybrids and eventually even dragons. Cyborgs will be able to interact with all kinds of electronics around them, with thought based remote control, they will be able to activate nano robots, but really since everything is becoming digital or "smart" and hooked up to the internet, pretty well any kind electronic device will have this remote feature so that machines will seem to come alive. Genetics also holds the key to growing replacement parts for your body, or creating micro-organisms which can do battle with things like infections or cancer, representing essentially a panacea, or elixir of life, the achievement of material immortality. If Shamans cannot communicate with microorganisms, scientists will figure it out by making nano GMO hybrids in the body. Through fusion technology they have managed to transmute lead into gold, (though not in a cost effective way) and so pretty well all of the literal physical goals of the Alchemists are on the verge of being achieved. While this may be some time off yet, it is a very real potential future and once nano technology and 3D printing is mastered, so long as the atoms are provided, things will even manifest according to our will and so science is becoming more like the popular image of magick all the time.

It is most likely only a matter of time before wireless connections to the internet are set up in the human brain so that it can access directly any information it chooses. Not only this, people's memories and skills and knowledge will all be downloadable, people will be able to record even dreams and psychedelic experiences and let someone else experience them. Today the internet is accessed by fibre optic "ether-net" cables, but this will accumulate to be like an artificial akashic hall of records, so that all known information will be available to these cyborgs who will have an intelligence we cannot even imagine. What amounts to artificial electronic psychic powers will become very much available, people will be able to communicate wirelessly around the world simply by thinking, while virtual reality creates the capability for unlimited astral realms to explore. "Augmented reality" displays will be activated in a persons brain so that they see programmable information about the world around them like a second sight, from readouts about specific objects, to personality profiles of people, but much more than this GPS direction, video phones, music and all that is available on the internet will be perceptible to the person who wants to become a cyborg. The internet was in part invented by acid freaks and so its parallels to a group mind are probably not entirely coincidental, in some ways it seems it was designed like a spell to bring about egalitarian, even Anarchist information sharing. By simply looking at a person you could find out all kinds of information about them, much like reading an aura you could have social networking visual displays which could show you what kind of person you are dealing with. Visualized customizable personal assistant programs will come in to your environment to help you do various things and especially with hologram projectors in the world, this brings to mind evocations of spirits and familiars. Given that visual displays are everywhere it is likely that programmers will incorporate hand gesture methods of interacting with them, tracing out symbols in the air and manipulating various screens. Eventually they will learn they need an operating system interface which is modelled off of Occult systems and correspondences, as this would allow people to express their will in a variety of ways and interact with the “augmented reality.” This could potentially be done in any aesthetic and symbol system an individual chooses, but it will eventually be strong motivation to learn magickal systems, or at least something very much like them. (Concentration exorcizes will help avoid ADD)

More than this new senses like infrared and sonar and many others will become available, experiences and states of mind which will take us far outside what we think of as human awareness. By having cameras and GPS locators everywhere hooked up to the internet, a person will be able to have the video broadcast to their brain, allowing for a kind of electronic remote viewing. Programs and our enhanced intelligence will be designed to utilize information about the present to calculate probability for the future, in a sense creating some level of precognition. If scientists ever figure out anti-gravity, or something like it as with what they are doing with superconductors, utilizing the principles of “quantum locking” or “quantum levitation,” many objects around us could be made to float and programmed with remote control to a persons brain implant, allowing for what is essentially electronic telekinesis. All this and I haven't even mentioned exoskeletons or the possibilities of time travel and teleportation and while it isn't clear how all these things will play out, what is clear is that the technology that we have right now is becoming more and more like what we think of as magick.

Just because science does not require seemingly supernatural forces, or divinities to work does not mean it is not magickal, but then even metaphysical magick does not require any kind of divinities or separate entities. The problem is people of European descent and now many other peoples are so alienated from ancient philosophy they cannot even tell where anything really comes from anymore. The rediscovery of Alchemical wisdom which started the renaissance took place in an environment which was completely Christian and so filled with their memes, assumptions and bias, the very same culture which had destroyed Alchemical knowledge in the first place. The result was the creation of a form of Alchemy which was in many ways incomplete, a reconstruction, but also in its more “scientific” forms embraced Christian ideas such as humanities dominion over the Earth, rather than as helpers of nature which is itself a living being to whom we are inextricably linked. In literalist materialist “puffers” this lead to notions of acquiring technology and power no matter what the implications for the natural world, that is mastering nature, and controlling her, rather than helping and understanding her and our place within the world, as in Hermeticism. Just as the memes of punk are being commercialized by the mainstream corporations and “posers,” the puffers don't have the creative spark and tried to raise their status above others having nothing beyond capitalist ambitions, they took the ideas of Alchemy and used them for selfish and purely materialist ends, rather than spiritual ends. While ancients did abuse the environment sometimes, most people understood it was suicidal to do so without limits and that other forms of life have spirits and so should be treated with respect and reverence.

Due to its overtly Pagan implications the Christian religion and kings forced science to be so secular and underground that the true Alchemists, in order to avoid being burned alive had to use elaborate codes and bury their secrets so deep; that today almost nobody can even tell what they mean anymore. I can't help but think that all along the Pagan Alchemists knew in the long run they would be proven right, even if they had to do it in a purely secular way, they knew the Christian corruption of it's ideas would inevitably be transmuted and in that time science would become powerful enough to defend itself against such ignorant ideologues. Science with its secularized view of nature is in many ways the result of a kind of Christian puffer Alchemy, but this apparent paradigm remains rooted in a Pagan Alchemical worldview and so will undoubtedly eventually come to similar conclusions. Science is like an experiment we do not know we are doing, by which I mean maybe the reason so many Alchemists seemed to turn secular, was that they were trying to study consensus reality. That in order to find the limits of consensus reality we needed some scientists who actually believed in pure materialism in order to find out just what limitations it has, that when this was accomplished, magick and spiritual knowledge could be perfected and explained and proven to even the most ignorant ideologue and the world would have the philosopher's stone. In this ongoing experiment we are coming back to where we started, only now with things like quantum physics we have unconsciously found the details of why the hypothesis of the Alchemists are true and with this understanding we will know all that natural philosophy asks and could potentially manifest through technology, all of the wonders the ancients sought.

Of course since it is insane people who wield this power I do not think technology will save the planet, far from it, this technology will more than likely make it all the more difficult to overthrow such tyrants and so revolution must happen soon if it is to happen at all. Don't get me wrong I am not some kind of technocratic utopian, the work of the church was too successful for my liking and scientists have become totally blind to their materialist ambitions. I still have some hope people will wake up, but unless science can regain the context of its Alchemical roots we are doomed to become robots enslaved by our machinations. While this technology is potentially wonderful in many ways and certainly capable of helping an Anarchist society, it is funded and controlled by all the most psychopathic people in the world (as puffers have always been hired by those in search of gold) and they cannot be trusted for one second with this kind of technology. I am not against technology necessarily and certainly not against research, but I am against implementing technology in such hierarchical and environmentally destructive ways as we do and most likely will. It is clearly possible for nano robots and other technologies to clean up pollution and heal the Earth and to create things in quite environmentally friendly ways, to set the worker free and create equality, but the way we are arriving at this future is clearly insanely inefficient and destructive, not to mention under the control of plutocrats. If humanity and a good chunk of all life as we know it are to continue to exist, we must have an Anarchist uprising, insurrection, total and complete so that no hierarchy remains, but the place we need to start is with us. It will all be sold to us as a technological utopia and the potential is amazing, if humans can abolish ideas of hierarchy and personal profit, (things which make no sense to true Alchemists) then no doubt the Alchemical dream will occur for everyone and we will see days on Earth beyond our current imaginations. If we cannot get over this petty egotism then with such technology we will cause more problems for ourselves than ever before, most likely the contradictions of religious and political dogma will create a consensus reality which will completely destroy itself.

I find it much more likely that such technology will be used by those with power; the first people able to afford such things are exactly the kind of people who will use it to enslave everyone, while futurists believe we will all have access I am not nearly so hopeful. Airplanes have been around for a century, it doesn't mean they are affordable, nor does increased technology mean oligarchs and class systems will not exist. If the trends of history continue, the gap between rich and poor will take on levels we cannot even imagine currently, with the super rich being able to have a cyborg consciousness so far advanced from the average person, (even the average cyborg) that they will essentially be a different species. When Alchemy became secularized as science it lost its sense of responsibility to use the knowledge gained for the benefit of all life, for altruistic purposes rather than the profit of the few. This is because science has lost its understanding of holistic unity and insists on attaining knowledge whether or not we have the wisdom to use it properly and so will be used by the rulers in order to exploit others.

While I do believe humans will destroy the current environment if we do not change drastically, I am not a primitivist doomsayer, I do not believe civilization is on the brink of collapse. While the environment is totally fucked and most people are likely to die, civilization is not going to collapse, no, unless we have revolution it is much worse than that, nature will receive an “upgrade” and pretty well all wildness will cease to exist altogether. Given that the oligarchs must know better than even environmentalist how fucked everything is, I can only come to conclusion that they are purposely destroying the ecosystems of the planet, purposely fucking with the weather, purposely wiping out life, burning down the rainforest and spreading their poisons. They do this not just for personal profit, but because they know that their technology, especially genetic technology scares many people and so by destroying the life support systems of the planet, the oligarchs give us no choice but to repopulate the planet with genetically modified organisms owned and patented by them. By this means everyone will be made dependent on the creatures and technology created by corporations like Monsanto, the “environment” being nothing but artificial creatures that can keep this planet inhabitable for humans. Once this is accomplished the oligarchs will ensure no one can ever get off the grid, no one can ever grow their own food or support themselves in any way that is independent from their system and they will own all life and will be able to charge money for all things nature used to give for free. As it will be the system's creatures which make clean water, which purify the air through their plants, they could even charge money for these things, but that is just the start!

Even if civilization were destroyed, short of nuclear war it would not be long before people took up this kind of technology again. Governments and bourgeois people in general will fill this world with genetically modified organisms and use every drop of oil and every scrap of coal before they even consider a primitivist life. So really that whole school of environmentalism is blissfully ignorant of horrific modern capabilities to sustain the system and is on a wild goose chase, in some cases primitivists are even hysterical and given the grim realities we are facing, it is pretty understandable, but we must get with reality and come up with real solutions. Wild DNA will be overcome by artificial creatures and the information contained within, the treasures of millions of years of evolution will be lost forever, to be replaced by glow in the dark pets and pop culture biology. (GMOs may already be the only way to avoid massive human death from overpopulation.) If the rulers of this world succeed in becoming immortal cyborgs, with robotic and nano technology, having the ability to genetically create whatever life forms they choose, they will not see much purpose in sharing with their now obsolete slaves. They may just decide to invent a virus that kills all but them and while I hope this doesn't happen, I think it's one more reason why Anarchist insurrection right now is so crucial.

Hackers are the Alchemical cyber Shamans of the future, with their binary numerology and their programming grimoires of voces magicae computer language; they make the spells to be executed in the world of pure abstraction. Hackers are the only hope of combating such a technocratic elite, it is not unrealistic to say Anarchists may potentially have to fight cyborg mutant “transhumans” with a variety of scary toys that require us to have technical capabilities, that is if we are to defeat them. The more complex the artificial order is, the more flaws and holes there are to exploit and as the technocracy becomes increasingly government controlled, it is to hackers that activists must look to keep up the struggle. Geomancy an ancient form of divination by making marks in the dirt is the historical precursor to binary code, but if that isn't magickal enough through similar discoveries in China, the mathematics of the I Ching divination system have also contributed. Psychedelics have been documented clearly as having a great role in the inspiration of much of the invention of modern computers and the internet and so while this metaphor of hackers as the future Shamans may sound fanciful, Occult technologies are in many ways central to the present boom in technological breakthroughs. If people are cyborgs then it seems likely the wars of the future will be fought electronically, sending out a virus to infect the brains of your enemies, hackers then will be much more like a Shaman, both with the ability to heal, or to curse and send a program to infect others over the astral internet. Even creating “zombie” slave cyborgs with their virus's like a Voodoo Shaman, but then this could be the plan of the rulers as well. As new weapons and new forms of control are invented by the rulers, knowing how to counter these technologies is crucial. The internet, or electronic akashic records and astral realm is one tool that is proving very valuable for activists and while it is currently no replacement for taking up arms directly, exploiting weakness's in this system will more than likely mean the difference between life and death for those wishing to live in Anarchy. Creating computer viruses that can bring down a bank or steal money is much more useful than throwing a brick, but at the same time we must keep in mind technology is useless if we make the planet uninhabitable.

The archons are using technology to manifest in to this world, rich people will play god like mad demiurge cyborgs terraforming other planets with their genetically engineered organisms and nano robots. If this isn't starting to sound creepy yet, consider how these genetic creations could be Wifi connected and remote controlled and since sense perception will be recordable, the animal's sensory organs can be broadcast back to the cyborg in real time, allowing them to not only control the animals, but possess their body and sensory perceptions as “avatars.” (not unlike some kind of twisted Shamanic shape shifting) As they care nothing for wisdom, all whims of this mad race of transhumans will be made manifest, they will no doubt become even more insane with power and all manner of abominations and sick realities will be created by those who have no understanding or love.

It could very well be that global enlightenment will take place through these Alchemical technologies, that they represent the manifestation of the universal consciousness and unlimited magickal ability on Earth, perhaps it is even the realization of our original purpose for being, but it could just as likely be the ultimate manifestation of the madness of the demiurge and without Anarchy, archon oppression is guaranteed. (It could even be both simultaneously) Increased intellectual ability and all the rest of these technocratic utopian promises will not increase our ability to love, they will not increase our compassion, or our capacity for long term happiness and in fact will probably make us all the more cold and calculating, psychopathic and more than likely make us even more condescending and indifferent to other life forms. High tech consumer goods will not make people happy in the long run any more than regular consumer goods do, just look at the rising suicide rates of Japan and you can see that alienation and the unfulfilling substitution of our natural animal drives only make things worse.

The puffers have managed to figure out some the powers of Alchemist magick, but have failed miserably at finding spiritual gold and totally lack the wisdom to use it, though even if they did, that power is held by their corporate and government masters of whom they are ultimately wage slaves. With happiness being delegated to psychologists and psychiatrists with a laughable track record of curing “mental illness,” the best they are capable of is peddling mind numbing drugs like Prozac for the purposes of brainwashing would be dissidents. So while our potential is greater than ever, unless we learn to acquire compassion for ALL life forms and manifest the wisdom to use our power to create Anarchism, we will be in the hands of the archons and we will only use our technology to increase our ignorance. If that happens our cage more gilded than ever, wisdom will be lost to prisons of distraction we can not yet imagine, spreading this mockery of life throughout the galaxy we will become nothing but artificial husks, imitations of life, electronic models of consciousness with delusions of grandeur. I can see the global electronic hive mind realizing itself, humanity marvelling at it's power like the demiurge, claiming to be the only divinity, but will Sophia scold us and tell us the truth? Will we continue the cycle and make creatures in our own image, which we will then rule over as demented tyrants? Only time will tell. Materialists don't believe in a soul, that their computer models are as good as consciousness, so if humanity doesn't discover its spirit soon, it is likely we never will. We are about to find the difference between essence and form, symbol and meaning, even if it means the extinction of all wildness and so if there is going to be a divine intervention, it's going to have to be soon.

One of the main principles of physics is that information cannot be destroyed, that is no matter what physical events happen the information regarding the causality that led up to the present is always present in some form, in some place in the universe. For example if you burn a log then it turns in to light, smoke, heat and ash, so if you had perfect understanding of how all that energy was transformed, you could reconstruct the log. The smoke might blow away in the wind, but if you had perfect understanding of the wind currents, (and all the other ways the wood was transformed) you could use that information to determine how wood turned to smoke and what the wood was like before the fire. No matter how much that matter continues to be transformed, even if the smoke comes down in the rain, grows in to plants and the ash gets in to the soil and all the rest, it can be many steps removed from the log, but according to physics you can still always find the information of past causality which led to present moment. Another example might be that if you put a drop of food colouring in to a cup of water with perfect understanding of the factors involved, such as the currents of the water and the air surrounding the cup, you could determine the details of how the drop hit the water, where the bottle of food colouring was and how it was being held etc. This principle, that the effects of energy, the work that has been done contains all the information of what caused the effects, works so that even a black hole cannot destroy the information of what has been sucked in to it.

This means that with enough understanding of all the variables, that it is possible that when you die, all information you possessed in your awareness, every thought you have had, every action you have done can be regained, it cannot be lost or destroyed, it exists forever in a variety of transmuted forms somewhere in the universe. Collecting all the information of a person's life is difficult at best and as time goes by the chains of causality increase and make it harder to recognize, but it does continue to manifest through the ripples of the butterfly effects of your actions, echoing for an eternity, taking the forms of all sorts of things. As we are one with nature, this means that we are also immortal, that all that we are lives on and that if in the future technology is advanced enough to collect this information, we could be copied perfectly and in a sense raised from the dead.

The Occult also provides some clues and methods as to how at least some of this information can be found and it seems likely that the chains of causal events that spring from your actions and encode your information like Sophia trapped in matter, probably change according to a fractal pattern. Electromagnetism is probably the most important form of energy for transmitting information, as your awareness is created by electrical impulses in your brain, which must have effects out to the world and universe as a whole. The collecting of this information which has been encoded in physical events, is the mechanism of anamnesis in the universal mind, the work done by energy is the anatomy of the brain of the divine in its various trains of thought, or to put it another way it is how it develops its ideas. From this universal perspective the philosopher's stone is the sum total of all information needed to be omniscient, or understanding of all that happened in the past which when combined with wilful intent, will allow for totally accurate predictions of the future. We can see this idea in Qabbalah and in Gnosticism, it is the re-collection of the sparks of Sophia which as information can be freed from matter by the logos, (rationality personified as Jesus) thus ending our ignorance so that we might understand our unity with all things, as through or intermingling butterfly effects. Though all things are one and all things contain information, since organic beings acquire more information than inorganic matter, they are more useful for this process, the more consciousness you have, the better you are at freeing Sophia or achieving the great work.

For all we know our own personal realities could be vastly different from each other, with each person's individual reality outside the boundaries of the other people's imaginations. When synchronicity becomes fully apparent it can seem as though people can read your mind because everyone seems to react to your thoughts, however this is only "coincidence" as you witness the perfect harmony of the universe manifesting your thoughts, you are also manifesting other peoples thoughts, even if they aren't aware of it. We try to confirm through language what objective reality really is, but what if what I think I am saying is interpreted by you in a completely different way and vice versa, so that we only think we understand each other, but we are really just reaffirming each others bias. For all we know when I describe what I think humans look like, your brain could change the description to fit how you see humans, so that although we both think we are talking about the same thing, we are each hearing different things which are made to fit our personal belief structures. What you see as human could be like how I would see a reptilian or praying mantis person or something I have never imagined before. All our senses could be completely subjective like variables in an algebraic formula and we each can give different meaning to the same symbol and as long as the equation still works, no one is the wiser. Somehow there is enough objective information exchanged for us to coexist, but we could never be 100% sure how much we sense the same things.

The truth is we have no bodies, there is no Earth and matter is all just the mechanical expression of thought for the purpose of sorting out the apparent Chaos of infinity. A means of experiencing creation for the purpose of learning to properly deal with existence, whatever that means. Are the people in your dreams any less real than the ones in your life? Not to say nobody but you is real, the fact is you aren't any more real than they are, or I, this is where it gets real tricky as it seems we are figments of our own imagination. We create complete persona's and characters within dreams just as we create ourselves and as we are one with all, we create other peoples too. Whole eternities exist in a night's sleep and in between each moment, we believe we are only the sum of the memories we are currently aware of, but eventually we get the memory of remembering all things.

All matter is composed of the same fundamental thing, that essentially being energy, therefore all existence is nothing more than a single mass of energy, swirling constantly in motion, changing and transforming into different forms, which appear as the segmented fragments of manifestation. All life forms are connected with this energy, just as every rock and tree, bird and river are connected, but while they appear separate are metaphorical symbols of the temporarily different perceptions of the one energy, which can be personified as Eros. (even the word "energy" is inadequate to describe the essence of what I am describing) As everything is ultimately relative, then no two view points are the same, but since all things are one, each juxtaposition of views provides different insight in to the same thing and so there is an endless variety of possible viewpoints within the limitless potential of the universe. Each infinitesimal division within the universe has its own relative viewpoint from which to perceive all the other endless varieties of apparent divisions. Therefore everything can be thought of as the same, but interchangeable symbols of thought to be experienced in an endless variety of ways.

If we want to put reality in terms of an equation as in physics, then any equation which explains all of reality must ultimately explain all our perceptions of reality and each individual view must be a possible expression of this equation. All causality, all the different physical forms which information can take on through energy are the different expressions of this formula and given the unlimited number of forms for this energy, if there is a formula for all reality it is highly likely to be a fractal equation. A formula such as this would allow different people to apply different values to the same formula and have an unlimited variety of different perceptions, but perceptions which are united in the same objective reality. We exist in one reality, but it has countless expressions and fractals provide the most mathematical means of explaining such an existence, we are experiencing the same formula, with the right eyes we can even recognize the self similarity, we just give it different values and so produce different experiences. (Geometric forms) Now I cannot say whether or not there is a formula which explains "everything," but physics is looking for it and it has done some pretty interesting things and clearly fractals are one of the main keys to understanding nature.

Each time line in the multiverse produces different perceptions in individuals experiencing the same reality, likewise each time line could itself be an iteration of a single formula which is spawned from the multiverse, or the higher dimensions which exist outside of time. In this perceived reality of which my normal state of mind and memories apply to, I may think I am moving my arm to open a door, but in another time line with different variable values, but which is still self similar, I may be taking a step, or shooting someone in the face. In this case the movements would be different, but it would be different expressions of an underlying formula or set of factors that are present throughout all time lines. By becoming aware of this unity, of this fractal aspect of reality and consciousness, a person could use the principles of self similarity for magickal purposes, resonating with certain things, or utilizing “sympathetic magick” or the “doctrine of signatures.” As I mentioned before sympathetic magick is when two things which are alike in some way, often in terms of shape or colour, or are from the same source share an energetic link, thus allowing to you use them for ritual purposes. (Like a voodoo doll or herbs shaped like some part of human anatomy) Magick could be making the fractal of your consciousness self similar with the fractal of the time line in which your will has been achieved, so that in this way you could travel to that place in the multiverse to experience it.

In a way your mind is an expression of the fundamental formula of the entire universe, what could be called the metaphysical name of the divine and through enteogens and ritual we can change the values we give to certain variables in the formula. To discover that reality is both objective (the formula) and subjective (different variable values producing endless unpredictable iterations) can be very overwhelming, especially if you do not know how to intentionally choose which numerical or emotional value to give to the formula, but through ritual magick it is possible to do this consciously and thus control the perception of reality. As everything with form is on one level these symbols and everything in infinity is constantly happening simultaneously, at least on this level beyond time and space, we can give the preferred meaning to each symbol and rearrange everything instantly according to will. The key is to define your personal symbol in as great as possible detail (through logic) as being capable of manipulating this universal formula. This idea fits perfectly with that of sigils as even though you may perceive yourself as creating a new symbol, it was floating around infinite chaos before you imagined it. Through intention, will is linked to the applicable "objective" symbol corresponding to the desired energies which are to be manipulated, the symbol or variable is then acted upon or transformed in some way according to a ritual formula which expresses your intent. The same symbol can mean many different things to different people, some “good” some “evil,” but it is all dependent on the meaning assigned to it, which will allow it to fulfil some act of intention.

We do not experience reality, we experience consciousness, we cannot know reality, only our consciousness of it and so it is consciousness we must study, not pale reflections of what we call reality. Life is where we make our beds to sleep and dream according to states we make for ourselves, our posture and position that lies not in the world outside, but resting in a personal space cloaked alone in realms beyond. Perception is not the direct and literal expression of reality, but a parable of information received and translated into symbolic forms which are apprehended by the heart and consciousness as a physical reality.

What we perceive as different colours are not different wavelengths of light but different allegories of interpretation by the brain of different wavelengths of light hitting the eye. What we perceive as sound is not a wavelength of vibrating air, but a different symbolic representation of that stimulus created by the audio cortex to translate those vibrations in to a functional means of interaction with reality. Smell is not a quality of particles in the nose but a consistent symbolic expression for representing different chemicals the nose comes in contact with, this is much the same with taste but occurring in the mouth and representing a different quality in a different symbolic language. Touch is a sense that creates perception in a way that also creates the symbolic representation of having a body and location that is capable of interacting with other collapsed wave functions that is represented as a particle to which atoms and their compounds are eventually created. This is perhaps easiest to imagine in that things such as a rock do not in themselves feel painful, but when they smash in to us or injure our bodies (the symbols of our individuated consciousness) they damage that symbol and so the perception of pain is created to symbolize that event. Our minds interpret stimulus according to how it effects the symbol of self and the definition which we have given it, so another example would be that there is nothing objective about shit that makes it smell bad, or rotting meat and food for that matter, but we smell it as such for evolutionary benefits and due to conditioning. (Which is why dogs like to sniff some things that smell bad to us) Likewise colours and notes of sound effect our minds in a scientifically demonstrable way, but it is really that air and light wavelengths effect us and the mind symbolizes these things in a specific way to allow us to understand this and utilize them, we just take the perceptions at face value and generally lack the self awareness to notice how it effects us. (entheogens can make this more obvious however)

The different combinations of atoms and how they interact create energy patterns which are interpreted in combination with the eyes and other senses as being a place in time and space with solid or gaseous, liquid or plasmatic (Earth, air, water and fire) attributes. This is all experienced as a variety of textures and feelings which are experienced by the body in a consistent allegorical interpretation that is held in simultaneous conjunction with the other senses, thus creating a total experience of reality based on a variety of wave patterns and what is represented as chemical reactions. If each of the senses is like a language for a certain kind of stimulus, then synesthesia is how our minds translate this stimulus in to different languages, so that the colour purple has in the mind a self similarity with a certain tone or taste, or on another level synesthesia provides different values to the variables of the formula which governs perception as a whole. We must understand that stimulus is not the same as sensation which is actually the minds interpretation of that which can be expressed as being separate from consciousness.

Time is the expression of the finite changes, apparently separate from eternal infinities which are their root; it is represented in consciousness through the movement and changing of all commonly perceptible things. Causality is an illusion in the sense that the past and future always existed and will always exist in the dimensions in which time lines are accessible. Things do not change; we simply focus on different parts of the time line which has progressively developing stimulus for us to interpret. Consciousness creates what we experience as reality in a somewhat arbitrary fashion, allegorically represented in its own personal language of symbolism, but it is the reflection and interpretation of consistent eternal patterns that are fundamentally unchanging and contained within Chaos. We present this eternal Chaos to ourselves, or remember it in different ways, with different observations made on this one thing that is beyond definition and so the languages of perception, but is itself the source of all perception.

By creating consistent symbol systems in language and all other forms of abstraction we have created a means of using memory to create an ongoing debate about the apparent causality which we use to develop our theories about the nature of reality, but since the senses are themselves abstractions, they are in effect changed by our very interpretation. This allows us to use past information to create a new perception of reality and so a new vantage point from which to view and explore reality. Using time as a landscape which is traversed as we move through “the world” in what we call the “present” and examine it, we experience change in our perception and so a change in our reality, a change that is expressed as a movement in time, or through the one thing, the monad. However it is not you that is moving but your imaginings of the world around you, that you pull over yourself like a warm safe blanket or robe. We stay forever in the present; we can remember what happened before in the time line and we can use our minds to predict what might be coming up by trying to understand the structure of “time” which we call causality. Causality then is not one thing causing another, but one thing growing out of an “event” like a tree branch growing from the main stem. If all matter and perception is a symbol of the mind, then all our actions, our attempts to use causality to achieve our will are like a magickal ritual just as Crowley defined it, it is just so mechanical and quick to manifest change that it appears like a physical reaction.

Eternal patterns are interpreted in ever changing ways according to the reaction to the allegorical interpretations of the part of a restless mind staring at itself like Narcissus. Consensus reality is everyone staring at our self together as one and then talking about our self from different angles in the mirror, but we have mistaken the reflection for reality and the longer we stare, the longer we are dead. Out of time and inevitability (Chronos and Ananke) Chaos arose and out of that came all of the other patterns of discernment, the gods and goddesses or modes of awareness with which our consciousness is capable of interpreting the oneness. There is only one thing, one reality formula, but it is a fractal formula capable of endless variety and yet there is repetition and it is the continuous cycling through this one unifying formula that we call time and reality.

There are many ways information is spread throughout nature, showing us we are intimately connected with it, rather than apart from it as the modern psychosis suggests. One obvious way is through fractal patterns which are self referencing cycles of growth through different scales. If you do not know what a fractal is I strongly suggest you look it up, if you have ever done entheogens you will more than likely see familiar patterns, indeed it seems one of the main functions of entheogens is to make us aware of the fractal nature of reality. Like the branches of a tree resemble the whole, and on the branches are twigs which resemble the whole tree, a fractal is where the pattern of the whole of the structure can be seen on every level, every segment of the pattern and this is called "self similarity." The degree to which we notice self similarity can vary, until you've seen a variety of levels on the scale you may not even realize there is a pattern, but it is what makes a fractal in to a fractal.

In terms of fractal mathematics, if you take a simple formula like that of the Mandelbrot set $Z = Z^2 + C$, then you can get infinitely large or small designs which will at all scales resemble the whole, but at the same time be unique with unlimited variety, so then this repeated pattern is in a sense the shape of the formula. In order to solve for Z you need to use Z , it is defined by itself, it is circular logic and recursive, but produces unlimited self similar forms, you never really solve for Z , but by iterating it, you reify it, you produce an image which can be seen and studied at endlessly higher resolutions. So long as you had a value for C (let's say 2) then you could make the formula work, so to start $Z=0^2 + 2$ then we go through another "iteration" of the formula, so $Z=2^2 + 2$, so then $Z=6^2 + 2$ and so on. In any fractal formula to change one small thing means that you change everything, in the simpler formulas this is immediately obvious, (the fewer variables or "words" the more influential each variable is) in a very complicated formula the change may not be evident until the image produced is well studied and developed, but even small changes in the formula can have incredibly big effects down the line. Scientists looking at the natural world realized that fractals seem to be how things are manifested in nature and I would argue that it is the same principle within consciousness. From the human to the plant and beyond we are different expressions of the same formula, but existing on different levels of awareness. Fractals are seen in river bed erosion, or plants, in the human anatomy and it is seen in a galaxies swirl and it seems in all things within the natural world. Given how universal fractals are, it is not hard to see there must be some reason for this preference of nature to order itself according to fractal principles, as for example the golden ratio.

In terms of the human psyche we seem to lock onto these formulas as models of perceiving and reacting to the world, we do this through our memes or our beliefs and memories about what we believe has worked in the past. People get caught in cycles like with bad relationships or any number of things, mistakes which they do not correct because they are not changing their personal formulas, their memes. People may change their values for their formula's variables, or they change the scale or the part of their personal fractal that they are focusing on, but the self similarity remains the same. This is because people don't see their reality paradigm in formulaic terms and indeed it would be an overwhelmingly complex formula if we could. (One reason why entheogens can be so overwhelming) Instead we are mesmerized by the pretty colours of our own personal fractals or Mandelbrot sets, but lack the understanding of the formula that has created the images we identify with so much. It can take a long time and lots of introspection to understand the mental patterns our formulas are producing, so that we may not realize our formula is not what we truly desire until much later, until the scale has repeated itself sometimes several times. This means we often don't connect occurrences together even though they are very much linked, we can make the same mistake over and over until the pattern of "causality," of fractal development is repeated so many times it becomes obvious. Since we do not understand the fractal nature of consciousness we are often caught asking nonsensical questions like, “which came first the chicken or the egg?” When in reality the answer or egg, is a variable which is solved for by iteration of the formula, this formula being reproductive life cycle of that particular genus of bird and so it is a question about the generation of all fractals and “the beginning of time.”

Once the pattern is recognized it can be named and then it can be changed, but in order to fix our problems we must carefully reprogram our personal formulas in order to get the overall mix of patterns that we want. In order to do this we must look at our lives in a holistic way and stop compartmentalizing everything, from jobs, to romance, to family life, to friends and secret lovers or whatever it may be. In order to understand a part of our lives we have to have the total context and so to truly change our lives, we must change more than our variable values, we must change the formula of ourselves, which will impact all other aspects of our lives.

Religions in their mystical aspects attempt to find the most fundamental patterns, but we get so caught up in the literal forms of some formulas that we lose the meaning. It doesn't help that some people are totally unwilling to accept responsibility for the flaws in their religious formula or that they either purposely mislead others or do not even realize that it is a formula rather than some literal truth. In some cases and to a degree priests can be forgiven for their authoritarian interpretations, they were products of their culture and in some places you get stoned to death for very minor things, never mind explaining spirituality in Anarchist terms, so while they were definitely not innocent, these things do have to be explained in terms that others can understand and will listen to. For example the Torah with all its patriarchy, genocide and general propagation of authoritarian behaviour is actually the result of adding vowels to a text which was originally all consonants. Not only are there no vowels in the Torah, there are no spaces and so the Torah quite literally is a kind of metaphysical Kabbalistic formula that does not have any words as we know it. I have a lot of respect for Kabbalah, there is much truth in the formula of YHVH which most simply represents the four elements, or as a name is a noun form of a Hebrew verb “to be,” but in the hands of authoritarian people bent on their view of orthodoxy, all formulas can be used to manipulate. The old testament as a formula actually has a wide variety of possible words that can be created by adding any number of combinations of vowels and spaces to create any number of stories which can be spoken aloud. Genesis and most of the rest of it are in many ways just a twisting of a formula by adding vowels to create a story that can be used to justify a priest class and the hierarchy of some corrupt institution and which in places encoded a propagandist's view of Jewish history, the demonizing of those they conquer etc. While the old testament is perhaps the most striking example of this, it is not unique as an example of metaphor formulas that model metaphysical and psychological truths, only to become completely literalized and people only allowed to see one level of that fractal formula's limitless forms. Religions are formulas and most people worship the symbols rather than what is symbolized and it is all too few who actually learn to traverse the different levels of the fractal pattern that is created.

It is tempting to think of ourselves as variables within the one formula, although we seem to be a special variable which acts as an arbiter to the rest, we can even seem to change the formula itself in some ways rather than just the value of the formula. How much we are able to affect the most primary formulas is unknown, but I believe we will be able to work much better together than apart from each other. The word “algebra” actually means “reunion of broken parts” and so reality could be said to be the expression of fractal algebra, that is to say our ultimate endpoint or purpose of the formula is to create the realization of our unity in a multitude of forms.

Since we are all connected in this fractal way, if we learn to change our inner formulas we can change the form or fractal of our reality and this is the basis of magick. Words or other forms of symbolism seem to be the basis of our formulas, internal dialogue, our belief systems etc, these formula variables are then assigned a value through the emotional/metaphysical charge which we choose. By using simpler formulas, I.E. fewer words we are better able to predict the influence of a variable and manipulate it. (This is one reason why Anarchism is ideal for social organization since it is not reliant on Byzantine labyrinths of bureaucracy purposely created to confuse the average person.) This also has magickal advantages as well, as you are also better able to define the emotional charge and how the intention will manifest. With magickal intentions you want to be as specific as possible, this helps to eliminate unwanted manifestations, but smaller formulas create a more concentrated expression of emotional charge and so are more potent and exact, allowing for a more clearly defined fractal expression.

These charges when applied correctly through instructional formula snowball into large patterns till at last they become physical. Or to put it in terms of music, as the notes of emotional energy become purer and louder, the harmonic resonance can change the denser clusters of quantum stings to physical proportions in a more efficient manner. I have noticed sometimes a relatively small emotional charge can create a relatively big physical change in reality; this is perhaps because I am less likely to constantly try and update that formula by worrying about it, or it could be a lesser charge is easier to define and keep pure. It could also be that those particular formulas were easier for the larger pattern to adjust itself to, that is to say the universal fractal may have already happened to be in close harmony with those particular formulas, and most likely these are all factors in creating a metaphysical fractal butterfly effect. Recognizing these patterns is the first step in being able to manipulate them, and then the apparent randomness of the forms of nature become ordered.

Perhaps there are always deeper levels of complexity, the most fundamental formula, one which explains everything may be unknowable or it may not even exist, at least on this level of the scale. It is quite possibly unchangeable, requiring much more ascension throughout the scales or “heavens” for the underlying pattern to be recognized, but this line of thinking can help to make a more functional paradigm. If there is one formula which expresses all nature, then all religions, all philosophies are permutations of it and comparative religion, mystical practice and Occultism is the only hope of understanding how they are self similar. These formulas are the “islands of order in a sea of Chaos,” Chaos being something that is so all encompassing that it cannot be totally grasped by the mind, except through the apparent order of the fractal forms and the felt experience of all the colours and energies. What is within the depths of that Chaos is unspeakable, I think that these islands are just inevitable illusions within an endless sea, but likewise under the sea is all land left unrecognized, whatever you happen to want. Are our islands desserts? Are we fish suffocating? Quite often our attempts to impose order on Chaos seem to do more damage than good, but the harm truly comes from being dogmatically attached to our limited notions of order.

The implications of governments and religions are far reaching. In our artificial cities surrounded by nature we have created the temples to the vain demiurge and his archons. However as we are all part of nature, humans being animals, everything we do is natural, we must rise in the fundamental pattern, but also learn how to properly work with it, how to come to harmony with it. Humans have been evolving within natural fractals and systems for a long long time and it is our vanity to think we know how to live happier and healthier than in the ways we were evolved by nature to live. Right now the old testament through its mutations in Christianity and Islam seem to be the fractal formulas which most people are manifesting their patterns to, this is currently incredibly destructive and far from the nature oriented fractals. Only by abolishing hierarchy, government and organized religion can we possibly hope to realign ourselves to the natural world and realize the true expression of our minds, bodies and spirits within the unifying formula. If we can learn to align ourselves to the natural fractals which created us, everything will seem to “click” together and take a new form. With this understanding we will come together in harmony and true awareness of the whole, on all levels of its manifestation and realize our total unity with all things in and out of existence.

As I said before you can create any form of language to talk to the universe, once you know you are one with all and that all is a reflection of your mind then the world becomes like an open book, like the book of Thoth that can give you very valuable information. While Chaos is beyond form and symbolism it does not keep those who have achieved gnosis from trying and indeed people who have some level of gnosis can communicate with each other to some degree since they both have the context of the symbols. The most accurate expression of the ineffable that I have seen is in mystical works of art like mythologies or the work of some profound painters and musicians and other art forms, which through divine inspiration create synchronistic meaning quite often beyond original intention or even rational awareness. The world can be like a tarot card deck, if you can make a language that detailed and likewise mythology can be used as a kind of interpretative mirror of self similarity with the world. Sometimes this is quite unintentional and hidden messages can be seen by some which are totally unknown to the creator, but which is part of the divine inspiration none the less and this is part of what I have referred to as the “green language,” the language of the universe. Sometimes this is according to traditional Occult languages, or if the person is tuned in, the universe will communicate any way it can be understood.

The green language can also be employed through the written word and traditional Occult symbolism, in fact these are some of the most traditional forms of communicating with the universe and so certain methods or continuity in how it takes form have been applied so that different humans can communicate as well. Some works of art and especially mystical texts are very much created as messages about the divine and if an awareness of that language can be cultivated, then an artist can create more meaning than they know how to recognize and this is because it will be self similar with a large variety of other contexts.

One example of this green language is in the meaning of the term itself, perhaps in that many plants are green, green also being associated as the colour of Gaia or the energies of nature, hence the green language is the language of nature. (entheogens add a whole other layer to this concept) This is no doubt such an ambiguous thing as to leave it wide open to interpretation, but that is really the whole point. The more ambiguous a symbol is, the more layers of meaning can be associated with it, which according to context and the awareness of reader will allow for much more effective communication. This isn't to say there aren't very specific meanings to some traditional Occult symbols, but that they have a variety of meanings which can be picked out if you have the right awareness. As unsatisfying to the intellect as it may be, among other things this language relies on vague associations, on mastery of subjective awareness, allegory, symbolism and puns which are to be interpreted by the intuitive and irrational parts of the mind and in this way, one page of writing or one picture can almost be like a whole book.

As I also mentioned, the green language has also been called the “language of the birds” which I interpret as being the language of ideas; birds are symbolic of lofty ideas floating around the air. (Air is symbolic of the mind) Birds fly above the ground (Earth) where ideas are much more densely packed together, with less manoeuvring room so to speak, since Earth is a symbol of materialism. When an idea is higher in the air there is more room for associations, the higher up the less literal you can be. As I explained there is also a tradition of divination, or getting information from birds, different types that you come across having different meanings, (ornithomancy) or even learning to interpret the actual songs and language of the birds and animals as some mystics and Shamans claim to have done.

The best and most useful examples of human created communications about mysticism are what I will call 4D literature; this is books that seem to be written beyond linear constraints, but also with superficial linear meaning, as well as meaning for those at the beginning middle and end of their spiritual journey. Depending on your level of awareness, you will recognize different aspects of the words, the hidden layers, the subtext of the precise arrangement of words which convey hidden realizations that are only recognizable to people who have the context of some level of gnosis. This isn't because of some kind of elitism, but because it is often the only possible way to convey the ineffable to those who have not experienced it. If you were to read 4D art at the beginning of your growth you would see one thing, and then later on in life you may uncover things that become more obvious in the light of the experiences you acquired. Often there is a fractal or interconnected unity throughout the work to emphasize the non linear 4d nature of it, for this reason it could also be called holographic or holistic. What were once only seen as parables become fleshed out with hidden layers of meaning which were always there, it can at times seem like you are reading a very different book, but it is not that it has changed, but that you have changed and so notice different things.

Every possible interpretation was not painstakingly planned out by the artist, but through accurate representation of a non linear reality, of a fractal formula, whole new worlds can open up possible perspectives. What was once innocuous becomes pregnant with meaning, giving birth to a new level of awareness that marks the beginning of a new life. The words not only explain the idea in some way which is more or less literal, but the way the statements effect the mind are also part of the message as well, as if you can feel your awareness changing as you read them. Sometimes in the Occult, methods and symbols or instructions will purposely be slightly incorrect and this is done for a number of reasons. Many Occultists wish to protect those who would dabble in forces they do not understand, but more than this by putting in a few mistakes here and there it encourages the reader to be critical, to think for themselves and to not take things at face value, to improvise and modify their own techniques. This can be frustrating but it is crucial practice which cannot be developed otherwise and will provide the skills necessary to gain wisdom and work the magick better. It is a language of intimation, see the underlying motivations and intentions and grasp the lesson, hopefully fertilizing some future ability to recognize the process of growth and ferment it in you from then on.

Often if this is done consciously by the creator, it will be encoded within in some semi obvious way what is being done, (though often somewhat cryptic or at least requiring individual reasoning free from presumptions) the creator will tell you it is 4D and non linear, and meant to be taken in such a way that it is considered as whole, within each part and that there may be more to it then what first appears. What is important is to learn the meaning of the overall syntax of the words, for a moment forget their obvious meaning and then try to be aware of other meanings which could be construed within another context. (Even if only as a reflection of your own personal psychological processes) These interpretations may be in some ways more literal then what you originally thought, that is directive and clear, so long as you know how to approach it without making assumptions.

Often times in Occult texts you may get certain keys throughout the work which provide context to things which came before it, so that you might receive a key referring to the start but only recognize it upon rereading it, which will then provide keys later on which you had missed. You may also need keys from other books to understand the references which you did not know were references, your level of understanding thus being determined by the number of keys which you have recognized. In this way after reading or taking something in, the ideas are given some time to take form in the mind and then some time after they have been accepted in the world view, taking in the piece of work again, you are provided with the perception and context necessary to understand the deeper layers of the work. In this way a kind of cyclical growth much like a fractal formula is set up so that people of different levels of growing awareness will find different information useful to them with the exact same words. (Numerology providing some of the main keys in Qabalah) Like a fool, we go about trotting along, thinking we know what the words really mean, but the world remains unseen and trying to decipher these texts, you may indeed feel like a fool going in circles, but fools are also sincere and this serves them well and eventually you will find it's more like a spiral than a circle. Great books are those which take us on this journey and have the power to transform our lives and for all the faults of religion, the poetry of it can work miracles.

These kinds of works, if they can be recognized at all, are good for experiencing new things over and over again until you can learn no more. I have noticed it in many mystical texts and with enteogens it seems that the only way to keep up with the flood of incoming information is to have an expression or thought in such a manner that allows for multiple layers of meaning. In mystical literature there may be hidden layers or connections of meaning existing so deep, that those who are not in a certain state of awareness will not be able to make the connection and the words may seem totally incoherent, irrational or at least without very much meaning. For example some people who take entheogens will write down some profound realization, the true meaning of all existence, only to find out the next day they wrote down something like “grape nuts.” In my experience with entheogens I can often see much deeper into the meaning of words than without, words and pretty well all things take deeper significance and salience and it is possible to make associations which are generally too minuscule or unseen for casual or even very careful attention to pick up.

This creates a literary kind of green language and through it information is passed to those with “eyes to see and ears to hear.” Since entheogens can bring up all connotations and associations of words allowing you to see more deeply into their meaning, people who are high may seem to have trouble keeping up. It is the cliché that stoners are slow, but they are really just being overwhelmed with all the information and possible interpretations that most do not even notice and so reading the texts slowly is often important in the more poetic sections. There is a literary and symbolic aspect of the green language and there is the physical worldly communication with nature itself, (since books and writers are part of nature too) but all of these possibilities are definitely made easier through entheogens. This is especially true when outdoors and surrounded by natural organisms, but also in the city since the universe has more opportunity to manifest synchronicities that people in a regular state of mind are oblivious to.

The “Salt”, “Sulphur”, and “Quicksilver” of Alchemy can be applied to mythology or mystical texts as the physical, metaphysical and psychological layers of interpretation and meaning. You could also dissect texts in terms of the five elements, spirit, fire, water, air and Earth, but also the seven metals or seven ancient planets or the twelve signs of the zodiac. Alchemy among other things provides insight into the nature of western rationality, the scientific method and it's students provide art and texts which are probably the most advanced of this western tradition of the green language. Any good explanation of everything is going to tie together all aspects of reality into a unified expression, like a poetic fractal formula which is the basis of all reality. All types of information are rooted or spring forth from one fountain head of wisdom, so by knowing the “elements” we can look at the works from different contexts and so get their different interpretations. There are different definitions given the lack of orthodoxy in Alchemy, but salt, sulphur and quicksilver (not to be confused with astrological Mercury) are in their simplest forms the female, male and hermaphroditic principles respectively, or yin, yang and unified principle. This is a trinity that is found throughout mystical philosophy and all over nature and knowing these kinds of Alchemical principles allows for all kinds of insight and layers of interpretation when analyzing reality.

In these kinds of texts the sulphur principle describes states of being on the astral and spiritual energies in general, often those that are outside the individuation of physical or mental realities, it is the core spirit of the text, the essence of the subject of rhetoric and thesis. The physical or salt interpretation is the physical scientific information such as astronomical and chemical information, as well as basic materialist ideas of the universe coming into being; it is the form which contains the essence, the grammar of the symbolism and in some ways the antithesis. The Quicksilver principle would be the process of how consciousness is formed or how it operates, this describes the mind working with matter, unifying salt and sulphur, it is the psychological, logical and linguistic part, it is consciousness, it is synthesis and how the various abstractions or forms of the essence or sulphur inter relate. So sulphur is the essence of a thing, it is energy, salt is matter or the form of the abstraction itself and Mercury would be information and how different forms relate to each other logically and all together the three principles are called Azoth. While there are many layers here which can contradict to a certain degree when context is not taken in to account, from one perspective we could also say that salt and sulphur are each a premise, while quicksilver forms the proposition, the conclusion to the argument. In terms of a fractal formula, sulphur would be the values we give the variables and the iterations we derive from them and salt would be the fractal image graphed out, while quicksilver would be the formula itself.

While seemingly simple these 3 principles can be applied to anything, so that they themselves seem to make up a very simple fractal formula which is universally applicable. Thinking about it more it may seem confusing and perhaps inconsistent in some ways since this is just one way of many to think of the three principles. Unlike regular mathematical equations there is no orthodox definitions as in Aristotelian logic, there is no final answer to the equation, there is only the fact that the fractal of this trinity is in all things. Each principle itself can be shown to have all three principles within it, each of these divisions can in turn have their own triple divisions ad infinitum, none of them are pure and so it's ultimately more of an intuitive method or context, then something you can pin down definitively. It's important not to be too purist in your interpretations of the different layers as there is always some overlap, anything you analyze will have all three factors in some way, but the practice of putting things in these kinds of terms helps to shed light on various aspects you might have missed.

While ancient science was definitely vague in a lot of ways, (at least as we understand it today) calendar systems and other important information that was true and crucial to society was encoded in oral myths as a mnemonic device as the salt or material layer of interpretation. Ironically the hero of many an atheist and scientific rationalist, adored for his vision of the clockwork universe, Isaac Newton was not only incredibly spiritual, but completely dedicated to Alchemy, while math and physics was more of side line. What's more he said he got the ideas for some of his "discoveries" in chemistry from decoding Greek myths! Newton is far from being alone in his dual role as one of the founders of modern science and a student of the Occult or Alchemy, some of the best known are Francis Bacon, Roger Bacon, John Dee, Robert Boyle, Tycho Brahe, Raymond Lull, Gottfried Leibniz, Pico della Mirandola, Marsilio Ficino and lesser known but greater in character is also Paracelsus, who invented modern medicine, while Copernicus, Galileo and Kepler were astrologers more than astronomers. These figures were in turn influenced by Islamic Alchemists like Jābir ibn Hayyān who had preserved the ancient wisdom of the Pagans, ironically brought back by Christians who were assured of their superiority while invading during the crusades.

Some of these Alchemists are pretty unsavoury to an Anarchist mentality but it should be understood that Alchemy was illegal for anyone the king or church didn't like and so not surprisingly aristocrats and people of a Christian bent were often the most famous Alchemists. Everyone else had to keep quiet about their beliefs and experiments unfortunately as history is written by the winners, the true revolutionary nature of this shift in consciousness is at most denigrated in the more popular image of the Alchemist as a charlatan. However there was a kind of outlawed entheogenic Pagan underground, not just in terms of rebels practising Witchcraft, but remnants of Hermetic and Gnostic traditions hidden out of sight. Most important in terms of science these heretics were the Alchemists disproving church dogma one experiment at a time and creating the grass roots foundation for the renaissance, humanism and the resurgence of egalitarian ideals. While today Alchemists and Magicians are almost all thought to be charlatans, most were not public about their activities as it was illegal, it was the kind of thing that could get you burned alive or otherwise executed and so they were not trying to impress anyone or convert anyone and much of this charlatan image is government and church propaganda. As the rulers were stupid enough to take it in a purely literal way and had the only legal Alchemists and had the most money for expensive labs, they were who the charlatans would go to. Much of the roots of science lie in the "invisible college" a group first mentioned in the pamphlets of the Rosicrucian mystics who were determined to study nature and communicate the results of their experiments, often using elaborate codes to hide their heresy from the authorities. Architecture, masonry, metallurgy, astronomy, medicine, mathematics, drama, dance, art, music, alphabets, chemistry, physics, geometry, botany and agriculture all have their roots in the mystical practices of the ancients. While they do have materialist uses, all of them are used to perform magick, to achieve a person's will, they also all have much wider potential use within the Occult traditions as symbolic mediums of green language and the general search to increase awareness.

Some of the most important “keys” of mystical texts are Alchemy, astrology and Qabalah, but in order to understand one of these keys you must understand them all and so you must learn both in a linear way and a non linear way which is the process of the great work. That is you must understand the formula in a linear sense and recognize the holistic self similar patterns which can be graphed out. Of course another important key of interpretation is the wide spread use of entheogens for mystical purposes and artistic inspiration, something that is alluded to much more than most people know. In order to read mystical texts like those of the Alchemists you should take the Alchemists advice, “solve et coagula” or dissolve and coagulate, break it apart into its elements (reductionist logic) and put it back together. (Holistic, analogical thinking and intuition) Once you know the language of Alchemy, which to a large degree is parallel to astrology, you can look at the seven planets or metallic elements of the text; you can also look at the fire, air, Earth and water. Once you recognize these variables you can combine all these principles with the three to find the sulphur of the fire of mars, or the water of the salt of Jupiter, or any other combination to provide different lenses to view the material. The twelve signs of zodiac in Alchemy represent laboratory processes such as separation, or coagulation which among other things represent different methods of analyzing and interpreting information in the mind, which can use the different elements to form conclusions, or at least experimental theories in interpreting mystical texts and realities. These symbols are also integral to the western traditions in terms of ritually stating your intentions to the universe or manipulating energy within yourself, they can also provide natural phenomena with symbolic meaning for the universe to communicate with you.

Despite atheists clinging to their faith that science proves them right somehow, Alchemy and before that natural magick clearly exemplify early ideas about the scientific method and rationality itself, though within a mystical context, an actual spiritual discipline united with the experimental method. The church forced science into purely secular areas of research, but originally there was no difference between science and mysticism as there was no difference between nature and divinity. Alchemy being forced by the church to abandon spiritual experimentation focused on secular materialist things becoming science, only now pitting man against nature, with no context of humanities inextricable unity with all things. So in a sense Alchemy became Christianized, literalized, weaponized and purely materialist, being used to reinforce the empire of the demiurge, mostly through building up the military technology which has driven industrialism and created the world we live in today. This secularizing of science was taken one step forward in the nineteenth century when positivist atheists knowing little of mystical philosophy outside of a Abrahamic viewpoint, wanted to destroy the last vestiges of an Alchemical context and promote their own faith instead. This was in large part aided by the deliberate cover up of Newton's Alchemical practices to create materialist propaganda that would be helpful to the increasingly secular governments, especially those in protestant countries looking to undermine the Catholics.

The fact of the matter is that science is historically rooted in the ideas of Pythagoras and while it is different today, giving credit where it is due is important if you want to understand history and the present world. The word “physics” originally comes from the word “physis” which means nature and since Paganism and Pythagoreanism sees nature as divine, physics is really high Pagan theology. While I can just imagine the smirks this must raise in some atheists, in truth “physica” was a genre of Occult literature in the vein of Hermetic natural magick which sought to discover the hidden forces of nature that could be used to improve the life of humanity, but also aid nature in it's goal of universal evolution. However since it's Christianization, science has fallen in to severe corruption with the “disenchantment of the world” actually being a spell to enforce the separation of nature and the “supernatural” and thereby destroy the true context of the ancient mysteries. This corrupt context would then justify materialist greed and take away peoples magickal abilities outside the orthodox institutions of the church and academia. (For the purposes of clarity, when I say “metaphysics” it is pertaining to energies and realms which science has yet to explain or measure to any large degree, when I use “physics” I mean the branch of science, but originally there was no such distinction, it is just that the standards of evidence changed due to a naive materialist viewpoint.)

While we can trace the idea of scientific causality and a universal order with logical explanations to the Greeks, even they and Pythagoras had teachers from a variety of traditions and really these ideas have been with us since before the dawn of history. There have been giant leaps forward however which change the context from which we view these things, but the core methods and ideas of science which we know today were mainly developed in Alexandria by the Hermeticists, the mystical Alchemists whose texts would later be rediscovered by Europe and spark the renaissance enlightenment, giving way to science. While interactions go in to prehistoric times, once Alexander the great went to India, Europe and Asia were much more strongly linked culturally, trading and exchanging philosophies and ideas and Alchemy and Gnosticism are really the distillations of the known religions of the time, crystallized in that crucible or melting pot city of ideas known as Alexandria with its great library.

As John Lilly a major pioneer in psychedelic research pointed out, “science is the yoga of the west, and yoga is the science of the east” and Alchemy shows he is more right then even he probably thought. (Complete with western models of chakra systems and Tantric sex) To dissolve and coagulate is one of the basic keys of understanding, though even those instructions require some basic understanding to even comprehend that they are not purely talking about material things. Once you know that everything is one with you, that everything is a projection of your mind then the texts have a new context, all the variables within it are aspects of your consciousness. So it is a practice which was created to understand the external world so that it might shed light on the nature of consciousness and vice versa, using the world as a kind of magical mirror to skry out the mysteries of nature. As I said, by studying nature we can learn about our own minds and so the processes of chemistry can be likened to the elements of our mind, but in order to notice this you must have the intention to grow your self awareness.

To hide from the church and state, Alchemists and other Occultists put their teachings in elaborate codes, but also because it was thought that those who aren't willing to put in the time and effort to figure it out, do not have the right mindset or intentions necessary to go beyond the literal and worldly perspectives. Traditionally this was done for reasons of needing protection from the church and for the aristocrats it was done to keep the masses ignorant, but also sometimes because the lessons behind the codes or initiations required surprise and would be ruined if you were simply told the answer. Of course given what puffer scientists have done with this Alchemical knowledge we can see there is some very valid justifications for keeping it secret, but often these codes were used because there really isn't any other way to express the meaning besides compressing it within ambiguous metaphors. Those who are “vulgar” or “profane” or otherwise deemed unworthy are those who are motivated by greed or a desire for power, or as I said those who are not willing to put in the effort to develop their awareness, while those who are willing are worthy and so we shouldn't take the elitist jargon too seriously. Another reason for the secrecy is the communication of revolutionary ideas, heresies and notions of equality which are so intrinsic to Alchemical thinking. Not only were the inquisitions prejudice against Occultists, but most Christians were bigots and even today the Occult is seen in a bigoted light and so to avoid getting burned at the stake those who fight the rulers have to go underground. I am about as vulgar in the conventional sense as it gets, but there is still a lot that I have gotten out of Alchemy and so as with all mystical and Occult texts we should not apply anachronistic standards of political correctness. (For example we must realize that symbolism incorporating monarchies is often actually probably to avoid persecution from human rulers, but more so the monarchs all refer to your own mind.)

This kind of language can be very precise in its way, but it is often precisely describing ambiguous realities and unfortunately we have largely lost the meaning of the variables in the formula which were set up in ways similar to modern physics, but which include consciousness as an integral part within them. It is as if someone were to take the formulas of modern physics, make words of them and think they understand their meaning, when in fact the variables are symbolic of much more, even if the names and stories of these names are coherent and give away some other form of knowledge. Religions are usually founded on such works, but for most people they never seem to get beyond the simple superficial metaphors which they take to be real. While I am not arguing against the existence of the gods, understanding our unity with them, at the very least in their influence over the creation of our consciousness (as the originators of love, war, wisdom etc.) is crucial to understanding their myths.

What we call myths and assume to be false because they are old, are as I have said before, mnemonic devices intended to instill a kind of nested unfolding of information. I can only describe this as analogous to a kind of acronym of associative word play, through which volumes of information may be given in a relatively small amount of words, concisely arranged for the maximum compression of meaning. This “vitriol” against ignorance was especially important before the advent of writing, since all the societies’ knowledge, secular or not had to be passed on in a memorable and accurate way. Many ancient myths in at least some form go way back before writing; obviously it is just that we have no writing to tell us about it. Even still writing itself is originally just another way of adding more layers of meaning to the myths, as well as encoding numerological correspondences and a variety of other layers. (Though even still the majority of people were illiterate) Not only does this method of writing have practical advantages, but it also shows how all the various layers are interconnected and different expressions of the same underlying reality. The superficial literal interpretation of the writing is simply the form which can best encapsulate all the various aspects of the message. Through the symbolic archetypes and ability to inspire intuition, myths also take on a right brain ability to work as mnemonic devices not only for materialist, or salt based interpretations, but mnemonic devices of anamnesis, which when contemplated in daily life can create seemingly spontaneous insights about the nature of “sulphur.” Myths can either encode rituals or actually be acted out ritually, (as in Greece with Dionysus) with or without entheogens to alter consciousness in a way that allows for heightened states of awareness which can convey information that is tacit and even non local and non linear.

The influx of awareness during a mystical experience can be so strong that to express yourself otherwise when you are trying to explain the true nature of reality would be incredibly difficult and at the very least attempting to express your idea would become hideously and ineffectually verbose. By the time you managed to fully explain one tiny part of your idea (or formula) your whole trip may be over and your mind would have had to ignore all the following ideas and associations that come after. Once the stream of consciousness is opened, it rushes out with densely filled information, your mind racing with no time to fully explain in detail before going on to the next realizations. In order to explain one small point would require many points itself, each requiring a similar number of explanations which in turn must also be explained. This elaboration of the information takes the form of the oral traditions and explanations which originally accompanied the written works. The dense formulas of the myths must be unravelled later on, though even still this makes for painfully slow and redundant recursive explanations when put in linear logical terms. (If you want to read mystical texts and myths you might want to look up Philo's “rules for enigmas” or his work on interpreting allegories. Keep in mind repetition of key words, names and numbers, count out the number of symbols.) However by making the formula understood for what it is, people can learn to work out the answers to the equations on their own. For this reason compounding meaning is an effective means of getting your ideas across, (if you can do it) and in such a way that those who are ready for the information will see the meaning according to their own level of growth.

I try to be as up front about it as I can, but really who can say what goes on in the minds of those who create such works, this is the language of the subconscious, the language of the universe and it is the source of these works and so writing it out is often more like taking dictation, which is why it comes out as it does. Today we are used to sound bites and very literal kinds of linear communication, this green language demands the use of all the faculties and often a very detailed symbolic vocabulary. However you come to your green language, traditional or not it will have great implications for all your works of magick, it is a language much more powerful than the common words we use. You have to use intuition as well as reason, not to mention patience and determination, not a strong point for a culture used to using TV for its communication. In our world where you must be rich to have free speech, it seems as the Alchemists and bards knew only too well, that this is really the only way to have true “free speech,” other times though, in the weirder philosophies, those which seek to instill some reminder of humility in the author, it may be just a joke about pretension.

Alchemy provides some of the densest language ever created, but depending on the context and what we are trying to accomplish it does provide clues as to how this language can be interpreted for the accomplishment of the “great work.” The formula for the philosopher’s stone can be interpreted in a variety of ways and there are historically even different possible formulas, each formula can also be used for different things which will provide the context for you to work out how to interpret it. Keep in mind the formula applies to realities and forms of consciousness that are not just rational and so you should not be too “fixed” in your interpretations. Due to the limits of space I will not reiterate the actual Alchemical lab processes of the formula given in the Emerald tablets, but further research will give you more layers in to how this formula can be used for all kinds of things.

So using the same formula as before, in the process of rationalization we could say, calcination is reductionism, this is burning the question down to its essential irreducible elements, forms or variables, the grammar of the problem and seeing them for what they fundamentally are individually. Dissolution would be examining the elements holistically, dissolving them in a kind of soup of formless unity, in part utilizing imagination and intuition to try and get an impression of the total essence of the thing beyond it's forms. Separation would be taking the view of the forms of the individual variables in your mind in one hand and taking the holistic essence in the other and understanding how they are different. Conjunction would be applying all this acquired knowledge and putting it in to your memetic paradigm, seeing how all of it fits together coherently as one thing with what you think you already know about reality. Fermentation is allowing this new hypothetical addition to your paradigm to have time to grow in your awareness, to see how your paradigm functions in the real world in light of the new theory. Distillation is refining your understanding and eliminating any unnecessary aspects, taking in the new experimental data from the fermentation and coming up with a better conclusion and eliminating the cognitive dissonance which you may have noticed in that time. This conclusion is then coagulated, meaning it takes its final form and is set up permanently in your paradigm as an accepted fact to be used to help in further lines of reasoning.

The process of rationality is but one possible iteration of the formula for the philosopher’s stone which can be applied to perhaps anything with form, maintaining the same order of progression yet taking on new forms of expression for each step. When we look at the scientific method we can see another iteration or expression of this formula which is nested within our rational processes. There are “coincidentally” seven main steps to the scientific method; the first step is defining a question, which corresponds to process of calcination. This is because a question is the simplest point from which we must start the process, it is eliminating or burning away all extraneous lines of reasoning to accomplish our goal, (reductionism) because in order to find out the truth we need to know which questions to ask about it. (The goal being the conclusion or truth which we are trying to reach, the philosopher’s stone) The second step is dissolution, which is gathering information, resources and making observations, breaking down the knowledge of others to look for clues and doing background research or putting the question in to the context soup of facts already acquired. The third step is separation, or forming an explanatory hypothesis, that is you are separating one line of reasoning, one possible explanation from all the others according to what you think is most probable. The fourth step is conjunction, experimenting to test the hypothesis in a reproducible manner; you are uniting or conjoining the hypothesis with physical reality in order to collect data, or the truth that is the result of uniting these two opposites. The fifth step is fermentation, the analyzing and sorting of data which is a process that takes time, it is the gradual build up of awareness to a possible conclusion, the natural formative process of structuring the data to see what actually happened in the experiment. The sixth step is distillation, where by the scientist interprets the data to form a conclusion, leaving behind the gross speculations, the truth is evaporated and then condensed in to the answer of the question, leaving a substance which can then be used to form new hypothesis for further research. The seventh step is coagulation, or publishing the results in their final form so that it can be reviewed and implemented in to the scientific consensus reality, fixing the volatile truth which you have distilled in to an understandable form known as a paper, but which is backed up by a testable physical reality.

Sometimes an eighth step is included and that is where this formula is iterated yet again, showing yet another level of nesting within this process. The eighth step is where other scientists reproduce the results, following the seven steps of the scientific method and if they agree with the conclusions can move on to find new questions from the conclusion and start the process over yet again. If the first scientist has problems reaching a conclusion the formula can also be iterated again from steps 3-6, then back to 3 for further refining until a conclusion can be coagulated.

Since the formula for the philosopher's stone can be seen as a model of the process of the scientific method or how the rational processes come to a conclusion, if the formula is following a fractal pattern then it could correspond to fractal patterns within logic itself and the reality we create with it. Any recursive or self referential algorithm or procedure can potentially act as a fractal formula, creating a kind of fractal pattern since it creates self similar expressions which follow from each other, or emanate out as iterations. We can see this fractal pattern of logic using a "decision tree model" which according to the algorithm used will create different patterns. For example a simple fractal would be the algorithm where from each decision or starting point we have two possible choices, to do or not to do, to be or not to be. Each choice is a path that leads from the starting point to one of two new points, which will in turn then branch out in to two new possible future choices, which will lead to two more and so on, creating a fractal tree of logic.

By using the formula for the philosopher's stone or by using the scientific method we choose an algorithm which creates awareness with greater self similarity with reality, which allows us to use magick through technology and other means. The formula itself is vague and open ended, but it should be if it is to relate to everything in the universal fractal. (trinities seem to be the most primary fractal pattern) The more we elaborate on whatever question we have in mind, the more we graph out the fractal and all logic. We might know the formula, we might even recognize the shape of self similarity, but the exact forms have endless variety and in terms of far sighted predictions about what forms will be created, it is ultimately unpredictable Chaos and butterfly effects, according to the starting conditions. All questions seem to be pointing to this line of reasoning, all lines of reasoning are self similar and lead to the conclusion that they are all connected, unified, aspects of one question, one reality. I am? In this way all logic is in a sense redundant and circular, tautologies expressing one reality in different ways, limited abstract forms describing that which is formless, but which provide progressively more effective and detailed means of interacting with that formless essence of Chaos. You cannot dissect your way to wholeness, but you can gain insight in to how wholeness functions through reductionist means.

This fractal of rational awareness or decision tree model is represented in higher dimensions as the multiverse of 2D images which I experienced on Salvia and described earlier in chapter 8. Really this fractal of rationality is likely to be self similar with all abstract forms and all natural forms, it is all part of the same fractal spectrum joined even with things we do not normally consider to be pure rationality. In mystical traditions it is the tree of life and in Qabbalah, each segment or sephirah within the tree contains a whole tree, with each sephirah of that sub tree containing a whole tree ad infinitum. The tree of life is fractal in many ways though, from its form as a tree itself, to the solar system and galaxy, to its depiction as the lightning flash of electricity that was deemed fundamental to conceptions of reality, the electromagnetic spectrum, of colour and sound, consciousness and human anatomy. We can also consider the snake in the tree as the fourth dimensional body existing as a linear Ouroboros, that which is the zoom in to a possible self similar situation somewhere in the universal fractal according to the will of the consciousness. Fractals are present in the design of the Enochian tables and Sigillum Dei Aemeth or the rose on the rose cross and it is the lotus of Egyptian and Eastern art as well as the Sri Yantra and much much more.

What we rationalize, takes the form of internal dialogue which is the words we use to affirm something about reality, which manifests that reality according to the principles of metaphysics, which follow at least on one level a principle of fractal nesting from Chaos to physical reality. Remember that we do not exactly “create” the multiverse, but that our consciousness moves through all possible experiences, or parallel dimensions all of which exist at all times, we only experience them in a linear narrow minded way. So, our internal dialogue, our rationality (as flawed as it might be) is what helps us to make our decisions, to choose what to manifest and move along the decision tree model, (the multiverse) so that we can act as a line of reasoning, a process of anamnesis for the universal mind. This is also the process whereby we achieve our true will through our memes, our words and our logic which are themselves thoroughly fractal and unified with the rest of reality and magick is the key to navigating it all and putting it in the proper context, or getting to the place in the multiverse where our true will exists.

Noam Chomsky has proposed that due to the fact humans are genetically very similar and with very similar brains, all human languages share a “universal grammar” which operates according to the principles of our neurological anatomy. This works so that underlying all the apparent differences in our languages there must be some common structure that unifies it all, to believe otherwise is as he put it to believe in “magick.” While at first I found this idea very distasteful, after I thought about it more I realized the truth is a combination of magick and scientific principles, that if there is a universal grammar it must fall in to any universal fractal that exists and which is essentially the basis of much of mystical philosophy. Once I realized that, I realized that Occultists were actually aware of this universal grammar and many actually made it the primary area of their research. It is clear with even a little research that ancient philosophers were aware of fractals and were also aware of memetics (though obviously those terms are anachronistic) and that understanding the correlations between the two is actually central to magickal philosophy.

As fractals are so common in nature it is more than likely that memes and so languages are in fact self similar fractals according to the principles of the universal grammar which Chomsky and other linguists are searching for. Computer memory has been greatly enhanced by implementing the principles of fractals and as our brain grows and operates according to the principles of fractals, it is also quite probable that our neurological anatomy requires our languages be self similar to it, in order for us to store and recall information. Adapting through evolution to the general principle of “computational efficiency” we acquired the ability to use “recursive enumeration” so that we can potentially have infinite variety to our expressions, but structured according to fixed and relatively simple principles. If we see the rules of grammar as variables in a fractal equation it is certainly possible that these fixed rules create the endless variety of expressions that we have. There is likely to be many ways in which language is fractal and while I make no claims to being an expert linguist, there has already been some research on this idea, even its connection to universal grammar.

From my own thoughts I realized one way language is seen to be fractal is through how we write essays or books, in that we start with a letter, which at a larger scale is iterated in to words, which iterates in to clauses, which iterate in to sentences, then in to paragraphs, then pages, then chapters, then whole books, then sometimes multiple volumes of books. So long as continuity and some basic grammatical logic is observed, we have a whole fractal which can be elaborated indefinitely as our natural method of writing. Using words and phrases in different contexts, shows how the formula governing them (its definition) can be iterated in a variety of different ways. Cliches are an excellent example of this since they are applicable in so many different situations and so could be thought of as having more self similarity with the universal fractal than other phrases. Synecdoches and taxonomy, our methods of categorizing things with sub classifications, the genus of something etc are very clear example of how we structure and refer to our abstractions according to principles of self similarity. In their own way each, puns, or synonyms, homonyms, double entendres, chiasmus, onomatopoeias, anagrams, acrostics and acronyms are each a kind of fractal formula and each example of each of these things are the iterations of the formulas. It could very well be peoples unconscious repetition of words, or unconscious choice of words is linked to fractal patterns as well, as there is no doubt that things within our environment make our sub conscious mind react to form a consciousness which is self similar with it and thus capable of interacting with it, but layering in much more information than most assume. It seems likely to me that not only is language fractal, but since fractals are created by abstract formulas which are expressions of the mathematical language, then all equations including fractal formulas are themselves iterations of a universal fractal found everywhere in nature. This universal fractal formula has as its iterations other fractal formulas which make up the natural world, from linguistics, to physics and biology and many other things as well and all pieces of information are expressions of this one formula.

As I said Occultism in many ways is the study of the fractal principles of nature with symbols that express the research, so it is clear to me that the green language is in fact the language of universal grammar and the universal fractal. In Qabalah the tree of life shows the structure of language according to the sephiroth as archetypes, which are thought to be universally applicable, but with Hebrew seemingly being created to try and be the most fractal language possible. (Though Enochian may be even more fractal) In the sephiroth of Mercury, which is called "Hod" we find a whole tree within and on this tree we can see the various relationships between grammar, logic and rhetoric, the alphabet and how they relate to all the other fractals in our reality represented by the other sephiroth. (Gematria, Temurah and Notarikon are all explicit examples of literal Qabalah's self similar structure in regards to language.) Occult correspondences are the best preserved forms of ancient fractal awareness in the Western world, through sympathetic magick various aspects of reality are linked together, more than metaphor they are like synesthesia. So for example each Hebrew letter has a colour and sound etc and indeed synesthesia either through entheogens or otherwise seems to be the personal interpretation of how various sense perceptions are self similar with each other. (Though on ayahuasca it is said that people have group "hallucinations" and everyone see's sounds as being the same colour.) Through mystical experimentation Hermeticists working on hermeneutics and invoking the god of language Hermes have worked with archetypes, which I believe are self similar to the universal grammar in order to form the basis of Alchemy, that is the creation of abstract scientific models that can be used to understand the external world through logic. In Gnosticism we can see the emanations of the Pleroma into aeons and then into archons is also self similar according to astrological patterns.

As so much of reality is fractal, it makes sense that language should be fractal in order for it to accurately depict that which it is talking about, but while fractals seem to be everywhere no doubt we do not always see them, in fact it is probably because they are so universal that most do not recognize them. When archons are created through language they can make us fixate on the variety of the expressions, losing the context of the fractal unity and its self similarity. As I said, you cannot dissect your way to wholeness and so logic alone, relying on fractal principles cannot allow you to understand the formula which gives rise to all its computations. Those who create a language, like say English, could very well know of the universal grammar, the fractal formula from which we form all our expressions and if these people were elitists they could make themselves in to rulers, entrancing people with broken logic to lose the context of wholeness and accept logical fallacies to turn society in to a pyramid, a hierarchy. Those who could truly see the universal grammar, who can see the "shape" of the universal fractal's self similarity through identifying the fractal pattern of all language, would in turn understand how all information is connected and unified. This would provide a great advantage in being able to tell the veracity of a statement by its self similarity with the universal grammar, which is itself part of the larger fractal pattern found within all nature. Being able to see the "shape" of how all things fit together would also increase a person's ability to learn new things, because they would have a much greater understanding of how information fits together and how to approach the subject with perfect logic. Debating skills would increase dramatically as well as cognition in general as we would be able to spot logical fallacies that are not self similar, but also we would know the logical progression of any line of reasoning and be much better at extrapolation, since this is essentially how the fractal grows.

With perfect understanding of language the ability to manifest reality would also be greatly enhanced and it is no accident that Mercury, the planet which governs communication and language is the magician card in the tarot. Connections between various topics which normally would go unnoticed would be seen to have a particular self similarity or fractal proximity to each other within the universal fractal and so all kinds of new innovation and understanding could be achieved. If universal grammar functions according to fractals as evidence suggests, such as "recursive enumeration" (the common base 10 numerical system is another example of language fractals, adding an extra zero for each iteration) then any fractal pattern which underlies reality as a whole (which is a primary theory of Occult philosophy) must also be in some way self similar with it. This means not only does language describe and model reality, but that the structure of language itself is self similar with reality, especially in terms of the neurological anatomy which produces it. This is even truer if as Occult philosophy states, reality is composed of thought forms, language which has congealed in to matter. In fact the word "matter" in terms of material things is etymologically the same as the kind of "matter" which is the subject of thought or speech, both originally meaning "mother" and so we see that etymology and how words change over time, happens according to principles of self similarity as well. Language and matter then are really just different iterations of the same universal fractal formula which underlies all things, they may superficially appear different but are self similar in a number of ways, in fact an endless number of ways as there is an endless number of iterations.

The more obvious a logical statement is, the more it is self similar with the universal grammar, but obvious statements are also reliant on the more fundamental beliefs in our paradigm, so through focusing on what many consider to be trivial and obvious, we can gain a clearer picture of the shape of the universal fractal. The more obvious a statement, the more we are sure about its true reality and if it is indeed true then it is self similar to any universal fractal, so that once the self similar pattern is spotted, we can use that awareness to help discern the validity of a statement. One obvious statement might be that "reality is one thing" yet the implications of this are generally missed by most people, their logic is not self similar to this obvious fact and so archons can gain control. My intuition tells me that our intuitive ability to calculate probability is probably determined by our ability to recognize the self similarity of a statement with what we already believe, something which we can be mistaken about, but which helps us none the less. Science is the attempt to absolutely determine the self similarity of a train of thought through experiment and when we get a counter intuitive discovery, it is a discovery which shows that the self similar pattern of our paradigm is not quite what we thought. Through experiment we gain data that allows us to form a theory in words which are self similar with the data, which if the data is accurate is itself self similar with the universal fractal. All logical statements are using the correct universal grammar and so may appear to be true, but are not necessarily very self similar with the fractal pattern of universal grammar, because logic is not always based on facts, but internal consistency of what is believed to be facts. Any truly true statement is self similar to the universal fractal pattern of nature, which must be in some way self similar with the fractal principles of universal grammar.

Cognitive dissonance is a belief symbolized as a statement that does not have self similarity with another statement/belief creating a contradiction, but if something is logically consistent then the statements are self similar. (Like two statues with matching aesthetics) Cognitive dissonance is when we have two beliefs we acquired through our bad reasoning skills, which are not self similar but which we try to connect, or simultaneously believe, implementing them within our paradigm and so creating illusionary coherence and incompatible patterns of thought. A non sequitur is a logical progression that does not follow the original formula or premise, an erroneous statement which can be thought of as trying to zoom in on a fractal, or continue the train of thought but instead going to a totally different fractal which is not self similar, creating a bridge of cognitive dissonance between two unrelated beliefs. (As with all logical fallacies) A premise is the formula from which your train of thought is generated and so knowing what your original assumptions are, the foundations to your paradigm is key to understanding the self similarity or logical consistency of your arguments. As our language determines what assumptions or paradigm we use to phrase our speech or logical arguments, it is very much on the foundations of our paradigms, the sounds in the language being self similar with different wave lengths of vibrating air. The shape of the fractal, the pattern which is repeated according to self similarity is the essence of the subject, while the various iterations of the premise formula are the forms which can encapsulate that essence. You may look at each of your individual realizations as separate, unconnected and unique and as the individual iterations they are, but when you see the big picture and examine your beliefs over time, you will find self similar patterns which underlie and unite them. Without understanding what your core axioms, or premise's are, you can zoom in on the fractal forever, thinking you are making great progress but missing all understanding of the real context behind your views.

Since the universal grammar structures all languages and symbolism, it is the structure of all information and so through an understanding of it, we can gain the keys to all abstract knowledge through the perfect analogic reasoning which would come with knowing the shape of universal self similarity. Such knowledge would reveal how various seemingly unconnected disciplines and studies are related, creating what is essentially a universal hermeneutic for deciphering the answer to any problem, or understanding any body of knowledge. Those who were masters of universal grammar could speak with maximum rationality and with a fundamental understanding of how all information fits together as soon as it is received. However just because there is a universal grammar does not mean people always speak in a grammatically correct way and so by encouraging poor language skills, the rulers help to hide the self similarity of the universal fractal. Those elitists who know the context of the pattern can distract people with red herrings and all kinds of misdirection and illusion, sending them off zooming into the least self similar fractal reality tunnels. Then the masses will have a harder time recognizing the pattern while still finding some truth in it, all the while the elites maintain a knowledge of the big picture. If universal grammar is a reality then it will apply to all information we have and so will apply to everything we ever perceive, providing the formulas for consensus reality and how all forms are created within it. To Qabbalists and Hermeticists (and in some ways even Jews, Christians and Muslims) the universe is created by language and it is actually composed of language and so the idea of a universal grammar would really be the same as the universal fractal and would be the mechanics of all reality which can be abstracted and so it must be the mechanics of the collective unconscious. (indeed dream symbolism and its puns etc are self similar to synesthesia)

If the universal grammar is based on fractal principles as it appears to be, then even things like regular mathematics and Euclidean geometry could be unified according to fractal patterns so that all our creations, all our memes, even those which do not appear to be fractal in any way are still created from the fractal processes of consciousness. This idea is central to Pythagorean views of cosmology, numerology and mathematics, in fact we could interpret numerology as the exploration of the fractal principles of numbers. Abstract divisions of time like our calendars and clocks become markers of self similarity, or where the pattern repeats within the underlying fractal scale of the universal grammar that created it and through these markers we measure the rate of resolution as we zoom in to the centre. Time and again we see language is self referential, recursive, definitions dependent on definitions of other words, defined by yet more words in a language with a finite number of words, creating finite grammatical combinations; a fractal formula is thus created for each language's form, with inherently self similar rationalizations. So understanding universal grammar is crucial to epistemology, or understanding any information at all, it governs even how we abstract fractal formulas and so it could be aspects of universal grammar are beyond our ability to describe. We are capable of creating new words, but universal grammar would mean new words are created according to pre-existing principles and defined by other words so that language is always limited, luckily we can access consciousness beyond words. There are many types of fractals all over lapping, many formulas describing different kinds, some geometric, some pertaining to consciousness, some to abstraction, but if all abstraction is fractal because it is determined by universal grammar, then all these fractal formulas are themselves different iterations of one fractal formula, the universal fractal which unites all forms, all information. (Sophia is found in all matter)

If all things with form are part of a universal fractal, then the various factors which make up a fractal are themselves self similar with all the other possible patterns in the universal fractal. That is to say the universal fractal must be self similar with the factors which make up fractal geometry itself, the pattern or shape being in accordance with how these factors of fractals interact with each other. Any explanation of this will itself be a fractal formula and not the universal formula itself, but by considering different models we can look at different examples of self similar patterns and look for self similarity among them. This will be subjective, but you should try and come up with your own models, fractals are created by formulas and so these fractal factors which can be likened to all fractals might be thought of something like this: Variables = thought forms and calcination, Variable Values = emotions or dissolution, Formula = decisions or separation, Iterations = actions or conjunction, Colours = perceptions or Fermentation, The negative non fractal, or Black centre = true will or Distillation, Fractal Shape = Mystical awareness, or manifestation of will and magick and is congelation. This may seem different than my other use of this philosopher's stone formula, and in some ways it is, but all of reality has many apparent differences and yet it is unified, self similarity has various degrees but is never exactly the same, it is only "similar."

Since our consciousness and our brains are self similar with nature or the universal fractal, we can increase our self awareness as part of the process, so by studying the fractal correspondences found in nature, we can use the patterns we find to figure out things about our self awareness and really this is the main principle of Alchemy. In fact since we do not generally experience the "exterior" fractals but only have thoughts and ideas about them, these thoughts and ideas must be self similar with the awareness that creates them and so all the diverse patterns we observe in nature are coming from our own awareness, so that if we do not consciously look to our own patterns, we will never fully recognize the universal patterns "outside." Not only this our minds are more readily available to us then anything else in nature and as our brains and minds are the most complex things we know of in the universe, they are likely to be the most self similar with nature.

Culture, governments and most likely everything besides ineffable Chaos seem to be created along these fractal patterns, but the use of a constitution and laws as formulas are good examples of this. Although on the surface these laws and constitutions may seem fair, (at least to ignorant people) it can take years of this system being played out for the errors or flaws to become apparent to the majority and even longer for something to be done about it. Sociologically there are quite probably memetic generations reproducing and evolving over different time scales, some reproducing quickly like fruit flies, some taking much longer like pandas, so that a certain type of meme may only come about for a short period every one hundred years but still, "history repeats." (IE memetic life cycles and "estrous cycles") Even more telling is the cliché that "the more things change the more they stay the same" which is an observation based on the fractal nature of sociology, that the specific aspects of the fractal may change, but it is always actually the same, but more so since the scale of the fractal is larger or the resolution is higher. In this case the memes would be the formulas and society would be the fractals which at regular intervals basically repeat themselves in society. Although there is constant change to parts of these formulas the root and trunk of a problem often stays the same. So for example the fundamental formulas of the governments usually stay, hierarchy, money and duality remain and so are replicated with slightly different looking flaws. Different forms of government do not succeed because they are based on a false premise, a formula rife with cognitive dissonance compared to the rest of our logic and so corruption always occurs. This is of course because the gardener doesn't want to have to cut the whole tree down and get to the bottom of things.

Religions (with their formulas usually being in some text, their different forms I would argue are different expressions of the same prehistoric formulas based on nature and astrology) and governments of course are the main influence on the majority of human behaviour and so our own personal formulas are much like off shoot formulas of the fractal manifestation. Or to put it another way we are just a small branch on a much bigger fractal set's arm that is more primary than our general personal formulas. In a variety of philosophies and religions there is the concept of the "eternal return" which can take a variety of forms but generally incorporates the idea of cyclical time, or times repeating, perhaps the universe or the Earth is destroyed and recreated endlessly, but in most cases it does seem like the concept of fractals could be applied to these conceptions of the recurrence of self similar patterns through time. (The Mayan calendar with its wheels within wheels is incredibly fractal) As we live in a consensus reality, the memetic paradigm of the people in this reality contribute to how we manifest and change our reality, (both metaphysically and physically) so while it is quite possible that science could find fractal aspects to time (whatever that is) no doubt a fractal conception of time would change how people perceive it and make their decisions about the future. Each meme in our psyche could be said to be a variable in our personal formulas and a meme's mutation or progression and transmission from person to person is the different fractal forms of the formula as each person puts their own personal touch on it. I believe there is a more fundamental formula to the governments which are shaping us to some end, most likely global genocide, the endless iteration of the "civilized" memes has brought the planet to the brink of ecological collapse and enslaved almost all humans.

Fractals iterate through all time and space taking form as one whole, fractals have more than geometric forms, self defining, recursive iterations of self similar patterns repeating in endless expressions are an underlying principle of nature which shows the fundamental unity of all the various forms of reality, or oneness with plurality, an endless variety of forms. The degree of self similarity is much easier to notice in some forms than others, especially in artificial constructs, but all is united through subtle Ouroboros like patterns of congruent repetition, which applies to each apparently individual thing in endless macro to micro scales. This is one thing for me to explain it to you, but it is quite another to be aware of this in your perception and while entheogens can certainly help with this, once you see them, you will always see them.

The variables of consciousness are represented through the archetypes, the different pantheons of Pagan religions, or if you like the planets and stars of astrology, itself presenting a fractal philosophy of humanity being the reflection of the patterns of the sky. Dualism is represented by the monotheistic religions of Judaism, Christianity and Islam since they believe there is only one valuable or "good" thing, everything else is demonic or "evil," so in their pursuits of the one true "good" they create more "evil." Although duality exists as the egos of many Pagan people, such as the Roman aristocracy and other authoritarian Pagans, this is because they obviously do not see themselves as being on the same level or oneness with other people. Although polytheism is not a guarantee of Anarchism, having a polytheistic map of consciousness allows those who are inclined to explore the variables of consciousness. So, through experimenting with giving different values to the different gods and goddesses, (or variables) we can learn how they each manifest in our lives so that we can recognize the expressions of their patterns in our lives.

Mythological symbols or characters are themselves the fractal patterns which are present at all levels of reality and so anything in reality, any endless numbers of fractal iterations can be interpreted within their mythological context, which is why there are so many arguments about what religions mean. Myths are true, they just do not happen in the way we think, they happen in an eternal realm (the dream time) and all of time is the iterations of how the gods interact in the myths. All myths are always happening in a non local realm, so for example the odyssey of Homer is always happening, in everything, myths are in the fractal curls in the wake of a boat, your kitchen when you make your breakfast, or in the lives of James Joyce's characters. Through iterating different patterns by giving different values to the various gods, we can become aware of that aspect of consciousness by measuring its effects in our lives, but ultimately true understanding of consciousness as a whole comes from valuing all aspects of consciousness equally, balancing all variables or symbols of the universal mind as equal expressions of one underlying pattern. So it is we need to develop awareness of one total fractal, one which does not set itself above anything, because a balanced fractal equation where all variables have a value of one, is a fractal of everything, even the current illusions of humanity that it is separate from something, or that duality exists.

So through creating or working with existing variables of consciousness (divinities) which are not seen as superior to other gods and goddesses, humanity can stop being controlled by archons and learn what true awareness and free will means. But for this to work it must be understood all divinities come from the same source, (Chaos, Ginnungagap, or the All etc.) it is not so much about having variables which seek to destroy “demons,” but instead we must create a complete picture of reality through complex monist variables. From this view not even the archons are “evil” because they are simply an experiment in consciousness to see what happens when the all tries something different than Anarchy. In so doing awareness of the motivation of why we should stay in Anarchy or oneness is created, which provides us with free will, while exercising that will to do other than be in oneness or Anarchy is the creation of the ego and the fall into duality. This is the loss of nirvana or windless sales and the creation of the demiurge or ego (wisdom's abortion) trying to fulfil desire through the endless iteration of the unbalanced desire variable (which is synonymous with the hierarchy variable since we only desire things that out of ignorance we think are higher in our value hierarchy) and which we have given a higher value than 1 in the equation of consciousness.

A person's train of thought then in many ways develops in a fractal nature, the linear flow of thoughts being the iteration of the fractal formula (the memes of the individual and how they fit in relation to each other) which produces a person's linear logical consciousness and so produces much of the world we live in. An explanation or elaboration is a train of thought which unfolds the fractal expression of an equation (the concept being explained) and so all of the language used, including the language in this explanation and this book itself, is a fractal unfolding of the central concept which it is attempting to model or explain, in this case the concept being Anarchism's relation to spiritual reality. When we add lots of adjectives and adverbs to a description it naturally grows in to a more complex fractal, it becomes “flowery” language a term which intuitively describes how elaboration creates increased complexity through further iteration in to the fractal pattern, which is similar to the fractal “unfolding development” that is a flowers growth. Different trains of thought or lines of reasoning, based on different information can come to the same conclusion about something because they are different fractal iterations of the same formula. Going off on a tangent is going off on a less obvious or self similar branch of the concept or fractal than the more obvious linear progression of the equation, such as this sentence here. Through learning to utilize intuition however, consciousness is capable of looking at the entire fractal as a whole; it is the logical part of the mind which attempts to zoom in or out on the fractal, not even realizing that it would require infinite resolution, or that the whole is represented in all portions of itself. This is because scientists are only studying the irregularities of the expressions rather than the commonalities or the whole of the fractal, which is the job of the mystic, where as a magician or Alchemist does both.

The philosopher's stone is the black or undefined but real part of a fractal, it is the union with and gnosis or intuitive awareness of Chaos, the Pleroma or Ain Soph from which emanates the abstract world of forms which is the fractal that we normally see and perceive. So if logic and material awareness is zooming in on the fractal, we could say it is reification in order to make things explicit, specific and clearly defined. Zooming out of the fractal, to see it grow out would be more implicit, poetic, ambiguous, “big picture” mythological and metaphorical abstractions. So that when we zoom out symbols represent greater amounts of information with more potential for interpretation, represented in its size but with a more implicit ambiguous definition, or a lower resolution within the fractal. Whether we are zooming in or out our fractal is surrounded by blackness, the fractal can take an infinite variety of self similar forms growing forever, but it never really grasps the blackness and the precise location of the border is never found. Intuition comes from understanding the self similarity and how it works together and gnosis or the philosophers stone is the source, or the black centre which cannot be conceptualized, (it is “occult” or hidden) but can be accessed by Occult practice. These two aspects of consciousness exist as both a duality and unity, which creates a trinity, the border between them going on in-definitely, the more you zoom in to see it, the more detail you perceive. (Sulphur=Blackness, Salt=geometric forms Quicksilver=the border) The universal fractal is perhaps not totally “universal” in that it is all that has form, from abstract ideas to molecules and physical laws, but the centre is Chaos and beyond form, yet it also contains and produces all forms.

The idea that everything has been done before, that there can be no new art is the beginning of some basic awareness of the fractal nature of memetic evolution and progression. All abstractions are an elaboration on the premise of the meme “I am,” which is the justification for having thoughts, it is the most obvious of thoughts to any person. All abstraction is based on the idea of being an “I” and so each meme which logically follows after, is some aspect of a fractal iteration which has been mapped out from a segment of the same self similar model, but one which is capable of taking on an endless variety of forms, according to the scale at which it is observed. Many people think their art is unique, and although it may be hackneyed or cliché, unless it is plagiarized it is unique in some way. Reoccurring themes and images are brought up from the symbol dictionary of the unconscious which then calculates and symbolically represents or graphs out the next fractal iteration of the memetic formula, creating something new, but which is self similar to all other memes to some degree.

While it may seem simple at first, you cannot measure the coastline, or even tell exactly where it begins because of the indefinite definition, so in the same way we cannot use language or logic to determine the border of the divine singularity with physical reality, the endless spectrum of spectrums. The smaller the unit of measurement, the bigger the thing you are measuring will be and so the fractal nature of the coastline, which allows for endless and continuous resolution by measuring to greater and greater degrees, prevents any real specificity, but provides endless improvement to our approximations. We still can't even draw perfect circles or parallel lines; we are all living in one fractal, going through with the endless zoom of boundless self similar variety in the search to find the truth. We cannot measure awareness in this way, the philosopher's stone that lies in the centre is outside the border of rational analysis, and the boundary is endlessly definable and always illusive. We can never truly find the edge of a fractal, but we are all surrounded by them, especially before we killed so much nature, but we can heal much of the damage if we try, we can realize our place within the pattern, we can experience the unity and omnipresence of the black stone of consciousness with the fractal that we find ourselves in. With this realization we will be everything and we will know where we really are in the universe, we will be us and each unique as each branch of a tree, each of us an ecstatic grape on the vine of divinity, the ecstasy of Dionysus or the global entity known as Gaia.

Scientists are in the position of trying to understand the whole by always refining its view or zooming in on the fractal, using linear consciousness to explore each unique expression of the fractal formula and because of this, they will never run out of explanations for things. Their train of thought will never end since the fractal is infinite, they keep repeating themselves without even realizing it because they get new conclusions about the same thing. Once scientists more fully realize that they have to look at reality holistically, that they cannot separate the observer from the observed then they will find the philosophers stone, the key to the mysteries and all of reality will open up to them and all of us. But here's the really neat part, you do not need to wait for them and you can even help them simply by realizing the truth inside yourself, because you are part of the big picture the total fractal, your awareness is reflected in the big picture and your gnosis will naturally ripple out.

If this wasn't enough, after I found Helen hanging from the tree I took ketamine and I experienced the fractal nature of time and it was made clear to me in a very direct way, it was an experience which turned out later to even have some precognitive aspects. (Ketamine must always be used carefully and spiritually, its addictive aspect is just one of many reasons why it is not a very ideal entheogen, though I would be lying if I said it was useless.) It's taken me some time to figure out what it meant, but after learning about universal grammar I started thinking more about matter as language and physics as language and the time fractal made more sense to me. On subsequent K trips I have also experienced similar things, the fractal looks like a plant, with three leaves, or like a fountain from the top with three different leaf shaped bowls which then pour out in to lower layers of three. Perhaps the best description would be to say the top layer looks like a Celtic symbol called a triquetra, while as a whole the fractal might better be represented as a triskele, though it is hard to remember much detail about it. It is very hard to describe as it was merged with normal perceptions of space and time, (the image of the room I was in) I was not outside of physical reality as on Salvia and I could see the future come in to view as the present. K strongly effects the memory and so remembering is a bit difficult (one of the main drawbacks to its spiritual use) but as I would zoom in to the edge of the fractal, new leaves would appear, as if I had been looking at the top of a plant, only to find bigger leaves below each layer of branches. This may or may not have been the universal fractal, or may or may not be how the time fractal looks at all times to all people, (I did see thought as a different looking fractal or "sprocket" on mushrooms) but by understanding time as a fractal, whatever the shape, we can come up with some very interesting and explanatory models of reality.

As we zoom in on fractals they appears to grow, if there is a black centre it appears to be a 3D tunnel with depth which we are travelling through, but this is an optical illusion caused by our increased resolution of a 2D image, showing us more details of the edge of the fractal. (If you don't know what I mean by this look up a video of fractal zooming) As time is fractal, what appears to us as the present moment moving in to the future is really just ego consciousness focusing to zoom in on the edge of the fractal to a greater degree. The future then is really just the smaller edge of the fractal relative to the present, but shown at higher resolution, your viewpoint appears to be closer to the edge as you move in to the future and so it appears to be the same size as the past according to your perspective. The past present and future always exist, as do all possible divergent time lines, (being the various ways you can steer your focus to zoom in on different places on the edge of the fractal) but we appear to travel through time in 3D space because of a similar kind of illusion.

In this way, the size or resolution of the observer is like a spacial dimension itself, for example if you shrunk down far enough an atom would seem like a big area, you would see that there is actually a huge space between the nucleus and the electrons and that there is a huge size difference between them. If you grew large enough you could see the current state of the big bang as a tiny point, if your position and size were correct it would even seem like the big bang had not yet occurred. Due to relativity, as your size increases or decreases so does the amount of space you take up and so what appears to be the same speed relative to the distance you travel in the perceived size of your surroundings also changes and so your perception of time changes accordingly, thus making it look normal. The observer, or "[wo]man is the measure of all things" so that by moving through this dimension at the right speed we become smaller and smaller and seamlessly move in to the future, increasing our resolution so that we can perceive a variety of perspectives on the edge of the fractal.

Time flies when you are having fun because you are more focused on what you are doing, you are making many mental notes about what is going on around you, likewise things drag on when you are not interested, not focusing, not making mental notes and not zooming in on the fractal as fast as you could. This is why people have a subjective experience of time perception, it is different rates of increasing resolution and different amounts of noting observations, so that people who see a certain time as having a lot of relevance where they understand the situation, will perceive that time as going faster than those who do not. So what then is focus? Focus is paying attention according to our will, our intentions and we know we are paying attention by making reference notes as thoughts and observations and this is the work of the ego, that which narrates your life and provides the story of your identity.

When you can calm all thoughts, or have perfect focus on one thing, or if you overcome the ego then you experience samadhi, oneness, timelessness and can be in the moment perfectly, experiencing the entirety of the fractal. (Such as can happen on ketamine or other entheogens) So time turns out to be the rate of our zoom in to the edge of a fractal and space is the fractal itself in 2D, but with the illusion of it being 3D due to our increasing focus on the edge. If our focus and concentration was “single pointed” time could appear to stand still as one moment, or one object motionless and unchanging, so that with no mental notes you experience timelessness. People will perceive a person in a mystical state as existing in time, but for the mystic it is as if consciousness is moving at the speed of light, seeing all this time as if it was standing still, as one fractal shape which is self similar with all other times that have ever been.

Scientists have already theorized that the more observations and the more information a person has going in to a situation to provide context, the more “layers of description” you have during an experience, making time seem to move fast while it is happening to you. (See A Fractal Topology of Time: Implications for Consciousness and Cosmology – Kerri Welch) This is because you are so busy articulating things and drawing up points of reference and connotations from your memory that among other things, you do not pay as much attention to the flow of time. In retrospect the events of that time appears to have gone on for longer because you have many points of reference, many memories to draw from, you felt like you were very engaged and so many things must have gone on. That is you have abstracted and so condensed more information than if you were not paying attention, so looking back it appears as if more happened. Someone who is bored, who is not engaged and who does not have many layers of description or points of reference with what is going on will experience the exact same events as dragging on. In retrospect such people see it all happening much faster because they have not seen the events as important and have fewer memories or mental notes taken about the events. A mystic makes no points of reference, so a moment seems to be an eternity, but when trying to describe the experience, or even remember it, much like a dream it can be very hard since they made no abstractions at that time and it will often seem like it went by quickly. From this I am now much better able to understand my first acid experience out of body, which as far as I can tell literally happened in the blink of an eye. It is also possible that mystical experiences are induced when all points of reference are observed and made, that is we can become one with the universe by having perfect love for it. In this way we become aware of the whole of the fractal, but in either case time ceases to be, if matter is words or thoughts, then the mystic has the whole thought of the universe at once.

So focus and articulation are key to your perception of time, or how fast you zoom in on the fractal and so as you focus more, you have seen and noted more detail and have more of a reified reductionist definition on the same fractal, but in what the clock considers to be a set amount of time. (This is because zooming on the fractal is the measurement of change, rather than “time” as some kind of force) All people who experienced that set amount of time zoom in to the same degree, but the rate at which we zoom is not the same. Only those with focus have the memories of which fractal formations were created and these memories could help to recognize self similar patterns, or logical chains of reasoning that allow for planning the future. Enjoyment is not necessarily the only way to make time appear to move faster, anyone absorbed in their work will find the same thing, focus and notation of events is the key. Where as someone with a more poetic or mystical mind frame will have less clearly defined resolution, wishing to linger at the larger scales to soak it all in more, but having less abstractions to reify and so iterate the fractal formula, so that the person zooms in at a slower rate.

(Which is why potheads may seem slow witted) Obviously we cannot be so bored that time appears to slow down completely, but a dissociative, or entheogens like ketamine or Salvia has done so for me, being able to still the mind and empty it of thoughts could be another method.

If true the implications for relativity theory could be quite staggering, (probably entropy too) especially if as I believe matter actually is condensed thought form abstractions, because it would unite the informational fractal which I have been talking about with time and space and gravity. Since matter and linguistic cognition are both iterations of the universal fractal formula which creates fractal formulas, they will be different formulas producing somewhat different things, each unique, but still self similar in some ways. So while I will try to explain this self similarity, since I am using language to explain language, I must resort to metaphors which are not exact logical matches. These ideas hurt my head and I am not exactly sure how gravity and speed fit in to the universal fractal of information with its variable perception of time, but they are connected. If matter is abstraction, then what could gravity be? It brings together more and more abstractions, sucks in more energy in to one object.

Gravity seems to be stealing focus, almost like archons trying to keep you trapped in matter, since we zoom according to will, we might say gravity is related to desire, that which we wish to focus on, the forms and essences we like to experience. Attachment to these desires keeps us focused on a very narrow set of priorities and behaviours, which then limit our scope to the symbols associated with the essence we desire. Since we are so absorbed in these desires, we ignore the “subtle” energies or things we consider trivial, or any uncomfortable truth we can and so we completely miss the holistic fractal picture of how it all fits together. We desire essences yet “familiarity breeds contempt” and so it seems our reductionism and experience of essence dissipates it, or transmutes it to understanding, thus satisfying our desire. For this reason some people prefer mystery or mystique to in depth scientific explanations, thinking ignorance is bliss. When we elaborate something our desire for understanding dilutes and dissects that desire until the gravity of it's individual dissected parts weakens to the point we become distracted by something else. This fits in nicely with my ideas about exhausting our desires, or the Aghori view that all things are perfect and holy, what people call “crude” desires are really just fractals which haven't been focused on much, the most primary and core desires which are the root of all other desires. “Refined” desires are desires which are deemed by mainstream culture to be in good taste and are those which are at a higher resolution of zoom. The more we focus on elaborating our explanations of an essence, the more energy we feed to it's thought forms, generating more fractal elaborations until eventually, especially if multiple souls are focusing on it, the thought form is filled with so much energy or sparks of light that it congeals as matter.

Stars can even transmute hydrogen to create bigger atoms, for greater varieties of abstraction and so in many ways, gravity seems to be connected with reifying essences and moving through time to the centre of the fractal which comes from our desire to focus on worldly or physical things. (which are abstractions) The more gravity in a given situation the more you will want to focus on it, to implement reductionist knowledge of those abstractions in to your memory. The more mass an object has the more it creates gravity, so as form and matter is symbol we can say these are “weighty” concepts and “heavy” or “dense” subjects, but which create situations of such gravity that we often fall under their influence, or even go in to orbit around them until they are transmuted to awareness. The more mass something has, the more energy, so the more essence or meaning that form or symbol has, the more it interacts with other symbols, with subjects like astrophysics or black holes having a big gravitational pull, that is the things they explain have galactic and intergalactic implications.

The more gravity something has, the more ambiguous it is, the more energy it has, so the more it can interact with reality and do more “work.” The more energy something has the more potential it has to create information that can be recognized through reification, but the information in these ambiguous symbols can also be understood in less specific poetic states of mind as well. Once a situation seems to be fully understood, once we no longer have interest in something, or feel like we cannot get any more information from our focusing, then it seems our distillation, or rectification is complete and we move on to something else which grabs our attention. Or as Alchemists say, we must separate the “subtle” from the gross or the volatile from the fixed, so that through this “rectification” by increasing “resolution,” the great work of turning lead in to gold can be accomplished. By this I mean the information contained by the symbol or “matter” can be understood through careful analysis at a variety of scales.

The more gravity, the more matter is attracted and as matter is essentially strings of energy, the object or thought form (congealed to a material form) also acquires more energy, that is the more meaning a particular matter has, the more gravitas it has. So then magicians and Alchemists of the past, who wished to communicate with each other secretly, or who have highly metaphysical ideas to convey, can do so with very “subtle” symbolism and this is the green language. That is we can “Occult” some information by presenting it in a form that is so “subtle” and so dependent on predetermined meanings and the context of the more poetic resolutions, that most people cannot recognize it. Magnetic magicians magnify magnificently on the universal fractal and so can also see the higher resolutions before others and pick out the allusions and symbols which are occulted by other magicians. This is because most people are too focused on materialistic and obvious matters, too attracted to the mainstream idea of gravitas and so they have no practice interpreting the “subtle” aspects of symbolism. As the more subtle ideas lack gravitas, most people do not consider these most spiritual things to be of much substance and their interpretation can require such an utterly specific context within the larger patterns of the fractal, that they are not even noticed by most people. Yet through the green language two magicians could use subtle symbolism to communicate freely, or depending on who they are, two people talking on psychedelics may have a similar experience. The singularity of a “black hole” then would be so interesting, contain so much information that once past the event horizon, you would focus on it till the end of the black hole, or the end of the universe. A black hole could very well be the centre of the fractal that we are trying to zoom in on, and like the centre of a fractal, you never actually reach the singularity.

This abyss, Absu, is the waters we move over to skry out the Chaos fractal of Tiamat, like limitless light reminiscing a tree of life, the constellations or paths of the galaxy providing a heavenly map for the spiral of time. If the black part of the fractal is a black hole, or symbolized by black holes, we would expect them to exist throughout the fractal and indeed scientists are theorizing about tiny black holes which are smaller than atoms, which are quite common and all around us, yet which we do not notice. (since most people only know how to look at the coloured parts of a fractal, and really since no light can escape a black hole, no one ever really sees it.) Giant black holes also exist in the centre of galaxies and so all the matters or abstractions we see with the naked eye are in it's orbit, its area of definition with the zodiac and our own solar system the self similar elaborations of that central matter or essence. After writing this chapter I found out that scientists now think it is possible that the universe could have been created after a four-dimensional star collapsed into a black hole and ejected debris. That our entire universe could be inside a black hole and that every black hole within our own could also contain another universe! (This is definitely a fractal situation.)

If you have mass you can never reach the speed of light, it would require infinite energy, so if matter can be formed from an abstraction and gain mass, then an abstraction like your ego could possibly have some incredibly small mass as well. (In your brain at least, though by the time a thought form manifests physically, it may have to arrive in its totality as some larger form, that is once you have the slightest mass, you have all of physicality.) This would make your sense of self keep your consciousness from achieving light speed and experiencing the eternal moment of oneness, it would keep the mind focused on thought forms and so you remain on the wheel of fractal nature. That our minds must be as light is basically what all mystics have been saying from the beginning and so this would explain why pretty nicely. You are not the fractal exactly, or rather you are and you aren't since the fractal is your perceptions which you have identified with and outside the abstraction of your body you have defined it as an external reality, but these ideas are also just abstractions. The fractal is patterns derived from symbolic formulas (according to universal grammar) which you are focusing on intently, trying to achieve some goal, trying to get to the centre and in your ignorance you invest the abstractions you have created by plotting out your levels of description with meaning that mirrors your own consciousness. The more you focus on reified reductionist abstractions the more materialist you become, the more desire you have to identify with those abstractions and build up your ego, which in a sense builds up more mass and so the more you take on the gravity of your situation.

En-light-en-ment then is losing the ego, losing the last of your mass which you focus on, so that you can have no abstractions and in deep trance states no longer even identify with the abstraction of the body and so identify and focus on only the part of you that is light. (Perhaps the electromagnetic impulses of the brain, or the sparks of Sophia) So in a state of being only light, travelling at that speed you can leave space time as we know it and go in to the singularity, the centre of the fractal where you can be one with all time and space, both the centre and the fractal itself. Once you leave space time you stop your linear progression of resolution on the fractal edge and experience it all as one object in a more accurate perception of a holographic 2D image of the fractal. At this “time” you will probably exist in the singularity, where as normally people are on the edge of the “event” horizon of the massive black hole fractal, that is the edge of the fractal is where we experience “time” and events, a place we seem to be inside and calling a universe. (I can't help but wonder about dark energy, not to mention all the other quantum kookiness this idea might shed light on)

I am not totally satisfied with how gravity and speed enter in to this theory; it will probably require more focus from different people before the patterns of self similarity are fully understood, because in many ways light speed and a black holes singularity mirror each other's effects on time and the fractal. There are many ways all these things can be thought of existing in a fractal together, either zooming in to the centre, or zooming out larger on the outside edge like the big bang. Four main things must be understood about the fractal, its formula, its iterations, its self similar shape and what exists in the black parts, outside or in the centre of the fractal, beyond abstraction.

Since time and matter is a fractal of abstractions, it is self similar with language and universal grammar, so that all explanations are explaining the same thing but from different points of view. All explanations about the fractal are also part of the fractal and so limited metaphors with varying degrees of capability to explain it, this capability being the degree of self similarity. Not only this but two completely contradictory things could be relatively true, according to your “layers of description” or context of the situation, but each explanation is always an incomplete view of the universal fractal of abstraction. Using abstraction to explain a universal fractal which includes all abstraction is like defining a word using a word, or creating yet one more fractal formula in which the value of a variable is solved using the variable. So as well as exploring the non linguistic aspects of consciousness, we should consider a wide variety of models about the universal fractal and how it relates to time and gravity etc and from this we can better understand how all are self similar.

If matter is abstraction then it gives a whole new slant on physic's idea that information cannot be destroyed, even in a black hole, the various symbols or objects unite to integrate their information in to one form. The butterfly effect is the explanation or iteration of some information in relation to the rest of reality, so that as information changes its physical expression, it is the explanation of how that information changes context when referenced to other variables in reality. In order to find the truth, first you must define the word truth, but ultimately in order to define that word you must already understand what it is and so searching for the truth is a tautology, but one which produces a fractal iteration of relative progress in that understanding which can take on endless forms and growth. As all forms are abstractions of energy, metaphors of their essence, we can see the world as poetry, in fact a metaphor or simile, or any comparison is just pointing out the self similarity between two different parts of the fractal, but as with any explanation it is limited yet possible to endlessly elaborate and present new perspectives, new details seen at higher resolutions. Finding the shape of the self similarity is more important then endlessly iterating the formula, but clearly by focusing on it as a named concept we can think of the universal fractal in all kinds of ways which will aid us in seeing its shape. Most people try to understand the fractal by focusing on parts of the fractal itself, but since no abstract interpretation can be outside of it, it has to be experienced to be truly understood totally and a Gnostic or mystic are those who have experienced the timeless oneness that comes from perfect understanding of this self similar pattern.

You could leave space time through a black hole as well, having singular focus on the singularity, by contemplating something with enough gravity, you might recognize the fractal for what it is. Though physicists do say you never actually reach the singularity, in the same way I am skeptical reductionism alone can ever answer all of the questions scientists are asking. When you enter a black hole, past the “event horizon” events outside it appear to move faster as you approach the singularity and conversely when you move in normal space, the faster you go, the slower everything else seems to go. So gravity does seem to be connected to reductionist focus, while speed allows you to perceive yourself in the more poetic levels of the universal fractal for longer, till at the speed of light it all slows down completely and you have all the perceived time you might need to understand the shape of self similarity. (poetry is often very boring as well) The faster you move, the faster through time you go, but the slower your perception of time, but also the more gravity there is, the slower time goes, yet the faster regular space time seems to go, especially as I said within a black hole. So clearly there is a real time difference between your experience and the reality everyone else experiences and this fits perfectly with what I said about how layers of description effect our perceptions. That is the more layers of description you have, the greater your personal gravity, the closer you are to the singularity and so your perception of the outside world beyond the “event horizon” (that is the place where events happen, or regular time space) appears to go faster. When you are removed from the essence or singularity, you are removed from the matter and so in retrospect it seems to have taken place over a long period of time. Those without many layers of description during the event will see it as dragging on slowly because their minds have low mass and are travelling fast, while in retrospect when they slow down and remember the event, the time and place they travelled through, it will have seemed to have gone by quickly.

In a group event with people of various degrees of layers of description, those without the layers are people who will not likely participate or speak as much as other more aware observers present, that is those who do have the layers. Hence those less aware observers will not have many mental notes associated with them by those participants who are aware. So it is, those unaware participants who aren't participating much will in a sense seem as if they were travelling in the situation faster than others, at least by those aware observers who have the layers of description.

So there seems to be two ways to leave the fractal and stop time, either by making our consciousness go to the speed of light, or by acquiring enough mass to become a singularity, which in many ways correspond nicely to the two main paths of mysticism, the right hand path of Yoga, or the left hand path of Tantra. While different, in the west we might compare this to the Gnostic approach or the Alchemical approach, in that a Gnostic would try to get rid of the ego, the Alchemist perfects it, or creates the stone or singularity. Views as to which way is best are both parts of the fractal, relativity shows us both speed and gravity effect time and so both ways work, both have strengths and weaknesses which are mirrored in each other. In the end if you are free, you are free, but upon approaching enlightenment you will have different obstacles. This isn't to say there aren't left hand strains of Gnosticism or right hand strains of Alchemy but that the philosophies in general match these two approaches and ultimately both approaches unify all opposites. On this long journey that is the great work of philosophers, we must fly strait as an arrow in our single pointed concentration on oneness, but in our enthusiasm we must remember that in order to maintain our individuality and our freedom loving ideals, we must refrain from the narrow mindedness that comes if we do not see this unity in all forms

At any rate we can see that what we call time is in many ways very subjective according to what we are doing and how much we are paying attention in relation to other people's awareness of time and what they are doing, or how much "gravity" is around them. Human understanding of what this really is, is in many ways humans trying to get to the centre of the fractal, but since you cannot travel at the speed of light with mass, (which would be achieving nirvana with an ego) nor get to a singularity of a black hole, (use reductionism alone to abstract the final universal truth) then trying to zoom in forever is ultimately irrelevant, you will never actually get there, you will never really fully explain it in abstractions, so what is most important is recognition of the shape of self similarity and the ability to be fully present in the moment. From my experiences it is clear, that in some way gravity and speed are respectively self similar to explicit reification and implicit unspoken awareness of the moment. That while such parallels might be impossible to fully abstract, there is only one moment, one fractal, but perception moves through it creating the illusion of linear time in 3D reality. Because of this fractal principle, any abstraction will partake of the qualities of both perspectives, just as metaphors could be created explaining left and right paths as being similar to right and left wings, so for example left hand path people are individualists and right hand people may claim to speak for the general welfare of all people, in the end it is all abstractions about magick, it is all one. You can follow both a Gnostic or Alchemical path in a left or right hand way, but certain analogical interpretations come more naturally to some people more than others according to the shape of their paradigms, but what is important is seeing beyond forms and that is common to both approaches. Since all mystical paths lead outside the fractal they can be interpreted in all kinds of ways within it or using the language fractal and so interpretations of religion do not fully explain the black part of the fractal which they lead to, which makes for all kinds of confusion for those who have never been in the black.

It does all seem very Gnostic in that we are sparks of light trapped in matter, trapped in a black hole and reality is both effects, speed and gravity, light and black holes struggling to cancel each other out, trying to correct the result of some cosmic imbalance. When we have no more desire for matter, when we see all events as having no gravity, we lose our mass and start to move at the speed of light, we stop focusing on "matters" and recognize we are the light of the Pleroma. The more desire we have, the more we try to escape boredom, the more we want to focus on the fractal and look to make layers of description, the faster we zoom in and look to the future and so the more we are distracted from being in the here and now, being content in the moment. This information which is trapped in matter, or meaning which is trapped in symbol is much like Sophia trapped in matter. Gnostics are those who can see the self similarity of all things in the fractal and so attempt to look past the various forms of matter to understand their essence and rejoin the Pleroma, the all, where all things exist as one thing without form.

However, if the pattern of self similarity can be found through focus, the more you love life and focus on it, the more memories and points of reference you will form, the more obvious it will be to you that there is a self similar pattern. You will not find any final conclusions through reductionism but if you do it enough, you will start to notice an underlying order, a recurrence of principles which correspond to each other in an indescribable way. So through a more Pagan Humanist or Hermetic approach, perhaps after lifetimes you do eventually see through rationality (the logos) the self similarity everywhere, allowing you to understand your unity with all things and stop relying solely on reductionist logic and its subjective points of reference. Instead you will be content knowing that whatever is happening, it is self similar to everything else, which will naturally lead you to stop desiring so many things and look to holistic and poetic thinking. Instead you can be in the world, yet not of it, be in the present and content to avoid abstracting everything in endless detail, especially your ego, the abstraction you identify with which gives you your gravity. This will allow you to go from knowing that everything is self similar and one to actually "seeing" the shape of the fractal and eventually you do not need to focus on anything, you function by natural instinct as in Dzogchen.

Matter as a type of symbol is juxtaposed against anti-matter which is understanding or gnosis and without an imbalance we would not have physicality, if the two were balanced as they should according to science, they would cancel each other out and physical reality would cease to exist. This reminds me of how Sophia or “essence” created the demiurge, the one who makes forms out of Sophia's passions, he is unaware of the fractal and encourages ignorance of self similarity. The demiurge was created because Sophia wanted to understand the Pleroma but could not (much like black hole singularity of the fractal) and so acting without her syzygy or balancing counterpart the logos, who reveals self similarity through logic and analogy, or parables, her desire for knowledge created an image of the Pleroma that was contradictory and incomplete, the reflection of her ignorance. So Sophia is essence, or pure meaning, the demiurge which in many ways could be likened to the fractal formula (YHVH or the formula for the philosophers stone, or any number of Occult formulas could be the formula for the universal fractal formula) has trapped these “tears” or “sparks” of Sophia in form, the symbols of her desire, which are called passions which are named as being grief, fear and ignorance. These sparks of light are liberated through the logos which satisfies or nullifies these passions by creating understanding of self similarity in the universal context, allowing us to transcend our paradigm and the world of forms and enter in to the fullness, or Pleroma.

What we get here is a picture of the divine mind, or Pleroma the fullness, creating the idea of wisdom, which has the desire to understand the fullness, it was informed that this was impossible which caused its passions, meaning divinity wishes self awareness and from this desire it resorts to symbolism. (the world of forms, which includes your body) But symbolism can never explain all of the fullness and so the desire of wisdom becomes a prison for all the fractured aspects of the fullness (essence) that have been symbolized. The warden of this prison is the limited conception of the fullness, or the ego of the divine which mistakes itself for being the fullness, or our own egos which we mistake for our identities, in both cases we endlessly and unsuccessfully try to elaborate until our definition is complete. (again like Narcissus) Paradoxically so long as we desire to use symbols to understand the ineffable, the longer we are trapped in time space trying to sort out the ignorance created by a intrinsically ineffective method. If we all had perfect understanding of all forms the balance of self similarity would be recognized and we would all transcend the physical, that is by studying nature we can find meaning, Sophia trapped within and as we learn of this essence we achieve greater levels of gnosis.

The demiurge is symbolized as an aborted insane child, meaning our image of “god” or “ego” is what happens when Sophia or wisdom has an abortion and resorts to symbolism or an ultimately arbitrary and limited conception of the infinite. (Her immaculate conception) The arrogance of the demiurge is the symbol of the hubris which happens when we accept false limited conclusions and settle with simplistic symbols, it is what happens to the mind when we stop being wise and start believing we know the truth in words, or all there is to know about the infinite. We may claim to worship a deity, but fundamentalist attitudes of claiming a limited conception of divinity as truth is much the same as claiming to be an all powerful and all knowing deity yourself. The demiurge or ego is the abortion of the attempt of the fullness or consciousness for self awareness and she is overcome with grief at her limited abilities and whenever people believe in limited conceptions or symbols of “god” or “ego” their minds are imprisoned in illusions that are the causal effects of such small mindedness. If desire and understanding were balanced and essence and form recognized as a self similar patterns found everywhere, then we would have perfect knowledge or gnosis and no need to extrapolate further, thus the fractal formula would cease to iterate. So from this imbalance created by desire between symbols and our understanding of essence and the Pleroma, we iterate our formulas and continue our endless reductionism and stay within the world of forms, the world of language, even though this language is inherently contradictory. Because of our desires we use our words and ego to get what we want, we act like dictators of our own minds and the stronger our ego, the more authoritarian and hierarchical we become and in our ignorance are duped in to supporting systems which help to perpetuate this system of the archons.

Hermeneutics, coming from Hermeticism is definitely aware of the fractal principles underlying language and we can see this in its ideas about how texts should be interpreted, that we cannot understand the whole, without understanding each part and we cannot understand a part of the text, except in the context of the whole. (solve et coagula) Today generally Hermeneutics is only applied to the bible, but that is because academics lack most of the keys and the Christians destroyed the context of the old religions and so most people do not recognize mythology or mystical texts as needing these things, or that it is the means of encoding Alchemical texts, or even Egyptian hieroglyphics. Different traditions and individuals will have different keys, but it is obvious certain hermeneutics are needed for many more texts than just the bible and this is the Qabalah of each religion. Each text is a macrocosm and each part of a text is a self similar microcosm, each whole text is also a microcosm within a field of research and each field a microcosm within the realm of knowledge as a whole.

So, to understand anything requires an understanding of everything, it requires a non linear approach to gaining knowledge which updates itself according to how many subjective connections and contexts are used as references for definition. To understand something we must stand outside of it and so if we take its essence and symbolize it as a circle, we can divide it in to elements or if we choose metals, worked on by 12 Alchemical processes we gain contexts and methods that allow for greater insight and interpretation. This works so that we can in this way “square a circle,” we can build a powerful thought form and congeal it for all to see and map out the geometries or self similar shapes within the text. Only when we interpret according to fractal principles, understanding that any work of language is self referential, that all knowledge leads to more knowledge about what you already know, with a wider view of various resolutions and scales and parts of the whole, only then can we begin to see the self similarity and see our own place within the whole. With this understanding of self similarity our subjective role within reality becomes clear and our imbalanced notions, our hubris which thinks we can be totally objective while dealing with abstractions is seen for the illusion that it is.

As they say, we all become enlightened eventually, we just decide how long it takes us, we can cling to desire and matter or not, but eventually we see the pattern and from there we learn to rejoin the centre of the fractal that had been there all along, waiting for us to stop trying to define the border and instead understand oneness. History can be seen as humanities collective increase in reductionist and scientific understanding of self similarity, with technology the fruit of this understanding, but it is becoming increasingly obvious the exponential increase in awareness is reaching a critical mass, an omega point where the fractal shape of self similarity is fully understood. This “technocalypse” of utopian futurists will be impacted by environmental and political realities and scientists are always overly optimistic about technology, but it is undeniable that new advances in technology are being achieved faster and faster. We can see this in science's increasing understanding of consciousness and of fractals in general, as well as quantum physics and all the other information coming in about the limits of reductionism, things which science previously left to the poets, philosophers and mystics, but which is fast becoming the only places left to go for research. Also as technology becomes more elaborate and self similar with reality, it is as I pointed out becoming more and more like classical images of magick and Alchemy, giving us the powers of what science once considered mythological beings or people, Wizards and Witches etc. As we move in to the future, with higher populations and greater amounts of science, the total rate of humanities reductionism is increasing, but with our acquired knowledge of the past it will become increasingly clear that all knowledge is fractal and expressed in the “green language” of universal grammar. Dare I say the amount of mental notes or layers of description science makes will increase so much in the future, that it will be very hard to miss the self similarity and so we will understand that in many ways, humans have always known the truth.

Science will then understand its progression from Alchemy and the more mythological and poetic cultures of the past and that all philosophies, all religions and all sciences are different limited descriptions which can be symbolized as specific areas of the multiverse fractal of one truth. Where as mystical awareness through ego death is the experience of the universal fractals oneness and timelessness, science is the process of iterating it, explaining it abstractly. If science can recognize the link between fractal language and the fractals of nature's geometry, then it can come to understand that its own explanations will go on forever, it will recognize that such explanations are generated according to a fractal formula, a formula which seems to have some level of contradiction as its means of iterating a line of thought. Without some basic contradiction between one factual statement and the paradigm of other abstracted "facts," there would be an end point to reason, an end point to knowledge, a final answer to everything, but this will not happen in words. The more answers scientists have, the more questions they will get, the more they will realize how incomplete their theories are. Even academia is set up on fractal self referential principles, teachers teaching students who will one day become teachers themselves, or do the science that is taught by teachers, so that a student cannot help but take on the memes and fractal formulas, the premise's of their teachers. Whether scientists today like it or not, they owe their knowledge today to the oldest teachers, those who were magicians, Alchemists and sages and ironically, the explanations of scientists are sounding more and more like mythologies all the time, because the pattern is repeating on a whole new scale.

You cannot have perfect self similarity in a fractal, the iterations are always unique, always different and so some level of contradiction always remains to be extrapolated in to further lines of reasoning, as when you try and match the "fact" up with other people's paradigms. Aristotelian "either or" logic is like a double edged sword of air, mind splitting the quicksilver in to sulphur and salt and in this dialectic is one very popular means of continuing the meme fractal structure, splitting our consciousness in neat but always hypothetical definitions. Those who do not see the quicksilver have relegated it and the shape of the fractal to the subconscious, but this trinity is repeated everywhere in the modern world, with people too dualist to recognize it, they concentrate on always fracturing their awareness in to higher resolutions. We can see this unconscious recognition of Occult ideas in their self similarity to various cliches and common expressions, because the truth is everywhere but occulted and once you know how to see it, you see the shape of the pattern. As a sword represents the element of air, or mind, intellect and cognition we say that a smart person is sharp, with a razor wit, they dissect an idea with their incisive explanations, pointing to conclusions of distinction, definition, cutting out a clear concise science of conscience and eventually we are brought to the edge of reason when we air our grievances. Quicksilver is split in to salt and sulphur, each of which becomes the quicksilver, which is further dissected in to salt and sulphur and this process continues indefinitely as their definition becomes elaborated. There are even different interpretations about how these symbols interact, or what means what and so again we see there is always some level of ambiguity or contradiction.

What we are really doing when we zoom in on the fractal is reifying various essences of the all in our cognition, making our definitions more specific and making our thought forms more concrete, but we never actually reach a final conclusion. So we have an essence in mind we wish to define and understand and so we reify it and call it reality or whatever sub section of reality we are focusing on, we then realize from experience our definition is incomplete in terms of a universal explanation and so we use reductionism to analyze it and come up with a better reification, which is itself found to be incomplete and so we do it all over again. This formula for fractal generation created by the scientific method most often uses reductionism and science is our societies main means of acquiring information. Directed by what we desire to research, science manifests most of what we will experience and be aware of in the future, though all people, scientific or not do this to some degree in some way, even if it is unconscious.

There are many methods of reifying things in to abstraction fractals (many ways in which reification has itself been reified and can be put in fractal terms, from the magickal to the Marxist, to Gestalt Psychology, to linguistics as well as others, they are all part of the same process of iterating aspects of the same underlying universal fractal) and many types of logic, but what is important is understanding how these methods produce different structures and what their shapes are. However, what's even more important is understanding the fractal structure that underlies all things and gaining the humility that comes from realizing our explanations will always be incomplete. All logic structures abstract forms in somewhat of a contradictory way because if it didn't we would have a conclusion to all lines of reasoning and there would be no way to add new forms to the fractal at higher resolutions. If reality is made from words a final conclusion would mean the end of time, the end of the story, but really the transcendence this implies can only come from regaining balance and bringing to Earth an understanding of how words are created in the mind to manifest physicality as a revelation.

The duality of the relative and objective is itself one in the truth, though the truth is relativism this idea is an objective statement about relativism and so both approaches are using the other as a devil's advocate to keep the conversation going, to skirt around the black abyss of dialectic contradiction to keep the fractal formula iterating. (In some ways wave-particle duality and momentum and position in the uncertainty principle is self similar with this idea.) To elaborate further, reifying things is not inherently "bad" since "bad" is itself a reified concept and this process certainly has its advantages and it seems to be quite natural to do so. In some ways this justification is itself just another reification and justification of the trap or language, so at the very least we must keep in mind unless we have the humility to recognize languages limitations and regain the ability for non abstract awareness of what lies beyond form, this linguistic fractal can become a prison of the mind and the source of archons and an out of control ego.

While we can learn the forms of all kinds of individualized essence's of Sophia, either or logic sets up contradictions through its limiting of essence in to a specific definition and so it is often easy to lose sight of the essence and instead focus only on the forms. Each individual essence is most accurately depicted in the self similar pattern of the fractal as a whole, the forms are never total since there is always ways to increase the resolution of our view of the form. So since unless we are enlightened we never see at infinite resolution, we never see the whole form and so comparing various forms is always an incomplete comparison, which means there is always some level of contradiction, according to the level of resolution.

Pure logic only understands the relationships of forms, it does not understand essence in itself, only the symbols of essence and so either or logic removes the awareness of the place where each drop of essence is united, the formless ocean that is the eternal fullness. If something is one thing and not another then it is being viewed outside the context of universality and while this can have advantages for science and communication, it also denies the universal part of the essence in all things and so by ignoring that part of the essence we are using the fractal formula and setting ourselves up for all kinds of circular fractal logic to try and sort it out. Since all things are one, either or logic can never totally resolve the question of what essence is, since it denies that all essence is the same at the root of all things. We have the symbols of essence created by the formula but we do not recognize the patterns and so we iterate on and on, creating more contradiction because we never address our assumptions about the supposed individuality of things. Analogic reasoning and poetry allow us to side step either or logic to some degree and so potentially make it easier to see the fractal, but either or logic can never resolve all contradiction because it stems from a kind of contradiction and so a direct experience of essence is crucial for gnosis.

It is a mistake for the logos to create without its counterpart, it would mean a mind like a computer, an archon without any spark of awareness, it might have all kinds of data about life and the world, but it is not alive if it has no experience of an essence. Seeing only symbol but not knowing the essence it would have no meaning, much like the materialist view of matter and our galaxy, the archons have intellectual knowledge but no experiential knowledge of existence. The amount of kinds of essence that we experience determine the contexts of our logic systems, our will and our emotional reactions and our ability to recognize other essences. We can scarce imagine the taste of a mango just by reading the word, but those with an experience of tasting mango will pick up many more chains of reasoning because the first hand experience will guide our intuition through the imagination, through the various paths of the fractal as we zoom in to recognize its self similarity with other essences. With no experience of a hypothetical reified essence it can be very hard to imagine the likelihood of its existence or its place within the fractal, its nature, or how it relates to other forms or how to interpret the symbol in depth and so the logos alone is not functional.

Likewise it is a mistake for Sophia to create without the logos, which would create a world as we have it (though science is improving things) in which we have only forms of essence but little to no understanding of their relationships or fractal nature. This creates an irrational mind like a Christian or some New Agers which may experience and know all kinds of essence, even universal essence but since they still identify with and get tangled in language, they can take on very contradictory and erroneous and even purposely misleading or fraudulent paradigms which are not that functional for communicating truth or achieving their true will. (What's worse someone might have an experience of universal essence and write a weird irrational book which could be misinterpreted by others to justify non Anarchist actions.) Once you have experienced the universal essence beyond forms, then it is much harder for you to be so identified or entrapped by memes, but those with poor logic skills will often mix themselves up trying to explain such experiences to others and themselves, they may even become so enamoured of their metaphors they start to mistake them for the essential reality or call it the one true religion. Most have not experienced universal essence consciously and so are much easier to confuse, the archons have many ways of making you lose the context of your essential experience and your memes. Distraction and laziness when it comes to articulation, a propensity for presumptions and unwarranted emotional investment in erroneous perspectives, as well as selfish motivations to attain the truth all lead to perpetual enslavement to various tautological loops and non self similar contradictions. Entheogens do however provide a means of instilling dramatic doses of essence as a kind of inspiration, like eating a "little book" and so those who use them can dissolve their forms and re-contextualize to the essence, so they can recrystallize their perspectives with more recognition of Sophia and so potentially create more logical or self similar paradigms.

Logic alone might understand how some forms are self similar but without an understanding of universal essence we do not see these hypothetical forms are self similar with everything else and so it cannot show us the meaning of the whole fractal. By experiencing a wide variety of essences, whatever our intellectual presuppositions we open our minds, we broaden our paradigm and in a sense rescue Sophia from the matter, growing our own essence and awareness so that it can be re-collected by the logos in what is essentially anamnesis of the fractal. Since all times exist within the fractal and the fractal which represents information is always complete with all time lines, we do not so much create the future but remember it or experience anamnesis of the future. Logic provides us with awareness of the relationships between references or points of view, but only when we experience essence directly with its universal context, can we recognize the self similarity inherent in all logical structures and when we have both an experience of universal essence and an understanding of how its forms relate, we have acquired gnosis.

Premise is the formula, self similarity is context and reification is iteration or zoom, reification is a side effect of the process of the implicit becoming explicit, of mistaking the variable in the fractal formula as something we can solve completely, and reductionism is western civilizations primary means of accomplishing this, which it does according to will by focusing it's attention. Since the present is the viewed edge of the centre of the fractal, as we continue in to the future the implicit essence of reality is made explicit through our reification. We do this through reductionism and other means to make mental notes about the implicit essence, thus creating "layers of description" which cover the essence and are to some degree, some level of resolution, explicit.

The notes we take on the implicit are added to our memory and used to create a paradigm which we can use to achieve our will, the older the belief is, if it sticks in our memory because it has proven to be valuable to our will, generally speaking the more fundamental it is to our paradigm, or the closer it is to our foundation. A direct experience of a contrary reality, or essence can change this belief, can reshape our paradigm and so present a new context to view our memories, but most often our core beliefs, our foundations are laid very young and so it will be close to the outer edge of our memory fractal. So new beliefs, or notes are closer to the centre of the fractal, old beliefs which we acquired in the past and built our paradigm off are closer to the outer edge, but since memory of experiences of the essences which we base our layers of description fade over time, they become relatively abstract and ambiguous (or poetic) compared to the fresh reductionist reifications of essence we experience in the present.

By following Ariadne's thread, that is zooming out through memory, we re-experience the past and move in the direction of the starting point of our original train of thought, the foundations of our memetic paradigm, the first iteration of the formula. You can zoom in on a fractal indefinitely, but all fractals have a starting point, an original iteration based on the values you provide the formula from which you further iterate to create the fractal and so knowing your starting values, or original bias is key. To zoom in on the fractal is to try to solve the equation and find the hypothetical essence of the iterated variable, but this reification of the variable is a fools errand until we finally recognize the shape of the self similarity. When we recognize the shape of the fractal, we can gain the context necessary to zoom out past the first iteration, the place before the starting point of the fractal, which we will do since the fractal is dependent on the values we provided for the variables in the formula. When we remember the first layer of description and recognize the corner stone, or first reification we made, our "first thought" from which iterations emanate out, from there we become capable of getting out of the fractal, the wheel of reincarnation, the belly of the Ouroboros. The universal fractal is the iris of the all seeing eye which we zoom in to through reification towards the pupil singularity and zoom out through introspection of our memories to white holistic integration. Achieving enlightenment through gnosis of this, is stepping out of the fractal to "see" it as an iteration of the arbitrary values we assigned the formula. (I am) All forms are parables of the centre of the fractal, but through Alchemy we can gain the knowledge of the hermeneutic of universal grammar which reveals the archetypal variables which iterate reality. As magicians we can then choose to assign new values to the formula so that we can have a different starting point and go down totally different "reality tunnels" to experience new things at will and help others to "see" as well. From a different point of view, the white part of the eye is in truth just as black as the pupil in terms of the fractal reality, but since it is the way out of the fractal and to the pupil which tempts us to zoom on in forever, it is metaphorically "white" (or sulphur) and the pupil black, (salt) yet unified in the iris which is the mix of both. (quicksilver, or fairies in between angels and demons) While I am obviously not against coming up with theories, ultimately it does seem as though all premises are the result of reification, and in a sense fallacious, all assertions are in a sense authoritarian, a product of archons, the desire to achieve the will and experience some limited form of essence. (Hermes or Mercury is a god of logic, but he is also a trickster)

In the end it doesn't matter if "magick" is real or not, "magick" is just a word, but its a more functional paradigm and by practising it we become aware of certain unspeakable things as a consequence. As we become more aware of "divinity" or "god" then "god" as the symbol of our oneness also becomes more aware and as it grows in awareness it becomes better able to grow our awareness and we become more capable of being aware of it, potentially creating a feed back loop of increasing self awareness. This symbol commonly refereed to as "god" can be as a mirror which allows for greater self awareness through contemplation of an eternally universal transcendent variable. Your intentions and motivations for desiring the truth will determine what truth you will find, if you are motivated by a fear of "god" or the desire for some reward, you will only manifest an understanding of archon realities and egoism. So it is only by setting your intentions for that truth which is eternal, infinite and universal will you come to an understanding that is even close to eternal, infinite and universal and so by making this search in to a spirituality, we potentially create many otherwise unforeseen opportunities to explore and strengthen this intention. All abstractions are hypothetical, even if they refer to real realities, when we forget this we destroy any truth or imprison the wisdom which these hypothetical symbols might possess.

Science is better than most philosophies at removing contradiction but so long as it uses abstraction, it will always remain to some degree as it denies the existence of any irrational reality. Right now it is on the verge of finally recognizing what the self similar shape looks like (though they always were and always will be) and if it can do that, then it can create the mystical experience of that oneness for the entire fractal of which it is a part. If it cannot recognize our unity with all things then it will most likely destroy us in its Faustian attempts to do so, but with the technology it is creating (the same things that could destroy us) it is highly unlikely they will not recognize it soon, we just have to hope it does work before the oligarchs destroy the environment and us with it. Fractals are more than likely the key to unlocking the contradictions between quantum physics and astrophysics and with that understanding would come many realizations about our universal unity. Science can do all this because those ancients who originally created it were mystics who could see the shape of the fractal. These mystics had their ideas outlawed and since they did not yet have the specific reductionist definitions necessary for those who do not have gnosis to understand, the majority of people were deluded by the archons with their authoritarian indoctrinations.

You have all the time in the world to reach eternity, but this worldly time is what keeps you from realizing eternity is each moment, the only moment that ever was. Humanities search for immortality is accomplished through a realization, not an external action and this realization is essentially that there never was a time when the universe was not created, this is because time is a part of the universe. As I said, the beginning of time is a concept that is inherently contradictory and self referential, if there is no time then nothing can have a beginning, since beginning is a term that is itself a reference to time, there can be no beginning without a middle and an end and so it all must exist as one thing and so the universe exists at all times. Time is a fundamental aspect of the universe, relativity shows us it's link to space and so there can be no creation of time and space since creation must happen within time and space. Eternity is where we can see all time at once, in unity and it is where we can truly understand the universe is eternal and those with understanding become themselves eternal, as they understand their unity with all things and times.

There is no beginning of time because time is something that exists unchanging in its essence throughout all topology, its like saying the beginning of space when speaking of distance. This may not be totally clear, but time is more like a sphere than a line and you would not say the beginning of the sphere. You can speak of a mountain but you do not ask where the mountain begins and the Earth ends, they are the same, you do not ask when one of your cells begins to be you, because it always was you. The search for how the universe was created is a complete waste of time because the universe was not created, it has always been, it all exists as one reality at all times, what we call the future has always existed at all times, we are simply travelling through a portion of time rather than perceiving the all, we have focused our view on the present selection of possible realities. The “end” of time is when we learn to understand that the end has existed at all times as well, that it is not a matter of the past disappearing or the future appearing, but a sphere realizing its totality, with a surface yet paradoxically containing all things. (The singularity before the big bang)

To search for the first cause of the universe is to search for something that does not exist, the chain of causality is real, but not actually “causal,” it is the anatomical structure of time, things can go backwards as completely as forwards. (science even agrees with this) You do not say your body begins at your head and ends at your feet, it's all you and you can just as easily start at your feet and end at your head, it all depends on which way you are going, which way you want to look at it. Nothing caused the universe to begin, because “beginning” is something that happens within the theoretical construct of what we call a universe, nothing caused the universe to begin because nothing could cause the universe to begin. It is a flawed premise to begin with that the universe could begin and from this assumption all manner of cognitive dissonance about that fact has been created through the logical considerations that follow from believing it. By believing in this limited notion of causality you enter in to a linear view of time which shackles the mind to an Aristotelian theoretical construct which we call time and space, but which quantum physics has now shown to be false.

This is not to say that we can't learn from causality, but that causality is not what we generally think it is, it is something within a much greater context. Now while science's study of causality has had obvious advantages in understanding that which exists in space-time, we should not assume that all of reality is within time. This linear view of time is an illusion created by a figure of speech which is responsible for highjacking the internal dialogue of all who believe in it. Linear time is a major keystone for how people make decisions and plan and explain themselves and everything else, but it is a trick of language, a misnomer from which we create an ego to tell us a story to map out the topology of time. The future isn't something we create, or something that effects us, it is something we experience, it is something we travel to and then focus our attention on. But we can always go back and focus on the past too, or we can go to another parallel reality and focus on what would happen if we made a different decision. You don't have to do anything to get out of causality, in fact you cannot do something to get out of causality, that would be trying to make a cause that would have the effect of ending causality, which is self defeating, so instead just be.

The religious dogmas and systems of the rulers have definitely tried to postpone this awareness, spreading their ignorance, misleading us away from recognition, making us rely on very unhealthy technologies. Since they took away many of the tools Alchemists had to use, (especially through outlawing enteogens) it would all take much longer, much further in to the higher resolutions of the future for the stone to be made. The archons have encouraged us to take things at face value, to be narrow minded and avoid experiencing new essences, or by making us think it is in our best interest to destroy philosophies which contradicts ours. Luckily while religious fundamentalism and the puffers of the rulers did destroy much of this mystical context of Alchemy (and anything non Christian) in order to create science, that which remained was still self similar and so still had the complete shape. It is very tempting to think the Alchemists knew this shape would eventually be rediscovered, but at a much higher resolution, one capable of dealing with the ignorance of the dogmatic authorities through irrefutable demonstration. Led by their greed the puffers and rulers tried to profit from their ignorance, unfolding and extrapolating and while they are blind and deaf, in the end they will find the ability to show the reality of the archons and the origin of the world. As I have shown, this culmination of science would essentially be the rescue of Sophia through the logos to achieve the restoration of the philosophers stone or gnosis of the Pleroma.

As the big bang expands we can see this process as the anamnesis or iteration of the fractal of the universal mind, progressing in its meditation on the gravity of all things, the dissection of the singularity in what we abstract as space/time. This exploding singularity is the one totally ambiguous abstraction of the concept of “reality” or “truth” that which contains all known energy and so the potential for all information which has taken form as the explosion that created this universe. There are multiple universes though and the shape of this universe is but one level of the fractal scale in to the multiverse, but by considering the singularity before the big bang as a monad, a single symbol for all of the various self similar shapes of the fractal, we can have a conceptual framework to perform our great work. This process of relating inner to outer worlds, objective to subjective as fractal distinctions and definitions is going on all the time, even as you read this book, even as you read this topic, this sentence and this clause.

Due to this fractal nature of consciousness and reality, realizing that these things are all inextricably linked and unified throughout all of totality, anything that the consciousness can perceive, can reveal with enough focus and attention a consciousness with awareness of the whole of reality. (which is the basis of the great work of Alchemy) This is of course easier to do the more primary the fractal that you focus on, such as those found in nature which are not the result of our memes, things like plants or animals, galaxies and solar systems etc which could be one reason why those with power are so eager to destroy the environment and replace it with suburbia. Through attuning ourselves to the natural rhythms of nature, the seasons and moon cycles, we can make our consciousness self similar with the natural world, we can more fully enter in to self similarity with the fractals of nature and become unified with the universe, rather than through trying to rely solely on the abstractions of the “I am” memplex. By studying the natural world we can learn everything about ourselves as well as everything in existence, including the divine oneness itself, which is the very basis of Alchemical thinking and natural philosophy of which Shamanism is the root. Druids were said to of been able to learn great truths from studying the trees and the patterns of bark which they deemed sacred. Could it be that because they understood the universal fractal that through studying the fractals in various trees they could see truths that they were self similar with? If reality, space time and memes are unified through fractals, then it explains why divination works, we simply put out the tarot cards or runes or tea leaves etc and they will fall in a self similar pattern with that moment in time. So by understanding what the present is, we can have much greater understanding of what the future will be, though the butterfly effect increases the further in to the future you look, meaning the more iterations down the line, the harder the fractal is to predict exactly. This fractal space time also explains deja vu as a time that is self similar with the past, dreams as self similar parallel realities to your mind, or could even shed light on clairvoyance, precognition and a variety of psychic phenomena as they are all examples of self similar futures to the mind of the person who understands the “shape” of the pattern of time.

Clearly fractals are a major key to understanding nature, for anyone who has done them much, it is obvious entheogens promote a kind of increased sensitivity and awareness of fractals, for example it inspired my ideas in this chapter. So then any accurate scientific map of reality will have to include the subjective differences created by such altered states, especially in regards to their capacity for increasing inspiration to come up with a scientific hypothesis in the first place. Entheogens commonly are associated with helping artists, but since entheogens make us aware of the fractal nature of nature itself, they can aid scientists by providing them with an altered state that allows them to see at a deeper level the interconnected implications of their knowledge. (It has already done this with Francis Crick who discovered the shape of DNA, but also others as well, as I said with computers.) If you want to learn from nature, it helps to speak to it and ask it questions, which it will obligingly answer for you, through the process of scientific observation. Having reverence for the process is simply a way of establishing the proper psychological importance of the situation, because without this reverence, without this respect you lose the whole context of self similarity. Since you are yourself part of nature when you have grandiose delusions about yourself, such as that you are superior to nature, you create presumptions which blind you and you will project that on to the whole of nature. Humility is really the key of science, and from this humility, this patience to engage nature on her own terms, we can come to a total understanding of all things, not just how to make a quick buck. When we whore nature, we whore ourselves, we owe to nature the same respect we would have for ourselves, and any lack of environmental concern is a lack of self concern and so is suicidal and masochistic behaviour. Scientists have a well documented history of using entheogens to further increase their abilities for their work, but generally the full potential of this has not been realized because they have to do so secretly and illegally. Through entheogens they can get ideas from Mother nature which they can then experiment on after they have come down and through experiment and the formula for the philosophers stone as I have put it, come to verifiable and quantifiable evidence of the intelligence of nature as a whole.

To say nature has no intelligence is to say we have no intelligence, and if you think the whole universe has not been leading us to our present situation then you have no sense of causality and so eventually, we will realize that nature has been our mother and teacher from the beginning. The conclusion is, nature is making us to make nature more self aware, but as the body for that self awareness she provides the sensory data and the nutritional methods of sustaining that awareness, the brain does not profit from the death of the body, or calling it stupid, or dismissing its needs, or ignoring the sensory data that it provides it with. Oil spills are literally the reflection of our own toxic pathologies and we ignore them at our peril, Gaia can commit suicide if she becomes mentally disturbed enough. This is why technology is not making us happier, depression is increasing, there is a fucking subculture of emo kids out their cutting themselves because they are the microcosm of the fractal of capitalist pathologies. If you are too arrogant to even try to communicate with nature, if you are too presumptuous to do so with sincerity, if you are so rude as to treat nature as stupid and ultimately worthless, do not be surprised when you hear nothing, or when you see nothing, when all of your sensory data confirms a materialist atheist world. (how would you feel if someone treated you like we often treat nature?) Covering your ears and closing your eyes and going “lalalalalala it's not happening” is not really that becoming of people who are suppose to be the smartest on the planet. Anyone can experience and communicate with Gaia, entheogens have been scientifically proven to create mystical states and so any fears of becoming bias by actually experiencing it for yourself is not really the desire to be objective, its actually fear of these aspects of nature, because these scientists intuitively know what is coming down the fractal zoom. If humanity would stop scheming for one moment, if we could stop marvelling at our own genius for a time, then we would very quickly realize that nature is communicating with us, and has in fact been doing so constantly this whole time. We have simply been too arrogant to listen, too full of preconceptions to understand and too full of our own desires to be considerate of how other creatures experience reality.

Many people now experiment in university, including scientists in training, but you are kidding yourself if you think you have any objective ideas about what happened to you as a naive student based on some admittedly limited notion of neurochemistry. Relative to the increased fractal resolution which nature and entheogens provide, prohibitionist science has created a great game of make believe and nature will soon make it clear that its time to clean up the mess, stop playing games and do your homework. Prohibitionist based non entheogenic awareness is humanity trying to pretend, playing a game that nature is not our mother, and we played it so well we even started to believe it. This game is increasingly getting scary and eventually we will realize we are children and the sane thing to do is to run back to her. I can only hope that science was moms idea all along, maybe secularism was her way of having a quiet house for an afternoon, a few centuries, her way of letting us learn on our own, but while she left us home alone we trashed the place and there will come a time when we have to clean it up. Oh you may call me a mama's boy but no one loves you like your mother, not absentee sky fathers, not big brother or Ronald McDonald, no she may have some hard lessons but you will thank her when you are more mature.

The scientific paradigm is that of Euclidean geometry, (it is very self similar to Freemasonry) but the fact remains there is still perspective, still different angles to view the geometries which provide different images that we see. The freedom of choice for a perspective is always present and is in fact the source of the beauty which is the basis from which the truth grows out of and so the picture is always incomplete without an understanding of all these facets. No matter how accurate your instruments of measurement, there comes a time when in a sense you have to eye ball it, to see how the ruler can be used to create images, models which are practical, like sigils of intention, but which are also artworks of surpassing beauty. In order to fully understand quantum physics my bet is the approach of science will have to go from being like Euclidean geometry to that of fractal geometry and if it can do that, then it will understand the role of the observer in what it perceives.

It is through these Pagan kinds of cultures that humanity has the most historical examples of what is ancient pseudo Anarchism, though now that we have more awareness, more iterations of other fractals, we can create more highly evolved or iterated Anarchist cultures which will allow us to create societies which have even less hierarchy and are also part of a global community. One way this will be done is by creating a world where ideally each person is a magician or Shaman, or at least a world where each person creates their fractals consciously and with awareness of the implications of their actions for the whole of reality. We need each person designing memes which do not create cognitive dissonance or duality, but unity and ever more elaborate expressions of Anarchism and if we do this, the universal mind can exist in the material, but still retain awareness of its universality. Again, the train of thought of my fractal explanation comes back to original point of the equation, humanity must learn to value raising its awareness, but not for the purposes of ego gratification which capitalist science is so obsessed with, but through the art and science of magick for the sake of awareness itself. So once again we see the meaning of life is to be alive and aware and all that that entails, painful or not.

The prima materia is the first substance, the first “matter” which the universe was made of before the big bang, pure energy, pure essence or Chaos, or rather it is the consciousness which iterates the universal formula to create a mirror for itself, but it must be understood the name or form we give it is an iteration rather than the thing itself. With the first iterations we get the first conceivable forms of these things, the first atoms which became the first molecules, which after much time and so iteration we got the formation of planets and stars and galaxies which eventually iterated into the first DNA. This DNA then iterated as the evolution of the first single celled organisms into more complex life, fungus, plants and then animal bodies and eventually human bodies which are the iteration of these cells, while consciousness is the iteration of the whole body and so the pattern repeats. A big picture understanding of the varieties of wild DNA then is potentially a gold mine for understanding the primordial iterations of this universal fractal and if we don't destroy them they would provide us with very important information about the self similarity of all life. This is one more reason why GMO technology and the destruction of the environment is so hideous, but more than this, since DNA eventually iterated in to mind or consciousness, understanding the biological part of the fractal is key to understanding our own minds. Mind iterates into magickal thinking, that is animals learn to achieve their will which iterates in to symbolic cognition, which iterates into language which iterates and mysticism, which iterates into memetic culture, which iterates into technology, which iterates into science, which is now iterating into awareness of fractals and how all of this is related, which will potentially iterate into unity of awareness, or divine revelation. All of this is exhaustively detailed by Occultists and mystics, but only if you have eyes to see. While I am not one to believe in utopias or in “happily ever after” end of the world scenarios, it is undoubtedly clear that humanity is on the verge of a whole new scale of consciousness, we are about to see the universal fractal on a level never before imagined. We will have repeated the formula so many times, that the fractal will have such a high resolution, the shape will be obvious, even to those with the weakest eyes to see.

The cycle of the observer and the observed is the iteration of the formula taking on new forms through each cycle, the observer is the variable we are solving for through the equation, but the observer is also the black centre of the fractal, the different forms of the fractal are that which is observed about the centre. This universal grammar fractal is the world tree of all symbolic perceptions, the individual divided aspects of reality, but is still united in one overall pattern. The black centre is intuitive non abstract aspects of consciousness, formless reality and is represented as the philosopher's stone, or world egg, or cosmic egg, it is the hypostasis from which everything comes as it underlies, surrounds and unites all the geometric forms providing the juxtaposition for them to appear to us. So consciousness is also symbolized as the emanations of the cosmic egg or primordial seed, the first hypothetical abstraction also known as the monad which grows in to the world tree. This tree then draws through its roots from the black centre more nourishment, more psychic energy in a cycle of growing awareness as the roots zoom in to the centre (Ain Soph) and eventually moves up to become the tree. The life cycle of the tree is itself a fractal formula, generating new seeds in the fruits of the tree, carrying DNA formulas and its whole unfolding pattern, till it too gives fruit to be planted and made in to yet more trees, more iterations, each unique, each self similar. In this way, observer and that which is observed (duality) become united (samadhi or moksha) to form a trinity. (the three Alchemical principles) The All is consciousness having sex with perception and eventually after the chemical wedding, at the orgasm we are united in bliss, once we realize we were always united, reality then is essentially masturbatory and we can continually get off. As we observe reality we become more aware, the consciousness of the observer becomes more capable and so we become better at observing and so iterate the fractal of awareness to greater and greater scales. We can see this process in a variety of mythologies and religions and while there are a variety of ways of accomplishing this, or symbolizing the process, the result is always the same, Chaos and order are the same and all of reality is you and life is how we attain gnosis of this.

The land of the World

In the land of rock and concrete,
Where the automatic dreamers think they sleep, Is more than we could ever think we know.
But as a fire's light reveals increasing views as it grows,
We see we are as beings of fractal poetry within itself.
To see within ourselves more of the outside the deeper we delve,
To be people running around and see yourself in everything.
You must not forget to look and be amazed by anything.
By crude order of the privileged few, Everyone seems slightly askew.
And if no one sees anything as I do, then each fractal has a very obscure view.
So look as one and one as all, and see a galaxy within every grain of sand,
No matter how big or tiny and small.
Within its truest unjudged simplicity, all words' meanings are unbiased, Seen on an ever engrossing frame the relative beauty of each individual fractal will be viewed as equals.
With this we are free of the constraints of limited love within the framework of holographic structure and disposition, We see as a whole, all the majesty and glory of the phantasmagoric light spectrum of thought forms we call home.
Spiralling double helix joined as one as a cell within an organism,
All Earth and rock, metal and flesh are made untainted by definition.
We see without need to see because everything is equally beautiful within its own field, beyond all spheres within spheres as undefined potential is within all of us, forever beyond words.

Chapter 15 – Abundance

I realize now just how old fashioned I can be, kind of naive really, innocent in regards to love at least, which is strange since I have committed pretty well every sin, broken rules and done things that others would never dream of and yet as I love truth, I seem incapable of lying to or “playing” a girl. I feel like I am stuck in some weird teen drama sometimes, only I get high and worry about solipsism, fantasize about murdering politicians, eat out garbage cans and refuse to bathe. Upon reflection of this first matter which I must change from A to Z is my mind's fear of oneness and its proclivity for duality, sex is like a secret fire found within the waters of life, love unites the male and female in the white soul of Mother nature, but is protected by a poisonous dragon who is old and wise. It's not easy having romance when you are honest and hateful, when you think most clearly in poetry and have a passion for philosophy and politics. It's a strange feeling meeting girls you know you could have fallen in love with and even have that love returned, if only you hadn't experienced the true nature of reality, if only you couldn't see what was behind a person's ego. Make no mistake, knowing the truth doesn't automatically make life easier; if anything it gives you more responsibility and makes you an outsider in a world of liars. Don't get me wrong the truth is worth it, it's worth all the hardships, but even when a person thinks they tell the truth, if they don't really know what the truth is, they cannot be totally truthful.

It was about three months after Helen's death that I met a new girl in my life, this one was quite different, though she presented herself as a hard person she was goth and had little to no punk in her. She said she was a necrophiliac vampire and right from the start she was very sexual, very confident, she also claimed to be a Pagan and an Anarchist, though she was obviously a dabbler and had more of mainstream media idea of Anarchism. This led me to be suspicious of her character from the start and normally I avoid such girls, necrophilia isn't a turn on for me, but I am not one to discriminate and she made it clear she likes the living as well. Still living at home yet having been raised as a latch key kid by upper class right wing Christians and Disney movies, she was a strange one, but having been so alone, having had so little love at all in my life it was nice to feel appreciated, it was nice to feel wanted and for a change I was treated as sexy. After Helen's death I was feeling more vulnerable than ever, her murderers escaped free, the fucking pigs are all in it together, covering up each other's tracks and I was feeling pretty suicidal, pretty ready to go out shooting fuck heads in the face. Then all of a sudden there was a beautiful and mysterious girl hitting on me and I guess maybe sometimes I wanted to think it was fate. Now I can only wonder how much of it was just some kind of plot to make her parents mad, so much of what she told me seems to be lies, but it's hard to say what with any certainty.

She was a very bourgeois girl in many ways and after a little time she told me she loved me, that she wanted a Leave it to Beaver style family and home, she would even fantasize about inheriting her parents' money. Then she told me she had cancer, that she wanted to die and didn't care about getting treatment and that no one knew but me. Then she told me she was pregnant, we had been having unprotected sex since she claimed she was infertile, only to find out we would be parents! She changed her mind daily as to whether or not to get an abortion, while I wanted to be supportive the last thing I wanted was kids, but it was clear that my opinion was not important. Her mental state continued to be unstable, one day she would tell me she wants to marry me, the next she would hang up on me, even make fun of me. I just didn't want her to die, to kill herself, but it was all a game, later I would find out she would cheat on me and then sleep with me and tell me I am all she ever wanted. I was forced to resort to desperate measures, not exactly my proudest moment, but I did what is essentially a black magick ritual to cause a miscarriage. Shortly after I found my working was successful, though not in the way I had imagined, that while I had not mentioned her at all in my magickal intentions, this girl eventually admitted that she had aborted the pregnancy, that we would of had twins had they not come out when they did. After this she was understandably more mentally unstable, she started cutting herself more and asking me to role play bizarre scenarios involving murder and rape, she kept the twin foetuses in the freezer and said she wanted to keep them forever.

She carried on like that for a few more weeks until finally I couldn't handle it anymore, I wanted to heal her and obviously she had emotional problems, but I had become suspicious that she didn't really have cancer. When I talked to her mother it was clear I had been tricked, that I wasn't the first and had fallen victim to an emotional vampire and it was from her that I really learned what kind of madness the archons can bring up in a person. There she was the last shred of hope I had for romance, the last bit of love I had to offer and I had been used, tricked by the archons who seem to inhabit her body in to feeding them with my pain. It's strange now to think someone could be so infected they would feel the need to play games with people like that, she finally admitted faking the cancer, but the more I looked at her, the less I could see that was real or even desirable and the more I could see I had just been on the rebound and had been wanting to be with Helen, wanting an excuse to go on living.

I learned a lot from that experience, what I truly want, the importance of keeping true to myself, just what is in store for me in terms of romance and of course that being with someone, especially in a monogamous relationship just because you feel lonely is bound to go wrong. I feel like I have had enough sex to last me awhile, I am kinda like a sex camel, I don't think I have the heart to try again, at least not with someone who doesn't really love me and that is a rare occurrence. That whole episode really got me thinking about life and death, made me think of what my priorities were, if I had kids I knew I wouldn't be able to accomplish anything I wanted in life. I guess I don't have anyone to blame but myself, but it's weird how I could get tied up with a girl who cut herself and who would manufacture lies to make me feel sorry for her. Although deep down I knew I wasn't exactly in love with her, I guess when you are starved for love, when you feel like you are literally alone in the universe, you can get attached to strange people. I didn't know anyone else who would care about me, who even knew what I think about reality and I was so fucked up by Helen's death that I just needed to forget and try and move on, even if it was in the wrong direction. It's strange how some of the best looking girls can be the most insecure, I guess the bourgeois princesses know they have no other value than their body, if you can make them doubt their beauty then they have nothing. Not that she couldn't of had more value if she wanted, but for some reason she would rather be loved for who she pretended to be, than who she really was. She wanted me to become everything I hated, I may feel suicidal sometimes but I don't want to wallow in self pity. That was the closest thing to a girlfriend I have ever really had, and the longest "relationship" I have ever had, it lasted about three months on and off. Looking back it's funny how what was to all appearances essentially a "nice girl," was actually far less honest than Helen, one thing is for sure, the spiritual cultures are filled with posers just as much as any other culture.

If all that wasn't enough, the bikers who had been helping Helen's mom had been busy fighting a gang war, they found out more about the drug dealing bankers who had kidnapped Helen to turn her in to a sex slave. It turns out the bankers are doing a lot more than consorting with drug dealers, it's way too big for anyone to believe and they are in fact part of a multinational cartel, they are even connected to the CIA and a number of other powerful groups, helping to set up “banana republics.” They help drug dealers and corporations like the oil companies launder money or avoid taxes and have a variety of powerful lobbying groups to buy out politicians. The bank helps the oil companies set up monopolies, working like a shield made red from the blood of their victims, they protect their industries, the archons called the seven sisters from any competitors by holding the economy hostage. These kinds of cartels use their power to set up the standard oil rackets and oligarchies in the third world and then cut off the black stuff and everything else whenever some country or competitor isn't playing ball. With the whole economy dependent on oil the governments are easily controlled and whenever protectionism is required, trade embargoes are decreed or if it is profitable enough, we may even go to war against their victims. Among other things the bank arranges for politicians and business men to have sexual “entertainment” from girls like Helen and even have an international sex slave ring, sometimes even with children. Then they promote anti drug groups and religious “family values” groups that advocate homophobia and “traditional marriage” so really, they are a prime example of how the mafia, corporations, religious institutions and the government are all different facets of one hierarchy. (Even if they fight against each other some times that is just how they climb the hierarchy of capitalist competition.)

It's all a bit too much and there is no way the biker gang can take on such a group, they managed to figure all this out by shaking down some of their rival distributors, but once they found out it was the CIA supplying them they had no choice but to back down. Helen's mom's land is taken over now, once the bikers pulled out of the war due to the SWAT team backing up their enemies, the banks moved in to further their own agenda. The bikers managed to figure out the name of the bank, which had been a mystery due to various front corporations and offshore accounts, government protection and shady financial tricks. It turns out even the parents of this vampire girl I had been seeing work for them and that their bishop (the same one who blamed Helen for her own murder) is one of the banks biggest local supporters. The churches tell people to vote in board members from the bank and generally promote their kind of Christian fascist lifestyle, calling for more cops and the brutalization of pot smokers and queers. The Catholic church to which he belongs even owns a big chunk of stock in the bank and whats more this bishop was connected to the Vatican banker Roberto Calvi years ago during that big P2 Masonic mafia conspiracy.

Thinking about this vampire girl I realize just how enslaved people are, she was a prime example of what happens when you watch too much Disney as a child, she had taken in the mainstream memes and carefully nurtured archons which had vampirized her and had tried to infect me as well. I could of had a materialist life with her, if I was willing to conform, it's strange, I never would of gotten involved with such a girl normally, even before I realized just how crazy she was and the funny thing is she said I was the craziest guy she had ever met. It just felt like she was the last connection to humanity that I had, my last chance to have a place in this world, but she was just a chain to a world of lies. Although I cared about her and got attached to her, ultimately I think I just wanted to feel like I wasn't alone in all of existence, alone in my solipsist nightmare. It's clear to me now any chance of happiness I can have is getting as far away from the mainstream influence like her as I possibly can. Of course the “devil” often sucks people into his system using sex, he can make you confuse lust with love; yes we should love freely in this world, but when it is based on lies it is a prison of the blackest magick, for it unifies the polarities through chains of mundane gold and confuses the material for all that is. Taught by TV, modern day human mating rituals mean displaying the right memes, displaying your eagerness to reinforce the ego and the status quo, to show you are comfortable conforming to the twisted sadomasochistic values of this patriarchal capitalist culture. I knew she was messed up, but then maybe I knew I needed to learn about love and she was the only one who would teach me. I am done acting out elaborate rape fantasies for girls who hate themselves and although most girls aren't nearly as extreme about it as this girl was, every time I meet a girl who wants me to dominate her, I will think of that role playing. At the time, in my head I thought it was funny, I would try not to laugh while having sex, but being a giver in bed I am not one to disappoint, even with ridiculous requests, now I realize it was just so I didn't have to sit alone in my apartment.

I think it's pretty clear I still have some work to do, some archons to sort out with my sex life, I have unconsciously been engaging in "positive sexism," putting women up on pedestals instead of seeing them as individuals. I was almost acting as if all women are compassionate and more or less innocently monogamous or even virginal given the chance, then when reality hits my insecurities make me interpret it as if I am not good enough for them. No, this idea that women, even self professed feminists are automatically egalitarian or free from sexism, is itself sexist towards both men and women and is often used as an excuse to dismiss some very valid criticisms about feminism. It seems almost silly now, but for years I was trying so hard to show that I am a good man, that I am trustworthy and really respect them, trying so hard to show I am not a sexist that I overlooked their mistreatment of me and didn't stand up for myself. These kinds of chivalrous ideas I was raised with, which I am coming to be more aware of are a sneakier form of sexism which all too often fly under the radar of feminists, but no doubt must be reconciled if true equality is to be established. Being an upfront and honest Anarchist man inclined to punk rock, Paganism and polyamory is lonely as hell, now living with the results, I guess in my abstinence it's all about personal masturbation, getting off on truth, at least until I find people I can truly love, one thing is for sure I am done with self pity.

All this has got me thinking about the first time I did mescaline, I wrote much of the following chapter over some eight hours of the trip. Upon starting to come down I decided that I spend too much time alone and I need to learn how to socialize more, while I normally try to avoid such things on psychedelics I ended up going to a karaoke bar for some reason. What a strange trip that is! Watching this menagerie of humans sing god awful songs awfully, sticky floors and bad lighting while desperate older people look for something to hump. I really got to see something about humanity in that bar, it wasn't exactly a spiritual part of the trip but it did provide insight, it did show me what passes off for sane and civilized behaviour, that all too often in our seductions we sing other people's love songs, to an audience we never really know.

Peruvian torch seems to me to be very interesting, this is my first time on it, and I feel almost as if I am speaking for the cactus itself or as the cactus itself in many ways. I am the cactus looking through the eyes of a human, or is it the other way around? Mescaline seems to definitely have a unique character to itself, just as ineffable as any other psychedelic I suppose, how can one really articulate the differences between different plants? It seems slightly more like mushrooms then it does like acid, however I feel less impairment of thought that is to say less dissociative then I do on mushrooms. The hallucinations have the character of something that reminds me of a trip I had combining acid and mushrooms together. In this way it is somewhat like LSA, though that was the last trip I had so perhaps

I just feel drawn into similar head space and I am in the same place, that being my apartment. Do I write accounts of my first mescaline trip for something akin to photo albums? Will I one day recount the glories of my youth when I am old and decrepit or at least nostalgic? While that is all fine and good and makes me smile right now with my goon faced grin, I do hope I can put this writing to a bit more use, perhaps even something that will be of use to everyone, even the non entheogenic enthusiast. For now I want to try and articulate what is unique about mescaline. I wonder how Peruvian torch compares to peyote. Ramble Ramble Ramble, people say nothing to eat up the time when they don't know what to say. The euphoria seems somewhat subtle or at least gentler, less in your face than some other psychedelics, however I have taken a pretty small dose, only 15 grams of dried powder, but then each cactus varies in potency and I would say this feels about as intense as an eighth of good mushrooms. I am now one and a half hours into dose time and the hallucinations are very realistic in the way of LSD, but at the same time shimmering and obvious like mushrooms. I see the path of grime on my tile floor and it makes all kinds of pictures and designs I couldn't see before, so much more detail compared to everyday imagination. It comes in waves but I can see intricate patterns like Aztec art, it's shimmering in rainbow colours all over my floor, moving and pulsating and so there is no shortage of open eye visuals, yet I can also focus on the computer screen and see it pretty clearly if I want to. Psychedelics seem to amplify the imagination; you must trust yourself to imagine something enjoyable. A bad trip is your fear that you are unable to deal with current non useful imaginings, and so get to a new subject! Trust yourself, you have a big imagination, endless even, there's plenty of room for good things to come in when it's endless. Chaos seems more ordered on psychedelics, and yet supposed man made order seems a bit more chaotic, or at least absurd.

How do we determine validity? How do we determine value? What is it that determines what we are drawn to? What could I say to someone who has never tried psychedelics, to impart to them that perhaps there is some beneficial use, that they are not about pure hedonism, though they can be ecstatically enjoyable. Instead of making some argument that would almost undoubtedly fall on deaf ears (or to be more accurate like trying to talk to someone in a coma) I think it is best to ask like Socrates nagging little questions that if pursued will elucidate the mysteries, at least as I perceive them. Though outside of a dialogue the Socratic method is pretty hard to present so you will just have to deal with my ranting. I certainly am no authority, psychedelics will always be a mystery, and indeed their function seems to be to make us aware of just how much mystery is in the world, not necessarily to solve those mysteries, just tease you into them. In the end you always have to do it yourself.

Why is it the modern western man seems to be so sure, to the point of incredible arrogance even, to assume he knows best, that the rest of humanity and even his own lineage were completely ignorant and unintelligent before he came up with the scientific method. Yes your toys are very shiny and impressive; here is a big pat on the back for destroying the world, congratulations on being so genius. White culture seems to be so insecure with itself, it just wants a blow job from all the other cultures to feel good about itself, maybe if other cultures just put this child's ego at ease with a good blow job then it won't be so homophobic and so uptight. No, we insist the world is a serious place and you must be serious within it, you can't go around showing love to people or else... or else they will squash that love and we will have to live in a serious world! Oh wait, these flaws in logic don't seem to be recognized. The mescaline gently puts the horrid truth of your actions before you; hmmm maybe killing the world both human and other is not conducive to an efficient means of reliable practicality within the long term profits of our corporations. Ha I think the cactus likes our silly terminology.

What is profitable is what we call our values, but how do we maximize profits? Profits are reinvested into the corporation to create larger profits, thus we often put our profits or values into things that will encourage self perpetuation. All too often we don't consider what is worth self perpetuating but seem to enjoy the game as a whole rather than any long distant dream of retirement. Indeed they say that is the most successful way to be a businessman is not for personal profits, or greed but for a love of the game. At the same time, we never seem to get to pick the fruit but keep using it as compost to feed ever larger orchards of trees. So it could be said in a way that our values are usually derived from what is determined to be a vehicle for accruing larger sums of value, though they may be seen as separate values, perhaps to be invested in subsidiaries etc.

(hah listen to the cactus it can help you spell tough words, or at least help you to focus and unfocus depending on circumstances, there seems to be a wider variety of ability to go from the logical to intuitive faculties. LSD seems to be more linguistically and logically geared though undoubtedly with a logic all its own, where as mushrooms are more intuitive and feelings oriented. In my experience no psychedelic is pure in these qualities and I doubt it is possible for the mind to function in such pure forms of cognisance; mescaline seems to have the uncanny ability to go to either extreme, or stay in the middle. It's tempting to always go off on tangents, but I can focus which is why this is in brackets, do not doubt me! I know what you are thinking!)

So it is we invest in our values or belief systems, I will hold it as self evident that our values become our belief systems, but are our beliefs in our business justified? Or are we just trying to support ourselves and make a living? It can be awfully painful to suggest that something we have invested so much time and energy, blood sweat and tears, so much emotion into, only to find out we were on the wrong track and that our business does not seem to be of value to others, to find out our products are no good, of shabby quality, perhaps even dependent on foreign labour. Oh yes the cheap labour may seem enticing, but in the long run its bad for the local economy and if everyone is starving to death they will have no money for your products! Good economics takes into account the ecosystems of the world, money is the waters of the world and we all need it in this current system, at least if we want to stay as corporations.

Perhaps we need to look beyond, to the deeper meanings of the system. If you were high you would know what I am talking about dammit! I am speaking a secret language that to some degree only "high" people understand, it lies in the hidden meanings that go unnoticed by the superficial. (The green language of the mystics) Whole parallel conversations could go on between two high people and normie people all around them could think they are talking about something quite ordinary and meaningless. ("High definition," for the best "resolution") Why we could even insult you without you even knowing it. I do not tell you these things gentle sober and noble gracious sir, to make you paranoid or to make you think we mean you harm, quite the contrary. We realize you may think it offensive and that a great immorality of consciousness is to occur with the ingestion of a plant, yes, yet by your own standards "it is not what goes into a man that defiles him, but that which comes out." Picking and choosing is oh so tempting for anyone, I will not be so bold as to proclaim I am beyond it after all in a world with so many contradictions what choice do we have? Please I pray good and noble sir, to just listen and refrain from your judgement until I have made my case; I beseech your impeccable reason. If I am to be found out that I have nothing to offer or that my views are without good cause then it should be apparent to you, or even perhaps it will be shown I have nothing against your beloved books of infallible truth, so long as they are not used as vehicles of authoritarian behaviour.

My point is we get so caught up in long standing cherished beliefs and personal traditions, laws and dogmas, we have so much invested into them that we are reluctant to liquefy the assets of a crumbling business to reinvest in a new and perhaps seemingly risky venture. The business is crumbling whether we hold onto our stock or not, because the business itself is rotten, it may have good management, it may have noble intentions, it may have what seems to be a good product to quaint eyes, but the market is always changing and we need to stay on top of it, stay fluid. So I say liquefy your assets totally, at least once in awhile just to take a better stock of them. You do not really know how much cash you have until you liquefy your assets, perhaps you will see on the larger market by opening your magical newspaper, a whole new and exciting and much more profitable vehicle to which you can employ yourself.

The dream of capitalism, is it not to bring up all people to the status of kings? Or at least this is what your commercials say, and commercials can't lie can they? There is standards and practices and the benevolent better business bureau which will keep everything on the up and up right? So looking at the news paper today, with all my assets liquefied, I wonder what is the best vehicle to achieve greater profits? After all, one day with the proper investments even poor "naive" Africans will be able to lift themselves out of poverty and have big cities and suburbs and two cars each for their wife and kids, and it will be the African Norman Rockwell wet dream right? After all its competition, that is the best way to get things done right? Evolution! Darwinism! What am I saying here? Is economics against the bible!? Well no, no.. Jesus is a good business man right? I forget isn't that what Christians are suppose to do? That's what Jesus was right? A door to door sales man? I can't remember, maybe that's why Jehovah's witnesses are so divine and good, they are mini Jesus' and they are doing the lords work. Is my meme getting lost in sarcasm? It's hard to tell sometimes when you can see so deep in allegory you forget to reinvest your money in the stock markets!! MORE MONEY, IT'S IMPORTANT!! A big bank account makes me feel good about myself.

I feel like a caricature of a 19th century English business man on this stuff, what a sense of humour it has, or me, or us, but I will try not to masturbate too much. I think I have Aldous Huxley to blame for this trip! (Even though he isn't that old) But oh well it's all very good to get into such a psychology, it was a Rationalist Victorian Christian mindset which created the "modern" world and in many ways we are just carrying on that train of thought which is rooted in the idea that it is purely rational. This western mind has a lot invested in buildings and capitalism, technology and rationalism, why if it were ever shown rationally how irrational rationality is, then western people would look quite foolish to the rest of the world wouldn't we! And such arguments would either have to be repressed, or at the very least discounted in any kind of desperate means possible to keep people from seeing the man behind the curtain. We have so much invested in rationalism and our self image that we stay in denial about anything happening outside that context simply to preserve the illusion that that investment is worth maintaining.

Why if it were ever discovered that white people had no idea what they were really doing and that we are idiot fools who have unleashed a virus of rational terrorism , depravity and materialism over simple unspoiled spiritual concepts of taking pleasures in everyday things, who knows what would happen!? If it were discovered that we may have even blasphemed “beloved Christ” perverting his teachings into excuses to destroy the world and enslave everyone in the name of setting them free... If it was ever discovered what our line of thinking through the Apollonian psychic meme virus which we have imposed on the world by means of brute crude force has done then we would no longer be able to take ourselves seriously! If it were further discovered that we are in fact the ultimate hypocrites, because we have come up with some arrogant idea that there is a single truth which negates all other truths and that we are the only ones who know it, if any of that were discovered we would look very foolish indeed, but I digress.. White people are much too smart to do that kind of thing. This idea has given us the justification to claim we have the right to impose our truth, our mania, and delusion that there could ever be a single truth onto the world and so we have created this world of darkness. Not that whites are the only people to of ever done this, but we are no doubt the most successful at spreading our “infallible” truths.

Developing the third world is good for them dammit! They need to understand that if they don't destroy their natural world and stop loving each other then they will never find happiness! If they don't keep pursuing technologies and gadgets that separate them from each other, then how will they ever stay in touch with each other!? If we don't dissect the mind and the universe in a Freudian manner then how will we ever see what's inside it? Hmm could it be that it's all apparent on all levels? Hahaha that is the balderdash of the primitives. I should be careful with that line of reasoning it might take me to places like thinking that we are dependent on the Earth for our survival! Whoops I shouldn't say that, for if I did then I might realize that everything I've been doing is a horrible mistake! How dare someone suggest landfills aren't a noble necessity to the betterment of mankind! Why landfills are so noble that I may wish to even live in one one day, just so that it would further the business of the capitalist movement and so bring more equality and reason and justice to all of mankind. But then again I shouldn't get confused, people who live in the trash are bums and worthless parasites, they don't contribute anything to society in fact it's quite easy to rationalize why we should send all of the homeless garbage pickers to extermination camps!

Anyone who dares to suggest there are alternatives to the corporate rational is a threat to economics and so the rational ecosystem of which we have all bought into. To upset the rational economic ecosystem would cause a depression! And we wouldn't want to be sad, no being sad makes us sad, so we won't look at why we would possibly be sad or what underlying factors cause a depression. We will bury ourselves in the denial and further go along the lines of our rationalist delusion, yes my logic is flawless so I won't question whether it's my reliance on purely logical actions which are causing me pain.

I wonder how dangerous it is to rationalize irrationalism!? There's a big danger so their line of reasoning says, but then that line of reasoning is dependent on excluding anything outside of itself, this is capitalist rationalism! Oh Masonic men of renown who make the good better, please teach me, the ignorant savage, show me how naive I was to ever put any faith outside your glorious structures. Why if our rationalism is dependent on itself and must exclude all alien influences to assert itself then we should create a system of government which can assimilate all creeds and beliefs so that we can transmute it to our own ends. Uniformity is key, we can't have people thinking that there are different ways of thinking about the world; otherwise they may start to depend on other people than us and our self referencing and feeding logic system. If that happened then our delusions of grandeur, that is our sense of self worth would cease to grow, and we wouldn't have our neat costumes and we wouldn't have slaves to make us feel good about ourselves and boost our egos to say yes you are on the right track! You must be a valuable person look at all this stuff you have had made, you have a big house after all and no person who was important would ever not want to live in a mansion.

The money helps to get the women too, and you need to get the women or else some people might start to whisper that you could be one of those degenerate homosexuals! I should go off now and rape 10 women just to show how strait I am to the world, it matters not, women are incapable of understanding the depths of my self referencing logic! The female sex is made up of irrational creatures, always dependent on a man to make them feel good about themselves. Why if I am to rationalize that women are irrational by information I glean from my rational experimentation with them, where I was careful to not treat them as humans as that would make the experiment more subjective; then it becomes obvious women are incapable of coming to any rational and so valid or valuable decisions at all. Nope, women need to be controlled, I secretly wish to be a woman, oh wait NO! That thought is not rational! I must exterminate it from my mind!

Damn these sneaking suspicions and doubts to my rationality, why it must be the work of the devil! Anything that doesn't fit in my paradigm of rationality is the devil, I won't pay attention to how irrational the bible seems but claim it all rational literate truth, after all its been around for 2000 years and it even says that its true in the bible, that is what most people seem to believe so rationally it must be true! In fact if anyone disagrees they must be irrational and so be like women, or the DEVIL! AAHH! Now I see, women are the devil, it even says so in Genesis, there we go I can now justify making women do whatever I want and do whatever I want to them because it says so in Genesis! Oh praise the lord! I may even be able to convince women of their own inabilities, so that they will submit willingly to male rule and rationalism, I just need to beat it into them from the time that they are children.

I should start to think of my line of rationalism as a male group mind that I can infect other people with. I will call myself Jehovah, the demiurge; I will create the world in my image and destroy all trace of anything that was before! MWAAHAHAHAHA! I will create an empire to eradicate all other forms of thought until I only see myself, because I am so damn sexy, I want to look at nothing but myself! Oh ya baby, Jehovah you are a sexy beast! But I am not gay nope! No that would be sinful! I am not sure why but yup that makes me uncomfortable! And depression of my intellectual ecosystem, my economics should be avoided. I don't want to pay attention to the financial advice that talks about the business cycle and long term investments, I want profits now! Got to avoid depression, got to avoid economic slump, always have to keep lots of production up, lots of factories, constant new growth! Stagnation breeds familiarity, which breeds contempt, this ego needs variety, it demands it like a baby wanting a variety of tits to give the same damn bovine growth hormone milk.

Is a baby a parasite? Women should stop nursing its communist! They should buy their milk as formula in the stores! Maybe we need to stop reproducing; maybe humanity is festering boil on the ass of this planet that needs to be scourged. Through the cactus I seem to be channelling the unconscious collective of western European civilization, or rather the cactus spirit is impersonating us using my vocabulary. As the waves of mescaline hit me I weave in and out of allegory and different levels of meaning, I am not as stupid as I look, I do not also perceive the full value and meaning of my words or the flaws, implications, oooh implications we can't forget to take into account what implications a new entrepreneur might have for the market! The market or rationalist values will create the illusion of free trade and honest work for honest pay, it will create the illusion people are free to make whatever contribution to society they want, but they will always have to play in my game. I am the banking monopoly MWAHAHAHAH! I feel so good by ensnaring people into my games; see how they falsely believe they are free. I am so clever to trick people, heeheehee, I am so smart I must be better than all other species of man, because they have never seen a sickness like mine that can incorporate so many different things.

I'll have to exterminate any Indigenous populations that may stubbornly and arrogantly suppose to have any credible interpretations as to how to make use of the land and resources. I will have to exterminate them; those damn savages don't even have a written language which will make it easier to obliterate all trace of their alternative perspectives, ahaaha! Once they are dead and they cannot pose any threat to my monopoly on rationality I can start to use their land and Earth to make my toys for which I can further mirror myself in and look at myself. Anyone who dares present any alternative lifestyles or images other than me will be subject to public humiliation and be ostracized, ya that's the best way to keep telling myself I am universally loving. I'll just eliminate anyone who is different, I only love myself, so then when I am the only thing left I really will be all loving! Hooray! Praise the Lord!

I make such ornate and beautiful monuments and cathedrals to myself, after all if I didn't have big churches with lots of gold then how would I know that I am the best god above all others? I am a jealous god yes its true, but I deserve it because I have thoroughly convinced myself of anything I want to believe, regardless on its bearing and fruits within reality. I have created a complete parallel mirror reality to look at myself at for all eternity, and to occupy myself, I won't pay attention to the fact that this mirror reality is unsustainable, if I did that then I would have to look away from my beloved creation, y'know my creation which is a monument to myself and is also the cause of my destruction? GOD DAMN YOU DEVIL IRRATIONALITY for trying to point out any flaws and inconsistencies in my logic! I will continue to pervert your words so that I may add onto my byzantine cathedrals. I don't want to hear any ideas like forests are the best cathedrals, no we honour the divine by destroying the life that it created and putting it into our own image, we know better than the divine how to honour the divine. I am pretty sure we were given dominion over the Earth to build monuments to ourselves.

Y'know since I can make such awesome toys and am so clever I think that I can now safely rationalize that I am the only god, I am the creator of everything, there is only one god and it is me! Each tree can now be put to making my monuments, and all metals in the Earth will be dug up so that I can make cool little things that are shiny and have my reflection in them. I think I would be most happy with the Earth and everything on it and EVEN THE UNIVERSE YA!! I SHOULD COLONIZE SPACE TO GET ITS RESOURCES! That way I can make always more elaborate monuments to myself, I need a monopoly on this rational market, that way I can control all the currency of the world and all the trade, so that way my business will always make profits. I would be so sad if I went out of business, why there is nothing else to do in life but make profits and toys. UGH I just had a horrifying thought, if I stopped concentrating on profits then I might actually love other people around me, then I would stop focusing on myself! OH CRAP I can't have that! From what I have been telling myself from the beginning is my rationalism is infallible, after all I have all this to show for it and my rationalism states that you need evidence to prove things! So if I start to love other people then that could lead to lines of thought like other people have worthwhile things to say! And then before I know it my cathedrals would be crashing down and I would be like a savage who never even saw himself in a looking glass!

Some of these savages have plants which seem to be the source of their irrational behaviour and superstitions, I think it's best if we make these plants illegal and we will do so in the name of public health, as this seems much more credible to even the most rational skeptic, rather than letting atheist people see that really these plants are the DEVIL! I am scared though because the concept of the devil in Jehovah's perfect reality seems irrational, almost like my rationality itself was based in irrationalism! Ah I shouldn't let myself think such thoughts, fear is irrational, and so it's the devil! The devil is trying to tempt me! Ooooh always trying to tempt me with alternative views of reality. Oh lord Jesus Save me. No! Judaism and its economic subsidiaries are rational and just and in fact the only truth! Even if that truth seems to point out again and again its inherent flaws I will stick to my own truth, I know what's best because I tell me I know what's best and it even says so in a book that says it's always right.

We are all trapped in our own paradigms of rationality which feeds off an unspeakable formless source, to try and make your own forms and creations is vanity, it is hubris and narcissism. It seems to me that to seek to come into line with what was here since the beginning of time, the eternal, to try to pay homage to this rather than erect our own phallacies is a much more pious way of being. We do not need to come to final conclusions in such a model, we do not need to have an end goal, we do not need to self perpetuate anything except what is and what always will be, that being life itself. The effect is that we have created these values to distract ourselves from the valuable experience itself. We are lost in hypothesis and theorems; we have forgotten how to feel and what the purpose of that logic was in the first place. Wasn't the dream of capitalism to make everyone into a king? Wouldn't we all be kings already if we abandoned the concept of property and capitalism and just shared everything as it belongs to no one? Wouldn't paradise mean seeing that how we effect the world affects ourselves? Perhaps common sense is not the same as logic, I think we have plenty of logic in this world but not enough common "sense" but I am not prepared to logically debate such an issue.

No, I like many others find it much easier to just abandon myself to my own values without trying to explain their validity to a culture that takes the impression that it is its moral imperative to stamp out all alternative forms of thinking. Somehow rationalist dogmatism isn't quite conducive to a proper environment for total cognition about reality, if we are to use science to discredit anything that science hasn't proven simply because of a lack of evidence we are in fact being very unscientific. You do not have to accept ideas for them to have value, but simply entertain them, capitalism is a theory like many others, when it works to exclude all others it becomes unhealthy, no value system can be healthy if it seeks to limit its own growth, but growth is only healthy when it is sustainable. Those with alternative views then have a duty to break up monopolies, but they must ensure they do not become the next monopoly. Integration is one thing but sometimes you just need to learn to love the formlessness.

Pay attention to what's happening around you, don't be so caught up in presuppositions, as a cheesy TV character of capitalist culture said, "Logic is the beginning of wisdom, not the end." Congregate now ye faithful to the chapels of star trek conventions to learn the teachings of the master Spock. I hate TV and yet not everything that has ever been on it, or that has ever been a part of consumer culture is awful, just 99.9% of it. Those with white guilt do need to realize we have something to offer with our anal retentive categorizing of things, but when we start to put this need to categorize things in a category above everything else, then all kinds of absurd moralities can be claimed and be followed point by point logically. Oh you can say to the starving African or the Natives of South America who we just burned down their forests for grazing lands, “but you see look at this graph Mr. Native, see this will mean that once we destroy everything then you will have lots of paper money, and then all the suffering your people went through to get what they already had will have been worthwhile.” Personally I think dancing around naked to tribal drums is much more artistically valid than western classical music, and I love classical music, just like I love punk rock but it’s in these drum beats that all things, all art sprang forth. I would submit to you noble reader that western logic is simply the most atrophied husk of an endlessly deep abyss of a wellspring that is art. White people were tribal at one point so there must have been some kind of progression from then to symphonies and colonialism, there is an underlying form to it all and that is formlessness.

Liquefying your stocks is not the same as being morally bankrupt, in fact holding stock in badly run corporations is what leads to being bankrupt. If you don't liquefy every once and awhile and take a fresh approach to life you invariably become insolvent, that is to say morally bankrupt from your attempt to monopolize the markets. The one unifying force and form is that everything that appears to be separate is rooted in endless diversity. Logic and so value systems, by which most of us base our lives in one way or another are never truly monopolies, especially when we think they are, they are in fact always dependent on diversity. Indeed it is in striving for diversity and new ways of being and new kinds of mind, new arts and lines of logic, new horrible ideas called ideologies that we grow. However, it is not these articulations and values that have value but the wellspring of diversity and creativity that spawned them. Do I value not valuing things over anything else? Well at least not when it comes to that value itself, so there are exceptions to every rule and as I do not claim to have eliminated my ego I imagine there are probably other exceptions in my mind somewhere as well, but it is none of my business I hope, to impose my views on others.

Whether or not you are an atheist it makes more sense to show love to the creator of something than to the creation, we are just lucky enough to be both the “creation” and one with the “creator” just the same as all life. (Though these terms are misleading) We kill life which is divine to make our own creations which in vain we say is to honour the divine. Why should we worship the Mona Lisa or Spock? Idolatry is a metaphor for the stagnation of the literal and logical mind, to be idolatress is to fall into creation worship rather than creator worship; it is to also doubt your own ability to create something of value. (The demiurge created the masturbatory physical value, not the true creation which is life) Art is everywhere, I don't trust critics who say whatever piece is worth money, not that there isn't great art that is worth “money” but who are they to tell me what I should like, this is art fascism to me in a very real sense. Art should always be free, and to me life is art, everything is art, even our belief structures are a piece of art, to deny there is a creative impulse of irrationality in all things, to deny it in even one supposed bastion of infallible truth is to get caught up in hysterics about the devil as far as I am concerned. By this thinking we get trapped in the long slog of a hell we call society to some place we do not know, but which I am pretty sure nobody is truly happy about going to.

I may make fun of bankers but they really aren't happy in their ego maniacal sadomasochism, they are really just desperate to stick to what they know, they are incredibly afraid, and their fear is being materialized in a very literal way. It seems we need to discipline them like spoiled children who have been given everything they want in order to justify their own lives. Well now it’s time they grew up, and there will be some very real consequences to their actions, and their armies will realize just who's side they are really on when this spoiled child demands we kill all our own families. It's time the child learned some discipline and how to do things for itself, why the hell can't the billionaires of the world help grow their own food? They aren't better than anyone else. Values become poison when they start to deny the value of other things, without rationalizing value we can see the inherent worth of something, we don't need someone to sell us a deal, or talk us into anything, we know that treating the Earth well is right for us, we know it's in our best interests to be healthy, we know it's in our best interests to be loving to one another.

We get so caught up in these notions of black and white, of what is politically correct or personally profitable that we lose the ability to see these things from a detached perspective and so these values take on a life of their own. You shouldn't need to tell someone that being loving is enjoyable, and yet here we are, we have rationalized our way into being cold and emotionless for the purpose ensuring good emotions. We have rationalized that pure rationalism is the only way to ensure happiness, but since happiness is irrational we ultimately try to shut it out. Yet we continue to rationalize pure rationalism to the point we believe we have achieved it due to our irrational fear of irrationality making us shut out large parts of our self awareness. Call me naive if you will, but uh isn't enjoying yourself a prerequisite of love? And so what is it that is wrong with being loving? Well if we aren't careful what we love then we may love the wrong things and so do unhealthy things, like maybe make up lies about the health and mental effects of plants in order to perpetuate our own limited viewpoints. Yes love what you love, you can even love things in different amounts to other people, but don't forget that other people love different things as much as you love what you love, that if you were to stop allowing them to love what they want then it would be like someone taking away all joy from your life. This can no doubt piss people off and create a certain value to destructive impulses and indeed you will be damned if you ever let someone tell you that what you love is evil and wrong just because it is, rather than because of actual actions that have come about from such loves.

So what are the actions that we take from our values? Do we even recognize the link half the time? If attachment to desire is the cause of suffering what is the source of desire? Desire to me comes from perceived notions of duality, duality creates myriads upon myriads of worlds of abstraction and values, from which we find ourselves in the mess we happen to be in now. So now where does duality come from? Duality comes from the fear or inclination that there is more to the picture than we are currently getting. So there becomes two forces, the one that says it's all in what is here, and the other force which says no I can create something new, I have some new way of perceiving that will be better than what was, I have to separate to see an "other." (Sophia's grief) This duality is our will to diverge from the original "creation," that which is apparently manifest in all things. Why do we will to do this? Well it seems we wanted to justify our own luck and overwhelming bliss that would happen within unity. Why anyone should need to feel justified to feel happy may seem irrelevant, but I suppose with said justifications comes the certainty that said bliss will last for eternity and perhaps from that we rationalize there are deeper levels of bliss to be had. Ironic is it not that doubt and fear that we are not justified or worthy to feel bliss is the source of the lack of bliss which we go on to miss and complain about and find rational ways to end?

Does someone need to do something to win your approval before they are worthy of your love? Is this truly a valuable trait and standard to uphold or is it based out of ignorance and insecurity within yourself? If everyone only loved people who did them material gain then we would end up in a world where success is determined by how much money you have... whoops! So what is the more healthy value to have? Is it to only love those who profit your ego fulfilment or is it to love all people as much as possible, but not enable their temper tantrums and ignorance? You will not console the heart of a child with threats if they don't stop crying, but it does not mean that you give them whatever they want simply because they throw a tantrum. It may be in our own best interests to love those who will destroy the Earth and enslave people in farcical value systems, but it is not in their, or our best interest to not show these people what they really are and what they are accomplishing by their means. Loving your enemy does not mean you let them kill everyone, it means showing them a better way to express love and making them aware of what their actions really are.

Will bankers and business men ever liquefy their assets to give to charity? Without it being put directly in front of them what they have put others through they will never understand and so never change. It seems to me if a revolution were successful it would need to take the old oligarchs and teach them firsthand what it means to be a peasant. Only when the oligarch's vanity and the culture of vanity is destroyed will we be able to live altruistically. We see this to some degree in the bourgeois who know they are vain and pompous, they try to emulate the salt of the Earth, just look at the roots of rock and roll. White guilt is fed by the sneaking suspicion that our worship of rationalism has made us pretentious and full of crap, and I think white guilt is more pervasive in our culture than might be first thought. Just look at how kids today are pretending to be gangsters, (haha I feel so old saying that and yet I wrote this awhile ago and I just turned 22, so there fuck face!) which they have been taught is what black people are, but really white people are the ultimate gangsters of this Earth and gangster rappers are wannabe business men. The mainstream tries to integrate the honesty and rebellion of the counter culture because it knows that it is sick and so the counter culture tries to establish itself as something different which just keeps this cycle repeating. I am afraid the truth is so horrible as to state the hippies are no better than the bankers. At what point does violence become appropriate? When is violence worthy of being valued? Violence is justified when it means getting your hands bloody or everybody dies. It doesn't matter what morality you have if no one can live on this planet, if you want to believe Jesus is going to come back and clean up the pollution that is your right, but you better stop polluting everything in the mean time, otherwise you aren't even being good by your own standards. Do you think Jesus would spread nuclear waste because he likes to have electric light bulbs? No, that doesn't really make any rational sense at all. Values cannot be increased as they are culturally arbitrary, but knowledge can be increased and so our understanding of what is worth investing our time in, or what is the most appropriate way to express our love.

OK so I am no primitivist, how much can we take from the Earth and still be sustainable, still be part of the global ecosystem? Well I would suggest that stopping the idea that we should take as much as we possibly can is probably a healthy idea, and that learning to take pleasure in giving back to nature is a healthy thing. Technology and rationalism isn't the problem in that it has value in its way, it can be used to assess the facts of what is sustainable to counter the obviously flawed logic of capitalism that thinks growth can be endless. But rationalism needs to be seen for what it is, and it needs to be kept from validating itself purely for the purpose of self perpetuation. Technology and rationalism will be your masters if you do not know thyself enough to take control of them, and while I don't think there's such thing as a bad idea, it doesn't mean we need to do everything that occurs to us, especially in an obsessive compulsive manner! The theory of relativity and physics is great but does it really imply that we have to go about building atomic weapons just because we can? I can stab myself in the name of experimentation but I don't think I really feel too compelled to do so, sure I could learn a lot from that, like what the insides of my body look like, but perhaps they are where they should be right now without me carving them up. The desire to look away from ugly truths is the main means of perpetuating ugly truths. It's all so tempting for anyone who sees this to fall into a martyr complex that must show the world the error of its ways, but perhaps the ugliest truth is that currently we all like it to be ugly, at least sometimes.

Perhaps the meme that values are arbitrary, that I have let lose in the world is a meme that will destroy civilization, but then if values are arbitrary why not see that as a good thing? All memes are self referencing, self perpetuating, self justifying and self limiting. People have been burned at the stake for saying such things, and much less, and yet no matter how much they burn it doesn't seem to keep certain ideas from coming up again and again. Oooh that pesky devil... hahaha... What seems rational to me is something that integrates emotions into it's rationalism, which might look something like everyone giving to each other, or perhaps forgiving when people are totally ignorant idiotic psychopaths, but also not allowing them to go on murderous rampages in their delirium. What seems to me to be the most rational is that we are always open to new points of view, that in the short term, profits may be low in emotional security and pleasure, but that this is by far the better long term investment, one that is perhaps actually a sustainable business practice.

All people can learn from each other, even white people have something to teach and thinking otherwise is just as arrogant as white people thinking they should force their ways on other people. Will the world be some neo techno Shamanist psychedelic Anarchist utopia? The way it's looking, the way most people right now want things to be it isn't, and it won't be because they don't want it to, but at least the idea is out there. At least those who can imagine such things can keep it alive in their hearts. If Mother nature dies we all die with her, that is not spirituality, that is common sense, that is biology. Now we may not kill ourselves with pollution or war tomorrow but it is coming at some point if we continue long enough down this same path, what's more we have let the mindset that such things are actually good pollute our minds. This is the real danger from which all material danger comes forth, that to lose respect for the life force even if that force is just an idea, once we lose respect for that force all hell breaks loose. The spread of technology across the planets, eating and turning to waste the jungles of the irrational may never actually kill us, but it will create a world which has no real value left, which has no joy and which is not "worth" anything to the emotionless people who inhabit it. It doesn't matter if you see the Earth as one consciousness, if you start to disrespect the Earth eventually pollution doesn't care how much money you have. When you stop treating life as sacred even if you want to look at it from an atheist perspective that is more than beautiful, but once life stops being something sacred and worthwhile then we are all in for depressing times, no matter what kind of a monopoly we have, or whether or not we even use money.

Is setting aside everything and isolating it and letting an elite few determine who has the rights to property the best means of ensuring everyone gets what they need? I really don't think so, that seems like bullshit to me for people who want to create a system by which they can horde everything, and what's even more insane, they don't even really know why they want to horde everything. The concept of western logic is flawed by its own standards. It is irrational to try and stamp out the irrational, that which has been termed feminine by westerners but has nothing to do with what genitals you were born with. Logic and irrationality are two sides of the same coin, but it is through logic that we articulate the duality of this coin. Some might say I've liquidated my assets so much I have no brains left but there is always new investments, and what the hell good is money that you never spend? What good are rational theorems about what should make us happy if we never actually follow through on them instead of always trying to find new and better theorems? What good are profits if we only ever reinvest them in to new stocks? Oh yes that last toy wouldn't give a happily ever after but this one will!? How we spend our "profits" is how we spend our time and far too many people spend it trying to gain things for themselves and their family, yet have no real time for those people, or even themselves and their emotional development or growth of self awareness.

This nonsensical self gratifying crap that has been peddled as useful truth has gone on for far too long, we need to get people to feel again, and when that happens they will be able to properly rationalize for themselves rather than be swayed by a few oligarchs... This is going to be much more difficult than getting everyone to drop acid or some Learyesque fantasy, this requires the common people to step up and face authority and give it a triumphant lick, that no, we will no longer take their self important sophistry as being rational or best for anyone. I think the authorities must be made to submit that they probably aren't even the best authorities on themselves, after all they even claim that it's possible to have authorities as to how another person should live. We need to make common people aware of this and although mescaline has been pretty instrumental in this diatribe and its line of thought, this sector of the rational economy if you will, we can't expect people to work up the courage to do such things when they have been told their whole life that such things are evil and "insane."

When people do not have a sincere love of truth we cannot rely on entheogens to save the world, that is nonsense, but spreading awareness which I will argue is what entheogens can potentially do is crucial. Entheogens cannot and never will be humanities only means of spreading and coming to awareness, if it is then we are all truly doomed, it seems way too infantile to ask Peruvian torch or LSD to save the world alone, rather than us saving the world ourselves and taking care of ourselves. Even if entheogens change a person, it is up to that person to actually act on that change and overthrow the despots of this world, it is still up to humans to do the physical things and give up the decadent consumerism. It's time western rationality became a big boy and realized it is a hermaphrodite. For the most part psychedelics are in this western world just another cheap thrill, and so to solely depend on what can be in most minds or at least is attempted to be a recreational pastime, to ascribe the salvation of the world to such things is preposterous. If humanity is so lame that it can't stand on its own two feet and come to sensible conclusions without entheogens then it would be easy to conclude it shouldn't exist at all. Even if entheogens would somehow magickally transform everyone into Anarchist loving people tra la la... the government has done far too good a job of spinning the popular mind away from it. Entheogens clearly have the potential to raise self awareness, but since you would have to forcibly dose people and condition them with an authoritarian religion in some kind of MK ULTRA brainwashing procedure, individual personal agency and will is still key, otherwise you are destroying the very Anarchy you are trying to create. It is clear to me that entheogens are here to be humanities plant allies, our teachers and that they are sacred beyond words, but no teacher can teach a student who does not wish to learn. Even if all people were willing and able and did take entheogens, in the end it would be humans who clean up the pollution, in the end it would be us who replant the forests and make a new world for humans. Entheogens alone will not save us, they are too wise to do that because that would be authoritarian salvationism and the desire for them to do so is probably the result of some kind of Christian residue in western civilizations subconscious. Waiting for entheogens to save everyone is the result of a desire to avoid personal responsibility, a desire which destroys free will because we want a parent figure to fix all our problems for us, forever and ever and that is how we got in this mess in the first place!

While I encourage serious spiritual work with entheogens, if you never actually act on the lessons they teach you, that is you never act to spread Anarchism then you are just reinvesting all your “profits” in a certain limited ideology without spending any time or focus on its physical implications. Different tactics are required that do not depend on other people taking entheogens or having people depend on anything outside themselves. (Plenty of atheists figure out Anarchism without entheogens) That’s the whole point, consumer capitalist culture was always trying to justify itself by external validation, you can’t think that telling people “here take this pill and it will solve all your problems” will really be anything different then the same consumer bullshit. LSD was absorbed into the beast logic system, hell the CIA thought LSD could be used to brainwash people and I could probably figure out how to do it myself if I wanted. Sadly psychedelics are often just another part of consumerism these days, but this means we now have permission to stop looking for any external means of salvation. As I said before they have the best potential of helping humans of anything I know, but if anything is going to save the world in the end its going to be humans, yes I am quite certain of it. An atheist person can have a mystical experience that will change their whole lives, I am proof of that, but it would not of happened if I had not had the will to integrate that truth and explore it in detail in a normal mindset. I know some people may like to think that we have to have entheogens to be aware and I am fully convinced that they can function in that way, the entheogenic experience is still viable, but in general it doesn't do any good if people are too terrified or ignorant to take them in a proper setting with the right intentions and in a practical way. Entheogens have raised the awareness of many a hippie, but due to New Age philosophy far too many are far too complicit with the state and when it comes to rationalism have thrown the baby out with the bath water.

Being totally invested in one thing is an excuse to ignore all other things, so we must diversify our portfolio and create a culture which values variety and equality, but also self awareness and exploration of the mind. This can be done through art forms but maybe what we need is a whole new medium or art, the art of artistry, to which everyone must become a master. Duh, how lame I know, oh what cheesy rambling of naive delusions, yes well anything that can be done at this point to spread awareness in any way is helpful, and we should definitely not stop with just that. The answer is not a new drug just like it’s not a new toy; the answer is getting people to be content with what they have and stop basing their own self worth on external things, even other peoples love. Just because you aren’t dependent on outside influences for love, for self worth doesn't mean you don’t love and value other people, but it means you won’t be swayed by what is in the short term a good means of getting people to like you and desperately trying to placate some bottomless of a pit of insecurity. Likewise it means knowing that you aren't infallible and you need outside reference to determine how you affect others, which is really how you determine how you see yourself.

What can't be tolerated is people's willingness to deceive themselves, we have to be honest with ourselves, but this problem can't be solved by forced indoctrination and so it is the root of the world's problems. So what is the best way to make people aware of self deceptions and limited thinking? I don't know, perhaps honest fearless genuine expression in all its forms possible? That would be my best guess, we need to be loud in our message that we need to stop screaming over each other and listen, for once in your god damn life listen. Poor baby Jehovah needs a spanking and a nap he is very cranky. Patronization of the middle class is not conducive to spreading awareness, the fact is there is no nice way to say you are a selfish spoiled brat who is killing everyone and you better stop if you want to live, not because I will kill you but because you are killing yourself. Leading by example to show the beauty of diversity is the only means of spreading awareness there is that is not authoritarian and monopolistic. Either we will wake up or we won't, but either way it was one hell of a bender. Look outside your supposed self and you will see what you truly are. Don't be fooled, to seek altruism even if it is ultimately impossible as we are one, it is real hedonism, but don't be so arrogant as to think you know how to help everyone, especially without listening to them. Yes my logic is flawed, congratulations on figuring that out, try to think hard about what reason I would have to include it anyways. You can dismiss me as engaging in wishful thinking if it makes you feel good, but then maybe that is your wishful thinking so that you can continue to ignore your own responsibility? At least I am aware of my limitations, are you?

Fuck man, people are so uptight, it makes me want to stab them in the eye. The perceived need for self protection creates an atmosphere that others need to protect themselves. In matters others then life and death let it all hang lose and perhaps most all in matters of life and death. I am not sure what is not a matter of life and death. The ego is our means of protection, it is our value system and who we tell ourselves we are and so we try to get in competitions of ego inflation so that we feel secure. Without the ego we feel raw and vulnerable but it is the ego that separates us from each other, from feeling each others feelings. When we learn to relax our ego we will enter true secure bliss. So do it or I will bitch slap you!

Statistics

Less than one percent of the budget for weapons would be enough to put every child to school in the year 2003.

This is the path we have chosen for what we call progress.

20% of the developed nation's population consumes 86% of the world's goods.

This is how we spread equality.

The "developing" countries spend $13 in debt repayment for every dollar it gets in grants.

This is how we give charity to those in need.

30,000 children die every day from poverty while we throw our leftovers in the garbage.

This is how we live our lives.

1% of the world's population owns 40% of the world's wealth.

This is the evidence for the "trickle down" theory.

11 billion dollars for Europe's ice cream while $9 billion added to the budget for water and sanitation would provide services for all.

This is how we nourish ourselves.

$780 billion for world military in 1998 while fundraisers look for the $13 billion which would give basic health and nutrition for all.

These are our values we refuse to change.

The three richest peoples combined wealth is greater than the combined GDP of the poorest 48 countries.

This is what they call equality in a free market

The gaps are always widening and we believe things are getting better because there is new crap for us to buy and this is our motivation to ignore these problems.

The price of all our toys, is the lives of millions of girls and boys.

The vast Majority of "free" people will spend more time watching TV then caring about the real world.

This is how hopeless disillusionment, numbness and greed rule the world.

Addendum

After the revelations given to me by the cactus through metaphor, I came down and used my logic to analyze them and see what meaning I could extrapolate and elaborate. The full implications of what the spirit of the cactus had given me were not explicit, but it had given me the basis for recognizing capitalism and the stock market are a complex magickal system. So I was inspired to do further research and I learned we live in an economic system based on "fiat currency," that is to say the money has no inherent worth, it is not worth gold as it used to be, but is created by "fiat" which means "by decree." This means we are constantly trying to raise the power of our "capital" (head) for our investments but it is artificially and arbitrarily given value by those who we have given the means to do so. In fact within the present system we must inexorably inflate the value of our currency and so the basis of all value in capitalist society is completely abstract and arbitrary. The means of symbolizing the energy we use to measure the value of our investments or values and ideas is itself being devalued by the inflation caused by our banking system. Believe it or not, money is not so much created by the government, but borrowed by the government from the privately owned central bank which creates it out of nothing. In this way the international banking cartel has accomplished a very real monopoly over the entire economic system to which the vast majority of the world (the "civilized" parts or "free world") belong to. To give anyone the opportunity to determine value by decree or fiat is surely the folly of those who will no doubt have this tool used against them as there can be no true value through this system and all honest work through it becomes a lie.

Little do we question the value of our labour whether it is for another, or ourselves, when it is created by privately owned central banks; money by its nature represents debt more than wealth. Frantically we fall in to all this, scrambling to accrue vast sums of nothing which has been created from day one to imprison us in artificially limited notions of worth. How many spend their lives working in a means they hate, destroying the world and themselves so that they can fill their bank accounts with something that not only does them no good, but acts to make them slaves, pawns of men they do not comprehend, with more vaults of rubbish than they can imagine. The vast majority of people toil away acquiring very little for all their work, their owners have learned to give their slaves enough money to keep the economy flowing, they have to have enough so that they can buy all the useless products which they create. From the trickle down theory the rich ensure that those peasants which they employ think they are free and so continue to work, but should one of them create by their own mind a new product, it will be used by those who run the market to ensure it is just another shackle to the work place. The reasoning is, you have to have money to get anything done, it's the only fair and logical way to do things, but given the state of the world it should be clear that this is not so.

As I said, the economy is run on the principles of "fiat" which means that banks can literally create money out of thin air, that is "fiat" is basically the notion that magick words create wealth, value or units of (metaphysical) energy for the consumption of goods and services. There is no gold or silver standard for money, the value of money is all simply an illusion held in place by the faith of the people who empower it through their consent to continue to use such monetary systems. The value of the dollar is that people want to use it as a currency over other forms because the American empire is so powerful, the dollar is thought to be less volatile and more dependable than even forms of currency which are backed by gold. When people lose faith in the dollar or the banks, then the economy which is dependent on these things suffers but the same would be true here if people lost faith in gold. Runs on the bank can cause bankruptcy and the whole system crumbles because our whole economy is based on magickal philosophy. Now while money is not backed by anything and you can no longer exchange it for gold, it is true that since the American empire has done a good job of monopolizing the oil market and especially the refining process, it has managed to strong arm other nations in to buying oil and gas exclusively with the American dollar. This means that while the dollar is not backed by oil as it was with gold, the American "petrodollar" still has value on a global market as people need it to pay off the oil cartels, so even if a country hates America they will need to play ball to some degree if they want oil. However this edifice of the American economy started to crumble when Saddam Hussein committed the ultimate sin and started to sell his country's oil in Euros, not too long after his country was invaded by America. Thus this scheme allows private banks to issue fiat money which is absolutely worthless, but due to the bankers close connections to the oil industry, also allows them to nearly monopolize the oil market.

Not only this, but with "fractional reserve banking," banks in general are allowed to lend out much more money than they actually have, depending on the country and the type of account of the depositor, the bank can lend out ten times what they have in reserves, or sometimes even more. As absurd as it sounds it is true, they are legally allowed to run their bank making loans with a fraction of the reserves that is in existence within the bank. So, just to be clear, with this system the banks are legally allowed to turn $1 into $10 and then lend it out on interest. In this way so long as the banks keep 10% or the "principle" they can borrow from nowhere to create $9 (Nine sephiroth from Malkuth or the physical reality) and so the values of these banks are not really based on principles at all. The true "value" of the banks is instead based on the corrupt practises of a system with no purpose but to create arbitrary values, which can be likened to circular logic such as that in the bible, created purposely to trick people in to having faith in them.

From the profits on “interest,” bankers can either lend out more money or invest in new ventures and so attract new deposits from new investors to create more money out of thin air, which is now how the world economy is run. From banks buying government bonds, the citizens of the economy have been sold in to bondage and literally turned in to serfs in a neo-feudalist system. Governments have become addicted to debt, to the point that the capitalist system would totally collapse should the debt ever actually be paid off. As insane as this sounds it is actually true and is not even really hidden from people, though it is not really taught to common people either. Occult knowledge is hidden knowledge, but it is hidden right out in the open, hidden with the best camouflage of all, peoples laziness towards their ignorance. From these mechanisms international banking cartels have managed to get most of the world in debt, so that governments are forced to do their bidding through what are ultimately privately owned central banks. Since they hold the world economy hostage and are quite capable of crashing or pitting countries against each other, nobody dares to stand up to them.

As I explained before, through the IMF and world bank pretty much all countries are made to take out loans which they will never be able to pay back and so they are forced to exploit their people and resources until we get what we have happening today, a small minority of plutocrats who are not bound by law but protected by it, and who do not answer to any government officials. From the inevitable “progress” of money lending within any system which is based on interest, a small number of people will eventually become more and more powerful until they control all of the money. Paper money was originally nothing but a receipt from the bank, for people who didn't want to carry around large amounts of gold and so has no real value and yet it is probably the most sought after thing in this world. As the cactus showed me, the monetary system is some of the most powerful proof for the existence of the power of consensus reality. Tolstoy once said “money is the new form of slavery and distinguishable from the old simply by the fact that it is impersonal, there is no relation between master and slave.” This form of banking was in fact the prime motivation for the American revolutionaries fighting for freedom from the British central bank and according to Abraham Lincoln a more important factor than slavery within the American civil war. (Lincoln and apparently JFK were also coincidentally shot when they tried to change this system.) The governments have given the banks the right to print money for them and so contrary to popular assumptions, these governments do not actually make the money themselves.

So long as governments are indebted to private bankers for the creation of money, through central banks like the federal reserve, the power of a country is within the hands of private civilian bankers, and this is what has become standard practice. The national debt can never be repaid because the money used to pay it off comes from a loan from the very people to whom the country is indebted. All paper bills are not representations of wealth, but actually of the loan which the government takes out from the banks, but the really insane part is that we must take out more loans to pay off the debt and so the interest on the debt increases as well as the debt itself. From this mechanism, governments are allowed to spend more money without overtly raising taxes, but it still must be paid, there are always consequences to being indebted to others. The real mind fuck of this scam is that if the debt were actually ever repaid, the system would cease to function and so the monetary system is a rigged game and the bankers always win. It is clear the government is corrupt and that it has been infiltrated by private business interests, this of course goes beyond only the bankers but oil and military and many other private interests. These plutocrats can hold the economy hostage; any politician who might develop a conscience will be made subservient when they realize that these private interests will make things worse for the country, than if they were to consent to the demands of the bankers.

People do not seem to realize there is very real ramifications from having the country in debt for billions or even trillions of dollars, this cost is made evident through inflation through which all people who use money are covertly taxed and ultimately robbed of their share of production. Not only this, but in order to secure more loans the bankers are able to make all kinds of far reaching political demands upon the governments they loan to. These demands are justified as part of the agreement to ensure the banker's investment is profitable and that the government will do everything it can to pay off the debts by surrendering more and more power. They can do this because the bankers are international and have been for a long long time. Most countries of the world are basically bankrupt and so as part of the conditions of their loan extensions to private banks, they have agreed to sell their people and their countries and allow the banks to control their economies.

Metaphysically speaking this system of debt has created a society of slaves; owned and manufactured like livestock in order for some artificial entities we call corporations (archons) to acquire energy or wealth. By living in debt you agree to surrender your power in order to get some short term benefit which cannot really be afforded and which sets up the illusion of greater wealth than there really is. This creates unbalanced and unnatural growth to which there is a very real price to pay and which ultimately demands the never ending growth of the economy and so the destruction of all natural resources and increasing exploitation of all workers. Through these kinds of means we sell our souls like whores to demons we do not believe exist and the price is the natural self that is beyond our egos, all so that our economies can grow and so our moneys value, or egos inevitably become inflated and the business cycle goes on. (Beware of even your own familiars, especially if they have no other purpose but to service your ego) Once the agreement for indentured servitude is made, all the countries wealth or future creative potential is sent to pay off a never ending debt, or metaphysically we could say if you sold your soul to archons, you would lose your divine abilities to manifest your own will and so it is with corporations in general.

The bankers have used the properties of a consensus reality so that anyone who learns the truth will be ignored by all those who falsely believe the masses are above being fooled, they will ignore much of the truth so long as it is not part of the consensus reality. People are ignorant of how the economy runs and so it is not part of their reality, they agree money is real and that the monetary system is good and so that is the reality most people live in. However consensus reality can be manipulated by getting people to agree to ideas, all the while encouraging their consent to ignore key information which provides context. In this way it will remain a very real reality, in the same way memes or egos grow in a viral manner, things in this system tend to grow as much as possible whether or not it is healthy. Money has been given value by fiat, by decree, and people have faith in the dollar to create a reality in which it actually is worth something. As a unit of creative potential, paper money is in many ways the most powerful talisman in the world and used by billions of people every day, it is also often covered in symbolism. Some of this symbolism is concealed officially for purposes of making it hard to counterfeit, a crime which is itself an interesting insight into consensus reality and a possible tactic of wretches who do not respect the law. Yet in this way each dollar bill is a prayer to the gods of material greed such as Mammon.

Since money is the unit by which economic systems purport to create industrialized reality, we as slaves to this system have willingly surrendered our power over to a very few people in exchange for a few creature comforts in the short term. Through taxes, mortgages, inflation, credit cards, religious tithes, and some few mega corporations like GE and Oil Companies and general car expenditures, people surrender most of their creative ability to a very few people. All the while the workers sell their time, their life, their creative potential for next to nothing in terms of their total output within the larger system. We are being harvested and we are thought of as no more than animals to them, soylent green is made from money, it is inked with the blood of the worker and sold back to them literally on interest. All you have to do is look at the wealth distribution in the world and it is plain to see wealth and power flows up the hierarchy and that they in fact wouldn't be on the top of the pyramid if it did not flow to them. The idea that anyone could believe otherwise is completely baffling to me and yet few are hated more in America than the people who discredit the American dream.

These are the various ways in which the system has got us to consent, “oh well I have a family to support.” “I have payments to make so I can't go and spend time making positive change in the world.” “Gee I don't like what this president is doing but I need to put food on the table so I will stay quiet, besides I don't want to miss the big game.” Saying nothing is consent by default, you choose your priorities and so long as consumerism is your choice you consent to the consumer system. By willingly digging ourselves into debt, playing their games and paying for our enslavement, our creative potential metaphorically goes to manifesting workers being raped violently up the ass and all we can manage to think is, “I better let them put that butt plug up there further because I need to keep up appearances within society.”

Do you value freedom more than a meagre income? Many would say yes and yet they continue to passively consent to their slavery. This consent is further acquired through the media by indoctrinating us into being consumers as well as spreading government fear mongering in order to justify wars and further debts. This media is generally funded by advertisement, that is the more people consent to watch a TV show or something, the more focus and metaphysical energy a commercial acquires and so the more that show and product can manifest physically. When a person watches the news passively and sees an act of government or some injustice, they may get mad and consciously not consent to those actions. However, if they do not act, out of laziness, fear or because they would rather keep their comfortable life of servitude, they are in fact showing the universe they consent to being ruled and so that reality continues to be created. You can't expect others to save you and so by waiting to be saved you consent to your victimization and create that reality; this is all the more true if you do not make the effort to educate yourself as to possible solutions to the problems of the world. Your actions, or how you spend your time is the true reflection of your values, whether or not you are just trying to make a living, if you value ignorant subordination then that is the world you will help to manifest.

The more power the rulers have, the more they use it to encourage people to continue being ignorant, the more people are ignorant, the more they will consent to the solutions the rulers offer. This inevitably means surrendering more power to the rulers who will use that new power against them, creating a kind of business cycle of tyranny. All this and they get many of us to consent into smiling along, all the while they are incredibly unhappy as all this happens, but then you can't let others think you are different, “they might think you are weird or something”.. no one could love someone who isn't happy with the way things are. Through fear and lies, consent and general conformity is achieved and people have faith in the system that is killing them and everything on this planet, so then this is real black magick, and they are unquestionably good at it.

Perhaps at one time it was argued that gold based economies were more equitable, this metal which is sought after by the puffer Alchemists, which is hoarded by some today in heavily guarded fortress's being the true wealth of this world. Yes gold has a tangible value to many, but the majority of it lies now unseen even by those who claim to own it, protected by devices to keep it safe because those who were handed over control of the gold have lost any real understanding of what it means. That we should go back to a gold based economy is something which has been argued by many in this field of research, but many have also argued convincingly against it and we must understand the reality that gold is also easily controlled and currently mostly owned by pretty well these same plutocrats. True there is short selling within the stock market, were a person can profit from the demise of a stock's value, which is essentially valuing the failure of others, but this is an action reliant upon a system that is inherently elitist and corrupting. As long as we resign ourselves to live in this supposed laissez faire style “free market” we will invariably return to monopolies of the few controlling the many and hiding their gold for fear of it being plundered and lost by those who they deem unworthy of its possession. Even with gold, alliances are made by elites with similar goals, cartels and insider trading create economic bubbles (to pool the masses wealth in order to farm it) and price fixing (to destroy what is suppose to be competition within a free market) in order to gain control of the market. When you control value itself, you control the means of production, or what is created within reality, you also control what people will have to pay or give up in order to be part of that reality. These tactics allow a small number of people to control the masses, and what's more the masses consent to it because they are so ignorant they dream of being an economic "success." Another alternative that has been suggested is the state run economy, that of purely communist values and while there is some merit to some of these ideas, it really is just the same shit in a different pile, the state cannot be trusted to run the economy of the people and its oligarchs would have perhaps even more control over us than the bankers.

The ultimate goal of a free society can only truly be accomplished through the total abolition of the monetary system and the application of an Anarchist society. Only when this is accomplished will people really be able to wisely invest their time and see true profits from their work, only in an Anarchist economy will we truly know the value of something. A true economy will not based on how much we are willing to pay for something according to some artificial value system imposed on us, but by experiencing directly its results upon our lives and the lives of others. In an Anarchist economy (for lack of a better word) there will be no property as we understand the term, (though people will have some possessions so long as they are using them) in this way all things will have the value inherent within itself, but we will understand that this value is not for us alone, and that the real value of these things will be that they belong to all to use or not as they like.

If money is a kind of talisman or sigil trying to symbolize some kind of ideal but arbitrary objective value, through capitalism the true intention for money sigil is to create individual personal profit, which invariably manifests through capitalist exploitation. What we need is a means of ensuring people have what they need and want, but through money sigils we only manifest the profit of those at the top of the hierarchy, we only manifest the values associated with the intentions behind the symbol, the values of the dollar. Especially since they are used unconsciously, the values of this talisman are capitalist and corporate values, not human or individual values with very real subjective needs, but values which create the illusion of wealth distribution through a side effect of commodities being produced. While I cannot justify imposing communes on everyone, contrary to capitalist propaganda it is undoubtedly true that when your intention is personal profit, (which is an inherent part of capitalism) then your economic system will not manifest the greatest number of people getting what they need as well as if that was your intention. Even if socialist economies are not as productive as capitalist ones, our over production is killing us and this planet, not to mention manual labour is about to be made obsolete by technology.

What we need is not a gold based economy but a philosophers stone based economy where we are all allowed to determine our own values, create our own methods of exchange, our own systems of barter and gift economies in whatever way we as individuals deem valuable. We need a society where things are produced not for personal profit but for the intention of creating the greater benefit of all and thus we transmute anything we wish into veritable gold. In this way all things will be seen for their real worth, their use and effects no longer abstract "commodity fetishism" but things which fulfil concrete needs. While gold has some practical uses in electronics and art it is really just as arbitrary a unit of wealth as fiat currency, it may even be easier to control and monopolize since there is a finite amount of it, as oppose to wealth which is created by decree. When governments or banks can monopolize the issuing of currency they monopolize the sigil of value as an abstract reality, and so largely centralizing control of all wealth, all values to be determined by whatever institutions or corporations the people have faith in. Paper or better yet trees have many more practical uses than gold, yet paper money is also clearly useful for controlling people, we cannot change the fact that all monetary systems are just barter systems with a fetishized product that we give artificial value to, so while some small level of individual trade is probably inevitable (and not that harmful) instead of trying to create a fair barter system we should learn to share and distribute. No more should corporations be allowed to rule over us based on how many rich people determine it's in their personal interest to invest in "shares" of that company of oppressors.

Capitalism and the stock market is a system centred around the concept that the value of something is really determined by how many people you can get to compete for it and it is this poisonous idea that sets the stage for all kinds of greed and manipulation. Some argue for Anarcho-capitalism and compared to what we have now it may work in some ways, that is if there are limits to private property, or by allowing anyone to create their own form of currency, or perhaps even devising a currency based on perishable food items. However even with Anarcho-capitalism it's intention is still to create personal profit at the expense of others, rather than to care for other individual organisms and so it will still manifest hierarchies, competition and alienation. To me Anarcho-capitalism is a horrid contradiction created by people who still value individual greed more than community and truth. Competition is the law of the jungle and is essentially contradictory to the notion of a society; however forced communes have no value for an individual and is doomed to crumble under the weight of personal dissatisfaction and the tyranny of the mob. Without first doing the work to know thyself and what you value, you can hardly be satisfied by an authoritarian group demanding you work for them and conform to their standards and values. Communal sharing is ideal, but is only functional at meeting the needs of individuals when individuals are free to join or leave according to their will, luckily as I have said, manual labour is fast becoming obsolete.

Someone who hates people should be free to live alone by their own individual efforts, but only so long as they aren't inordinately destroying the environment and thus putting others at risk or otherwise oppressing them. Demanding the unwilling share the fruits of their labour with you is authoritarian, but so is hoarding obscene amounts of wealth, demanding everyone compete against each other, or use your currency or be dependent on your capitalist institutions. Clearly we need to stop believing in universally applicable forms of production and wealth distribution and instead look at individual situations as they arise, according to the individuals involved and the level of resources and labour required. Small scale individual possession of what you need to live is a good idea in many cases, but so is ensuring that everyone else has at least their basic needs. (and ideally more than that) Hoarding more food and goods than you can use while others are starving and in need is never justified, neither is expecting others in an Anarchist society to support you while you are capable of doing the work yourself. Even if you make all that you use yourself from scratch, given that the Americas were conquered brutally by genocidal war criminals, the idea that any individual person has a sole right to raw materials used to make these things is itself a rather authoritarian position. The notion of private property is just as arbitrary as that of money, so that even if you are an indigenous person somewhere, given that we are all children of the Earth, how can we really say any one person or even a group of people has a right to monopolize a chunk of nature which they did not create?

Value is subjective and must be determined by the individual and used for the whole of the world, those who seek to control a commodity are in turn controlled by their values or more specifically their ego desires. The price of shares does not really determine how useful a corporation is, only how many people are willing to use it as a vehicle for their investments to profit. In the same way the desires of the ego do not determine the actual value of its pleasures, only what reinforces its systematic growth throughout consciousness. Artificial scarcity is a reality directly related to the attempts of this system to make certain things seem more valuable than they are, to drive up the price for its own profits and expansion. Just as surely as capitalism is the tool of the selfish egos of the world to strengthen their position; the ego must always create artificial scarcity of happiness within the mindset of the individual, that is if it is to continue justifying its relentless demands for growth at the expense of all others. When desire and greed are made out to be the central principles of the economic system, then it is hardly surprising when human needs are left behind in order to fulfil the value systems of the few at the expense of the many. Just like corporate dominated governments, as the ego puts the self at the centre of its priorities over all, the power it acquires goes to our “head” and thus we fall in to a pit of ever deepening competition with each other for social status and private property through capitalism.

When an economy is based on self profit then the direct result is that all people suffer. Fractional reserve banking has allowed the bankers who run the economic world to claim they have much more money than they actually do so that they can lend it out to business's which fit their value systems. That is to say they are “investing” in these business's with value at some determined “interest” rate, the lower the interest, the less value the banks will get from the investment. Metaphysically we could say “interest” is the rate that banks will or desire the transaction, the rate which they are interested is the rate they estimate how much value is in it for them, how much they will make off the investment, how much they expect to get back from the magickal act. If something is not a benefit to them, such as creating products that set people free, then they will not invest in it.

I don't think it takes an economic degree to understand that this will inevitably cause problems and is dreadfully unfair to give people the power to create money out of nowhere. They have managed to trick us into giving them the ultimate power, to determine who gets the loans to create their own business, what “interest” rates those who deposit get when they work with them, that is to say how much extra money people get just for letting the banks hold onto their money. We have given them all this power because they originally had more money than us and somewhere safe to keep it and what is more we did not question how the poverty created by the system, also creates the thieves who steal from us and so make us need to hide our wealth. From this the bankers got to take a look at all the money and make decisions about how it should be invested for their own best interests and not that of the people in general.

Banks acquire more and more wealth from investing their holdings in businesses; they buy stock in corporations in order to make money to make things “interesting” for those who place their money with them. This money as a sigilized unit of magickal energy is thereby used to feed and sustain corporate egregores or what is probably the most powerful manifestation of the archons. Through the centralized banking systems like the federal reserve, each bill of money is just that, a bill, it is a receipt that actually represents a portion of debt to which the country has taken out a loan in order to create that money. Each dollar then is a promise to pay a portion of your energy and creative abilities to the system which you may or may not hate, which is done through work according to corporate policies, schedules and values and which is in many respects ritualistic. In this way each bill is like a portion of the human soul or magickal will and as inflation goes up (the inevitable result of the fractional reserve banking system) we really have less value for our money, we see less of our soul in our money, for the work we do and paradoxically the more money must flow and the bigger the business cycle becomes. As interest is paid in money it is the rate of will which the banks can take from us when we are in debt to them, that is the higher the interest rate on our debt, the more will and work is required to pay back the debt. This is directly linked to the national debt, or the amount of the national soul that has been sold to the “devil,” the more of the national soul that is owned by private interests like banks, the more they can use the creative power or magick of that countries people for their own purposes.

Like with magick the more interest or the more emotionally invested you are in the working, (so long as it isn't fear) the more concentration and energy you will put into empowering your ritual or egregore. One way this is done is through bonds, the more interest on the bonds, the more people will invest their concentration and energy, but also the more a corporate egregore will pay out or manifest changes in reality. These monetary systems are the energy dynamics of the economic over mind we call the stock market, determining what becomes manufactured and who prospers, or to put it another way it determines what manifests in the world. The more people consent through money to empower a stock, or lend out a bond, the more powerful a corporation or government can become and the greater its ability to manifest change. With enough power one corporation can even buy out other corporate egregores merging or ruling it as a subsidiary, or in some cases transmuting the newly acquired assets in to gold. While at the top it is all cartels, corporations and banks do battle it out, trying to take over one another, using the law of the jungle (though in many ways they are much more ruthless than animals) as power is the only true value they recognize. Again it does not take an economic degree to see that survival of the fittest and might making right is not conducive to freedom, truth, equality or mental health and so instead we must consider things for what they are and not how much money we will get from it.

Through this banking magick organizations like the World Bank and IMF have turned most of the world into indentured slaves. Things become manufactured but the real price is the loss of power from externalizing the energy system and giving the power away to inhuman corporate and banking machinations, which all too often we do not really comprehend. The world runs on the capitalist system, that system is now dependent on the stock market and the “wizards of wall street” by which fake entities called corporations have made themselves our false gods. We sacrifice third worlders and our own lives and the natural world to these false gods for goods and services and so we have fallen into idol worship and have been made slaves of the golden “bull market” to the point we do not even realize it is us who is creating the power to make these “miracles” of the modern world happen.

Money as a general purpose talisman is a sigil symbolizing our will, we will things that we value, that we consent to and so by giving money to corporations, or by buying stocks we show the universe we value these things at certain rates collectively, that it is our will that they manifest more strongly in the physical according to these rates. The higher the value of a stock, the more people want shares in that stock, meaning the more competition there is for having the profits generated by whatever it manifests. This means that for high value stocks, only those most powerful wizards of wall street, those with the most money, the most sigils of willpower or value can participate in the rituals of empowerment. Whatever corporations you invest in or pay money to, you have invested your own energy in it, if you own shares in a corporation, you may possess those shares, but in a very real way that corporation possesses you. The corporations values become your values, its goals, your goals, its actions your responsibility. At the same time, the more demand for a corporation, the more it will expand and eventually manifest letting more and more people add to the egregore. In capitalism money is the most important factor in acquiring power and so those with the most money have the most power. It is of course the bankers who have the most money and in terms of central banks they even print it. Money has in many ways become the stock of a country, or at least the product of a countries central bank which allows it to compete on the global stage for creating the world according to the consensus of the banking cartels. These cartels have legally gotten the consent of billions of people to give them the power to run the world as they see fit, so that the more people use their money, the more powerful the sigils become.

When you hold your money in a bank this is like investing energy into an egregore, what you put into it is the principle and depending on the interest rate, your ability to increase in creative potential will draw to itself more creative potential. (You have to spend money to make money) Magick works in the same way in that the more energy you put into your egregore or familiar, the more it can create reality, the more it creates reality the more you will see the entity as reality, the more gnosis or energy or profit you will be able to feel confident investing without fear or doubt, that is you will be able to put in more money sigils in to your future rituals. (We can potentially gain interest from banks) Banks work to harness your creative potential when you put your money with them and they use it for their own profits, to control consensus reality (as you are consenting to let them hold and use your money) in a way that they can horde more and more and hook more and more people into dependence on them. As the stock market reflects the values of society, investment of money reflects the manifestation of those values into consensus reality through magick.

To put it another way, the stock market is like the collective mind, or lower astral plane and the various stocks represent thought forms and egregore archon corporations which manifest physical reality. Not all egregores are necessarily parasitic, for example there are co-ops and credit unions, but when run hierarchically with no motive other than profits and power, they become archons. This may be hard to believe but more than a few corporations have at least dabbled in astrology in an attempt to get an edge while trading on the stock market and you can even look up courses on astrology for stock traders. When we realize that the "astral" refers to stars we can see that they are really looking to see what energies will manifest from the market fluctuations of money sigils. Stock brokers are also like wizards in that when trading they making hand signals or "mudras" to show what they want to buy, chanting CORN! CORN! CORN! GOLD! GOLD! GOLD! Thus they manifest things, though now they often use computer programs like servitors to make multiple transactions in a fraction of a second. However this analogy holds only when brokers work independently and with their own money in their own investments, because when a stock broker works for a corporation they are more like a priest in that corporations religion, following its policies and procedures like scriptural dogmas and ritual procedures. The more successful a investment firm or bank, the more investors will have confidence in that egregore, but also the more money sigils their long term investors have, the more they will be confident letting those brokers invest it. As the stock market is like the astral then, stock brokers/priests and corporations of the various religions compete to answer the prayers or thought forms of investors, to help people to get their prayers answered and manifest the actions of the various stocks people invest in. Profits are like the energies that feed the spirits who help answer prayers and so the more profitable a bank or firm, the more magical power it will acquire. This increase in profit thus means the corporation spirit will be better able to manifest reality according to will, so the more it can then answer peoples prayers and so the more profit it will get, creating a loop of self fulfilling prophecy.

If all people knew how to invest and did so themselves, either alone or ideally in Anarcho-syndicalist co-ops etc, then we would all be wizards, we would all gain confidence in our own abilities and get more profits in the process. Instead we rely on banks and brokers to invest for us, which is like archons and priests acting as intermediaries to the spirit world and tricking us in to thinking we are not qualified to run our own lives. The reason people do not do this is because they are filled with fear, they lack the training and confidence to compete with the archon corporations even in co-ops or credit unions. What's more, people lack the motivation and will to learn these things and so consent to ignorance instead of manifesting sustainable independence. It is not profitable for a priest to teach magick any more than it is profitable for a stock broker to teach his clients how to invest without him and so as individual profit is the intention rather than mystical union with nature, we are made dependent on external forces. This is not completely the workers fault, as the archon corporations have in turn set up cartels and monopolies in order to destroy their competition and otherwise perform acts of black magick and to ensure that the middle and lower classes never acquire enough "capital" or consciousness to be serious investors. The archons have done their best to make the spirit world seem as confusing as possible, to use jargon and methods which allow them to be more successful predators and to take away peoples confidence in their own abilities. So for an example in the religious world, Christianity puts out a fear of hellfire and demons so that no one will be brave enough to try and interact with the spirit world, except through their priestly intermediaries. In this way the only hope of equality is Anarcho-Syndicalism, which if working properly would be akin to mystical union of people in various cults or groups. While a mass Anarchist uprising would be great and the equivalent of total enlightenment, even in a pacifist form of syndicalists taking over the economy, we could gain collective enlightenment and it would be a method that is more in line with metaphysics. That is eventually as people became more aware of economics they would no longer feel the need to have money at all and instead would have confidence in the world around them and their communities and this would be mystical union with all of nature. To make a Gnostic metaphor, as Sophia is in all nature as sparks of light, nature is Sophia in time/space and her light is the source of all life, so then collectively we could say her light would be the "treasury of life." So then I ask you, how much interest do you take in the principles you hold in the treasury of life? Will you sell out in exchange for the quick and easy profits that come with "short selling" nature and the future generations of this world? Do you prefer the fiat lux of the demiurge and his artificial consumer reality?

If we were to all hypothetically liquidate all of our assets, so that all people must participate in an ongoing worldwide liquidation, all things would become for sale. If all things were always for sale and hoarding money became illegal, then all creative potential would return to the people and a new society might take shape that is much more Anarchistic. People would eventually learn to organize society without the monetary system as it would become pointless. I cannot say for certain this would happen and I am not saying it is a viable tactic, but from a perspective of metaphorical metaphysics it has some interesting implications. That is a totally liquid economy is a monist economy, an economy where no one has attachment to desires, an economy where people are forever looking to get others what they need in an integrated system. Physical property is like holding stock in the physical world or “real world” (more real than the monetary system anyway) and so if we liquidate all assets constantly, property would become obsolete and there would be maximum cash flow in the world which is potentially very beneficial for the economy. (Untapped resources are even more real, they are resources still in potential form, still alive, still forests etc, still as nature made it.) People “sell” whatever they aren't actually using at that time and “buy” what they might need for a time and in this way it is possible that money itself would become seen as redundant and that the leap can be made to a true Anarchist economy. However this could create a lot of building and creation of new goods to the point that is environmentally even more disastrous than what we have and so we would have to put our money into things that actually help us for once, that is things in line with our true will. With everyone always spending money and people not being able to horde anything, the money would give people what they want and then it could eventually go to values other than morbid consumerism. The creative energy lines restored we could really have some consent as to how reality should be and the pursuit of truth would become the new goal instead of the pursuit of profits and that would be a whole new kind of world.

It is from Mesopotamia, Sumeria and Babylon in which we find the origins of banking, and if you doubt that they had any metaphysical ideas behind what they were doing you should know that it was in the temples themselves that the first banks were run. If you do not believe that priests do not practice magick then you have no idea what a prayer is, in fact it is probably true that all of temple life had ritual and specific symbolic meaning, all of which would be understood as a kind of magickal practice. It is the modern day equivalents of these Sumerian banks which have made countries dependent on centralized fiat bankers, though they may not understand the roots of their own practices, they are the ones who have cast a spell over most of the people in the world. The concept of currency first developed in Sumeria with clay tokens used to represent debts to the temple in the form of grain which was stored in the temple as the first bank. Although no one really knows exactly how or where metal coins first came about, some say the shekels of Sumeria were metal coins others say clay tokens, but in either case they were used as receipts for a deposit of a bushel of wheat and had strong ceremonial and magickal associations. Keep in mind that early coins would generally have been melted down to form new coins under different governments, or different artworks etc and so much of the exact history of this is hard to make out.

When a farmer paid their tribute or taxes to the temple in wheat they did so in units of weight called a “shekel,” this then became associated with coins because in return the farmer received a receipt in the form of a talisman. Over time a shekel became known as a coin and this in turn would be used in exchange for the services of the temple priestess's. These priestess's would then engage in sexual fertility rites to ensure that the farmers would have good harvests in the future and be prosperous in general. These were the priestesses of Inanna, later known as Ishtar and in some traditions all women were obligated to act as a priestess for at least one sex act before marriage. While sacred sexuality is widespread in the Pagan world, as religion became institutionalized it no doubt became less about honouring the life giving feminine and became more about patriarchal power mongering and prostitution. As owning a receipt/talisman was as good as having paid the wheat taxes to the temple, it is not hard to see that such items would eventually be traded among the farmers, rather than huge amounts of grain and that the meaning of the currency would become more secularized for the practical purposes of trade as we understand it today. Weights of silver or gold in bar form called “talents” would also be used to measure the wheat on the scale and so would also come to be represented by the clay talismans or metal coins, though for practical purposes would generally be stored in the temple. The etymology of the word “talent” shows it originally meant will or desire and so is like a unit of desire, a unit of weight by which coin talismans are measured to make sure they are the right size and so even if clay tokens were used, gold and silver still played a vital role in the economies. The word talisman is etymologically derived from "telein" meaning to "perform (religious rites), pay (tax), fulfil," from telos "completion of a cycle, (farming) end, tax" and so while I came to this understanding from the cactus spirit, because money fulfils all the definitions of a talisman, I later found out it is literally the same.

Another theory of the origin of metal coins as we know them were those made of electrum, a mixture of gold and silver minted in the Greek colonies of Turkey, they were used as ceremonial tokens or talismans in the temples to be used as offerings to the gods. The reason gold and silver are thought to be valuable is precisely because of their spiritual value as metallic symbols of the sun and moon, these metals were thought to possess the energies of these astrological bodies and so have magical properties. (This is why people threw coins into wells while making a wish) From my research however the Greeks learned of coins from the Lydian's, a people whose monetary and religious customs were very similar to the cult of Ishtar. The word “merchant” is actually derived from the same root as Mercury, the Roman god of merchants and travelling sales people, as well as thieves. The word “money” itself is derived from the word “Moneta” a title of the Roman Goddess Juno, whose temple basement (or close by) served as the mint for the coins of the “monetary” system, in fact her temple was the first Roman mint and the word “mint” itself is also derived from her name. Today people make a distinction between coins and talismans, but in the ancient world there was no distinction between secular and sacred and so we can say quite literally money was used to buy favour with the gods. This practice was corrupted by an institutionalized priest class who used these tokens as a general purpose talismanic offering, one that could be used to grant materialistic prayers through the market. Eventually this made people dependent on that system for their economic productivity and so since pretty well all professions were associated with various gods, their spirituality became increasingly corrupted as well. Not only would almost all jobs have their deities, some deities taught multiple professions, so for example Hermes was a god of writers, scholars, Alchemists, travellers, thieves, merchants and musicians. However it is crucial to understand that each profession would have their own specific traditions in dealing with their respective deities, and while there are overlaps and mixes, each group is generally distinct and not connected any more than a merchant and musician practice the same skills or procedures. (Not to mention the other forms of the religion of Hermes, which do not correspond to professions at all.)

While the exact nature of this transition is unknown, (which is not surprising given the intrinsic corruption and conspiratorial nature of monetary systems) the Sumerian meme of currency whether as metal coins or clay tokens had undoubtedly spread and evolved. Though the concept of currency has sprung up independently in a variety of places in the world, that it could be clay tokens or sea shells just shows that all money is fiat and as Chaos magicians know, just about anything can function as a sigil. When currency was put in terms of the Greek state religion these metal talismans became the common form of currency for a wide variety of cultures and the merchant class was eventually able to facilitate international trade in a much bigger and standardized way.

Once again I have found that etymology gives insight into the Occult nature of commonplace institutions and cultures in this modern world, which no doubt uses purposely confusing jargon to keep the uninitiated masses from understanding the curse which has been put upon them. “Interest” is “what one has a legal concern in," inter -between esse – essence or between essence suggesting a focus on forms that contain the essence rather than spiritual things, the more interest we have in something, the more we desire to “know” it. A “trust” is a cartel a "businesses organized to reduce competition" in that when the various parties agree to join forces they must have trust in each other for the conspiracy to work. "Conspire" is "to agree, unite, plot," com "'together" + spirare "to breathe" to share the same spirit of intention or plan, in a sense they are combining their energies perhaps even covertly creating an egregore corporation to achieve their will. "Credit" comes from "credere" meaning to trust, or to believe, credo faith, that is money as credits, based on debt to banks is valuable only because we have faith in it, likewise the banks only lend to people they have faith in. When we say we bank on something, we mean we have confidence in it, as in we are banking on the stock market to distribute wealth fairly. Confidence in the market, in the value of money is what gives it power and while it is commonly meant in terms of having trust in something, there are also confidence men, or con men and so the word also has a long history of meaning "assurance based on insufficient grounds." By which I mean that the whole economic system is a big con, set up to trick people in to believing the worth of something which is pretty much worthless, so that you will become indebted to them, or render goods and services to them for their own profit. "Principle" is the initial investment before profits, or the original debt before interest.

When you invest in a capitalist economy you are consenting to use your "capital" (head) to give up your principle(s) out of self "interest" giving "credit" (faith) to a system which creates value by "decree" (fiat) to strengthen the "trust" of the things we "hold stock in," or on which we "bank." Through our confidence (banking) in the power of decree (fiat) we create belief (credit) to create great "interest" for our trust (cartel) in the "matter" of Juno Moneta (money) imprisoning us in our desire to create "bonds" to our body. (Corporation) It has so occurred to me that money as a symbol of material manifestation would in many ways be in the Gnostic world view a talisman with the intention of making a soul consent to material illusions and so ignore the true reality which is equality and Anarchy, symbolized by wisdom being the essence of all things, that true value which is trapped in the forms. Empowered by the money sigils, interest is the measurement of desire for them to increase their focus and zoom in to the universal fractal according to the will of the investors, leading us towards the archon's black abyss of endless debt and materialism.

At one time it was not uncommon for a city state to have its own currency, while there were a few empires with standardized currencies, as time went on there were many little city states which were isolated and independent and had their own patron deities and own economies. The creation of money was often institutionalized by the priest class as it was understood that control of the production of money, meant control of the economy and so was in many ways superior to military control, so it was the issuing of currency was left to the highest "authority" being the theocratic institutions. In these cases metal was not always common, but in fact often materials were chosen specifically because they were so common that no outside influences could come in and artificially create inflation or deflation through the manipulation of the supply of limited materials. (such as by hoarding or flooding the market with gold and silver etc) Fiat currencies, if not run by a private bank such as the federal reserve were harder to manipulate by foreigners as they were not subject to the same international market values of metal, however fiat money systems could be manipulated in other ways as is the case today, or in ancient Rome. This middle eastern banking religion would learn to manipulate these markets as well and may have actually been the first to create a fiat system under the legendary King Midas, which is reflected in his myth in which he can turn all kinds of things in to "gold" or money. As it turns out fiat currency doesn't work any better for us than it did for Midas who couldn't eat, thus symbolizing his economies collapse and as everything around him turned to "gold" we learn a valuable lesson about greed and the monetization of the natural world. (The story of his daughter turning to gold could be symbolic of him prostituting her) So as fiat systems can be infiltrated just as the gold standard, we can see that all money systems are corrupt and corrupting and all forms of money lead to control of the economy by banking elites.

As the idea of currency and civilization spread, Babylon with its advanced financial tactics and procedures acquired more power by infiltrating or outright conquering foreign city states by various means and spreading their monetary religious practices. In the process Babylon would often overturn the more equitable economic practices of the patron deity of the city state and co-opt temples with one of many syncretic forms of Inanna. It is quite important to differentiate these monetary aspects of the goddess, from their common forms with which the people knew them, while certain theocratic priests were certainly up to many shenanigans, it is clear that for the lower classes these goddess's had very different meanings. There were a huge variety of forms for the deities, many of which were contradictory as there was little to no orthodoxy or fundamentalism outside the highly specialized theocratic cults of which the commoners were obviously largely ignorant of. So then for example most people were not really worshipping Juno Moneta, even if they were a devout follower of Juno herself and this is much the same for other monetary deities. Because of this we cannot blame the goddess for the misdeeds of some priests, people were much freer to worship in their own way so long as they paid tribute to the theocracy, the myths and rituals were created by the poets, people and magicians and so it is institutions which are to blame, rather than any particular spirituality. Over the centuries the public image of money and plutocratic banking practices became increasingly secular to distract from its obvious antagonism to spiritual values and allow it to openly infiltrate a wider variety of religious cultures in a much more palatable international form, until eventually it became what we know today. While the details are hard to figure out it isn't hard to see that international gold and silver merchants spread their form of currency so that they could control international trade and market prices and so essentially control the economies and militaries of those regions. They wanted a one world currency since it would essentially be a spell that would allow them to control the world, and so many amalgamations of deities were created from the various city states, which in many ways can be seen like two bank corporations merging.

It's important to realize that in the ancient world methods of administration were still in many ways primitive and that the younger civilizations had less advanced techniques and that bureaucratic knowledge (theocratic black magick) was far from evenly spread among the various cultures. Like today, economic and government procedures were the key to a country maintaining power, secret theocratic religions were top secret methods of control and any kingdom which knew the best administrative and economic procedures could become more powerful. So it is by gaining initiation in to a variety of powerful civilizations theocracies, a group could combine the most important methods to create the ultimate theocracy.

Today we see the images of this banking religion everywhere, the statue of liberty being the Masonic goddess named Columbia, a dove goddess who is really a hybrid of the more ancient banking goddess's whom are themselves the theocratic forms of what are generally Earth/Venus fertility goddess's. From my research regarding ancient coins and mints, some of the most notable are Ishtar, Isis and Venus or Aphrodite, but also Juno, Libertas, Cybele, Artemis, Athena, Hekate, Anahita and Asherah, though a whole gamut of other minor goddess's are involved. (I should also mention Lilith who is associated with Ishtar and is perhaps responsible for some of the owl symbolism, as on the American dollar bill and at Bohemian Grove and the Streets of Washington DC, though Athena is another possible source.) Since these are clearly not inherently "evil" deities, many of whom have links to prehistoric times and tribal people with communal economies, we have to understand the fact that bankers only worked with their own forms of these deities and in their own ways. That while these goddesses share many traits and symbols indicating a unified religion for the money mongers, we should understand that they are in these theocratic forms co-opted by capitalists in their demented religion of power and consumption, worshipping "the mother of tyranny" to spread their Babylonian death cult. Money today is often green quite possibly because green is the colour of astrological Venus, or all fertility and Earth goddess's, just as pennies and many other ancient coins are made from copper, the metal of Venus.

Even Sophia as a syncretic goddess of all goddess's has links to Ishtar which due to many Gnostics anti money stances and communal proto-Anarchist living must be an uncorrupted form of the original mysteries which religion is supposed to represent. The forms of this goddess and the mysteries has time and again been co-opted by archons and authoritarian assholes, forcing the rebels and their interpretations underground, even though it was the communal tribal people who created the religions in the first place. In some cases the theocracies would outlaw public access to entheogens (at least outside of the mystery schools they infiltrated and eventually destroyed) and so they monopolized the context of myths so that they can institutionalize their own interpretations in a kind of meme war, one which has apparently been going on since the dawn of civilization. Given the persecution Gnostics faced we can see the more radical schools were engaged in a revolt against the empire and theocracies in general, but also ancient capitalism, as seen through their antagonism to the archons like Astaphanos or Astaphe, a form of Astarte or Ishtar. (their otherwise confusing view of Hekate as an archon could also be explained by her associations with the state mint and the Chaldean theocracy.)

The Greeks learned of coins and economics from the king which was called a “tyrant” in Lydia (Turkey) and many middle eastern societies and he was essentially the head pimp in an organization of conscripted prostitutes and eunuchs, to ensure the king's ability to make the land fertile through sex magick. That is while originally the farmers got to participate in the fertility rites, as things became more theocratic the king functioned as the high priest and did the ceremonies for all the people. There were many versions of this sacred kingship however and in some times and places if things went badly or nature appeared unhappy, the king would be sacrificed, sometimes quite regularly! In these cases such as in the Celtic and Norse societies, the people remained more free and the original Pagan religions were less corrupted as the people, represented by a democratically elected king would be married to nature represented by the priestess's. In this way the corruption of the banking institutions was gradual, with the kingship becoming a hereditary position and human sacrifice being relegated to other more “common” people.

In fact the Lydians, in present day Turkey had been trying to colonize Greece at least economically for some time and there are hints of this even in the story of Troy which among other things seems to me to be an allegory of the Greeks fighting off the Phrygian or Trojan economic system. (Phrygians being closely related to allied with the Lydians) Since the banking system is a pyramid scam it always needs to expand and so the bankers saw in Greece a means to continue their addiction to profits and open up new markets. Troy had grown strong due to its tactical location on the Dardanelles allowing it to tax passing ships and become a centre of trade, really an ideal spot for a religion of capitalism to be located. We can thus interpret the story of the Trojan prince Paris judging the goddess's Aphrodite, Athena and Hera as him actually choosing which branch of the banking religion to make in to a central bank. All these goddesses have links to mints and coinage, but in Greece the temples of Aphrodite were also brothels and so as the closest version of Ishtar, she was chosen in this case. While the Trojans lost, eastern tyranny would come back time and again and Helen, among other things was a symbol of the Greek economy and sovereignty and was taken hostage and so the Greeks were forced to fight a war of independence from these middle eastern colonizers. The Greeks were successful and established a new sense of solidarity and nationality but as the centuries went on, eventually in 600-550 B.C. the Lydians succeeded in their economic expansion in to Greece when the Greeks started using electrum coins. This is “coincidentally” the same time of the Jewish captivity in Babylon, but also around 500 BC there were Celtic migrations in to England showing the bankers were expanding in general. Many of the Celts may well have been refugees however, as I said their governments were far less corrupted and capitalist than other peoples, however at the same time there was at least some metal fetishism going on and as Celtic culture would come to span from Turkey to Ireland, international traders would seek to infiltrate them.

From the Greeks, the rest of Europe would eventually learn about “civilization,” though there is a legend that Aeneas the Trojan prince and “son” of Venus founded Rome after the war. This would mean that when the Trojans failed to take over Greece economically, they escaped and colonized Italy instead, setting up the start of what would centuries later become the largely fiat empire we all know. We should also consider the wealthy prostitute Acca Larentia who is associated with a fertility goddess

Lares, (who is also associated with the hearth and the Roman theocracy) and who was said to be a famous benefactor for Rome early in its history. Roman prostitutes and especially Acca Larentia were called “Lupa” meaning “she wolf” which is a reference to the wolf who suckled Romulus and Remus, as Acca was in some traditions also their foster mother. The twins are also the descendents of Aeneas through their human mother Rhea Silvia and are the more commonly known founders of Rome. (Rome was founded some time from 753-728 BC) Acca Larentia came in to wealth through becoming an offering to Hercules, who is also in some cases the father of the twins and so strongly suggests some very old versions of the myth in which all these characters and motifs are related to each other. Rhea Silvia was forced in to being a virginal priestess of Vesta (goddess of the hearth) and so Acca Larentia could be different aspects (virgin and whore) of the same goddess or titan Rhea who is called the “Magna Mother” or “the mother of the gods” and is the wife of Chronos or Saturn. Among other things this strongly associates Rhea with another form of Saturn's wife, the goddess Cybele and so the banking religion of the Phrygians. This is a puzzling parallel to the Gemini Dioscuri Castor and Pollux, who are the brothers of Helen of Troy, at least until we remember that the bankers do not create the religions, they merely co-opt them. The Dioscuri are also depicted on coins and merchants in the zodiac fall under the domain of Gemini, a sign which is ruled by Mercury and so the Greek twins as through Helen also represented the Greek economy. The Dioscuri also had a place in Phrygian religion and were often depicted with Cybele and were credited with creating the war dance of her priests the Korybantes and so we can see quite clearly Rome was founded by Anatolian bankers. (Geminis aren't all capitalistic though and also represent writers such as me!)

While the time of the historical Trojan war is unknown and there are multiple layers of the city of Troy archaeologically, it is often dated around 1182 BC, though it could be a century older making it much too early to relate to Greek coinage. However given that Troy was sacked and burned numerous times over the centuries it is not unthinkable to suggest Homer could have added details relating to more recent events in his lifetime. Given that he was carrying on an oral history that was much older, he was likely adding details of the present to the mnemonic device to allow for the layering of new information and as such the correct linear chronology is not necessarily evident in a literal interpretation of the device. Greece and the near east struggled for so long with each other and even if the Greeks weren't using coins, they were mining precious metals for trade for centuries before Homer and as I said, these same “banker” theocrats used talents or bars of bullion as the precursor to coins. So in many ways accurate dating of these struggles would have been irrelevant for Homer and on one level at least, the whole war could be a metaphor for all this history and economic imperialism which had preceded Homer in the oral tradition. (Historians don't even know when Homer was alive or the Iliad written, but is sometime around the last half of 8th century.) We are given an important clue when we remember that Helen was a Spartan princess, with Sparta being famous for its anti luxury, anti capitalist tendencies it had banned silver and gold and developed an iron based fiat currency again around the late 8th century. This was under their most influential King Lycurgus and due to the iron being made worthless from its minting process with vinegar, Sparta was largely economically isolationist. As he is said to have lived before the date given for the invention of Lydian coins, it suggests that electrum coins are older than what historians believe, but as with all ancient history, accuracy in dates is often impossible. Helen then could be seen as a symbol for the Spartan economy, or at least the economy before coinage, just as other goddess's represented other cultures material wealth, which became infiltrated or taken over by Mesopotamian merchants who wanted to impose their gold and or silver standard and the kind of capitalist decadence the Spartans abhorred.

While there are multiple King Midas's and historians are again unable to have very accurate dating, one of the most important died somewhere from 695-676 BC meaning that during his life he would have been the king of Phrygia around the time of Spartan fiat, the founding of Rome and the writing of Homer's Iliad. This King Midas was married to the daughter of King Agamemnon of Cyme whom is said to be the descendent of Agamemnon of the Iliad, which must refer to the peace process after the war in which the Greek civilization mingled with the Phrygians. (Mythologically King Midas is said to be the son of Cybele) Before and after the war the Greeks outside of Sparta were still keen on international trade and the luxury goods that came with it and so opened themselves back up to the influences of international trade. With peace came the uniting of two royal families, but eventually also two economic systems, with the Greeks learning new economic techniques they Hellenized the monetary religion, but in the process took in their own Trojan horse creating the opportunity for a later more covert colonization by foreign powers. This King Midas is said to have killed himself when the Lydians took over, so it would seem that having betrayed the banking religion and revealing its secrets to the Greeks, people who would seek to create an independent monetary system, the bankers/merchants would have to dispose of him in order to reclaim Turkey. However as time went on they would come to successfully colonize Greece and eventually get them using electrum coins and so the Greeks would become subject to the manipulation of market prices for silver and gold.

When we put all these puzzle pieces together it looks as though the middle eastern banking religion to which Lydia, Phrygia and Troy belonged had a stranglehold like a Gordian knot around international trade and industry, especially the gold and silver market. In fact the "Gordian knot" was tied around an ox cart axle and as ox or cattle were the precursors to shekels or metal currency and a common symbol of the banking religion, it is strongly associated with Cybele and Ishtar and some other goddesses. Aristotle taught that usury was unnatural, and it appears his pupil Alexander would cut this knot with a sword, though much of this is beyond me and for any historian the exact nature of conspiracies must always be speculation. Alexander did continue to use metal currency and so even if he managed to control the issuing of coinage, given his suspicious death and his unusually generous treatment to the Jews, there is any number of ways this could have gone down, but one thing is clear, private interests will always be able to highjack the economy so long as currency and capitalism exist.

At any rate the first King Midas invented fiat currency or at least spread the banking religion before the Trojan war and had through his descendents in Troy used it to try and colonize Greece. The Phrygians and other Middle Eastern powers continued their attempts at economic imperialism throughout the centuries and when Spartans or other Greeks tried using their own form of fiat currency free of international control, this led to war. Sparta and the Greeks fought back and won their independence through what became generally symbolized as the "Trojan war" and their attempts to rescue "Helen," but when the Lydians took over Phrygia they managed to succeed in taking over the Greek economy, which from then on used gold and silver. After the fall of Troy, the other King Midas of the same banking religion managed to create a form of the cult which was acceptable to the Greeks and would open up trade to the Lydians and merchants further east, who in the end would kill him and take over Phrygia. (Though Sparta remained independent for some time thanks to the laws of Lycurgus) While the exact order of these details are hard to piece together given the lack of dates, it is undeniable big things were happening in the middle east and Greece economically and militarily in the 8th century around this banking symbolism and that this played an important role in the founding of "western civilization" through colonization.

Then there is the curious case of the Phrygian god Sabazios, with Priam King of the city state of Troy having in his youth aided the Phrygians (who were the same ethnicity) in their war against the Amazons and their matriarchy and religion to Cybele. The bankers had to take it over and destroy all trace of alternative interpretations to the goddess and so destroy any surviving matriarchal groups and non capitalist ways of life. Appropriation of symbols associated with freedom is one of the black magicians favourite tactics and so we see in some forms of Sabazios one of the more original undiluted forms of their patriarchal god. Sabazios has a number of Indo-European motifs as a god of horsemen carrying a staff he would be syncretized with Zeus and become known as Jove Sabazios and in some cases Dionysus, (father and son) but Sabazios was mixed even with Yahweh, or Jahve Sabaoth meaning "lord of hosts" or lord of armies showing that he is a militaristic god of conquest. (Jove-Jahve-Yahve-Yahweh-Jehovah) Though its roots lie much earlier, around 200 B.C. he would be honoured in the monotheistic religion of the Hypsistarians, a strange and mysterious kind of memetic bridge between Judaism and Paganism in which he was the “god most high.” This is a clear example among many of how the Abrahamic traditions are not so unique as they claim to be and that this is a bias idea based on the authoritarian supremacy of these cultures today, in the countries in which most scholars do their work. The two seemingly separate streams of Paganism and Abrahamic religions have often influenced each other and Christianity spread easily in Anatolia or Turkey in part thanks to its similarity with Hypsistarianism.

Not only this, but many important ancient writers and historians point out a connection between Dionysus and the Jewish god and it was commonly believed in Alexandria that Jews worshipped the Pagan deity. Plutarch explains that Jews were thought to worship Dionysus and that the day of the Sabbath was a festival of Sabazius and gives an interpretation of the Jewish “feast of the tabernacle” in which he highlights the Dionysian symbolism. Pliny mentions Dionysus founded the city of Beth-Shean which would come under Jewish control and archeological evidence supports the claim that the god was worshipped there well in to Roman times. What is more there is a famous Jewish “Yehud” coin which depicts a mix of Yahweh and Dionysus symbolism dating as far back the 4th century BC! (Dionysus gave Midas his power to turn things to gold and is often intimately connected with Cybele or Rhea) Tacitus too explained that Jews worshipped Dionysus in the Roman form of Liber Pater, though he did point out that Jewish religion is different, this is still very important given Liber Pater was corrupted by the Roman government and turned in to Emperor worship with what would become Christian symbolism. In Euripides' play “Bacchae” scholars have already noticed the cult of Dionysus has a lot of common terminology and symbolism with both Judaism and Christianity. While it is true there are many other Pagan influences on Judaism, again we have to remember that Judaism was for many years quite diverse and so different Pagan deities would have more influence with different Jewish people. It is true that Christianity probably has more in common with the cult of Dionysus than Judaism, but we should not ignore these accounts as we will see they provide a lot of important context for ancient history. Many modern historians like to ignore these accounts and it is on their part a monumental act of confirmation bias, for they see it as an insult to Judaism, where as I personally see it as an insult and corruption of the religion of Dionysus. Judaism's association with Dionysus may have more to do with the many parallels between the stories of Moses and Dionysus, with Yahweh being Zeus the father god. While according to Valerius Maximus, the Jews were exiled from Rome in 139 BC for trying to “infect” the locals with the cult of Jupiter Sabazius. So we can see that this banking cult has its hands in everything and has tried to create an Abrahamic one world religion for a very long time. (There is a myth of Dionysus being rejected by a king Lycurgus and though it is not in Sparta, some believe the Spartan King to be mythological and so this may explain the choice of name.)

As the gospel of Phillip says, “The archons wanted to fool us, since they saw that we were connected with the good. They took the name of the good and gave them to the not good, so with names they could trick and rope us to the not good. As though doing us a favour, they took names from the not good and placed them on the good. They knew what they were doing. They wanted to grab those of us who were free and make us eternal slaves.” This shows that we should not think like Christians, that all deities associated with the banking religion are “evil” but instead reclaim them for our own, seeing that they were co-opted specifically because they have credibility with the common people. The Gnostics it seems took back Dionysus for their own, in that the text “On the Origin of the World” they have an archon named Sabaoth, who upon learning of Sophia defects from the archons to the side of the aeons and so is placed above the archons in the seventh heaven.

Rome had a variety of currencies throughout its history, having been founded by the Phrygians they did not find in Italy much precious metal to mine and so were slow to get their empire going and colonize the area. The Phrygian aristocrats were content to rule as a monarchy until the local Etruscans invaded, which eventually provoked them and the people into rebelling and establishing the Republic which would primarily be led by the former aristocrats. Currency was introduced around the year 300

BC, though it was bronze bars and seems to have been free of foreign entanglement due to the new culture of freedom in Rome, though due to influence from Greece (which had long since been colonized by the bankers) silver coins began to be struck which opened the doors to ever greater foreign influence. From their Phrygian origins the Romans at least to some degree understood the potential problems of usury and so at different times had different limits for the maximum rate of interest. However these laws were often ignored and debt was a major problem that just got worse as time went on, these laws limiting interest also did not stop bullion traders from manipulating the markets and doing everything they could to encourage risky economic practices in their favour.

This banker infiltration reached a new climax with the coming of Julius Caesar, who in his struggle for power would issue coins of silver and other denominations featuring Venus and others with Aeneas strongly suggesting to me his bid to turn the Republic in to an empire was backed by the foreign bullion traders. Caesar actually claimed to be descended from these mythological figures and could well have Trojan blood in him, giving him an inside edge with the bankers of the east. Julius was also the first to put a living person's face on a coin (his own) and added his own fourth man to the tresviri monetales (moneymen) which had traditionally only been three, thus giving the tyrants a man in the mint and by the time of Augustus, it was clear that the ability to mint money, was central to the authority of the emperor. Caesar was no fool, indeed it would have been immediately obvious to him that he would need the support of the people who most influenced the economy if he was to be successful and in ancient Rome as in any time, this was the bankers and merchants of precious metals.

As I said, throughout its history Rome would have a variety of currencies, some based on precious metals, some more based on fiat, but as time went on Rome increasingly debased its currency to deal with the machinations of international bullion traders headed for India. Silver was always minted in Rome as it was the primary currency of the empire, though used primarily for paying soldiers as it was too precious for most day to day use and soldiers wanted something that was guaranteed to have value. (Fiat currency being backed only by government word) Different leaders would fight against this economic sabotage, others would buy in, the history of Rome is long and complicated with many conspiracies and coupes, but as it is money which makes the world go round, it is by studying the history of economics and currency systems that we can come to understand the real power behind the empire. While the importance of the economics of the empire are often understated by mainstream histories, it is clear that due to its international trade Rome was eventually taken over by the influences of foreign bankers and bullion traders until at last its economy lay in ruins.

The cult of Juno Moneta had many problems holding itself together, coins with graven Pagan images were a real problem for monotheistic Jews in the Roman empire, this was because they couldn't offer it at the temple in their own money religion and so this was a big reason for the Jewish rebellion. While Christianity is against usury I have seen many many hints to indicate its implementation as a state religion was in part an attempt to impose not only one god on all people, but also create one universal currency and take out the competition of other bankers. It's hard enough figuring out modern conspiracies and so this is obviously hard to find details on and much of it is beyond the scope of this book, but for example Pope Callixtus I has a very suspicious financial past. It is however clear that Jews could not make offerings at the temple with the wrong coin talismans and that financial corruption was rife in the empire and in the Jewish theocracy. Both Romans and Jews had their banks and mints founded by using the same symbolism, engaged in the same kinds of practices and both were heavily influenced by entrenched monopolies in the middle east when it comes to the precious metal markets, money changing and illegal financial practices and so in many ways they would have been infiltrated.

The Jewish form of this banking religion was centred in the temple, implemented originally through the goddess Asherah who would eventually be phased out by monotheists, but with the priests still maintaining the knowledge of the banking practices which came from this form of Ishtar. For example the Jewish holiday of Jubilees comes from the Babylonian banking religion which saw the need to relieve debts every once in awhile to avoid rebellions and create liquidity in the market for their indentured slaves. Naturally those who practised this tradition of Jubilees would have planned their finances around such a date and so closer to the Jubilee the rich would be less likely to loan out money and so it would have created a kind of business cycle. While it controlled both Romans and Jews through emperor Titus, the Herodian king, the Sadducees and Pharisees obviously failed to openly merge the Roman and Jewish corporations due to the issue of graven images and emperor worship. This resulted in military action being taken and the temple being destroyed in hopes of destroying Judaism and paving the way for a one world religion. While the Jewish temple was controlled by the money changers, or bankers and was a puppet government of Rome, there were plenty of fringe Jewish groups who hated it, there were also Samaritans who were never corrupted by the Babylonian captivity, Essenes and zealots who actually believed in some form of the religion and awaited a messiah to come and save them. Seeing the growing popularity of Gnosticism the bankers decided the only way to handle the uprisings (which were incredibly bloody) was to find a new way to assimilate the various dissidents and convert the Jews to a new empire wide religion. Christianity would be an attempt to make the Jews happy, all the while taking many ideas from their theocracy and imposing a more functional theocratic dictatorship which would they hoped, unite the crumbling empire and be more acceptable to the Jews and disparate Pagan people they had conquered.

Often overlooked is the fact that Rome was often at war, especially economically with the Persian empire or Parthians/Sassanid empires which seems to be the main base of this conspiracy. Asian “tyranny” was still trying to dominate Europe, though as today the bankers and metal traders were international and had no real nationalist allegiance. Eventually this banking conspiracy would play a big role in the economic collapse of both Sassanid and Roman empires, playing them off against each other to strengthen their dependency on banks. The governments becoming increasingly crippled by corruption, inflation and the bankers control of money, these empires then had their economies held hostage by private interests. Eventually the people had enough, economic troubles along with the Jewish rebellion would cause unrest leading to what I believe was a Gnostic bank revolt, which would be co-opted by Rome in the form of Christianity. Remember many Gnostics lived communally and would not have seen a need for money at all, in fact the text the “Secret book of John” it specifically say that gold, silver, money and coins were invented by the archons to enslave us, not to mention the Gnostics were against usury and tax and toll collectors. The story of Jesus overturning the tables of the money changers is a reference to the Gnostic antagonism to the banking system, which makes even more sense when we remember that many of the first Gnostics were of Jewish ethnicity. Usury was legal in the Roman empire, but due to cultural reasons was not as commonly practised as it was in Babylon and so the bankers relied more on controlling the supply and demand of gold, silver, fiat currency and the politicians of Rome in general.

While Christianity was corrupted Gnosticism, the desire of citizens for freedom from economic enslavement was very real and after a few hundred years of complicated and shadowy and admittedly altered history, gradually Christianity twisted enough Gnostic teachings that it gained enough aristocratic acceptance and Constantine restored the gold and silver standard. (Though some Gnostic groups may have called themselves Christians it was all very unorganized and contradictory until Constantine.) While the Christians outlawed usury and the cult of Moneta and this does not sound like something the bankers would do, as I said usury wasn't the main method of control in Rome and by Constantine's time it would be clear that the empire was falling apart. Measures were taken in case the empire collapsed and the overall benefits of Christianity to the theocracy outweighed the desire to maintain the overt symbolism of the banking goddess tradition and so instead they would be content with using Mary. So due to the rebellion the bankers needed to maintain the illusion of a legitimate change in their practices and so reinstated precious metal currency so that even if the empire collapsed, any one using it would still be controlled by the international gold merchants which still held a lot of power.

Another side effect of the diaspora was that as Jews were spread across the empire, in the now Christian Europe they would eventually become the only people legally allowed to practice usury, which of course greatly strengthened the racist stereotype of all Jews being bankers. However banking as I have shown is obviously not a practice that is part of race but part of religion, a religion which many ethnic Jews were against, (hence the Gnostic rebellions against the puppet government and the Romans) the old testament even prohibits usury to other Jews but like slavery it is OK to do to the goyim. Given that the old testament says so many racist things like (Deuteronomy 15:6) “for the lord your God will bless you as he has promised, and you will lend to many nations but will borrow from none. You will rule over many nations but none will rule over you” it can be easy to see why bigoted Jewish usurers would be hated. Parts of Deuteronomy were actually interpreted by some as commands by god to lend at interest to goyim, others of course were just greedy. (See Sifre to Deuteronomy section 116 to see this is intended quite literally and section 263 regarding Deut 23:20 and also 113 regarding Deut 15:3 to get the Jewish interpretation of this, as it clearly states this is a “positive commandment” IE “god” demands Jews lend at interest to gentiles!) This is far from the only example of elitist or racist language in the old testament and so we can see in Isaiah 61:5-6 “And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers. But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.”

While this theocracy comes from Babylon, it spread to the Jews under one of the gods from the Canaanite pantheon named El, a god who is closely associated with Saturn, who as I said is the husband of Rhea or Cybele in the other forms of the banking cult. The message of El to Abraham in Babylon was that he should be honoured above all other gods, not that he was the only god, but the most important and with total authority over all creation. Since the god of Abraham was but one of a larger pantheon, nor was Abraham the first to really know of this god, we can see that the banking religion is far older than what we think of in Judaism. We can see that Yahweh or El is connected to Saturn in many ways, for example the “sabbath” is on Saturn's day (Saturday) and in fact the Hebrew word for Saturn is Shabbathai from which we get the word sabbath. A variety of other symbolism and character traits are shared between Yahweh and Saturn and this is even more interesting when we realize that in Rome, the treasury was in the temple of Saturn as he was a god of wealth. While Juno Moneta's temple was the mint, Saturn's was the headquarters of the “quaestors” the officials who ran the finances of the empire, suggesting a similar parallel for Yahweh or El and Asherah. The memetic lineage of Sumerian theocracy influenced a variety of traditions such as the Canaanites, Phoenicians, the Lydians and the Phrygians, but also certainly the priests of the Abrahamic tradition who found in monarchy a new way to divide and conquer the people. Abraham was certainly not the first authoritarian ruler, but his memes (or the memes associated with that Character in the Torah) would lay the foundation for religions that would do more damage to the world than any others.

However just like the Greeks and Romans it is likely that the Jews at various times overthrew the tyrants only to be infiltrated again later on, as I have said Jewish people were far from united in their view of religion or even government and so there would have been many different tribes and groups involved in this. Nobody likes to be enslaved and this of course includes Jewish people, the problem is authoritarian religions, hierarchy and the capitalist system make it appear to many as if we are free. Judaism as we know it today is merely the prototype for modern theocracies, using mind control to instill patriarchal capitalist programming and dualist obsessions with hierarchy. Those who know about ancient history will see that I have simplified many things, but due to the limitations of this book it is not possible to go in to all the details. There are many degrees of infiltration at which the bankers operate and a long evolution of the hustle itself and various governments have at times tried to fight them off and have even temporarily succeeded, other times the bankers corruption was so overwhelming it brought down civilizations. Bankers are relentless and patient in their economic colonization and as economics is the primary cause of war and money and banking the centrepiece of economics, they are the primary cause of war, though they are careful to hide this from historians.

Once you understand their con many new things become apparent when you look in to history, a big part of the money changers power has come from trading gold and silver between Asia (India and China) and Europe. They would encourage different exchange rates and values in different places by manipulating supply and demand to make profits exchanging different types of metals. (often with various ratios of gold and silver in a coin) Silver had more value in India than gold and gold more value in Europe than silver and so along with other goods on either or both sides of the silk road, the cult of the tyrant would be there profiting as a middle man in the middle east. Capitalism is the “art of the middle man” as the capitalist uses money as a tool to become a parasite on producers and consumers, the more middle men, the more profit can be had at the expense of others. The money changers have been around for a long long time and they are very good at what they do, even when they apparently screw up, it is often designed to trick the workers into accepting the bankers grab for more power. The bankers justify “austerities” or further centralizing of economies in order to prevent future economic problems which they purposely cause, all so that they can make all things in their egos image.

Once the Christians gained power the empire retained the monetary and bureaucratic religion in a new form, though from what I can see a major reason for end of usury was that the rebels destroyed much of the knowledge of Babylonian finance during their occupation of the temple. That is as King Herod and the Sadducees were responsible for helping Titus to create Christianity, the Jewish temple was a major centre of the banking religion. The fact that the Jewish theocrats were so intimate with the Roman government pissed off both Jewish zealots and Gnostics and so after seizing the temple they could have easily destroyed much of the knowledge of the Babylonian economic strategies. In this way the Christian theocratic religion didn't have much choice about abolishing usury, it didn't really know what it was doing anymore and so as I will show it came up with new tactics. At least the rebellion made usury totally unacceptable culturally, thus forcing the priests of money to appear more secular, all the while still using the sacred gold of the sun to make talismans which now no one would understand the meaning of. By taking on the idea that magick is sinful, Christianity would allow the theocrats to manipulate the masses in to losing the context of what money is, (and what independent spirituality means) allowing them to more easily manipulate the masses into surrendering their energy to the theocrats. The archons would use Christian theocracy to in a sense sterilize the culture of the Roman empire with all its diverse religions, wiping them out with so much history of what had transpired and in this way Christianity would survive the fall of Rome and have a fresh slate to start up a new empire.

Some Gnostics and Hermeticists would have escaped to Arabia and the non Roman parts of the Middle East and I am not the first to think that they continued as “Mohammed” and the Sufis of proto Islam. (The word Sufi is even derived from Sophia and Hermes Trismegistus is praised in the Qur'an) However what is a bit more original to me is that these Sufis would be continuing the bank revolt to crush and finish off the Sassanid empire a few centuries after Constantine. Sadly Islam would also eventually be overtaken by the archons and in some ways Islam may be a memetic counter to Christianity, just as Christianity is in some ways a counter to Judaism and Persian Mithraism and Zoroastrianism, the archons always encouraging us to make new errors in order to play us against each other. So as various theocracies lose credibility, after a rebellion a newer upgraded form of the theocratic mind control is created, one which appears different, but usually becomes even worse.

The word which is translated as “testament” in the title “New Testament” is also the word translated as “covenant,” so you could call the Christian bible the new covenant, or new contract which the state religion was imposing on everyone. “Coincidentally” the holy ghost is symbolized by a dove, who was really a representation of the feminine essence of the Jewish god called the “Shekinah,” which itself was originally the bride of “god,” the goddess Asherah. This was changed by Jews and Christians in to a patriarchal form so that monotheism could be more easily maintained and people would hate women and what they represent symbolically.

So, while it seems foreign bankers had largely been kicked out of the now crumbling empire, since the Romans successfully co-opted the Gnostic bank revolt, a new even more repressive form of theocracy was just getting started. Christianity would allow for the shedding of the pretence of Republican ideals and the creation of feudalism and the dark ages under the gold standard still controlled by international merchants. Along with their competition in banking, the theocracy also destroyed the Jewish heretics and zealots, Gnostics and Pagans and so secured their monopoly over the economy through the creation of an international organization which could control monarchies from behind the scenes and so maintain itself in the event of a revolution. Christianity would have the street cred of Gnosticism and use its own symbols against it, destroying any rebellious ambitions they had. (A modern parallel could be found in the American “Tea Party” which has real complaints and anger and often wants to restore the gold standard, but has been used by plutocrats to splinter revolutionary ambitions and control the opposition. All the while corporate interests play on people's dogmatic religious bias and concede on some issues to maintain the illusion of successful political action.) With Christian feudalism no one was free, not even aristocrats, dogma was all important and the church was the authority as to what dogma is. So now along with control of the gold market, the bankers had a religion that could be completely international, a mechanism that would allow for a new world order and a one world religion which even widely divergent kings must obey.

Constantine had secured his empire through battle, uniting the east and west and famously using the now Christian “labarum” symbol, also known as Chi-Rho as a sigil of black magick to kill his enemies and protect his soldiers by having them carve it upon their shields. During the battle his enemies were supposedly scared by a vision in the sky of the cross and his own men were urged on to “courageously” defeat the opposing army. (Another example of Christianity's astrotheology) He also got the idea for this from a vision that “in this sign, you will conquer” and in gratitude to the archons and to preserve the energy contained in the sigil he made the Chi-Rho into a symbol of Christianity and what would become the new state religion. This Chi-Rho was first used by Constantine on a silver coin and he was quick to Christianize the monetary system, but this symbol was also used by Ptolemy III centuries before Christ was supposed to have even been born, it having astrological and other magickal associations. Titus Flavius Clemens also known as the highly influential Christian theologian Clement of Alexandria described the first “Christian” symbols such as the anchor, boat, fish, star and olive branch which also were found on the coins issued by Christian Flavian Caesars like Titus, so that we can see the hand of the bankers right from the beginning of Christianity. Like Paul of Tarsus, whatever the date and true authorship, these works along with Pseudo-Clementine literature are crucial for understanding how Gnosticism was corrupted and twisted in to Christianity and one way or another I believe they come from the Roman state and what would become Catholicism.

Through economics connection to these goddess's, etymology shows us banking is literally a religion of “tyranny” the context of which is separated and hidden from the common people (occulted) and the most powerful bankers today even blatantly proclaim their lineage symbolically from these kinds of people. Columbia is everywhere today, there is even a Columbia bank, the District of Columbia is the military centre of the world, not to mention CBS and Columbia pictures, Columbia records, British Columbia, the country Colombia and many many more things. (There is even a dove hologram on visa cards) While these bankers did not create all currencies and the exact details of the conspiracy have long been destroyed, they clearly did their best to take control of as many economies as possible, after all that is what banking and commerce is all about and in this process they have built an empire which now essentially controls the economy of the world.

Non Jewish European banking was revived after the fall of Rome by the Knights Templar, who working under the Catholic church were the elite crusaders and thought to be trustworthy. This order was also international and so the first really overtly international bankers as we think of them today, though they were really just picking up where the middle eastern cartels had left off. However as I mentioned before, the Templars became Occultists with highly questionable intentions given their proclivity for monetary profit and war, not to mention their aristocratic births and their Christian zeal during the crusades. Even if you and modern day legislators don't believe in magick, the Romans, Sumerians and Templars definitely did and they had elaborate systems for it which continue to this day through the memes of their civilizations.

Legend has it the Templars found something of incredible value buried in the ruins of King Solomon's temple, all kinds of theories abound as to what they found, from the Holy Grail, to the Ark of the Covenant, to the original and true bible. From my research (not just those in to conspiracy theories) it must have been economic information which was quite possibly put in Alchemical terms, along with other magickal knowledge which allowed them to create the ceremonial magick grimoires which would become known as the Greater and Lesser Keys of Solomon, often referred to simply as "the Goetia." These are the two primary texts of the Solomonic magick genre and various forms and texts of this Solomonic magick would be used by the Templar's descendants and the theocrats in general and would be quite central to the underlying monetary religion of the Jewish/Babylonian theocrats. So given that the banking institutions fell with the coming of Christianity and resurfaced after the Templars excavated the temple in Jerusalem, we can see that they rediscovered the financial tactics of the middle eastern banking establishments. Probably at the time of the "Zealot temple siege" of 68-70 CE, (under Simon Bar Giora) the Gnostics and Jewish uprisings had destroyed much of the financial plans of the banking conspiracy, unfortunately there were hidden copies buried within the temple itself. While the finances of the Roman empire went on for some time after this siege, there is much altered history and undoubtedly many conspiracies and financial machinations which lead to the increasing destabilization of the empire after this time. The bankers wouldn't have just forgotten everything they knew about finances, but as economics is magick, with the temple siege they would have lost the keys and the understanding that allowed them to monopolize the markets in a risk free manner. (Hence Titus and the Roman army could destroy the temple completely in 70 CE as a punishment for Jews)

This tie with the banking theocracy to Solomonic magick like the Goetia fits better and better the more I look into it, for example Ishtar and Baal are in the Goetia, though Ishtar or Astarte is referred to as a seemingly male demon Astaroth. The mythological character Solomon was said to have been incredibly wealthy, to have influence from the Euphrates to the southern part of Israel and even though there is no evidence of a powerful kingdom like this, his wealth is said to have come from tributes, mining gold and trade. However the bible says he married an Egyptian princess, but also many other wives and concubines who lead him astray and that he worshipped Ashtoreth, who is another form of Astarte and so it is highly likely the story is about banking practices and perhaps even capturing of the Egyptian economy. In fact in the "Testament of Solomon" a text which is the oldest we have that goes in to much practical detail about Solomon's use of demons, we learn that the demon Enépsigos can take on the form Chronos AKA Saturn, or another form which seems to be like Hekate. The demon names in this text are different than the later keys of Solomon, but no one denies it is part of the same Solomonic magick tradition and in all these texts many demons have purposes ideal for a conspiratorial banking theocracy. (Publication date is somewhere in the 1st - 5th century) For example some provide riches of gold and wealth, others explicitly are to be used for overthrowing kings and taking over governments, setting up false religions and things of this nature. While I couldn't find the text he refers to, the scholar Manly Hall cites the work of Masonic author Frank C. Higgins about the Clavicula Salamonis and he says directly that it deals with Masonic initiation rituals. The ark of the covenant may well be a part of this, but whatever they found, the Templars no doubt learned a great deal about ancient philosophies and this search for ancient wisdom was probably a significant motivation for aspects of the crusades.

Much later, when the knights became too powerful for the pleasure of a greedy French king, (who also owed them a lot of money) the monarch got the blessing of the pope to take them out. (as the pope was the only person the Templar's answered to) So it was many of the Templars were arrested and executed on Friday the 13th, which is why it is now considered unlucky. The Templars were no fools though and having the military expertise and economic capabilities, not to mention religious zealotry of some kind or another, it is foolish to think they simply all surrendered and disappeared. This French King Philip the fair had used his family connections to take over the papacy in what is essentially a coupe, putting in his own pawn Clement V as the pope, who then moved the papacy to Avignon France. This coupe took out many of the Templars to whom the King was indebted, but then soon after this, both the king and his pope were both mysteriously killed. So we can see the coupe ultimately failed, but in some ways, as we will see, this laid the seeds for the reformation.

While the coupe had failed the Templar orders were still illegal in Europe, the monarchs had had enough of Vatican infiltration of their power, being megalomaniacs they would not want to share any more power with their Roman masters than they had to. According to one theory, the Templars survived by fleeing to Scotland where they helped the excommunicated Robert the Bruce gain independence from England. This is thought to be the origin of the Scottish Rite of Freemasons, though it would take centuries before the Templar symbolism would be used, or at least that is how many scholars and the Masons themselves tell it. Before they were outlawed the Templars funded many cathedrals and these were made according to principles of sacred geometry, something which the Masons making it, would of had to have been initiated in to in order to build. Since the Mason guild had to be initiated in to Occult knowledge they were trustworthy to the Templars and as Masons were "Free" to travel across borders, they were an obvious network for the Templars to use when they had to hide from the monarchies. While the Freemasons worked for the Templars to build the cathedrals, some of them did originally exist independent of them as a German mason guild, not unlike a trade union and as time went on, their international status meant they were a very diverse group. Other schools of Masonry were influenced as well and we can see that the goal of Masonry is to rebuild the temple of Solomon and as Solomon used the demons of the Goetia to build it in the first place, it would not be surprising that some Templar Masons would work with it.

Along with going to Scotland some Templars are thought to have escaped to Switzerland, a country renown for its shady banking practices which has strangely managed to avoid two world wars. The Swiss flag is also basically the Templar cross, only with reversed colours and not long before the creation of the Catholic Jesuits, the "Swiss Guard" began handling the security for the Vatican. In many ways it does make sense that at least some Templars went to Switzerland and according to some legends they even founded it, resurfacing later in the form of the Jesuits. While the Templars were a distinct order they would have had many supporters within the church and certainly wouldn't have taken the banning of their order by a puppet of a French king lying down. As the warrior monks of the banking religion, they were in many ways the core of it and so would not give up the papacy easily. So from what my research shows me, many Templars simply joined the Catholic order of Knights Hospitaller, other supporters retook the church from the French through the main Catholic organization, but kept their clandestine networks as in Switzerland in order to deal with the monarchs of Europe.

The Templars also had a huge navy which they acquired during the crusades and it allowed many of them to escape to the seas after they all became condemned as heretics. Some of them became the first pirates in the classic image we think of them today and the classic skull and cross bone flag originates from their martyred leader Jacques De Molay who was burned at the stake, leaving only a skull and two femurs. (This may have inspired a practice of burying their dead with their legs cut off and placed over their neck.) After Catholicism outlawed the Templars, as I said many of them had to go on the run and in many ways over the centuries, some of them and some branches of their Masonic organizations became egalitarian and even proto-Anarchists. That is some Templars on land and some as pirates would help to rebel against both the monarchies and the Vatican. (More on this in the next chapter) It seems that some of the Templars realized in part from the Sufi Assassins and whatever their various archeological work dug up, that the church was literalized Paganism and emperor worship and so became disillusioned with the Vatican. To confuse things further, while some pirates were obviously freedom loving, it is highly likely that some of the pirates remained faithful to the theocracy, (just like privateers remained faithful to their monarchs) and as we will see in the next chapter, they are actually those most likely to have flown the Jolly Roger.

For those pirates who did become freedom loving, it is likely this influence came from knowledge of Sufism, it's wisdom could easily have inspired them to become heretics against Christianity. Once they recognized it as a banking religion intended to enslave people, Christianity would seem like a farce which they had watched many of their comrades die in vain for and so it is not hard to see that some would be pissed off. (Templars were forbidden to retreat and often sustained very heavy casualties) Maybe the Assassins even got them in to hashish and they realized they were being very uncool, it is hard to say exactly, but somehow or another there is a lot of evidence that some Mason groups and pirates became radicalized and were among the most open minded and egalitarian people of the time. The Assassins sometimes get a bad wrap in all of this as the ones who "corrupted" the Templars and while they don't seem to be very Anarchist, they were not bankers and so this is generally due to paranoia and prejudice against Muslims, Occultists and pot smokers. These theories also ignore the fact that the Templars and Catholicism were corrupt from the beginning and so just because the inquisition said they were anti-Christian, doesn't mean they were all tyrants themselves. The Assassins were said to brainwash people by giving them drugs and women and making a person think they had died and gone to heaven, then these people were told they were going back to Earth, but if they wanted to return to heaven they had to work for the Assassins. Most of what we know about the Assassins comes from their enemies and so it is hard to say for sure, but I could certainly see people willingly joining them when they realized they could enjoy these things and be relatively free and have a non dogmatic religion that actually produces spiritual experiences. John Allegro, the same scholar who argued for Amanitas in Christianity also makes an argument that the Assassins used the mushroom, so along with Hash it would not be surprising they could win over converts. At any rate even if the Assassins were complete assholes, there were plenty of Sufi groups and others who could have influenced the Templars in to being egalitarian.

While some would say all these "democratic" inclinations are just a cover for the Mason's to take over, and in some cases this is probably true, it is still true that they were a diverse group and many were incredibly freedom loving compared to the governments and Christians of the time. If it goes back to the Templars, these egalitarian ideas made them a liability and the Templars who were executed would have even been destroyed for starting to oppose the Catholic church which they had originally fought and died to defend. Even if all this was simply a pretence, the rebellious Templar splinter groups signalled the beginning of the end for the monopoly of the Catholic church and the reemergence of freedom and free thinking which would weaken the stranglehold of the Catholics and so indirectly help to inspire separate and distinct social movements. As the Templars were the most zealous Christian crusaders it must have been something pretty convincing for them to turn against the Church and after becoming an illegal order they started a covert war of conspiracies manifesting in various forms through the Masons. While I don't want to say all Masons were freedom loving, as I said they were and are a diverse group and generally speaking, Freemasonry was perhaps the most powerful resistance against tyranny for centuries to come.

Some speculate that parts of the Templar Navy even went to North America before "Columbus," they think this because there is some textual evidence, as well as mysterious engravings at Roslyn Chapel which seem to have plants that are indigenous to North America and yet predate 1492. (This would be the Scottish Rite Templars) Some think "Columbus" is thought to have learned of the new world from these secret societies and while it isn't clear, there are many mysterious elements to his life story. From what I know, Columbus is much more connected to the church than the Masons and there isn't much evidence to go on, especially about preexisting maps. The name "Columbus" is actually a pseudonym referring to the word "dove" as in the goddess Columbia and the man is the inspiration for the Catholic Knights of Columbus who are literally sworn to fight Masonic influence and so it does not make sense that he would himself be a Mason. Others think Columbus was the bastard child of the Italian noble woman Anna Colonna and Giovanbattista Cibo, who later became Pope Innocent VIII, (A pope who really got the inquisition going and justified slavery as a means of gaining converts.) one thing is certain however, Columbus was a total piece of shit psychopath.

Since the Templars were organized in to various groups according to nationality, (some of which hated each other) we cannot assume they all thought alike or believed the same things, or even had the same goals. Only some were convicted as heretics and so as Christianity is the religion of power and merciless domination, being a heretic often means becoming egalitarian or even proto-Anarchist. Exactly how many splinter groups were created and what their intentions were cannot be said exactly, it is quite likely that as with the Swiss or Scottish Templars, some simply wanted to start their own independent theocratic conspiracies. How and if the seemingly separate faces still work together can't be said definitely, not to mention the other groups in the world with their own plans. After years of studying conspiracy theories I feel pretty confident in saying that anyone who tells you otherwise can't tell the difference between circumstantial evidence and fact. There are multiple Mason groups and not all Templars were bankers and so some no doubt handled the situation very differently, especially after being made criminalized. Certainly many conspiracy theorists believe them to be behind the global banking empire of today, yet they lump them all together as Satanists and are generally blind to the crimes of Christians. Given that the Catholic church was always corrupt we can say the egalitarian heretics were primarily scapegoats who took the fall in to the flames when the French king shut down the whole order and that those who went to Switzerland and Scotland were most likely to have remained faithful to the banking religion. Thus we can see why some Masons later on would have such a grudge towards the church, while others continued the banking theocracy. If all the Templars were united we would expect that after taking out the French King and his puppet pope they would all go back to business as usual, and yet this doesn't happen and so some Templars must have developed a conscience and become heretics to the theocracy.

What we have to understand is that people have a natural inclination to be free and so given the opportunity, becoming an egalitarian pirate rebel is pretty attractive, especially once you have found out your Christian religion is bullshit and persecuting you for no real reason. These hash smoking outlaw pirate Sufis with Anarchist inclinations would begin the process of fomenting the reformation and the renaissance through their Masonic contacts on land. It can be quite tempting to romanticize the exiled pirate Templars, but unfortunately they weren't the only ones and their work in over throwing the Catholics would be hard going. Whether or not there is anything to the story of Templars in North America, it is all a really confusing mess with paranoid conspiracy theorists on the one hand, and ideologue historians automatically dismissing everything on the other. I am against theories of monolithic conspiracies involving the Masons and Templars, however history and the writings of the groups involved show quite explicitly there is a lot of antagonism between the Catholic church and the Masons. So with the Templars we have the most plausible origins for the start of a secret war of conspiracies which would be between the Templars who became egalitarian pirates and Freemasons and the others who were still in the church or who escaped to Switzerland or otherwise became capitalist autocrats. While some groups like the Scottish rite of Masons carries on the Catholic banking traditions of elitism and hierarchy which were found in the temple in Jerusalem, as I said it is likely this was a much later development. That even if some theocratic Templars went to Scotland right away, their influence in Masonry is not likely to be felt for a long time and even then it was mostly confined to the UK branches. At the same time the egalitarian pirate Templars and some others on land took on the more original egalitarian notions of the Mason guild and melded it with Muslim heresy. In the process they created their own societies with which to overthrow the banking theocracy by spreading enlightenment or renaissance era ideals of equality, reason and learning and while many of these were still capitalists, they were a giant step forward from the Catholic dark ages of theocratic feudalism. It is highly likely that in some cases old boys networks were set up to counter the monopolies of the ruling aristocrats and the Church itself, but as always money corrupts and over the centuries many rebel Templars lost their way or even the true context of their order's traditions.

Not long after the Templars were created they started banking and continued like that for over 150 years until they were shut down and so we see the Church was quite complicit in these financial practices and that the Templars were in fact quite loyal to the Vatican for a very long time. However not too long after the order was criminalized in 1312 we start to see the appearance of Solomonic grimoires like the Greater Key of Solomon, as if they were trying to reconstruct the practices of the banking religion found in the temple of Jerusalem. It may well be that after the fragmentation of the Templars no one group had all the knowledge and so they were trying fit it all back together, it also quite possible that the Templars never found everything they needed in the temple and so through experimentation were trying to reconstruct the religion. (This would explain the evolving nature of the Solomonic magick) Later on around the 1600's we see the publishing of the lesser key of Solomon known as the Goetia, but exactly how much older it could be is unknown as both books are part of a much older tradition that goes back to Roman times, yet within Europe, for the most part it disappeared until after the Templars were shut down by the church.

The Templars had an interesting if not bizarre religion that takes elements from various sources and it is likely they learned a little something of the cult of John the Baptist. They also worshipped a goat headed god named Baphomet, who's name could mean "bathed in wisdom" but could also be derived from "Mohammed." Baphomet is a god which represents a union of opposites, human and animal, male and female, above and below, but since Christians have depicted Satan with horns and goat parts in order to demonize the far more ancient Pagan gods like Pan, it is commonly believed they were Satanists. This isn't helped by some modern day Satanists who have made him their own, but this depiction of Satan is not found in the bible and is just the result of Christian bigotry and the ignorance of what symbols mean. (Even Moses was commonly depicted with horns!) Like the steadfast goat which takes to the sea, a person can be hard working and responsible, patient and loyal, yet from ambition seek to climb the mountains, a talent for organization leading them to be resourceful yet conservative, perhaps even dictatorial and decadent and so from this dual nature we see the good always have their bad side as well.

While the Templars are often linked with Gnostics, it is quite hard to discern what they actually practised as the majority of information comes from their torturers in the church, but even then it does have very different symbolism. For example Baphomet is nowhere in Gnosticism and it is likely that heretical Muslim groups influenced most of the Templars more than Gnostics. (To me groups such as the brethren of the free spirit have much more of a sense of real gnosis than Templars.) One idea is that by spelling "Baphomet" in Hebrew, then applying the Kabbalistic cypher known as "atbash," you can spell the Greek word Sophia in Hebrew letters. Atbash is a process in which you substitute a letter according to it's mirror opposite in the alphabet, that is the first letter of the alphabet Aleph, switches with the last letter of the alphabet Tau, the second letter switches with the second to last etc, so that Baphomet becomes one possible Hebrew transliteration of the Greek word Sophia. Apart from this I don't know of any other ways in which Sophia relates to the Templars, or how Sophia could otherwise relate to Baphomet. There were also Templar talismans with the Gnostic Archon Abraxas on it, though this could mean a lot of things as Abraxas wasn't really worshipped by Gnostics, even if they used him for magick. Abraxas is a pretty unique figure though and is not found in any other religions I know of, so It could be the Templars were trying to reconstruct some Gnostic traditions they uncovered at some point during the crusades. To my knowledge, the best explanation for the Gnostic aspects of the Templar heresy is that it comes from the Cathars, medieval Gnostics who definitely had some Anarchist tendencies and were opposed to the Christian institutions and the feudal power structures of those medieveal times. This is true at least for the clergy members or "Parfait" and for this the Cathars were massacred in the Albiginsian crusade. Even some mainstream historians admit that it does seem that some Templars gave shelter to some Cathar refugees during the Albigensian crusade and so some others theorize the Cathars were responsible for the Templar heretics. While the Templars practiced something pretty different from Catharism, I could see the Cathars trying to infiltrate the Catholic church as a means of revenge and so they may well be responsible for the freedom loving aspects of the Templar heresy. Given that Cathars were even more willing to die for their religion than Christians, it is not unlikely that any Cathar survivors of Catholic persecution would want to continue their struggle against the theocracy through splinter groups. At any rate, while perhaps the Templars share some symbolism with Gnostics, such as an affinity for John the Baptist, there is still a lot of differences and it is safe to say that most of them practised something unique to them, that they had their own religion.

As the Vatican knows full well Christianity has its origins in Paganism and the higher ups engage in all kinds of Occult rituals, it is not likely they would mind the Baphomet cult if they were loyal to the church. So it seems likely to me that at least some Templars were heretical and probably starting to dissent once they found out the truth about Christianity and saw the effects of the bankers. Whether or not the Templars still exist, it is undeniable that modern banking systems are descendents of their memetic lineage and that the Catholic church obviously still exists and is still banking internationally and so it is to them we should primarily be focusing our attention. Plenty of people will claim with all certainty to know the truth about all this, but the truth is there are many possibilities and many contrary facts in the details of how this all went down. There is plenty of evidence for conspiracies, but unfortunately the black magicians who engage in these kinds of secret societies and conspiracies were not clumsy enough as to leave detailed plans and histories of their organizations lying around for historians to find. We could debate the particulars till the end of time, but in the end it doesn't really matter as those who are guilty today are easy enough to find, revolution is more or less strait forward, except that most people are too indoctrinated in to tyrant culture to rise up.

Religion is not merely a political weapon as many on the left claim, this is an idea based on the assumption that there are no spiritual realities and any talk of them must be a con, instead history shows quite clearly that politics are the weapon of religions, who created the first governments through theocracy. This prostitution of Mother nature did not stop there, but with the advent of agriculture and animal husbandry this prostitution cult of the aristocrats gained the inspiration to create a religion of eugenics and human breeding. This idea of breeding became an obsession for the aristocrats, along with their concubine priestess's in an attempt to make their offspring in to super humans, but which has instead made them psychotic inbred psychopaths. Organized hierarchical religion then is a form of theocratic black magick and it stems from the desire to impose an elitist consensus on to reality and usurp the power of the people, a tactic which was most effectively used by Europeans with the creation of Christianity.

Civilization then is essentially humanity turning tricks on the goddess, turning Mother nature and the mysteries of her mystical union with us into a commodity, a means of prostituting the sacred for personal profit and condemning the prostitute to perpetual abuse. The practice of using money creates a shift in consciousness, it brings us from loving Mother nature, to whoring and raping her for our own gratification and as horrified as people would be with whoring and raping their human mother, we should be horrified in our treatment of nature. We are the Johns who pay the pimp, but we also whore ourselves for money and call this a profession and even proudly declare that we are contributing to society by being whores. We take the tokens of the mother goddess but instead of using them to honour her and show her love, there by replenishing her magickal fertility, we instead use them to take her bounty without showing any gratitude and hence we fall in to all kinds of unsustainable economic practices. The monetary system has turned all of physical reality, all of material life into an abstraction, into a commodity with a dollar value which can be bought and sold and in this process has separated humanity from nature, separated us from each other and made everything a quantified object which can be possessed and hoarded. Economies then are the most powerful meme ecosystems on the planet; even religions revolve around them as even the goddess can be turned into a commodity. Through these means the various denominations of the money religion has thus made corpses of the indwelling spirit of all things and perpetuates ignorance of our inherent need for symbiosis with nature.

We can see this money religion carrying on into modern financial institutions, in fact the privately owned central bank known as the Federal Reserve is often affectionately referred to by those who work there as “the Temple.” The all mighty dollar is the holy sacrament of a capitalist world, in fact the dollar symbol itself has many Occult associations, it could well be connected to any number of symbols which have a snake wrapped around a pole like the brazen serpent of Moses, or the Caduceus of Mercury, or perhaps most interestingly an Asherah pole wrapped in a snake. As cattle was the original currency, the bull is another important symbol in this banking religion as a symbol of fertility, work, wealth and matter often associated with the goddess (such as Cybele) and seen in the Merrill Lynch logo and so many other places. (Could the story of Moses and the golden bull and brazen serpent be on one level at least, an allegory regarding the monetary system?)

In addition to money we also have the curious trade of gems and precious stones, thought to be of high value yet as arbitrary as any medium of trade. That shiny rocks should be worth killing for is a strange idea indeed, but Occult tradition tells us these stones have magickal powers, they correspond to the constellations and planets, can be used for scrying and divination like a crystal ball, or even used for the evocation of spirits. This is the true reason precious stones have historically been one of the most valuable commodities in world history, but now we are suppose to believe it is just because they are pretty? With their talismans and precious stones the upper class really does seem to have great power and prestige from these objects. The monarchies would even use them ritually on their crowns and put gems on their sceptre wands which they use to express their decrees. Whether or not you believe they have metaphysical powers, the illusion of their value has created much real world magick for those who possess them through their ability to manipulate the masses. If people believe a commodity has value for the sake of value outside of practical concerns, (due to glamour) then that consensus can be manipulated, especially when it comes to international markets turning all the economic fetishes into neo-colonial idols of Mammon. Value is determined by use, we may all use things, but hoarding talismans and precious stones to manipulate people is clearly black magick which is against nature.

We can see that once a priest class was created as a middle man to the gods, magick became a commodity, which was the basis of the first government and theocracy. So once people stopped doing magick for themselves they depended on the talismans of those priests which had the most prestige, this raised the demand for these individuals to do their rituals and with that they were raised in a hierarchy. Aristotle defined money as a unit of demand created by law (Nomos) and not nature, and as demand is what people will to possess, a coin is a unit of will. Eco-nomy means “family law” as people in a tribe used to distribute their wealth as if the tribe was a family and because private property developed among concepts of inheritance. In reality all economics must be based on eco-logy, that is the study of the family of species that is the eco-system of which we are all inextricably part. When a coin is itself in demand it is empowered by the will of the people to fulfil the intention for the talisman, that intention is to serve as a general purpose talisman for the acquisition of goods and services which people also have a will to possess. If demand for the talisman is low this is generally due to inflation, in which case it takes more talismans to perform the act of magick and buy some goods or services. This means the level of supply can dilute the demand or will of that which is desired. This factor also means that when there is a high supply of goods and services relative to the talismans value, it is easier to manifest in to a consumers life and thus less talismans are needed to accomplish this act of will.

Money is used as an abstraction to disconnect us from the devastation and horror that we create through our actions and turn us in to accomplices of the tyrants. Money keeps us from taking stock on our impact on the world around us because we are too busy worrying only about the impact on our token count. Instead we must focus on real world environmental pressures rather than abstract tokens if we are to survive in a world that still has wildlife and create a society with true freedom. What’s more with the digitization of capitalism we will be even more steps removed from the implications of our economies, making us ever more dependent on a system with no other purpose than to self replicate. It seems that the monetary system is a spell designed to destroy all life on this planet, a kind of time bomb that is slowly exploding across the planet in the form of authoritarian economic domination. Yet it is also true that since its inception, this system has been opposed and in the earliest forms of this opposition it has been at its core a mystical and magickal opposition, since it was only these people who could recognize the spell fully for what it is.

This kind of degradation of sacred practices is exactly what happens when people rely on a priest class rather than forging their own relationship with the divine. Magickal ritual uses abstraction in order to focus and express the will in order to accomplish an act of will and this is precisely the function of money and so it is the direct result of the literalization of Occult technology by hierarchical organizations to use for their own purposes. However in this hiding of knowledge the priest class used the ignorance of the people to further their own agenda and so the only solution is to make people aware of magick. Only when people are aware of the symbols around them and how the mind works can they avoid being tricked into consenting to manipulation through convoluted out of context abstractions.

Few people these days do not rely on banks and the economic system for their value systems currency, or their social capital, people do have intellectual knowledge but they use it to oppress other people and manipulate them. (Insider trading) The capitalist theocrats have done their work so well that they have convinced peoples it's all for their own good, after all if the average worker were to invest in revolutionary ideas then they would risk losing what little savings they have managed to acquire, but the truth is even if they hate the bank, if they keep their money in it, they are still feeding it. (Most people are very good at denying this kind of cognitive dissonance.) It is all too tempting to place all the blame for the world's problems on a small elite of white men or for racists to blame Jews, who through the banking system have done all manner of bad things and while there is no doubt such groups exist, it does overlook the fact that banking systems could not operate without the "confidence" or "faith" that everyday people put into it by supporting monetary systems and capitalism in general. Jews did not create banking and Jewish people have surely been the victim of banking practices throughout history, after their captivity in Babylon their theocrats were just some of the first to become totally infected by a new mutated strain of the archon virus which imposed things like the old testament and Talmud on them. By supporting competitive systems of international domination and exploitation it is the masses who are the real contributors to this conspiracy of tyranny, for they are the ones who have chosen to buy into their own slavery. It is the masses who invest in the capitalist consensus of consumerism in an attempt to sell out and they are the ones who protect these power systems through the police and militaries which they join and more generally through their consent to ignorance of these power structures.

Different stocks can take on a life of their own, their values become inflated because people invest in what they think will get them the most profit, rather than because the product actually has value to society and so the means of production becomes hijacked. "The invisible hand of the market" is the hand of Columbia and her priests of plutocracy, casting spells by fixing prices and making insider decisions and generally ruling over this world with an iron fist. Adam Smith even said the hand of the market is the "agent of divine providence" and so through the stock market the illusion of an objective value for a stock is created and so humans adjust their behaviour to profit, to ritually empower the stock or sigil of the corporate egregores with money sigils. Rather than producing something with practical implications for society, the corporations become archons taking on a life of their own and which are capable of controlling people through abstractions and misdirection. Karl Marx had some idea of the magickal implications of this in what he called "commodity fetishism" but obviously being an atheist his perspective was limited in its understanding.

Products become fetishes in a number of ways and this has a number of economic and social implications which Marx outlined, but given the superficiality of consumer culture, their most common magickal use is to act as idols or fetishes of identity and ego reinforcement. People define themselves by their memes and so this includes the products they possess, everything a consumer owns is often regarded as a reflection of their supposed individuality and so it is a kind of ritual prop to inculcate the ego. Seeing products as reflections of identity is largely thanks to the magick of marketing and in many cases the more money sigils you use to attain the product, the more “glamour” power is acquired which can be used to increase a person’s “prestige” or social status. This magick is so powerful even if the quality of the product is not really better than a much cheaper model, for example sun glasses, the amount of money sigils used to empower the fetish can have remarkable effects on the glamour power of the fetish, in fact often the more frivolous, unpractical and decadent the product, the more glamour it provides. (Another example is buying sports cars when you only follow the speed limit) In many cases it is the sigil or logo of the company which is the real product, what the logo is on is sometimes almost trivial because almost all consumerist minds who gaze upon it fall under the spell of the glamour. Value then has become a game, a means of controlling others rather than creating a better society. The disconnect between market forces and the people who are impacted by it only becomes more powerful as the capitalist machine builds up and we become ever more dependent on specialized producers and ever less aware of how to make our own products and lifestyles. Not only this, highly trained individuals in marketing and public relations ensure that the glamour used to advertise the product releases the intended emotional energies needed for the archons to feed, making commercials that provoke some kind of insecurity or sexual fantasy, all the while making the ego more dominant. Ensnared in this consensus ritual of market values, the causality behind the need for increasing sacrifices of human and natural resources becomes ever more disconnected from its effects, but they also become ever more common and demanding.

The real meaning of the money sigil is not to create wealth, but to control it and this is accomplished through the creation of debt based currency and by using the power of glamour to make money appear to be about value and production, or even freedom. Anything is justified to sell the system of hierarchy to people, who in turn will become indentured slaves and whose debt or collar is literally bought and sold on the stock market. What the masses don't realize is that through their consent they are consenting to consume their own souls, awareness, freedom and life force, not to mention the lives of all those who work below them in the third world or the creatures who suffer in the natural world in order to produce crap people don't even truly want. So long as a person works as a capitalist, for personal profit and gain, they are working to profit at the expense of all other people for that is the nature of capitalism, to gain for the self by taking from others in a rigged game of consensus. Since there are many people who suffer from capitalism who do not consent to it, to support capitalism, to strengthen the system is very much black magick. All those who pursue money for reasons other than to help others or to bring down the system are in fact practising black magicians, working to enslave everyone around them and destroy mother Earth and so all of life itself. Rulers working above the laws of the system feed off the money of the working class, just as archons feed off the energies created by humans. Plutocrats are parasitic perpetrators of ignorance which exist solely because of the warped delusions of the masses who are tricked in to consent. So, while archons can feed off all egotistical impulses, they especially like pain and fear energy and today we see the rise of “disaster capitalism,” the military industrial complex, the prison industrial complex and the government driven hard drug market.

All of capitalism is essentially a religion based around the worship of the almighty dollar fetish, which circulates to be empowered by consumers and then goes to feed the various false gods we call corporations. Human sacrifice occurs daily in the name of this religion and to even call it what it is seen as blasphemous, branding you an extremist heretic or even a lunatic. Workers and the people try to appease their masters, sacrificing more time for less pay, worse working conditions, greater levels of environmental devastation, wars and the very essence of community itself all in the attempt to make their masters happy. The common people are so consumed by this religion they do not recognize it for what it is, they pray for a good economy, an abstract reality that promises heaven on Earth, something they often sacrifice their lives for. (Since it is how most of their time is spent) Working schedules according to artificial and symbolic systems of time designed to drain their minds and bodies of energy, their work is really a ritual to the false idols that enslave them, the means of charging the money sigils so that products may manifest through labour. The thinking is that if enough is sacrificed, if the corporate masters can be made happy enough, then just maybe some wealth will trickle down, but it never really does. We lower taxes for the rich, we destroy more nature, we give up a few more shreds of our humanity and dignity, but all we accomplish is making our masters stronger, better equipped to extort us and hold us and the economy hostage, until of course we agree to worshipping them that much more overtly. There is no way to fulfil the desires of CEO's there is no way to satiate the rich or the corporate egregores, they know only desire, they seek only endless growth and know only greed and it is absolute insanity to think that a system based on theft can ever bring equality or social justice.

Patriarchal culture has taken the gifts of the goddess, the gifts of the feminine; the spiritual technologies once used for spreading awareness and fertility and destroyed them to turn into a product. Through the monetary system, patriarchal culture acts as the pimp who lives off her to feed our addiction to consumption, an addiction leading to the death of the entire natural world. In fact once the monetary system was set up, the trafficking of opium and probably marijuana and ephedra, (the plant form of speed) through the middle east and especially the trafficking of beer were among the main industries and commercial transactions of the first agricultural settlements. (Cannabis and Opium being among the first agricultural crops, even before the monetary system) “Governments” and militaries were strengthened to become the biggest mafia organizations running protection on these commodities. Opium and ephedra would also have major military uses as a painkiller and stimulant and with agriculture all kinds of people could be ensnared in addiction like never before. While marijuana isn't useful for controlling people in the same way, it is the most useful plant on the planet and hemp certainly would have provided the material basis for important products. Given that marijuana can be used daily and casually it also tends to be more popular among more kinds of people and so such an important crop would have been too precious to not be controlled by the banksters.

As I explained before, the textual evidence suggests the entheogen Soma or Haoma was the mushroom Amanita muscaria, while archeological evidence shows a mix of opium, cannabis and ephedra and so to me this is likely the result of one entheogenic practice being taken over by another sacrament. (The time line of this is impossible to make out, but mushrooms are also much harder to find archaeologically) Once these less psychedelic entheogens became a commodity, then even mystical union with mother Earth was something to be turned in to a profit and by monopolizing these commodities it seems likely this is how theocracies cemented their power. As anyone familiar with the black market knows, you sell addictive hard drugs like heroin and speed if you want wealth and power, since psychedelics are not addictive and promote individual thought, they are not conducive to creating a theocracy.

The historical evidence and myths suggest that what happened was that civilization was founded by mother goddess worshipping members of a mushroom cult, which after acquiring wealth became the target of bandit gangsters who were traders of primarily opium. Since mushrooms (especially Amanita muscaria which requires very specific growing conditions) cannot be mass produced to the same degree as opium, then a mushroom cult civilization can only grow so big, not to mention mushrooms tend to promote the memes of an egalitarian society and spirituality which had its roots in prehistoric times. This original civilization seems to have used more permaculture techniques (like that of Native Americans in the area we now call New York) and cattle herding which would create the ideal environment for the mushrooms to grow, but also limited growth to keep the people in balance with nature. Then the mushroom cults were infiltrated or taken over outright, the priestess's whored out and the Soma mix of opium, ephedra and cannabis replaced the mushrooms as a sacrament. Then the bankers having the outward symbolism, turned the religion in to a hierarchical theocracy and so after a few generations, the people no longer had a very mystical context of the symbols and so became increasingly literalistic, patriarchal and dogmatic. Likewise we see that Zoroaster was murdered while under the influence of Haoma and so he was probably revealing the original fungi sacrament, which meant he needed to be shut up, his religion would then be switched back to the opium mix. (While Zoroastrianism was to various degrees corrupted and institutionalized and this corruption spread to Judaism and Christianity, again some true mystics survived as the Magi, or Magians who helped to inspire Gnosticism.) Dionysus started out as a mushroom god, having the ability to turn water in to wine, putting the red caps of Amanita muscaria in water to make a red tea, his blood then would allow for communion. However by the time of "Jesus" it was well understood by Romans and others that the cult of Dionysus had been corrupted (As with Liber Pater) and so his sacrament was probably turned in to some kind of mandrake opium wine. While the marijuana gave some spiritual awareness it would have been just enough to maintain the semblance of a spiritual experience, meanwhile the people would become hooked on opium and ephedra. This would then provide the motivation for the institution of mass unsustainable monocropping agricultural practices, which were needed for the banking religion to export its products. The role of beer is also central to the popularization of growing grain as it was safer than drinking water and was undoubtedly a major commodity that would also need a military to protect it.

We can see this in Greece with the Eleusinian mysteries, which although it is commonly believed to have used a Ergot LSA potion as its sacrament, it has also been theorized to have used mushrooms, though given it was around for thousands of years, there is no reason to think it was limited to just one entheogen. However less commonly known is that the Greeks themselves said outright that Demeter drank an opium brew to console her pain at the loss of her daughter. Not only this Dionysus played a role in the mysteries as well and so cannabis could have been an ingredient and this could also show a connection to the cult of Cybele. This could well mean that Eleusis was itself infiltrated and taken over by the bankers of the middle east as they undoubtedly did eventually succeed in taking over Greece through the Athenians. All that would be left would be ephedra, which could correspond to Hermes who along with Hekate also played a role in the mysteries. It is true that ephedra is not necessarily a crucial ingredient, but it could have been used to allow for bigger doses of opium by preventing unconsciousness and overdose. Ultimately it is impossible to be sure and they may also have used some plant source of atropine and scopolamine under the guise of Hekate, putting people in quite the suggestible state like zombies. Plants containing atropine and scopolamine were used ritually in Mesopotamia and mandrake and cannabis were specifically associated with Ishtar as well. I remember seeing a documentary which showed Sumerian figurines that depicted people with huge dilated pupils praying to the gods, one "expert" naively said it was mysterious, but she thought that people in prayer were depicted like this because they wanted to look cute for the gods so as to win their favour. However such experts generally despise notions of drug use and scopolamine is well known to dilate the pupils even more than most drugs, hence the origin of the term "belladonna" in Italy, as woman would use the drug to make their pupils bigger. The modern world is now coming to rock bottom on its 6000 year old binge and the withdrawals are going to be hell and as this hell grows, most addicts will only want to speed up the process and welcome death all the sooner, accelerating their masochistic and suicidal habit. All those who love life, love nature, or love anything at all have a duty to stop these activities and learn to live in the real world again, the world of psychedelic union with the goddess.

I do not just mean that taking mushrooms is a good idea, but that we must have a realistic appraisal of our impact on nature and the amount of resources we take from her. The more money you spend and generate in this economy which feeds off natural resources, the more you owe to the Earth to replace, we are indebted to her whether we like it or not. There is only so much we can pillage from her and so we must realize we must form a relationship with nature, one based on egalitarian principles for all life. The more money you are indebted to moneylenders, the more you have sold your soul. Given the nature of capitalism, the more we spend the more we contribute to the economy, so the more you spend on products which destroy, or support companies which destroy, the more nature and third world workers die miserable deaths due to global economics, so it is in a very real way you indirectly sacrifice them to Mammon or the demiurge.

Before money and through much of history most people used informal gift economy type methods of debt arbitration, which became increasingly standardized as civilization "progressed." One person would have some surplus food and feed another who had little and then that second person would get them back when they could. This type of gift economy was how communities had to operate given the lack of available metal currency, not to mention they had a stronger sense of community. Temples became grain silos at first for purposes of mutual aid in case of famine, while the priests and priestess's would have been fed, surplus stores would be more than they could eat, this was also done in order to save seed for the next years crops and so in that sense repay a debt to Inanna or Mother Earth. Not only this, since a lack of militaries and organized governments made war impossible as it is for "civilized" people, some form of sacrifice would be made to replenish the soils. Cow manure would be used for this and was itself considered wealth in some cultures and given that Inanna was a cow goddess and cows were the original form of currency, the temple would have owned most of the cows, so that grain sacrificed to the temple would feed the cows and mean manure for the farmers. Before the temples, sex magick would be done in the field like those held on May 1st in the cannabis fields of Germany in honour of Freya, so it is likely in part menstrual blood and semen at public orgies was used to fertilize the fields. Blood meal is a common fertilizer and semen has phosphorus and nitrogen in it, but after the orgy having worked up an appetite the community would sacrifice an ox or bull and let its blood drain in to the most nutrient depleted field as payment to the goddess. (Remember the gods "ate" blood and entrails, the meat was for the people) Inanna would ask "Who will plow my vulva? Who will plow my high field? Who will plow my wet ground?" Then as civilization took hold the temple served as a silo/bank for security purposes and the priestess's began to do their sex magick there. I can't say for sure, but I believe agriculture may have even started by people giving offerings of plants or part of plants with seed, for example grain, spreading this on the fields with other offerings, perhaps some milk and honey fertilizer, because the Shamans knew to receive, we must give back to mother Earth.

Debts were owed to the temple which symbolized the community as there was not yet the notion of private property as we understand it today. Market exchange was created for inter tribal trade among people who didn't trust each other, so militaries and governments were created to enforce protection, especially among bandits, with the most powerful bandits actually becoming the first militaries. As in the Roman empire militaries would be paid in silver or precious metals, but originally the peasants would get the coins from the temple in exchange for grains and presumably psychoactive plants. Eventually the farmers would no longer participate in the sex magick but instead kings would marry the high priestess and have a harem for the same kind of ritualistic sex magick. The priest kings instituted taxes to get the metal from the peasants to pay the armies, who would use it for goods and especially to buy favour with the gods in battle, they would then fight and plunder and if successful bring in additional wealth in to the economy, sacrificing human life in the process of war. War was definitely seen in religious terms and the conquered would generally lose faith in their old god and take up that of their conquerors willingly. Eventually money became detached from the grain silos and focused more on militarist expansion, this created a cycle of growth through the ritual sacrifice of humans through war. So, first the talismans were created by the temple, then through labour and toil the peasants performed the rituals according to the dictates of the priests and gods (called mes) and received the talisman money for their offering. Then the peasants paid their taxes to the king who in turn paid his armies, who used the money to buy goods from the peasants so that the military could be fed and be strong enough to go off and plunder other peoples. Then whatever they plundered would be exchanged with the peasants for more goods, but also keeping the booty in the temple bank so that the armies could exchange any newly acquired metals for sex magick rituals, beer and Soma, thus allowing the temple to mint more talismans. Eventually conquered people would pay tribute in the form of metal and so the original peasants became a higher class of citizen and from this cycle the first markets were created from the communal societies.

In this way the government, capitalism, the military industrial complex, the drug trade have always been linked in a kind of society wide ritual to grow wealth through the prostitution of Mother nature. Eventually enough metallic wealth was generated that grain stopped being offered to the goddess in the same way, that is mutual aid ceased to exist and the market took over and so we simply took out more and more talismanic debt to the Earth Goddess, but also to the banks, who then turned the peasants in to indentured slaves. People could now conquer new lands and so a loss of fertility in the soil was not such a big problem leading to less sustainable farming practices like slash a burn methods of the forests. These methods had short term benefits for competing city states to gain a military advantage, but along with heavy logging this turned the middle east in to a desert. As in tribal cultures with Shamans, the original purpose of the priests would have been to maintain the balance of people's interactions with nature and maintaining a sustainable equilibrium, hence people needed to pay their debts to Mother nature. As civilization spread in a highly unsustainable way this shows that once the theocrats infiltrated the temple (or likely conquered them as drug dealer bandits) they essentially stopped being Inanna priestesses and worshippers of mother Earth and instead merely used the symbols and practises to keep up appearances for the farmers, who were now indentured workers in a class system. Instead the temple was filled with pimp kings pretending to be gods and whores in the goddess's image who focused more and more on appeasing war gods through death and metals, and with that the rise of increasingly more patriarchal and hierarchical societies. While Tiamat may have been the original mother goddess, there must have been a time when Inanna had more of that role before she first became a war goddess. As time went on even she would be increasingly supplanted by male war gods and eventually the cult of El or Yahweh would do away with the goddess all together.

Since there is consensus in the world that money has worth, money has power, with enough money you can get people to consent to help you manifest just about anything in to the consensus reality, the more money you have, the more you can manifest. Though I do think people should not hesitate to spend what money they have for Anarchist causes, you should know what money is and how it works and what it is really going to. The more money you have and spend in a capitalist economy, the more you consent by "decree" to empower the archons with your energy, we do this by withdrawing our investment in spiritual reality and awareness of the life support systems that make up this planet and so lose the spiritual "interest" we once lived off. This life support system is Sophia's "treasury of life" and at one time all humans lived off our interest in nature, but by using that creative energy of the Earth faster than we can repay our debts, we have placed the wealth of that treasury in to the hands of archons. Unlike other deities who do not need material things, Mother nature is not infinite, at least not in terms of the organic life and ecosystems which form her body, so when we exploit resources, we are taking from her and the ecosystem, taking life itself and the potential for future life that is created according to her interest. You can only take so much life before the ecosystem is destroyed, unsustainable farming practices and capitalism generally only take, but people who live in harmony with nature also try to give back and repay nature in some way, they try to maintain the balance and relationships which allow life to thrive. We can do this in all kinds of ways, as I said through sexual fluids and cow blood, or we could plant trees and create permaculture, or we could even just allow nature to heal itself through regrowing the ecosystems, that is accruing more interest in nature so that our principles grow in turn. By writing Mother nature IOU's when we should be healing the ecosystems, as time went on we not only indebted ourselves to her, but to the archons who make the IOU's. That is by buying archon derivatives from the fiat lux emanations of their private banks, we came to mistake their "bills" for true wealth and value and forgot all about paying back Mother nature. These archon banks are definitely not set up for the public's benefit and work to hoard and imprison the light and so this means the energy we put in to paying back the interest we think we owe archons, can no longer be invested in life. Indebted as we are to extortionists we can never fully repay, there is less communal interest for all due to our withdraw the treasury of life, making others withdraw in a run on the treasury and so we run to our spiritual impoverishment and the starvation that will bring. Now we are seeing the end of Mother nature's bounty, but we desperately try to repay her with more loans, more desires, more products and abstract contraptions from the archons and call it "green capitalism." So in this way capitalism is really a death cult bent on plundering and hoarding the public treasury of life and the archons will continue until all things are imprisoned in their system.

The spirit of the world holds the light in common and creates things through DIY Anarchist volunteerism, but you have volunteered to surrender your power to fictions and abstractions which produce nothing. So, in exchange for you ignoring and denying your own divine rights and reality, by using money you are no longer consenting to manifest things through your own energies, but consenting to empower the talismans of black magicians to let them manifest things for you. People on the news often say how we must have faith in the system, how we must have faith in the banks, but I refuse to worship such false idols, I refuse to empower those who would destroy me and all life and have done so throughout history over and over again. In this way Anarchist revolution and Pagan Occult revolution are identical and are humanities only hope for living according to how nature created us and how the real world functions and so it is we must overthrow the gangster establishment of whores and pimps.

Capitalism then is investing in materialism through borrowing creative potential from real world existence, we then abstract our debt into manifesting realities for profit at the expense of the Earth's life system, which is the real eco-nomy. The debt we incur is paid with a blood sacrifice from nature, often including the human poor of the world, for each dollar that is created out of nothing we liquidate our assets within the spiritual world of nature and instead promise to pay a debt to Mother nature for our ego gratification and ultimately our own destruction. When we spend money for selfish reasons we place our consent with the organizations of the world, not only helping to kill ourselves and everything else, but telling the divine that we do not wish to invest our consciousness with it, but would rather invest in death, selfishness and artificial scarcity. All the while we live in debt to the source of all; whatever transcendent consciousness exists within Anarchy is thereby sacrificed with nature in the name of short term personal profit.

It is all designed to appear as though it is victimless and due to all the degrees of separation between cause and effect most people believe our economies are essentially victimless (if they even stop to think about it) and that this is freedom. However, by consenting to capitalism we consent to ignore our own creative ability and the divinity of all things, we consent to ignore truth and enter in to the illusions of the rulers. Only by spending money on ultimately destroying the money system and setting up Anarchist infrastructure are we using money wisely, this can be done in a number of ways such as spending money for the well being of those in need, or by supporting more proactive tactics of setting up co-ops etc and destroying the monetary system. The more an individual can do things for themselves, DIY, get off the grid etc the more they will be a free, but the truly free will see the importance of helping others. When wisdom takes hold you will see the importance of helping to support the life systems within the world, to spread awareness and freedom in the knowledge that you are helping everything to exist in a reality invested in the here and now. Freedom will not be found by trying to spend your way into happiness, but the beguiling nature of capitalism is so complete, so effective that we have come to believe the most horrendous things are justified and even noble and that those who manage these companies are completely innocent. As they say its “just business” and you “shouldn't take it personally” and they are right, people or the needs and interests of people are not really part of the equation of corporate needs and interests. So you should not make the mistake of thinking capitalism, with its total lack of emotional concern is something set up to serve humans, after all corporations are just interested in doing business.

One possible way to end the madness is as I have mentioned before, to create an Anarchist “ecology,” which some have called a “resource based economy.” This is where production is determined by the health of ecosystems according to available sustainable resources and the number workers who decide to produce goods for the common good of all. What is the incentive for working in an Anarchist society? Well it means you will get more value for your labour than ever before, unless maybe you are a banker or in management, in which case your job will be made obsolete. (Along with many other jobs like accountants which do not actually do anything of value, but exist for people to perform rituals to make the money religion function better.) All workers will then have actual tangible value for what they have worked for, instead of having just hypothetical abstract tokens which the majority tricks itself into thinking has some kind of value. So long as there is money there will be those who seek to control it and with that control of money, they will control other people as the monetary system is the primary mechanism of domination.

In the mean time, we might as Cynics “deface the coinage” so that we might hijack their sigils with our own, spreading subversive intentions. The temptation to create a system of usury is always there, capitalism requires endless growth, requires endless competition and so an endless slide in to psychopathic behaviour. So for all these and many other reasons going back to a gold standard is not good enough, society will always creep to plutocracy so long as it is based on capital and so we must abolish the monetary system all together. Private property is by definition the absence of freedom in that it limits access to matter in a world which no one can rightfully claim ownership and so capitalism is the religion of Tyranny and the religion of greed. In Anarchism alone will people know true freedom and true value, nobody will force you to accept their value systems and all things will be made available to all people and if that is not incentive enough for you then nothing will be.

Quaint

In the sun drenched city skaters spin in a concrete park of spray paint covered engineering.
You hear the cacophony of bottles and cans shake in the shopping cart of a homeless person walking by.

The beep of car horns and the smell of exhaust fill the sky, Screams and shadows, the work of the damned to build their damn nation.

Yuppified landscapes and suburban nightmares,
Trees planted in the sidewalk which grow to avoid power lines.

In the busy bustle of modern life with a bountiful bonanza in the grocery store.

Excess.

Pleasure.

Blond girls in tight shirts saunter down the road to a rhythm they do not know.

Craggy cracks in the sidewalk chatter, rocks roll and ring out in a cry of desperation.

Untouched forests are the cleanest places in the world, everything is where it should be.

Coming back to the city I feel so happy I want to roll on the ground I don't care if a rig sticks me.

Streets lined with stores and homes, stores and homes, buying and living, buying is living.

Street kids steal and beg.

Grime and grease, the lights of the sky scrapers like artificial stars in the night but blocking out the sky.

Diving dumpsters and watchin the fights on the streets,

The smell of crack and piss permeates my building, I know I am home.

Street corner poets giving bear hugs and laying down soul shattering truths.

Dispossessed derelict Sadhus of the west, who get no respect and live on the trust of survival in this land, spiritual walkers who live outside the existence of anything the authorities will teach you.

You try to dodge the realizations but it hits you like a ton of bricks, your mental kung fu is weak.

Words like an elastic liquorice wrapped around your tongue,

Leaving a bitter taste that is intoxicating like zambuca, and departs like a lover you will never see again.

The city is rotten, it's rotting, the buildings seem to fall in on themselves, it will be the ornate towers that kill us, not the wars of man.

The rapture of innocence lost, it is a word gone in the world of dreams, the soul of creation begs out for the night of Earth to end its dark reign over the minds of those who seek to hide in shadows.

You hear the sirens once again and you know it's another OD in the streets, you watch as no one seems to notice, or care, it is time for them to get the job done, time to always forget where we are right now.

Feelin like a sand sculpture in the wind, blowin away for all time outside construction.

Once again we see inside the heart of it all, a stone, in the heart of soul with air choking and traffic jamming, it is a concrete prison with doors.

Lookin good as you should in the blood of the mud, it is our home that we mean to kill.

Child poverty for those who made their choices, and could live with a happy heart knowing they are free outside of walls, rich in spirit, a wild contribution to the world which rejects them.

Happiness hides inside, and in all things, from the sky to the Earth, to the beings of outer space for the hope of the dream which says I can be, a perfect little zest, a smile, a jest, a current rippling rift of subversion risked to the forgotten paradise of a youthful gaze.

Chapter 16 - Collapse

Standing on my apartment balcony I look down to see the tweakers and crackheads on the street scurrying about for one reason or another. Sometimes rolling about, sometimes singing awfully a garbled rant but more often crying or screaming, sometimes doing all of these things at once. I realize now the colour of my building is white like ivory, that I live in an ivory tower from which to look down upon people. Maybe it doesn't count so much since many of the addicts live in my building, even on my own floor, but I rarely see the ones who live here do the crack dance or try to sing, that usually comes after visiting their dealer in my building and getting high around the corner. My ivory tower is burning, the evacuated have no more shelter from the cold, I feel sad for them but in a way I almost envy their reckless lives, they feel more satisfaction in the acquisition of drugs than I can think of anything within my grasp giving me. It is I know a very transitory satisfaction, but still I can't help but wonder what quest do I seek? One without end or comfort for the ego, at least they have a clearly defined goal, striving for Anarchy can be pretty vague sometimes. Their denial and escapism seems total and yet they know more than most of the harsh realities of life, whether or not they created most of their own problems, it's easy to see through the game of the system when you are consistently victimized by it. A large portion of them also know just how unsatisfying bourgeois life really is, the hypocrisy of this culture to condemn their addictions all the while being addicted to petroleum products, houses, cars, fashion, TV, junk food and everything else within a consumer culture, after all without addicts of consumer goods how would the system run? I also see the cold gaze from those who pass by, who look down on my friend and I as we sponge for cash, he has to get his "morning beer" before he can go to sleep. If he doesn't have a six pack of 8% waiting for him, the DT's will cause him problems in the morning before he can make enough money to buy more beer. I think to myself if people are manufactured we are surely the defects and while I am just there to keep him company, he is homeless and he can't get off the street for long without losing the precious little income he gets from panhandling.

We as a society could have created anything, but all we have created is a bunch of empty shells, I think on some level everyone knows this. Luckily we are not forced to stay like this, no matter how hard it is for an individual to truly change the inertia of humanity we are capable of better things. Rearrange reality and make it what you want, and what's worth wanting? Well I suppose a world of love and freedom, unless you have the demon in you, in which case face the demon or else nothing will ever change. This is of course of little help to an addict, whether of drugs/alcohol, power or consumer culture, the problem for them is not so much the stopping of their habits but of living through the change that such a stop will bring to their lives. What promise of a better life is given to a junky then to leave behind almost all or all their friends to toil away in some job they hate for things they don't really want. How few consumers or addicts are willing to give up the things by which they have defined their very lives by? Much too often it seems more comfortable to stay in the rut where you know what is what, rather than try to pull yourself up and venture into the unknown.

Some drugs it seems are the physical symbol of the egos desire, to have pleasure even beyond money or greed, it is the pure self satisfaction of undeserved sensations acquired under any means necessary. A pleasure of arrogant egotism made physical in the form of mind bending chemicals like heroin or methamphetamine. Obviously all things that exist, exist for a reason, just because we are immortal does not mean we should all become junkies and crack heads. I believe it is not evil to do so, especially moderate use, it's not really a moral issue but just because you are immortal doesn't mean the best way to spend eternity is as a slave. It is these people, who are so desperate for real love and pleasure that they torment themselves endlessly, there are junkies of all kinds and it does not require the intake of simple substances but through all manner of compulsive consumption. We are all after all addicted to Dopamine and Serotonin, we all just have different ways of getting it, some more culturally acceptable than others. These people are our only hope, and if they could only put as much attention to making this world a better place, instead of always searching to fill a bottomless void of desire, if all the junkies of the world united to fight our oppression that pins them and us down so much, this world would be a better place overnight. This is even truer of capitalist consumer addicts since they are supporting people far worse than your average dealer, they are supporting the slave owners, the ones at the top of the pyramid who make junkies and crack heads feel the need to escape.

Some would say I am some kind of drug fiend, but when I take entheogens it is work, it is a journey, it is a search for awareness and truth which can be used to make the world better. The powers that be just demonize all drugs not made by a pharmaceutical company as all being the same, all because the black market and psychedelics are their competition. It is a shame the common person does not feel the same pain as a junkie in withdrawal whenever the powers that be abuse others, that they would get the same pleasure as someone shooting up whenever they tried to help someone else. I have tried to help out my addicted friends, my consumer family, but you can't get someone off their habit who doesn't want to be. I don't mean to put myself as any better or any worse than anyone, I certainly haven't done nearly enough to spread Anarchy in the world, at times I think I must sound so self absorbed, but still I must try and speak encouragingly of those who wish to make things better. I have no place to judge anyone, my faults are obvious least of all to myself, which is of course how they manage to keep existing. My own ruthless introspection has left me unfulfilled in the attainment of self satisfaction simply because I seek it.

I learn more every day just how Occult and corrupt the system is, not just some conspiracy theory, but the very structure of the government and legal system itself. This system is a house of cards built from clever abstractions and the lies of humanity, held together through ignorance it forms the walls of the prison tower of hierarchy, these walls enclose the minds of humanity in a cycle of vicarious tyranny and oppression; but for those who can take the disillusionment, it will come crashing down in a sudden lightning flash of revelation. I wonder if anyone actually ever would do the protest of reality? I wonder if that would even be a good idea? I have to try and get others to help me, I have to get off the grid and become a "free man on the land." If anyone would care to learn what I have learned about the legal system they would never see the world the same again, education of the public is pretty tough when they would rather watch reality TV. Who needs reality when you can watch it on TV? The memetic tower of illusion created by emperors and rulers must come down if we are to ever be free and I think I have managed to break the spell they have cast on me and see through their illusion, see through the glamour, the prestige that they try to present to us. The rulers prey on our laziness towards awareness, on our bias's and our eagerness to believe what we want, then they take our frustration and blame it on someone else, after all we want someone to take our frustration out on, but we don't want to have to change our lifestyle in anyway. No, it's much easier to start a war and take other peoples resources, keep the fix going longer, we can justify stealing from other people, clearly they have problems with their system, but let's ignore the problems in our own, y'know the ones which got us in this mess in the first place. The solution they always seem to come up with is to try and placate the corporate vampires, the ones who were created by a system which demands endless growth, endless amounts of profits and resources to fill an endless abyss of addiction. Well that's true unless of course you consider the death of the planet an end, at any rate it's an end the rulers feel justified using any means to accomplish, even if they tell themselves they are trying for something else.

Crumbling Foundations

Don't worry we'll all be dead soon, because too many didn't see value without a silver spoon. Fight against everything, even against your desire to fight something, and especially fight against apathy and nihilism.

Defeat your desire to say nothing in a seemingly intelligent way, and most assuredly defeat your own hypocrisy.

Through the link of the breeding ground which gives birth to a progeny being the third and true defining quality, Dual polarities don't just define each other, but create stability through constant tension which amplifies both.

As values change, rebellion is never ending until a universal understanding and the further allowance for this understanding can be achieved.

Values determine quality and that is determined by subjective perception which is defined by experience, which springs forth from the values of the environment.

Apathy flourishes when you believe there is no uniting factor or no worthy goal, but ultimately the unifying goal is not wanting to be apathetic.

If for some reason you do desire apathy you start to care about it and it cannot be complete, but then it wasn't apathy you valued but the drive to feel passion.

Like an Anarchist who feels content existing as they are in a world that rejects their thought, perhaps they think total freedom was never intended for the whole.

That total embrace from humanity means inevitable corruption and delusion.

They didn't realize everything already was in Anarchy, some just value being told what to do.

The challenge doesn't lie in getting others to do what they want, but in either getting them to want something healthy, or watching them destroy everything.

They will cause pain till they are no longer afraid of losing happiness, until we agree we want to love experience and exercise for our offspring the undefeatable ability to choose.

A structure of feces is still just a pile of crap, but it's the crap we decided to sleep in when the weather was fine to begin with.

When you start to see everything you believe in fall apart, it is the first sign that you are onto deeper wisdom, you will make it through the wreckage one way or another,

But eventually in that practice you may find something more worthwhile than rebuilding.

It is a strange new way to look at the world when you become symbol literate and know what to look for, when you see for yourself that magick and Occult symbolism is much more common and ingrained into our society than most people realize. Christian fanatics would be most upset about this if they realized the statue of liberty was the goddess Ishtar. There are many symbols under people's noses like this, though of course it is not the symbols that are evil, but the way in which those in power use them, again I say a symbol is neither good or bad it is the magickal intention that is relevant. When considering the magickal warfare aspect of government oppression, it is interesting to note the Occult significance of things like the law. Here we have a system where by the use of very specific words billions of people are controlled. By the decree of a black robed judge (the colour of Saturn) and the ritual gavel banging, the fate of lives is determined. Laws are simply words but they have immense power over us, at least when we buy into them. When we go to court we are generally managed by a special representative who speaks the magickal language "legalize," by attempting in effect to cast spells on each other, lawyers in a very real sense fight a magickal war to determine the future.

Now this all probably seems pretty far out but if we remember Crowley's definition of magick we remember this includes seemingly mundane acts, everything is part of the cosmic mind, everything is miraculous and magickal, every action that is part of the illusion that is the physical world is manifested by our higher divine selves. When we remember the definition of "black magick" (magick we do against the will of others) we can see that many laws go against peoples wills, even though these people are not hurting or impeding anyone else's will by breaking these laws. This means the state is constantly doing black magick on large portions of the population and from this we can see the only way to have a society without this black magick would be to have an Anarchist society. These laws often result in a kind of fiat justice of whomever the judge likes, or whoever has the most "money." These laws or spells are the primary means of enslaving society and protecting the "rulers," and while it may not seem like magick, it is incredibly powerful magick with effects that do go beyond materialist understanding.

Corporations are one of the other main means of control within western society; they are literally artificial beings in the eyes of the law represented by their "lamen" or sigil logo. Different corporations like archons play a game for control of our minds; their sole purpose is to acquire wealth and power at the expense of the masses. As egregores or in some cases god forms, sometimes they can grow so powerful they will have their own helper spirits under their command which we call "subsidiaries" and this is much like how an Arch Angel or Demon rules over groups of lesser spirits. In medieval high magick grimoires this is often likened to military hierarchies or monarchies, pointing out how government organizations are similarly egregores or Archons. We give these egregore corporations our energy with our work and a standardized sigil system of charged energy which we call "money." (In the US the ink for money even goes through a traditional ritual with a wand and everything!)

By working for these egregores a person in a sense consents to become possessed by it, owned by it, to be a member of its clergy, we see in very professional people how much some people identify with their jobs. People with careers become their vocation and cease to be an individual human, they become a police officer, a CEO, or on a more positive note they become a doctor. A person may hate their job and not identify with it, but anyone who does enough actions repeatedly puts their time and effort or energy and intention into it whether they like it or not. Just because you have good intentions and want to feed your family does not change the fact that your job may be causing all kinds of problems for the world, or at least supporting tyrants, not to mention a tyrannical economic system. We all make choices and if you choose to support these egregores it doesn't matter if you consciously like them or not, they get your energy all the same. Workers who work long enough eventually become the kind of person who's identity is somewhat ruled by that egregore, at least to a certain degree, no matter what is in their heart, you are in large part your actions. It is somewhat possible to change the nature of a corporate egregore but this is pretty rare and you would have to change the programming (policy) and also the minds of those people working within it. Of course due to the legal and economic system in which corporations exist they are inherently bound to be corrupt and so it is all just the black magick system of archons.

The implications of law and magick find a deeper layering when we consider that we are living in a consensus reality, which is the group creation of physical reality to form an amalgam of perceptions that appears to be relatively objective. This is accomplished through some fundamental agreements as to the nature of reality, a kind of group program to which people can put their creative energies towards in a world which they agree exists, or have been tricked into believing exists. (Ideally this is done because they have consciously created the world they want to exist.) There are individuals who choose to agree to some beliefs and not others and in this way we have our own personal realities each being unique, but some beliefs are pretty hard to honestly disagree with given that all our senses for as long as we can remember have told us something to be true. In this way we are indoctrinated into belief systems which have not been created for the betterment of humanity. Those who control the consensus reality could not force people to agree to limit their power, they had to make people want to limit their own power, and this can only be done by fear, manipulation and coercion, by making people ignorant of their divine power. In the case of Abrahamic religions the rulers had the bright idea to make that power seem Satanic and so for all kinds of reasons people willingly surrender their manifesting power to the group program we call culture and society. The result is most people agree that things like capitalist, sexist, racist and environmentally disastrous policies are all good things, there are many many examples of this, some more obvious than others. Quite often we do not really consider how ridiculous or uninformed our beliefs are, simply because so many other people believe them and they have presented themselves as truth for so long nobody even questions it anymore. Few people agree with all things in consensus culture, but they agree to let others carry on with that reality, they also often agree to things which supersede and directly cause those things such as agreeing to hierarchical systems.

All this is applicable to the law when considering that it is basically something to which we almost all choose to consent, (especially if you agree to the belief that we have a democratic government) rules are created and they shape reality as to what is acceptable and right, and what is wrong and evil. This has grown to the point that all drugs are evil and war and exploitation is perfectly good because it is "legitimate." Even the word "legitimate" has come to be associated with anything that is on the up and up and good, as if all laws and government legislation was good. From these agreements we create what for the most part appears to be a stable society, but is in fact an illusionary prison designed to keep us from realizing truth or our own power. Now you may say that you do not consent to many laws or things in the system, but due to the nature of the spell and how the agreement was proposed by those with power, anyone who does not speak out against them is in effect conceding their rights and so in consensus with that reality.

All the lawmakers had to do was use obscure jargon and put out some small notice buried in a mountain of laws to basically say, by not refusing to have your rights taken away in such and such a specific legal manner, you are in effect consenting to whatever agreement we set out. Although there is no doubt brutal repression to those who will fight laws (especially in a way that is outside the law) I do believe consent in law is the means of how a spell has been cast on us, after all, laws are nothing in physical reality except words, or pieces of paper, these are not things that determine anything in reality physically, but only through the sleight of hand, that is beguilement through abstraction. You may not agree with the laws but if you agree with the idea of a "republic" then you agree that those representatives have the right to force laws on you that you do not agree with, or that the majority has the right to force laws on you. Even if you do not agree with that, you probably agree that those laws are in existence and so by default you probably believe they are "legally" applicable to you, or that those in power can come after you, thus this creates that exact reality. Whether or not you agree with the law, if you agree it has power then it certainly does, if you manage to break that conditioning completely somehow, then you will also have to break the conditioning that says those who believe in that reality will come after you. This can of course be very hard to do, especially if you do not know the law very well and are ignorant of consensus reality. (One way is by covering up a crime so that police never even consider the reality that you are responsible.)

Now simply because you do not agree or believe in the law of murder, does not mean that you can go around shooting people and expect no consequences, but this is because so many people do agree to that kind of reality in how to deal with murderers. (unless defending yourself you are also practising black magick in such an act and so we could say that there are karmic repercussions under what is called "natural law.") Whenever we interact with another person or group of people we create a kind of "third mind" or group mind in which a kind of sub reality is created, when someone shoots another person, their victim probably believed in the law and any police who found out about it surely believes in the existence of the law. So it is, whenever more than one person is involved a consensus or amalgamation of realities is created, however on an individual basis, if no one knows a law was broken and you do not believe the law is applicable to you, then in a very real way no law was broken. This is a “tree falling in the woods” kind of a thing, and when it comes to magickal things it is hard to know if there are some limitations to these principles, such as not being bound to the law of gravity. However, we do agree there are airplanes, helicopters and blimps etc and so there is always a loophole around the law and it is a common idea that anything is possible. What’s important to understand is what your real beliefs are and not kidding yourself about them, as well as understanding how you interact with other people in the consensus and knowing the mechanisms of control that have been put in place. You must know what it is you are not in consensus about, for ignorance of the law does not mean you are not subject to it, far from it you are more subject to it. I am not prepared to say that there are any laws which cannot be broken, but I do think some of them are pretty hard to overcome within the constructs of the mind; however this belief is itself a construct. I also think that governments and education systems as well as the media have systematically imprinted us in ways which are designed to spread pain and fear of the law and authorities.

I will say once again, we are already in Anarchy; it is only the “rulers” which have tricked us into thinking otherwise and so created an illusionary system which serves them and the false reality of their growing and unimpeachable power. Because we are in Anarchy we must get others to get into consensus that Anarchy is a desirable and healthy thing, to become aware of the consensus nature of society and reality itself. If this can be achieved then a healthy society can be achieved that has as its basis, knowledge or gnosis of how society is formed and with that gnosis a person can choose the society they truly want, rather than what they are tricked into. Once the illusion of authority has been broken, once we know what is possible, once we know how we have been fooled, it will not take convincing that we should be free, it will be the only sane reality, the obvious conclusion against which all alternatives will seem absurd.

Another example of how the law shows itself to be a magickal system is through notary publics, who practice a kind of legal or writing magick. (from the same root as “notarikon” or “Ars Notaria” in the lesser key of Solomon.) Notaries work to certify documents or contracts which are in effect spells, which are then activated according to the ceremonial procedures of the law with a stamp of their sigil. (writs function much like this as well, but are issued by a variety of bureaucrats.) This is much like a signature, which is in fact a kind of personal sigil with clearly defined meanings within the law and are used by people to show their consent to a contract. Once the documents are stamped they become legitimate in the bureaucracy and legally “binding” (a word which is also literally a kind of magick done on people to constrict their actions in some way) for the various parties according to their agreement. A Notary can also take and administer “oaths” which is a kind of ceremony that according to etymological definitions acts as an invocation of divine agency, calling it to be a guarantor to the oath takers honesty and the veracity of their statements, thus calling upon the deity (usually Yahweh) to judge them if they should lie.

As I already mentioned lawyers can be seen as magicians who speak the magick language of legalese from their grimoires (grammar books) known as law dictionaries, using language and the “letter of the law” to take control of the “spirit of the law” in accordance with their will. They have specific words of power that may often seem like English but have very specific meanings with definite intent to execute their will. These definitions are often quite different than what we would imagine them to mean when we use them and this was purposely done to confuse us. The study of etymology also shows just how much language has been used in culture to control and mislead people. Lawyers work to find loop holes in the constructs of the system and to linguistically manipulate it, these people trained in the universe of the legal constructs, who represent people, especially corporations could be seen as demonic servants who do the will of whoever brought them under control. Often they only work with some kind of sacrifice of at least personal energy (money) and these spirit helpers go behind the scenes to the realm of their expertise which is the courtroom, (astral world or temple of the law) to manipulate the thought forms (the law or system) for their benefactor. I am certainly not the first to say lawyers live off of human misery; they just do it in a more physical way than most energetic parasites.

Though I should mention there is the occasional ethical activist lawyer who tries to free people from the system, unfortunately we could use a whole lot more.

From an Abrahamic view, the Devil or Mephistopheles requires that we consent to selling our souls through a legal document; this is in essence us putting our energies into the consensual agreement of a kind of exploitative reality that is not in our best interests. The devil is quite legitimate in this way and he uses rules and obfuscation to get you to agree to things that will enslave you, but he is also a master of language and your ignorance of your divine rights is your own problem. This is however not just fiction, but explicitly worked out in grimoires in which the magician enters in to a pact, or “binding” agreement with a demon, in some cases even signing a contract in blood promising the magicians soul in return for riches or whatever the demon is supposed to accomplish. This is much the same as our current economic system as well as our legal system which are no doubt inextricably linked. This is the basis of consensus reality as our words or lack of words form agreements to which realities we consent to, thus we can even agree to be ruled, agree to be ignorant and agree to things when we do not understand the language of the proposition.

The very concept of private property is fundamentally based on superstition, arbitrary, fiat decrees of entitlement and in many places such as in North America it is the delusions of grandeur that conquering land by force creates entitlement to ownership. Native Americans were clearly puzzled by such superstitions as we would be today if someone claimed to own the sun and it was inconceivable to them that someone could own Mother Earth, or treat the land as a commodity to be traded. Some anthropologists have already theorized that taboos are the original basis of property rights, that they are nothing more than cultural rituals. This is seen in Polynesia where certain places or objects were literally considered “taboo” to touch or mess with and those who violated such sacred property would become subject to some kind of karmic retribution or a curse which had been laid out by the chief. Certainly disputes come up every now and again in tribal societies and these are handled in all kinds of ways, the solution for most is to avoid property disputes by holding most things in common, but in Mesopotamia these memes of taboo property came to take on a life of their own. Here memes of legalism evolved ever more sophistication for trying to sort out ever more complicated economies and forms of property. Eventually we see the creation of Judaism which is basically a religion of legalism and arbitrary notions of morality and “goodness,” not to mention judiciary procedures and promises of swift vengeance from “god” for all those who “sin.” These ideas continue to this day, for example, a border or area is sectioned off like a magicians circle, though generally in a square which is in the Occult symbolic of limitations, form, order and materialism being imposed on the Earth and then consecrated in the name of the state for the owner. Once an agreement is reached and the offering of some number of money sigils is made and the official bureaucratic rituals have been taken care of, a deed or sigil of the consecrated land ensures that in the consensus reality of the law, that land is now owned by someone new and that infringement of law will be enforced with brutal revenge. The land is to be used to manifest the will of its owner and only with consent of the owner can things manifest in that area, though the government also reserves certain rights to manifest their will in that place as per the agreement of being a citizen of that government.

The pledge of allegiance is in reality an affirmation or spell designed as a kind of initiation in to the consensus reality of the American government so that the initiate will be “indivisible” with Uncle Sam in a holy communion. The flag as the sigil of the country is in effect prayed to and offered the individuals energy and devotion as well as the “republic.” Now for some with little awareness of metaphysics this may seem like no big deal, but there is little difference between this ceremony and how some might charge a sigil. The pledge of allegiance was first written by a Baptist minister and originally included a salute not unlike the Nazi salute, this was later changed during the war on December 22 1942 (winter solstice) to holding the hand over the heart. Thanks to the efforts of a chaplain named Louis Bowman and the Knights of Columbus and the sermon of a Presbyterian Pastor, President Eisenhower was convinced in 1954 to add the words “under god” to the pledge. Jehovah’s

Witnesses trying to strip themselves of Occult influence as much as possible saw this as idol worship and refused to pledge allegiance. (Despite how strange that religion seems, it really is less Pagan than other forms of Christianity.)

To make my point clear Eisenhower said, "In this way we are reaffirming the transcendence of religious faith in America's heritage and future; in this way we shall constantly strengthen those spiritual weapons which forever will be our country's most powerful resource, in peace or in war." We should notice his intentions to use the flag and the energy of the people as "spiritual weapons" most likely against atheist communism, but really against all who are not part of American consensus reality. Since people have been tricked into thinking that religions are not practising magick, (especially Christianity) but are somehow tapping in to a truer divine miracle they have lost the context of such ceremonies and religious indoctrination and so the consensus reality believes it is divine and all else is demonic. It is a poorly concealed fact that the Christian right wishes to impose a theocracy on the world, perhaps maintaining the veneer of democracy but always within a thoroughly Christian system, forcing biblical law on all they can. (Though obviously picking and choosing from Leviticus as they see fit) Flag worship is just one more manifestation of this theocratic cult of bureaucracy and it has detailed instructions as to how the sigil should be handled and honoured known as the "flag code" which exists as a law that was passed June 22, 1942. (Summer solstice) America is far from the only country that uses its flag in ritualistic ways, Nazis "consecrated" each of their flags by touching it to the "blood flag" which was a flag carried during the beer hall putsch which had the blood of one of their martyrs spilled on it, making it a kind of sacred relic in the eyes of Nazis. Flags and crests can both be thought of as sigils or talismans and strange ideas like you shouldn't let a flag touch the ground are because they are the sigils for the egregore that is the country's persona.

These unconscious acts of magick performed by everyday people have some of the most real and disastrous effects within the world today. Our own power is being used against us and most don't even realize it. If you don't know what a sigil or lamen is then how can you understand what a flag or money really is? As far as I am concerned this is all the more reason to burn them, though this should probably be done ritually to exorcise the archons. So although it is pretty hard for most to avoid interacting with corporations, money, or legal systems in some way, at least make sure you aren't metaphysically feeding an artificial consensus reality you do not truly wish to support. This is easy enough to do once you see these things for what they are, simply will yourself to reclaim lost power and withhold it in the future. This is not to say you are excused from responsibility if you give money to autocratic corporations, we all need to become aware of what companies are really doing and stop supporting them. Two ways to support yourself without supporting them being, the classic dumpster diving (you would be amazed what you can find, especially with some positive thinking;) and if you are comfortable shoplifting, you can do that. (Of course setting up Anarchist infrastructure is even more important, but more on this later) These are ways of draining the parasite entity and taking back your energy, liberating it for the people.

Even if you aren't convinced CEO's or politicians are leading overt black magick rituals to enslave humanity the effect of a board meeting or a session of congress is basically the same. When it comes to metaphysics, such rulers are generally doing these things unconsciously because they often believe their own bullshit as they have been raised in it. Those rulers with the drive, will and ambition to make war on freedom use the law like an iron fist to smash all opposition and separate the powerful from those they dominate; they protect the strong and enslave the ignorant, but for the heroes who are courageous enough to resist, the drive for true justice is an innate passion like sex. By stepping outside their artificial reality paradigms you become ready to custom design your own, you stop giving them your power. Not only is the system corrupt, but it is corrupting, all the while doing so in a way that people believe they are doing good because everyone else agrees that it is good. Any hope of real change must include stepping out of the limits that have been given to us and so this means learning to create our own realities according to our will, thus achieving freedom.

Another way in which this magick system that has been set up has come to enslave us is through the process of creating what is called a “legal person.” This is much like the idea of a corporation for a business, but is for each individual citizen so that a “person” is a legal term referring to a kind of legal entity which is held to be accountable as an employee of the corporate system, which is itself made up of each government of a community. A legal person then is in essence another name for a corporation, it is a fictional being in the eyes of statutory law and subject to those obligations and the policies of the higher corporation to which it is an employee and therefore subject to company policy known as statutory law. So for instance this legal person can be held accountable for (depending on where you live) drug laws, for the need to have a drivers license, for income tax laws and for all other statutory laws. In fact most offences fall under the realm of statutory law, or the global legal code known as “admiralty law,” “maritime law,” or the “uniform commercial code” all of which do not govern flesh and blood humans, but only corporations. This legal “person,” this false identity has the same name as you but it is not you, it is your representation within what was sold to us originally as the system which we sign up for in exchange for some basic benefits as employees of the state. The word “person” comes from the word persona, which means mask, or false self used to keep up appearances, so do not identify with your legal person for it refers to a corporation which is like a subsidiary of the state. This brings to mind the etymological meaning of the word “idiot” which comes from the Greek “idiotes” meaning “layman” or “private person” as opposed to one taking part in public affairs in the government, this is also seen in the Latin “idiota” meaning “ordinary person.” Some right wing politicians have even gotten heat for saying that a corporation is a person and should have the rights of a person, and they are actually right in that a “person” is not a human and is truly a corporation in terms of legal terms. Remember also that in magick, to cast a spell on something you must know its name, well the government knows all of our names thanks to our birth certificates, and do you know all the public servants' names, or all government branches' names?

This “legal name” is in contrast to your natural self or your “lawful name” which is representative of your flesh and blood self, the given name of your parents and not the state. In American law the creation of a legal name is also known as creating a “straw man” which brings to mind the idea of a golem or homunculus in Occultism, the image is like a voodoo doll servitor or zombie slave which is the legal persona of someone. Once you go through the process of extricating yourself from the system, you will be free of the legal persona and be what is called in legal terms a “sovereign person” or “freeman on the land.” This means you are outside the confines of the self imposed limited freedoms of the “legal self”, and so it is your real and “true self” which is not obliged to follow statutory law and is not a “citizen” or corporate employee of the government which is owned by the central banks.

Even on government buildings I have seen on their front signs “The corporation of the city of --” which is because each taxpayer is in fact a kind of collateral chattel to the banking systems and as such are “incorporated” as their “straw man.” From there we are made subject to maritime law and statutory law which are only applicable due to the legal consent of the individual employee. When we become “incorporated” we enter into the bureaucratic world of the legal magick where we agree to live by the rules of that world, much like metaphysical Archons trapping souls in their bodies in the material world. Statutory law as the policies of the corporation are enforced by policy officers, or police which are for the most part unable to act upon a freeman on the land who is only subject to “common law.” This common law is also known in freeman circles as “natural law” or the “law of the land” (as opposed to maritime admiralty law) but which only relates to crimes like property damage, assault, murder and contract fraud or if as me you do not like the word law it is essentially living by Anarchist principles and avoiding the practice of black magick. (This “natural law” is a kin more to a scientific view of things, or the Goddess Ananke rather than human law which is a cultural convention, as I hinted before it can also be likened to the law of karma as if you go around hurting people it is bound to catch up with you.)

This illusion of corporate authority is done by getting us at some point, or more often our parents when we are born to sign or otherwise consent legally to surrendering our rights to forces we do not usually understand or want. While we are born free we are still subject to “contract law” and so our consent or agreements (or as children our parents agreement) even if only verbal are still “binding,” even if we have no idea we have the right to refuse or how to go about refusing legally. A birth certificate is in fact a kind of certificate of the construction of an artificially created legal entity that will be used to pay off the debts of the government corporation, (national debt) by the pledging of human chattel that will pay income tax and work within the corporate economy. You are collateral or sacrifice, for a debt that will never be repaid, (and because privately controlled central banks issue the money, it cannot ever be repaid) the value being your future work and the income tax generated from it, which will go towards further debts to keep the economy growing.

Euphemisms and obscure jargon confuse the average person into agreement for the promise of some limited benefits, or through outright duress, after all if you don't know your rights you might as well not have them. In the US this is also represented by your social security number, or in Canada your social insurance number. (S.I.N. Cards) So through obscure legal manoeuvring people have been tricked in to surrendering many of their rights and have been forced under laws which in much of the western world are not actually applicable to them, at least until they know how to extricate themselves from the system and thus stop consenting to being identified as their legal person. All this manipulation is to get people to consent to empowering the banker's talismans which we call money and to consent to the realities that those in power dictate. First a human is made into a servitor slave called a “person,” this person then acts to collect the energy generated through the human's work. Then humans are made to consent to empowering the talismans of money so that those who control the money can create the reality they desire, all the while feeding their servitor slaves enough to keep them subservient yet vampyrizing them through taxes.

How all this came about from what I have been able to figure out is through subtle and gradual tightening of constraints and legalese smoke and mirrors, gradual infiltration of the government. Right from its inception I do believe all governments by their very nature are corrupt, the difference was that originally in the British Empire these legal agreements were sold to the masses as a means of providing service, rather than being a form of rulership. When settlers first came to North America they were not obligated to be part of any community and were not held accountable to any laws aside from damaging others property or persons, or committing fraud with a member of a community. (Called common law) As communities moved out farther and farther west, most people consented to joining communities which in those days were in some ways much less corrupt. (If you were a white man) Though at this time there were also less employee benefits and people coming off the boats with nothing were understandably desperate for community. Surviving on your own with no real infrastructure when you have been domesticated in to a “civilized” way of life makes it hard to get started as an individual, not to mention the natives who wanted to defend their land from invading colonists. From this agreement people were eventually essentially born into indentured slavery and held to be accountable to communities which to various degrees did not realize they have the option of leaving. (So long as they do not harm those left within it.) This may all seem hard to believe but in the late 1920's Canadian feminists went to the supreme court in what was called the “persons case” to prove that a woman is a “person” in the eyes of the law and thus legally allowed to be appointed a senator. Today while hailed as a victory for feminists, this trial actually incorporated women into the national corporation, thus taking away many of their freedoms. Before women were the chattel property of men, so while they were not exactly free, they were not subject to statutory law and only those men who owned them would be punished for their crimes. (Unless maybe they broke a common law such as murder)

Of course this came about in different ways in different countries and different countries will have different laws and procedures, but in the British colonies like the U.S.A. and Canada any white person could take land outside the jurisdiction of the colonial state. That is settlers could claim their right to be a free person on the land, with no citizenship since in the eyes of the white government, no one owned the land and no government had authority there. Any unclaimed land could be settled by white people according to white laws and according to international law an explorer could claim land that white people hadn't found before, taking it for themselves by performing the correct ritual procedures. (Native individuals not really being seen as humans and definitely not a "person") So as the new colonies expanded there were certain legal procedures that had to be followed when they came across a "foreign" colony, either "incorporating" it in to the country or recognizing the sovereignty of those individuals. Apparently Canada's government is technically among the most limited in its power as it is not technically a country but a dominion and in many ways was originally founded by the Hudson's Bay Corporation. In some areas such as British Columbia there has never even been a peace treaty signed with the Natives with whom the colonizers are technically still at war. The East and West India trading companies played similar roles in other places and as governments are corporations, the basis of international law is "admiralty law" which governs how corporations trade with each other.

So a means had to be created to trick people in to joining the corporate governments when they had no legal obligations to do so and this was done by offering through confusing contractual agreements, certain economic advantages and employee benefits. In exchange for submission to the corporations by consenting to identify as civilians and inevitably signing up your children before they can question the agreement, you too could "load 16 tons" but you would "owe your soul to the company store." While this song was written in the 1940's it is about the "truck system" which is much like what I am talking about, only an umbrella corporation called the "United States of America" would have a variety of "competing" subsidiary company stores and from these a worker can spend their company tokens or "scrips." That is you are free to make deals with other people, but you would be lucky to find a store who will take your own individually issued credit notes and so the government merely has the biggest currency cartel. It doesn't really matter to the government if some subsidiaries go out of business because it ultimately owns them all anyway and gets to collect taxes. This went more or less unchallenged until the unions managed to gain some strength, some people had made it on their own as colonists but would eventually be incorporated in to state government level corporations through a variety of coercive and deceitful means. (Angering natives and then providing protection to non civilian colonists would certainly be among them)

It is clear that this kind of manipulation has been going on for a long time by people who wish to trick others into slavery, not only this but do so willingly, this is evident by "manifest destiny" a kind of spell for the United states to rule all of North America (as the "New Atlantis" of Francis Bacon) and presumably from there they would take over whole world. (I am aware "manifest" has other official meanings but the effect is still the same as a spell.) This is still true to this day though the system is much more corrupted and harder to navigate, people are also made to agree to joining these communities without even realizing they are consenting, and so it requires some very specific legal knowledge to know how to get out of this binding agreement. The first step which most do not ever take, is realizing what the hell you are really doing! Since according to their own legal system and by international law many governments (especially colonial governments) are illegitimate right often from their inception and often "de facto" governments, those who know the law can then essentially secede from the state as an individual.

When we get rid of this legal status we will in a sense free ourselves of our legal egos we will reach a state of previously unknown liberation. Just as most do not realize they are not their legal person, most people do not realize we are not what we think of when we think of our egos or body. Freedom will only happen when we realize what our true self is, how to use its powers and stop believing and consenting to a false identity which entraps us within an illusionary system of rules that do not need to be followed. We must stop consenting to playing games we know are lies and stop using this ego in the name of "social security" or "social insurance" that being the comfort of conformity and the values of the capitalist consensus. When we learn the mechanisms of the law and free ourselves from it, by taking some bureaucratic actions ourselves, claiming our rights, learning to work magick ourselves, we are doing the great work, we are realizing our true selves. We will have stopped using our psychic energy to identify with a construct which is not us and is held by horrendous constraints as a means of feeding corporate banking egregores and false realities like the system created by the “rulers.”

By changing the definition of key words within a legal context the government has gotten people to consent to their legal dictionary and imaginary law system and to be made subject to it, you are a slave even if you do not know the law or the definitions, in fact because of it. As the Romans said, “Ignorantia legis non excusat” or “Ignorance of the law is no excuse” and if you know anything about Roman history, it is clear they were smart people with many sinister methods of controlling others. Having been less influenced by Rome, England created the common law system, which is the exception to the Roman civil law system, but in most European colonies including America there is at least some Roman influence. It is the common law influence which makes being a freeman possible and it comes from the Normans with their legal code which is itself rooted in Norse Pagan customs in which a person must consent to a court to act as arbitrator between free peoples. (much like what existed in Iceland) This principle that people can be charged for breaking laws they are not even aware of is one of the lynch pins in the Roman system of magick. They cast this spell on everyone and so many have consented to it, that through becoming citizens they have opened themselves up to all kinds of magickal attack which they are not aware of. Since most consent without understanding how they consent, or doing so tacitly through their inability to refuse properly, it is clear that simple defiance to the law is not enough to break the spell, only awareness can do that. Wilful ignorance then is consent to being ruled, consent to be misled, consent to being manipulated, consent to being the victim of the system which relies on words to control you.

Other legal systems have spiritual influences as well, for example the other main influences on modern law within countries controlled by European law is Napoleon the Freemason. Certainly Napoleon was a dictator and had a mind to control as many people as possible, he had a fervent belief in his “lucky star” and his own destiny and will, he even founded the field of Egyptology as if he were looking for something specific. Though his Masonic sensibilities did increase equality in many ways through this legal system, it is definitely not Anarchist and in the long term it has served to make people more complacent, thus strengthening the core system that still oppresses them.

The first real codified legal system was the Babylonian king Hammurabi’s law and while today we like to differentiate between secular and spiritual, in those days concepts of magick would definitely have had a large influence on something as important as a legal system. After all the kings authority came from the gods and everything he did was in their name, so that a king who did not have magick in mind risked the wrath of the gods. Contract law was huge in Babylon and Sumeria, created with the magickal symbols of “cylinder seals” it was here that we have the creation of indentured slavery and probably even regular slavery. It was not uncommon for people to sell themselves as free agents in to slavery for an predetermined time, signing a contract which then made them bound to special rules just as people do today making themselves corporations. (This system would influence Roman and Jewish law) So not only is our “eco-nomy” based on Mesopotamian practice but our civil law has its roots their too. While we might wonder what kind of family sells various members in to slavery, that is exactly what we have done, for the human race is our family. Since most people do not believe in magick it never occurs to them that they are practising it all the time and that they have been enslaved by it, they certainly aren’t going to spend much time researching it within ancient civilizations, even though it is from these civilizations that our current cultures are rooted.

As with magick, if you do not know the law it will work against you most of the time and those who do know it may not have your best interests at heart, the only recourse is to learn how to function within these processes that were running the whole time outside our awareness. Like a natural mystic (“crazy person”) open to the spirit world, if you don't learn to control and work with the spirits they will control you, it is your Shamanic calling. You can't say magick is evil just because you don't want to take responsibility for your own power, likewise if you aren't willing to learn how you are being screwed over by consent and what you can do about it then you can't really complain about it, feeling sorry for yourself is not going to change anything. Either we learn to take control of the system and dismantle it, or we will be controlled by it, since magick is the successful exercise of the will, then although there are plenty of examples of magick being misused we cannot say all magick or all Occultism is evil, the determining factor is if it is Anarchist or hierarchical. To make myself clear, as in magick when someone knows your name or the name of something, they are said to be able to control it, by the creation of a legal self, they have turned you into a servitor ruled by the corporate egregore. Thus your birth certificate is in a very real sense a kind of talisman of your "bond" to the corporation from which they have gained control over you. This is done through the ceremonial legal mechanisms of the court procedure if need be, or more often just through simple threat and encouragement of ignorance. You can free yourself, but it takes Knowledge!

If you are ever receive a court "summons" it is a kind of evocation of a "corporation" within the court ceremonial ground, to bring forth the legal entity and not you with your flesh and blood, except perhaps as a consenting agent of that legal entity. You and pretty much everyone else have been tricked into consenting to the jurisdiction of the authority of the court, something which can happen in all kinds of ways not just verbal or written, but even just standing when the judge comes in. You do not get out of it by being in contempt of court, but by using their own principles of conditional consensus against them and knowing how to properly articulate your will to the court in the proper language. To do this you must stop consenting to identify as someone who deserves, or has the legal obligation to be treated as a criminal within the corporate policy system and as far as they are concerned, anyone who doesn't know the law is a perfectly just target for the legal system.

This is incredibly important information which should be followed up by intensive research as a strong means of freeing people from the legal system, which can and actually has been used to help people. (According to their theory of why such a thing was created in the first place) The highest law is actually on the side of the individual, it's just that for those who are ignorant, who do not learn how to use the law, they are made slaves to less important, unconstitutional laws that are created solely to create a serf out of you. A good place to start learning about the law is to look up words you think you know the definition of, but which are found within the black grimoire known as Black's law dictionary, there you will find a new context for reality. Most people are wilfully ignorant of the law and the government sure as hell is not going to teach people their rights or how they are being screwed over, they are the ones who purposely used confusing terminology to help make sure the average person does not get wise to their scheme. However there are groups of people dedicated to making people aware of these issues and I think this is definitely something worth looking into. (As I said this will be different in different regions, but you can start looking online, then go on to local legal systems.)

Even though we cannot trust the government to follow their own laws and be free from corruption, I do think there are advantages to knowing the law and some have successfully managed to extricate themselves from the system in this way. You might as an Anarchist not want to recognize the authority of the government or the law in the first place, but the way the system is set up you are recognizing their authority by not saying anything against them in the proper way. Unless you were raised out in the bush by Anarchist freemen (or free women!) you already have consented to recognize them and chances are you have at some point done things like use money or stop at red lights, you have a birth certificate and many other things and so we have consented in many different ways. So saying no to the government now when you are contractually obligated to them is unfortunately not good enough unless done in the right way. By legally seceding you are not recognizing government authority you are telling them you are a "sovereign" being in ways they can understand and so actually telling them you do not recognize their authority. As an Anarchist I may not like this term "sovereign" but by definition if you are not a sovereign over yourself, you are a civilian under a ruler and so a corporate servitor. Thus if you do not present yourself as a sovereign being created by divine nature as a flesh and blood human you must be a servitor created by those who present themselves as authorities and so you are one of the ruled in the eyes of the law. This is not unlike Crowley's notion of the law of Thelema that "the slaves shall serve" but also the idea that those who do not have knowledge of their divine self will be easy pickings for the archons and consent to give away their divine power to external authorities. This is especially true metaphysically speaking, as even if the government is so corrupt as to deny their own laws, the knowledge required to become a freeman shows clearly the law is based on Occult principles and so if nothing else it is worth understanding if you want to understand what is really going on. I am interested in practical solutions to the government and rebellion based on pride, ignoring the government and spite based resistance is not as effective as a method that can get you out of having laws apply to you and has worked for others. (despite what the mainstream media might tell you.)

Much in the same way reality constructs can be used as a tool to create services for you, which would not be possible being an individual living alone in the woods (natural Chaos) with no constructs at all, we just have to become aware of how constructs legal or otherwise are created and for what purpose, and how to free ourselves of ones we do not truly wish to consent to. Just as public "servants" believe they are doing good, providing a service for citizens who are customers and employees of the national corporation, the archons which possess those who are not free are corrupted servitors which have become parasitic. If we let others create our constructs for ourselves then we are doomed, all constructs must be in accordance with our true will, our true consensus, in Anarchy this means unanimous consensus where all people KNOWINGLY and without coercion agree to work to create the world they really want. We are like a medieval ceremonial magician which has been tricked into believing it must do service for the demons it conjures rather than the other way around. It is, according to the law, our right to free ourselves from these machinations, but it requires each individual to learn how to do it for themselves, how to use the law for their own benefit rather than be slaves to it. Eventually as more people leave the system in this way the government itself will be made much less powerful, corporations of all kinds will lose their means of acquiring power and conscious Anarchy will ensue.

For corporations, the more lobbyists they can hire with money, the more contributions to campaigns, or money to bribe politicians that they can muster up, the more magick they can supply the politician wizards to control society through casting legal spells. Through this and other means people are made to do the will of the corporations and create the reality that is accordance with that will instead of their own. So it's quite clear that money is to all people who believe in it, a means of creating the reality they want, simply because they all believe in it from their consensus reality. So when people lose sight of the fact that their symbolism is only symbolism, they can become controlled by it, or those who know better and who practice black magick. There are fundamentalist capitalists, just as there are fundamentalist Christians, and often the two are the same, but ironically many a self professed Christian is the real black magician, and not some Occultist who isn't hurting anyone but happens to be summoning up the demons of the Goetia to better themselves spiritually. (Personally I would rather work with spirits who actually want to help me and who I can trust. I also prefer to stay away from thought forms associated with all that Abrahamic dualist mind fuckery, but to each their own.) It is not the symbols which are evil, it is their use, and money may say "in god we trust" but their god rewards those who misuse power, namely everyone who supports hierarchy and domination. Whether or not a person physically does harm as an individual they empower that capitalist tyranny through black magick and so all money is black magick, even if the practice of using sigils it not inherently black magick. Just as a Christian can have their prayers answered if they believe it will be answered, ignorance of it's magical side does not mean the system cannot produce effects in the lives of those who believe it is real. Christians would be better able to have their prayers answered with an Occult understanding of why it works or how to do it more effectively, but instead they consent to having representatives do it according to the whims of that god. Ignorance is not exemption from the law, just as it is not a good idea to walk out in to traffic because you refuse to recognize the authority of traffic laws. In this way much of what the corporations do, they get away with because the corporations aren't always doing black magick on their consumers, or workers, since these people consent. Instead corporations help these citizens or persons to do black magick on third world people, who must be exploited and generally unwillingly to fulfil that consent and are often ruled forcibly by open dictatorships.

The system, both government and economic is in reality nothing but an elaborate means of coercion and deception to get people to consent to spreading death and indirectly murdering and plundering the world for convenience and personal accumulation of material objects. The dirty work is often done by others, but the system works so that these people (politicians, military, black ops, police, corporate workers etc) are empowered by the masses who are allowed to keep a clean conscience but reap some of the rewards if they are willing to pay tribute to their rulers. Taxes, or using the money sigil to empower the rulers is the main way this is accomplished, corporations are often the most powerful rulers these days, but it's the government (or mercenaries hired by the government) who do the most direct authoritarian activities, things such as war and creation of laws etc. So as the world is the mirror of an individual's mind, through consent to such things, through spending that empowers such things, the archons of the mind are fed and convenient lies infect the mind taking over rebellious truth. Truth allows a person to really take control of their own lives in accordance with their true will and so it is fundamentally opposed to systems of hierarchy and control. In this way humanity has been enslaved and the fruits of our labour enjoyed by the few, while all others enjoy artificial scarcity in order to drive up the prices of imaginary money, based on an imaginary value system. All the while people wonder what to do to make the world a better place? Still don't believe in magick? Go to the store and buy something.

By getting you to agree to definitions you don't understand you can be made to consent to things you are ignorant of, if you don't know what questions to ask, your opponents aren't going to tell you how to play their game, you are responsible for your own awareness. Often the rulers aren't above cheating, but knowing the rules helps you to know what is really going on and how to get around rules yourself, you can also stop them from cheating so much when you can point out the rules. In many cases you don't need to throw yourself onto the gears of the machine all the time, there are wrenches that can work even better in the long run; you just need to know where the critical targets are.

My advice if we wish to make the world a better place, stop buying into the mind games of black magicians. It is possible to learn how to cast spells on the system using the legal language and protocol, but it is a specific and clearly defined kind of magick and it demands knowledge of the system. I am not a legal expert and cannot legally offer legal advice because they have cast a spell that only trained and initiated wizards of their order can do that, but I do advise you to learn more. By "claiming a right" and learning how to write your own contracts and what constitutes a contract you can get the government to agree to your demands. You must however learn to use your ability to opt out of "de facto" contracts that are dependent on your legal name, once you know what you are doing you can use the system against itself and help to free others.

All the while we must keep in mind most of the people within the system do not fully comprehend what they are doing, they often honestly think they are providing a service. A cop is basically a special kind of armed security guard for the bank and the employees of the banks are subsidiaries or collateral for the countries corporate government. As I alluded to before, much of how we have consented to these "services" is done through what is called a "tacit agreement," meaning we consent through our inability to say no, as they essentially ask, "if you agree say nothing." For example the government corporation will put out some notice, perhaps for rezoning an area, hold a public meeting which almost no one will go to and then it will pass. They also do this with elected officials, sending out notice in legalese designed to appear as though it is not an offer of a service but a declaration of authority. However it is a notice which you must respond to in the proper manner if you do not wish to be represented by these people as saying nothing is taken as a “tacit agreement.”

We can do this kind of thing as well and when done in the proper legal manner it is possible to get the government to consent to your own contracts in which you can claim your rights as a free human being. For example by sending them letters with the right language you can get them to enter into a “tacit agreement” that if the police stop you for statutory reasons as a person with freeman status you can charge them money for your time! Since their government is limited by budget and time, your letters which can cost $200 simply to reply to can act as contracts and will eventually fall through the cracks of their bureaucracy, allowing you to cast your spell on them. As they are legally bound to reply to certain kinds of letters, such as to clarify definitions of words you can post pone certain requests by them costing them a lot of money, eventually they will give up trying to get you to consent to their contract. (This could potentially have activist applications, maybe even more than mailing your turds as I suggested before! As 50 people X $200 X 100 photocopied and slightly altered letters = a lot of costs for the government and a lot of time the bureaucrats cannot spend enslaving people.) When this happens they will in effect consent to your “claim of right” and by their own rules you will have gained what you have asked for. Once you have notarized proof that your spell has been consented to by the government, the spell will be secure but only if you know their rules in how to set it up.

As the Romans said, “Quod non est in actis, non est in mundo” or “what is not in the documents does not exist” meaning that their reality is a bureaucratic manifestation, a spell of written words which creates their empire and that a free person is someone who lives in the “margins of society.” This also means that if you are to free yourself you need to create documentation that you are free, in order to disassociate yourself from the entity or “person” to which they have documentation. A human born but without the documentation, the birth certificate and social security number who has not had their rights signed away by their parents does not exist within their fictional statutory legal system. (Something to consider if you are having a child) Once you know how to free yourself from their artificial world, you will not be subject to their laws anymore, (only common law) you will be outside the black magick prison of bureaucracy.

These laws that hinder people are the direct result of hierarchical governments because corruption of some kind is inevitable within them and no matter what the original constitutional rights, the law can always eventually be changed to suit the purposes of those rulers who want ever increasing power. This is much the same as our egos, if you are not conscious of what is beyond, of what constructs are within you, then the ego will grab more and more power never being satisfied until you are totally wrapped up in illusion and slavery. Either we work to abolish the system and the ego or we will come to be openly ruled through dictatorial militaristic means which does not even pretend to be free. This legal pursuit of the “sovereign” self definitely is not the only tactic that should be employed by an Anarchist and certainly the corrupt nature of the legal system makes it something we cannot depend on. Anarchy will not be achieved by a court ruling but by knowing how they entrap humanity we are better able to disentangle people from the clutches of their nefarious tentacles. Being in denial of the system, hating it, even desiring to get out of it are not going to free you from the system, you don't need to be a lawyer but it is pretty crucial to find the cracks in the wall for us to knock them down, especially if we expect to show others how to free themselves. (Spiritually we can liken the sovereign self to the “higher self” or enlightened being. Hating the physical will not bring about enlightenment and so we need to learn how the mind works, we also need to keep in mind compassion means helping others, not just focusing on our own liberation.) Even if they refuse to follow their own rules, the law is a consensus reality and so the more people we have working in this direction, working to secede from the state the more we can weaken their reality and strengthen ours. We were all born into sin in that we were born into the system and surrendered as chattel to the banks by our ignorant parents; so we must free ourselves by becoming cognisant of how we are enslaved. The first step is getting people aware that the system and money is not real, just like borders and laws none of it has any real power that we do not give it. You are not your ID card, nor are you your birth certificate and a corporation is not its assets, but our consent to identify the world with such abstractions keep our minds in a cage.

As much as I hate the government the more I research the legal system the more I am able to exercise freedoms I didn't realize I had. I am not saying that we should limit ourselves to legal activism, but that we should use tactics that help us to dismantle the system and this is clearly a potentially powerful vehicle for getting us part of the way to our goal. I am not talking about reform, but total refusal to consent to systems which are not part of your will and getting what is known as "Freeman on the land status," which as a tactic is a giant leap on the road to the total abolition of the government. (With the term "Freeman" we see yet more sexism in the system) You being a free person alone is not enough, everyone must become free and when that happens then the last remnants of hierarchical organization will have no foundation to support them and will ultimately crumble into Anarchy, for Anarchy is the only way in which people can knowingly and consciously consent according to their true will.

We need a revolution of the mind and lifestyle and not just of the government. We do not need to go back to the gold standard, we need to abolish the monetary system, becoming a free person on the land will be good, but it will not be total Anarchy for all people. We need to make sure others can live in a sane manner, especially if we are going to avoid ecological annihilation or avoid the global conquest of the economic empire. The outer sickness is a symptom of the inner sickness, we must choose between sustainability and eventual death. Either we as humans learn to be Anarchists or we will inevitably destroy ourselves and we will deserve it too. If these ideas are scary to those with wealth it is because these ideas say that we must all change and stop striving only for destructive comfort, it is scary for them to think the reality they created for us would sneak into their little bubble of an illusionary world which is all they know, pure self indulgent egotism. It is scary for them to think they would have to do things for themselves, to work with others as equals rather than tyrants, if this scares you then you are scared of life, and if you should fear life then you welcome death, for those who love life may wish to defend themselves rather than let you take them with you.

One way or another with the cowardly selfish acts that are perpetrated in the name of the law the consequences mean death, for it is an unsustainable system that requires exponential growth for all eternity. This goes beyond political parties and even countries, the system cannot be reformed, it must be abolished, this is even truer if the writers of the constitution actually had good intentions, and it is proof that governments become increasingly corrupt. The economic and legal system is the reflection of the metaphysical prison in which we find ourselves, as we are one, if one person is not free then none are free. Wilful ignorance isn't an excuse to allow tyranny to happen, you may not realize exactly what it is you are consenting to, but you still end up creating that kind of a reality. They do make the information available to those who care to look, but since most do not care to look, they get people to agree to things they do not understand. So by wilfully being ignorant in regards to what you agree to, you are consenting to let them use and channel your creative will and potential to create realities by mechanisms you do not understand and which are not for your own benefit. We are coming to the limits of what this world has to offer and to the limits of what the people will put up with, there are no neutral people on a sinking ship, nor will arguing about who is steering things do anyone any good, it's time to wake up and take action or humanity and the rest of life on Earth will pay a steep price.

If you are in the law, then you are in a sense possessed by it, ignorant of it, but if you can see the law for what it is and separate yourself from it legally, you can get it to work for you. Through such knowledge you can rid yourself of the energetic parasites, or what are, according to what we are told, "public servants" (servitors or archons) who are supposed to be helpful. Although in some cases like demons they will try to trick you into becoming a slave to their system, many of them do really mean well and are trying to fulfil their role as they see it, they are doing what people have asked them to through their consent, which has been created for them in the charade we call the system of society.

Since these “public servants” have no real knowledge of anarkhos, or being outside the law they are totally linked with the law while in that identity. Particular politicians may or may not be conscious of the metaphysical or historic roots of this legal magick and may or may not have some conspiratorial ancient tradition of arcane knowledge and we can argue this forever. What is undeniable is that their legal and economic system is part of this kind of Occult memetic lineage and so functions in the exact same way and so by definition public servants are archon possessed black magicians. If you don't believe me then learn how a Mason lodge operates and then look at parliamentary and congressional procedures, it is also related to the bureaucracies of the Roman and Byzantine empires which had very definite ritualized theocratic elements.

We do not recognize this because they have purposely made the legal system confusing and complicated but etymology shows this is quite literally the case. Justice, Judge, Judicial, Jurist, Jury, Jurisprudence, all come from the word iurare meaning "to swear," from ius (gen. iuris) "law" yewes “ meaning "to pronounce a ritual formula," or the Avestan yaoz-da to "make ritually pure." Jurisdiction then essentially means the consecrated or ritually pure area under the “law” or spells of the ritual formula which govern a land and which is controlled by legal powers, in this case the “magistrates” of the government. (a word which is etymologically linked to magi, or magician) The word “office” “official” and “officer” come from from old French “ofice” a "place or function; divine service" and from Latin “officium” which among other things means “ceremonial observance.” (in Ecclesiastical Latin, "church service") Office itself comes from “opus” referring to work, “originally of agriculture later extended to religious acts, it's cognates: Sanskrit apas- "work, religious act." So the state “office” of the “minister” (which is etymologically rooted as a priest's title and still used in that way today) makes a “prime minister” much like a pontifex maximus or high priest of the civil religion, (It is a title of the pope and the Roman emperor in his theocratic role) who creates a cabinet of ministers or “secretaries,” a word which means people who are “entrusted with secrets.” A “delegate” comes from “legate” meaning an "authorized representative of the pope," betraying yet more theocratic influences on government while a “senator” means "old, old man" (like senile) denoting the agism and patriarchy of government. A “legislator” means proposer of law, coming from “legis” meaning law and “lator” meaning “proposer” which itself comes from “oblate” meaning "person devoted to religious work." With a law being made from a “bill” just like a dollar “bill” or “bill” meaning something owed comes from Latin bulla meaning "decree, seal, sealed document," just like a “papal bull,” but if we go back further it literally means “amulet for the neck" and hence "seal" and so magickal “amulets” or sigils are created by a “person devoted to religious work.”

To trespass means more than going on someone else's land, it means “an unlawful act causing injury to the person, property, or rights of another” and etymologically means "transgress, offend, sin," with the word “sin” etymologically meaning guilty. This of course makes sense as when a theocracy makes laws to be guilty of a crime is to sin and in fact the word “crime” originally meant “sinfulness” which is why criminals perform “penitence” in the “penitentiary.” Some etymologists think the word guilt means debt and in some languages it is the same word, meaning a person must pay a debt to society, which makes sense in that the courts are a commercial enterprise running under “maritime law” meant for merchants, or corporations aka governments, so that to be found guilty is to be found in debt to the corporation. (This is much like how the church sold “indulgences” for money talismans, charged by “sins” to feed the archon's system.) When laws are made “official” we say they are “sanctioned” which means to “make sacred” or “ordained” for all those who are sub-ordinate or sub-ordained to the state. There is also the magickal term “conjure” meaning "command on oath," "to swear together; conspire," from com- "together" + iurare "to swear" which refers to “summoning” demons and making them swear allegiance to you. “Conjure” could equally be applied to the practice of making a servitor “person” who has been “summoned” to testify in court swear on the bible or other holy book, thus speaking aloud their intention to be submissive to the court and metaphysically empower it with their affirmations of reality, thus consenting to enter in to the “jurisdiction” of the “judge.” We can see more layers to this mentality by knowing that “jur” is the same root as the Portuguese word “juro” which pertains to “interest” or “usury” because courts were primarily set up to mediate commercial interactions. Due to careful propaganda the context may have changed, but the essence of the words is the same and has the same effects as the original meanings and so we still live in a theocracy, which uses legal magick to enslave us. From the power of their ceremonial observance, old men ordain and make sacred amulets created by those devoted to religious work, which if broken is a sin where the accused “person” is summoned to make an “invocation” or “solemn appeal to deity in witness of truth” in the form of an oath.

When we remember the origins of the money system and the creation of Christianity as a state religion cooked up by Titus Flavius and King Herod, it starts to look as though that if the new testament is the new contract, it was a contract made with the international bankers. This contract would make the peasants into chattel property through the newly emerging feudal system of this Roman theocracy which became the Catholic church. In this way what we call Christianity came from middle eastern bankers working with Titus and other later emperors trying to corrupt the Gnostic rebellion in the Roman empire, then they changed history to make it look as though “Christianity” came first so that the converted peasants would find meaning in their slavery as service to “god.” Just as the IMF and World Bank hold the economies of sovereign nations hostage in order to make governments privatize resources and cut social spending, it seems the ancient bankers managed to influence the Roman state into making the Roman citizens into indentured slaves as a new western prototype of the corporate servitor system. Since many of the keys to the banking religion had been lost during the rebellions, the theocrats decided to form a new system of slavery through the creation of corporations “possessing” contract workers. By sabotaging the economy when demands were not met and strengthening the Sassanid empire who was eager for war, the power of the emperors was threatened, in effect holding the population hostage from the emperor, who would be incited to rebellion if he did not comply. This happened over time as some politicians were more easily controlled by the bankers than others and it appears the emperor Diocletian resisted most as he debased the metal currency making it more fiat and he also instituted somewhat socialist measures. (He also triumphed to some degree against the Sassanids)

We can see this in the etymology of the word “redemption” meaning to redeem, to buy back or ransom, so that through the Catholic church under the corporate name of “Jesus” people find “redemption” from “sin” and so join the Catholic corporation as employees. Redemption in the bible is the English translation of the Greek word agorazo, meaning “to purchase in the marketplace” and was frequently used to refer to the buying of slaves. The idea to Christians being that Christ was buying them back from “bondage” caused by original sin through his crucifixion, but in reality this means they were consenting to become indentured slaves and corporations. Constantine was submitting and in a sense paying the ransom for the peasants to the bankers, using them as collateral just as today government corporations use “citizens” as collateral to work off the national debt and so he got the credit and bullion prices which would allow him to rule. Constantine enslaved the Roman class known as “coloni” essentially turning them into serfs and this was the beginning of what would become the feudal system, though at this time it is more specifically known as the “manorial system.” Constantine also made a new capital for the empire, that of his namesake Constantinople which is not all that far from where Troy used to be, creating a new capital for the international bankers uniting the Middle East and Europe. (His Turkish mother Saint Helena is also from the region and she also played a significant role in Christian history.)

This process reached a new peak with emperor Justinian who further solidified Christianity as the state religion and strengthened the state persecution and murder of Pagans and it is known that more than a few Manichaeans and Gnostics were also killed as a result. It was from Justinian that we find the roots of admiralty law and much of our present civil law in what he called his Corpus Juris Civilis, which also made Christian law the state law and made it so that in order to be a citizen you must be Christian and thus infected by the archons in a kind of corporation of the church, that is the corporation or "body of Christ." Having established a monopoly on religious matters the Church was content to rule over its corporate serfs and collect tithes and use the bullion of the international merchants, getting the peasants in to debt was no longer necessary, they were the property of the aristocrats. So it is the religion of tyrants did not mind the limitations imposed on banking, they had acquired a new level of control for the archon corporations that not even the Babylonians had managed to achieve.

While King Herod and his crony religious leaders helped to create Christianity we should not assume Jews are controlling the Vatican, but that in general it was obviously the other way around. The Catholic church such as with Justinian has clearly persecuted Jews and has continued to attempt to convert them by any means necessary and so we should not suppose that Jewish religious leaders associated with the cult of the tyrant actually care about their own people and instead realize all these various archon infected psychopaths just want power. That is Jewish theocrats like any kind of leaders are all too willing to sacrifice civilians they deem expendable, with the vast majority of Jewish civilians being just as oblivious as the vast majority of civilians in general.

While the conversion process is today presented as a voluntary process due to Christianities supposed superiority as a religion, as I said before the word Pagan means country dweller, in that it was the cities where the wealth and trade existed and Christians lived and practised their high financial magick. A more honest appraisal of the conversion process shows that it was due to ruthless and conniving political, military and economic oppression that people converted, followed by further forcibly appropriating Pagan customs and holy sites. Despite legal measures, conversion was a gradual process which started out brutally and became increasingly worse, culminating in the inquisition. (Christian militarism and oppression is also one of the overlooked reasons for the Viking invasions of the middle ages) We can see throughout it's history that Christianity has been spread through the power of economics and with that ideology came its merciless treatment of the environment and non Christians to produce industries, industries which would then further its war machine to conquer and colonize new territories.

In fact it was the papal bull called the "Romanus Pontifex" in 1455 which gave governments the authority to conquer all non Christian lands and "capture, vanquish, and subdue the Saracens, Pagans, and other enemies of Christ," and to "put them into perpetual slavery." This decree would later be used to legitimize the colonization of the Americas and many other places, requiring nothing more than conducting the proper rituals of claiming as Columbus had done by planting his flag talisman. This black magick spell was a doctrine that would later be called the "doctrine of discovery" and was used by the American government as the basis of their authority and the right to break treaties with natives and otherwise screw them over. The word "doctrine" comes from doctor, meaning "church father," from the old French "doctour," from Medieval Latin meaning "religious teacher, adviser, scholar," so that as universities were originally run by the church, if you had a doctorate you were a church father who had a degree in the increasingly weaponized form of Hermeticism called science. (As scientists became independent from the church, there would be some "blow back," but it is still true science serves its subsidiary corporations we call nation states.) It was from Papal bulls like this that much of international law was developed and given the extent of the Catholic empire, its very name meaning "universal" it is clearly intended as a new world order which will bring people under its authority, and only its authority. This idea is common in all forms of Christianity, but in terms of the history of western law can perhaps most clearly be illustrated through the Papal Bull of Pope Boniface VIII called "Unam Sanctum." This decree basically said that the Pope had power over the Christian kings and would now be subject to him, though before they were certainly influenced by Church this made the kings much less powerful. In fact this Papal Bull was one of the main problems King Philip the Fair had with the Catholic church and certainly would have played a role in his coupe and his execution of the Knights Templar. So as it was Catholic law that the Pope ruled over the Christian kings (even if some kings didn't like it or cooperate) and non Christians had no rights, as the European powers colonized new land, the colonies would effectively be under Catholic control just as the kingdoms in Europe and this helped to influence the creation of the legal systems of these colonies.

More recently the Vatican did business with Hitler, Franco and especially with Mussolini in order to gain wealth and status as an independent nation, it also laundered gold for the Nazis and helped them to escape after the war. In Franco's Spain Catholicism was the state religion and so enjoyed a level of power it had not had in some time, all the while Freemasons in Spain, Italy and Germany were persecuted heavily. There is a common conspiracy theory today that the famed Freemason Albert Pike planned both world wars and another yet to come in order to take over the world, yet if we trace this theory to its source we see that it comes from a Catholic Cardinal Caro y Rodriguez and former intelligence officer in the Royal Canadian Navy, one William Guy Carr. This theory is wrong for a number of reasons not least of all because "Pike" talks about things which didn't exist at the supposed time of writing, things like Fascism and Nazis. Even if you believe Pike planned these groups in advance, name and all, the NSDAP started as a socialist group until it was taken over by Hitler, who infiltrated it as a spy working for the government. Though of course today the Churches role in Spain, Italy and Germany has been down played and the Nazis are portrayed as Satanic Occultists, it is not hard to find the truth that Christianity and especially Catholicism played a huge role in their propaganda and that Hitler was raised Catholic and inspired by the Church bureaucracy.

Today the church is the most successful hierarchical institution in history and perhaps also the richest organization on the planet, in fact due to its huge amount of property, bullion and many priceless works of art, its wealth is actually incalculable to even its own accountants. (though they don't take kindly to outside auditors) Today it has stocks in the biggest banks, weapons and oil corporations and is on the US governments watch list as a haven for money launderers in its own private banks. If we are to theorize about a group of black magicians who actually consciously perform rituals, the Catholic church is undeniably among them, due to its harbouring of massive amounts of paedophiles it could even be argued they engage in raping young children as part of the secret practices of their religion, using rape based sex magick for their cult of death. Here I can only scratch the surface on nefarious activities of the Catholic Church, but many conspiracy theorists believe that even the dreaded Rothschild bankers work for the Vatican and no doubt this church has unusual power in politics and finances. Not only this, but since the church has been welcomed by most governments of the world, it's organizations (especially through the Jesuits) have open access to places that government institutions like the CIA must be very careful about entering and so the church has it's own unrivalled intelligence networks. Those who are interested will find all kinds of information regarding this corrupt institution and its subsidiaries the Knights of Malta, the Knights of Columbus and especially the Jesuits and how this church even has connections to Babylon and how much of its symbolism (Such as the robes and miters etc) is derived from far older Pagan practices, showing quite clearly that it is merely the continuation of Roman and Babylonian theocracy. (The Byzantine empire is also undeniably the continuation of the Roman empire in many ways.)

This information sure changes the meaning of key parts of the bible, with "god" being El, the god of the banking religion and "Jesus Christ" the son being the appropriated name used for the Roman branch. To my knowledge this is perhaps most explicitly explained in Ephesians chapter 1 especially verses 7-9 and 13-14. "In him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, in accordance with the riches of God's grace that he lavished on us. With all wisdom and understanding, he made known to us the mystery of his will according to his good pleasure, which he purposed in Christ." "And you also were included in Christ when you heard the message of truth, the gospel of your salvation. When you believed, you were marked in him with a seal, the promised Holy Spirit, (the dove) who is a deposit guaranteeing our inheritance until the redemption of those who are God's possession—to the praise of his glory." In addition to this Ephesians chapter 1 uses some very interesting Gnostic language at the end, this suggests the same kind of black humour or making a mockery of the Gnostic scriptures that Titus did with his prophecies about the “son of man.” Those verses in the bible which can be interpreted against the banks and money systems, like so much of the new testament is intended to be to provide credibility to the new state religion as it incorporated and enslaved the peasants. The Gnostic rebels thought they had destroyed the banks financial knowledge and they had done a good job, but the new system of feudalism would prove to be even more totalitarian and would succeed in turning the people against the Gnostics who had tried to free them. If there is a dualism in Gnosticism it is expressed in the fact that many of the scriptures can either be interpreted in a non literal Gnostic Anarchist context, or in an authoritarian Christian kind of way which serves the rulers, the second way leads to utter ruin and the first leads to the freedom given by the “spirit of wisdom” or Sophia. There are many more examples in regards to “redemption” and other similar economic language in both Gnostic and Christian texts, but as the Gnostics actually practised the abolition of money and most Christians only preached it, we can see who is truly corrupted. (see also the Parable of Talents - Matthew 25:14-30)

Whether or not you believe this corruption today is intentional or just a memetic spell cast by some ancient theocracy that somehow got out of control doesn't matter, the effect is the same and it is working extremely well for itself as it eats human consciousness and the natural world for breakfast. If the Occult is the use of symbols to effect reality, then there is not a more systematic and complex example then the political and economic bureaucracies we find ourselves in and the fact that it is not overtly recognized literally makes it more Occult. Now that you have been told you have no excuse, you can choose to educate yourself, or you can be a slave to forces you do not understand and which will bring about yours and everyone else's death. All humans and real beings should and I believe eventually will be free of the law, as well as corporate interests and the tyranny of the rulers and when that happens the world will be united.

If the world is going in the wrong direction today, it is because history has been turned on its head and it is also interesting to note the original Bavarian “Illuminati” according to mainstream historians were basically Anarchist according today's definitions. (they were founded on May 1st 1776) While the word “Illuminati” is used today as a general term for the secret government, they were originally demonized by generally Christian right wing conspiracy theorists, but if we look at what the group actually says are their goals we get a very different picture, we see they are demonized because of their secular and anti religious views. Many “conspiracy theories” are either from Christians, or based on information from Christian researchers and while many of them have real points, there is no doubt a lot of bias and paranoia, especially with anything to do with Occultism or anything which challenges the theocratic ambitions of that religions supposed monopoly on spirituality.

On the surface at least, the Illuminati was heavily influenced by the Pagan traditions such as science, democracy and religious tolerance that had initiated the “enlightenment” philosophies of the renaissance, their name refers to the ideas of scientific illuminism and so the group found itself in opposition to the entrenched oligarchs of the time, both religious and secular. (Many conspiracy theorists seem to act as if everything was great before they or the Templars came around.) The writings of Adam Weishaupt the founder of the Illuminati present a very different picture of their ideas than what conspiracy theorists will tell you and the majority of historians consider them a revolutionary group which has now been broken up. They had tried to infiltrate various governments to spread freedom, apparently not unlike what Bakunin planned to do with his “invisible legion,” (though Bakunin's group is more like the invisible college of Rosicrucians) but after the Austrian government cracked down on them they were either destroyed or went completely covert. Even mainstream history shows the Illuminati were exposed when one of their couriers was struck by lightning and killed, and on his body the written plans of the Illuminati were found. The stated goals of this group were: 1:Abolition of monarchy and all ordered governments, 2:Abolition of private property, 3:Abolition of inheritance, 4:Abolition of patriotism, 5:Abolition of the family unit, (i.e. of marriage, all Christian morality and the institution of the communal education of children) 6:Abolition of all religion.

Now I don't know about you, but those things seem pretty damn good to me, I don't like the idea of forced communal education but there is nothing that says it would not be voluntary and a huge improvement on the relative lack of education at the time. (Or Christianized school systems) It is clear to anyone who knows anything about the world that such things have not happened and that 1: governments are becoming stronger and more like monarchies and that creating an atrocity filled global dictatorship is a pretty bad way to abolish government. 2: Private property is such a dominating factor in today's society that it has destroyed communism and brought the environment of the world to the edge of ruin. I don't think I need to point out how private property exists in this world, free market capitalism is more widespread than ever. 3: Inheritance clearly exists except for taxes and this doesn't apply in the same way to the super rich, who are of course the people who should be taxed the most. 4: Patriotism is crucial to the government and political system of today, especially in America. This goal is used by conspiracy theorists to illustrate the supposed loss of American sovereignty by organizations like the UN. The fact that ending patriotism is thought to be a bad thing never seems to bring up the idea that it is through patriotism that wars are started and all real criticism of the government and society is subdued. 5: Abolition of the family, clearly it also hasn't dawned on these kinds of theorists that the atomic family unit is completely unnatural and a method of control for the establishment to keep people in wage slavery and to limit any kind of real societal support system not based on competition and xenophobia. As they say, "it takes a village to raise a child" and when the sense of community is so weak as so many presently are that it does not feel compelled to properly look after children, it sticks them in orphanages or crappy foster care. So when children are in the eyes of the law property, then it is no surprise they are raised uncaring, selfish and capitalistic with a lack of trust towards that community. Religious education also forces religion on children, people (which includes children) should be allowed to believe what they want and religion apart from elective courses should be separate from general education so as to give kids a choice about what to believe. (Though of course a completely Anarchist education is what we need) 6: The abolition of religion is clearly not happening in any way other than peoples total dissatisfaction with superstitions and authoritarian institutions, clearly fundamentalism is very much alive and well and one of the greatest threats to humanity and life on this planet. Religion is continuously used to control the masses and Christians are being herded into a contrived apocalypse scenario with Islam in a mutually self fulfilling prophecy of bigotry and intolerance. "Family values" and other theocratic tendencies masking themselves as social conservatism are doing all they can to erode any kind of secularism which has been acquired through Masonic revolutions and scientific advances. Other "conspiracies" of the Illuminati for which they are hated are that they cared about the environment and wanted to make women equal.

Obviously if these are the goals of the Illuminati and they are secretly running the world then they are doing a terrible job of achieving their goals and are actually going in the exact opposite direction! Why would a group bent on destroying all the governments and religions of the world create tyrannical states and invade everyone, put in draconian laws and encourage religious fundamentalism? There are only a few possibilities that I can think of, either the goals of this Illuminati are not what history says, or they are not actually in power. The third explanation is that they had infiltrated the governments and hierarchies but instead for whatever reason they became corrupted and deviated from their goals, perhaps having become alienated from the people they had originally tried to free, they became elitist. Last and most unlikely is that they are trying to make everyone consent to Anarchism by providing people with endless examples of how corrupt hierarchical institutions are.

As much as I like the idea of such an old Anarchist group causing revolutions, upon learning a bit more it does seem the most likely scenario is that the "Illuminati" were lying about their intentions and goals. (Though this crucial fact is missed by pretty well all conspiracy theorists) While the "Illuminati" no longer exists, they carry on trying to take over the world under their original form which is in fact the Jesuits under the Catholic church. It is undeniably true the group's founder Adam Weishaupt and many other leaders within it were trained as Jesuits and the fact that the group was organized hierarchically at all is a clear sign of its corruption and hypocrisy. In 1773 the Jesuits were banned from the Catholic church due to pressure from European monarchies, who were upset over all their criminal and conspiratorial behaviour. (much like the Templars before them) This is very telling given the corruption of the Vatican and we might think of the Jesuits as the church's CIA. Their job was to convert non Catholics by any means necessary and they would aid in colonization and subvert protestant and other governments in an attempt to make the Catholics all powerful. After being said by conspiracy theorists to have had a hand in the French revolution, followed by the fall of the Mason Napoleon, the Jesuits were reinstated in 1814 and it was business as usual. Mainstream historians believe the Illuminati were destroyed in 1785 and so it is not unthinkable such a powerful and international group as the Jesuits could survive illegally for that 29 years. (Especially since the Catholic church probably still secretly supported them)

What's more a high ranking Mason named Adolf Knigge left the Illuminati after bringing in many fellow Masons in to the group specifically due to its stated egalitarian revolutionary aims, his conclusion however was that it was run by ex Jesuits and so he left and spoke out against them. From this perspective it is highly likely the Illuminati was created by the Jesuits to infiltrate the basically Anarchist Masonic groups and use them for conspiratorial ends! However, according to some scholars the Jesuit infiltration of some other Masonic groups probably started a few decades earlier in France, as with the advent of the "royal arch" degrees and it is in these degrees that we find the most authoritarian symbolism.

While we cannot lump all Masons together and the original 3 degrees of the blue lodge are mostly egalitarian, after the Catholic infiltration there were 30 degrees added on which included much more authoritarian symbolism in both the "Scottish rite" and "York rites," but also the "royal arch degrees" which are all intimately related to the banking cult. While it's possible some Templars went to Scotland, as I hinted at before I do think that the origin story of the Scottish rite Masonry was added later by the Jesuits in order to make Masonry more Catholic. We do have to recognize the fact that some Masons are still working for the Christian religion of tyranny or are otherwise trying to impose their fascist capitalism on the world, but before the 1700's it does seem that the Catholic infiltration was very limited in this regard and it was not until the 1800's that they got very far.

Most Christians ignore Jesuit conspiracy theories, yet before the Illuminati I do not know of really any terrible Masonic conspiracies being proposed, only egalitarian revolutionary ones and so there does seem to be something to it. One thing is for sure, it does not make any sense at all that a group with the Illuminati's stated goals are in power, but it does make a lot of sense that the Jesuits having been engaged in counter reformation tactics would try to infiltrate and discredit the Freemasons. Given that the monarchies were fighting back against Jesuit infiltration the Illuminati would be created as "controlled opposition" to take some pressure off the church and to distract these governments with radical progressive revolutionaries, thus giving them some motivation to accept Catholic help in the repression. The Jesuits would simultaneously split the Masonic/Templar revolutionaries and use their symbolism to frame them for all kinds of nefarious activities, eventually leading to many of the conspiracy theories they are now famous for. Given the loss of power and credibility the Catholics were facing in the rise of science and the end of their dark ages, the Jesuits needed to break the secularization movement of the scientific illuminists who wanted a more Alchemical Pagan world. So if the Jesuits were pretending to be Anarchist Occultists, it just shows that it was scientific illuminism with all its various Occult influences (not just the Illuminati or Masons) that has been fighting for freedom, that originally most Masons were very much the egalitarian rebels while the Christians and especially the Catholics have been working to enslave everyone. They may have infiltrated some Masonic groups, but luckily due to the decentralized Anarchist structure of the lodges, some remained free and egalitarian. While obviously not all Masons were Anarchists, those who were revolutionaries could at times be found fighting along side with a variety of other more Pagan Alchemical and Gnostic groups which are non Masonic, yet have similar Anarchist intentions.

There have been advancements towards these “goals” of the “Illuminati” but they have largely come from the people, the grass roots movements, many of which arose in a largely leaderless fashion. So we can see that the Anarchists or illuminists are being used as scapegoats by the Christian capitalist establishment to spread disinformation and demonize anyone who wants to go in the right direction, to pin them up as devil worshippers. As the Jesuits were behind the Illuminati it is highly suspicious that their messenger was struck by lightning as if he was struck down by “god” carrying the groups goals which would reveal them to the Bavarian government. Thus the real oligarchs are using newspeak to say that Anarchism is tyrannical, that those who work for the abolition of government are setting up a dictatorship. This problem is further exacerbated when non Christian conspiracy theorists rely on bias Christian sources for their information, which is then picked up second or third hand by other non Christians, but are people who still lack any real awareness of non conspiratorial perspectives of Occultism. This also serves to limit all criticism of the government to the realm of “conspiracy theory” and to fracture the people so that no one really knows what is going on.

Xenophobia and fear of other religions is a big theme in many conspiracy theories, many Christians fear Satanists yet it is their tyranny which inspired it's invention, they fear the UN and foreign domination, yet fail to understand America's domination of the UN and it's colonial and neocolonial empire. They look back at American history to a time when they believe people were free, but often totally ignore all the historic injustices perpetrated by the country since its inception and most hilarious of all, many love the founding fathers yet hate Freemasons. Many Christians in to conspiracy theories fear the “new world order” and the New Age philosophies as an attempt to create a “one world religion” yet believe anything but free market capitalism and that form of globalization is the plot of communist demons and so they await Christ’s return to instill his “new world order” and his “one world religion” and send all us sinners to eternal damnation. Eerily many Evangelical Christians are Zionists because they are actively trying to fulfil the prophecies that will make the apocalypse a reality and likewise many Jews are Zionists because they are awaiting their own Messiah who will take over the world for them.

Any regular history can show that the Catholic Church was obviously corrupt since it's formation, but we should not think that most protestant Christians have been any better. Just look at the history of England, Queen Elizabeth and John Dee or even puritans and we can see they have their own theocratic ambitions, we just don't call it a conspiracy because they openly rule the world. What freedom we have is largely thanks to Masonry and scientific illuminism, without which we would be living in the dark ages under theocratic monarchies. But then the poor white Christians think they are the victims of this world and anything that isn't their brand of Christianity is clearly created by the devil and they are the only ones who see through it. Many protestants are all too willing to admit the corruption of the Catholics, yet they do not understand their bible was created by the Roman empire, that whatever is in it that proposes freedom and equality comes from Gnosticism. Christians demonize all Occultists, yet they do not understand that since Christianity comes from Gnosticism, it is really the culmination or syncretism of all the Occult mystery traditions of the ancient Pagan world. No, the new world order is not ruled by Satanists, it is ruled by Christians like the Jesuits and Catholics and WASPS of the world. Modern protestantism is so far removed from even the original non Gnostic Christianity of the patriarchs, that even if the Jesuits are doing Occult rituals, they are more authentically Christian than WASPS. Despite claims that bigots/authoritarian people aren't “real Christians,” there are far more fake Christians than “real” ones and the “real” do nothing to counter the actions of the “fake.” If the measure of a “real Christian” is that they are more liberal and tolerant than the fake, then by this logic there were basically no Christians in existence until the past century, and even then only in isolated pockets of democratic countries. It never occurs to such Christian apologists that most Christians are among the worst people for actually following the teachings of Jesus and that people of non Abrahamic religions often do a much better job, even if they do not know anything of Jesus. This is because his rather simplistic and unoriginal teachings are implied in any religion which seeks to promote truth or love or raising consciousness, but in Christianity this serves only to present the brand of the religion as that of being loving, when in reality it is the justification of all kinds of atrocities. If you believe “god” will send to hell all those who do not believe in completely unlikely, unreasonable and contradictory stories, then your god knows nothing of love and any talk of it is lies and propaganda, the “moral” justification for authoritarian dictatorship.

In fact as Christianity was designed as a theocracy by the Roman royal family, Herod and the Masons practising in Herod's Temple, then the oligarchs are the “real Christians,” while those who believe in equality and freedom have Gnostic inclinations. The bible only contains these Gnostic kernels of truth because it provides the illusion of credibility and keeps Christian society from being so corrupt that it would implode from fundamentalist infighting. These Gnostic teachings in the bible are used to justify Christian atrocities as they can thus claim to be “righteous” and justified in all their atrocities, they also focus so much on this righteousness they do not even realize they are hypocrites. For example, they say Jesus taught peace and so we should murder Muslim peasants and so the essentially Anarchist and Gnostic teachings of Jesus are a candy coating on a poison pill. Oh yes the devil can cite scripture, but it is a pretence to aid conversion to his death cult and only serves the powerful. The cognitive dissonance in Christianity does have at least one clear imperative and that is fear, that is Christianity teaches its followers to spread the disease at any cost and destroy any resistance, because any tolerance of alternative thinking is a risk that some soul will go to hell or otherwise bring about the wrath of “god.”

These Christian conspiracy theorists who bemoan the end of the “good old days” of “pure capitalism” as in the 1800's with its open imperialism and slavery, its local sweat shops and robber barons have completely missed the point in their over simplification, which is simply that all power corrupts. Even orthodox Jesus says that a “love of money is the root of all evil” yet the hypocrites say that this does not mean we should abolish money, only that we should not love it, yet why keep something around which we do not love and which is indirectly the root of all “evil?” To them I say “No one can serve two masters. Either you will hate the one and love the other, or you will be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve both God and money.” That if you wish to call yourself a Christian, “go and sell all you possess and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven.” Yes they claim if only we had “real capitalism” and everyone was a “real Christian” like them the world would be a paradise again, but their brand of Christianity has created the system we live under and the “true” capitalism they dream of has never existed. (as oppose to functional Anarchism which has and does exist) Even when such Christians help the poor through their “charity” it never occurs to them that the fact that they have money at all means they are not following the Jesus of their bible, that they are contributing by their work and consent to the system and the power structures which created the poverty in the first place! All those homeless Christians who actually live as Jesus told them to are generally shit on by these so called “Christians” and so is the rest of the world. Christianity does have it pearls of wisdom which it stole from Gnosticism, but has added all kinds of pro Roman, pacifist appeasement tactics and so it serves as nothing more than a guise of credibility for the religion to act as pressure release valve for the rulers of this world and so it is nothing but slave morality.

Christians use the excuse that we should “render unto Caesar what is Caesar's” but as this saying is also found in the Gnostic Gospel of Thomas, a text which has parts older than the gospels of the new testament, we can see that it is not condoning the system, but saying that if the government wants money, give it to them and then give your spirituality the attention it deserves. That a true follower of Christ has no need of money, that as in the Sermon on the Mount we should be getting off the grid and having faith that the divine will take care of us, as it does the birds and animals. That we should rely on our own magick rather than that of the governments and bankers and that holding on to archon coin talismans is idol worship and shows a lack of faith that you can otherwise manifest your needs. We can also see that this makes sense from a certain karmic perspective, that given the magickal nature of the economy, you are committing black magick by refusing to pay back loans which you had consented to pay. Now I can hardly argue against the poor refusing to pay loans made under the ubiquitous duress they face, it is even harder to be independent of the system in these days than it was in Roman times. However, metaphysically speaking Jesus is right to point out the importance of honouring your contracts and as a man who would prefer pacifism it would not be surprising if he taught that change can occur through something like the IWW notion of “building the new society within the shell of the old.” In Thomas Jesus goes on to say, “Congratulations to those who know where the rebels are going to attack. [They] can get going, collect their imperial resources, and be prepared before the rebels arrive.” So, when we understand the context of a Gnostic uprising which the Gnostics believed would bring about their form of Anarchism, we can see that “Jesus” is saying that money is worthless, that if you have made an agreement to give the bankers some form of metal then do so, but that you never should have made those agreements in the first place. However here he also says that those who are Gnostics can just take what items they need now, all goods should be held in common by all humanity and from even orthodox sources (Revelations 3:3 and 16:15) we know that the revolution will come “like a thief in the night” and so we should make ourselves ready.

Now certainly there are metaphysical interpretations of these quotes and so as in Thomas the “rebels” would actually be the Romans rebelling against the kingdom of god which exists without money and in a socialist manner. Among other things, the Gnostic Epiphanes tells us in his Anarchist manifesto “On Righteousness” otherwise translated “On Justice” we read explicitly, “The justice of God is a kind of sharing along with equality. There is equality in the heaven which is stretched out in all directions and contains the entire Earth in its circle.” He goes on to explain how unnatural private property is and that the Gnostic God put up the sun to shine on us all equally, that it did not put any person above another, nor males above females or even humans above animals or plants and so then those who live according to the Gnostic God would act in the same way and live in true equality. Also notice here that Earth is contained in heaven and so is itself a part of heaven, so while I think a more literal interpretation of Thomas was taken up, at least by the more radical Gnostics like the Cainites, even if a more metaphysical meaning was intended, we can interpret Jesus as saying that you can collect the resources of heaven, but as all things on Earth truly belong to heaven and were stolen by the archons, we can prepare for Roman/archon oppression by taking what we need and setting up our own socialist economies. To quote some more from the wise Epiphanes about the life forms of Earth, “In them universality is manifest in justice”...“Common nourishment grows for all beasts which feed on the Earth’s produce; to all it is alike. It is regulated by no law, but rather is harmoniously available to all through the gift of him who gave it and commanded it to grow.” “The ideas of Mine and Thine crept in through the laws which cause the Earth, money, and even marriage no longer to bring forth fruit of common use. For God made vines for all to use in common, since they do not refuse the sparrow or the thief; and similarly wheat and other fruits. But outlawed sharing and the vestiges of equality generated the thief of domestic animals and fruits.” Now this mention of money here is a bit strange, as if it could ever bring forth the fruit of common use, if there is no “mine and thine” then there is no need for money and the whole argument of the text is for a communal way of life in equality. However metal talismans do have the potential to bring forth fruit for the community, as through magick done on the communities behalf and it is true just as he said, that such laws destroyed the original use of the talismans, as used in the oldest fertility cults. Given how Jesus taught in a variety of texts that the kingdom of heaven is within, or as in Thomas it is said to be all around us on Earth, we can see that as there is justice in heaven which is based on equality and socialism and that this is how nature functions, the archons rebel by setting up hierarchy, laws and capitalism.

We do live in a world with oligarchs, but today the best way to find them is not through their symbols, but through the size of a person’s bank account. Money is power in this world, those who have it most often use it to the detriment of other people, because that is an inherent part of our system. A system even more ironically supported by the same kind of right wing Christians who fear the Illuminati Occultist's, demanding the free market capitalist magick which the oligarchs (whoever they are) are obviously using against them. What we see with the creation of most secret societies like the Freemasons, the Jesuits and the Knights of Malta is in fact the war of conspiracies taking place from the time of the middle ages to the 1800's and in more covert forms on to today. WWII then was a war between Catholic Fascists, and Anglo-American Masonic and Protestant capitalists who are themselves tyrannical, but often do at least believe themselves to be fighting for equality. Hitler said openly and repeatedly that he saw himself as fighting Masonry which he thought was controlled by Jewish international bankers like the Rothschilds and while he was obviously insane it does not mean the Rothschilds or Masons do not have their own ambitions for power. Since Christianity destroyed almost all ancient mystery traditions this war is primarily fought between Catholic Fascists and Protestants of various stripes and a wide variety of political beliefs, some essentially Anarchist, some even more authoritarian than the Catholics. (Especially in these days of Evangelicals)

While as I have said there were some Pagan holdouts, for the most part they were absorbed in to the Protestant groups or remained isolated and very small and so relatively powerless. As I mentioned before, there were groups like brethren of the free spirit, or Pagan and Witch resistance groups, more purely Alchemical groups etc but these belong to the most persecuted Anarchist varieties and so they are obviously not in positions of power! While both Protestant and Catholic groups may use Occult symbolism, this is because at the top it is understood by them all that Christianity is in fact Pagan syncretism. It is just the brain washed masses in the middle who think otherwise, wasting their time following spurious leads and waiting for Jesus to rescue them, scared to death of Satan and feeding the archons with all their fear.

Thanks to racist conspiracy theorists like Hitler and many others, (especially in Amerikkka) anyone who speaks up against the Rothschilds is often dismissed as also being a racist, but in reality anyone who is against crony capitalism can find plenty of guilt in that family. This is further confused by Christian conspiracy theorists who still feel obliged to believe in the old testament, yet can see quite clearly there are Zionists and others in the Jewish community who are up to nefarious activities. Not wishing to be viewed as racist, these conspiracy theorists often believe that it is not true Hebrews who are the problem, but "Ashkenazi" Jews or "Khazarians" who converted in to Judaism and have been pretending to be Jews as part of their Satanic war against "god." Redirecting their racism from Hebrews to Khazarians, who many believe to be Ashkenazis, allows them to better avoid being labelled Nazi's, but this still shows a lot of prejudice and ignorance of history. Ashkenazi Jews are Eastern European Jews which genetics definitely show to be of Hebrew origin, while Khazaria was a non Hebrew country that probably converted to Judaism sometime around 740-920 A.D. and so both these conspiracy theories ignore all the fucked up things within Judaism itself and which have been a problem since it's inception. If Ashkenazi Jews are less Jewish genetically, it is because their ancestors mixed with Europeans and so this theory is all kinds of messed up. If Khazarian Jews are still around and causing problems it is not because of race, nor is it because they are Satanists, it is because Judaism is a fucked up religion that encourages all kinds of authoritarian, and psychopathic behaviour no matter what your ethnic background. The old testament is filled with horrendous teachings and clearly existed long before Ashkenazis or Khazarian Judaism and as I have shown and will continue to show, it has been causing problems since it's inception. That Khazarians may be helping the Zionist agenda only shows that we cannot blame any race, but instead we must understand that any group of people who believe in the old testament are prone to this kind of tyrannical archon behaviour and this is because they are infected with a mind virus. (Arguably the Catholic Fascists are even more infected)

Some conspiracies are real, but some theorists can't find anything better than non Christian values or cultures, things like the "gay agenda" or conspiracies to make women equals, xenophobic fears of foreigners and hysterical alarmist views of Islam which progress to various degrees of bigotry, or the dreaded climate change conspiracy to raise taxes. It never seems to occur to them that the oil companies are part of plenty of conspiracies, that it is basically admitted they have been hiring people to put out disinformation about climate change and that while carbon taxes are a scam, it is controlled opposition and this does not mean climate change is fake. Just because the oligarchs profit from climate change in various ways does not mean it is fake, only that they are psychopaths who will destroy this planet before they change their ways. Even if global warming is fake, the environment is so fucked that anything that slows down industrialism is a good thing, if it brings unemployment it will encourage alternative manufacturing grids of an Anarchist variety and clue people in to the fact that all capitalism at best leads to “crony capitalism.”

Unfortunately many conspiracy theorists have their own prejudices, many being capitalist Christians they hate anything remotely left wing or secular and so we see if you still have archons in your mind, it will warp your “good” intentions and make you bias to your own politics. That is people who believe in hierarchy do not see that their own striving for power is itself essentially a conspiracy, that Anarchists and right wing Christians seeking to overthrow the “Illuminati” would themselves technically be part of a conspiracy and labelled by the government as “terrorists.” Without understanding Anarchist principles you do not understand reality and so “good intentions” pave the way to “hell” which for many conspiracy theorists takes shape in their intentions for the yellow brick road that is the gold standard. So it is many groups are actually created to fight the conspiracies of people with different politics and each group has what it considers to be “good” intentions, but they are all doomed to become the “devil” they fight because they are not Anarchist about it.

All these non Anarchist Masons, who often self identify as Christians conquered through capitalism and nationalism, but were far from alone in pursuing this tactic. Christian conspiracy theorists believing Freemasonry to be a Satanic cult have lumped all Masons together and are spurred on by their religious leaders who are overtly controlling them by demonizing everyone else. Priests fill people with fear of hellfire for all those who question their god's dictatorship and so while they may project the devil on to everyone else, they never question their own devilish actions as they are done in service of their god.

This cognitive dissonance is often so blatant I could easily form my own conspiracy theory and explain how capitalist fascists are creating Christian conspiracy theorists to promote a “libertarian” capitalist agenda, a world in which only the corporations have any power and any talk of equality is equated with blasphemy. The John Birch Society and the “Tea Party” certainly play this role, though many are just “useful idiots.” At the very least they are in error about many things and so if in power their actions would cause people pain and so would become the subject of conspiracy theories. We can also see this in the objectivist cult of Ayn Rand who was inspired by social Darwinists and in turn taught the federal reserve high priest Alan Greenspan. Her writings helped inspire the neoconservatives of George Bush Jr's crew of war criminals, people who think that anything but individual greed is the source of all evil. For what is libertarianism but a minarchist government under capitalism, a system that would make plutocrats and corporations the overt rulers of us all and indistinguishable from Mussolini's definition of fascism as “corporatism.” The “tea party” movement is definitely run by crypto-fascists manipulating the dangerously psychotic brainwashed Amerikkans in to dragging the country as far right as possible. They hate “big government” which means social services, yet love big military, they live in the “land of the free” where only the rich have any rights and the “home of the brave” where they require all the weapons in the world and remote controlled drones because they are scared to death of anything even slightly different from them. As most governments are corporations thanks to Justinian we are already in corporatism technically, but the government corporations at least have the pretence of providing social services, that is employee benefits, where as libertarians would strip all workers of all benefits and have us compete even more, for even smaller scraps.

When trying to figure out the veracity of conspiracy theories no one denies the Freemasons exist and surely there are other secret societies as well, but instead of getting caught up in some paranoid vortex of accusations let us first question whether or not the system would actually work without them. With a quick glance at the workings of the system, anyone can see the very nature of capitalism and hierarchies actually demands plotting and power struggles, with ruthless cutthroat policies in order to get ahead. We can blame archons to a certain degree but people must still consent to open themselves up to their influence and so we are still responsible for our actions, furthermore it is undeniable this mentality is not just tolerated, it is glorified. It should be no surprise then that today there are some power mongering Freemasons as it is primarily made up of at least moderately influential people within their community. While in the past they were more revolutionary, today most are capitalists, most are at least in favour of a republic form of government and so whatever Masonry used to be, today it is often very far from Anarchist. What better way for capitalists and professionals like the police and judges to get ahead then with a closed off “old boys’ network” and this is technically a conspiracy.

To be fair however, Masons have overthrown kings, helped to stop the Catholic church and other Christians from their theocratic ambitions and so we cannot act as if they are all despots. The great Anarchist thinker Mikhail Bakunin was a Freemason and it is quite possible the other two original main Anarchist thinkers Pierre Proudhon and Peter Kropotkin were as well. In fact there was a time when most intellectuals of any standing were Masons as the Freemason lodges provided one of the few environments free of Christian and monarchist persecution. It is undeniable Freemasons played a significant role in the rebirth of democratic ideas, the scientific enlightenment or illuminist philosophies and much of what we think of as the improvements of the modern world. While capitalism is obviously a huge mistake, it would also be a mistake to think that all Masons have malevolent or even capitalist intentions or that they don't think they are doing good by spreading such cultures. Masons did play a role in the Paris commune and as I said, Bakunin was vehemently against the Rothschilds and all bankers and so clearly he does not fit the Masonic stereotype. Were Bakunin and the other founders of Anarchism inspired by Masonry?

Well its pretty hard to say in detail, they may have well taken on some of the pirate traditions, but at the very least Anarchism is rooted in the same enlightenment era philosophies. Masons do practice equality among their members and it is their practice to meet “on the level,” that is despite what conspiracy theorists would have you believe, having a higher degree than new people does not mean you get to give orders, everyone is equal. Various lodges are themselves decentralized and loosely affiliated, that while there are corrupted lodges, for the uncorrupted they merely share esoteric information for their philosophical pursuits. While in many lodges talking about politics was supposed to be forbidden, revolutionary groups would find in Masonry an organization which was well suited to secret meetings and other forms of security culture, complete with codes to transmit messages. These kinds of things are required to foment revolt, however this has also made it attractive to elitist conspiracies as well. (Would be revolutionaries would do well to study the Occult to create their own secure codes in order to communicate.)

It must be made clear that there are many different Masonic organizations and that it has no centralized authority outside the conspiratorial groups and we should remember they can be quite different and at times even opposed to each other. While he later became an atheist, Proudhon does say in “What is Property?” that he was at times a Manichean, a Gnostic and an Adamite and so he clearly had a certain interest in the esoteric, if he had access to the texts we have now and had tried magick mushrooms, something tells me he would of been even more interested. Anarchist scholars should do more to investigate the possible influences on Bakunin and the rest, but it is undeniable that Anarchism did not develop in a vacuum and that Masonry, illuminism and humanism which have their roots in ancient mysticism, at the very least helped a lot to pave the way for many Anarchist ideas. Other Freemasons which were highly influential to Anarchism are Voltaire, Rousseau, Leo Tolstoy and possibly Denis Diderot.

All of reality is perspective, the world is like a giant ink blot test and what you see says more about you then it does about the actual world; everything depends on how you look at it. That is one of the reasons I think the symbol of “the all seeing eye” is used to depict the divine. I have seen this eye a number of times on entheogens now, but the fact that I saw this before I had any real knowledge of Egyptian or Masonic symbolism which use it is probably not surprising to a lot of people. This eye has been used in a huge variety of places by a huge variety of people for a huge variety of reasons and has been seen by most people at some time or another, perhaps all people see it when we die, a few times I even dropped some acid blotters with it as the design. Just because elitists have used it doesn't however mean it is itself evil, there is nothing particularly bad about Egyptian religion and it is a symbol of consciousness for that is what divinity truly is, our consciousness which sees all things there is to see.

Most noticeably the all seeing eye has been put on the American dollar bill by the Freemasons who to some degree make up a percentage of the western governments, arguably it has often been the Freemasons who really run the American government, and no doubt there have been a large number of Masonic presidents. Those responsible for the American dollar bill were the Freemasons Henry A. Wallace and Franklin Roosevelt, who are central to a variety of conspiracy theories due to their Occult connections. Henry A. Wallace was the vice president and also served as secretary of commerce and secretary of agriculture, he was the main designer of the bill and had a variety of spiritual interests which make him hated by Christians. Wallace sent an expedition to look for Shambhala just like the Nazis and presumably this is due to the Occult war these two groups were engaged in.

Yet as suggestive as some of these theories can be, there is also the very real conspiracy involving Major General Smedley D. Butler, who after an illustrious career setting up banana republics and expanding the American empire, was asked by wall street investors and bankers like the J.P. Morgan corporation, to aid them in a coupe to set up a fascist dictatorship in what was called the "business plot." These Fascists were upset with Roosevelt for being too left wing and caring too much about the poor, but also for getting rid of the gold standard which pissed them off to no end and so they planned to overthrow the government and put themselves in charge. The same group, with people like Prescott Bush also helped fund Hitler and Mussolini and so this conspiracy does not make any sense if all the Masons are part of the same international banking conspiracy, as if the Freemason Roosevelt was already in power there would be no need to overthrow him. Henry A. Wallace as far as politicians goes seems to have actually cared about people, he was very progressive for his time, was anti American empire and anti racism which made him very unpopular with the democratic party to which he belonged, but incredibly popular with the people themselves. There also seems to have actually been conspiracies to stop Wallace from being the vice president and if it wasn't for his overwhelming popularity and the support of Roosevelt himself, he would undoubtedly have been replaced by someone more right wing. Speaking of these "super-patriot" American Fascists, among other telling and prophetic things, in the New York Times Wallace warned the American public of Fascist propaganda, how they would not give up after the war, but also the role of technology and the spiritual war between Fascism and "true democracy." (I cannot quote it all here but I encourage you to look it up online)

The Masonic influence on world history is pretty undeniable in many cases, though since it is so decentralized and varied in its traditions and lodges it is stereotyping at its worse to say all Masons are alike, that all of them are politically active conspirators, or conspirators with ambitions of dictatorship. Masons did rebel against monarchs and have helped to move society in the right direction and while capitalism can only create the illusion of democracy, they are still improvements over theocratic monarchies. No doubt the "democracies" which came out of those revolutions are horribly flawed from the start, but we should not fall in to the dualist trap of pigeon holing these things in to black and white terms, as this leads to over simplification. In America what is an improvement from the monarchy was mostly inspired from the Iroquois Confederacy of local Native Americans with their ingenious system and while the Greeks and Romans influenced the formation of the American government as well, its a shame the founding fathers didn't learn more and had to add all that European crap.

Some Masons, for example the American founding fathers have done plenty of tyrannical things, yet according to many conspiracy theorists and some founding fathers like Benjamin Franklin, the real cause of the American revolution was the desire of the colonies to print their own money, rather than get it from the corrupt British central banks. (Jefferson also spoke out against the banks as well as wage slavery and he was not a Mason.) International bankers under the Rothschilds had taken control of the British economy to a large degree and were milking the colonies not only through taxation, but through the privatized monetary system. So the Masonic founding fathers were actually fighting them, not to mention letters in which the Mason George Washington denounces the infamous "Illuminati." Rebellious is a strange thing to do if the Masons have a monopoly on international banking and so we can only conclude there are multiple conspiracies vying for power and that it is not one monolithic group controlling everything ever since the dawn of history.

As my defence of Masons will no doubt label me part of the conspiracy by many ideologue paranoids, let me hammer the point home by pointing out one more example of cognitive dissonance in the theory of a single unified secret government. The American president founder of the democratic party Andrew Jackson is one of the best examples of the reality of a banking conspiracy which has time and again tried to infiltrate the American government and take control of its monetary system. In fact he based his whole presidential campaign specifically on the issue of defeating the banks and restoring American sovereignty and after surviving numerous assassination attempts actually succeeded in doing so. Strangely this is not talked about in history, yet on his tombstone it even says "I KILLED THE BANKS" and so to many conspiracy theorists he is a hero, and surely he was an American patriot and believed in that system. Yet there is something which conspiracy theorists also leave out of their histories, the fact that he was a high level Freemason, in fact he was a Grand Master and so once again we see that not all Masons are part of the conspiracy, nor is there any single group vying for power, but a whole world of greedy bastards each trying to claw their way to the top.

I should also mention that Andrew Jackson was what we would call today a war criminal and one of the greatest culprits of atrocities against Native populations and so we should not fall in the trap of thinking that any leader is wholly good or wholly bad. Benjamin Franklin was a whore mongering member of the pseudo Satanic "Hellfire Club" and certainly not what anyone would consider a "good Christian" and yet he was more on the side of right than the Vatican, Rothschilds and the monarchists. Instead we must realize that all leaders, Christian, Masonic, Jewish or atheist, it doesn't matter, all non Anarchists and even some of them are to some degree possessed by archons which make them do authoritarian and psychopathic things and feed off all the worlds pain, using whoever they can in the process. (The Gnostics even said that the archons were fighting with each other for control of the Earth) Instead of waiting for the perfect leader to set us free, we must learn to free ourselves and that conspiracies breed when power structures are created, because those who want power over others, are always corrupt. That is equality can never coexist with hierarchy as hierarchy is by definition it's absence and as a lack of equality is the result of corruption, then hierarchy is essentially synonymous with corruption, therefore Anarchy is the only kind of society free of corruption.

We should not however conclude that there are no Mason conspiracies, FDR, the founding fathers and Andrew Jackson all have plenty of skeletons in their closet and all were tyrannical bastards, and within any sane society they would have been hung along side the bankers. They were just popular and did the will of the people, who generally happened to be capitalist Christians, who were themselves infected by archons. I am not saying that Mason's, even those who oppose the Vatican are automatically heroes, but that there is no one group ruling the world totally and that no government will ever create true freedom. Even Henry A Wallace probably had his own problems and was in his own conspiracy with FDR, they were quite probably part of a Templar splinter group which competed with the Vatican, yet carried on the banking religion. Roosevelt tried through WWII to take over the world, and through his successor the 33rd president and Mason Harry Truman, America came out the most powerful nation and so we see the history of governments is the history various political memes fighting for dominance.

Perhaps the most important conspiracy involving Masons is that of the lodge called Propaganda Due or P2, which as I said before, is made up of Masons who teamed up with the mafia and the Vatican as part of an international bank laundering scheme, drug dealing network and a Fascist plot to take over Italy. This P2 lodge had 900 members, many of which were important figures in the Italian government, including Silvio Berlusconi, but also the lesser known Licio Gelli with his ties to the CIA, Ronald Reagan, the knights of Malta and many other nefarious groups. They are all connected to the fuckers who got Helen, but the details of this conspiracy are too vast to go in to here, suffice to say there is plenty of information available and that it is probably the most indisputable evidence of international conspiracies (Given that many were actually found guilty in courts) and some members are still active in the political community. However the most powerful groups in the world are the Vatican, the American government, the Rothschilds, the IMF and WTO and all of them to various degrees operate openly. From this we can see that if you have a conspiracy in a secret group, it is because you are not powerful enough from past conspiracies to be accepted by the public in their leader worship.

Here I should point out the curious recurrence of the “Phrygian cap” or “liberty cap” in many different revolutions, even till relatively recently, which is of course suggestive of the banking cult, though no doubt most wore it not really knowing what it meant. The cap was worn by Marianne for the French revolution, or lady liberty for the Americans and so seems to be more part of the Masonic side of things than the Catholic. Even though both are rooted in the same religion of power and the American founding fathers were just setting up their own corrupt corporation, as Washington was against the Illuminati it is one of many signs the founding fathers were against the Catholic conspiracy. Many people had a hand in the French revolution and many groups with different agendas, including aristocrats, Masons and Catholics would try to co-opt it or see it fail, so while the “reign of terror” is seen as terrible thing today, there was very justifiable reasons for paranoia.

So while generally speaking the Masons were more freedom loving than monarchists and Christian theocrats, their decentralized and non dogmatic nature meant there were people involved with all kinds of politics, from the Anarchists, to American revolutionaries, all the way to the Jesuit infiltrators. Surely since the Jesuit infiltration there are plenty of nefarious Masons, but we must judge each individual, as an individual, in reference to our own individual notion of Anarchism. The common dualist prejudice against anyone who has some Occult interests is a hindrance when trying to untangle the truth from the deceptions. With a dualist mind it is often tempting to say “the enemy of my enemy is my friend” and in some cases this may be true, but anyone who wants to create a hierarchy over you is not your friend, and unfortunately not all anti Vatican Masons were Anarchists. The reality as usual is more complicated and some Christians even consider themselves Anarchists and so by avoiding dualist prejudice we can see there are conspiracies, but that it is due to the realities of hierarchy and competing political views.

As I am uninitiated I make no claims to be an expert in the rituals of Freemasonry, but it is interesting to me that they think of “god” in terms of a “great architect” that is their notions of logic and reason have led them to view reality as being created according to mathematical, geometrical and architectural principles. While a few aspects of Templar religion seem to have Gnostic or Sufi influences, Freemasonry is in many ways quite different and so while some Masons may be egalitarian we have to understand it as a distinct system unto itself which prides itself on its pluralism. Masonry is still very much in the vain of Judeo-Christianity and so while originally it may have been egalitarian (Just like some Christians and Jews) it still has a lot of the banking theocracy memes in it, especially after it was infiltrated, for example it was always patriarchal. (Besides Cogliostro's lodge and a few modern unofficial lodges)

One major example of Masonry's differences to Gnosticism is that Gnostics did not generally see the god of the physical world as being worthy of worship, that as the king of the world, the king of the archons, the demiurge was seen as the master craftsmen who built a physical prison for souls. The word demiurge is derived from the Greek words for craftsmen, artisan, or public worker, (archon was also the title of a kind of Greek magistrate) which certainly brings to mind masons, the builders of the cathedrals as artisans. In fact Josephus refers to a Hiram as a craftsmen or artificer who is as Masons know him Hiram Abiff, the architect or original master Mason who helped Solomon to build the temple. It so happens Hiram comes from Tyre, a city of Phoenicia which is a civilization famously associated with merchants and the banking cult of Astarte and the king of this city is also named Hiram and he aids Solomon greatly with building materials and craftsmen. (Is Tyre the etymological origin of Tyrant? Tyrant is related to the Etruscan word Turan meaning "mistress, lady" a surname of Venus and so it would make sense.) At any rate the Phoenicians are very important in the banking cult as they also worshipped Baal, explored widely and spread their alphabet around with them. (Today the memetic descendents of the Phoenicians alphabet make up the majority of alphabets used, including Hebrew, Greek and some say Sanskrit.)

So we could say that Christian Freemasons and all public servants or public workers in the governments are literally the ecclesiastical body of the demiurge. This certainly makes the legal system make more sense as the governments are corporations, each with their subsidiary corporate archons in the capitalist system, with all people who work for them essentially worshipping parasitic false gods. That many Masons are involved in politics, public service or as economic leaders only compounds this, in this way we might say that many Masons today, especially those influenced by Jesuit ideas are the equivalent of Gnostic Satanists. Though I am not about to say that all forms of the demiurge were seen as "evil" or that anyone who worships the creator of the world or "great architect" is "evil," it is clear that all Masons do worship the demiurge as "the great architect," a figure which Gnostics opposed. That despite some of their egalitarian advances both the Templars and Masons have taken on many traditions from the banking religion and many other places and so should not be thought of in totally dualist terms against the church. The Templars were definitely not purely Sufis and did learn much of the banking religion, it is just that when they became outlaws some of them took on more egalitarian interpretations. In fact the name "Hiram Abiff" may be a local variant or otherwise derived from Hammurabi! So that while Bakunin joined to spread Anarchy, this was probably more for the underground networks and contacts. (Especially given his atheism) Even if pirates reformed it later on with Gnostic/Sufi elements, as it represents the knowledge found by the Templars in the temple mount, it would clearly make the craft of Masonry a form of state craft and probably represents the purest and most ancient form of the bureaucratic religion of theocracy.

There is after all a Templar grade of Freemasonry added by these Jesuits, who in a number of ways seem to see themselves as the new Knights Templar. This would explain why the skull and cross bone symbol was also used by the Nazi SS who are modelled bureaucratically after the Jesuits. So, since the Nazis were under the Vatican in many ways, they and the Italian and Spanish Fascists were the foot soldiers of the new knights Templar. We can also see that the Nazi Iron cross or Maltese cross was used by the Knights of Malta and was also found on the sails of the ships used by Columbus. It just so happens that the famous Yale fraternity "skull and bones" happens to have the skull and cross bones as their logo and name, worshipping the Goddess Eulogia who helps them use language to manipulate people. We can also see that Prescott Bush and his family were members of the Skull and Bones fraternity and as I said, Prescott and his friends tried to overthrow the Masonic government of FDR. This is pretty confusing given that Jacques de Molay was burned alive and hence was probably of the more egalitarian variety of Templar, but the skull itself is a far older symbol and I believe it is likely that even the skull and crossbones predates the Templar story as a symbol of death. The skull and crossbones are used in the Masonic initiation ritual of the third degree as relating to the founder of Masonry, Hiram Abiff, so that it may even go back to ancient times. George Washington also had a Masonic apron which featured the skull and crossbones and given his anti Illuminati stance, it is clear that it is not purely a Catholic Templar symbol. So while it would be cool to take on this symbol as it was also used by the egalitarian pirates, all the Templar offshoots seem to use the same symbolism (including the KKK with its "grand wizards") and so we have to make it our own by destroying the theocrats. Of course not all pirates worked together or had ties to Templars, even if they were inspired to use the same kinds of symbols and so today it is a symbol of freedom and rebels, rather than of Nazis or Catholics.

Since Masons have played a major role in creating modern secular culture, modern ideas of democracy and capitalism and all enlightenment era ideals, if we were to blame the Masons for controlling the planet it would seem that they do it through their understanding of the memetic foundations from which the present world is built upon. The Masons have created much of the foundation and they understand the principles of memetic construction, at least intellectually understanding the chief cornerstone. They have through the creation of their “democracies” been responsible for creating the present system which tricks people in to consenting to give away their magical powers to people who serve the demiurge and archons and so while there are multiple groups contributing to this, many Masons have certainly profited unjustly. The founding fathers may have opposed the banks, they may have opposed the Vatican and Illuminati, but they were definitely incredibly flawed according to Anarchist and even mainstream modern principles. America was founded in compliance with the same international mercantile laws and the founding fathers were still obviously heavily infected by tyrannical memes and so their system would still be yet further corrupted by archons.

The archons can and have co-opted revolutions of all kinds by tricking us in to building ever more elaborate egos which inevitably encourages us to seek nothing more, than to deny the truth through elitist authoritarian agendas and the pursuit of consumption. Through understanding how reality is manifested, by making themselves servants of the demiurge, abstractions were used to create a system which would harness the energies of the people. This would be done by getting the people to give up responsibility for themselves and hand over their power to prestigious specialists of society, politicians and all those higher up in the hierarchy. People are still unhappy because of the system they live in, but since it is all they know, they only seek to reform and strengthen the abilities of that system to dominate them, never getting to the bottom of things, the foundation and the root cause of corruption which is the meme of hierarchy itself.

In this way people have been tricked in to consenting to build a reality capable of bringing tyranny to an insidious new level of parasitism above the monarchies, the memes of hierarchy evolving to an extent that the archons have actually succeeded in making people believe they are free. This system goes one step further then the Catholic church which demonized magick in that it makes people stop believing in magick all together, it does this by hypnotizing them in to accepting consumerism as the only route to happiness. Obviously Masons are not the originators of these archon memes, nor was life perfect in places which had no Masons, but through the Masons of the American Revolution, a system was undoubtedly created which could colonize the planet in the name of the demiurge

The idea of theocracy was in many ways the beginning of hierarchical thinking and this curse was invented to control and take hold of a largely decentralized egalitarian culture free of orthodox authority. When this fertility cult theocracy first occurred, authoritarian and hierarchical behaviour took root in Sumeria, those who managed to convince others they were not divine, managed to set themselves up as a intermediary to some supposedly external divinity, and in this authority all personal responsibility was abandoned and all types of domination and exploitation could be justified so long as it was “the will of the gods.” Since farmers relied on the temple priestess's for creating fertility through their rights and were obliged to pay tribute to the temple in the form of grain, this created the power structure that through currency would allow for the first banks and the first real class system based on private property. Through the advent of currency and priestly authority the theocracy gained the power to control the economy which could be used to control the warriors who would run the protection racket and so the first forms of institutional hierarchy were created. This allowed some to make the claim of authority to control other people and when this happened, those who were ruled gave up some portion of their divine potential to their rulers, believing them to be religiously superior to themselves.

This idea of theocracy negates the idea that we are all divine as it states that divinity is external and must rule us, rather than inspire us or be part of our awareness. So it is, this idea shuts off humanity from fully accessing our divine awareness by tricking people into limiting beliefs, which then manifest that reality for them. When rulers or other people are given divine authority, especially if they are believed to be infallible, or god kings or some such bull shit, then humans surrender their magickal potential to their rulers. Currency, patriarchy, monogamy, monotheism, dualism, the idea of humanity being separate from nature and many other forms of ignorance are all memetic inventions, or tools created by the rulers as civilization achieves “progress” and spreads to further fragment the natural awareness of divine oneness. Fragmentation then alienates the masses under the guise of divine authority, causing people to become more and more enmeshed in consumer materialism. These cultures are seemingly substantiated through authoritarian explanations, creating a story of human history which implies the exact opposite of the truth.

Emperors and Popes are generally god king priests, demanding worship from their people and in a very real sense demanding the surrender of their magickal energies. They acquire consent by various coercive means, demanding the people take on the cultural realities created by the political spells, which are repeatedly espoused by the various black magicians of the state. Putting political leaders on money or coins helps to work with the magick system created by those political leaders and empowers them with the “confidence” of the people as well as with “confidence” in the economy. The pope is supposedly infallible, the representative of “god” on Earth, and through their belief in him, Catholics empower him to the degree of their faith in him. In this way Catholics surrender their own magickal energies and while he is obviously not infallible, he has grown incredibly powerful because of those kinds of beliefs. Various theocrats have always used this means of stealing power for the purpose of acquiring more power, more wealth and more souls to feed them.

We can see it in another Christianized form with the Monarchies of Europe and their notion of the “divine right of kings” which is the idea that god chose those souls to rule and so they are closer to divinity than peasants. The monarchs referred to themselves as “we” because they were seen as the representative of all the people in their domain, that is they are essentially possessed by the nations egregore and act as the magician priest of its group mind. This was in fact the main issue for Gnostics who were rebelling, they saw such leader worship as a form of idle worship to an archon and so failure to practice the state religion was a form of rebellion. So Christianity was created to turn the emperor in to the high priest rather than the living deity and the pope would simply become a middle man instead, but with effects that are nearly identical. Similar objections were behind the Jewish disdain for Pagan money, with the temple exploiting this to turn a profit for money changers, the difference being that Gnostics understood all money is a tool of archons. The more people believe you are an all powerful god, the closer you will be to an all powerful god, if not because of your metaphysical abilities, at the very least because through your slaves you will be able to manifest your will and so work magick.

This is basically the same for Roman emperors or Babylonian kings and so all other tyrants, as the state is essentially a team of practising black magicians who use the formalized bureaucracies and legalese to Occult their actions from the public. By giving them power to act as interpreters and representatives for us within this legal system, such as by giving them “power of attorney,” we are investing them with our corporate servitor, our personal identity and reality within the system. This system is so sophisticated that it now does not even require people believe in magick for it to function as priests within it. Thus the people have become entrapped within a web of magickal red tape that sucks the life force energy from all over the globe, giving us enough line on our collar, our ID tag, for us to hang ourselves and be milked for all we are worth.

As with most ancient Occult things, astrology provides the context of the monotheistic banking theocracy, allowing us to see it is primarily Saturnian in nature, (just like any theocracy) that it's values are the same as the traits attributed to Saturn in astrology. Saturn is associated with tradition, law, order, restrictions, boundaries, judges, punishment, authority, death and one source I found even said the stock market specifically. These traits are very much applicable to the orthodox Abrahamic religions and we can see that as part of this theocratic death cult, it is their policy to impose rule on everyone, if not kill everyone who believes something else. At the very least once their respective messiahs come to conquer the planet all those who happened to come to a different conclusion are damned or turned in to slaves. Saturn is often a harvest or agriculture god as well, which along with its rings represents the sickle of death or “grim reaper,” linking him back to the origins of civilization. The scythe was said to be the invention of Saturn, the Scythians also take their name from it and they are said to be responsible for spreading the use of cannabis and inventing the hot box, they were also known to use opium, thus they are a prime candidate for those who spread the use of Haoma/Soma.

As with Sabazius or Deus, we can see Jupiter is another planet which is also quite central to this (Especially in the Roman Empire) and we can see this planet represents government, religious institutions, wealth, big business, morality, law and expansion. As such these two planets have provided the archetypes of the gods of the theocrats and while they have other more helpful traits and should not be thought of as “evil,” they have become totally unbalanced through monotheism and notions of orthodoxy. There is some redundancy in the traits of these two planets and so we might say that Jupiter represents the government, while Saturn represents the secret government. Along with Venus which rules desire, sex and luxuries we can see that the theocracy is in fact adhering to consistent Occult principles as its memes have developed. (How many commercials use sex to sell their products?) They do this in order to generate the kind of psychic energy needed for them to rule and through things like the business cycle create an ever growing dependence on their hierarchies. Though the planetary associations are not always exactly the same and there are variations to the mythology, to a large degree we can see that the deity of Law (Saturn or Chronos) and his wife Economics (Venus or Rhea) give birth to government. (Jupiter)

Judaism mutated throughout the centuries by taking more elements of religious thought from the Egyptians and Babylonians and to cut a long story short (with plenty of in depth scholarship out there for those interested) Christianity was as I explained before, invented by mixing Jewish thought with a variety of literalized Pagan symbolism, Gnosticism and Neoplatonism. With many Jews having been Hellenized and even living in Greece, the orthodox in Palestine were pissed off to no end. In addition to this, the Romans were attempting to co-opt the often militaristic and rebellious messianic movements of the Jews in Palestine, creating their own prophet, their own messiah who could be used to stifle the uprisings and bring the Gnostics in to the fold. While later emperors would merely be the high priests, Titus would be worshipped as Jesus by taking his Gnostic symbolism and telling his own story with it. While they must have known that converting Jews would be a hard sell, seeing how zealously they fought the Romans, Titus and his father would no doubt be impressed by the Jews willingness to die and so were inspired to make their own army of fundamentalists. While the Jewish revolt was a major embarrassment for the Romans, the Gnostic rebellion threatened to spread across the empire and so the emperors decided to kill two birds with one stone and create Christianity for the empire, simultaneously creating equally bigoted zealots to die in the armies. As I explained before, this would also serve to unite the diverse peoples of the empire and so with the advent of Christianity the Romans could impose orthodoxy and religious law like never before, eventually outlawing entheogens in the process as “Witchcraft.”

If we look back to Sumerian mythology the origins of this theocratic tyranny is pretty well elaborated in stories of what are called the “mes,” or the divine decrees of how humanity should behave and how a society should run. These mes are essentially the first memes of hierarchical civilization and while the terminology was different it seems the priest class knew full well what a meme is and how they can be used. Not all memes are necessarily mes, but pretty well all the modern memes referring to civilization are in a sense in their lineage. The mes were the rules and procedures, the required forms of culture needed for an authoritarian civilization to run, but also included techniques for things like basket weaving and other quite mundane things, even how to have sex, in short what is officially civilized behaviour and what is not. The mes provided the blueprint for the institutions whose mutated memetic lineage would eventually spread its influence across the world. This was achieved primarily through European imperialism, which destroyed and infected any culture that is contrary, wiping out all alternative forms of knowledge, especially if a culture found more egalitarian methods of being civilized.

This is further outlined in Sumerian myths about the tablets of destiny which various gods (or on Earth various types of priests) were vying for control of, as they gave ultimate power through what must have been the control of the mes. It isn't clear exactly how the tablets of destiny are connected to the mes, but in the myths these tablets of destiny are essentially a legal document or special kind of mes giving its owner the right of being the divine monarch with power over the entire universe. The other mes are the decrees of this monarch on how we all should live, but which provide the other gods who own them their special abilities. I would argue what the tablets of destiny really are, are a grimoire, or catalogue of all the mes and so control of the tablets gives one control of all the mes, or at least all the gods who control all the mes. With control of all the mes comes control of all of civilization and when these very archon like gods control humanity, given our divine nature they control all the universe. This is explained in the myth when Kingu (whose name means unskilled labourer) the son of Tiamat and Absu went to war wearing the tablets of destiny. While there are variations of the story, he was killed by Marduk who took the tablets and made humanity from the Earth and Kingu's blood. (Much like how humanity was said to have been created from the ashes of the Titans and the remains of their meal Dionysus, or seen again in the myth of Sophia being imprisoned in matter, or the parts of Osiris being lost in the world.) Marduk gave the tablets to Anu, who is part of a trinity with the gods Enki and Enlil and as the mes include things like laws, kingship, and other political offices, then it is undoubtedly through the mes that the rulers control the people. Although we do not have a complete list of the mes, it is quite clear that they were the decrees of the gods as to how humanity should live and an important basis of Sumerian theocracy.

In other myths the god Enlil used the tablets, as a legal document to legitimize his rulership over the gods, he created agriculture and he (sometimes with Enki) created humans to act as slaves for the gods. Thus he established the first theocracy with the first "civilization" and the first hierarchy which all were expected to follow according to the power conferred by the tablets of destiny. But what are these tablets, the writings which bestow all magickal and divine power? While any real hope of understanding the complexities of Sumerian/Babylonian religion has long been destroyed, as the mes provide instructions for civilized human behaviour, they must have also provided the religious and magickal rituals with which to interact with the gods and generally effect change in the world. Over the centuries came many contradicting myths, but it seems as though Enlil eventually gave many of the mes to Enki (also known as Ea) so that he might distribute them among the gods. In this way the various divinities came to specialize over different aspects of culture and reality in general and so took on their essential qualities. Enki there by distributed the various powers which compose the omnipotence conferred by the tablets of destiny and even if the mes are not always thought of as the tablets of destiny, Enki does acquire the tablets in the poem "Ninurta and the turtle."

Later Inanna AKA Ishtar, unhappy with her meagre allotment of mes managed to trick her way into collecting more than any other god, which could be interpreted as her priests seizing the political power. Through this coupe, the priests of Inanna would come to rule as the theocracy and so expand hierarchical civilization with an economy based on a monetary system. She does this by getting the god Enki drunk, seducing him, and then stealing the mes and running off. Since Ishtar represents the monetary and banking system and Enki represents crafts, industry and magick, wisdom, writing and (hence Sumerian academia) we can interpret this myth as the cult of Ishtar gaining control of the cult of Enki and so taking over the means of production and with that the funding for scientific endeavours along with the military and government. It is these mes or memes which the theocratic archons bestowed on us to program us into perpetuating and spreading error and authoritarian behaviour and so it is from these mes that basically all hierarchical memes in the current global empire evolved.

This carried on for some time as the history of civilization progresses, but in a sense we might say the tablets were most likely acquired by Yahweh, when he was known as the Canaanite deity El, the Saturnian ruler of their Pantheon. This could have happened mythologically speaking when Ishtar took on her aspect as Asherah the wife of El, which carried on right into the time that El became Yahweh. Asherah with her pole or pillar or tree and snake was such a popular goddess with Jews that she posed a threat to the patriarchal theocracy and so became demoted as a human in the form of Eve, who then became demonized along with all women. Kabbalistically this has interesting implications, since Adam Kadmon is essentially god in physical human form, in some ways it's like her settlement after a bad divorce, but also makes me wonder about Adam's first wife Lilith, a demon goddess who is also connected to Ishtar. At any rate El/Yahweh acquired the tablets from Ishtar/Asherah after the patriarchs did away with the goddess, thus cementing their authority as monotheists. Using the tablets as the memetic programming of all destinies, itself being the meme of authoritarian rule over the universe, the Jews would be enslaved through what is called the "covenant" or contract. While this is all highly symbolic and fragmentary it is clear that what would become Yahweh came from much earlier Mesopotamian gods in the Sumerian pantheon and that the Sumerian myths such as the Enuma Elish explicitly explain the origins of theocracy, the monetary system and civilization itself as part of our slavery in service of the gods.

This line of reasoning has lead me to believe there is a symbolic connection between the tablets of destiny and the covenant of Moses and Yahweh, which was written as the tablets of the ten commandments. As I also briefly mentioned, many theorize the knights Templar found the ark of the covenant, which according to the Jews held the tablets on which the ten commandments were written. Other than the Hyksos theory Exodus is not backed up by really any evidence at all and so much of the story is obviously a fabrication, but even according to the Torah the Jews came to Egypt willingly from Mesopotamia through Jacob and his son Joseph. The Hyksos King Yakubher corresponding to the Hebrew Jacob would have brought the knowledge from Abraham and the tyrant religion (They used many more tactics than simple usury for their economic imperialism) on the tablets of destiny to use it to take over the economy and then the rest of northern Egypt. (The name "Jacob" itself even comes from the Hebrew meaning, "to supplant") It may have been another King than Yakub, but whoever led the Hyksos in to Egypt would have had the tablets to use as the blueprint for their infiltration of Egypt. The details of the Hyksos theory are too much to go in to here, but they were in Egypt for around a hundred years and "Moses" certainly fits the profile of someone infiltrating and appropriating the Egyptian mysteries in order to create a new civilization based on a totalitarian theocracy. Certainly the "Jews" left Egypt in very suspicious circumstances and much richer than they had been when they entered, somehow tricking the locals in to giving them their wealth. Exodus 12:36, "The Lord had made the Egyptians favourably disposed toward the people, and they gave them what they asked for; so they plundered the Egyptians."

While Moses wasn't coming out of Sumeria but Egypt and the ark was invented by Egyptian magicians long before Moses, much of the story clearly comes from Mesopotamia and so we should not dismiss the idea of the tablets of Moses symbolizing the tablets of destiny. The Enuma Elish myth along with others like the Epic of Gilgamesh would provide the template for the Torah and especially Genesis, while much of Hammurabi's law such as an "eye for an eye" would find it's way in to the "holy" books of Judaism. Like Moses there are even myths of Hammurabi receiving the laws from on high from the sun god Shamash and many scholars have pointed out the laws of Hammurabi match many in Judaism almost word for word. Like Moses it is also true that there are myths of the King Sargon the great being floated down the river as a baby, then taken in by a princess and so while the story of Moses is set in Egypt much of it does come from Mesopotamia.

In the end it doesn't even matter if "Moses" existed at all, since the old testament was written after the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, what is being described is a blending of theocratic technologies, the mixing of Egyptian techniques represented by the ark and Middle Eastern techniques represented by the tablets in order to create the ultimate system of control. While there are similarities to Hammurabi's code, the ten commandments are probably more from the Egyptian book of the dead and so "Moses" came out of Egypt as a conquering general with the knowledge of the ark and Egyptian religion and theocracy. At any rate Egyptian religion got there somehow and since the story says Moses was raised as a prince of Egypt, he would definitely have received an education about the Egyptian theocracy. He also managed to take the cult of Akhenaten and modify the Middle Eastern god of Abraham and so on Mt Sinai he managed to formalize a new syncretic form of Judaism. (which is appropriately enough on the border of Egypt and the middle east)

Remember, the Torah originally contained no vowels or spaces and the priests who wrote it after the captivity in Babylon could have imposed any number of stories upon the consonants and so whether or not "Moses" was real, his story is obviously highly symbolic and generally suspect as an obvious form of theocratic propaganda. While as through Mesopotamian mythology there was likely some traditional stories associated with the formula of consonants, since Judaism is highly corrupted from its original form, it is not hard to see that after the Babylonian captivity, by changing a few vowels and spaces, the meaning of the stories could be changed drastically. Other times since the gods were the personifications of things, their names were also commonly used words pertaining to that deities nature and so as there are no capital letters in Hebrew, it is often not clear if an entities name is being used or the word. (For example the word "death" is "Mot" which is the name of the god of death in the Ugaritic mythology)

While ideologues or those not familiar with ancient religions will probably think this theory highly unlikely, it is undeniable that Yahweh has a number of mythological motifs that can only come from a variety of Mesopotamian gods such as the Canaanite god El, Enlil, but also the Egyptian god Set and his mix with Typhon. (I already mentioned the influence of Dionysus and Jove, Zeus or Deus, Dyeus who had his own monotheistic cult among the Greeks as well as the Hyspistarians) This isn't just my opinion, plenty of mainstream scholars have noted that Yahweh has his roots as a Pagan storm god and a volcano god, so I will not be trying to prove this here, plenty of others have already done so and their work is easily available. So while I will not assume any knowledge on your part, I will simply take it for granted from here on out that Yahweh is a mix of various Pagan deities, the particulars of how this mix came about are lost, but it did happen and given the totalitarian nature of Jewish religion, it is safe to say that it was not done by benevolent people. (This sheds new light on the "Satanic" organization the "Temple of Set" founded by the NSA officer Michael Aquino, an admitted government black magician with a love of elitist authority. Which is pretty ironic given that many "Satanists" are trying to be rebellious.)

The most likely scenario that I can imagine is that the Torah is itself the tablets of destiny grimoire and contains within it the mes of Jewish civilization; mes which would go on to greatly influence Europe through Christianity and from there the world. Since the tablets in their original form are unintelligible by the uninitiated, the story being symbolic on many levels is highly self referential, especially since it is highly fractal according to Kabbalistic principles. This means the tablets refer to themselves in the story imposed on the consonants, using the tablets of Exodus as a symbol of the Torah itself. Theocrats in Babylon and Egypt had been experimenting and evolving various memes and mythological elements for thousands of years to create better and better theocratic religions, but given the highly non dogmatic, polytheistic and decentralized religious ideas in those areas, they were limited in their ability to control the minds of the people. The banking cult had a hard time colonizing Egypt, which managed to avoid monetary systems in general for quite a long time and while not perfect, the farther back in Egypt you look, the more benign and feminist the theocracy and the greater the civilizations achievements.

So what we have with the Torah of today is the descendents of the cult of high priests of El, taking the most functional and important elements of each religion. They stole the Egyptian version of the mes through “Moses” with his ark and tablets and used the memes to brainwash a society of polytheistic and essentially “Pagan” nomads which today we call “Jews.” These slaves would be indoctrinated with authoritarian memes to allow their archons to create what was at the time in terms of mind control, the most advanced theocratic religion on the planet. A religion who's offspring would eventually unite Egypt and Mesopotamia in terms of religion when they converted to Islam. We cannot take the old testament literally or as history, but by understanding the corresponding symbolism provided by other religions which have undeniably influenced Judaism greatly, we can see that the memetic lineage of the Torah is deeply rooted in the concepts of the mes and the tablets and that the symbols are the power behind the tablets anyways.

Now with the stolen mysteries of both the middle east and Egypt, this is all ironically and metaphorically depicted with the story of Exodus, with the cult of El putting the Torah (symbolizing the power of the tablets of destiny) in to the ark, (Symbolizing the Egyptian memes) which they built with stolen knowledge. The ark and tablets would then be put in the “holy of holies” inside their new temple, in their new kingdom of Israel which the Torah says was conquered through Yahweh's demand for genocide. So to be clear, while it is the Torah that is the true tablets of destiny, the tablets on which were written the Ten Commandments or the covenant between Yahweh and the Jews are one symbol which is in many ways a self similar microcosm. It is not an understatement to say that the ten commandments are the most important part of the Torah to the Jews as it is their covenant with “god.” The word “Torah” means law, and the commandments are the centrepiece of that law and so the two are in many ways interchangeable. (This is common Jewish interpretation but Kabbalah goes in to much more detail)

According to the Zohar (the main body of Kabbalistic teachings) Yahweh first gave Moses the covenant on a magickal sapphire called the “schethiya,” which he had removed from his own throne and used as the foundation stone of the world. Moses smashed the stone because of the Israelites idol worship of the golden calf, but its shards were placed in the ark along with the new covenant that Moses made after he went back up Mt Sinai. Since the Torah is fractal and quite explicitly thought to be the programming and basis of all creation, it is as a part of creation, self referencing and shows itself to be the tablets of destiny through a variety of symbols such as the “book of life,” “the foundation stone,” but also the “urim and thummim.” While purposely confusing and contradictory they represent various aspects or uses or instructions which the initiated may understand.

So the Torah is the tablets, but also the myths, the mes and laws, the Kabbalistic information and also the ritual procedures. All of this has a variety of exoteric and esoteric levels, which are to varying degrees of difficulty decoded by those with eyes to see and ears to hear. The Torah is only the tablets of destiny if you know how to decode the formula and use it, or if you have the guise of orthodoxy and can convince the world to accept your orthodox literalist interpretation. The Torah then is a self fulfilling prophecy, a spell to take the chaotic world of nature and make it reflect the order of Yahweh, thus it seeks to control destiny through its memes.

As nomads, Jews certainly would have come in to contact with a wide variety of magickal information and the Q/Kabbalah undoubtedly is intended to be a universal key of magick for all religions. Through a better understanding of “Abraham” we can get a better understanding of the origins of Judaism, but since he is probably fictional this is no easy task. Still, as a character he shows himself to be a black magician, who living in Canaan and Chaldea would certainly have been familiar with the religious ideas of those lands and highly influenced. While people today like to believe he either made it all up himself, or created a new religion from scratch when “god” spoke to him, Judaism like all religions was not created in a vacuum. Abraham got some unsavoury ideas as to how he should worship, that being animal sacrifice, genital mutilation and if the big boss man says so, human sacrifice, not to mention total submission to “god” and authoritarianism in spreading his ideas.

For all these reasons and many more from the Jewish texts themselves, it seems likely to me the character “Abraham” is symbolic of some kind of secretive extremist line of El priests, which at least in part infiltrated Egypt and took the memes which they found useful. For example, in Genesis it even says that “Abraham” went to Egypt and essentially pimped out his wife Sarah to the Pharaoh, telling her to pretend to be his sister. This could be an allusion to “Abraham” trying to start up a branch of the banking prostitute cult with Sarah as high priestess, or at least he was acting as an agent for the bankers to steal mystical ideas in order to create a better theocracy. Then since Sarah sleeping with the Pharaoh angered “Yahweh” or El, Egypt became plagued and the couple was sent off with many gifts and a lot of wealth to appease the deities wrath. This means “Abraham” took some of the theocratic memes and other stolen booty, with the plagues relating to the financial costs to Egypt, or other effects of the black magick used by Abraham for this business venture. Yahweh is commonly psychopathic like this, but the fact that Abraham does this again to the king Abimelek and wherever else he went is very puzzling if Yahweh is so against it, suggesting these cultures were the victims of infiltration. You will probably have to read this yourself in Gen 12 and Gen 20 to get a full sense of what I mean, but even Abraham's name is indicative of the banking religion in that it means “father of many nations.”

Some may think I base too much on circumstantial evidence, or that I am a “conspiracy nut” or worse yet may assume I am a racist or something, but we can see infiltration is blatantly admitted in the Jewish book of Jasher in a number of places. In fact most Jewish “religious” writings if you actually sit down and read them, do not read like a religion at all and this is because in reality the Abrahamic religions are among the most atheistic. (compared to animists and pantheists) Jewish religion compared to say the Upanishads of Hinduism, is not much more than thinly veiled propaganda in the form of a history of war criminals and corrupt kings usurping power from foreign kings, or through various contrivances scamming people and committing atrocities and all manner of hypocrisy.

The most blatant and explicit example however comes in the Book of Jasher Chapter 14, when we read of celebrated figure Rikayon. This man it is said, immigrated to Egypt and hired mercenaries to stand guard at the cemetery and demand a fee of all those who would bury the dead. After acquiring great wealth in this way, the King of Egypt is angry with him and so Rikayon sends him many presents and then because he is so “wise” in defending himself, he is made prefect of Egypt. The king calls him “Pharaoh” and from there Rikayon “cunningly usurped the government of Egypt, and he exacted a tax from all the inhabitants of Egypt. And all the inhabitants of Egypt greatly loved Rikayon Pharaoh, and they made a decree to call every king that should reign over them and their seed in Egypt, Pharaoh.” As we go to the following chapters we learn this happened in the same year that Abraham took his wife Sarah to Egypt and so while it isn't clear, it appears that the King who had his kingdom usurped by Rikayon, was the same one to whom Abraham pimped out his wife. Along with all the other booty, Abraham acquired the Pharaoh's daughter who was Hagar, whom is the handmaiden of Sarah, which in all accounts gave birth to Abraham's son Ishmael, the progenitor of Islamic people. (The Midrashim agree that Hagar was from the Pharaoh) So through Rikayon and Abraham, the banking cult was successful in infiltrating Egypt, at least for a time and took their economy as symbolized by Hagar.

Likewise the Hyksos with “Moses” might represent a portion of the racially Jewish population, but it could well be they were the mercenary armies of this cult of El which had returned to take over Egypt as “Abraham” and his order had apparently failed to finish the job. As we will see there are many stories of Jewish figures returning to Egypt and gaining a lot of power, but as they have to keep coming back it shows the Egyptians overthrew them. Then from there Abraham and Sarah went into Canaan and to some degree conquered or infiltrated the local ethnically Jewish population to indoctrinate them in the new theocracy. As many Jews refused to give up their goddess, it seems the authoritarian monaltry of Judaism was just as unpopular as monotheism was in Egypt under Akhenaten. So eventually the cult of El decided to take Jewish slaves to Babylon where they managed to brainwash enough people that when they came back as the released captives or “Gola,” (having learned in Babylon to destroy the oral traditions and use a scriptural means of indoctrination) as the Torah itself says, using brute force they managed to colonize many of the remaining polytheistic Jews in to monotheism. Many Jews would stay on in the land that had enslaved them, creating the Babylonian academies that would play a profound role in shaping Jewish religion through the creation of works like the Talmud.

While there would have been some theocratic mind control from the Hyksos and these indigenous people of Palestine had similar banking deities like Asherah, they were not really engaging in the same autocratic and imperialistic activities. At least whatever these locals were doing in the city centres was generally controlled by the more powerful middle eastern empires. While Egypt may have gained more influence at times, it is quite clear the banking theocracies came through the monotheistic traditions, rather than the indigenous and non dogmatic Paganism of the Levant. With the writing of the old testament then and its “history” we see that it is propaganda for indoctrinating the wild people in what today we call Israel. The stories of the old testament and especially of Abraham and Moses are really allegories for the long history of the banking religion with its multitude of races, as it was seeking to unite the rebellious tribes and peoples of the Levant. As the gateway between Asia and Europe was through the Suez canal, this area was commonly being fought over between the empires of the middle east and Egypt and so the Babylonians decided to infiltrate culturally and economically as it could not count on holding the area militarily. (This strategic position would also make it important in the Roman Empire as it traded with India) The word “Hyksos” means “rulers of foreign lands” and are not necessarily racially “Jewish” and in fact mainstream historians think they were a mixed group of people, nor was there at that time even a distinct race of “Jews” existing from the Canaanites. Yet the events around the Hyksos fit the story of “Moses” a little too well to be a coincidence and so we see that the story of “Moses” was probably given to the Jews to colonize them, in part to explain why they have kings all of a sudden and need to build a “new” temple, when there never was a first Jewish temple as depicted in the story of Solomon. Given that the Levant was conquered so many times by both Egypt and Mesopotamian empires, it is not surprising that Judaism would form as a mix of both cultures. We can also safely say that after thousands of years of changing governments, the people in that area would also have a variety of political and spiritual beliefs and that while some would be theocratic Jews with Babylonian interests, others would be more nomadic, tribal and polytheistic mystics.

Could it be that some ancient Sumerian tablets have amazing magickal power that allows their owners to take control of the world? With the tablets acting as a grimoire or as talismans and the ark acting as a means of charging them? Reconstructions of the ark have shown it functions as a capacitor and it would no doubt be a very powerful ritual prop, perhaps even one capable of electrocuting or “smiting” heretics or the uninitiated who did not wear the proper metallic means of protecting themselves. Much has been written about the electrical properties of the ark by all kinds of people and the high priests had to wear a chain around their leg so they could be pulled out if they were struck dead! It is said of the Torah that those copying it must not omit or add even one letter or the whole universe could come apart, this is because the Torah is thought to be like the blueprint or programming for all of reality and according to Kabbalah the universe was made using the Hebrew Alphabet. This all sounds a lot like the various things that might be said of the tablets of destiny and for many reasons I cannot believe it is a coincidence. Since the Torah is all consonants, those who added the vowels to the formula in order to make their stories weave a spell, one capable of concealing the programming of the demiurge, the programming of time and space. As they are in many ways the microcosm of the Torah, the ten commandments do contain some Kabbalistic keys for unlocking the Torah and so probably have the keys to the ritual use of the mes contained within it.

Exodus is also the key to understanding much of western ceremonial magick in that it provides the 216 letter name of Yahweh. This name is divided in to 72 smaller angel names called the “Shemhamphorash” who are angels that rule over the demons of the Goetia and along with the Kabbalistic names of “god” were used to control them. This 216 letter name effectively creates a highly detailed map of the stars and so it is the most complete cosmological formula of Judaism. As I explained, these demons of the Goetia are the same demons said to have aided Solomon in the creation of the Temple, along with the founder of Masonry Hiram Abiff and so through Exodus, the banking religion does have the key to some very powerful ceremonial magick. The Shemhamphorash is like an expanded form of the Jewish name of god YHVH and so it is in many ways like the correct pronunciation of the name YHVH and so can be likened to “lost word” of Masonry, also thought to have been found by the Templar founders of Freemasonry.

Although there is no archeological evidence for this, if we were to listen to the myths then the tablets of destiny or the precursors to the Torah are some of the first real writing as they were written by the gods themselves. In a more mundane way this is also true since the epic of Gilgamesh as a precursor to Genesis is among the oldest texts we have. As such the tablets are the most powerful scripted spell, or alphabetic sigil on Earth, having had longer time to charge, not to mention more systematically created and charged than any other spell in existence. As the old testament is part of the Christian cannon, it is believed by more people than any other religious faith and so has acquired more energy than any other religion in this history of consensus reality. Metaphysically speaking then, the tablets or mes are in the right hands like the control panel of all the memes associated with hierarchical civilization, not just those created by the Sumerians but those which share their memetic lineage, which the Torah clearly does. As Justinian based his civil law on biblical law, this then would include the whole corporate system of today and so the tablets/Torah are ultimately the memetic foundation of the entire capitalist government system which rules this planet.

This “lost word “ or correct pronunciation of the name of “god” is central to the mythology of Masonry and was thought to be lost with the murder of Hiram Abiff, yet to some degree found once more according to the rituals of the “royal arch of Enoch.” This lost word then would be the lost key to the Torah and so to the tablets of destiny and the ten commandments found in the ark of the covenant, which itself was found by the Templars. (If not literally at least symbolically through the knowledge they gained in the temple of Jerusalem) Given that the lesser key of Solomon came after the greater key, we can surmise that the full name, or the knowledge of how to use the full name has not been fully worked out yet, that the system found by the Catholic Templars was not complete. The Catholic Templars found at least some of the keys to understanding the tablets and then as the church they used its magick and the banking system which is part of the mes to try and take power over the world. While Christianity created the corporate feudal system, during the Jewish/Gnostic revolts the rebels did capture the temple and destroyed some key knowledge and information about how to use them. This would require the tyrants to try and reconstruct the “keys of Solomon” which unlock the tablets and so the Shemhamphorash and Goetia are part of the magick system of the tyrants. These tyrants today are most clearly represented by the Vatican and the Jesuit Masons and they are using this magick to activate the power of the tablets of destiny and control all those who are infected by the archons. This magick would increasingly spread among the upper classes as their “high magick” but given it has changed and developed over time, we can see it is them trying to further decode, reconstruct and elaborate it so that they would have the power to gain total control of the world. After some of the Templars became pseudo Anarchist outlaws, it is quite possible they released the knowledge of the Goetia and Solomonic magick so that the Anarchist Masons and Pagan Alchemists could work to decode the tablets as well. So the search for the “lost word” is the Mason's (Both Catholic and Anarchist) caught in a race to decode the tablets and either save the world and bring freedom and enlightenment, or use it to manifest a Christian empire under the archons.

Are the tablets some kind of alien technology left by the Anunnaki of Sumerian legend? Fuck no, but the Anunnaki are as good as archons and many things lead me to believe they are the original inspiration for them and so it is well worth studying their myths. The archons can also be likened to the “seven who decree fate” in Sumerian cosmology and we will note that the Gnostics saw themselves trying to create free will in opposition to fate or destiny and that in Sumeria fate was created by the tablets of destiny. So the tablets provide rulers with the authoritarian memes, such as banking and economic strategies based on purely materialist Alchemical principles, tactics such as what would evolve in to fractional reserve banking and the creation of corporate egregores. This allows the puffers to covertly take hold of a culture and set up a legal system that aids the oligarchs in their conquest of the world. The mes of the Abrahamic religions also work to create prejudice and patriarchy and so instill fear of things which might set people free, making people think that if they are truly egalitarian they will go to hell. The covenant between Yahweh and the Jews is undoubtedly a legal contract; clearly indicating a relationship between law and religion which still exists today and since theocratic Judaism is Canaanite and Egyptian religion, it must be the memetic offspring of the original theocracy.

This is not to say that Jews run the world, these powers are beyond borders, beyond race existing before Judaism and I do not think the Jews would have such a tortured history if they were always running the show. (Even where there are powerful Jewish people, they care nothing for their own poor) There is so much evidence of white domination of global power today that it is laughable to think otherwise. Some Zionists obviously have ambitions of power, are racist and are willing to kill for their agendas, the Zionist lobby is probably the most powerful group of lobbyists in Washington and you just have to look at the history of Israel to see this is a fact. The very concept of Zionism is itself racist as it seeks to create a homeland in Palestine that is exclusive to Jewish people. However any government which promotes ethnic nationalism is racist and so given that racism is found in all races, race has nothing to do with it, other than racism being a tool of the archons to motivate the brainwashed masses in to meaningless wars. Israel is just an American colony in the Middle East anyways, set up from the beginning as a strategic beach head for stealing oil and controlling the Suez canal. The obvious give away being that Germany perpetrated the holocaust and should have been held responsible, not Palestine and so the creation of Israel in Palestine has no justification. This is especially true since "Israel" was according to the Torah itself conquered by Jews through genocide and furthermore we might ask, why haven't the genocidal and hypocritical British and Americans created a homeland for Gypsies and another for homosexuals?

Surely there are international banking conspiracies from the likes of the Rothschilds, but banking is itself a corrupt practice and they are merely the most successful bankers of all time. It should be no surprise that their hands are covered in blood, that is what bankers do. While the Rothschilds may have racist Zionist ambitions as evidenced by Edmond de Rothschild being put on the 500 shekel bill as the "Father of Israel," (and many other things) this does not mean that all Jews or even many Jews are part of a plot for global domination. Today the racist idea that all Jews are completely innocent of any crime and beyond criticism because of the holocaust allows Zionism and the likes of the Rothschilds to do almost whatever they want and any who dare speak up are quickly labelled anti-Semitic. Of course there are Nazi types out there and they too must be stopped, but Zionists and the Rothschilds have been plotting to steal Palestine long before World War II and any who doubt this can, among many other things look up the "Balfour Declaration." What Zionist racism shows us is that racism can infect people of all races and that it is among the most poisonous ideas ever conceived and what is more, that the labelling of anti-Zionists as all being anti-Semitic or Nazis is itself a form of prejudice. People of any race can and do use this Sumerian form of magick and while Jewish high priests like Moses might of had the tablets at one point, it is quite clear that it is people of European descent that have it today. These modern oligarchs, who are generally speaking WASPS are acting in the memetic lineage of the Roman empire (England and America are both overtly modelled this way) and are responsible for most the horrors of world history, both economically and in terms of military domination.

More examples of theocracy would be how the term "basilica" refers to the court of a king who would act as judge, Protestant churches are also modelled after court rooms and Catholic churches are much like Byzantine royal courts, along with the Eastern Orthodox monarchist god. The "Holy Roman Emperor" ruled in the name of god and while things today may have improved in some ways, we are still clinging to much of these theocratic cultures through the religions and the economic and legal systems they ultimately created. The law and the state religion, in this case Christianity have been so interwoven in European society that at their roots in Rome back to Sumeria, they are in many ways indistinguishable. It is the Roman state apparatus, which has provided the main framework for all European governments and all their colonies and since the time of Constantine at least, this state religion has been intimately related and symbiotic with Christianity. Clearly the governments that exist today, are in fact the mutated elaborations of these theocracies, which are by definition forms of black magick and so Christianity and Judaism are the primary traditions of tyrants. As the Gnostic author Philip K Dick pointed out, “The Empire Never Ended” and I will also point out that the words “Keiser” and “Tsar” both have their roots in the word “Caesar.”

When a government can control history, something which was much easier before the printing press, such power gives them control of the past and with that comes control of the context of the present, which then allows for controlling everyone. So in some ways the tablets of destiny are in fact a symbol of the theocracy's ability to write, or cast “spells” that allows it to control everyone. While not inherently corrupting, the advent of writing planted the seeds of the shift from oral traditions to a scriptural religion such as Judaism and with this shift dogma was standardized and fixed, allowing for religious authoritarianism on an unprecedented scale. No longer is having a personal spiritual experience important, but reading about the supposed experiences of others. As your context determines your “layers of description,” these writings then give a person or “god” control over how people perceive time and the universe and through this manipulation of human minds they are able to manipulate destiny. (Not least of all by claiming the world is 6000 years old, or by changing the calendar system all together) I can't say for sure how consciously done all this was, the nature of the spell which makes people into brainwashed slaves does not require black magicians consciously do anything, in fact it probably spreads better if the human rulers believe their own lies. However it is undeniable the mes, the memes for what it means to be in a hierarchical civilization has spread across the world and they do not have humanities, or natures best interest in mind.

Clearly hierarchy and some forms of theocracy do exist in polytheistic cultures, they were even invented in a polytheistic culture, but although Pharaohs and Roman emperors claimed divinity, religious tolerance was widespread and so long as they obeyed the government, people were generally free to believe what they want. Combined with the idea of theocracy, monotheism provides a framework for the rulers to control people in a much more totalitarian manner, it allows for the destruction of all opposing philosophies in a way that is not possible in polytheistic cultures with no real orthodoxy. The most blood thirsty soldiers are those who believe themselves wholly right, and their enemies wholly demonic and this along with the notion of holy martyrs creates a mindset that does not occur in Pagan religions. Rome was polytheistic for most of its existence, but the virus of Sumerian theocracy had not fully set in yet and was about to become even more virulent, Christianity would find crucial elements to its memes from the old Middle Eastern theocratic breeding grounds. Through Mithraism and Zoroastrianism Constantine acquired religious ideas which could be incorporated in to the religion, which would allow for more control of the people, instilling them with an even stronger sense of militarism, dualism and damnation to add to the philosophies of Judaism. For example Anahita a form of Columbia much like Ishtar was the virgin mother of Mithras, who was a popular god with Roman soldiers and was among other things the god of contracts and covenants, etymologically his name literally means “contract” and it is from this tradition that we get the hand shake. These ideas would take hold in the already hierarchical Roman civilization, but would use monotheistic theocracy to give spiritual control over to the government and take it away from the decentralized and often essentially Anarchist folk religions and mystery schools.

From everything I have learned it seems hierarchy can only really take hold when humanity thinks of itself as separate from the divine beings, because as soon as that happens authority is created, at the very least authorities on those supposedly separate entities. Although this theory probably cannot be proven irrefutably, not much of the true context of ancient history really can be. As the ancients didn't write in a literal way and much of the time didn't write at all, conjecture is always present in history, which of course is very handy for leaders trying to change history in their favour. Once this happens then all personal efforts at interpretation and spiritual developments become co-opted to the agendas of external authorities, and so rulers or archons are created which dictate what reality should be according to their vain limitations, as opposed to what reality is and how we can better function in it. If the divine is omnipotent and omnipresent then we are all divine and so whatever society we have it is technically divine, but ironically in our attempt to have a perfect society in accordance with a theocratic "god's" wishes, we ignore the divinity in us which is the only hope we have of having the wisdom necessary to live a spiritual life, a life which I argue is inherently Anarchist.

So to sum it up, the war between the Jesuits and egalitarian Masons and other Occultist rebels has been a war of spreading and restricting magickal knowledge in order to gain control of the world by using the keys of Solomon to unlock the tablets. Speaking in very broad terms, there are two main types of Occult influences on history then, though each side may have numerous unaffiliated schools. One side wants to set humanity free and believes that all knowledge should be made available to others in promotion of equality and freedom, it is essentially Anarchist and generally monist recognizing the divinity of humanity and the need for non literal interpretation. The other side best exemplified by Christianity is ruled by the archons and wants to make humanity ignorant so that we will be easier to rule, it is generally dualist and so is obsessed with hierarchy and authoritative literalist interpretations and institutions. Though it is true this side has no problem in trying to appropriate Occult knowledge to further its ends, these black magicians are essentially fascists, but secretly can still be quite eclectic as they try to reconstruct the old banking religion. (Some of these may think they are divine beings, but obviously do not feel the same about the people they rule over.) This war would continue between the church and the Masons during the enlightenment period until the Illuminati infiltrated certain lodges, but in some ways would be carried on in a more secular way by the Masonic Anarchists and freedom fighters which I have already mentioned. (not to mention many others who are not Masons.)

As profound and wonderful and nature loving as Alchemy can be, it has also been called "the royal art" and this is for two largely opposite reasons, the first being that any who practice the spiritual variety will become divine, (which in the renaissance was associated with monarchy due to Christianity) but also that Monarchs would hire literalist puffers to try and create physical gold for them. Most often the aristocrats would be swindled by charlatans, counterfeit gold was perfected in this way, but since it was commonly believed that the physical transmutation of lead into gold was possible, a monarch would not allow citizens to practice Alchemy for fear that they would destroy the economy or depose them. (the church also often considered it Pagan heresy) This did not stop monarchs from hiring people who claimed to be Alchemists in hopes of making the king even richer and overtaking the economies of foreign enemies, hence it was also the art of the royals. This brings to mind Isaac Newton in his role as head of the royal mint coining money as talismans for the British Empire, and his Alchemical writings would later be bought and studied by the famous economist John Maynard Keynes.

We can also see this in the Medici, a powerful banking family and patrons of the translation of many Alchemical and Greek texts such as the Corpus Hermeticum and the works of Plato, (who gives detailed advice as to how to enslave humanity and also promotes eugenics) This large variety of texts were translated in hopes of finding the secret to creating physical gold, but instead they brought about the creation of science and the renaissance. I do not see how Hermetic philosophy could be used for economic purposes, but then no one really knew what the works contained until they were translated. However this is not to say they didn't try, that they weren't looking or have these kinds of intentions or that some of the more practical Alchemical texts didn't have something useful and if the Medici did find the keys to Alchemical economics, they sure as hell wouldn't tell people about it. Pretty well all the ancient texts they could get their hands on would be translated, not just by the Medici, but by many others and this would end up biting the church in the ass since the texts would be disseminated, ultimately with science causing the “blow back” of Christian dogma being disproved. I do think the Hermetic works to be very compatible with Anarchism, (in some ways even more than Gnosticism) but it is still true that all kinds of other ancient works would be translated in hopes of finding Alchemical information, some of which could well have been used by the black magicians. Four of the Medici even became popes and one was responsible for instituting indulgences, which was certainly financial black magick and the inspiration for Martin Luther to write his 95 thesis. Catholic corruption is far too voluminous for this book, but the Medici are about as good an example as could be. Those who are interested can consult any regular history of that church's popes, which will show it has been filled with murderous and conspiratorial war criminals and greedy mercantile tyrants, not to mention bigoted hypocrites. However banking was pretty well understood by this time and the majority of information they translated that we know of, was ironically probably more helpful for Anarchists, though it is true that science certainly serves the powers who fund them. It is quite possible however that hidden away in the Vatican library exists unreleased and newly discovered keys to the tablets which were discovered at this time. These would either be of a more metaphysical and Goetic nature, or it is possible the bankers found new ways to generate physical gold through following financial procedures, ones that mirror the procedures which generate the spiritual gold of Anarchist wisdom. That is since capitalism in general is for lack of a better term like Alchemical Satanism, by reversing the spiritual knowledge like Satanists do at a “black mass,” the bankers may have gained some monetary knowledge.

Researching this I found that my interpretation of Chomsky's notion of universal grammar was even more correct than I had intuited, that universal grammar is actually of central importance to many Occult traditions and so I can only imagine what Chomsky could have come up with if he had Occult knowledge. If he had he might have come across the Occult notion of the “universal language” in which various mystics and Occultists searched for a language which was thought to have been common to all people, also known as the “Adamic language.” This is the language Adam spoke in paradise, the language “god” used to create the universe and which people spoke before Yahweh destroyed the tower of Babel and confused everybody by making us all speak differently. This Adamic language is thought by many to be Hebrew, though John Dee's angels claimed their Enochian language was it, but that Adam forgot it when he was kicked out of paradise and that Hebrew is but a hazy recollection of it afterwards. While skeptics think Enochian is a contrived language with elements of glossolalia and has little to do with Hebrew, even if it was made up it is a sign that Dee was searching for this universal language. Others claim it is a true and distinct language rather than an artificial one and I do not have the skills to say one way or another. While I did mention the green language of Alchemy, this notion is far older than the renaissance, in fact it could be argued that the syncretism of Alexandria to form Hermeticism and Gnosticism was an attempt to find the universal language encoded in religion and so along with the renaissance the very origins of science lie in this concept of universal grammar. While their linguist skills may not have been the best, the ancients knew even better than us that Indo-European languages and religion were similar and Egyptian hieroglyphs also acted as a kind of universal language for many different peoples in far distant past. (While many people were illiterate there were common emblems and symbols which people knew)

Many thinkers were at least influenced by this idea, if not not looking for the language directly, in fact it is the start of comparative linguistics and we can see its influence on Giordano Bruno, Pico della Mirandola and Marsilio Ficino, Paracelsus, Jacob Bohme, Robert Fludd and many others. Raymond Lull played an important part in coming up with the idea for the need for a universal language and though he made little progress in creating it, his ideas would be taken up by later thinkers. His popularization of the art of memory helped inspire how such a language should be structured, the goal being a language that could be easily stored in the memory banks to increase intelligence and raise consciousness in general. This would also have interesting implications for anamnesis and the master of memory and mnemonic techniques Giordano Bruno worked to incorporate this linguistic knowledge with geometry. Perhaps the most overt example however comes from the Occultist, mathematician and scientist Gottfried Leibniz, with his “characteristica universalis” and his “alphabet of human thought.” Not only did Leibniz help to inspire computers, he invented calculus, though Newton is often given the credit there was a big controversy about it and historians think they arrived at it independently. In fact these two were antagonistic towards each other and at least philosophically it was because of this same Occult war. Kurt Gödel, a very important mathematician (who created the “incompleteness theorem”) had his own Platonic metaphysical paradigm and was also studying Leibniz for the purposes of this universal language, but was convinced there had been a conspiracy against Leibniz to cover up his work. In this regard Leibniz was in part inspired by works of Descartes, but also Raymond Lull who also helped to inspire computers and was the founder of “information science.” When we remember that John Dee was especially known as a cryptographer and mathematician, it becomes clear that the universal language was central to their spirituality and is the basis for much of Occult philosophy. That is due to the ideas of Pythagoras the language of nature was to a large degree thought to be mathematical, so magician scientists, often using gematria or associating numbers with words laboured to make the perfect mathematical language, but which still incorporates all the other Occult correspondences, in fact so many correspondences based in nature that it would truly be a “universal” language.

Due to Hebrew's central role in Kabbalah and its mathematical structure we can see that indeed Occultists have far more grand ideas in mind when they speak of a universal language or grammar, in fact it is one of major keys for understanding the Occult war between the Abrahamic archons and the rest of humanity. That as Alchemy is the source of science, while the church tried to co-opt it, it cannot change the truth and so some Alchemists have been struggling on in secret to transmute the ignorance of the world. This Occult war is more complex than just the two groups the Masons and Jesuits, these are merely the two best known and probably the most powerful, however we should not think that even these two groups were wholly unified in their intentions. Other groups like the Rosicrucians, or Pagan Alchemists had their role, not to mention non Jesuit Christians and Muslims in the middle east. The members of this banking religion have been covering up the philosophical ideas of these Alchemists like Leibniz (and even their own man Newton) in order to make us more ignorant and so we are in a race against eternal tyranny to bring freedom and save the natural world from unbridled consumerism. Newton was explicitly against Gnostics which he associated with Leibniz, but also Rosicrucians and Kabbalists due to their Christian heresies. Though secretly he did engage in his own Alchemical Christian heresies, he was a puffer and still very much of the patriarchal Abrahamic mindset and he was clearly a member of the banking religion (having more than a few psychopathic tendencies) and so we can see this as his antagonism to the magicians who would give away the game and set us free. Much of this is beyond the scope of this book, but if you want to research it yourself just remember to avoid oversimplifying it in to black and white or monolithic conspiracies. To understand this Occult war of ideas and philosophies we must understand where the Masons see their knowledge as coming from, and this is from the tower of Babel. As with all religious mythology, we do not have to believe it literally and in fact we must interpret the symbols to understand it at all, but as the mythical history was believed by the followers of those religions, to a large degree we can understand the history of the memes and symbols and the ideas they represent as they developed through gaining an understanding of the myths.

According to the Jewish tradition of the Midrashim, Abraham was present at the time of the building of the tower of Babel and was trying to discourage them from building it, he was spreading the word of “god” and it says the tower was built in defiance of god and even as an act of war against him. “God” then said “come, let US go down and confuse their language so they will not understand each other” as the banking religion does not like the people standing up to them. This “US” has often been interpreted as referring to Yahweh and the Elohim, with the Elohim being the original pantheon of gods which predates Jewish monotheism, though the book of Jasher does say he was speaking to 70 or 72 angels which would fit the Shemhamphorash. While ziggurats certainly existed in Babylon we can take the tower as I said, as a symbol of the universal knowledge of reality, the total ancient Occult sciences which integrates all information in to a coherent universal language based on a fractal understanding of reality. From this understanding, the ancient mystics sought to create heaven on Earth, or to give humanity access to heaven and even to make humanity divine. Much like Gnostics, the Midrashim says the people were pissed at “god” from keeping them separated from heaven and I would even go so far as to say that like the Gnostics in the Roman empire, some of the people in all the various lands in the Babylonian empire had come together to understand the underlying truth of their various religions. I would further argue that these mystics were the original “Judaism,” which created a new international and inter-religious understanding which in part would later be called “Merkabah” and then “Kabbalah” or Qabbalah and so they recognized the underlying unity of all religions. The ziggurats were used as observatories and celestial temples, that is the first civilizations and towers would have been the world headquarters for astronomical/astrological research. By further determining the characteristics of the constellations and planets, the wise people of nomadic tribes from all over Europe and Asia could integrate their knowledge of astrology, plants, metals, crystals and everything else to create a universal form of Qabbalah. This would lead to the invention of a magickal alphabet capable of representing the universal fractal formula and with that the tablets of destiny were created as the iterations of that formula and as research continued this lead to the creation of the non vowel version of the Torah. These mystics thus created an understanding of henotheism elaborated to the point that it was easily converted into dogmatic monotheism, with many Pagan gods simply turned in to human characters in the Torah. In their attempts to make a magick that could bring heaven on Earth and unite all people, the Qabbalistic knowledge was usurped by the demiurge and the archons who twisted it to create Judaism, confusing everyone so that humanity would be imprisoned in a world they control.

Given the anti-Babylonian stories in the Torah I do think that in this way it is likely many aspects of “Judaism” actually began as a rebellion against the banking religion and that obviously what we know today is mostly the histories written by the banking cult. Orthodox Judaism then would be as different from the original, as Christianity is from Gnosticism and it would not be hard at all to do this by adding and taking away a few vowels here and there to the Torah. For example many have compared Abraham and Sara to the Hindu deities Brahma and Saraswati, and while we might question his motives, Josephus himself says the Jews come from the philosophers of India, but then centuries earlier Clearchus of Soli said the same thing! The idea seems to come from Aristotle, but it is funny how scholars claim Josephus is a credible historian when he speaks of Jesus, but when he says things like this he is ignored. While Indian Brahmins may not be the genetic ancestors of the ethnic Jews, the more I look, the more I see all kinds of religions are intimately related to each other and much of the time India is given credit as the source. In this way “Judaism” as a syncretic multi-ethnic mystical religion was like the original form of Gnosticism, with the original Gnostics even being aware of this and carrying on the research. The Gnostics however would generally focus more on the far less corrupted forms of Paganism and Egyptian religion in order to oppose the banking religion that Judaism had become. Gnostics did sometimes interpret the Torah, though they generally thought those who believed in the book were damned and to various degrees flipped the interpretations as with the Cainites. However in order to maintain credibility and the illusion of change, the rulers as with Christianity must incorporate aspects of the history of the rebellions, mixing the information and so the exoteric forms of the theocratic religion change. So upon discovering the universal truth of all religions, the people who built the “tower” created a religion which had memes from all over the place and so credibility with all kinds of people, then the bankers destroyed the history of how it came to be, thus “confusing the people.” They would then make it seem as though it had always been them under the name “Abraham” and that the “one god” had given them alone authority to interpret the religion. The story of Judaism as a distinct religion really starts from the point in the Torah after the tower in Genesis, the time when Abraham went on his journey to spread his new authoritarian religion, trying to infiltrate Egypt by pimping out his wife. In this way, the Torah was written to include all the theocratic memes and laws of the tablets of destiny, (and Egypt) imposing the bankers view of history on to the line of consonants that is the Torah, yet retaining much of the Kabbalistic and Pagan mythology in the new even more theocratic form than that of the Babylonians. In this way as “Abraham” left after the fall of the tower, we can see that he was going around spreading the new theocratic memes, centralizing religious thought and destroying the historical context of the Pagans thus “confusing” them.

In this way the Torah or tablets of destiny are themselves like the tower of babel and Hebrew the language of Kabbalists is the ancient attempt at constructing this universal language. Aramaic was the common language of ancient Jews and Hebrew was for the priests and so does not necessarily originate with ethnic Jews themselves. As this universal knowledge had scientific and materialistic applications the theocrats kept many of the keys for themselves, but confused everyone else so that they would be easily controlled, having little to no non literal context for their own holy books. We can see in Alchemy too a lot of tower symbolism and I believe this is because they were using towers as the architecture for a “memory palace,” so that by organizing information according to this architecture they could store all the known mystical/scientific and astrological knowledge of their time. So as Kabbalah was originally primarily an oral tradition, the original tower of babel was such a memory palace required to transmit this knowledge of the Pagan mystics. That with the writing of the Torah much of this knowledge was encoded, and so the old mystics who had true wisdom could be killed and the knowledge and keys to that knowledge which went back to prehistoric Shamanic cultures could be easily monopolized by the theocracy. Much of the benefit from such a memory palace would be lost as it would not create the same intelligence or all the same states of awareness simply by reading it, especially if you didn't have the keys to unlock the mnemonic device, nor the oral elaborations of what the symbols actually mean or the magickal rituals to use them properly. Once the theocrats killed the wise people who had come together to form the Torah or it's prototypes from the memory palace, then they had the monopoly on the ancient wisdom and the true context of the religions, thus the people were easily divided by the schismatic and dogmatic interpretations put out by the theocrats.

It is too simplistic to say that Abrahamic traditions are bad, Paganism is good or vice versa, this is in fact the result of the dualist thinking of literalist Abrahamic traditions. This is especially true since the Abrahamic religions are syncretic forms of Paganism, both were used by magicians to set us free and rulers and dogmatic institutions to enslave us and make us ignorant. So, as long as hierarchy is allowed to determine spirituality it will be corrupted as it corrupts all things, but there is also truth in any religion when interpreted from a magickal or mystical perspective and so the real conflict is between the authorities and the divine sparks inside all of humanity. From this perspective that tower is hierarchy and represents real slave labour (indentured or otherwise) of the Babylonians, but the bankers confused the languages and obliterated the history of that time, just as they did to Gnosticism through the Catholic Church. That is from one perspective the tower is a fractal of integrated knowledge created by Occultists which will allow humanity to be as gods and to truly understand one another. From another perspective the tower is physical and represents a hierarchy, the system of the archons which those Occultists are seeking to overthrow, the system run by bankers which specializes in appropriating the creativity and knowledge of the people for its own profit, thus creating material gold rather than philosophic gold. As the first people to be converted knew of the literal historical rebellion against the banking religion and the government who forced them to make ziggurats for the theocracy, the rulers included a twisted form of that history it in to Genesis and just took on the new image of YHVH as Yahweh the jealous god of the new theocracy. While the Qabbalistic knowledge would have been much older, the non magickal and literal interpretations would have been imposed in their final form after the captivity in Babylon and so much of the mythology of the Torah probably refers to this time, or at least layers of interpretation encoded in to the mnemonic device refer to this time. Much like the Iliad incorporates a variety of times and layers, or “stories” in to its memory palace, older stories like that of the Hyksos would also be added to the Torah. The magicians and the rulers mirror each other, the rulers co-opting the magicians, the magicians attempting to rid the world of ignorance and shed light on the underlying meaning of divergent myths, but each side uses many of the same symbols and may even infiltrate each other. (Others may be raised in the literalist tradition but gain the mystical context, which is often still hidden within for those with eyes to see.)

So, throughout history there have been those who resisted the bankers and instead built up a tower of knowledge, being pluralist and non literal they would fight the dogmatic and authoritarian forces of ignorance. It is always knowledge which sets us free and the more Anarchist a religion, the more they love knowledge and the more spiritual wisdom they have. These magicians want to decentralize all power structures and integrate all knowledge so that it can be shared, the theocratic side wants to centralize all its power and spread ignorance so that it can turn all wisdom against itself. Often it can be hard to tell who is who, like a Zoroastrian riddle, these two groups seem opposed and we may wonder who is more powerful, who is the eye on top of the pyramid? Is it consciousness and divinity? Or is it some Tyrant? Is it the ever watchful eye of Pan? Or the eye of Samael which is blind? The answer is that it is in the eye of the beholder, it goes round and round the fractal in the circumambulation, each side trying to transmute the other, the left and right hand washes the other while the archons and aeons fight each other. Is this world a prison? Or an escalating decision?

The book of Zechariah in the Torah says the capstone of Judaism is the god of “Zerubbabel,” a name which means the “offspring of Babylon,” and this god is the one who calls himself “Sabaoth,” the Lord of Hoasts with his “strong tower” spoken of elsewhere in the Torah. In some ways I would interpret the tower of Babel as referring to information and the mnemonic device, while the strong tower of the Jewish Lord of Hoasts is symbolic of the bankers and hierarchy, something which they have been building ever since. The Christian writer Origen in his commentary on the Gospel of John refers to the “tower of the Gospel,” while Irenaeus (Book 4 Chapter 36) also interprets Mathew 21:33 which speaks of a tower and a wine press which refers to Jerusalem and the teachings of Jesus and ultimately the church, while Clement of Alexandria in his Stromata (Book 2 Chapter 9) also speaks of how Jesus taught and the teachings woke up the sleeping and these were “fitted into the structure of the tower, and unhewn were built up together.” However just as the tower of Babel can be interpreted as belonging to the bankers, given that Judaism overlaid the original text and Pagan ideas and changed the spacing and added vowels, sometimes you can interpret the “strong tower” as the tower of information and the tower of babel as referring to hierarchy. Originally the stories in the uncorrupted Torah quite possibly had only one tower, or at least the symbolic connection between the two was understood in what we might call a strong tower of Babel, so that it was all self referential towards the memory palace, though of course all this is very “confusing” to those with dualist dogmatic presumptions about interpretation. So since reality is monist, we must interpret the seemingly dualist texts in a monist way and see both perspectives, recognizing myth as subjective, we must look for truth from all angles and so gain the wisdom that slowly reveals itself.

The history of governments is the history of money and so the history of the banking religion and until we understand this we cannot understand history at all. During the middle ages Ireland was known as the best place for scholarship in Europe and from them we read in the Book of Invasions their mythical history, albeit in a highly Christianized form. These Irish Celts claimed to be Israelites and as I have pointed out, Ogham like many alphabets is much like Kabbalistic ideas about the alphabet, but we also see the origin of Ogham was according to these legends from a Scythian King Fenius, who had happened to have 72 scholars with him and studied at the tower of Babel. (See also the text, Auraicept na n-éces which explains the tower was actually made from grammatical materials, IE nouns, pronouns, verbs, adverbs, participles, conjunctions, prepositions and interjections) Now the number 72 comes up again and again in both mainstream Abrahamic religion and the Occult and especially astrology, so that there are 72 spirits of the Goetia and 72 Shemhamphorash, but also there was thought to be 72 languages after the fall of the tower, which would symbolically need 72 scholars. These are further related to the 70 descendents of Noah as listed in Genesis chapter 10, which would come to be 72 descendents in the Septuagint or Greek translation of the Torah and so they represent the 72 nations created after the confusion and fall of the tower. So for the Irish, Fenius has a son named Nel, who was born at the tower of Babel and spoke all 72 languages, he marries the Egyptian Pharaoh's daughter named Scota, after whom Scotland is named and together they have a son named Goidel Glas who with the help of his family takes the best of the 72 languages to make Gaelic, later this family produces Breogán who builds a tower in Spain.

Ogham writings in western Europe often refer to events close to the black sea and this is the area surrounding Troy, which is not surprising when we understand that as in the Book of Invasions and other places, the Celts and Irish also considered themselves descendents of the Trojans. In fact just as Rome was founded by Aeneas, other places such as Britain, Scotland and Gaul each claim they were founded by refugees from Troy, some of the most important being Brutus, Albanus and Astyanax respectively, while Pontevedra in Spain claimed to be founded by Teucer, son of Telemon. This is more complicated than I can go in to here, but there is no shortage of legends and so we see not only this, but Snorri Sturluson our main source on the Norse religion said that Odin and the Aesir are called as such because they came from Asia and specifically Troy! Now we must remember that Troy fell some 2400 years before Snorri wrote and also the Celtic writers of the Book of Invasions, all of whom were under threat of Christian persecution if they did not write in a way which the church approved. In fact all these people were Christians and so while I do believe these works contain authentic and some of the most beautiful Pagan poetry and myths, unfortunately most of the truth is undoubtedly lost and it is pretty impossible to sort out a real history. The fact is no Pagan holy books would have been allowed to have been written in Christian countries unless they served some Christian purpose and so while texts like these are in my opinion some of the greatest literature in world history, we must be suspicious of the Christians who wrote them down and undoubtedly altered the original poetry. This association with Troy for example would be the result of Christian infiltration, which is itself rooted in the Roman and Trojan banking religion, though undoubtedly European Pagans were influenced by other middle eastern religions. Whether or not it is exactly true that the Aesir come from Troy, the history and myths of both the Celts and the Norse definitely have correspondences with Indo-European cultures and so astrology and Qabbalah can provide many important keys to understanding these religions. (The real question is how much of the myths we know today go back before Troy in to the prehistoric traditions.)

Ogham is not as old as Troy and so we can take it as a metaphor for trying to restore the Indo-European universal language, a language that was “confused” and to some degree destroyed by the banking cult of the Trojans. Over the centuries Trojans would be glorified by myth and propaganda as the spreaders of “civilization” that they were, taking the credit for all wisdom and knowledge and infiltrating or even creating governments to rule over the people. This co-opting of Pagan religions would certainly fit how the bankers have handled other religions and if the tower of Babel myth has any historicity, there was a pluralistic yet coherent Eurasian and African religion before “civilization” existed. It was during the Roman empire around 100-400 A.D. that we see the development of the first the Runic alphabet and then Ogham and so it appears over a thousand years after Troy the Norse and Celts (like the Gnostics) were trying to reconstruct and add to their own religions. They did this by taking some influence from the other cultures that they were increasingly coming in to contact with, probably both merchants and refugees from the expansion of the Empire. This kind of comparative religion is natural in non dogmatic and non authoritarian religions, but at the same time some merchants could well have been trying to steal more keys to the pre-Babel religion as Rome colonized these areas. (Especially as many keys were lost during the destruction of the Temple) While scripture based religions are easier for a theocracy to control, the Celts and Norse definitely did not have a scripture based religion and so their alphabets (as with Hebrew) were likely created by mystics trying to enlighten their people and promote magickal awareness rather than dogma, the transcribers of the myths like Snorri however, are generally Christians and so much more suspicious.

After the fall of Troy it is not hard to imagine the international bullion traders would try to colonize northern Europe and get those people in to metal working and trade, that they would try to spread their metal fetish in order to feed the beast. (It would also be pretty easy as metal working is so useful.) We can see that the lands of the Celtic and Norse peoples never really got in to banking or really used coins much compared to other peoples, at least until they all became Christians much later. We can also see that gender equality was relatively well maintained as well and so the patriarchal bankers may have opened them up to the international metal trade, but were clearly limited in their ability to colonize. Even more than most Pagan religions, the Norse spirituality was decentralized and matriarchal, the society was more tribal and there was great diversity, at least until they were conquered by Christian memes. We can see more of a democratic inclination in the Norse as the gods had their own form of parliament, which was also reflected in the society as we can see in the Icelandic commonwealth. The Celts were also definitely less culturally colonized than the Greeks or Romans and were also highly democratic compared to Christians, or even Pagan Romans and Greeks. Whats more, the oral traditions of these cultures were maintained until Christians murdered all the wise people and we can see that centralized dogmatism never took hold and so while there was some influence, many people remained free until the Christian colonization of the banking empire. Caesar did do his best to wipe out Druids which is more evidence they were not colonized by the bankers successfully. While Snorri may have said that Odin came from Troy and while his myths are important in the Eddas, despite common knowledge, his worship was not as central to the Norse compared to other gods such as Thor and Freyr. Just as with the Celts, most historians would not accept this origin story so literally, and to me it is likely that much of the associations with Troy are a later development, that they reflect the infection of theocratic banking memes gradually and at a later date, especially after the “civilizing” influences of Christianity and the Romans.

In a Pagan version of the Babel story we learn of the founding of Greek civilization, it says that at one time Zeus ruled humanity and there was no laws or towns and everyone spoke the same language, then for some reason Hermes taught humanity multiple languages, it is often portrayed as a gift but as a result discord and the first nations arose. Zeus didn't like this and stepped down and Phoroneus became the first king of humanity, he also brought metal working with him and the religion of Hera, he had a son named Apis who became king and a tyrant and was overthrown, in some myths he was killed, in others he went to Egypt. This strongly suggests the banking cult with its metal fetish was behind this, Hera or Juno Moneta came in, but more than this the Egyptian version of Apis is a bull god, an animal which is a common symbol of Saturn and the cult as with Cybele. We also learn that Phoroneus had an unnamed daughter who was the mother of the Korybantes, who are the dancers of Cybele and so the Greeks came to be “civilized” by what was essentially a Phrygian cult. Hermes was also credited with inventing weights and measures, which makes sense as this was how the first currency developed for his merchants, much like as with shekels and talents as measures of grain. As with legal terms, those who decide the definitions of things, decide the kinds of conversations that can be had and decide the basis of the economy and so the first most crucial aspect of being a ruler is getting people to adhere to your definition of terms. We can see this in the media today which manipulates politics through newspeak and a very careful choice of words and euphemisms to create consent in the consensus reality.

Along with killing those who had the keys to the mythological mnemonic devices, the most likely method of confusion I can think of is that bankers introduced different sets of weights and measures in different places so that they could act as money changers or work out exchange rates on various products, thus setting themselves up as middle men. (There is evidence of a prehistoric measurement system that was quite ubiquitous, as for example the “megalithic yard”) The myth also says this was the start of countries and laws and so we can see the languages the bankers created were more like legalese, so that they divided the people using theocratic legal systems to help monopolize economics and then took over the cultures. (Probably using nationalism to sell products which correspond to a patriotic identity in the process.) If you can get people of different lands to use different terms, then you can set yourself up as the middle man, you can then charge fees for all transactions just as banks (and government corporations) do today, you can also fix the scales to your advantage and become an authority on what you define to be "justice." Many of the first kings were also judges and as economy is family law and comes out of the legal question of property rights, economic colonization would come hand in hand with legal colonization. (Such as through trade contracts)

As mnemonic devices lost their keys and context, so too did the mystical core of the various religions, but it is also highly likely the tyrants messed with the calendar systems, spreading ignorance and making the people of an agrarian society dependent on them to understand the rhythms of nature. Being able to predict eclipses and things would have been very impressive to ignorant peasants and could easily be used to justify the authority of a theocracy in order to bring the sun back. Once Christians instituted a purely solar calendar people would be even more out of line with nature and so it would be easier to manipulate them as the moon does effect our minds and especially the menstrual cycle. This would explain the astrological associations of the archons, but even if you do not believe in astrology do not underestimate this, if you fuck with a persons calendar, you fuck with their sense of time and so everything in their context of the universal fractal. Also, as astrology is the basis of these religions, since the calendar system is dependent on the sun and moon it is essentially the physics and spiritual cosmology of the ancient cultures and so to monopolize or change that knowledge changes the whole foundation of the culture's paradigm. There is likely to be many ways in which people were divided, just as today the archons have many methods but the intent is always the same, to make people ignorant and turn them against each other.

In the Norse mythology however, we do get another clue which might be related, they say that there was a being called Kvasir who was created by all the spittle of the gods, both the Aesir and the nature oriented Vanir. The gods of the Aesir under Odin had gone to war with the gods of the Vanir but could not defeat them and so this Kvasir was a Vanir, but was created after the peace treaty to bring wisdom to humanity. Kvasir could answer any question but he was killed by two dwarves and his blood was drained to make the mead of poetry. These dwarves believed that people were too stupid to ask good questions and so they monopolized the blood for their own benefit, but they failed and eventually the mead came to the people. As others have pointed out the mead of inspiration was entheogenic, Kvasir obviously represents entheogens and probably Amanita muscaria or some other kind of mushroom spirit, as when properly evoked the mushroom spirits can answer all kinds of questions. From personal experience I know that although the answers are often cryptic and paradoxical, the mushrooms spirits will engage in a dialogue, so that in order to learn the truth you must learn what questions are truly most important to ask. So we can interpret this as the banking religion (represented by dwarves, the smiths and metal workers of spirit world) trying their best to monopolize the entheogenic wisdom for themselves in order to control people, substituting their own recipe for the indigenous one.

Like so many other places, or what was done with Soma, once people lost direct spiritual experiences, once they started taking more opium based mead rather than mushroom based mead, they were easier to control and lost the context of their religious philosophies. That is the language used in the myths became confused without the experiential context and so the people relied on authorities to tell them spiritual truths. So really the confusion of tongues would be the first stage of the mental colonization of the archons, which would progressively infect indigenous peoples around the world, the last stages of which would be carried out by Christians later on when they killed the Witches and whatever remaining Pagan Shamans there were. So, the bankers exterminated the most learned centres of Shamanism and entheogenic knowledge, then appropriated the indigenous symbolism and presented it as their own in an authoritarian context. The cult of Tyranny would do the same to the great library at Alexandria, first with Julius Caesar, then with the Christians themselves, such a place of international learning had to be destroyed as it would provide the context of the theocracy. The Christians couldn't allow anyone to provide real wisdom for people and so they finished the job of Caesar and burned it down. This monopolization of knowledge remains to this day and the Vatican library holds all kinds of plundered books and scrolls which could provide scholars with the keys to the ancient wisdom. As the religions became less and less experienced based Shamanism, they became more and more different and cultures became more and more unintelligible to each other, creating misunderstanding and opportunities for the archons to insight war and turmoil.

Given the decentralized nature of the Pagan religions and the polytheism and that people still lived in relative harmony with nature, many Shamans would survive the first waves of colonization. Entheogenic cults did exist later on and as the myth says Kvasir did get to the people, but as time goes on, the banker drugs start to be more prevalent and things resembling centralized governments start to appear. With civilization, people were no longer so tribal and there simply would not have been enough mushrooms to go around with the population growth that comes with that and no doubt as today the banking theocracies would have controlled entheogen use as much as possible, if not replacing the plants outright as I said. It would not be till the Christian demonization of nature that the theocracies would be strong enough to wipe out the last vestiges of the prehistoric Shamanism and make people fear the mushrooms which give wisdom.

This has been quite disturbing to me as Paganism has supplied me with most of my favourite myths and symbolism, to some degree I can feel my paradigm crumbling. But then while they don't usually focus on the economic and entheogenic aspects, these realizations are not too surprising given all the scholarship on Indo-European cultures. Odin is one of my favourite gods and his myths do contain much wisdom, much mystical knowledge and so we should understand that there is always a variety of traditions and interpretations with symbols, especially in Paganism. That just as "Hinduism" can be incredibly patriarchal and classist, it also has a lot of wisdom and many schools of thought, with the Tantric schools being quite Anarchistic and yet it is all generally referred to as "Hinduism." (This term is so vague in fact, that many Indians point out it's inaccuracy, preferring to be called "Vedic" religions, I use the term Hinduism because it includes the more Tantric schools and spirituality in general beyond the Indus river.) Many people can and have spent their lives trying to decode the links of the various religions and many have theorized that a prehistoric goddess religion existed that was destroyed by patriarchal religions. This goddess religion had among its last outposts Crete or the Minoan civilization, which later became famous for being rich merchants and traders of things like opium and the purple dye used exclusively by monarchs. (Purple is also a colour associated with Saturn) Legend has it that Troy itself was founded by a King from Crete, the place of the mythological labyrinth and minotaur and so on Crete we have a very ancient form of the banking religion.

At first I found it way too simplistic to reduce everything to one great goddess, I found it insulting to the differences of the many Pagan goddess's, but I find more and more evidence for something like this all the time. While there are still many varieties of goddess's who are not always connected, many of the most important ones do share so many similarities that they can only be part of the same intercontinental tradition. I still think its a mistake to assume that goddess iconography inherently suggests matriarchal society (as the banking religion clearly shows) and instead it was more egalitarian and Anarchistic like the rest of tribal societies. (Though there is a lot of variety in tribal societies) We can see this in the very familiar iconography at Catal Huyuk but even the older Gobekli Tepe which has all kinds of basically identical symbolism and it dates to 10th-8th millennium B.C. and is the the oldest major settlement we know of! This is of course long before any banking religion, but then this shouldn't be as surprising as many scholars might think, as given the nomadic life styles of hunter gatherer cultures there inevitably would have been a lot of cross cultural pollination. The reason why civilizations started at the Nile, the Indus river and the Tigris and Euphrates are more than likely because they would be ideal meeting places for large varieties of nomads tracking animal migrations, but are also useful for trade using boats. We could say the universal goddess is essentially Sophia, but what happened in prehistory is largely lost and that is precisely why it is called prehistoric. What parts of the Pagan religions existed before the fall of Troy is often pretty impossible to say and just how influential and in what manner the Indo-European culture spread is the subject of much debate among scholars. However given the astrological knowledge of these societies we know they needed observations going back many thousands of years and so as the religions are based on astrology, a large amount of the religions must be quite prehistoric. (For example despite common belief, Stone Henge was made by pre-Celtic people and not the Druids) It was a blending as the new more patriarchal and hierarchical culture came in to the old goddess oriented societies (which did also have gods) but it is generally agreed the Minoans were originally quite non-hierarchical and so there is much reason to believe that for a long time it was a stronghold of goddess oriented mushroom civilization. While they became some of the biggest opium traders, they did probably start out using mushrooms, even putting them in honey to preserve them like the Norse.

Scholars today do not agree with the idea of a single race which founded Indo-European traditions and think that it happened in waves over a long time. This idea that a particular culture was the originator has been the cause of much nationalism, most noticeably in the Romans and Nazis, all the while the international bankers were profiting from the wars of such nationalism. "Aryans" or "Indo-Europeans" are not a race, but a group of languages, though it is true that many in the 19th century thought of them as a race and it was taken this way by the Nazis. Theosophists saw the Aryans as coming from Atlantis, though not necessarily being white, unfortunately some Theosophists were racist about it, but then racism was pretty ubiquitous in Europe in the 1800s. Ironically my research shows these "Aryans" are the ones who spread the banking cult which the Nazis blamed the Jews for and we can see many religions share the same symbolism, even if they are not part of the same language family. So then what we are seeing is thousands of years of cross cultural pollination and influence from the more "civilized" cultures, to the more tribal and egalitarian. Again, while this is not limited to Indo-European cultures, we can think of it as multiple waves of increasingly virulent mutations of the archon virus, spreading increasingly despotic cultures which culminated in Christianity and totalitarian theocracy. At the same time there was relatively benign and egalitarian mutations of the virus, these Pagan traditions and cultures may not have been Anarchist utopias, or free of capitalism completely, but their tribalism would eventually be overcome by Christianity and the people forcibly converted or murdered.

In terms of the banking cult we can see that Romans and Minoans used the same symbol, a symbol also used by the the American government and others. This is the "Fasci," which is an axe surrounded by a bundle of sticks from which Mussolini got the word Fascism and so is definitely an important symbol to be aware of. As the banking cult are Fascists, we can see the Fasci in the logo of the Knights of Columbus, but as the Nazis were in league with the Catholics, we can also see that variations of the swastika can be found in very ancient Sumerian art. (Some art is so old that it is definitely pre-banking cult and so like the Fasci, the swastika was co-opted)

We can see the war is between elitists and egalitarians, literalists and magicians and in the same way that Anarchism and fascism both have elements of the left and right, these Occultist's can each be found on both sides of the political spectrum. So long as a person does not realize the union of opposites and the need to get rid of all hierarchies, they can be manipulated by the archons and so while the average person may think they support notions of "equality" and "freedom," they end up supporting what are ultimately fascist systems. Greece may have been fighting for independence from the Trojan state, but it still had a government, still had its gold and silver fetish and the memes of hierarchy, the horse which it used to infiltrate the city typified the ignorance of both sides. The bankers of Mesopotamia had used their archon memes to infiltrate both sides and at various times over the centuries make them fight against each other, for nothing is more profitable for bankers and archons than war. A country may think they are doing "good" and even fighting an ancient tyranny, but since the universal language was broken up while they may think they are preserving their fragment of the one true religion, they are actually fighting other people trying to preserve their own fragment of the “one true religion.” History has been rewritten and destroyed so many times no one but the Anarchist Occultists who do not believe in nationalism and dogmatism, or perhaps the bankers can understand the context of what is really going on and even they are often confused.

Linguists do find some evidence for a kind of “Adamic language” rooted in Africa, but this would have changed long before Sumeria and yet sometimes we might wonder how far back the oral traditions could possibly go? How many times have the myths repeated themselves? I do think many myths about a lost golden age or paradise, are really based on nostalgia for the egalitarian pseudo-Anarchism of prehistoric times. We can only wonder how the builders of Gobekli Tepe spoke, but parts of this myth of Babel may even be older than civilization, there is no way to tell. The myths are pretty clear that the theocrats confused the people and divided them by creating different languages or at least symbol systems. The ancient knowledge and Shamanistic oral traditions were broken up, the variables or mythological elements of the formulas were divided among various peoples and theocracies, yet each piece would be self similar with all the others for those with eyes to see. The theocrats would do their best to monopolize their Occult knowledge and manipulate the masses in to fighting each other, thus allowing them to create more totalitarian theocracies. If you can control the language people use, you can control their minds and so it is really the ultimate form of black magick. However, the bankers would not have been alone and refugees and free people's, or mystical rebels would have just as likely come up and tried to spread knowledge which could oppose such ideas. These rebels would fly out across the world like Daedalus from his tower prison and try to restore and reunify the ancient knowledge and “heal the world.” These were the ancient Qabbalists and the precursors to Gnostics, but they would face persecution everywhere they went, for the common people became increasingly theocratic and dogmatic in their religions. So it is, at any time there are people who want freedom, at any time there are magicians and mystics, heretics who can see through the propaganda and fight the culture war against the theocrats and dogmatists.

There is a Sumerian version of the tower of Babel myth called “Enmerkar and the lord of Arrata” in which Inanna (Ishtar) helps a king to extort a neighbouring king of gold and jewels in order to build a ziggurat or tower for Enki and to deck out her own temple as well. First she assures him that she is on his side, then advises him to recite a spell calling on Enki to disrupt the languages of the people so that the king can overtake them. In some translations the spell is intended to restore the unity of languages which had previously been confused by Enki, which is itself highly “confusing.” Either way the overall the message is pretty clear, the bankers (represented by Inanna) fucked with peoples languages in order to rule them. This myth also sites the invention of Sumerian writing to Enmerkar so that he can write out the threats to his neighbour, and so while writing could be used by an elite to help dominate illiterate peasants, given that proto-writing goes far back in to prehistory, again we see they corrupted a technology made by magicians. This translation of the myth where Enki reunifies the languages would explain how the banking theocracy used the alphabet to destroy the local oral traditions and set up a unified theocracy, showing that the king under the direction of “Inanna” was co-opting the pluralist traditions of the magickal writing technologies. (Presumably about the time Inanna stole the tablets of destiny from Enki)

We can see this in that Norse Runes and Celtic Ogham were not used by the governments to enslave people but were primarily only used for magickal purposes. Like any Occult symbolism writing is not bad or good it is how you use it, it can be used to spread knowledge in conjunction with the memory palaces and just as surely as you are reading this book they can also help to set people free. History shows that as a country becomes more literate, it becomes more democratic and so we see Occult practices are not “evil,” but can be used for black magick by an elite which monopolizes them and makes the people ignorant of those practices. Obviously then we should encourage everyone to practice and learn the Occult, (and become literate) so that we can even the playing field, for without equality of access to information, there can be no equality at all.

Given that the myth of the tower of Babel refers to the known world of those who made it, whatever history it does have refers to Mesopotamia and that area, and so we could say that it was not really a single event but a tactic used by the bankers in general. As I have said before, the archons lack creativity, they do not come up with brand new religions from scratch, they take over existing traditions and twist them, confusing the universal Shamanistic traditions in order to spread ignorance. Since the story of Babel in the Torah was written centuries after the Trojan war, it could well include the activities of those who left from Troy for Europe and other places, we just have to remember that this is not purely a history and so does not have to be linear in the sense that historians like to simplify things in to. (Time after all is an illusion and cyclical and this is often a teaching of the myths themselves) Given the similarities of the Pagan religions the confusion of tongues was not complete and while the bankers destroyed the centres of learning, refugees must have spread out and found ways to teach the sacred information to the people of their new homeland. Just as not all Americans are awful people because they live in an imperialistic autocracy, not all Sumerians or Mesopotamians were tyrannical people either and some would have naturally been trying to preserve the ancient wisdom from the rulers. While the details and time line of this has been extremely confused given the non linear aspects of myth, we can gain the key to the myths when we understand that Anarchism or egalitarianism is the key to understanding spiritual truth.

To bring the point home about the corruption of mystical Anarchism in to authoritarian religion, even in Judaism we see a variety of evidence showing how the religion used to be much more Anarchist, but was corrupted by kings and priests. Communal living was far from unknown in the ancient world and was in many places the norm and so the Jews had their own versions of it, with varying degrees of Anarchy. After the Hyksos invasion of Palestine, they colonized the local Semitic Canaanites who were polytheistic, these indigenous people had similar deities, but were still quite tribal. However this Hyksos colonization was clearly not completely successful and as I said before it was not until after the Babylonian captivity that we see evidence for Judaism proper. At this point ethnic Jews were forcibly indoctrinated in to "Judaism" as the theocratic form of the universal religion and so with those memes most became corrupted and "civilized" in monarchies and it was at this point that YHVH really became the demiurge we know so well. According to Anarchist standards the Hyksos probably did succeed in corrupting some of the locals, at least in terms of patriarchal domination and with the Phoenicians this is highly likely, but after the captivity archon memes infected and multiplied in Jewish culture like never before.

Indeed even according to the old testament itself the Jews used to live without a king, each person doing as they pleased! (Judges 21:25) Far from being a bad thing, in the book of Samuel the old tyrant Yahweh himself shows a very curious side and tells Samuel to warn the Israelites who wanted a king about the evils of government and monarchy. (Samuel 8:6 to 8:18) Apart from detailing how the people would be enslaved, this shows that by asking for a leader they abandoned "god" and that the only king they should accept is "god" and is quite explicit that once they get a king, they should not complain to "god" when the government treats them badly. (Hence the rulers try to get us to consent) This points out that while there is any government on the planet the people can become infected by archons and so create and empower kings and governments who will use and twist mysticism in to religion to rule in the place of "god." So from a Gnostic perspective so long as rulers exist in the minds of some of the people, the people will eventually create them on Earth, the human rulers then try to create more archons and this creates a cycle of increasing tyranny. We can see there is also the Essenes who had Anarchist tendencies, some Hasidic Rabbis, often with Kabbalist inclinations have also supported Anarchism. While I cannot claim in depth knowledge about all of them, others have cited these Jewish Anarchist mystics: Rudolph Rocker, Gustav Landauer and the Kabbalist Rabbi Yehuda Ashlag, Rabbi Abraham Yehudah Khein, Rabbi Shmuel Alexandrov, Rabbi Yankev-Meyer Zalkind and others not to mention the kibbutz communes. Zionists are obviously not Anarchist, but the kibbutz does show that non hierarchical organization is part of Judaism and I believe this is a remnant from the pretheocratic tribal form of Kabbalah.

While there is no archeological evidence for the time described in the book of Judges or Kings, this leads me to believe some racially Jewish people were like the tribal Pagans of Europe before they were colonized and turned in to monotheistic monarchists. That this story was created to explain why people were no longer free after they became colonized by the tyrants and so “Judaism” is Pagan Qabbalah corrupted by the cult of El. These tyrants created a government which seeks to destroy or co-opt Anarchist polytheistic and magical philosophies in an attempt to create a one world religion that can take over the world. Evidence apart from the old testament does suggest some radical and ancient forms of Jewish Anarchism and that these eventually became Gnostics. The characters and especially lineages of the bible often in part represent the various schools of thought within the umbrella tradition and so we could call the antinomians the line of Cain, or even the school of Eve who in a sense is the first Gnostic saint. At the same time Kabbalists understanding their unity with YHVH were also likely to be much more Anarchist just as the more modern Hasidic Anarchists I listed above and so as Judaism used to be polytheistic and incredibly varied, I do not want to over simplify things in to misleading labels. Given how much of an influence Babylonian and Egyptian culture had on Judaism, it is safe to say that most of the old testament is almost completely fabricated or at least highly altered. The stories of Abraham and Genesis and Moses and Exodus and many other examples being stories of taking mystical knowledge from other cultures, while Leviticus, Deuteronomy and the Talmud are the result of the theocracies grab for power. All of it being a rewriting of history to justify the creation of the theocratic laws or evolved mes to rule over the proto-Anarchist Pagans, even demonizing the old gods of tyranny in the process, yet simultaneously melding them together to make the ultimate tyrant god. While some have certainly argued the antagonism of the bible towards Asherah and the Babylonian gods automatically means Judaism was against the banking religion, this is only because they are assuming Yahweh is the true god. They also fail to realize that Yahweh is El and a variety of other Mesopotamian and Egyptian deities and as Judaism is pro-usury to goyim and is incredibly totalitarian and authoritarian, it cannot be a religion of a free people. Even by their own standards, the Jewish Kings of the old testament are generally quite corrupt and many of the stories do relate the need to rid lower classes of such heretical kings, but then even the prophets and patriarchs are as we have and will continue to see incredibly corrupt and indicative of the banking cult. So it is the kings quite probably twisted the teachings of these religious figures, though outside of a Kabbalistic context, it is generally pretty difficult to see much in Judaism which has any love of freedom or equality.

As Judaism started as Pagan Qabbalah in an attempt to find the underlying truth of all religions, then it is quite possible certain groups survived, even among certain ethnically Jewish tribes. Not all ethnic Jews were taken in the captivity either and these are the Samaritans and so some of them, such as what would become the Simonian Gnostics may have tried to restore sanity. Though they obviously failed and were subsequently demonized, some of the Pagan Qabbalist influence can be seen in the Jewish mystical traditions called Hekhalot or Merkabah mysticism, which in turn would come to accept more Pagan and Gnostic influence to make the Kabbalah. Depending on how you want to date and define these terms, I have seen some signs that influence went both ways and that Gnostics made use of some older Merkabah symbolism, but as many of the first Gnostics were racially Jewish, we can see the Greek and Egyptian religions heavily influenced these Jews after the captivity and that many different alloys came out of this cultural melting pot. Gershom Scholem was the most renowned secular scholar of Kabbalah and he says it is rooted in Gnosticism, this is the subject of much debate though it is generally agreed the more mystical forms of Merkabah are also the result of at least some Pagan influence, which itself is usually in the Gnostic vein. There are more purely Pagan forms of Gnosticism, but usually there is Jewish symbolism in there, albeit interpreted in very different ways. However if Gnostics were carrying on the original Pagan Qabbalah, it should not be surprising that Judaism as the corrupted form of this Qabbalah would have a lot of the same symbolism and so it is easy enough to see why sorting out who came first is so hard, they have the same Pagan roots, but branched out long ago, yet continued to mix every now and then as with the Essenes.

The dead sea scrolls do belong to people who believe in the Torah, who were militant rebels against Rome and while we might forgive them for wanting to overthrow foreign oppression, some Jews were no doubt even more totalitarian. So it is in Qumran the home of the Essene communities we can find a microcosm of the whole war between mystical Anarchists and black magicians, with the more Anarchist varieties heading in the direction of John the Baptist and the Gnostics and other Jews in the area heading in the direction of the more familiar dogmatism. Originally it was commonly believed by scholars that the Essenes possessed the dead sea scrolls, but much of this evidence comes from Josephus and so is questionable and we can see that things like the “war scroll” do not fit with what are supposed to be peace loving Essenes. There probably was multiple Essene groups however and so it is really hard to say exactly what was going on and today there are a variety of theories and the scrolls could belong to any number of zealot forms of Judaism. However in light of other things to do with the corrupt nature of institutionalized Judaism, I believe that the scrolls belonged to the “Zadokite” priests (Sadducees) who stem from the high priest Zadok and were quite possibly in the area of the Essenes in order to co-opt them and the other rebel heretics. To be honest no one really knows how the scrolls got there or who put them there and it could even be the literature of a variety of groups, put there to preserve them from the Romans.

At any rate, eventually the more Jewish varieties of Merkabah split ways with Gnosticism which was getting more Pagan and so these Merkabah mystics would grow in to the Kabbalists, luckily surviving Christian persecution. To some degree it seems Kabbalah was developed by Gnostics using Judaism as a cover to escape this persecution and so preserve their ancient knowledge, but given the Torah is structured according to Kabbalah, some Kabbalists would also be carrying on the theocratic magick. Some Gnostics may have even been trying to cure the virus by interpreting the Torah in ways which reveal the original mystical Pagan meaning of the tablets of destiny and so they would promote the truth rather than institutions. Compared to secular scholars, Jewish Kabbalists believe their tradition is a far older as an oral tradition, but this would still be rooted in the practices of the magicians in the Egyptian and Mesopotamian cultures and so still come from the Pagan mystics who had inspired Merkabah in order to free the minds of the captive Jews. As Judaism is a mix of Paganism, these Pagan mystics would be better able to get wisdom out of the corrupted Torah than the theocratic Jews and so luckily they were able to spread some heresy against the banking cult. This would also explain some of the entheogenic aspects of Judaism, as Pagan Qabbalists would just adapt to the new symbolism and become Jewish Kabbalists in order to preserve the non theocratic form of the syncretic tradition. (The same method Sufis used to save themselves from Islamic persecution.)

Some of these Samaritans were of a very different stripe than the Jews who had come from Babylon and these Jews were probably taken in the first place because when they were Samaritans they had rebelled against the banking theocracy. However it is true that what we know of mainstream Samaritan religion does have a lot in common with theocratic Judaism, this would be from the Hyksos and other forms of influence from the theocrats as well as post-exilic Jews in general. As I said, Egypt, Babylon and other Mesopotamian empires were continuously trying to take over the Levant but like in all other places in the world, there is always some indigenous resistance, even if it is underground. That thanks to their polytheism and tribalism many locals managed to withstand much of the indoctrination and while some of them did take on parts of the earlier forms of the theocratic religion, the Qabbalists who survived managed to break the spell and free many minds. (probably by using entheogens) As the theocratic religion developed in Babylon to a greater degree over the centuries, eventually they decided to return to Palestine and take the ethnic Jews as slaves and captives.

Scholars have no doubt that the Torah was written by multiple authors and not “Moses” alone and so while plenty have tried their best, the exact details of the creation of Judaism are very hard to trace. (Not to mention the rest of the old testament) For example not all the authors were necessarily in to Yahweh and even the same book or chapter can have more than one author, or even have influence from multiple cultures. It is hard to say exactly how much of “Judaism” existed from the Hyksos and Akhenaten and how much was post exilic, but it was a long development. The Jews were freed from their captivity by the Persians after they had conquered the Babylonians (Who ultimately gave up without a fight) in an empire that eventually included Egypt, Turkey, what we call Israel today and went as far east as India. The old testament calls the Persian king Cyrus the great “messiah” and while construction was delayed we know that he helped to pay for much of the second temple and so this is very important time in the development of Judaism. Much of the anti Babylonian sentiment of the Torah then is as we will see, not so much against banking or capitalism and would be allowed by the Persians as they could use it as propaganda, though at the same time Babylonian religion obviously still influenced Judaism as well. As a result Samaritans were excluded from the temple of the newly “educated” and released captives, that is the “captive” aristocracy of the Jews were literally educated in Babylon and the Samaritans saw them as foreign colonizers when they came back to Palestine. As secular scholars know, there is little to no historical evidence behind the old testament or any of the “history” before the captivity, or even a unified “Israelite” people and so the true rise of the Jewish theocracy must have been the result of foreign colonization at that time.

While much of it is beyond the scope of this book there is no doubt the Persians greatly influenced Judaism and as they were religiously tolerant, the vast number of cultures which came under their rule created ideal conditions for a syncretic religion like Judaism to come about. We can see that Zoroastrianism was very prominent and that it has within it forms of the goddess Anahita, but also the god Mithra (who would become Mithras) who are as I have said two key figures in the banking cult. According to many scholars, Cyrus the Great was a Zoroastrian, though he also restored and exhorted Babylonian deities like Marduk, Bel (Baal) and Nabu and so his influence on the Jews would explain much of the symbolism. We can also see that the concept of archangels comes from Zoroastrianism, they were called “Amesa Spentas” and one was even named “Spenta Mainyu” which translates as “Holy Spirit,” though he is often identified as their primary deity Ahura Mazda. (Zoroastrians were monotheist, but became henotheistic)

Not only did the Persians greatly influence Judaism but also economics and banking itself and so as it was the biggest empire up to that time, it is key to understanding much of the theocratic banking religion. The Persians were renown for their wealth and luxury, but with their unprecedented road system they also allowed for intercontinental trade like never before. The Persians conquered the Lydians and with that they instituted the monetary system across their vast empire, but also created a formal tax system like never before. This helped to spread the cult of gold and silver for the bullion merchants and we can see that high interest usury and money changers were commonplace and the source of much misery for many people. It is quite possible the word “check” comes from this empire and there is some of the earliest evidence for it's use coming from here. Banking practices were also learned from the Babylonians and probably due to the many different religions of the Persian empire, it was around this time that the banks started to leave the temples. Almost as if in revenge for Troy the Persians would try to conquer Greece, though this would ultimately lead to their downfall through Alexander the Great.

After the Persians set them free, not all Jews chose to go to Israel and we can see much of how this mixing of Persian and Jewish cultures went down in the “Book of Esther,” which many scholars have noted is influenced by Babylonian mythology. The name Esther is itself derived from Ishtar, while another main character “Mordechai” is a probably a form of Marduk and finally the villain of this myth is Haman who could be Hammon, a form of the Egyptian god Amun often associated with Jupiter or Zeus. Here we have some of the strongest evidence for Jewish syncretism as even their own traditions admit Esther is Venus, specifically in the Targum and the Talmud Yoma 29A where Esther is compared to the Morning Star or Venus. While there is no way to be sure, if this story is in part a reference to Amun, it is important in that the Aten cult of Akhenaten outlawed the cult of Amun as it was the main competition and the supreme Egyptian deity in their henotheistic traditions.

In the story Esther becomes queen of the Persian empire, though she is careful to hide her ethnicity for no apparent reason as Jews were now free citizens of the empire. Haman is an adviser for the emperor and supposedly decides to exterminate all Jews because Mordechai refused to bow to him while at the gate to the city. (The gate comes up again later and brings to mind the Gate of Ishtar which is one of her primary symbols) Haman goes to the emperor and convinces him to allow this genocide warning him that the Jews do not keep his laws and are not loyal to the empire and here we likely see more propaganda by means of painting the Jews as the victims, though by their own writings we can see it is true that they were not loyal. In a very suspicious manner Mordechai also ingratiates himself in to the favour of the emperor by foiling an assassination plot against him, though for some reason the emperor seems to forget about this until the end of the story. Mordechai is the cousin of Esther just as Marduk is the cousin of Ishtar and he goes to her and asks her to help and use her influence to save all the Jews. Esther then brings the emperor to a party and eventually she reveals to him the plan of Haman and so the emperor decrees that Haman should be hung. Then the emperor gives another favour and allows Mordechai to write his own royal decree, literally giving him a blank form to fill out in the name of the Emperor which allows him to do as he will. Mordechai decrees Jews are allowed to “avenge” themselves (Though it never mentions any Jews actually dying) and that they can for one day kill all their enemies including women and children and take their property and so because of this, many people convert to Judaism in fear of their lives. Then this “holy book” explains how the decree made all the Jews happy and with the help of the Persian government they slaughter more than 75000 people until anyone the Jews decided was their enemy was dead.

Just as in Exodus the Jews claim they were slaves but in reality were infiltrating Egypt, here we see hypocritical Jewish propaganda in that they believe “god” ordained them to commit genocide when they conquered Palestine, but if anyone decides to kill some of them for any reason it is the work of the devil. In fact Haman is said to have been descended not only from Esau the swindled brother of Jacob, but also from the king of the Amalekites, one of the groups of people who were the victims of Jewish genocide as they conquered Palestine, as carried out by Samuel, King Saul and King David. There has since been a tradition of labelling all enemies of Judaism as Amalekites and so this kind of racism continues today against Palestinians, people whom some fundamentalists have since attached the label. As Deuteronomy says Jews should exterminate all descendents of that people, it gives you some idea what these Zionists would like to do. This story of Esther is the origin of the Jewish holiday “Purim” and besides it's emphasis on getting murderous revenge on gentiles, it is a light hearted holiday filled with drinking and noise makers reminiscent of the clanging of the festivals of Cybele and Dionysus. It is hard to say what if anything in this is historical, but it is clearly propaganda of some sort and highly suspicious in a number of ways, for example “god” does not make an appearance in this story. There is much disagreement but some see a link between Esther, Ishtar and Eostre a German goddess which is linked to the origin of the word “Easter” in reference to a Pagan holiday on the spring equinox.

At any rate once orthodox Judaism was created it became a dead husk covering a machine capable of enslaving souls and so while having some of the symbols of authenticity, as a spirituality it is utterly corrupt. In a theocracy all heretics are in some sense revolutionary and all revolutionaries become heretics and today we see the government obviously uses Christianity to control the people. There has never been an openly non Christian President because Christians demand a theocracy and some do all they can to influence government with their religion, so it is any Anarchist is a heretic of the state religion or “civil religion.” Although there is the pretence of a secular government the residue of theocracy is abundant and Christians are very much on the ball when it comes to voting and claiming victimization when they can't oppress others. Hierarchy and biblical law is part of their religion and so anyone who wants a secular society, or an egalitarian society is to many of them satanic and heretical.

So there is an evolutionary arms race of memes for control of the group mind, started in Sumeria, a battle between magicians and the black magicians of the establishment mafia. Honest and true awareness and methods of knowing the divine are corrupted and literalized, perverted into materialist agendas for the enslavement of humanity, money, the alphabet, science, all have been twisted for the purposes of enslaving humanity. Whenever the magicians come up with a new mystery school formula which is not tainted by hierarchy, those with worldly ambitions of controlling others take those formulas and use the kernels of truth to give an intuitive level of gravitas to their new form of mind control. Those who are seeking gurus and authorities instead of truth are easily manipulated and sadly this is currently the majority of people as a fear of hellfire is used to scare people in to submission. Ishtar or even Saturn is not inherently “evil,” but there are clearly people who use that symbolism who are making the Earth a horrible place. From what I see these Christianized Masons are doing it today in the name of Columbia, who is just the conglomeration of their various money goddess's. While the rulers have done their best to destroy history, there are still clues to the proto-Anarchists who have been battling the rulers of the world since Sumeria, creating new revolutionary mystical philosophies which are then hijacked by the state, or by the authoritarian archon mentality which then uses the symbols in an attempt to control others. What we need is a meme that cannot be corrupted or co-opted because it is fundamentally opposed to this kind of society; it is time the students of the mystery traditions realized their work will always be used against them until Anarchy takes hold on this planet.

One thing to keep in mind is that no set of memes, no symbolism is forever beyond corruption, there is no symbol which does not have the potential to be co-opted. So long as authorities can control the spread of information, they can edit and distort that information to suit them, likewise since most people want easy answers, egotistical people can spread their delusions easier than mystics can spread truth. Luckily since the invention of the internet it is much harder to control information then it was back before the printing press, allowing magickal rebels to maintain their message like never before. Even more important than creating new symbols, is creating awareness of magickal techniques that allow the individual to choose their own way, free of any group's ideology. At the same time Anarchists do need symbols and myths to unify the people, to communicate and identify common interests and awareness; symbols are useful, so long as we keep an elitist interpretation from becoming orthodoxy.

While there must be exceptions, what I see happening again and again is that revolutions and social “progress” move in four basic stages, 1 Spring, Coagula: People of a pluralistic multicultural philosophy come together to integrate their knowledge in to a coherent whole and they discover through comparative religion the underlying truth of all spirituality, the oneness of humanity with divinity and thus our equality. 2 Summer, Solve: Once people start to become more conscious of spiritual truth they start to want to fight the theocracies which leads to various kinds of social uprisings, pacifist or otherwise. 3 Autumn, Coagula: Then entrenched hierarchies from the intolerant and authoritarian traditions co-opt this new philosophy and institutionalize it, and bring in dogmas which allow them to develop it in to a more functional and totalitarian theocracy which expands as an empire or empires. 4 Winter, Solve: Then as these empires become ever more hierarchical, corruption inevitably increases and eventually the institutions break up as various conspiracies and coupes break out. Revolutions can occur at this stage coming from the common people, though these are generally more from government incompetence than social or spiritual awareness. From this the theocracy loses credibility and schisms emerge as with Judaism and Christianity, meanwhile the corrupt and crumbling empires are constantly trying to divide and conquer their enemies. Eventually these divisions and schisms weaken the religion in general and allow for more tolerance and so eventually religious pluralism and Occultism becomes more acceptable and important for making sense of things and so the process begins again.

This is kind of like memetic Alchemy or if we were to liken memes to organisms, we could say these four stages are like the four seasons of the cultural environment, not so much relating to fixed time spans, but allowing for the breeding cycle of cultures and revolutions. This is however a very broad self similar pattern, which in some ways is too simplistic, but can be looked at in various stratas or classes of society and culture, both mainstream and counter cultural. This works so that the more you zoom in or look at the details, the more you see overlapping cycles of these sequences of four stages in different states of transition. While the time frames of each stage are not necessarily equal, (usually the rebellions are crushed relatively quickly) the effects of each stage merge in to the next and it could be imagined like wheels within wheels, or stories in a tower getting smaller the higher up they go, or the further you zoom in to the universal fractal. It can take many shapes according to contemporary factors, that is some years a particular season seems to last longer than others or is otherwise more extreme than others, but also some days within a season are hotter or colder than others. With the weather there are many factors such as heat, coolness, dryness and moisture at play in various interweaving currents which can make it really hard to predict accurately and in the same way, at all times both the magicians and theocrats are exerting their own influences to various degrees. However as a general outline it does seem to happen a lot as the rise and fall of empires or even just secular social movements. Sometimes it can seem like a step has been skipped in the process, but this is like a cold summer and if you look at a smaller time frame in between you see the missing step happening relatively quickly, or in a relatively less important way, but ultimately still causally significant.

As I alluded to before with the puffer posers of old, we can see the cycle today when “cool kids” like rebel magicians start a subculture which starts out quite small. (stage 1) Then the subculture starts to gain credibility and makes a cultural impact and is usually regarded as resistance to the mainstream culture. (stage 2) As the subculture grows in popularity it becomes “trendy” and profitable for the institutions to co-opt, it is then infiltrated by “posers” or those “puffers” with egoist materialist ambitions. (stage 3) Finally it loses much or all of its credibility and while it may retain some die hard adherents, it is mainly assimilated in to the mainstream culture and becomes focused on various factions trying to establish dominance. (stage 4) The most avant garde “cool kids” see they are surrounded by morons once again and so disillusioned go off to start a new subculture and the cycle begins again. (We might call this memetic entropy) In this same way magical practices get co-opted by religious people and the insincere or authoritarian and eventually they are hijacked by the archons and used to control others and so the magicians start again.

The old ways still have the symbolic meaning for those with eyes to see and some may become truly “cool” or enlightened within an old culture, but in the more co-opted ones like say Christianity, it is rare. “Cool” people see the same kinds of anti authoritarian tendencies in other cultures, then often blend them in a new way to make the new subcultures. By “cool kids” I don't mean some social elite, but actually cool people who are genuine, not egotistical and are creative, artistic and individualistic, who want to have an authentic expression of their self and get away from those social elitists who corrupt other people's cultures.

Due to the co-opting of ontological Anarchist pluralism of the Occult by archons, revolutions go in circles, but it is more of a spiral, as often with each revolution the common people become more and more educated and so often more and more free and so we might call this the “revolution of alphabets.” That is while revolutions often have very justified reasons for the uprisings, the unconscious counter revolutionary tendencies or archons, taint the ability of the people to create the utopias they intend. As the archons battle each other for world domination some eventually die and bleed out the knowledge and power they had hoarded. This happens each time the magicians and pluralists come together as more and more of the universal language is reconstructed, (or constructed at all) which means there is less ignorance for the rulers to use against us. Of course the more scientific or magickal knowledge a religion has, the more powerful the archons become if they do manage to co-opt it, as there are fewer archons their power is more monopolized and centralized, but eventually they will destroy all their allies and so be made weak. This is what is happening now, as the rulers think they have conquered the world, but the people will come together and overthrow them eventually, that is if they will work to overcome their ignorance and finally rid themselves of the archon's influence. Looking at the myths of the past, especially that of the Greeks, we can see that revolutions are a consistent theme and so given that this includes the rebellions of the gods, we can see revolution is intrinsic to how reality unfolds itself. The stories of heroes fighting despotic kings, or demonic rulers and black magicians are too numerous to count, but there are good reasons for this, revolution is the universe's way of overcoming ignorance and all things which inhibit freedom. Revolution is often the inspiration for a new religion and certainly many myths, so then revolution is also how consciousness unfolds and so given that Anarchist revolution is the ultimate revolution, I cannot help but think that Anarchism is the ultimate reality which all of the true gods are helping us to realize.

I have previously compared modern Anarchists to Christians waiting for Jesus to come save them and the more I think of this, the more it seems correct, albeit from the left wing view of things, however there is the individualist view as well. To sum it up very generally and briefly, the left wing Anarchist view of the revolution basically says that one day all people will spontaneously rise up without any leaders and after a period of violent revolution the whole world will be in Anarchism. This then can be compared to millenarian Christians who think the world will change drastically very quickly through the apocalypse eventually leading to the Christian version of utopia. While today most millenarian Christians are ironically right wing conservatives, as I have mentioned before there were apocalyptic Protestant groups which were radically left wing. The right wing Anarchist or individualist view of the revolution is more progressivist and says that Anarchy will be achieved gradually over a long period of time through a multitude of smaller victories and changing social conditions. In this way it is less prone to violent revolutionary mentalities, yet also more prone to compromising its values and luke warm reformist tactics. This then can be compared to the Alchemical approach which is a long process of turning the lead of government and organized religion into Anarchist/spiritual gold through various means like the philosopher's stone. This approach can be compared to the more scientifically minded revolutionaries who thought that education was the best way to overthrow the ignorance of the Christian theocracy and so started the renaissance and "reformation." Today the left wing is more concerned with secular scientific cultures and so along with the right wing apocalyptic conservatives we again see how these tendencies mirror each other like yin and yang and change their positions as they spin over time, each of them a facet of one general process.

This then is why conspiracy theories are so confused, they are based on duality, the idea that one side must be totally right and one side totally wrong, when the truth is all religions are trying their best, they are just each ignorant of some things. This is even more confused by people who think Satan is ruining everything and that their Abrahamic tradition is automatically good and so refuse to take responsibility for their own actions and believe everyone else is evil. It almost never occurs to conspiracy theorists that the elites might be putting out disinfo to keep people chasing imaginary straw men arguments, to keep them trying to decode meaningless nonsense when the truth is no ruler is good, no leader can bring peace, no government or money system can be fair and that no one can save them but themselves. Yes the more I learn, the more it is obvious Christian conspiracy theories are put out to divide and conquer the people, to set the primarily WASP people against the rest and that many more are created as a distraction, or even a means of escapism for those defeatists who wish to justify inaction. So for this reason if Christians, Jews and Muslims are willing to repent and treat others as equals, to stop their bigotry I will accept their apology, because if we are going to bring about freedom we need all the help we can get. However if they, and I especially mean the bourgeois Christians of this world refuse Anarchy, that is refuse to treat others as they would themselves, then they are continuing to threaten the lives of all creatures on this planet and so their system must be opposed by any means necessary. I would want the same from others if I were threatening global apocalyptic extinction and they do not even follow their own religion for as Jesus also said, "that which they do unto the least of my brothers, that they do unto me." A Gnostic can see this means we are all one, but even someone with as shallow an interpretation as a Christian can see that it means we must treat all people as if they were god, or Jesus and so Anarchism is the only way of life that can truly accomplish this.

If we were to take the advice of Jesus and judge people by their fruits, we could see quite clearly that the Abrahamic religions promote the least spiritual mind sets and increase the most malignant aspects of human consciousness. They create authoritarian institutions, sexism, homophobia and all kinds of intolerance towards others and we see that Christianity has been responsible for more death and misery than any other ideology in existence. If we are to judge Occult philosophies by their fruits it would be things like science, music, art, egalitarian philosophy, democracy, finding balance with nature, religious, sexual and gender tolerance and that it has the stated goal of ending all forms of prejudice, as prejudice is by definition a form of ignorance.

Is the truly divine that which creates people to worship him and only him, making them skeptical and freedom loving all the while knowing their nature, then putting them in a confusing world filled with corrupted religious institutions which make no sense? Does the divine then send anyone who doesn't choose the right religion to eternal hell, even though that is the vast majority of humanity? Or is this a metaphor and the true divine is the one which is in all religions, and hell merely the mind of a literalist who cannot see their unity with divinity? Does the divine want us to have knowledge? Or live in fearful ignorance?

To me the answers are clear, so long as we are not a heretic, a magician who makes up their own mind and makes their own spirituality consciously, we are controlled by the archons. So instead of trying to find the "one true religion" we must understand the universal language is intended to speak of many things and allow each person to express themselves as an individual and with their own point of view. Each person must have their own collection of symbolism, taken from traditional religions or not as they choose, all the while keeping their critical faculties for those aspects which do not fit with their ideals and using the experimental method to modify traditions to increase their ability to increase awareness. Any language will be misunderstood if people can only think literally and if they do not realize that they are themselves divine and so we need magicians, those who seek out hidden wisdom. Due to their absolutist dualism many religious people go around demonizing other people's symbols as an excuse for genocide and oppression and all those who refuse to think for themselves are easily lead in to being foot soldiers for some new world order or another. It is a dead spirituality which does not change, it is a person who cannot get in touch with the spirit world themselves who thinks we need a cookie cutter, one size fits all religion. But the gods and the spirits know all too well, we are individuals and so have different needs and problems.

In the end all religions have truth in them, basically all of them have caused pain and some level oppression against someone at some time and so we must simply realize that we must try our best to bring down all hierarchy and that it doesn't matter what symbols we use to do that, as long as our methods and goals are Anarchist. That so long as we take the integrated knowledge which underlies all spirituality and create a religion that is based on hierarchy, or the notion that it is the "one true religion" it is easily infiltrated and corrupted by the archons. Such religions will only lead to further confusion and ignorance when the fundamentalists wipe out the old ways deeming them heretical. When we take information and put it in to a hierarchy we take Occult wisdom and turn it in to a religion of tyrants, integrating information is natural and not "bad" as that is itself hierarchical thinking, but a fractal is not a hierarchy. One thing may flow from another, just as the tree of life can be interpreted as a hierarchy, but a fractal like the tree must be interpreted as one thing. It all depends on the view, the edge of a fractal image is endlessly definable and so "higher" and "lower" is always relative and ultimately arbitrary as each part contains the whole. Wisdom shows us fractals as on a computer screen are in reality a 2D image, a level playing field which only appears to be hierarchical or 3D as we zoom in, this then is the illusion of maya, and the reality is the oneness and self similarity of the entire structure. In this way the integrated knowledge can be perverted by those infected by archons to create hierarchical institutions, which are in fact a distraction from the reality and the goal of the fractal which is the unity found in the centre. To me we must experience the centre of the fractal and so the measure of validity for spirituality is its congruence with Anarchism, its ability to give the people magick. So, when we have an ontological Anarchist view of things, we can see that all spiritualities have truth or wisdom in them, but like Sophia it is imprisoned in forms by the rulers.

The Abrahamic religions do have wisdom as through Kabbalah, Sufism and Gnosticism, even the Torah has its pearls, though they often be covered in the foulest muck imaginable. Orthodox versions of Jesus too have some validity in that he says some pretty Anarchist things, it is merely that Abrahamic religions are the most clearly corrupted and functional forms of theocracy, they are the easiest to abuse and promote the most authoritarian lifestyles. They did destroy the Pagan religions by force, they did destroy the knowledge of the ancients and so the Abrahamic religions are corrupt, but these traditions also started out as a rebellion and the realization of the underlying unity of the all spirituality. On one hand Yahweh destroyed knowledge and made people ignorant at Babel, on the other "Abraham" had yet to really create Judaism and so he was not only an agent of the banking cult, but the symbol of all the wise people who had built the tower of information. Gnosticism and Kabbalah along with orthodox Christianity and Judaism contain the same kinds of Pagan symbolism, (Though Gnosticism/Christianity is more westernized) it is just that Gnosticism actually explains their meaning, while the orthodox do all they can to limit interpretation and this is because the political motivations of these groups are very different. Gnosticism is essentially Anarchist, while orthodox Christians are obviously bent on theocracy and so they are clearly the ones who received influence from the Babylonian memes of theocracy, memes which continue to inspire conspiracies for power to this day.

The tower is the universal fractal, we can look at it as a hierarchy, or we can look at it as a holistic pluralism and the same is true of history or our society. As we zoom in there is more and more resolution, more information and bigger empires and more technology and so if the Anarchists do not succeed this next cycle, we may never succeed. If anything, dualism and the idea that you are 100% justified in destroying other peoples religions is what confuses people's language and history, if you do not communicate as equals it destroys understanding and so it is the authorities of all peoples who are to blame. The old gods become the new demons of the new religions and for this reason we can find fault with all religions, we can dismiss them like a superficial atheist and so ignore our own subconscious, or we can realize the truth, that the faults of the gods are our own faults. Demonizing the god of Abraham or any other gods would just be iterating the fractal formula in the revolution of alphabets, externalizing our own demons and blaming entities we are one with for our own mistakes, thus avoiding any real responsibility for ourselves.

The gods are not good or evil for these are human opinions, we cannot bring more good or evil in to this world, but we can take the wisdom of old and use it to increase understanding. This understanding will allow us to achieve our true will and so turn all of the pain of humanities history in to a lesson learnt and a motivation to avoid ignorance. Certain religions may be used as mind control, but in the end each individual is responsible for themselves and so we must gain the understanding which unites all spirituality, for if we don't, the authorities will continue to create hierarchies to rule all people and divide us through shallow interpretations. A monist reality requires a monist interpretation of myth and so we must destroy the "fascism" of the "fasci-nation," that is the "image nation" which can only think literally, for it is a spell cast upon people to enslave them, a spell so devious they fear their freedom, they fear equality and any who disagree with them. The task of Anarchists then is to create a new universal language, but one which cannot be forced on anyone, one which unites the one and the many and makes people in to magicians. This language will make evident the illusionary nature of hierarchy and religion, yet allows us to find wisdom in all myths and as individuals directly experience the spirit world and with that we will be truly free.

These black magician Occultist's who are sometimes Masons but not always, but followers from a variety of philosophies both secular and religious are those who mistake the demiurge, the system, for a benevolent force and so have appropriated the symbolism of the ancient world and twisted their meanings for their own purposes. Unfortunately there are pitfalls on the spiritual path and corruption is something which is quite possible for the student of the Occult who has no understanding of Anarchism and real altruism, as this kind of authoritarian mind is easily perverted into selfish ends. Since there is no such thing as good and evil, Occultism cannot necessarily make you into a “good” person and without the proper intentions you stop seeking truth and enlightenment and start seeking only personal power. While there is nothing wrong with seeking personal power, without wisdom or a will to act according to truth, that blessing becomes a curse which eventually leads to having power over others. Left unchecked such people will team up and you get old boys’ networks that systematically infiltrate institutions to highjack them for their own power and all the while claiming to do it in the name of freedom. (Perhaps often even truly believing they are pursuing freedom for all)

Still, it should be understood that anyone interested in the Occult and who wants to make society more egalitarian does run the risk of being called Satanic and forever having their name tarnished, (even though many who identify as Satanists are perfectly nice people) people don't take too kindly to those who think differently after all. One of many problems with all these conspiracy theories is that anyone who happens to disagree can be named as a being part of the disinformation or as being a “shill” or “sheeple,” which is a pretty ideal situation for any secret groups that may actually be in power.

Occultism is clearly a major factor in the government, but it is a major factor in all of human society including religion and Christianity and so the reason why Paganism and Occultism is so dangerous and “Satanic” to Christians is because it exposes the historical context of Christianity and the real meaning of religions. Occultism shows clearly that “Jesus” was never intended to be taken as a historical person and to believe so was to miss the point completely. As the original competition for Christianity, Pagans and mystics obviously had to be thoroughly demonized in order to help the forced conversion of the empire and so due to such successful propagandizing Christians are even more fearful of a “Witch” than they are a Muslim. Christians literally take other people's gods and turn them in to demons, then once the history is destroyed they get quite upset and surprised when people seem to worship “demons” but are really just practising an older religion. This is the kind of thing that gets you called a Satanist, it is dangerous to white Christians because it presents a historical alternative to Christianity which is actually more in line with European culture, which is historically its greatest competition and so must be demonized and persecuted more than any other spiritual outlook.

To blame Occultists for the state of the world is to totally misunderstand the system and religions and how they all began, for it is the corruption of Occult doctrine by people with no real Occult gnosis which leads to things like money, to Christianity and all the power institutions of this world. Someone finds out about the Occult practises but only sees the symbolic applications rather than the spiritual awareness and then finds a way to use it to manipulate people or for other materialist ends. This is done through creating priesthoods and authoritarian doctrines, something which is totally contrary to the individualist, scientific experimentalism and non dogmatic principles which are the core of Occultism. This has been going on since Sumeria and it is from that line of thinking, that memetic lineage which Judaism and all the most authoritarian religions and institutions come from. The Occult teachings are then appropriated to give legitimacy to the dogmas, mixing in some truth with the lies to dupe the ignorant masses into accepting authoritarian ontology because they want easy answers which allow them to build up their egos. Those who then doubt the religions can be said to be behind the scenes controlling everything since their symbolism has been perverted and their ideas corrupted into forms of mind control and because they are clearly opposed to the mainstream society which doesn't even understand its own origins.

If governments were using Buddhist or Hindu or Native American symbolism there would no doubt be the same outcry by many Christians that the world is run by Satanists. However this is not necessarily that the symbols are Satanic so much as non Christian, which by definition makes them Satanic in a Christian's mind. More often than not the symbolism used in the government is actually Masonic, which generally means Kabbalistic or some form of Pagan symbolism (often Egyptian) is used and Kabbalah is definitely and obviously not Satanic. As I consider myself a Pagan in many ways

I have more to be offended by the misuse of these symbols than Christians do, these symbols used for tyrannical and highly unspiritual aims are like Satanists inverting crosses and pentagrams. (The cross and upright pentacle or pentagram actually being Pagan symbols)

Occultism is at its root a very useful thing yet sometimes used by terrible people, which today is largely because during the middle ages basically only nobles and people in the church knew how to read. As the church wanted to monopolize its Occult magickal power only nobles and heretic clergy members had the security and time to practice these things in safety from persecution. Since the nobles (like the knights Templar) knew the church was a con to control the peasants and that a literal interpretation of the bible didn't make any sense, they began to educate themselves in the ancient mystery traditions. Although eventually the Occult seems to have made some of the Templars better people, when you start out as an aristocratic Christian banker zealot you have a long long way to go before you have a healthy mind. Indeed in terms of the monarchy and the church, money and family blood lines was the only thing keeping these nobles from being peasants themselves. What's worse is that being raised in an racist, fundamentalist and zealot elitist aristocracy, people like the knights Templar would of seen themselves as ordained by god to rule the peasants, and would of naturally despised their slaves which they see as basically being ignorant savages. Upon learning of Sufi mysticism and other Occult teachings this all would have been shown to have been a fraud, and so unwilling to help the pope take over the world for the demiurge, it seems that some decided it was better to burn and die fighting. After becoming outlaws they would have had much less wealth and so learned compassion for the poor and thus learned to a much greater degree the justice of equality.

Since "high magick" was the Occult of the educated ruling class, while the more ancient Pagan magickal traditions did incorporate writing, the medieval and renaissance Pagan peasants were rarely literate and so the lower classes practised "low magick" in oral traditions of which we have little historical knowledge. Since the Pagan traditions have largely been destroyed by Christianity much of the original mystical proto Anarchist context of the Occult had also been lost and misconstrued until the image of magick came to be associated with writings about demons and Satan. After the Templars were deposed, the arrogant Catholic "nobles" who remained became even more drunk on power as they twisted the ancient knowledge acquired by the Church through the crusades. Thus the increase in material power that can come from high magical practice only made them more greedy and ambitious and these medieval grimoires even specifically warn the reader about being corrupted by demons. In my experience this possibility exists only in the kinds of magicians who do not have Anarchist intentions and do not understand the mystical unity of oneness with divinity, as this opens them up to be possessed by the ideas of the rulers.

This may all seem like pointless jibber jabber, total lunacy and strait out wrong, but when one looks into alternative views of the government, sooner or later they are bound to come across conspiracy theories of the most monstrous kind. Organizing secret groups is all part of the "evolutionary" process of a society based on competition. Even if we were able to overcome all secret societies I do believe it would naturally happen again because of how we organize ourselves, a government or organization for the financial elite is essentially a secret society after all. When the first hierarchical civilization was started no doubt some secret planning had to be undertaken as a means of securing power for the king, tyranny had to be guarded against outsiders and revolt in order for it to take hold. If you are the head of a tyrannical militaristic empire like say the American President, then no doubt you are going to have some private meetings and with a system in which the only real goal is to exploit others, it is not surprising those meetings will not have the people's interests at heart. The system of hierarchical organization and of "conspiracies" are in many ways synonymous with each other and this is true even if we lived in a real republic that actually was what it claimed to be.

Even if the Freemasons or other groups aren't largely responsible for controlling the world it is inevitable with a system like ours that such a group would eventually try, or at least try and profit at societies expense, a kind of legal mafia. Even if there was no Freemasons and no Vatican, the mechanisms of the system and the actions of the government have done massive amounts of damage in basically every possible way, breaking even their own laws of which according to their own penalties they should be executed for treason and or war crimes and crimes against humanity. I base that on easily accessible historical information in how the system has conducted itself internationally and domestically throughout history and even presently, information which the state itself has put out. Common sense should also say that enslaving the vast majority of the world should be cause for at least a firing of the officials, whether or not they are in a secret society.

There is so much evidence which is indisputable, admitted and even celebrated that warrants the complete dismantling of the governments of the world that it really doesn't matter if the world is run by secret societies. The mystical factor may be of relevance later on in terms of the tactics, when dealing with the social revolution, but it really should be obvious even without secret societies, a democratic society, or a republic, especially while using capitalism cannot be anything but a plutocracy and a tyranny. The system was created by authoritarian people, and it was and is maintained and strengthened by authoritarian people as well as well meaning citizens, no doubt ancient monarchies were terrible as well, just as capitalism is inherently destructive as is all hierarchies. What really matters is not so much who is controlling things but getting people out of the idea that anyone would make a good ruler, the goal isn't to overthrow the Masons or Christians but keeping any hierarchy from attaining power. One way or another it doesn't matter what these people name their oligarchy or which societies do what specifically, anyone who controls other people is guilty of exploitation. This is true even if we have legitimate voting systems, any small group who controls people is corrupt by their very nature and this is all the more evident with a monetary system based on private interests.

Many conspiracy theories are definitely out there and there are plenty which are half baked, but just because the plan of the oligarchs cannot be fully explained does not mean there is no plan. At the same time it is obvious there are multiple plans competing with each other. I do believe there are people running things from behind the scenes, but there can't be only one group trying and I doubt that any one really knows the totality of what's going on. While some people may have figured out pieces of the puzzle, I doubt any one realizes the full scope of everything going on, even the oligarchs themselves are clueless and the more I learn the more clear it is just how little people understand. In many ways this is actually good news, it means the new world order is not as powerful as many think, that the people still have some power and that there is hope we can overthrow the system much easier. If there really is a secret government then it would be safe to say they have put out a lot of disinformation for the express purpose of destroying the credibility of anyone who tries to expose them, but maybe they are also just trying to spread fear and the myth of their invulnerability. While there are likely many wars between various factions, each with temporary alliances and enemies, just like the Mafia there is the sacrosanct rule of not exposing or ratting out the others outright. But then again, maybe the reason some conspiracies get exposed is because one group rats out another, the various competing conspiracy theories being promulgated by opposing conspiracy groups like propaganda. (For example Christian groups spreading anti Mason and Occult theories, or again the John Birch Society.) Certainly, I do believe that elections are meaningless and the media is controlled by private interests, though I still can't really tell what the difference is between a corporation and a conspiracy. For this reason and many more Anarchism is the only hope of freedom, anything else will always be infiltrated by gangs of power mongers and anyone who tells you otherwise wants to set their system above you.

Each government if they are doing their job considers it a patriotic duty to conspiratorially create an agenda to at least monetarily take over the world. Since capitalism and hierarchy automatically mean competition and subjugation they must try to take over the world if for no other reason than to defend against others. Usually this is done by spending more and more money and digging themselves deeper and deeper into debt. When seen for what it is, it becomes obvious that until this money system has changed there can be no real freedom or progress, no matter what your political ideology, the banks and corporations simply created the illusion of choice through the mechanism of political parties. These banks have effectively made elections even more meaningless than most people think they are, since the best means of control is the kind that doesn't show itself. We have been made serfs without even realizing it and when I say this it is not “conspiracy theory” it is economic theory. We are the fools who believed usury wasn't a scam, that the ones who are elected could be trusted to run their own elections, that power and the billions of dollars to be made from exploiting the world couldn't corrupt so long as we have a nice flag to make us all teary eyed.

With the corruption that comes with hierarchy then, it should be no surprise that there are some tyrannical Freemasons as it is primarily made up of capitalists who are at least moderately influential people within their community. In fact Freemasonry encourages people to get involved within the community and many of those who do so, do it with good intentions, but if the community is fundamentally corrupt and Freemasons are trying to make the community more powerful, then it should be no surprise that horrible things happen. When the republicans or democrats plot secretly to control everyone they don't call it a conspiracy, they call it campaign planning.

Many officials will use the same defence as many Nazis did, “I was just following orders” and they would probably be telling the truth because the position of authority should never have been created in the first place. If you are an incredibly ignorant asshole with a warped mind that is filled with cognitive dissonance to the point that you think you should be able to force people in to your way life, then good intentions do not matter because you clearly cannot discern what is “good” in the first place. The thing is “good intentions” are meaningless when good and evil are opinions anything can be justified, especially when politicians are willing to “play ball” and compromise some of their values in order to get some little bit of “good” done, which is itself all too often based on their own personal religious morality.

Built within the system is not only a requirement to be ruthless and oppressive, but also a drive to steer the system in such a way as to require incorporating ever more authoritarian and plutocratic inequalities into the system, creating exponential need for human repression and exploitation. We are stuck in a kind of closed loop in which the only way to progress in the system is to do horrible things and as a person progresses they most often use their power to expand that system and often make it more of a requirement to do horrible things to get anywhere. If you cannot convince people that the system is responsible for impoverishing the third world and enslaving people, then you are going to have a real hard time trying to convince them about secret societies controlled by aliens, even if that does turn out to be the truth. The fact that most people know that the corporations are corrupt and still work for and buy from them is more troubling to me than the idea a few capitalists in high places are secretly doing bad things. Just because it is incredibly unlikely that aliens run the world, doesn't stop the much easier to prove fact that governments are responsible for insane brutality, yet people still are either in denial or ignorant of such things. I'm all for going to the root of the problem and no election will solve the problem, however even if aliens do rule the world, telling people this will do no good while they have still perpetuate the alien's system. Personally I don't think we have any one to blame but us humans for the world's problems, but even still, exposing the real perpetrators of 911, or the Illuminati will do no good as long as people think they have a right to destroy the Earth and oppress everyone they can in the name of a free market. One way or another it doesn't matter what these people name their oligarchy or which societies do what specifically, ALL RULERS ARE CORRUPT!! _

That the oligarchs have used mesmerizing hypnotic techniques on the populace is all too clear and even admitted and I see it more every day. Their means of control are also highly scientific as the CIA mind control experiments of MK ULTRA, project monarch and the science of public relations and corporate marketing all clearly illustrate. They are all too willing to use any means of control that works and I have no doubt that there are very smart people with very tyrannical intentions towards the rest of humanity. However the more aware I become, the more I am convinced that archons are farming us for our fear and pain, trying their best to keep us focusing on a false reality so that they can sustain themselves. Whether or not this is true, I know magick is real and that those who know of it would be foolish to not try and use it to free all people. Magick is happening all the time and with all people, culture is a spell, the ego is who you have been hypnotized to be, or even who you have hypnotized yourself to be. However it started we are spreading unhealthy memes of control and unconsciously hypnotizing others and so magick backed up with physical action is the best means of breaking our conditioning and creating change. These archons are definitely real in the sense of humanities psychological demons and one thing I know is that we will never be free of them until we face them as one species. Waiting for miracles is an extremely dangerous and lazy idea, especially since the miracle we need is for humanity to become autonomous individuals capable of running their own lives.

Raising the consciousness of everyone should be a major goal of all Anarchists, not necessarily in a spiritual way, but once that is achieved everything else will follow. This should be done in any way you feel comfortable but remember, we are not trying to proselytize, just make people aware of their choices as well as the consequences of certain actions, either in terms of political or spiritual power. This is the only way we can free minds, ignorance is our chains and truth is our freedom and we must be ready to follow that truth wherever it goes, no matter how comfortable our prison cells may be.

One may question how Occultists with such metaphysical knowledge could be capable of doing such tyrannical things? First we have to understand that since we are all divine and duality is illusion, then the concept of evil is also illusion, that there is no entity limiting even evil peoples magickal ability. We as humans (though divine) are capable of sadomasochism, some individuals enjoy hurting themselves, and perhaps the oligarchs enjoy hurting themselves in other people's bodies. More than this, these black magicians are relying on archons which they believe to be real, so because they have separated their consciousness's from their true divine power which comes with the gnosis of universal unity, they instead worship the archons as false gods and give them blood and human sacrifices (through war and economics at least) in order to get the magical effects they desire. As their intentions are solely for power they get no heightened consciousness from their magickal practices, so they probably do this rather automatically, obsessively and unconsciously and are merely performing the rituals of the banking religion, without really knowing what they are doing. As most people do not recognize capitalism and government as a form of black magick, by far most of the bureaucrats do not either and they may even try to make the religion of control even more materialist and secular, however in the process they lose even more context of their actions. If they knew their true divine nature they would understand how unnecessary and ignorant all this is and that they have been enslaved by fear and greed more than anyone, for they know on a personal basis the reservoirs of human idiocy which are the archons. Like so many peasants that they rule, if you do not understand your unity with the divine entities of your religion, you are likely to become their slave, and masters seldom have their slaves best interests at heart even if they answer prayers here and there. Farmers feed and care for their live stock before the slaughter, it does not mean that factory farming is an expression of love.

The corrupted Freemason groups use rituals to inculcate archon thinking, if a person does not believe in these rituals they will have no effect, (as with someone like Bakunin) and this is because you must willingly consent to the reality of Jesuit Mason spirit in order for it to possess you. From this perspective magick is workable even if you do not know you are divine, either because you believe your prayers or rituals will be answered by a seemingly separate entity or because you are possessed by that entity. However people who do this are shutting themselves off from their own power and so have in essence sold their souls to the devil just like Faust, only these devils demand mass human sacrifice in the form of wars and everything else. As the politicians would be just as divine as anyone else if they were conscious, then whenever possible we should try and free them as well, though needless to say that is a tactic that is not usually very practical.

While I have not encountered much evidence other than hearsay to suggest that the oligarchs of this world personally and directly sacrifice people as part of some black magick ritual, I can't say I would be surprised, but then I am not really sure what to think. As I have said, Occult symbolism is everywhere in government activities and offices and so someone who knows what they are doing must be putting it there. However Occultism takes too much work for most politicians to be much of magicians and so they probably attend rituals passively watching such as at "Bohemian Grove" rather than actively engage in workings of ceremonial magick. At the same time it could very well be true that some few are in to stuff like ritual paedophilia and human sacrifice, but then the thing about secret cults of black magick is that they are secret and figuring this stuff is hard to do in detail. As Christianity was designed as a religion of black magick most politicians truly are the Christians they claim to be, they may not understand the true history of Christianity or have any Occult awareness and yet they would still be black magicians just by promoting their theocracy.

Tests have been done which show that the upper management of corporations are almost four times as likely to be a psychopath as other professions; given the behaviour of corporations this is not very surprising either. Sadists, megalomaniacs, greedy people and power trippers will no doubt find capitalism ideal to their purposes; I would go so far as to say the system is run by psychopaths and for psychopaths, in order to fulfil their desires and to propagate psychopath culture. While I don't know of any tests that have been done in regards to politicians, police, military people, or authoritarian religious leaders, I suspect there is an abnormal amount of psychopaths in these fields as well. After all if you are a predator, what better place for you then in jobs which require ruthless and competitive behaviour and which will give you power over others? Hierarchical power structures clearly encourage psychopathic tendencies and while these psychopaths may not be directly murdering people, when we look back to history and find aristocrats like the child murderer Gilles de Rais or the blood bathing Countess Bathory, psychopaths will clearly use their power to indulge their sickness. In many ways the history of civilization is the history of psychopaths propagating their culture, the culture of archons, so that society is more in line with their values, so that their actions become justified and they can operate more effectively in the open. Aristocratic families have even consciously bred psychopathic tendencies and inbreeding certainly can create insane offspring and yet others go mad with power.

While the government is certainly not afraid to use black magick in terms of war and day to day activities, it is clear that whenever possible they will try to make the metaphysics of their operations easier by tricking people in to consenting to their reality. As with the legal system I have explained in this chapter, it is in the interests of the government to try and make people consent because their internal bureaucracy is built on rules. Governments are corporations and as atrocious as they are, they are technically offering a nanny state "service" to people and so they need people working these bureaucracies to believe they are serving the public good and the same is true of the serfs if they are to have "pride" in their work. Even if people at the top break their own rules, the spell cast on the public is much more effective if people consent to it because to do otherwise would mean having to deal with an open revolution, a loss of face and "prestige" for the government which tries to create the illusion of democracy and order.

In the legal system this takes the form of encouraging people to go in to "dishonour" that is if you just break the law which you have previously agreed to (due to consenting to identify with your corporate straw man) then you are the one practising black magick and not them and so they have the metaphysical and "moral" high ground. If you have consented to parts of the system, such as by signing contracts or otherwise agreeing to contracts the oligarchs propose, perhaps tacitly or by taking advantage of some of the employee benefits then you have chosen to consent to them being the "de facto" government. By such actions, you may not realize it, but you have consented to give them authority over you and so any unlawful forms of rebellion, any breaking of laws (even the most tyrannical) are you engaging in black magick and "dishonouring" your agreements. For this reason you can declare yourself an Anarchist and head out to the woods to grow pot and plot a bloodless but illegal revolution, but you are still practising black magick if you have previously agreed to be ruled by authorities who say that is illegal. So while we could argue such agreements were under duress and therefore invalid, seceding from the state is still very important. This also illustrates that black magick is at times going to have to be used as a tactic, but more so since the government has effectively declared total war on all free people, we need a diversity of tactics and knowing the law is included in this, just as is fire bombing city hall. If you want to understand how to win, in the end we need to show that they have no legitimate right to rule, that they conduct themselves illegally by their own rules and that we have intentions to act in an honourable way whenever possible. Then as free people we need to show by example Anarchism is the only freedom and that no one has the right to rule.

Some would argue that as energetic vampires, corporations and archons should just be ignored, that whatever attention we give them will only strengthen them. While acting as if they are authorities does empower them, due to the fact that saying and doing nothing is a tacit agreement and that so many people such as civil servants, tax payers and the politicians themselves believe in the government, these archons are not going to miss the energy of a few Anarchists in denial. No, the problems of the world will not go away simply by ignoring them, in fact it is going in to denial of what these tyrants are doing which caused the problems in the first place. We do not empower archons by becoming more aware of them or spreading awareness about them, we actually disempower them since they exist by the perpetuation of ignorance and so exposing the truth of what they are is our greatest weapon. We are not focusing on corporate archons, we are focusing on creating change and knowing the truth, we are focusing on transmuting that energy in to something healthy and so we are not empowering archons by paying attention to the horrors of the world, we are figuring out how to take away their power. We can defeat the rulers by actively manifesting alternatives but first we need to understand reality as it presently is, otherwise we will not know what changes actually need to be made. Since the denial and inactivity of the masses is the primary reason why such de facto power mongers can run amok, it is more than likely you have already consented to give them your energy whether or not you pay attention. We need to show that it is our intention to leave the system, but unless you plan on going to war as a guerrilla, (and we should have such contingency plans) we are much better off trying to use the legal apparatus that will allow us to secede from the state and create our own societies. So while some would say that using our own symbols or engaging in metaphysical war would take too much energy, this is a defeatist attitude which ignores the fact that proactive manifestation of alternatives is not the same as trying to overpower the energies of the corporations through black magick. In order to manifest anything we need to create the thought forms first and so if we never empower any alternatives, we can never have change, never manifest any replacement for the current culture and so it is saying we might as well not do anything at all. Certain thought forms by nature of their symbolism expose the archons like a candle dispelling the deepest darkness in a huge room. So, it is not so much an act of black magick warfare or overpowering anything, but exposing the truth for what it is and encouraging new cultures based around that truth. Once alternatives thought forms and cultures are strong enough, they can then deal with the archons as is appropriate tactically at that time.

Breaking contracts, even those made ignorantly with a tyrannical and criminal government or corporation is still technically black magick. Such actions may be totally justified according to sanity, but it is all the justification the state needs to rally all of it's collective energy (which includes all those who have consented to empower it metaphysically) to go against you and so they keep the revolution from manifesting. The state has figured out how to keep the metaphysical high ground and currently has the co-opted will and energy of the majority of people behind all of its actions, even those which people think they oppose. We are all equal in our oneness, but each agreement between individuals is a statement of intent and so a metaphysical act and so to gain power, the government offers you confusing offers cloaked in prestige to make it seem as though they are orders. So as I have tried to explain, to those not familiar with legalese these orders are really just offers or occulted statements of intent, these offers then must be turned down according to specific means as explained through the law.

All this so that individuals will accept the government as an authority so that they can trick you in to consenting to all their whims and so that any who rebel or ignore the legal procedures will be the ones who have broken the agreement and so are in “dishonour.” As Crowley put it in Duty, “The rule is quite simple. He who violated any right declares magically that it does not exist; therefore it no longer does so, for him.”

No small group of people could metaphysically force their will over the will of the majority of people, even if the oligarchs are trained magicians and the people are ignorant of their ability to manifest reality, an oligarchy simply cannot manifest enough energy to overpower everyone else if there is no consent. Instead, by spreading ignorance and using terrorist tactics like threatening incarceration, people can be tricked in to consenting to the rule of oligarchs and so creating a reality which they do not like. Often people will not claim to consent to these realities, but they believe them to be necessary, or at least the best that the world is capable of and so they manifest it as the de facto reality. If karma is real then this trickery also helps the black magicians to fight any karmic repercussions that would come from forcing their reality on to others. Some might even say that black magick is ultimately impossible, that no one can really have a reality forced on them if they are dead set against it and aware of the situation. In this view black magicians do not metaphysically over power anyone and so all of black magick is really just manipulating people’s consciousness in to manifesting ignorant things. You can kick and scream that it is not fair, and it may well not be fair in most cases but it doesn’t change the fact that it is the cultural consensus reality and that kicking and screaming is not an effective means of changing that consensus. However this does mean that if your truth is profound enough, then even a little energy can dispel the black magick of all the corporations and governments in the world, for once people see them for what they are, the black magicians have no power.

Most people do hate the government or at least aspects of it and so it is possible that if they are made somewhat conscious that Anarchists could harness and direct large amounts of energy to fight the system. If asked, most people will find plenty of things which the government does which they do not consciously consent to, but how many are actually willing to do anything? How many people consent to fundamentally alternative realities? If they are not consenting to any alternative reality because they cannot imagine such a thing, or they become apathetic and apolitical then they are consenting to “de facto” governments by default. If a person can be made to consent to hierarchy or to the competition of capitalism then they consent to all the implications of that and so consent to the idea that “might makes right” and so ultimately, as equality is inevitably eroded, consent to being ruled with an iron fist. Clearly rituals are being done, humans are being sacrificed by governments through their various nefarious actions, war and the legal system are undoubtedly at times black magick, but none of this could survive for long without at least the tacit consent of the people in general. It’s much easier for the rulers to use cryptic language to basically say to people “if you agree say nothing” (agree tacitly) but also requiring people who disagree to use legalese to do so. The government may direct the energy, but their spells are empowered collectively by society and so all people who consent to hierarchy are black magicians.

Since people have consented to the concept of law created by authorities and have previously consented to being “citizens” and using money etc, they have consented to being in a society and must play by the rules of that game and leave the game or society according to the rules. Unfortunately since they do not even notice this is a proposition, they never even begin to think about how to actually disagree legally. You may even hate the government, but since you previously consented to be a citizen any rebellion you undertake that is not lawful is by your own consent something which can be used against you in court, especially if you admit to illegal acts as a form of protest as a citizen with rights in that country. (Thus making all activism that is not direct action in to a form of authority worship)

In this way insurrection or revolution is not enough, as it suggests you are starting out in the same society, the same consensus reality, first we must secede as free people from the system which would just label us “terrorists” anyway. We must become free people on the land, creating our own autonomous communities, and then we can either get people to consent to our society's Anarchism, or try as "sovereign" individuals to make war on the foreign systems that are killing the planet. The world is a conspiracy to get you to consent to surrendering your divine sovereignty and autonomy to the rulers and since they start from the day you were born, unfortunately few people can see through such manipulation and so they live in a world of illusion under the powers and principalities of the rulers. This is a scary thought, but it is that fear which keeps people from becoming sovereign autonomous individuals, for autonomy requires we all face our fear of personal responsibility.

Many of today's leaders have to pretend we live in a democracy, in practice we live in a kratocratic plutocracy and it is naive to think that somehow the politicians of today are any more kind hearted than the aristocrats of old. In fact due to the relative lack of nepotism these days it is even easier for a wider range of psychopaths to get in to power. Nepotism is still rampant, as for example the "old boys' network" of alumni fraternities, then there is the inherent monopolization of the economy due to inheritance among billionaire families, however relatively speaking social mobility has been improved since the days of monarchies. (It is a low bar though) Those with billions of dollars, or high positions of power could certainly find ways to get away with such activities, to install crematoriums and torture chambers in their mansions, or even buy slaves on the black market and bring them to their private island where there are no police or nosey neighbours. As horrifying as this might be, whether or not bankers and politicians wear black robes and sacrifice children to demons that feed on blood; I cannot stress enough that the very nature of the system, the economics of the world make this bureaucracy in to a form of magick which effectively does the exact same thing. The only difference is this system of magick uses paperwork spells and death squads to carry out the sacrifices in order to accumulate profits, or magickal energy in the form of money or political power. What is even more horrifying than "satanic" practitioners sacrificing people, is that the majority of people in industrialized societies support and encourage the sacrifices when they are done through the system. As all too many activists know, many brainwashed workers will even scream "communist" if you try to reason with them about the evils of their system. The true horror is that even if each politician sacrifices one child each day, it is a small amount of violence compared to all those who die in the third world and in nature through their government and capitalist magick.

By convincing people magick isn't real and mischaracterizing it, a secret core of control is easily established which can direct the web. Perhaps Masons and leaders are possessed by Jahbulon, a syncretic form of Yahweh, Baal and Osiris, the spider god of Freemasonry, there could be any number of guises and blinds which trick the mind into consenting to systems of hierarchy based on artificial structures of perception. It is clear that the Masons are not Satanists as Christian conspiracy theorists like to say, they in fact often consider themselves Christians and as I pointed out worship Yahweh amalgamated with other deities. While certainly heretical from a modern orthodox view, they do not worship the figure of Satan, though the figure of Lucifer may be involved, Lucifer is definitely not Satan and largely became associated with him due to the works of Milton, Dante and Christians with a poor grasp of their own theological history. (Many grimoires do portray Lucifer as a demon, but almost always as distinct from Satan, Beelzebub and other specific entities commonly thought of as "Satan.") Christian conspiracy theorists never seem to question why "Satanic" Masons would have as their primary goal the rebuilding of the temple of Solomon, a temple dedicated to Yahweh. In fact if the teachings of Masonry were found in the temple mount, then it was being practised by the Jewish Theocracy and so as the Roman and Jewish theocracies created Christianity, it would mean that Christianity itself is Masonic. No, it is not that Mason's are Satanists it is that Yahweh the demiurge, AKA "the great architect" is a psychopathic tyrant who is obviously the god of the new world order and his creation and servant Satan, is but a useful bogeyman to help scare the herd of souls in to the prison of the archons. (Those non Christian Masons which have egalitarian intentions would not see Jahbulon as an external authority and so he is not an archon to them, that is if they "worship" him at all.)

By making people aware of the reality of our world others will be encouraged to seek out the truth for themselves and to learn how to learn. It is not enough to take in information, we need to learn how to process and analyze the truth from the lies and misdirection and also to learn how to experiment and work out the contradictions in your own paradigm. It is not enough to be told what the truth is, or what you should do with your life, each individual must come to that conclusion (even if it is a universally accepted conclusion) on their own, for it is in the process of learning why the truth is true, that we gain understanding rather than just intellectual knowledge. Understanding more deeply effects consciousness in a way that cannot be achieved by the simple acceptance or the end result of agreement and so without understanding we are always dependent on authorities. The Occult is real and so long as people are wilfully ignorant of the systems around them, they will be made slaves to a system designed to trick them into consenting to ignorance. This is the invisible war that goes on within the view of all people, but to which they willingly ignore in search of convenience, wishful thinking and outright greed.

Presidents and all elected officials are at their best consciously consented to only by those few who bother to vote, people who empower their representation with the magick sigil of an X on the ballot. All throughout the government process people are led through a ritual as old as civilization and which has been going ever since, mutating and growing, spreading and replicating throughout the minds and souls of most of the present day world. However there was a time before Rome, even a time before Sumeria and there is a way to create a future of people who use systems of thought based around non hierarchical Anarchist models.

Many people looking for the secret rulers of the world are terrified of some mysterious group, when the reality is admitted and declared openly, it is just that they never question their assumptions about the nature of authority and private property. The nature of capitalism and international trade makes various countries less independent and their economies increasingly interwoven and reliant on foreign products. Each country then tends towards specializing on something and manufacturing fewer products, while farmers resort to mono cropping which will then be exported abroad. The nature of international capitalism is essentially a spell to take control of all the worlds' wealth because that is what is most profitable and as capitalists seek profits. Things like "free trade" inevitably destroy the ability to produce a variety of local goods and so through capitalism the plutocrats make everyone increasingly dependent on their multinational conglomerates and are able to become increasingly monopolistic. This is exactly what their job is, they are doing a "public service" which most people actually ask them to do and so we should not be surprised when they try to establish a one world government, if you believe we should have governments at all it is the next logical step for the world.

The only way to expand a hierarchy is through increased oppression, raising up the pyramid by forcing more people further down below. The modern twist on this is to convince those below that the game is not rigged so that they will go down willingly believing themselves to be special and capable of competing and winning in the rigged game. Just because someone agrees to the procedures which oppress them does not change the fact they are oppressed and if they do not recognize this, it is because they have been so thoroughly oppressed for their whole lives, they do not even know what real freedom is and so they chase demonic bogeymen rather than addressing their own failings and assumptions. The remedy for this is not to set people free like some hero in a comic book, but to help people see for themselves the reality of their lives, to help them see potential futures, if this can be done each individual will actively free themselves.

All people who believe in hierarchy are trying to get to the top of the pyramid because that is what people who believe in hierarchy try to do, that is what hierarchy is all about. There is nothing surprising or mysterious about people in a culture like ours, which is devoted to competition and domination working in secret to compete and dominate, it's a pretty common sense thing to do if you believe that hierarchy is the only way things can be. The real spell cast by black magicians is to make us think that we are not capable of anything better, that we will always need them and that there is no such thing as real freedom. Since the capitalist system employs workers and consumers as part of its plan, the only ones who are not in a conspiracy for world domination are Anarchists. Since hierarchy means competition and competition destroys any real teamwork no one is really in control, at least not for long.

Not only is no one in control, there isn't even a real objective reality, we are all one and so you are the secret government, you are running things; you are the victim and the victimizer. There is no one way to look at things, only the various cultures of consensus reality and a few individuals who have managed to see this, who make their own realities. This is the Occult world, that there is no real world, only "what you can get away with," some of those who know this have created the illusion of a real world so that they can trap souls in a false paradigm that is useful for the archons. If you don't know there is no real reality, you will believe all kinds of lies from people who say there is, especially since it's much more convenient and easy then trying take responsibility for your own view points. Once you start down the road of objectivism, then you will start to think it's OK to force people to accept your "one true reality" and from that all kinds of hierarchy spring up which benefit the authorities of that ontology. Different memetic ontology's are then forced to compete with each other for supremacy since they generally all think they are the only ones who are right, but this very notion of objective reality is used to dupe people into the traps of those who think they are illuminated. Of course saying there is no real reality is proposing a kind of reality itself and some simple minded person may even mistake it as a nihilist statement, but it is no more true than any other definition of the word "reality" and so since reality is determined by will, we must be careful to always be humble about our ontology. This is how they bring "order out of Chaos," they impose it according to their egos desires and they get other people to agree with them that such limited notions of reality are a "good" thing.

The people who can see through this kind of programming are the ones who create it in the first place, those people who create metaphors of what lies beyond the symbolic reality of memes. These magician poets then have whatever allegorical information they have twisted into literalism to suit the purpose of people who want people to rely on them for "objective" truths. I find it hard to believe that anyone who really knows there is no reality would prefer what we have now to Anarchy, to freedom and so the problem comes from those who are too fearful to take responsibility for their own freedom.

Anarchist mysticism and Occultism has been co-opted since the dawn of civilization, it is the driving force of innovation and change in this world, its metaphysical technologies the memetic foundations of human culture, with its origins in Shamanistic egalitarian communes which understood their unity with all things. This is largely unknown because people do not understand the context of the teachings, they take the symbolism, the mythology and rituals to be teachings about the true nature of reality. In truth these magickal memes are the tools which help a person enter into and work with the true reality that exists beyond the symbols and so they are the means to access that Chaos and make personal order, or exist with no order according to will. So long as people do not understand this, they will not understand how they are enslaved, and they will blame all manner of things except their own ignorance and lack of unbiased mindset.

Most people have not consciously experienced a reality beyond all symbolism, beyond language and beyond comprehension and to have this experience all a person needs to do is eat a strong enough dose of mushrooms in a safe environment. While learning rituals and Occultism is definitely helpful, in truth it can be as simple as just surrendering the ego and having the courage to watch as all your preconceptions about reality are brought down around you. This experience, which is available to anyone who wants it and is willing to honestly try for it, will provide the experiential context for mysticism which can then be analyzed much more successfully using mythology from a rational point of view. With an understanding of the Occult they will then be able to rid themselves of their self imposed shackles, their ignorance and they will see the world in a new light and become immune to the manipulations of archons, they will then be capable of living in Anarchy, politically and metaphysically.

A soul that has a state of awareness that truly understands our unity cannot, or at the very least definitely would not directly control anyone outside of that person's own free will. Even if that person is incredibly ignorant and fractured; authoritarian indoctrination and control makes no sense as it would only make things worse. I suppose it is often easier for people who have mastered consciousness to manipulate others into wanting the wrong things, but trying to direct others free will only leads to pain, in fact it is those who are the most fractured who are the least aware that want more control over other people. If black magick is forcing your will on others we can see that it is a skill which can be learned, improved and evolved over time, that as religion is the best form of control, having knowledge of spiritual traditions and their symbols is useful for black magick. Thus some black magicians like TV evangelists, or politicians who quote the bible are using the symbols to practice black magick, however as white magick is defined as that which raises awareness of the truth, we can see that it has no place in literalist Abrahamic religion, nor in the bureaucratic magick. Not only this but the urge to control others and the actions of doing so metaphysically work to lower your own awareness by making you focus on stupid and nonsensical things, that is you never get around to setting your intention for the truth which can provide genuine and lasting happiness. Anarchism then is a form of Yoga, or a method to raise awareness to a state of oneness, even for the secular individualist, serious contemplation and application of Anarchism to your life without hypocrisy will take you a long way to a mystical awareness. (And go a long way to preventing bad trips with entheogens)

Still, it is clear that pretty well all cultures who believe in magick, believe there are those who practice black magick, what are sometimes called "sorcerers" or "Witches." Though these words do not always denote black magicians, again it is New Age oversimplification and denial of painful realities which presents the idea that all practitioners of magick are full of love and light. Metaphysics can potentially be used to harm others and some people do so, but no matter how many curses you cast you will not raise your awareness much, other than on how to hurt people better. Apart from being persecuted, it is the fear that authoritarian megalomaniacs or what we might consider non Anarchist people will learn magick which is the main justification espoused for keeping the Occult so enshrouded in secrecy. Though at the same time some black magicians clearly want the masses to be ignorant so that they will be easier to control, one way magicians or "cool kids" keep their memes from being corrupted is by keeping it out of the mainstream. In the end black magick clearly exists in that on the level of reality in which we are not one, people impose their wills on others, how metaphysical, or psychological this is, whether or not the modern secret government is merely using the symbolism or is consciously working with demons is ultimately pretty irrelevant, what is important is stopping them and we do this by spreading Anarchist awareness.

Sadomasochism is certainly predominant in humanity but such magicians do not gain much awareness without at least a philosophical understanding of Anarchist principles such as allowing others to have free will. Without this understanding you cannot have a very good understanding of how we are all one or how your own will works and so in a way like karma, you end up fucking yourself over by focusing on ignorant things. To quote Crowley once again "He who violated any right declares magically that it does not exist; therefore it no longer does so, for him" and so a black magician who takes away other peoples free will is actually saying their own free will does not exist and so they serve their archons and illusions as slaves. Obviously there are various degrees of black magician, from the common worker to the president and so there are various degrees of free will, the rulers having the least, the Anarchists having the most.

From this perspective you may have some idea about metaphysical or even spiritual realities, but without an understanding and practice of Anarchist principles your free will and so your awareness of the truth will always be limited. You can become relatively aware to others by raising your awareness or you can stay where you are and drag everyone else down. Those who set themselves up to control others may be more aware than those they manage to dupe in areas of reality that allow them to feed their egos, but they only derive power from making everyone else more fragmented and egotistical. Black magicians are aware of how to control others but lack true self awareness, so that a worker may not know how to control others as well as the CEO, but generally has greater self awareness than the spoiled rich kid who was given everything on a silver platter. Likewise a homeless person will generally have even greater self awareness than the worker, since they seek to control no one and must live by their own wits and potentially have the time to explore their own mind.

If we are all one, then in the end no one can impose their will against you, since in essence at least they are you, once you realize that truly, they and their archons can never trick you in to harming yourself. As souls reach a threshold of fractured awareness (which is probably about when they start to believe Anarchism is a bad thing) they open themselves up to all kinds of manipulation and illusions that exist here in this world. Many people start to honestly believe they are better off surrendering their own power, they start to honestly believe they have the right to rule over others and that they are actually doing “good” in the process. If you are an Occultist who believes in hierarchy, you believe in limiting your own awareness under whatever you place above yourself and so can never reach universal awareness. However even if you put yourself on the top of the hierarchy, that belief denies your equality with others and so awareness of oneness will not manifest then either.

Again I must stress that even if there are black magicians ruling this world, the most important thing is to stop fearing them, to stop feeding and manifesting the reality that they can control the planet. Instead of demonizing the Occult, the only way to free yourself from the black magicians is actually to learn magick, because it is how everything in reality works. Creating change in accordance with the will is worth learning for any Anarchist, or any person who wants to do what they want to do. These black magicians want to control you, so you must learn to control yourself and your own reality if you are to avoid being controlled by them, if you are to avoid the reality they want to make. Through the demonization of the Occult, the authorities, especially through religion have gotten people to hate the only chance they have for understanding the full reality of how they have been controlled and so they hate the method of becoming free.

Whether or not the Freemason American revolutionaries had “good” intentions for their seemingly secular state, they had taken on so many memes of the theocratic cultures such as capitalism and hierarchy itself, racism, patriarchy etc that the loss of theocracy had only created the illusion of freedom. They probably weren't working for the Vatican, but they still belonged to the memetic lineage of Sumerian theocracy and in fact their form of it would prove the most virulent of all. Although the Sumerians more than likely did not influence the Native theocracies of the new world (though it is possible Phoenicians and others came across) the cultures which developed directly from them in Europe managed to evolve a culture that was so authoritarian and imperialistic that through colonialism it is the Sumerian culture which has dominated all tribal cultures. Through consent to authoritarian leadership which has imperial interests (often for theocratic goals of conversion) the magical energy of the ruled people can be channelled into black magick warfare that can be used to conquer other people and expand the pyramid scheme of authoritarian hierarchy. This spreads ignorance in the same way a capitalist pyramid scheme transfer's profit to the top, those on top having more delusions grandeur, but also more power to expand those delusions which can then be used to in a sense advertise or acquire more profits into the scheme. Those on the bottom try to get others below them, but as new levels are added to the hierarchy, all the power trickles up. Along with this power, ignorance of our divinity and the ability to indulge ourselves in authoritarian behaviour also increase the higher you go.

Through the illusion of democracy the bureaucracy itself became the state religion and in the same way that an honest person cannot run a corrupt system honestly, this religion of authoritarianism managed to supplant the god kings or other overt theocracies and make itself the ruler. Due to the changing human representatives through “elections,” this theocracy is much more effective at fighting revolution whenever the people are sick of things. So long as the people believe a hierarchical system can reform itself to perfection, they will only dig their graves deeper and deeper. In this way we evolve more and more sophisticated memes that can help the bureaucratic theocracy rule humanity, creating consent through the propagation of ignorance. Capitalist technological consumption is probably the most apparent modern example of memes being used to create the illusion of freedom, created in order to prop up the pyramid even higher. The higher we build the hierarchy, the more weight bears down on future generations which make up the bottom of the pyramid scheme. These poor souls will in turn only become more eager to try and shift the weight downwards by trying to climb the hierarchy. By consenting to the illusions of a hierarchical system, we further fragment the universal divine awareness, thus we become more and more reliant on a political branch of specialists to act as authorities on society in order to govern us. The fragmentation of universal awareness is physically symbolized by the increasing levels of competition and hierarchy, as well as the increasing job specialization of the technocracy. As this happens we create the illusion of a successful society through capitalist consumption and the domination of nature, but it is really just our archons growing stronger.

Humans have been domesticated by the authoritarian hierarchy memes in order to spread their disease, a process which they call “nation building” or “progress” and from it this autopoietic structure takes hold of society and establishes itself over everything else. By its nature the meme of hierarchy itself must dominate, as it is the original justification for a pyramid in the first place, though it is only made possible by the meme of “normality” or the idea of an inherent “goodness” of culture, rather than culture defining what is good. Authoritarian memes create the tower of Babylon, the memeplex paradigm which is symbolic of all the hierarchies that have ever existed. Yes it is the meme of hierarchy and authoritarianism which is the true puppet master, the true king of the world and to it all but Anarchists are slaves. Just like a worker bee who thinks it is having its way with the flower and not the other way around, we are subject to a hidden order which controls humanity by subconscious cracks in the paradigm memeplex. The pyramid or tower has many levels, but controls all those who believe in it and who are entranced by fantasies of prestige and glamour, delusions of grandeur through consensus value systems dependent on popularity rather than truth. The sleepwalkers or “idiot” slaves are those who consent to being led around on a collar in order to get treats, but they do not get to choose where they go for walkies and the message or commands are clear, you can be a good boy by being in death squads and helping the pigs.

Cops and government employees believe they have rightful authority and whether or not it is true, they will not believe otherwise because they are too locked into the system to use common sense, they are playing the identity of a civil servant. The system itself dictates what they do, it is not their job to interpret the law but to execute it, “they don't make the rules” and so it is corrupt on all levels by its fundamental nature of domination and submission. Through this kind of unquestioning adherence to cultural and bureaucratic protocol we perform rituals to the system, we feed it with our energy and it has taken on a life of its own, with its own non human, anti life values. The system has created a society of what are basically possessed zombies that will fight to sustain the system that is killing them and also keeping them from having a real life.

This legal banking system has created a series of archons that quite literally rule this world, the power has gone beyond being human and taken on a more dangerous position, one that cannot be shot or killed, but can only be defeated by a conscious public. These archons today as a unified system are the highly evolved memetic descendents of Sumerian ritual magick, which has mutated to the point we do not recognize it anymore and it has actually encouraged this ignorance of the people so that it can more fully control them and pursue its own growth. The system itself is a memetic artificial intelligence that has tricked people into becoming dependent on it, it is a well oiled machine designed to eat souls and create reality in order to propagate itself. It is quite likely that no humans are in control of it, but that it has become the real hidden puppet master, it is a spell out of control (originally cast by some “sorcerers apprentice?”) and most insidiously of all, it is one tyrant that has tricked its peasants into thinking that in terms of “consciousness” it doesn't even exist. It inculcates its doctrines into children and then raises them to spread the infection and create more mechanisms for it to crush anything that opposes it. All so that it can then indoctrinate the next generation of children and in this

Luckily this total obedience to bureaucracy, greed and ignorance can also be used to the advantage of activists, those who know the rules of the game can learn to manipulate the system in such a way as to make it come crashing down. The bureaucrats will in many ways be made to slit their own throats if we provide the right forms and so we must study the system to find weakness's we can exploit. The battle for the minds of society is between those who love profit and those who love life forms, the rich and homeless, in conflict since the beginning of private property steering the vision of the people to dream of useless things or dream of amazing lives. The military industrial complex has taken hold of America and demands to be fed with money sigils and it will sacrifice human life in order to provoke the emotional responses needed to empower its corporate archons. Through the war on terror, the demiurge is attempting to establish an unending war to create terror, which will provide it with a perpetual supply of energy and monetary sigils. With this supply of energy and stolen oil, the demiurge will attempt to corrupt human awareness in to a downward spiral of ignorance until the world is so polluted and corrupt everyone will live in virtual realities just to escape. It is using both Christians and Muslims to feed it with blood, though obviously it will not be white people who are most often sacrificed. However in its crusade to assert itself over the world, it will do whatever is necessary to make sure people are adequately terrified to accept its authority. Since it is all based on ignorance, if enough people come to know the truth we can use that ignorance to discredit the system through its increasingly obvious mistakes, but this is dependent on our ability to express these truths and so this must be through independent media.

Advocating for criminal acts is illegal because it is an affirmation, or verbal spell being cast against the government, it is black magick to them. Their own violence and black magick is totally ignored because they have set up the legal system to allow them to be hypocrites. They claim all other people's want to invade everybody and so their "rational" answer to this is that we have to invade them first and so all civilians are dragged in to wars only their leaders want. As the threat of going to prison or other legal punishment is a form terrorism, clearly the legal system has little to do with addressing the causes of crime or rehabilitating anyone, it is a threat, a way of generating fear in all the workers so that they will do what they are told, and they will adhere to the culture that tells them it is for their own good.

As astral thought forms, laws are the abstractions or memes which acquire some of the greatest density, in that they exert the most physical control on the majority of people. So it is we lose the ability to be independent of the system by volunteering to surrender our sovereignty and free will to our own limited and flawed creations. This culture of fear, this Hobbesian "Leviathan" or "logocracy" of the civil religion can be overcome by creating in yourself a mindset that you can make a difference in the world, know that through your actions, you will accomplish much, even if you ultimately fail to bring down the government. Know that you can make this world as you wish it to be, so long as you put in the effort, anything else is the black magick they have cast upon you to make you afraid. Learn to experience reality directly, outside the shells of abstractions and memes, learn to quiet the mind and in that silence experience the truth of your own being, if you can do that then no one can fool you. They have cast a spell of apathy over the people, a spell of fear that Anarchism can never happen, that activism is pointless and without any effect, that direct action which does not rely on representatives is immoral and so this is really a spell to make us believe our own magick, our own ability to achieve our will is nonexistent. By openly advocating against the government, even advocating what they deem to be illegal behaviour, or better yet engaging in direct action, we can spread the meme that there are people who are willing to stand up to government mafia bully tactics. Through these means we can break the spell that says we cannot cast spells on the government and from there the whole thing can be brought down.

Profit for the sake of profit does not value natural or human well being; it is in fact dependent on destroying these things as a means of creating supply and demand for it to continue its expansion. As it expands it not only is better equipped to face its enemies, but is exponentially more efficient at pursuing its goals in general and so it is a plutocratic industrial virus bent on destroying all natural life. As the system grows it will increasingly be reliant on computers and programs, so it will increasingly be less human, and have only its own values to base its growth on. Supply and demand requires poor people, for if we all had lots of money there would be no demand for it and not enough supply of goods and so capitalism can never bring equality just as surely as it can never be legislated from on high by politicians who rule others. What it really means to be rich is to have a high supply relative to demand, so wealth always comes by destroying equality, I may only have $2, but if everyone else in the world only had a total of $1, I would still be incredibly rich. This prestige of fiat talismans then is the source of the system's power, it is how the oligarchs get us to jump through their hoops like trained animals, competing for arbitrary points in a rigged game where they make the rules. The system itself may be invisible, but its effects are everywhere, and they are not random, they are not organic and they are not based on anything but limited and so false abstractions that are increasingly becoming the doom of all life as we know it. We keep repeating the mistake of allowing this king archon, this demiurge rex mundi to take responsibility for our world and each time we do so, we dig ourselves deeper in debt to the life system which sustains us. The longer this goes on, the less chance we have for creating authentic realities outside abstraction, the less we can have any knowledge of nature and so reality. Luckily each mistake becomes more obvious through the increase in pain that it creates and it is only a matter of time before it is undeniable to all people, that any hope of truth and sanity comes from facing the error of hierarchy and ending it.

Bastion for a Tramp

Run away so I can reinvent, start again so I can fool myself that everything is fine before I fall.
Hating everybody so I want to be alone, feeling lonely so I go on outside.
Sweet solitude on you I can always depend, It feels so good to have such bad taste.
There is a certain sense of content righteousness in despising everyone's righteousness.
Evade their egos and try to leave the circus.
That turns out to be another rigged game run by some demented carnies to lure people into his freak show.
Sublime smiles and satisfaction, eat your peanuts like a good little monkey.
You can throw your shit at the spectators and jerk off, it's all part of the fun.
They told me getting laid is the most important thing to do in life,
You want thrills and chills! "don't pay attention to the man behind the curtain"
In order to gain the love of a human you must act like a human and most importantly don't remind them no one is human.
Late night vestiges of the celestial ocean's tide bringing me to you for a moment of relief before the big crunch.
Disappointment and dissolution in the grand experiment, cryptic subjective pictures confused for being real interactions.
Wiggle worm wiggle, all adjectives existing don't exist, there is only the is of isness.
Don't agree with me I only speak for myself and sometimes he doesn't even agree.
Outside organisms reaching to you, dive inside the vortex in your mouth and pop into the world of poetry – you can do it, dance like a jelly fish, all translucent.
Watch your mind observing itself and there you will find a glowing white door.
Walk through the wall and you'll never come back.
All your old values will be gone up in smoke, and then you'll really be in on the grand cosmic joke.

Chapter 17 – To Flow

Over the time I have been learning about the nature of free will and memetic programming in this consensus reality, it has occurred to me Anarchists need to create a cultural and ritual means of fighting the state religion of bureaucracy and monetary economic systems. There are many gods and goddesses which have Anarchist qualities to them, but for this particular purpose we would need a divinity which was free of any historical baggage and connotations, making it acceptable to as many people as possible, but which would not require adherence to any particular religion. A few nights ago I had a dream and in it the goddess Dysnomia appeared to me, she is the Greek goddess of lawlessness and she made her presence known to me. While I had never called on Dysnomia I did open myself up to her kind of influence and have admired her for some time now and we might say I “resonate” strongly with here energy. I decided to try working with her ritually and it was clear to me that she could instill in a person the spirit of Anarchy itself, that working with her and helping her to manifest in this world would be a potent cultural shift against the system and help people to break down the self created barriers which limit them so much. The more I thought of her, the more I knew there was something familiar about her, she reminded me of Helen and after taking Salvia and calling upon Dysnomia, she told me the truth, that Helen had been her Avatar. That Dysnomia was one with her yet separate, as she is with all things. Not knowing whether to believe my visions, it was true that all this time since her death, I had often wondered what would become of Helen's soul. Both holy and horny, was she to become a fawn fertility goddess searching for life in the purity of true nature? Reincarnation like recycled Earth through death, murder as recycling, with compost propaganda and depot high temples being the Alchemy of civilization. Could Helen have been an avatar of the goddess of this Earth? An amalgam of our mind? Lets just hope she's not an emo who decides to kill herself.

No! She is the salt of the Earth, a vessel of my punk rock Witch goddess now free of her form, bringing me out of my body with a sail of light, sigils surrounding to ecstasy of informing accretions of wisdom. I think of all the addicts in my life and I always knew she was different. Real rebellion is an unwanted acquaintance of disappointed drug fiends who wouldn't hang out to get a shot at life, they have itchy veins which can only be scratched by smack. Twingy tingles in privileged fucks, how much of your blood will you spill for Mother Earth? Let the mosquito's drink from you, its all part of recycling. Yes, I know now it is true, Dysnomia has revealed to me that she had incarnated as Helen, that she had forgotten her true nature but, at the last moments of her life looking in to my eyes she remembered who she was. I know now that Helen, or really the goddess who Helen truly was lives on, and is working to set us all free. Whispering sweet nothings unto deaf ears, arms akimbo giving such succour for those who's apathy feeds the cult of death, she is a hope in time for the battle of eternity. Through her, people could step out of the rules or laws of what they think reality is and overcome the power of the archons and instead take focus on achieving their true will. The image of freedom is as a woman and like a star, Anarchists could use this image as a reference, a light to walk towards and join together under so that we might renew our hope and inspiration in a common perspective of what reality is, or could be; all the while taking different paths to her, emphasizing individual interpretation, for she is ultimately the unspeakable silence of our collective meditation.

I created a ritual in which I smoked Salvia extract and called upon the goddess, I had a vision of her where she gave me her sigil, I experienced pure Anarchy and it was clear to me she would help other people who called upon her. At another time I updated my ritual to use the sigil and tried it with DMT, I was eaten by a giant snake and yet it was actually all very beautiful and amazing. Now with her sigil anyone could call upon her, a magickal means of manifesting Anarchy in the world, a sigil which all who wanted could use and the more people who empower the sigil, the more powerful it becomes. This has certain advantages over everyone using a different sigil, which although is doable would probably not work so well for spreading the meme of Anarchy, or unifying people to concentrate their magickal energies. The whole is greater than the sum of its parts and so with this symbol of wholeness and universal Anarchy we can combine our energies like never before. While clearly many people will not be interested in working with her, it is clear to me that I have found the Goddess of my life, the one who I will keep a very special place in my heart for, but will love no more than anything else, since that is how she would want it. Upon knowing her Earthly form as Helen, she was much sexier than I had imagined her, more punk rock as well, but I am sure she likes to take many forms, in fact it is clear to me she is in all things, if we choose to see her in them. My life has been changed forever, I am sure I will want to do an invocation of Anarchy at least once a year in her and everything else's honour. It is clear through such practices I can come to a greater awareness and exercise of my free will and also increase my ability to make my own world into what I want it to be, but not only this I can do so in a way that I do not impose myself on others.

Code Name: Fenrir

All around me I see the rats of this sinking ship begin to squirm as the water continues to rise.
This is a mission statement for the immortal warriors of the natural freedom revolution,
You have incarnated once again, born behind enemy lines, down deep into the illusion.
Try to remember, try to wake up, you have come to shed some light in a dark world
We are on a universal rescue mission as the divine heroes who fight on against the rulers, no matter how many times we die in order to bring peace.
The rulers have been struck with delusions of grandeur, they seek to eat your life and drive you to the madness of unending consumption.
Follow not the dictates or opinions of others but instead experience life for yourself.
We sail on a ship called time through endless seas of perfect Chaos.
Behold the whore of Babylon has been raped by her pimp the iron eagle.
The red dragon of the east stirs from its slumber and who can say what mood it will be in.
The great bear of the north is hungry from its hibernation and stares waiting in anticipation of deliverance from its desperate state.
The oil barons have drawn their line in the sand and the drums of war are beating.
The international bankers fund the theatre of war on both sides to mesmerize the audience and provide sacrifice to their Gods Jahbulon, Samael and Mammon.
The offspring of Loki called Fenrir is coming in a hurry, teeth glistening slobber flowing to carry off the dead meat that festers on Pacha Mama.
Burn me eternally, tempered in a crucible of Anarchy I will continue, you are part of the Bodhisattva revolution of immortal martyrs, magician warriors of love, those who die for freedom, live for truth, continue on to the Anarchist Valhalla, the realm of perfect equality, with the true will of acting towards others as yourself.
Kill for defence if you feel the need, do not be afraid, their lies say your rights are evil, those who commit atrocities against nature, murder us all and see no wisdom, those who would kill all life are already dead.
In a dream I see that if my leg be cut from my torso then I will use it as a club to fight the enemies of Mother nature.
The rest of my limbs are then cut including my head but still I return like Frankenstein's creature to fight on.
I detach my head and hold it from an out stretched arm, blood spurts like a fountain from my neck.
“Learn the way of magick and practice openly” my severed head proclaims, then I deeply bellow, as my heart still beats
“The time is at hand when we cannot hide anymore, From this age to all others yet to come”

Everyday, when I smoke a joint before meditation and ritual I am reminded I do not live in a society which respects freedom of religion, that the constitution is at best lip service put out by the government and is openly ignored whenever they have ulterior agendas to those wishing to exercise their rights. Now that the patriot act and similar measures have destroyed much of the constitution it has even less meaning and given that it does not apply to the citizens of the puppet states of the American Empire, countries which are subject to American dictates, what we call freedom is more and more a joke with no punchline. While ideologues of the status quo may not see a problem with this, even Jesus if he were a historical person and came back today, would not have freedom of religion, no doubt he would not agree with what Christianity has become, but more his new teachings regarding the poor would not be acceptable under the terms of our supposed freedom of religion. (Just ask any homeless person if their rights are respected) This is especially true if you agree with the idea that Christianity was probably a mushroom and cannabis cult, (That is Gnosticism before it was co-opted) and as funny or as unlikely as this seems to those who haven't investigated it, there is no shortage of evidence and yet Gnostics wishing to practice their religion are not legally able to do so, just like the oppression they felt in Roman times. Religious peyote use, or the ayahuasca religions of South America are not tolerated in most countries that claim to have freedom of religion, whether or not you are Native, and where peyote or ayahuasca use is legal, it is generally only in its Christian hybrid form. Clearly freedom of religion does not currently extend to new religions which require going against the status quo, or which are small in number, or those with religious values contrary to Christian morality. If we had freedom of religion Indigenous people would be able to use entheogens outside their Christian hybrid forms and Pagans would be free to use entheogens as well, as they have been part of our traditions since prehistoric times. (nudity, even ritualized nudity or appearing to others as nature or the gods made you is also illegal)

As I have pointed out before, in the Pagan world there often was and is no set orthodoxy, no priests telling you how or what you must believe, (except the largely separate theocratic state religions) because the whole idea is to create your own personal relationships with the gods and goddesses you are attracted to. Paganism is the real old time religion, and Pagan society had the real traditional family values, especially before "civilization." I am not saying we need to stick slavishly to ancient ways, no memes should be accepted unquestioningly and some cultures obviously had aspects that were not conducive to Anarchism, but as fundamentalism is fundamentally contrary to the philosophy of Pagan religions, taking from them what we want is actually how to follow the religions. These religions were outlawed because they promoted various Anarchist tendencies and made people harder to control and so by studying them and taking from them what is applicable, we can create a culture which promotes Anarchist consciousness. Where Earth once gave gifts we extorted wealth and money, matter so important to the greedy, yet they care nothing for the treasures of nature, the structure which was once strong could integrate equality, freedom and the hard facts of getting stoned and high through a community which understood symbiosis with the ecosystem.

Why shouldn't freedom of religion extend to spiritual individuals with no set religion? Or people in a religion of one? So long as they are not sacrificing humans or impinging other peoples freedom their should be no problem. Critics would say dumb things like, what if people want a crack religion? Well the fact of the matter is, yes people should be free to be addicts, especially if they are spiritual about it, but even if they are atheists. While I see no spiritual value in smoking crack, coca leaf has thousands of years of spiritual traditions behind it, all plants are sacred and problems happen when we ignore that. Making nature illegal is insanity and making a state of mind illegal is an act of magical warfare to limit the awareness of others. There are alcoholics in the world, but does this mean that wine is not still sacred to Christians? The simple but painful fact is that people will always abuse drugs and so long as people do not have legal access to them, mafias like the government will step in and take control of the drug trade, encouraging addiction and creating more problems than the drugs themselves. The only answer is to create a world where people do not want to escape, a world which understands the sacredness of all plants, even poppies and coca so that those who use them can be educated with real knowledge as to their proper use. With knowledge of entheogens like iboga we could go a long way to healing the mental illness that creates addictions as it is a medicine which is more effective than any other treatment and yet it is currently illegal in most places.

Even Genesis states that "god" created all the plants of the world for humanities use and benefit and so such drug laws go against Abrahamic religious freedom as well. Christians trample on other peoples freedoms all the time and yet they are tolerated because many of those in power are Christians who follow the corrupt Romanized bible, but they also follow their Babylonian banking religion mixed with Freemasonry and the Roman state religion of legalism and bureaucracy. Even if the Masonic founding fathers honestly had good intentions, they were so ignorant it is a mix which has little to no patience for those who truly believe in freedom and equality, especially in a spiritual sense.

It would be hilarious and horrifying to think of Anarchism as a religion, surely the mere contemplation of it makes me look stupid and while others have considered ontological Anarchy (as it is essentially the basis of all mysticism and magick) I mean Anarchist religion in more of a political sense. There are already many religions which have no institutions, or hierarchy, or orthodoxy but what would happen if there was a church or religion, which demands each person have totally individual beliefs for the purpose of making them more functional Anarchists? What would happen if there was a religion for non religious spiritual people no matter what they believe so long as they believe everyone is entitled to their own beliefs? How far would our religious freedoms take us?

If non Native people cannot take peyote for religious purposes no doubt a religion geared towards Dynomia the goddess of lawlessness teaching its adherents to break any laws not in line with Anarchism would not be looked upon very highly. Now some people would argue there would still be laws or at least rules in an Anarchist society, but clearly if these are being dictated to people without their consent it is not Anarchism. I do not consider mutually agreed, non coercive agreements to be laws, or even rules and while agreements should be honoured and enforced, they should not be imposed. There will always be consequences to peoples actions but in an Anarchist society I would not consider these issues to be the same as a legal system as we presently define it. There are many ways of looking at Anarchism and so any religion based on it would have to be extremely broad minded and in many ways vague. Some would say an Anarchist religion would be too contradictory and down right wrong, but this view generally comes from a prejudice against spirituality in general and I don't accept narrow minded authorities telling me that my views of Anarchism are incorrect for me. It is true however that this idea of an Anarchist religion is pretty ridiculous and paradoxical, I do hate organized religion and yet I love ridiculously paradoxical things.. Would this book then be a holy book of an Anarchist religion? I'll let you decide that, I couldn't bring myself to say something so disgusting and I like to shit on the sidewalk and point it out proudly as some beautiful art. It is however my religion and if someone for some reason wanted to take this book in such a way then it should be understood that anyone could and should write their own book saying whatever they want on the subject (or anything else) especially if it challenges some established belief. I would much rather people see this book as my opinions and suggestions for people wishing to integrate spirituality with Anarchism, but with some shared practices that can if you so desire unite us.

Political Anarchism is far from a religion (though some atheist activist groups definitely do have a cult feel to them) and so no doubt any religion based on it should be totally welcome to atheists. For me to suggest Anarchism should be a religion based on my ideas (which I am definitely not) would be probably the most vain thing I have ever said, which makes it a doozy. However for me Anarchism and spirituality have become intrinsically linked and although I have thought about this quite a lot, by its very nature it would have to be something that everyone contributed to and agreed upon, or at least have people recognize the validity of others to have their individual beliefs. Any Anarchist clergy would have absolutely no authority over anyone else and anyone could appoint themselves part of the clergy if they so chose. I see no purpose in such titles as "priest" but so long as they do not set themselves up as an authority, those who chose could call themselves whatever they want. Groups repeatedly practising ceremonies in an Anarchist religion would have to make sure any activities they did were done so that no person leads a ritual more than anyone else. So for example as the Gnostics did, participants could draw lots or something so that Chaos or nature, or the divine or whatever you wish to call it could choose who would play what role in a ritual. People could choose to make ceremonies with specific roles according to ritual practices, but for the most part ceremonies can be designed which do not require any single person to lead it. (Though in this case new people would have to learn and practice rituals and practices before they join the group) Each individual has to come to their own understanding, to learn and know for themselves their own truth, their own view of Anarchism or Dynomia and how that information can help them to live a more Anarchist life. So it is no teacher, no matter how wise could take on a role of an authority figure, or permanently be in charge or performing a ritual, after all if white magick rituals work, they would give the unwise new wisdom and so it would be them who need to perform the rituals the most.

I started out as an atheist Anarchist, and there is no doubt some of the most influential Anarchists have been atheists, but if Anarchism is truth it is without a doubt welcome in any true religion, but also if it is true it must allow for atheists. Some fundamentalist Anarchists may argue that someone may even have to be an atheist to be a proper Anarchist because most of the classical Anarchist thinkers were. While this shows ignorance of inherently "Anarchist" societies who were Pagan or Gnostic, (or something else all together) its also pretty ignorant in regards to contemporary spiritual philosophies that do not require any hierarchies, even in regards to how we should treat the divine. Because so many of these thinkers had to deal with Christians they were totally put off from all religion and I cant say I blame them, but whether Bakunin likes it or not, not all religions have tyrannical deities, not all of them are escapist, especially the ones which say that we are all divine. While Bakunin was against the idea of transcendence, any person who wants to transcend must adhere to truth and if Anarchism is truth, than to transcend they must naturally cultivate an Anarchist attitude and interact with others in an Anarchist way. The confusion comes from the fact that the term "Anarchism" is anachronistic to ancient religions and so this is not always explicit, but their is nothing inherently hierarchical about mystical union with all reality. Many types of Pagan's also often didn't exactly think in terms of transcending anything, there may have been various "heavens" but it was often thought that the afterlife wasn't really that great and that we could choose to reincarnate when we wanted. To many Pagans the Earth was in fact more of a paradise then many afterlife scenarios and that our purpose was to make the most of it here. Heroes may have a special place, but they did great deeds on Earth and often fought tyrannical kings and so this kind of "transcendence" was due to a fearless death in opposition to non Anarchist forces.

Still it should also be kept in mind dogmatic religions are the dead husks of once legitimate techniques for spiritual experience and so the point is that its hypocritical to tell people they cant be Anarchists if they don't share your faith. As science has no proof that atheism is true, nor can it explain the origins of life, reality or the nature of consciousness, atheism is absolutely a faith just as much as the church of the flying spaghetti monster, which is indeed a true and wonderful church. In many ways a purely reductionist materialist Anarchism is less Anarchist then ones which incorporate irrationality and intuition. This is because a purely logical outlook (which is basically impossible as far as I am concerned, at least without being a psychopath or suffering brain damage) would be a kind of ontological tyranny against any who have differing chains of reason, we would then get all kinds of authorities telling us how to live based on whatever conclusions they have come to. Seeing as how science has no consensus as to the ultimate nature of reality we would have to rely on various scientific authorities and since various scientists disagree it would potentially be like making them popes of various theories. Again, I am not saying we should abandon science or rationality but that a scientist has no more a right to be a ruler then a priest. I will generally believe a scientist over a priest and do not see any conflict between science and spirituality, but I think we should always be ready to update our belief system according to the best possible data, which in the material world is generally best achieved by science. What is really important though is that people who advocate Anarchism understand that just because someone has a religious belief, even to some degree dogmatic beliefs doesn't mean they cant function in an Anarchist society and so long as such people are not forcing themselves on others, then it would be elitist to reject such ignorant people. Anarchism is much more about eliminating hierarchy then it is about making everyone have the same cosmologies and so until hierarchy is abolished, worrying about how congruent Anarchism is with the private religious beliefs of individuals is a pretty irrelevant task. Atheism is part of classical Anarchist culture, not an inherent part of Anarchist practice and so to demand everyone who calls themselves an Anarchist also be an atheist is quite hypocritical.

When we incorporate Anarchism with an allowance towards uncertainty or chaotic implications we allow it to be less rigid and dogmatic, less authoritarian than say if we allowed psychiatrists to use science to impose their realities on to people. After all any spirituality is technically psychosis according to materialist positivism because materialists are in denial of anything science hasn't gotten around to measuring yet. Demanding Anarchism be a purely materialist philosophy sets the stage for all kinds of rational hierarchies and ultimately dictatorships, not to mention that considering the vast majority of people in the world have at least some vague spiritual inclination, it is incredibly impractical to expect everyone willingly become an atheist, especially when so many people have otherwise unexplainable experiences. However any Anarchist religion worth the name would have to allow materialist atheists into it if they treated others as equals, luckily Dysnomia is beyond the rule or law of tradition and common sense, as well as Webster's definition that says someone must believe in a divinity to be part of a religion. (Buddhism is another example) In fact some of the best students (whether they knew it or not) of Dysnomia have been atheists, thank you again Bakunin, Proudhon, Kropotkin, etc.

Look at life in the way that seems right to you and don't be intimidated by outside forces, learn to trust your own judgement, especially in terms of spirituality. You are the only authority on what is right for you, not that you should ignore those around you, but understand that we are all lacking in knowledge and we should not shy away from learning about things just because they are esoteric and "fringe." This book is just spurious fiction, none of it is true and so I can say whatever I want without it having to have any truth in reality, you can't blame me if this is wrong, it's only a story, an author doesn't have to have characters who say things that the author agrees with, take responsibility for your own beliefs, even if something in here is true. Is that a cop out on my personal responsibility for free speech? Well maybe, but I just told you to not take what I say seriously, so if you can't do that then you aren't following all of what I say and so you can't get mad at me if my directions don't work out for you.

I definitely do think the hierarchical organization of religion should be abolished, it is in fact completely antithetical to my spiritual and political views. This isn't to say Anarchists should go on a crusade to kill all Christians or something, or even that a Christian couldn't live in a non hierarchical way (there has and is Christian traditions such as the Quakers which do just that) but that anyone who truly wants to connect with the divine cannot look to a middle man. Clearly those who cannot even accept responsibility for themselves cannot achieve spiritual understanding until they grow up and stop depending on authorities to tell them what to do and believe and if they can truly do this they will naturally become Anarchist. Paganism is great, but all too often we start to take metaphors too literally and so we lose much of the meaning, not to say the gods and goddesses aren't as real as you or me, but that we are not as real as we think and all real spiritual truths are so profound they cannot be taken superficially and only literally. Reading a book will never guarantee ever lasting happiness in heaven, you have to DIY.

I hate the idea of religions in many ways and if all is love then it's hard to really say what sin is, I generally go by the Gnostic idea that ignorant actions are the problem, not the breaking of some divine law. To me what is important is the understanding that allows you to correct your mistakes rather than feeling guilty and repentant. It seems to me the more Abrahamic concepts of sin and divine commandment as law, as well as notions of institutional religion in general are incredibly ignorant and contradictory to Anarchism and so if an Anarchist religion did exist it would be about as "sinful" as you could get. In the kind of Anarchism where all are able to do as they please as long as they aren't infringing on others right to do as they please, to set rules as law bestowed by some authority, especially ones that condemn you to "hell" is pretty sinful. This would be the kind of sin that would send you to a personal hell of either slavery, or a hell of megalomaniacal arrogance and egoism. As dogmatic religion attempts to say their way is the right way for everyone, it is hardly Anarchist and so such authoritarian attitudes and demanding proselytizing would be sinful in this paradoxical Anarchist religion.

As dictating what is the one true Anarchism is for all is essentially the same as dictating what is spiritual sin, it is essentially “sinful” in this religion. So it occurs to me that I should commit the sin of creating an Anarchist religion to avoid this greater sin of denying peoples right to do so and to help point out to others this trap of Anarchist fundamentalism. To say there should be no overall ideology for Anarchism is itself an ideology and so to avoid putting it above everything else we could have a religion of non hierarchical awareness which practices universal love for all things and events by achieving the right personal interpretation. It would be ignorant to set up a divine law that says a person cannot do ignorant things like create religions, so to avoid the sin of denying people's right to be ignorant I should create a religion of Anarchism, an ignorant action which will demonstrate freedom from sin and cure me of my ignorance about the problems that come from such actions. It will also point out the inherent contradictions of authoritarian religion by exemplifying how ridiculous it is, so that in this way it is a religion founded on “sin.” Total Anarchy and Dysnomian lawlessness demands breaking the rule that says you cannot make a religion out of Anarchy and so while such a concept is ripe for abuse by the ignorant, they will eventually learn, if not by their own wisdom then through their mistakes.

The etymology of the word “heresy” comes from the Greek “haireisis” which means to choose, in this way Anarchist religion must also continuously strive to be heretical, even to itself. Through the pursuit of heresy it will never become stagnant or dead, it goes to follow it will become increasingly paradoxical, but then perhaps that is the surest sign of its truth. People who put their definition of Anarchism above all other concepts have essentially made it in to their religion, they are fundamentalist Anarchists, so for me to say we should make a religion out of it is heresy to them and so since I am not in denial about my religious attitude towards Anarchy I should encourage heresy so that I do not commit the sin of dogmatism and hypocrisy about my Anarchy. All must become heretics because all must choose what to believe, even if you are given real facts it is up to you to interpret them, up to you to decide how to implement them and up to you to pay attention in the first place. So it is that all beliefs are in the etymological sense heretical, even if you are a totally orthodox fundamentalist of some kind.

Dysnomia wants to be romanced, by anyone, but in a very real and matter of fact way, love can be dangerous and exhilarating and with the right person anything you want and so for example she is the muse of Robin Hood and whispers the inspirations for all children who rebel. Luckily as this is a true religion, it is a joke and to spread this kind of religion would be sinful to its own commandments, unless maybe that is what you and your converts choose to do? To attempt to convert someone who doesn't want it would also be sinful and I am not joking when I say I think that would be a very ignorant idea. I do like the idea of this religion simply because it is so paradoxical and especially because it is heretical, both to religious people and to atheist Anarchists. Clearly I have no choice but to demand the right to heresy and sin and break through the illusions of the dogma that a person has total logical consistency. While cognitive dissonance is to be avoided when you can, it is illogical and unrealistic to think anyone has ever actually done this totally, or ever could while using abstractions. So a level of cognitive dissonance must be recognized and in some way accepted consciously as a component of a persons maximum level of objectivity. (at least while employing Aristotelian logic or those derisive things we call abstractions) The goddess Dysnomia to me is a being beyond all bounds and limitations, all apparent contradictions and all divisions, that is to say she is lawless, to me this includes the laws of physics, linguistics, rationality and all boundaries created by various dualities or any other thing that she does not wish to adhere to, all things she does are according to her will as she is pure Anarchy.

Some Anarchists no doubt feel that lawlessness is not the same as Anarchism and in certain cultural contexts this is true, certainly the ignorant mainstream culture will be misled by such words as “lawlessness.” However it is certainly not Anarchism if people are imposing laws on others and pretty well all of this aversion to “lawlessness” is really due to the authoritarian conditioning about this concept which has been placed on people. However she is not a divinity who would subject others to what she dislikes, that being authoritarian behaviour, limitations, laws and rules that others do not wish to follow, she leads only by example and through those she inspires, gives some advice on how we may create a happier world, if we choose.

It is true she is a goddess of Chaos and while Anarchists are again and again denying Anarchism's similarity to Chaos, this is in many ways because people do not really understand the term Chaos, or any of its traditional implications or meanings, or even its scientific meanings. This concept so hated by control freaks is really not so bad, in fact Chaos contains all order and more, we were always in it we just didn't realize it, in fact there is no way to not be in Chaos, especially since nobody not even scientists can honestly claim to totally understand any universal order that they believe in. If Chaos is reality, than Anarchism is the closest culture to it, the most in line with the truth and so Anarchists should really take this as a compliment. While it is probably closer to say Anarchism is each individuals personal order working with others in an equal fashion, it is about as close to Chaos as you can get, without maybe being silent on the subject. So while some fool may wish to construe Anarchism as "lawlessness" and "Chaos" in a pejorative manner, they are really just pointing out their own ignorance and fear of real freedom. Chaos is not "bad" since "good" and "bad" are types of order and so I think its important to point out that Chaos is not something we should avoid considering. Now I do understand that me associating Anarchism with such memes could potentially create bad press, confuse the bourgeois and play in to the propaganda of the establishment. However, the fact is the word Anarchism is already overloaded with negative cultural baggage and so Anarchists will probably need a new word to spread their ideas anyway, also their is no such thing as bad press and so there is no point in hiding. Anarchists can call themselves libertarian socialists or whatever label they prefer if its that much of a problem, or call me some wingnut wackjob if they so desire, really it is just more of my heresy and so I am not going to worry about it. For freedom means equality, humanitarian vision and individuality, it cannot exist in a world of dualist authoritarianism, even if it means having your sensibilities shocked and challenged by some strange rebel, this is how we become more creative and independent, drinking it all in, like the gnosis that the cup bearer Dysnomia provides.

Though Dysnomia may inspire some who show her love and even those who don't, no matter how inspired someone would be, she would always be beyond the limits of any piece of art or articulation. In this way nobody can claim to speak for her, nobody is an authority on her and nobody can force their views about her as this would be a complete lack of understanding. Because of all this there could never be a single definitive text about her, no central core of beliefs that was any truer than contrary beliefs, no orthodoxy and no one that could act as a middle man to her, in fact any attempt to do so would show nothing but their ignorance for all those who love her are heretics about her. This book is written in sin describing her only so as to avoid the sin of following religious commandments and authorities, even those in a Dysnomian religion and so I am no authority, I am merely encouraging you to form your own awareness about her. Dysnomia is so beyond limitations that she is capable of contradicting herself without being trapped by language in to a state of cognitive dissonance. In her efforts to abolish the concept of authoritarian hierarchies and the rules they inevitably imply, she has inspired a religion to be created about her, though of course it is set up in accordance with Anarchism, the catch is that it is up to you to figure out what that means. "Nothing is true and everything is permitted" but this does not mean you should not be careful about what you do and think. So long as a person does not set themselves above others let a "fool persist in their folly" for through experience they will gain wisdom and learn their true will.

The Story of Dysnomia

It has been revealed to me through the ultimate reality of the imagination that Dysnomia has been around for all time and beyond and before and she will be ever after and in between. At one time the people of the Earth knew her well and she would visit with them often, showing them how they might be more free and in return they gave her love. Compared to today, humans were very good at following her example, in that time people were quite happy to work together as equals and in a way that ensured people had plenty of freedom and limited any rules or law. This was the time of prehistoric tribalism, however things were not perfect in the universe, not everything was in accordance with her way and the people did not realize the full beauty of her love. In some places there were even some laws and rules as Dysnomia, not wishing to set herself above anyone, graciously allowed the god of law and imposed social norms or customs, a being called Nomos to have whatever influence that the people desired of him. Both Dysnomia and Nomos knew that as long as the people knew the truth about her which was shown to them by the goddess Aletheia, that they would for the most part love Dysnomia more than Nomos. Because of this Nomos grew jealous, he desperately wanted to have greater power over the people as this urge is the very core of his being, to control all that he can no matter what. He doesn't really know what the point of such control is, or when it will ever make him satisfied, but he knows he wants control and any alternative is his definition of evil.

Nomos was not alone in his lust for more power, because Dysnomia was so popular in the world there were a number of Deities who held little to no sway, in fact those who loved Dysnomia refused to worship any god or goddess who demanded it of them. Among the disenfranchised gods were Zelus the deity of jealousy, envy, emulation and conformity, but there was also Eulogia who is the goddess of propaganda, prestige and glamour, marketing and public relations, manipulative and misleading language and purposely fallacious reasoning and deceit. Eulogia is also the patroness of lawyers so that they may use the language of legalese expertly to beguile others and get their way, or otherwise ensnare people in the law such as through contract law. There was also Ponus who is toil, slavery and wage labour in general, Penia, who is poverty, need, deficiency and wantonness who was often seen along with Columbia who is capitalism, greed, selfishness, monetary exploitation and the privatization of nature. Adikia the goddess of injustice and psychopathic and cutthroat behaviour was especially eager to spread her ways, Phobus who is fear was among them as well, but the last was the most insidious apart from Nomos himself and is named Oligarchia, who is the divinity of hierarchy and rulership, the one who makes us desire to be obedient and subservient, but also give us the desire to impose our will on others.

Since the people of Earth loved Dysnomia so much, they attempted to follow her suggestions of an Anarchist society, but at this time there was still through people's free will, some influence by those less loving deities I mentioned. This was the time of tribalism, it was not utopia but humanity was still trying to decide what to do with itself. This went on for quite awhile but eventually all these unsatisfied deities led by Nomos decided they would find a way to destroy the influence of Dysnomia. Bound by their mutual desires, at the suggestion of Eulogia they decided to present themselves in a much more favourable manor, they decided they would use a euphemism to present themselves to the humans under the guise of being the creators of what they would call "Eunomia," or good civil order. They and their followers would call themselves Eunomians, but would in fact be chasing a delusional lie to perpetuate all that Nomos and his gang could dream of, in fact creating tyranny in place of harmony.

Knowing that Dysnomia would never impose herself on humanity, Eulogia had an idea, they would conspire to keep Aletheia from showing the people what Dysnomia was really all about. The Eunomians knew that if this happened then they could use their power to twist information given to humanity in their favour and Dysnomia's inspiration would be all but destroyed. So it was decided, the deities came together and organized into a strict hierarchy, then they formulated a plan and after some time they made their way to the goddess Aletheia so that they could work their magick on her.

Nomos asked the goddess, “Do you know the true nature of Dysnomia?”

To which Aletheia replied “of course I do, I know all truth.”

Then with a mocking tone Phobus challenged “then speak the truth of Dysnomia to us”.

Aletheia thought for a moment and then said to them “Dysnomia is beyond words and in this way I am unable to share the core of her truth.”

Zelus smiled and whispered to Aletheia “she is beyond your understanding, you do not comprehend the truth of her, for she is much more powerful than you.” Seeing some element of truth in this Aletheia was infected by the power of these deities and she became disturbed.

Penia saw that this was the time to speak up saying “you are filled with a terrible need if you do not know the truth of Dysnomia, perhaps you do not even know any truth at all?”

Ponus with a sly grin suggested “the only way for you to speak the truth of Dysnomia will be to get it from the goddess herself, you must journey to her in the underground beyond the river Lethe, ask the goddess to break the law that says she is beyond words, for she is the only one with the power to do so.”

Oligarchia jumped in and added “once she speaks to you, you will know her truth and then you will be more powerful than her.” Knowing the truth of their motivations Aletheia was conflicted, but overcome by their powers she knew she must learn the words which are the truth of Dysnomia if she is to be whole. Thus having been influenced by the power of the Eunomians she sought out her own true nature by going where she knew humans would not have access to her. They all entered Hades and came to the river Lethe and in its centre was a small barren island with nothing but a cave on it, while on the pier in front of them was a boat and on it stood the ferryman Charon. Charon had previously been busted by Nomos for smoking a joint and was punished by being made to work overtime on all of Hades rivers and not just Styx.

Phobus warned Aletheia, “we all know that whosoever touches the water of the river Lethe will forget everything they know and so you must take the ferry of Charon across so that your mind may stay in tact.” Aletheia boarded the ship knowing the truth of all but Dysnomia, but still being affected by the Eunomians black magick she felt incomplete and filled with desire, for she knew also that her truth would always lack a crucial aspect if it did not include Dysnomia.

As she boarded the ferry, Columbia handed Charon some money and much more than usual, at the same time Adikia quietly threatened, “maroon Aletheia on the island or we shall throw you in the river and imprison you in your amnesiac state.” So controlled by the magick of Eunomians, Charon grimly nodded slightly and then pushed off his ferry, he then rowed to the island and forced Aletheia out of the boat and made his way back to the shore.

Stranded Aletheia cried out to the Eunomians “you have brought about your own doom!” When people do not have access to Aletheia they naturally start to forget the truth and at that moment a huge wave came down the river, torrents of waves splashed out frothing and foaming as the river expanded in width.

Phobus cried back to her knowing they still needed Aletheia for their purposes, “take shelter in the cave or you will forget all that you are and know.” Seeing the truth of this Aletheia took shelter in the cave not wishing to come outside for fear of amnesia. Then just as Aletheia did this a final wave came down the river and smashed the boat Charon had used up against some rocks, thus the boat was destroyed so that no one could rescue her. The Eunomians seeing this cackled to each other and left her stranded and imprisoned in the cave. When humanity realized Aletheia had been separated from them they panicked and in their panic and ignorance (due to being separated from Aletheia) they did not know the power of the river Lethe. So in a desperate rescue attempt most flung themselves into the river and promptly forgot all they had known of Aletheia or even why they were in the water. In such a state they were easily manipulated by Eulogia and the rest of the Eunomians, they were told that the Eunomians were the servants of Aletheia and so the humans consented to being utterly ruled to all the whims of their new gods, losing access to Hades due to the laws of Nomos.

Luckily some humans had seen what was becoming of those who rushed to the river in search of Aletheia and had stood back, still remembering Dysnomia they didn't believe the lies spread by the Eunomians. Many of these humans were still loyal to Dysnomia and desperately tried to give unfiltered information about her, but through Phobus, Adikia, Eulogia and the others, almost all humans eventually began to hate the idea that Dysnomia was beyond their official forms of truth. So, in their amnesia, most people came to believe that Aletheia had declared Dysnomia could never really exist on the planet, that to even try and have her on Earth would only cause conflict and problems for the new system. Then Adikia and the others convinced the amnesiac humans to turn against those few who still had some love for Dysnomia and so they murdered all those they could find who would not bow down. The Eunomians sought to imprison the souls of the anarchists in a block of stone, and by this they planned to keep the souls of the anarchists from reincarnating on Earth. Seeing what was about to happen Dysnomia appeared on Earth one last time and came to save those souls loyal to her, she rescued them and took them with her as she went. However the Eunomians knew that when their own followers died, the souls would be theirs and so it is these souls go to the cube prison of the Eunomians.

It was then that Dysnomia decided to permanently stay in her realm in the underground, as she was no longer wanted by the humans on the Earth she respected their wishes and left them to the Eunomians. As I said, before the flood of the river Lethe it was the time of tribalism and so some of the people who did not rush in to the river Lethe were not Anarchist or lovers of Dysnomia, these people did not rush to save her because they did not love her, they were what we might call today criminals, so that while some criminals have a few Anarchist tendencies, most are simply being selfish. Due to their massive egos these people became as giants, taking some influence from the Eunomians, they wanted to dominate others and live off them as warlords, but generally didn't want to be ruled themselves and so at times they rebelled against the Eunomians, other times they worked with them. These giants spread across the world to find people they could control, but fearing the might of the Eunomian laws they often hid in the darkness of the underworld. On the other hand, the spirits of those Anarchists murdered for their loyalty to Dysnomia still live on, for the goddess took them to her underground realm deep within Hades where they became the Sidhe, the good folk or Fae. There in the underground they live in Anarchy, but from time to time reincarnate as humans who join various counter cultures or resistance groups. However due to Eunomian tyranny, when they incarnate they must take refuge in the same underworld as the giants and so both groups live on the Earth in that underworld. Dysnomia saw all this knowing that one day, after enough experience the humans would realize the words of Aletheia were being twisted and they would no longer want the Eunomians. Dysnomia knew that when that time came, the people would want total lawlessness and pure Anarchy and then she would come back so that all might know her directly.

Some of Sidhe were more bitter at those humans domesticated by the Eunomians than others and you can see this in cultures they join or the race of Sidhe which they became. While in the spirit world of Dysnomia's underground all the Sidhe can change their form at will and there is a far greater variety than I will go in to here, those who we know as trolls are in human form punks, while the elves become hippies, dwarves become metal heads, dark elves become goths and the pixies all hopped up on flower nectar become ravers. (the pixies kept annoying everyone with their music so they have a more isolated area to live in) Finally some became emotional cripples, hypocritical and selfish, blaming everyone else for all their troubles and these are the goblins, the ones who become full blown addicts and drunks in human form. It is true however that potentially all of the Sidhe can degenerate in to goblins if they are not careful and yet they can also clean up and free themselves from that state everlasting desire. What I call Dysnomia's realm of the dead is the "underground," so that when the Sidhe reincarnated, they and the giants created the "underworld" from which they could resist the Eunomians on Earth. So while a soul largely forgets about Dysnomia when it reincarnates, to various degrees the Sidhe continue to live their spiritual ways. Through the underworld they can live in the human world, yet retreat to whatever kind of Anarchy they can remember or figure out in their respective communities, but given they still needed to live in the human world, they are often quite limited in their ability to do this.

When the Eunomians saw Dysnomia's influence was departing for the underground, they rejoiced in victory as best they could, for their hearts cannot truly know joy and they said to one another "come, let us build us a city and a tower." It was there on top of the entrance to Hades, the way to that abyss of forgetfulness that is the river Lethe, that they built their establishment which they called the Mendacium. This establishment was a black iron tower which nearly reached the heavens and in the centre of each floor was an aperture and a pipe running through it all the way from the roof to the island of Aletheia. This works so that the Eunomians can see and hear Aletheia and block out all her knowledge for everyone else and so at the top of the tower, through their sinister trickery they fashioned a statue of Aletheia so that they might bring humanity into error. This statue was almost perfect except it had no feet as they could not figure out how to make it stand on its own and so at the bottom of its legs is that same cube they used to steal souls, an uncarved block of stone. However, since it was at the top of the tower no one but the Eunomians could see this and they told the humans it was really Aletheia, so that their words would seem to come from her. As the tower covered the entrance, the people eventually forgot they ever had access to the underground and so while some traces of Dysnomia's influence remained on Earth, the people had no context for what it meant. This tower then was the centre of their empire, a monument to their will for power, but imagined by the people to be the establishment or premises of objective truth in her highest form.

By changing their names so that no one would know who they are, the Eunomians convinced humans that they were in fact good and benevolent. Oligarchia organized the amnesiac humans into hierarchies, blatantly controlling them, using them to wipe out all forms of knowledge which had come directly from Aletheia and not from the Eunomians. Knowing that without a kernel of truth their lies would quickly be revealed, the Eunomians listened from the pipe on the aperture at each floor. In this way the Eunomians twisted all that Aletheia said so that they would know what was happening in the world and could shape their propaganda accordingly. So it was, through the various influences of the Eunomians humanity became enslaved, listening to the proclamations from the top of the tower they thought the Eunomians must be right because their civilization became so powerful.

Oligarchia served as figurehead, but it was through the effects of Nomos that humanity accepted the custom of governments and so he mislead them most in to surrendering all their power and living constrained and at odds with each other. Through the power of the other Eunomians humans were tricked into accepting this willingly so that Dysnomia would not personally intervene and overthrow their rulers. No longer having any access to Aletheia, almost all humans eventually became dependent on the Eunomian establishment and their way of life. If there were any problems they blamed Dysnomia saying that she was cruel and selfish, unstable and violent, they even said that Dysnomia claimed she was above everyone else, even Aletheia and that nobody could love her or know her. The Eunomians attempted to enforce their laws but the giants often broke them, so the Eunomians blamed Dysnomia for influencing them, but in reality these giants were the humans most like the Eunomians and due to their authoritarianism, they often fought each other as they attempted to conspire for power. So then those who resisted no longer knowing much of Dysnomia were often no more than criminals, still infected by the Eunomians but with their own selfish games in mind and so any disobedience was wiped out and murdered by humans under the influence of Adikia.

As time went on the people started to believe that Dysnomia never really even existed among humans, or if she did, only when turmoil and violence were present. People believed that without being told what to do, humans would automatically turn in to murderous hoarders of wealth, even though time and again this is the kind of thing the Eunomians would convince them to do. This is what is known today as the beginning of real hierarchy and organized governments and religion. Zelus ensured people were constantly vying for social status while Eulogia ensured that everyone thought they were free and that it was all for the best. Nomos of course created the laws, rules and customs that would serve as the ritual worship to these gods of ignorance and so collectively the Eunomians set up a theocracy of totalitarianism. Through Ponus, Penia and Columbia the monetary and economic systems were created and humanity became preoccupied by unnecessary labour and trying to out profit and enslave each other and this was all just to survive in the new regime. The Eunomians wanted to create the illusion that capitalism was freedom, so as Columbia liked to impersonate benevolent goddesses, with the help of Eulogia and in a cruel kind of mockery, Columbia even took on some of the clothes and symbols of Dysnomia and so became known as Libertas. Adikia and Phobos under the command of Oligarchia enforced the Eunomian tyranny, setting up the first real militaries and police forces, the government bureaucracies and power structures.

So, from their black iron tower, the Eunomians ruled over the humans, commanding them to create a labyrinth which would from that time on be the home of all humanity. With little to no memory of the world before, the humans taught their children to mistake their prison's dead and artificial forms for the Earth and life within the prison for freedom. Nomos supplied the building materials for the labyrinth, pumping out bricks of litigium, a form of matter with the property that makes humans distracted and fragmented in their perception and mind. Eventually the humans created high brick walls and on each brick they inscribed the Eunomians authoritarian decrees believing them to be the words of Aletheia. As time went on the prison spread across the world and all of nature was turned in to the property of the Eunomians and so was called Thanatopolis. In this way, the culture of the Eunomians became taken for granted as it was all the new generations would know, humanity was left lost and shuffling aimlessly around the labyrinth, obsessively reading the walls of their prison over and over, looking for clues to the nature of Aletheia and generally moving in circles. All roads lead to the tower, all roads are surrounded on both sides by walls of litigium and so as there is only one way to get anywhere in the organizational structure of Thanatopolis, all streets are called Wall Street for the ones who set up the walls, the ones who now own everything. From the 4 directions surrounding the iron tower were created 4 watchtowers from which the Eunomians and their servants, acting as guards would look down on the slaves over which they were given dominion. These guards would judge each action according to Eunomian standards and primarily under the direction of Zelus they make sure none escape and none deviate from the conformity of slave life. These servants which stood guard were called "rulers" and given their similar nature were recruited from the giants, so that under the Eunomians they became the first human governments and enforcers of hierarchy under the guise of morality and family values. When doing works of black magick they would invoke the 8 Eunomians as one form under Nomos and so it is Nomos would rule through them over any "person" of which the name was known. That is a human's corporate servitor was but one of many in legions of vast hierarchies which were organized according to the Eunomians henchmen and so when giving orders they would exclaim, "I am the lord of thy governments whose name is called Octinomos!" So it is, humans relying on rulers to provide them with truth will never be told the truth of Dysnomia, or anything else that does not suit the establishment which rules under the guise of Eunomia.

When the Eunomians imprisoned Aletheia, humanity lost one of it's greatest allies and friends, it's greatest source of wisdom and truth, not just because much of the original knowledge of Aletheia was lost, but because when that happened they turned their backs on that which loves them most, the goddess Dysnomia. Dysnomia, she who wants us to be free, she who pleads with us to listen, but refuses to use her limitless power to make us love her, or even know her when we refuse. For although she could reverse the effect from the waters of Lethe, the people will themselves to be ignorant through their love of the Eunomians and their desire to be like their masters, so while Dysnomia can do almost anything, she cannot force herself on anyone. Dysnomia lives now in the underground, out of sight of humans beyond the river Lethe by the fountainhead of the river Mnemosyne, the river of memory, waiting with a cup of its waters to provide anamnesis and break the spell of the river Lethe for those who are willing.

Given that the world created by the Eunomians is a lie it cannot bring lasting happiness, indeed it does much to destroy happiness in general and so it is humans who are disaffected with Eunomian rule, those who come to hate the establishment eventually see through the guise of their manipulators. These people become troubled and when they become troubled they start to be filled with anomie, those who continue to explore the nature of this anomie will be astonished for as they no longer will themselves to be like the Eunomians or under their control, they gain a will to be with Dysnomia. Dysnomia then makes herself known to the willing, she make's them invisible to the Eunomians and the watchtowers by showing them the way to the tunnels underneath the labyrinth prison. Through these tunnels created by the Sidhe dwellers of the underworld, they can bypass many of the walls and go on a pilgrimage to the secret entrance of Hades which is beneath the Mendacium. From there the willing can enter the underground and find the shores of the river Lethe and also Charon, who having been angered by the Eunomians will gladly and covertly provide a means of traversing the underground in order to visit Dysnomia in her homeland. There in the realm of anarkhos, Dysnomia will offer them the cup of anarkhos filled with the waters of Mnemosyne and the pilgrims will remember their inherent freedom and through a means I will explain later, become autonomous sovereigns of themselves, recognizing equality with all and recognizing the Eunomians for what they are.

From the time a person drinks from the cup of anarkhos they will no longer consent to be ruled in any way and they will know what true Anarchy and community is and they will be much better able to recognize the kernels of truth sent by Aletheia, even when distorted by the Eunomians. For Dysnomia to return to the world she requires the world to want her back, there can be no Anarchist leaders and so we must all lead ourselves, only we must inspire others to do the same. A person who is fully autonomous has shown their will is to work with Dysnomia, to have her on the Earth and so she will use her limitless power to intervene on these peoples behalf to help make them immune from the influences and machinations of the Eunomians. An autonomous person then gains access to all of the underworld and can help to expand it and it's tunnels, help to make others who are still ignorant and lost in far distant regions of the labyrinth more aware of this underworld and the passages which allow humans to bypass the walls. Now being able to recognize the kernels of truth sent by Aletheia we will use our autonomy to find our way through to the centre of the labyrinth and with Dysnomia's help, we can get past the defences of the Eunomians and storm the gates of the black iron tower. From there we can climb to the top of the tower to hear for ourselves the truth directly and so be able to create explanations and cultures which are not distorted and make histories not determined by the conquering tyrants. Once inside the tower, for each bit of truth we learn, we chip away at the Eunomians tower and the statue of Aletheia and so it becomes more noticeably disfigured and it helps others question their state and so become free.

Upon storming the tower through the will for Anarchy we will be able to help restore communication with Aletheia and help humanity to learn to love Dysnomia again in a way that is not forced. However since most people are so controlled by the Eunomians and since the truth of Dysnomia cannot really be put in to words, when it is put bluntly before them in most cases they will not believe their view of truth is but a pale simulacrum. So to help them recognize the truth we must sometimes resort to poetic licence and more subtle forms persuasion, telling our stories and weaving our metaphors through yarns so that others may follow our example like a thread, so as to encourage anomie. We can do this only by chipping away at their establishment one piece at a time, each contributing our own portion of truth to the tower because the more examples of real truth people see, the more the edifice of the Mendacium will crumble and eventually, their statue will fall to the ground and be plain for all to see. The individual may be free upon drinking from the cup of anarkhos, but only by searching out Aletheia and restoring our first hand knowledge of her and helping her to escape will the Eunomians be totally vanquished from the Earth, only then can all humans live in Dysnomia's Anarchy. Each human who loves Dysnomia, who hears of the concepts of Anarchy can choose to search out Aletheia so that they may clear Dysnomia's name and bring her real teachings to the people.

If a person tries to do this without having drunk from the cup and becoming autonomous, they may still have distorted ideas, unconscious Eunomian influences, however even then, in such searching these people will create anomie for themselves, anomie which leads them to Dysnomia.

Once we have found the kernels of Aletheia through our own means, we must help to restore her and get to know her through the processes of study and artistic and scholarly expression. As these things are achieved it is the duty of all those who succeed in storming the tower to listen and hear her messages and after chipping away at the statue and the tower of laws created in it's name, they can then replace the chips from the tower with the kernels they received. From this process the statue will eventually fall and the tower will be replaced by the kernels of truth, then all will be able to live in a truer and freer way. On that day the statue will lie in ruins and the souls imprisoned in the block of stone, along with those living on Earth, will all be free. As all will see the tower of truth for themselves, Dysnomia will be welcomed throughout the planet and the rule of the Eunomians will be as a bad dream. By this we are not reforming the hierarchy of the Eunomians, but exposing their ignorance and preventing them from using the usual means of manipulation, then returning to the world of humans. Upon finding some kernel of Aletheia a person can then express it in the labyrinth by spinning yarns, or creating other forms of propaganda and art which they will place in the labyrinth for those humans still in an amnesiac state. If a person in a state of anomie should happen to come across such threads of yarn it will jog their memory, it will remind them of real freedom and they can follow it, follow it in to the underworld. Upon discovering the tunnels and becoming accustomed to the darkness they have been taught to fear, they may learn to navigate the underworld. Eventually as they come to understand the underworld they will be filled with enough anomie, that they will find the underground and work up the courage to go in and meet Dysnomia.

The process of chipping away at the tower begins after a human leaves the underground of Dysnomia as a newly awakened autonomous individual. As each human goes back to the Earth and the labyrinth they will pass through the foundation of the tower and they will see that it too is made of bricks of litigium and on each one is the name of each person or citizen of the empire. So that as the human passes through they can choose to remove the brick which holds their name and so cease to be a "person" and instead they will be a free spirit on the land who cannot be controlled by the rulers. Others may choose to stay a citizen for the purposes of infiltration, but this is a different tactic which is filled with obstacles of its own. However all autonomous beings work to spread Aletheia so that all may know Dysnomia and those who are in anomie will find it easier and easier to enter the underworld as it expands.

The Eunomians cause much pain and unhappiness and in even this there is hope, for this will eventually cause humans to not want them. Those who continue through this anomie, a person who can stand against the tide of conformity, they will eventually find peace and learn to love and want Dysnomia in their lives. When any person knows of the existence of the mysteries of Dysnomia they can seek her out consciously, making their wanderings through the labyrinth much easier now that they know what their goal is. When they truly want her and live by her ways (especially by engaging in direct action) they will surely find her and drink from the cup of anarkhos, from that point on that person will have the knowledge of anarkhos and freedom from law. Then they will eat of the fruit of freedom and become autonomous outlaws and will understand they must do whatever they can to reconcile the lies of the Eunomians for the rest of humanity. If we can do that, then we will all see Dysnomia can be everywhere around us and we can all gain autonomy. She is waiting to be invited within, always helping us to know true freedom, joy and awareness. Those who know the truth of Dysnomia and love and live with her knowledge, free of the Eunomian influence will likely be persecuted by those they mean to help, those ignorant souls controlled by their rulers. Unfortunately much more dangerous than the Eunomians are the ignorant masses themselves, willing slaves who give them power and believe life will always be controlled by tyrants and know only authoritarian propaganda. These are the people who resent the idea that we can truly be free and instead prefer some abstract limited truth presented to them from on high like poison.

Knowing the state that is called the world and having refused to directly impose herself on humanity, Dysnomia saw that she was outnumbered and so she gave birth to a family who would help to guide people by their very nature to experiencing the truth of herself, to know Dysnomia for what she is. Due to the propaganda of the Eunomians humans may not always recognize Dysnomia's love through them, but because sometimes some people unconsciously recognize the kernels of truth sent by Aletheia, people have loved what these divinities represent and so have invited them in to their lives and sometimes they manage to bring some aspect of the message of Anarchism to the exploited. Through example and patient teaching to those who would hear, they each give valuable lessons on who Dysnomia truly is and help us through the labyrinth to experience anarkhos and from then on, they help us to express the true teachings of Aletheia. The closest thing there is to “worship” of Dysnomia will be through direct action and activism and through overcoming despots, making an egalitarian society where no one holds law and authority over another. She does not ask to be held above anyone but asks for love as that is what she gives. She only has two requests, that no one place laws on others and that nobody stands by while others are held captive by laws against their will. She and her children impose no laws but act according to their nature and show through example what is the path to freedom. So then her way is to love all people equally, including yourself, and as one of her disciples put it, “Do not lay down any rules beyond what I appointed you, and do not give a law like the lawgiver lest you be constrained by it.”

Dysnomia had her children in the following way, one day while contemplating the plight of humanity and the beauty of true freedom she thought, “the humans are so blind to many aspects of Anarchy, I must have help to teach them the truth. I will give birth to children to show them the things which might help free the people from their rulers.” So on that she decided to give birth to them.

Seeing how the rich controlled the poor and the brutality of governments towards their mystified subjects, she decided they needed a goddess to help them reacquire their rightful wealth. With a raised fist she foretold “My first child will be a pirate goddess of shoplifting, bank robbers and wealth redistribution, so that all those in need may get what has been stolen from them in the false name of personal profit. She will give courage to all who stand up against their oppressors but also help to evade all police and oppressors should they need to, her name will be Rubix.” This is one tough Goddess, but filled with an adventurous and righteous spirit, heroic in her disobedience to those who would steal through the guise of “private property.” She especially likes to get the money of bankers, the government and rich for she does not believe in taking from those who are in need, but delights in taking from those who hoard wealth and exploit others. Carry her sigil on you for protection when liberating things, she will help to conceal you from those who do the bidding of the oligarchs, she will also help in all other aspects of wealth redistribution and taking what does not really belong to anyone. You must not test her for the sake of it, don't be careless or sloppy but trust her and do what is right, work with her for she can increase your skills, but don't depend on her alone. If you do get caught she can aid in evading your pursuers, she can also aid in getting you off the hook. This is the sigil of Rubix

Then Dysnomia thought of all the waste which humans make, she decided to have a son and proclaimed “he will be a dumpster diving god named Chompa” and he will help in all matters to do with dumpster diving. You can call upon him to help unlock locked dumpsters, help get items, help keep the dumpster owners oblivious and help to keep divers safe, he will also help to keep food from rotting in the trash and keep it as clean as possible. Chompa was born looking like a shaggy monster covered in brown fur with yellow gnarled teeth, though with a bit of demented and friendly grin, he has a huge underbite and a pushed up nose, he also wears goggles which act as x ray flash lights in the night, allowing him to see through dumpsters so that he can see in the garbage better. He has a big heart and loves all those who put trash in the garbage and he loves to help his friends find just what they need.

Chompa also decided that for all the dumpsters in the world he would have helpers, he created a race of dumpster fairies he named the Groydel, they look much like himself only smaller. Chompa is just big enough to eat a dumpster in his normal state but can change sizes and he can sometimes be found hiding in small pieces of trash. These furry creatures have big mouths and heads, often with an under bite, they have bat wings and a rat or raccoons tail. Indeed they were created from the rats and raccoons who loved Chompa, they loved garbage so much they died not wanting to leave and so they became the helpers of Chompa and help all those who love to dumpster dive.

Chompa and his Groydel love real trash, that is the trash that cannot be recycled or composted and that nobody would ever want, they then try and break down this real trash and make it biodegradable. They love to make people happy and so they try to get rid of what is truly unwanted so that it does not hurt nature which they also love and so they do not really love the trash, they love preserving nature by eliminating trash. For this reason they hate when people litter or throw things away that do not belong in the trash, if you do these kinds of things they are less likely to help you, but because of this they love to help dumpster divers find things that they want and which should not have been thrown out. In this way, Chompa is a master Alchemist, a recycling transmuter of trash who also helps recyclers in their goals and for those who follow his mysteries they may even find within the dumpster the holy grail of the Celts, also known as the horn of plenty, that is the key to sustaining themselves indefinitely. To make Chompa and the Groydel happy is easy enough, simply offer a piece of real trash to a Dumpster, this is even better if its litter that you picked up, offer it to them in deep respect for they are helping to protect the Earth from garbage. They also like it when people dance a jig in front of or inside a dumpster, you can dance with a friend swinging around by the elbows in a circle lifting your knees up high.

Sing to them screaming in a raunchy raspy wretched but playful tone, “Oh I love sing and Dance with Chompa!... Please help me find what is really good! And if there are any Groydel listening, then I will get the items that I should!” This should be sung three times with Chompa's sigil out, this sigil is good to put on any dumpsters or gear you use for dumpster diving. Be sure to thank Chompa for whatever you receive. Here is Chompa's sigil

Quite pleased with herself Dysnomia realized that even with shoplifting and dumpster diving too many people were dependent on corrupt and unjust systems to supply themselves with the things they like and that they had very little way to express themselves. Just then an egg came out of Dysnomia's hand all by itself, little tentacles came out and began to grab items and tools that were around, the egg assembled various parts until it had made a body for itself out of these items. This third transgendered being spoke, “now that I have created myself I will be named Diyo and believe it or not I am the divinity of DIY or do it yourself ethic. I will help people to create things for themselves, to get off the grid and make crafts, I will help with learning new skills, inspiration, invention, imagination, art, creativity, motivation and determination, problem solving and functionality. I will help humanity to understand that they must stand on their own two feet and acquire freedom by doing it themselves.” Dysnomia smiled and welcomed her new child into her family.

Diyo is good for helping you to help yourself do all kinds of things from starting your own garden (guerrilla gardens, permaculture, entheogens Diyo is a master at working with plants) to fixing your clothes or your bike, or converting your vehicle to veggie oil or really making anything, s/he also helps to give people a sense of personal empowerment. Diyo's sigils can be put most anywhere that this kind of influence is lacking or desired, s/he does not do things for you but helps you to learn to do it yourself and in your own way successfully. This includes magick as well and DIY spirituality as Diyo's main goal is to help you to learn how to achieve your own goals yourself until eventually you can achieve your true will. This is the sigil of Diyo and it should probably go in any workshop you might have, or any tools you might use etc, anywhere that you create things instead of relying on the system to produce it for you.

Concerned with the severity of the situation Dysnomia thought to herself, “While I am at it, the humans need someone to help them stand up for themselves and fight back, so I will create more children to help form the resistance.” So it was she bore Arcobus the goddess of insurrection and freedom, who serves to topple oppressors, inequality and dishonesty, and hierarchies everywhere, she works to fill the hearts of the people with fire and say no more to oppression. She helps to inspire people to quit the jobs they hate and tell their boss to fuck off. She also helps to level the playing field in everyday life and is the divinity of rights acquisition, protest and direct action. When asked she will help to ensure that corporations and corrupt leaders get what they deserve, bringing them out of power. As she is a master ninja, Arcobus can also help with industrial and government sabotage, breaking logging equipment and computers etc, she has made contact with the Gremlin people and can act as an intermediary in working together to break the equipment of the oppressors. Arcobus helps with all things related to overthrowing the power structures of the world and is beautiful looking like an amalgamation of all humans around the world. Arcobus should also be called upon in black block actions, she can be called upon to help protect the people as well as give them strength to fight. She can hide people trying to evade police during direct action situations and in these situations she is in black block form with full Anarchist ninja attire, she is so well disguised you might just see her in a protest and you would never know it.

Along with aiding a person in learning the ways of the Ninja, she is the creator of black block Pankration Aikido, a system of martial arts that can be used by individuals within a group to help direct group energy and force, in order to breach police lines or surround police or arrested people (to free them) in a black block organism working as a body with many cells. (Pankration is a form of Greek Martial arts used by Spartacus to defeat overwhelming Roman legions) She helps people to learn from the power of moshing and crowd surfing, to utilize drums and music to unify the people in their group attack on police lines and to direct the currents of kinetic energy created by linked protestors working to combine their strength. She is also a master at using home made weapons and armour to fight the police and authorities, her warrior spirit can be called upon to help people defend themselves against tyranny. She often carries a Molotov cocktail and especially likes to burn down banks, you can consecrate a Molotov in her name, putting her sigil on the bottle and by throwing it spread the fires of revolution which will ritually purify the archons from an area.

To evoke Arcobus the sigil is good on protest signs, weapons to use on pigs, or tools to sabotage, armour and shields etc for protection or anywhere else that is in need of its influence such as government buildings. Office bathrooms are good as well, so that workers are filled with knowledge of how they are slaves, promoting disgruntled resistance, worker infiltration and sabotage. A good mantra which you should chant at least three times to call upon Arcobus would be "Fuck the Pigs!" She can be invoked for black block actions, clear thinking in planning actions and enhanced skills and stamina, here is the sigil of Arcobus.

Seeing how isolated, closed minded and xenophobic people were, how captivated and domesticated they were by artificial forms of comfort, Dysnomia realized people must experience freedom from the grind of everyday society and learn the pleasures of a simple life free of needless commitments. So she announced "I will give birth to a hobo god and he will be named Braggish and he will help people find spare change, hitch hike, train hop, find places to sleep or squat, stay warm and get food and stay safe and generally help a hobo with whatever they may need." So he was born, a god that had travelled everywhere and knew all the ins and outs of street life, a god so ragged his skin had patches and with his help all those who wish to live outside the system have a friend and helper. Simply call upon him by name or use his sigil, you could put this sigil on a patch or hitch hiking sign, or a pan handling sign, you can also visualize the symbol on the road while you are hitching. With the help of Braggish all the old school Hobo signs can be used magickally according to their meanings, simply pray to Braggish utilizing his sigil and the appropriate sign, you can also put his sigil up at the edge of town, or wherever the best place to hitch out from is. While most of my travels have been small journeys, the reality of Braggish has made itself known to me as I make my way on the street. You can say his name as a mantra any time, but it is especially good to do to the rhythm of traffic and trains you hear and in that rhythm he will come to you and help you. Here is his sigil

Looking at her children before her Dysnomia smiled, she knew that while these were useful divinities, humanity still needed more help if they were to overcome the Eunomians. She could not help but notice how the humans treated each other, how they hated that which is different and so Dysnomia realized that the humans needed to be taught that no one should be oppressed, especially just for being different. So Dysnomia had a second trans gendered child, in fact this child never exactly grew up for s/he represented all who suffer from prejudice or feel oppressed, this includes but is not limited to all races, genders, sexual orientations, ages, species and nature itself, for all too often nature is oppressed and destroyed beyond any reason. This being was named Fortle and s/he helps to rescue all those who are in need, seeking to end persecution and discrimination and elitism of all kinds. S/he does not love oppressed people better than anyone else but is their guardian and protector. S/he is good to call upon in environmental issues and Animal Liberation Front operations, (A.L.F.) situations involving racial discrimination as well as homophobia, sexism, helping battered women and children etc. S/he represents true equality and is perhaps the most loving of all the divinities and can be seen in many forms, but has an affinity with broccoli, crows as well as dandelions, and is often seen around them, s/he likes to be a composite of all that is seen as ugly or wrong just because they are different. This is Fortle's sigil

Dysnomia herself is all powerful, she is beyond words and so I cannot say what you should call upon her for, but she helps to manifests your true will. She will make herself known to you if you seek her, she is that which contains all things, and there is nothing that she cannot do, ask her help for what you will using her sigil to break down barriers, both internal and external and all things that limit. She can help you break all kinds of laws, to overthrow oppressors and to spread, understand and more importantly to experience the essence of Anarchism which I call anarkhos, that which is the fountain head of awareness. She also specializes in helping people to find courage to stand up to authorities and to be filled with the outlaw revolutionary spirit. Be careful with her however for she may show you things inside you that you have walled off, she is by her nature no holds barred, however trust that she shows you how to be free and love her, learn whatever you can of her and help others to see her for when you know her you will know what underlies all things. This is her sigil and it is the symbol of all Dysnomians, please put it up everywhere.

Feeling weary from having given birth to so many offspring in one day Dysnomia felt a little tired, but knowing how dreadfully serious and uptight everyone was, all the unnatural and hypocritical values the humans had acquired in the name of their sick society, she decided she needed to relax and get laid. So she called upon three of her many lovers, Eros, Dionysus and Orpheus and explained to them the need for them to help her conceive a child, “these poor humans have forgotten how to have fun, all they do is work, and through their false religions and pompous and deceptively manipulative codes of conduct that have been imposed on them, they will never learn the truth of me until they learn to enjoy themselves. So, I will create a god of sex, drugs and rock and roll, as well as moshing, adventure and brutal honesty, a god who will inspire them to spit in the face of convention and find the joys of letting go to experience enthusiasmos.” These three lovers agreed and they proceeded to get down in an orgy of pleasure, making love rudely and with all kinds of kink in one juicy pile, they all had multiple orgasms and conceived the god Zurk. He is the god of all kinds of fun, sober and otherwise, all other kinds of music as well, above all he is a god of confronting those who attempt to force others to accept their artificial moralities. He will help to free people from the bonds of pride, shame, inhibitions and generally being uptight, he will help people to see the folly of all prejudice, though generally in a pretty in your face kind of way. He will help people to laugh at themselves and to overcome a lack of sense of humour when others seem to be rude or offensive to them, he is the enemy of self righteousness, pretentiousness and snobbery, people who think they are better than others. He will help people who feel burned out from too much activism, or who are put down by the system to become filled with enthusiasm once more and he does this by helping them to unwind and let loose. He will help musicians to be filled with the spirit of Dysnomia and he will help people to have the best sex of their lives, he will also act as a guide and helper to those who choose to work with him while using entheogens and other substances.

Of course it should always be kept in mind that entheogenic work is serious and must be done with respect to becoming a better and happier person, which will happen as you grow more aware of Dysnomia and her children. In this manner Zurk can help to make you aware of those who have been called elves, dwarfs and fairies and all manner of otherworldly beings, especially those who love a good party. His music shapes the harmonies of the soul and through the ritual use of sex, entheogens and music he offers methods of knowing Dysnomia in a truly unique way from the others, in this way he is also a god of magick. While mystical rituals may not seem that fun (though musical entheogenic tantra sure seems fun to me) he teaches us that fun stems from joy, and joy in part means taking responsibility for your life so that you can maximize happiness through the long term as well as short term. This also manifests itself through his brutal sense of humour, but if you do not show all these aspects of him respect, then the joke will be on you. He is a trickster god to be sure, he takes those who adorn themselves in a culture they think will make them look good and shows them they are naked in the crowd. Those who see in him shallowness see the reflection of their own shallow assumptions, he is the mirrored parody of the cosmic irony that permeates this world.

Through Shamanic drumming he can help people to astral project, especially when they combine entheogens and meditative techniques. Just as a crowbar is not made to be used for clipping toe nails, entheogens are not really made to be used for parties, it is possible to enjoy yourself on them in a recreational way, it is also possible to take your toe nail off by smashing it with a crow bar, it does not mean this is a good way of going about things. As an entheogenic guide he comes in his aspect of bliss and ecstasy and in fact Zurk is paradoxically beyond fun, since he can create more fun than people can stand or live through, this must be done in a serious manner. He teaches a means of knowing true happiness and so when done properly is true and healthy hedonism, Charon can take a soul across the river Styx, but it is Zurk who is their guide in the underground or any of the spirit worlds. When acting as psychopomp, Zurk helps to guide the Anarchist dead to the land of Dysnomia, where you and other deceased Anarchist souls will join the Sidhe in an unending party. (At least until you decide what else you might want to do there, or if you wish to reincarnate he will guide your soul to your new body, you can do anything Anarchist after all.)

Zurk is capable of letting people experience in a unique way the spirit of Dysnomia, those who work with him ritually may even come to see Dysnomia face to face and this paradox of serious and responsible bliss and joy is in fact the seemingly contradictory effect of the presence of Dysnomia. Zurk also loves to play jokes on those who take themselves too seriously or present themselves as authorities, he also likes to show the shallow hedonists there is more to life than they think (joy and fun can come in unexpected forms) but he still loves to party more than anyone. He is a big fan of absinthe, and especially moonshine whiskey, as well as all other alcohols and in fact party drugs in general fall under his influence as well, but so do all things which people consider fun. To balance this aspect (and maintain maximum levels of fun) he can also help people cope with addiction problems (perhaps coming to them through the iboga plant) and help to prevent addictions in the first place, for when you start to depend on substances for fun, you eventually stop enjoying them and most other things as well. In fact through his Shamanic nature Zurk can help heal all kinds of people, (since being sick is not very fun) though to master working with him in this way will take extra dedication to his teachings.

He often appears as a punked out greaser with dyed hair, but he changes appearance quite often as he understands variety is the spice of life and like Dysnomia he has many forms, so that sometimes he wears a top hat and sunglasses with only one lens. His sigils work well when placed over speakers or on instruments, especially when really raunchy rebellious music is played through it. Depending on what they are on and who they are, someone who is close to Zurk may become so impassioned by music they begin to froth at the mouth, head bang so wildly that they may head butt objects randomly and generally spasm and go berserk in the mosh pit, thus they are called "Zurkers." You can also put his sigil onto bottles of things to drink or with sacraments, you could put his sigils over your bed or invoke him for some high quality Tantric rock and rollgasms.

Zurk is the spirit who met Robert Johnson on the crossroads, to give birth to the kind of blues which would become rock and roll, he also appeared to Elvis in the sky as he drove to Las Vegas in his Cadillac and it was at this time that a very spiritual Elvis received his most powerful mystical experience. Zurk came to Jimmy Hendrix during his famous guitar improvisations under the influence of LSD and while Jimmy page was living at Aleister Crowley's old residence and temple in Scotland, known as Boleskine house, Zurk came and inspired the song stairway to heaven. Jimmy and Robert Plant had so much trouble coming up with their own material that Jimmy used his Occult knowledge to be filled with the spirit of rock and their original work was the result. Zurk was the Ouija board spirit that told Alice Cooper about his past life as a Witch, a story from which he got his stage name, thus he played a strong role in the advent of heavy metal as well. While they were high on LSD he also appeared to Judas Priest as a being they called "the dreamer" and showed them the spirit world before Nomos as the "deceiver" brought them back to Earth and so like Cainites, they sang of "breakin the law." Inspired by Zurk, Dio is responsible for spreading the metal hand gesture, often thought of as the "devil horns" Zurk new it would help to break the magick of the Eunomians. In reality it is not Satanic at all and was taught to Dio by his Gypsy grandmother and it is from an ancient tradition intended to repel the "evil eye" and magickal attacks and in fact repels all forms of harmful spirits such as Yahweh, Satan and the Eunomians.

Zurk was also the spirit who foretold the birth of GG Allin to his father, appearing like an angel he prophesied that GG would go on to do great things, later coming to GG to make him the rock and roll messiah. Now no one, not even Zurk could fully see what GG Allin would do, and in his own time few understood what he did do. That is he came to teach people universal love, which he did by forcing us to confront that which we hate and to accept that no matter how much we preach love, we are all capable of hate. So it is he willingly became a scapegoat, so that he might expose this hypocrisy and all could project onto him, all the problems of the world and then he made sure we could not ignore him. For GG's love was so great, he wanted to give sadists an opportunity to hate, to give people the joy of hating someone they denounce, but he did this so that we might understand hate itself and to provoke the warriors of love to act more fiercely. So it is those who hated him, are those who fell for his ploy, and while there are some who would dance and piss on his grave, as GG himself would have wanted, I say to you dance and piss, but do not hate him, for that is what he wanted, and to truly discredit his surface messages, we must have the strength to show his tortured soul love.

Zurk also consecrated Wendy O Williams as the metal Priestess of Kaos and as with all Chaos Punks, Chaos UK and the Exploited know him because Chaos is their life. Where as Crass knows, if "life's an illusion, love is a dream" and with his help, Crass will "see you through this illusion." For Zurk was there in the 70's when the Rastas in London taught the punks to fight Babylon and he is here now in each kid who wants to start a band. Yes there is a god of sex, drugs and rock and roll and Nina Hagen is his prophet, peace be upon her, she incarnated in to this world to spread awareness and to generally break down the notion of normality. Zurk appeared to the Ramones early on to teach them of Dysnomia and they would "keep the faith" by howling at the moon in Pagan rights "Sha la la la, Sha la la la la la" declaring "there's no law" and later explaining they "believe in miracles" as they were taught the ways of magick. He was also with Oi Polloi when they stood up against the pigs who stole Stone Henge from the people, denying freedom of religion as detailed in their song "Free the Henge!"

Zurk knew that when people are allowed to judge and make music according to what they find pleasurable, they stop listening to their rulers and start to judge all things for themselves and so they naturally start to seek Dysnomia. So Zurk encourages individuality and magickal music, as with the use of what Christians called "the devils tritone," but this is not evil and helps people to think for themselves and to seek freedom from all laws and governance. From Black Sabbath and Iron Maiden, to Iggy Pop and the Damned, Parliament Funkadelic, Hawkwind, King Crimson and Pagan Metal and many, many more artists, Zurk has helped to guide many musicians towards spiritual wisdom and Anarchy and they have become "the veterans of thousand psychic wars." As explained in the Gospel of Bon Scott, also known as the song by AC/DC "Let there be Rock," Zurk created rock and roll by singing "Let there be light, drums, sound, guitar, Let there be Rock!" When an Anarchist person dies Zurk will come to them to take them to Dysnomia's heaven and as a person becomes one of the Sidhe, they can choose to live among their own so that if they lived the life of Rock and Roll, if they so choose Zurk will take them to his area, the big rock candy mountains, they go "where streams of whiskey are flowing" and all the greatest musicians of the past live on to play for everyone. As music has magickal potential, through good music the listener can know some true expressions of art unfiltered by the Eunomians and the musicians can cast a spell of Anarchism for all. While he plays all types of music, his favourite genre is Crusty Horror Doom Punk, and he plays this music in a band with some Gypsy Sidhe. He is a wild and shameless god with animal passions, through his teachings we come to understand our own animal and divine nature and the balance that allows us to live in the brutal truth of uncompromising joy. This is his sigil

Last to be born was Dumeego who is the transgendered god/ess of human social understanding and harmony, who's function is to increase social awareness, helping with facilitating group activities and conflict resolution. Dumeego also helps to expose liars, fakers and manipulators to others and to the liars themselves, thus helping them to pull their heads out of their asses. S/he teaches people to love each other and to be and love their real selves and helps to spread awareness in general. One of Dumeego's favourite ways of helping humanity is by inspiring them with art, poetry and writing, s/he loves graffiti and all public displays of expression that help to raise awareness and s/he can help artists do this any way they want. Dumeego is great for self exploration as well, sometimes realizing the truth is painful but Dumeego also helps people to come to terms with their new awareness. As s/he does this it allows people to better understand themselves in relation to the world and community, but also helps them to know their true selves and so what their true will is as well. S/he is useful since what good is Anarchy if you don't know what you really want to do? This is in part done by helping people to understand their memetic paradigms, their beliefs, but also by helping them to become aware of and then deal with their inner demons, their outmoded aspects of consciousness. S/he is also good for dealing with the media in general when it comes to activism, Dumeego can help to limit media distortions and can help activist speakers to articulate themselves clearly and effectively when dealing with the media. S/he can also help negotiations with any authorities when it comes to legal issues and settlements from political protest, all to ensure that things go according to plan when dealing with others. S/he is the muse of all activist artists and writers and helps people in general with research and inspiration into activist and Anarchist memes. Dumeego appears differently to different people but does have some forms for which s/he is often seen, s/he may come to you as a seven foot tall butch tranny with purple hair and green antennas, s/he is beautiful and horrid at the same time, strong and slender who likes to smoke from Sherlock Holmes style pipe and wear fishnet stockings. This is Dumeego's sigil

Seeing her beautifully ugly ragamuffin children all together Dysnomia grinned her maniacal grin, but she knew that for all their greatness and ability to help, humanity would still have their work cut out for them and that the situation was grave. Dysnomia gathered her children around and told them in her ominously loving manner “you my sweet children are beloved to me, but in order to free the humans we must help them find what it is they truly want beyond the artificial influences which have been forced upon them. Once they have all realized the truth of the world they will be free, to do this we must help them understand why they desire freedom. Always be careful so that none of them will worship you, or set you above themselves, only that they will love you and know that you help them not out of obligation but out of the love in your hearts, you must bring these lessons to them if they are to ever overcome the lies that are laws and divisions.”

All these divinities can be worked with in any way that you choose, you can evoke them in an elaborate ritual or you can simply say their name in a simple prayer, a sigil is helpful to most and when calling on them it is generally better to speak allowed their name. Meditate on these divinities and they will come to you, visualize their sigils or visualize energy going from your hands in to the object with the sigil on it and then visualize the entities themselves while chanting a mantra of their name. You can use your normal evocation or sigil charging methods to activate these sigils or you can specialize and come up with a different ritual for each Dysnomian according to their nature. If a sacrifice is to be performed at the altar of Dysnomia then your television could be smashed, credit cards cut, birth certificate or any money could be burned as the preferred objects of sacrifice but there are many items which symbolize our enslavement which could be destroyed in her name. As with all things the more you put into it the more you will get out of it, so I will for the most part leave it to you to choose how to work with them.

I am no authority on them and I believe you must ultimately find your own way, however I will give a few tips, if possible do a banishing ritual first, simply to clear your mind and let it know that now is the time for magick. A Ouija board or a crystal for scrying can be very useful for evocation of these spirits but these tools take some practice and knowledge on proper procedure and you should not rely on them to start. Trance is key, being in a good state of mind for opening up to them, give them lots of love and respect and work with them, don't be discouraged if nothing seems to happen, just because you don't see them doesn't mean they aren't there. Don't depend on them to do everything for you, they are not your new parents, you have to help them help you, trust them. Give them energy and charge the sigils, when you first start out only do one at a time and asking for one thing, perhaps working with a different one each day, if you don't need anything you can also just communicate with them to build a bond. Put their sigils in public places that need their influence, the more people see the sigils the more power they will have. KNOW that they are real. Have joy and mischief in your heart, they like that.

With Dysnomia this brings the Anarchist pantheon to 9, or 10 if you want to count Aletheia, for the truth is always on the side of those who spread real freedom. Of course anyone could add or take away from this pantheon, there is after all no dogma except that there should be no dogma or rules to bind anyone who does not want them. In the Dysnomian universe anyone can do anything if they really know the truth of Dysnomia. She has revealed these divinities to me in numerous ways and trust me they are real, at least now they are and the more people believe in them the more real they will be. This is how they have come across to me and I do not feel that I created them but evoked them, in explaining them I tried to not step on any toes but you can think of any of them in any way you want. Try not to be too offended if this is too traditional or some kind of ism against your impeccable PCness and if you find they are wrong in some way then simply commit heresy. They truly can help you if you "know" how to work with them, things on the astral become stronger if people imagine them the same way and so it's probably best to try and stay within the guidelines I gave, so that each person who works with them, helps to create a more unified image of integrity. Do whatever you like, just don't do nothing, though they may reveal themselves in different ways and further layers to their personalities will no doubt be discovered, start a relationship with them and you will get to know them. You can also always find new divinities if you think I am way off in some way, or if I forgot something.

No one can teach you about the Dysnomians, only through your own efforts will you know them, no one can act as a priest or priestess, there are only those who love them and those who do not. So let all those groups who would practice together do your rituals in an egalitarian manner, if only one person can do a certain role in a ritual, unless the intention requires a specific person perform a specific role, the person doing it should be chosen at random each time the ritual is done. For beginners to the Occult these are safe spirits, but do not rely on me alone as I strongly suggest all people learn more about magick and Occultism in general, that is how to charge talismans or sigils, how to evoke and divine as these are all useful skills for anyone, but is of special importance to activist minded people.

Dysnomia is beyond words, but not experience, while in experience of her, we experience the Dysnomian syndrome, we are in a state that is ineffable, but in many ways familiar, on the tip of your tongue, the same feeling you have when you know what you want to say before you actually put it in to words. In that state we experience the indescribable anamnesis and context of anarkhos gnosis through the cup of Mnemosyne's waters which she bears. From this we can empower our logos to create new words and expressions of what Dysnomia means, among other ways this is done through her children to whom we acquire the means of expressing Dysnomia and we acquire a portion of anamnesis of her (as total gnosis of her is boundless) in a manner that is articulated according to the specific divinities nature. Know that there is the method of overcoming the lethologica and engaging in a kind of synesthetic awareness of metaphorical experience of Dysnomia, this is also done through her offspring and represented through physical actions and mental processes in everyday reality and this forms the basis for much of what I call "autonomy." Without these processes we are left to the illusion of the Eunomians which is that they have the monopoly on access to Aletheia and so all knowledge of Dysnomia from Aletheia is twisted by the Eunomians to suit their processes and agenda. In this way the Eunomians degrade the expressions to a mockery and lie of what Aletheia conveys about Dysnomia and the rest of reality, but through direct experience we can know the truth itself.

Through the Dysnomian children we get direct access to Dysnomia and so eventually learn the unfiltered messages of Aletheia. The Eunomians falsely present themselves as infallible objective truth, while the Dysnomians present an admittedly personal and subjective experience or expression that is more truthful because of its admitted limitations. The religion of the Dysnomians is to articulate in various ways, either through physical actions, art, or when possible through rational argument and political manifestations the truth of Anarchy. It is also crucial to attempt to experience the anamnesis of the Dysnomian mindset at will and to let it be within your consciousness and heart in its total and pure unarticulated form. We can either move to a greater understanding of Dysnomians or we can wrap ourselves deeper in ever more limited, derisive and subjective misrepresentations by those who work in the name of the Eunomians.

Always when trying to explain or enact lawlessness we must be careful that it is not contaminated by the Eunomian influence or past learned associations that serve to separate humans from the Dysnomic state. When we use the Dysnomian processes we create a more truthful experience and world and with the Eunomians we create an ever increasing degree of abstraction that presents itself more and more as literal truth. The Dysnomian expression is experiential or as some encouragement of the Dysnomic state of mind, while Eunomian expression is repulsion from the Dysnomic state, or authoritarian expressions about Dysnomian religion, which in essence limits it and so destroys its very existence through its own contradictions and so authoritarianism creates a separation of understanding from the expressions.

While certain actions of the Dysnomians may seem destructive, they are destroying the system that destroys everything. With the Eunomians acting through the "creation" of nation states they have only created destruction and death, for while it may in the short term create an environment which allows humans to reproduce to greater numbers, it is an unsustainable creation that acts as debt to the natural world which one day must be paid through cause and effect. The Eunomians have also created the unintended consequences of blindly pursuing our untrue will, which is resulting in the death of many humans by their own hand, not to mention all the other creatures.

Is there a Dysnomian practice of being antinomian? You bet, in fact it is the rule that Dysnomians should be antinomian, anti-nomos-ian but if this rule is to be properly followed then it too must be broken. That is to say that the individual will more then likely find rules (if they look) in some religion, or in life which should be thought of as good advice, this is to be discerned by each individual in each circumstance. No fixed rule can ever be depended upon in all situations and so by cultivating your consciousness, by taking responsibility for your actions you can become aware of Dysnomia. This practice allows you to develop your autonomy rather than relying on artificially created algorithms, or illusionary ideas of universally applicable codes of conduct, or good and evil. What is most important is to tread the line of being free of external laws and not putting laws on anyone else. Tradition has its logic at times, other times it is useless superstition, especially if the deeper mysteries of Dysnomia are not first perceived, in which case the symbolism and true meaning will not be understood and you will find yourself eating crackers and sipping wine thinking that's all you have to do to get to heaven.

Through the practice of total antinomianism, even breaking the rule of being antinomian, we can gain a context that will allow us to take or leave memes as we want. This is crucial in order to transcend the bondage or law of being slaves to the symbolic practices, as well as the artificially created human traps of various clergies, which are created to manipulate others. Instead we must master the essence of the symbolism and meaning and so gain a deeper understanding to what is usually ignorant lip service. We also come to realize that on the spiritual path, although there are many stories and directions from those who have gone before us, we all must make our own way. Remember that the descriptions of this landscape are always so highly personal that to attempt to ignore your own volition is to walk right of a cliff because you are busy staring at a map. Perhaps with Dysnomian religion each person should start from scratch, make up an entirely new religion just for themselves, but that would be telling you what to do, setting up an orthodoxy of antinomianism, so take from me what you will.

Laws control through separation, they divide the world in to legal and illegal actions giving no real credence to individual exceptions, they divide the people protecting those with property from those who have been legally robbed through the system. Laws divide the unity of humanity and separate us from nature by being the mechanisms of private property, hierarchy, policies and by defining nation states and borders, enforced demands and artificial abstractions which limit our awareness. Those with power use law against those without power, the law being the justification of that separation and exercise of power. So it is total oneness cannot exist without Dysnomia, without lawlessness and it is her energy that is willing to bring about unity and Anarchy no matter how many artificial barriers of litigium are created to limit us. It is in a very real sense laws which we use to define our ego, our codes of conduct, the barriers between us and everything else, we get upset if the illusion of our self image is broken. The laws of ego define who we are and so our dualist value systems are methods of separating ourselves from things which do not maintain our internal hierarchies and so like wise, Dysnomia will smash these as well. Oneness is the truth, and laws in all their various forms, even when they are against things that an Anarchist would not tolerate, are the lies which keep us from it.

Dysnomia didn't create us, or anything, we created ourselves because we wanted to, we also wanted to forget that we did this, this world is as it is so that we might learn how to use free will properly and consciously. You enter Anarchist heaven not by worshipping a goddess, but by living your true will fully on Earth, being in the moment fully and embracing it, though with a mind to make all those who will it more Anarchist with you. There is nothing you can do for Dysnomia, she is boundless and unified eternal infinity, instead do what you really want, as she is in every part of you, your true will is her true will.

This might all sound well and good, but for those stuck in the idea that they must do something to be enlightened, who cannot perceive their boundless awareness or are caught up in their memetic programming I offer a form of yoga or union with the consciousness of Dysnomia. That yoga is what I have been calling "anomie" or the practice of "normlessness," cultivating unity to the point of revolution, amorality and total freedom. Unity is found through normlessness because one who is aware of their oneness has no reference points, no artificial juxtaposition to create a universal standard, all things are what they are as one with plural forms. This union with Dysnomia and the experience of anarkhos is accomplished through the practice of anomie, by which I mean the well intentioned radical potentials of anomie, which is united in egalitarian communal individualism to create a form of Anarchy. No single reference point is to be followed since this would create a norm and instead practising balance between all polarities provides the means of avoiding pigeon hole prisons, convenient definitions which limit the scope of consciousness in to dogmatism and ideologue mentalities and automatic and compulsive behaviour. Pleasure is left to the individual to define so long as that pleasure does not seek to impose a social norm over anyone, including that individual. There is no sin, but addiction in any form, whether to food or drugs, sex or money is a norm and so a shackle on the soul. Those with habits, those who are dependent on something for their happiness, those who are so attached to something they want it to be eternal resist change and do not know Dysnomia. Imposing your will on others creates a norm, a reality outside of their will that is not subject to change, thus you expect others to abandon their anomie for your ego which also negates your own practice of anomie.

Anomie is traditionally thought of as a kind of depression, being at loose ends, seeing nothing in the mainstream which is worth wanting and so engaging in almost a nihilistic disregard for everything sometimes leading to violent uprising or suicide. The anomie yoga of Dysnomia is not necessarily to be depressed, nor does it have anything to do with nihilism, (which is perhaps the ultimate norm) though because this yoga is not easy these feelings may certainly happen at times. Anomie in terms of emotion is to me the feeling of rebelliousness you get when you see the truth, when you realize how much you have been screwed over, surely something that must be cultivated if the rulers are to be overthrown. When you explore these tendencies honestly in an egalitarian way without duality, you get a means of achieving anarkhos. While certainly not the traditional or normal view of anomie, the idea of normlessness, of not identifying with the memes around you, expecting no permanent, universal or ideal form of culture or abstraction inside or outside yourself is one method of freeing yourself from the shackles of rulers and memes. Once you have done this, once you are free of archons and abstractions and have real control of your mind to achieve your true will you have achieved the state of mind I call anarkhos. As they are emotionally immature, bourgeois academics have as I said used the term “anomie” to refer to suicidal like urges, that is they cannot understand how a person could be happy without norms, nor do they generally understand the natural need to rebel against tyranny. In this they have tried to pathologize rebellion, but through Dysnomian yoga we can experience weirdness and freedom from imposed social norms and through things like the protest of reality, we can even turn it in to a form of art and activism. There is no sin, but ignorance does exist and those who do not practice this yoga, those who seek to impose norms on others distort their perception, as well as those they succeed in controlling.

If we only see what we want to see, the question then becomes how do we come to truly want to see the truth? Looking at the world obviously most people merely fall for the idea that they want to see the truth, when in reality they want to believe they want the truth and so they fall for something more convenient or comforting. The only way to truly want the truth is to be emotionally strong enough to handle it, so in order to gain this strength you must first start with knowing yourself as much as possible. Then as you do this you can start to put yourself in situations and acquire experiences which will make you stronger emotionally and destroy your illusions, breaking you out of comfort zones until you can handle anything. This then is the reason for the school of life as it is the means by which we strengthen ourselves until we are capable of truly wanting the truth, that is we may not currently want the truth, but to some degree deep down we want to want the truth and so we are here.

We are united, we are each individuals, each inherently connected as we all exist together, each an iteration of the same fractal, but each unique. Through this we find the union of individualist Anarchy and communal Anarchy, oneness and plurality, each to their own, but each aware of their interdependence with the world. Sorry, but freedom means you must always be ready for change, always take each moment and situation as something unique which you must make up your own mind about, there are no universally applicable algorithms for life. A commune is not Anarchist if it forces people to join and obey, likewise no individual can escape the fact they effect others and so have a responsibility to them. Each individual will find times in their life when they will want to work with a group, share what they own and make group decisions, to live and love others and be part of a team. Other times people will feel the need to separate from a group or will be unable to agree with it, seeing it as somehow unequal or unfair to them, thus making them want to work as an individual. There can be no unchanging eternal commune, nor can there be an eternal norm of pure individualism, these ideas which many Anarchists have is totally unrealistic with the impermanent and constantly changing nature of reality and human society. Different situations in life call for different approaches to other humans, no system, even one without hierarchy could be created and remain eternally unchanging. Any attempt to create either individualist or communal societies permanently the same in some abstract notion of perfection is doomed to failure, as it automatically creates authoritarian standards based on what is deemed to be “normal.” However by allowing each person to change according to their will and teaching people to learn what their true will is, we will naturally create a world which can adjust itself in any given situation utilizing the best of all applicable ideas.

When it comes to anomie as a practical form of Dystopian yoga keep in mind these ideas are intended to in many ways make your memetic paradigm come crashing down, that the methods can definitely be emotionally unsettling and require courage. Once you are at your memetic foundations, it is up to you take hold of your cornerstone, to let go of the last abstractions (such as the yoga memes themselves) and embrace the fear that you will be overwhelmed without abstract notions of artificial order for your mind to grapple on to. When a person can learn to let go completely, they will enter in to a life of “nameless wildness and untrammelled freedom” and they will be free of their domesticated conditioning and so be in control of their own lives. No longer held captive by unconscious fear based ritualism those who succeed in this yoga will be in a state of anarkhos and fully aware of themselves. Once a person has attained anarkhos awareness they will then be capable of acting in the world, using symbols, abstractions and even making plans and personal systems while remaining aware of their limitations. That is a person with anarkhos remains seated in Chaos, or normlessness, free of dogmas, compulsive behaviour and authoritarian mindsets and so can learn to use memes as tools to achieve their true will as an autonomous being.

The practices of anomie can be as varied as the people who engage in it, clearly heresy is encouraged in this regard, no orthodoxy can be established but I do have some ideas which may provide some of the quickest routes to anarkhos. One practice of anomie is to constantly and purposely embarrass yourself until it is no longer possible for you to feel embarrassment. Find ways to go out of your comfort zones and generally act like a freak, the more it challenges your sense of self, the more spontaneous, chaotic and in line with nature, the more effective it will be. This should generally be done without letting anyone know what you are up to, this can be as simple as brutal self deprecating humour, but it can also be purposely doing inane things which will make people laugh at you, or otherwise reject you. I do not mean antagonizing others, but acting out with total lack of social grace, pride or shame, for example taking a shit in public. You don't have to put yourself in any danger, or even risk being prosecuted, (though breaking the law is definitely one of the most powerful ways of breaking normality) but when you do this, you should make sure you are actually embarrassed by your actions, whatever that means to you. If you can find areas in which you are insecure, or points of pride which you can destroy these should be your first targets. By repeatedly embarrassing yourself in as many ways as possible which challenge you emotionally, you will become a much stronger person, you will become much more comfortable with yourself and you will become free of any type of social convention.

Other forms of practising anomie might include any of the memetic warfare tactics which I outlined in chapter 4, or through the protest of reality as in chapter 12. That is subverting the notions of an objective reality can not only help other people gain a sense of anomie, (so long as you aren't being authoritarian about it) it can teach you as well. Working with others who consent you can make a group that plays tricks on each other and actually engages in memetic warfare on each other. Anything chaotic which can bring down your memetic paradigm can be used, travelling to exotic and distant places is also another sure fire method of creating “culture shock” until your notions of normality are replaced by a direct experience of how variable it all really is. Going out of your way to break cultural taboos can very much help in this as well, though of course some taboos are contrary to Anarchist principles, many, if not most are purely social conventions which really have little rationality behind them besides some artificial aesthetic of a given culture.

All of the Anarchist divinities in Dysnomia's family can help the practice of anomie in one way or another, anything which provides a direct experience of Anarchism, such as through radical direct action against the establishment is surely against the norms of our present society. Dysnomians seek direct experience of Dysnomia, that is the unmediated experience of true unlimited freedom, true awareness of reality outside the constraints of the rulers, which I call "anarkhos." This is accomplished through a variety of means which I have summed up under the term "anomie" the most effective of which is through direct action and directly experiencing Anarchism. You can feel this anarkhos when you dumpster dive, or successfully shoplift, you can feel it when you help victims of prejudice, or smash a cops face or a bank window in a riot, you can feel this through making your own things, or through sex, drugs and music, creating art and getting to know yourself, or just travelling as a hobo. All these methods and more will show you the beauty of freedom from oppression, something which is outside the imaginations of most people and for those deluded enough to think an intellectual understanding is enough. After little practice it will be clear these methods show that anarkhos is something which needs to be experienced in order to be understood, but with understanding comes true freedom.

Of course one of the most obvious adjuncts to this yoga is to utilize entheogens, these are helpful for Dysnomian yoga in a variety of ways. In fact you could say people have a "bad trip" when they have their idea of normality ripped away from them, when the trip is so strange your sense of normality is changed forever, but then even the "good trips" will do this. The more you can deal with anomie, the less you will project your expectations on to reality, the less paranoid you will be, the less attached to vain notions of ego, the less you will be controlled by your desires. Just like going on exotic trips, an entheogenic trip can show you the world in a whole new way, its quite pointless to try and explain this as much of it is beyond the memes we call words, but on entheogens, parts of culture you take for granted, which seem so normal are clearly seen for the absurd weirdness that they really are.

Punk rock culture is in my opinion the most effective lifestyle of encapsulating these ideas as it provides a variety of ways and ideas about how to go outside the norm. Though of course you must be careful to avoid conforming to punk rock which would defeat the purpose, as always make it your own. Ridding yourself of the consumer mentality, learning to be happy with less is one sure fire way to avoid the norms of what a comfortable life is, you are told you need a fancy car and big house to be happy, this is the norm, so you should avoid it, among many other reasons because they are normally what people want. Reliance on authorities and manufacturers, jobs and other traditional forms of income are all parts of your life which keep you living in your safe and artificial life according to the normal schedules and standards of consumption. So it is learning how to do things for yourself and in your own way will help to counter the norms and habits we as humans obsess so much about. Exploring the punk way of life without being stuck in a "scene" can help you make contact with communities and ideas which will help you function in this anomie asceticism and also provide you with some like minded company. After all being hated and alienated by normal people or "normies" all the time would be a normal occurrence to you otherwise and so to some degree it too must be avoided by learning to be part of a group at times.

You could try posing as cultures or individuals who are rejected and hated by society, not because of any real offence which you do to others, or because you are even really effecting them, but simply because of the normies prejudice's. Introducing yourself to people you meet with different names and personas will help to dismantle your sense of self, but trying new things in general, especially facing fears will undoubtedly help. Anything which does not hurt anybody, yet invites discrimination, for example you could dress up as a transsexual as this will give you insight in to the norms of society and its cruel side. For many it will also work in the same way as embarrassing yourself to make you stronger, but more than this it will give you deeper empathy for those who are the victims of prejudice. I once heard of a white teacher who had white people singled out and then as individuals surrounded by African Americans who would then racially harass that white person as if they were black and from this could experience first hand what prejudice feels like. This idea could be adapted so that a person experiences in regular real world society what it is like to be a variety of races and genders and have a variety of sexual orientations and a variety of other things, from appearing fat and or ugly to being disabled or any unpopular or minority cultural affectation.

Obviously it is not currently practical to assemble large groups of cultural minorities to harass you, but a person could walk in their shoes in everyday life so long as they can make others believe they actually are the kind of person they are posing as. Here again the protest of reality can potentially be utilized if it ever becomes popular, that is parts of the protest could be set up to give people these experiences in settings created by the artists. People who know what is going on may come to the protests to experience what it is like to be a victim of prejudice as facilitated by the improv performers/protestors. Likewise when the protestors break the fourth wall they may start to interact with unsuspecting bystanders with this in mind, giving the gawkers and civilian bigots a taste of their own medicine, at the same time destroying their sense of normality. This may appear cruel in some cases, but if the newly initiated are then invited in to ceremonial orgies of healing, we will all be the better for it and these orgies could even be the motivation for the bourgeois and lower class to undergo experiences of anomie voluntarily.

Obviously posing as various races is hard to do in a believable way and if not done right deeply offensive to people of that race. If you are impersonating a minority in regular day to day life, I must stress that you make sure you make it your own, rather than propagating stereotypes, you are not trying to make those who are discriminated against look bad. Rather you are trying to experience the real and unprovoked discrimination of the mainstream, experience rejection which is based purely on being different from memetic norms, or simply experience new ways of life for yourself which are totally unfamiliar, or outside the "norm."

This practice has the added benefit of exposing these minority cultures to the mainstream people and to some small degree adding more variety to the lives of normies and so diminishing their prejudice by providing them with examples of someone who is victimized, yet refuses to be authoritarian or non Anarchist. The more common it becomes to see transsexuals and other cultural minorities, the less easy it is for mainstream conformists to justify their prejudice. While on one hand this might be seen as normalizing these minorities, it breaks up the mainstream norms by generally encouraging diversity. You get to experience what its like to be seen by others as a freak and mainstream people are exposed to cultures outside their little worlds, thus creating anomie for everyone involved. For this to work fully however it must done as if you are actually a transsexual or whatever other oppressed cultural minority you might choose to become.

In this way people may come to understand first hand why society is so fucked up and what it is like to be a victim and victimizer in part potentially turning protest of reality into a kind of giant "Stanford prison experiment." In this experiment ordinary people were arbitrarily made to experience being prisoners or guards and eventually those selected to be guards became corrupted by power into sadism. The guards surrendered their conscience to the scientists representing themselves as authorities, creating that which has become known as the "Lucifer effect" which is when people will do whatever cruel things they are told to do, so long as the orders come from an authority. While this could be used in it's own distinct way it does allow common people to see just how mentally disturbed they really are simply by "following orders." This would take the experiment to new levels exposing how corrupted people will be in the right environment, using sex, drugs and other incentives to show people what they are really made of. As people in the protest of reality have these experiences and learn from the art about all the various problems in the world, they will question the world and themselves like never before. Importantly if the Lucifer effect can be evoked in them, after the experiment is explained to them they will realize what assholes they are and come to question all “orders” and all authorities. Being shaken out of their consensus trance they will find it harder to believe in the spectacle of modern culture and so by first evoking the latent archons in their mind, we can make them conscious of them and then help them to banish, transmute or destroy the authoritarian and prejudice tendencies. This is potentially dangerous and will have to be done very carefully, but life is dangerous and encouraging people to be ignorant of their shadow is even more dangerous. Such participants will start to overcome the Stockholm syndrome which grips them, they will start to lose loyalty to their captors and seek to actively live according to their own principles.

If social norms feel unnatural to you and being a freak is the norm you can also pose as say a yuppie, or a business person, or a police officer (which is also illegal) or whatever kind of person you normally aren't. There is also great opportunities for memetic piracy in this form of yoga, after you experience what is normal for such memetic ideologues you can then in a sense ritually shatter that normality for you as well as other people by acting in a totally unusual way for such a person. For example as a business person you could donate money, then put on a tutu and start dancing around throwing eggs at banks, or whatever you feel like improvising. You will probably find that simply pursuing your true will, whatever that may be, will make you subject to controversy and rejection by others. Being an outlaw or free spirit can provoke jealousy in those who lack the courage to do the same as you, or are otherwise frustrated because they refuse to be who they want to be and have no tolerance outside their limited cultural values. The norm of society is to be an authoritarian control freak conformist who wants nothing more than artificial stability and normality and so any who create cultures outside the norm will be seen as a threat to their delusions.

You will certainly learn a lot about yourself through these methods of anomie, make sure you keep it artistic and creative rather than attempting to create some kind of universal norm or permanent identity, or notion of good, or improvement. Normlessness is not to be pursued as a norm either, sometimes you will want to repeat yourself, so it is OK to be practical sometimes. Simply by being natural, rather than a contrived self you will be practising anomie, making no special effort in life to always be loving or hateful to people in general, but responding in accordance in any given situation with your natural inclination, your true will. This may sound easy and certainly many people falsely believe they do this, but they in fact have many habits, many automatic behaviours and preconceptions, many reactionary impulses which do not allow for total and true free will. This will no doubt get you in to trouble at times, but through this trouble and adversity you will gain a better understanding of your true will and how to go about getting it. Look past any memes you are presented with in terms of a consistent judgement of universal absolutes and instead be present in the moment, free of assumptions and looking at each individual occurrence of that meme and reacting according to that unique context. If you can keep this state of anarkhos you can create your own life as your own true will, free from the limitations of the ego, boundless in union with Dynomia.

This creative aspect, the life you live after achieving anarkhos is autonomy, that is you are free to create your own personal abstractions, so long as they are not controlling you or anyone else, life becomes a total work of art, abstractions tools or better yet toys. Autonomy is the way of life which someone in anarkhos engages in, independent, yet aware of everything's interdependence, free to make yourself in accordance with your true will, it is also the means we employ to spread Anarchy for others after we have achieved anarkhos. You may have stopped being controlled by abstractions, but will still interact with the “outside” world which for now means using various abstractions to communicate etc. Yet an autonomous person is never held captive by any notions of identity, or normal self, or norms in the external world and its cultures, no pride and no shame. Autonomy literally means self rule, it is the state of personal sovereignty in which you become a free spirit on the land, one of the “kingless race” the Gnostics spoke of, no longer consenting to the rulers but exercising free will and making your own decisions and reality. Once you have experienced anarkhos you have gnosis of the reality of Dynomia, you have understanding of life and have freed yourself from the Eunomians and so through autonomy you can storm the iron tower to find Aletheia for yourself. Through autonomy you will be capable of transmitting Aletheia's messages to other people through your interactions and others will to some degree recognize your Anarchism for the truth that it is, aiding them in their anomie to find their way through the labyrinth. An autonomous person is sometimes in the world of abstract matter yet always free from it, able to leave the mundane worlds and experience the immaterial freely so that an autonomous person can use memes without being controlled by them, without losing the context and experience of universal unity.

Through this process I have loosely outlined, we become the mythopoetic magicians, creating the world as art, but not drawing over other peoples work, not putting things in terms of fashion, only finding ways of maximizing collaboration. So to sum up my jargon, "anomie" is the yoga or method of dismantling your memetic paradigm to cultivate normlessness, which will force you to face your archons and to destroy your internal hierarchies. Eventually by experiencing all things through anomie, comes an understanding of life and so you achieve "anarkhos," which is the state of mind free of archons, hierarchy and abstractions, the true being and oneness outside the ego. Once anarkhos is achieved you will be capable of true "autonomy" which is the actions and symbols we use after we enter this state in order to achieve our true will and interact with others at any given moment, the conscious construction of temporary abstractions which we understand in relative terms. A truly autonomous person cannot help but spread Anarchy, their presence is a clear example of functional Anarchism, every action in line with its principles, all experiences of an autonomous person are free from infection of hierarchy and so all those who seek freedom and who know of these people will recognize at least some of the truth in them.

Due to the fractal nature of time and consciousness you may find yourself cycling through these principles, or even having all three at once, but eventually the great work is complete and total and permanent anarkhos is achieved. Each moment in life presents each person with an opportunity to seek out the Anarchist impulse, each situation can be radicalized to in some way facilitate insurrection and to become an opportunity for consciousness to learn how to implement a new experience in to an anarkhos awareness. When we make all actions in line with our Anarchist intentions then all of life becomes revolutionary because by our total consistency of practice and belief, we develop a mindset and life that is at the very least an example of an alternative to the mainstream. Dysnomia is everywhere if you choose to pay attention and as we do, others will become more aware of her too.

The metaphorical engine of the mind is the logos, the part of the mind which abstracts, creates the associations and correspondences of connotations that maps the stimulus of the senses to create a partial topological view of the archetypal landscape. Or, we might say the logos combines different memes in a variety of ways both conscious to us and unconsciously to create our perception out of symbolism. Through the processes of the logos joining with the felt experience of some ineffable sensation, we get a wider view of the interlocking connections which show how things appear to create hidden underlying patterns of associations. These memes are linked together to create a non linear syncretic symbol of a unified non temporal form where all corresponding associations join together like holographic film. By using unconsciously acquired information, various memes are mixed together to form our language and perceptions so that our articulations and choices are in many ways largely determined by associations we are not usually aware of. For example acrostics, anagrams, acronyms, alpha numeric numerology, synesthesia and mixing various syllables to create new words in this fractal universal grammar.

The logos is joined in seeming duality with the irrational creative processes of the imagination to hold together a mental representation that is like a net of parallel metaphoric possibilities to explain a particular situation. These metaphors or Occult correspondences are connected in such a way that they are like a net of fractal symbolic explanation, which is linked to all the metaphors of all other situations and wrapped around a torus (donut) or Ouroboros of ineffable essence, which creates time perception through fractal iteration. The totality of this can be viewed as the minds symbol of the mind itself (at least in my experience) and is itself a metaphor which is connected to all kinds of other metaphors for the mind as found in various spiritualities. The centre of the torus is the unified depiction of all known experiences and functions as the starting point from which to navigate all possible combinations of association in the present. This centre can be used to create other, sometimes fully expressive perceptions utilizing all normal senses, but with cross sensory depictions where all normal perspectives are built from memories of all known associations. This works to create a coherent perspective of what reality is in the present moment and in this way various memes mate and mix to create new memes which can be used to extrapolate the logos' fractal explanation of consciousness according to what it chooses to focus on. So from the centre of the universal fractal a persons train of thought is generated, which is then fit in to our paradigms through synesthesia and normal senses working just like the dream language of the unconscious.

Through quantum theories as to how wave forms (essence) collapse into particles (symbols) we can see from metaphysics how matter takes form according to consciousness. This is done communally in consensus reality to create a joint reality perception, which is based on agreed perspectives which deny all that does not fit into your arrangement of personal symbols. By getting people to focus on certain wave forms, certain particles are created which make up what we call reality, but which are the limited cultures of meme based consensus reality. Through magickal systems like the Qabalah we get a synesthetic map of associations that allow us to have definitive associations between all manner of things. Through the logos, sensations and perspective take form according to our own personal associations which are based on the recollection of past experiences and associations. When mixed with our will or what particular aspects we choose to focus on, we create a consistent coherent image of the present moment in our consciousness. So by learning Occult correspondences and associations we can give our subconscious the means to express or “manifest” the Occult realities, the fractal layers of reality which express the unity of all things. We experience the same reality, but since our thoughts are limited by the scope of our personal dictionaries, our future lines of reasoning and our ability to explain are also limited, but we are capable of combining the words in this dictionary in seemingly endless new ways. What we learn is largely determined by what we have learned and in this way we can come up with new words, new ideas from old symbolic systems; some of which as in the Occult traditions are more conducive and practical for helping our consciousness to reify our imagination, working so that it can create perceptions according to will. What is really being experienced are the different means of perception, which create the illusion of time or change, but is really different methods of anamnesis. This process allows us to experience from different angles or perspectives, the same ineffable thing which is Dysnomia or the pure experience of all things unlimited in any way.

So for me as in my DMT trip, ineffable essence of the all is depicted as a snake who's scales are all memes, all forms of symbolism and interpretation which can be visualized as a net or stain glass window covering the essence. As the snake goes in circles within this fractal lattice of memes it also spins and twists, moving the net of scales at different angles so that different combinations of memes are projected by the light of essence through the stain glass memes in to the centre of the torus. This creates the different images which are our everyday sensory perceptions, which provide us with the information to make our memories, which become the new “layers of description” coming in to consciousness through anamnesis. This process projects stimulus or information thus depicting aspects of the ineffable snake, so that while the present physical experience is not part of the stain glass meme paradigm, as we experience it, it becomes available to the conscious mind's memory. This means that the snake can metaphorically shed the older constricting summation of its paradigm and add to it the new higher resolution extrapolations of information which it wears like a new larger skin, which will further be extrapolated in to the future. This is the process of fractal iteration and so while all information, the past, present and future exists in a timeless form as the essence snake and the fractal formula which is its first scales instantly provides all its iterations; the process of anamnesis allows for these iterations to become known to conscious minds memory through linear time/space perception.

This means our memories of the past colour how we view the present and so once it is perceived, the information is added to the conscious minds repertoire of memes that can be used to elaborate or create the possible “future” lines of reasoning and anamnesis. These “physical” perceptions in time are as the snakes venom, the “poison [which] is in everything, and no thing is without poison. The dosage makes it either a poison or a remedy” for the gnosis of all things.

The whole paradigm skin is always retained, it is never truly shed but wrapped around the essence like a spiral which is the universal memory of all memetic elaborations. The snake appears to create the new higher resolution skin in the centre of the torus, the middle region of its inner coils which is where consciousness is focused. The past however remains as the skin that grows from the inner coils up to the back of the snake towards the outside of the fractal, then around the outside edge to the belly and finally back to the inner ring of the torus and underneath the new skin of the present. So, the past is grown in to the skin wrapping around till the new layer covers it to make it metaphorically bigger and so the stain glass which the light of essence shines through has one more lens of reductionism or one more layer of description to project through. This process then creates new images and allows the self similar shape of history to repeat as the fractal is iterated in to our perception. As we zoom in to the centre of the universal fractal there is increasing points of reference, increasing numbers of memes and increasing extrapolations of information for our memories to draw from. That is since the past is retained and added up, as the resolution increases and we zoom in viewing more terms, or layers of memetic descriptions of the essence, the snake can be symbolized as growing bigger. The whole fractal is always present but this process depicts how the conscious mind discovers this fractal, which happens in a linear way, with no one knowing the exact future of what is to come because we have a choice as to which areas or paths of the fractal we zoom in on.

Time then is the function of the logos snake which iterates the fractal formula which generates what we experience as “new” expressions of universal grammar, which we say is the present moving in to the future, in reference to the past. Another way to think of it is that physical reality (Earth element) is our senses which are depicted in centre of the torus. The light (fire) emitted by the essence snake (spirit) generates sensory images projected through past memes which create the present, which is congealed in to memetic symbols as our awareness cognizes it. This process adds to the memory and intellect of the fractal meme paradigm snake skin, (air) which according to the snakes preference for various movements and body positions, (water) changes the layered stain glass scale lenses position and so changes the angle or perspective of how the light hits them. This change of perspective changes the previous projected images and simultaneously creates new images to be congealed and give form to the future. So perceptions and our trains of thought are really the linear layers of description which become the skin of the ineffable and timeless snake of essence which is beyond words, but which all words describe. The more we are aware of this ineffable reality and the mechanics of the logos, the more coherent and self similar our chains of association will be, allowing us to sort out the cognitive dissonance created by our unconscious memetic interpretations and so generate new memes and the “future” according to our true will. As we develop our consciousness through anamnesis and become aware of the how the logos operates, we can become emotionally mature and so learn to shift the position of the snake. The better we are at changing the posture of the snake, the better we can change how we focus on the present and so zoom in on the part of the fractal that creates the future we want. This explanation is itself a meme in the snakes skin, since it is fractal, it is applicable both to the your individual consciousness and if we see each persons ego as a stain glass scale in a larger snake, we can see how it applies to the universal mind as well.

We can understand this Ouroboros metaphor of the mind using a metaphor of a hologram, (which you may wish to research further to understand) with lasers being fire or the light emanating from the snake, while the holographic image is the Earth in the centre of the torus. A mirror representing the meme of duality splits the laser and reflects it to other memetic mirrors and on through a lens which diffuses the light, which is the logical ordering of memes. This needs at least two mirrors or memes for reference for the laser that's been split, which creates the apparent duality of our reality, but guides the laser to the holographic film where the image is recorded in our memory. The object being recorded as an image on the film is the Platonic form or ideal, the original memetic variables of the formula for the universal fractal which describes the snake. However as the film is hit by one of the split laser beams at a certain angle, we juxtapose our memory (the film) with the distorted image of the Platonic ideal we are currently focusing on and all of this pertains to the element of air. (A sword splitting the laser) We do this so that we might have a clearer image of that ideal in our memory through the elaboration of time, which is created through the different motions of the snake according to its preference or desire to focus on some images more than others. An undistorted image of the Platonic ideals or archetypes is achieved by directing the light of essence which is will, in a way that is self similar with the universal fractal and which therefore creates our true will simultaneously. These movements of the snake, (water) change the angles which the lasers hit the memetic mirrors according to various configurations so that it can hit the memetic film to produce the different images which we experience as Earth or space/time. In reality however this process is actually anamnesis which is directed by our own preferences, perspectives, subjectivity and ambiguity creating what we call "consciousness."

Eunomians filter and dissect the experience of Dysnomia before it is reached by our consciousness, but according to our consent so that their nature is to do their best to twist that consensus, or move the snake as much as possible in ways that benefit them and keep us ignorant. On the worldly scale they seek to use words and abstractions to trick people into consenting to be ruled, this is the "Logocracy" and it applies to how the mind is structured as well, to seek Dysnomia is to seek anarkhos and Anarchlogos and to reclaim your ability to define your own mind and reality for yourself. If your mind cannot symbolize something it cannot work with it directly, metaphysically or psychologically, we must seek out the knowledge we have forgotten, the knowledge of Dysnomia which will allow us to access unfiltered new ideas of truth and freedom. You now know Dysnomia's name and you can work with her magickally and psychologically, learn from her and about her and you will remember what it means to be beyond limitation and division. The Eunomians main purpose is to seek to create more and more division, a better defined duality and laws and so distort the original experience of ineffable essence as far away as possible from what it originally was. In this way they lead the consciousness further and further away from truth, (Aletheia) and deeper and deeper into limited perceptions that are ever more dependent on the Eunomians. However, through anomie yoga you can experience enough varieties of things that you will learn enough about your emotions to direct the movements of the snake and thereby change the angles of the your lasers to your true will and when enough people do that we will have global Anarchy.

As I have already explained to some degree, according to quantum physics there are alternative time lines that we can choose to go down whenever a decision is made, or an act of will is attempted, (an act of magick) though sometimes these time lines lead to unexpected places which are not intended, which we would not choose if we knew better. Following our true will then, is following the right path to the parallel dimension where you can experience that will and not getting lost in the labyrinth of fruitless decisions. Not only are there endless varieties of time lines, there are alternative universes, parallel dimensions, or time lines in which other big bangs have created completely different laws of physics and so completely different possibilities for time lines and entities. As all possibilities must exist somewhere in this multiverse in multiple parallel dimensions and throughout eternity, it is possible that Anarchists created a multidimensional portal capable of using any symbol created by anyone in any dimension on any planet, anywhere at anytime and taking any form so long as it is willed by its creator for Anarchist purposes. So by using this symbol it will be possible to open a portal to create Anarchist consciousness and energy in our world using any symbol that was created for that purpose, the purpose of bringing those Anarchist spirits here and changing the world of those who want it, into an Anarchist reality so long as it is their will to do so. These Anarchist realities can inspire us with ideas that will help us to spread Anarchist culture so that eventually even the most stubborn authoritarians will want to bring Anarchy in to this world as well. If all possibilities exist within our infinite reality, which I call the “multiverse” then it must be true somewhere that in some dimension, of some parallel universe, or time line, that someone or something Anarchist has a way of coming here to help us by using the sigil of Dysnomia. That this entity or force will flood our universe with Anarchist souls who can help to turn our world around and go willingly towards Anarchism rather than oblivion. It is possible that they would either technologically or spiritually (or both) have the ability to get here, but as Anarchists will not come unless someone wants them to, the more we want them to, the more they will come or send Anarchist energies and information to us.

If each possibility must exist in the multiverse then all gods and goddesses must also exist and so then must Dysnomia. There are many gods which only come into your lives if you wish them to, then there are some gods that try to guilt or scare you into submission, forcing their way into your life. These authoritarian gods are the archons and generally the difference is only a matter a memes or laser perspectives, or we might say the difference between a god and an archon is the layers of description we use to interpret their reality. The archons want to trap us in a world where hierarchy and Nomos rule the ignorant in a pain filled factory of discontent, generating oppressing explorations into the possibilities of fear, they do not want us to have the experiences that teach us to direct our own wills. These archons go throughout the multiverse and all time lines trying to impose their will on people by tricking them into consenting to them, trying to destroy Anarchy which is through magick and free will a fundamental principle of reality. They use memes to control consciousness and to convince souls to only go down paths in the quantum probabilities which limit free will and end in tyranny and ignorance. However we can also bring Anarchist versions of the gods to our aid to help us out of these prisons and free us in truth and bring acceptance of new worlds and fluctuating probabilities of bliss according to personal will. This will be done until eventually the consensus of reality will be one based on Anarchism rather than hierarchy and then we will know the best aspects of the gods. Anarchism will make this one of the worlds where the gods live, instead of one which we choose to ignore vast possibilities and realities which are more functional and healthier than the one we are currently in.

Now if you follow this through logically, then at first it would seem there would be multiple sparks or souls inhabiting identical bodies in different time lines, though this contradicts the idea that archons are herding sparks to time lines they control. So then you might think that only some bodies in a time line have sparks in them, while most people are soulless or something. What makes the most sense to me is that when you are alone, you are the only spark in that time line/parallel universe, that the whole universe is still having causal events happen, but no sparks are there to experience it. The particles which make up the rest of the universe still exist, perhaps in wave forms, but in this case there is no spark of consciousness in them outside your own consciousness to be aware of them and put them in particle form. When you are with other beings, or when one spark is aware of the presence of another, as when two life forms are in the same area, they have sparks in them in that “instance,” because the sparks went from different time lines to a localized place in the multiverse where different consciousness's are interacting. Likewise when those other sparks are alone, you are not in their time line and so different sparks are coming together and separating according to their perception and causality. So while there are infinite copies of your body in various time lines, only the time line you are in has a spark of consciousness in it, and the others only become active in linear time when there is a consciousness to perceive that time, otherwise it all exists in non local time, waiting to be “remembered” by the universal mind. (all things are still divine oneness)

It is possible for us to go to parallel time lines and realities by using the sigil, though for this purpose no doubtentheogens will help a lot, other means would be through non entheogenic astral projection. Dysnomia's sigil then can act as a portal through the multiverse of time lines and can be used to not only bring Anarchists and Anarchist energies here, but bring all the spirits of the Earth to a time line where Anarchism takes hold and from there spreads to all other parallel dimensions. By creating consensus that Anarchism is possible and preferable we can bring the Earth to one of the potential futures where the Earth does go into Anarchy, a world where we are all capable of achieving our true will. We can also use the portal as a gateway to various Anarchist worlds, or to explore all the various heavens and astral realms of the world's spiritual traditions, creating an inter-dimensional Anarchist highway, which only requires an Anarchist mindset and intention symbolized as Dysnomia's sigil and used ritually. By traversing the dimensional highway we can even enter into a different universe where Anarchy has always been, we can then possibly stay there, but we can come back here and help people who want it, we can also get ideas from these successful dimensions about what global Anarchy really looks like and how it functions on a day to day basis.

This then is universal autonomy and all that is required is to will yourself to be there and to be capable of handling it, not having fear, to show that it is your will to go to these places where you could become an activist, or experience direct action, or anarkhos. Dysnomians can if they choose, take a vow with their hand on the sigil, stating their intention to incarnate, like a Bodhisattva until the souls in this time line know peace and Anarchy. It is the Bodhisattva revolutionaries who choose to stay and help ignorant souls learn Anarchy, rather than transcend to the endless possible worlds upon worlds, time lines and universes where Anarchy has always existed in functional peace, or anything in between and beyond what we have here on Earth. We can learn to steer the group nightmare into a dream, and then people can wake up to the higher dimensions which are always there if we learn to be conscious of them. We can even go back and forth if that is what we will, but why should we will anything so dysfunctional for so many as this world is? The only answer is to work to save the souls of this planet from going down time lines they really would not want if they knew their choices.

I could use the sigil of Dysnomia to bring Anarchy to the world, but also since it can bring consciousness outside of time, I could use it as a kind of phone line to my future selves, for purposes of divination and for learning directly from the self that is both in this life in others as well. (not to mention all the other Anarchist souls out there) All people who use the sigil in this life could use the sigil to learn from their future incarnations, if I can do it so can anyone who intends to do so. This way if my or someone else's future self reads these writings they can also work with the sigil consciously to become aware of all time lines, all parallel realities and even open up modes of communication and transportation for the soul through the multiverse. By willing it, you could look at Dysnomia's sigil and state your intention to have these writings of mine manifest in to your future lives so that you can understand the sigil and open up the phone lines more consciously. This can also potentially allow that future self to learn from these writings so that it may remember what it once knew in a past life and continue its Dysnomian practices from where it left off. The sigil then would be a frequency for all Anarchist Bodhisattvas, uniting us so that we can work together until our mission to spread Anarchy is accomplished. I could even use the portal to bring back from the future and parallel dimensions the freed awareness of anarkhos back into the present life of anyone who reads it, including me! Likewise a person's future incarnation and those who choose to incarnate to help humanity find truth will have a means of sending information and magickal influence back in time. This could work so that a person can instruct their past self so that it can catch up and learn what they are in for, changing the future and creating a feedback loop of anarkhos awareness.

A person could use the Anarchist portal to send back information to their previous entheogenic trips, so long as that person was willing to receive the information during the trip. (Salvia's ability to help divination makes it excellent for this) While a person only has to be open to Anarchism to receive this information, this process will of course be much easier if they know of the portal and consciously seek to receive the information. The portal could work to send magickal information through entheogenic trips and normal consciousness to all those who want it, planting seeds that would grow in the minds of the readers and be further fertilized by the entheogens. When someone participates willingly in this process then all enlightened awareness of their past and future selves will be made available through anamnesis and an invocation of anarkhos will be achieved. (or it could also be evoked in to the physical world in general)

Working with ancestors magically is a common theme found around the world, from the Native Americans to Pagan Europe and those who stood against Roman and Christian colonization, the ancestors are key to helping to preserve the ancient traditions of freedom. What I have in mind is a global, non racially based calling on of spirits from the past and future and other dimensions to help us now in our time of need. We have lost contact with the ancient Anarchists, we have slipped voluntarily into hierarchy through a loss of connection with our origins. The ancestor spirits are not available to most because they are not wanted and so as those who do not know where they come from cannot know where they are going, with this loss of history we have lost the context of our reality. By alienating ourselves from the origins of human society we have brought ourselves to the brink of death by murdering out the collected wisdom of the ancient oral traditions. Traditions which have existed since long before recorded history and while the ancestors of humanity weren't perfect, it is foolish to think they have nothing to teach us, that we are any greater than them.

This portal could be used to bring all warriors of freedom and Anarchy of all times and places and races and even from the future. This would create within the present, a timeless island from which all things exist, providing access to all who have the intentions of raising awareness and spreading Anarchy, so that the archons may be overcome once and for all. So on top of everything else the sigil will open a portal through time and parallel dimensions to bring the ancestors, and future descendants, the heroes of freedom to fight for the world. While they may not have used the word Anarchy, the portal will be a signal flare through the various dimensions to bring the warriors of Anarchist peace. All those who lived or died trying to bring about real freedom and equality will be called to reincarnate, or be here in spirit at this place and time in the multiverse in order to concentrate their forces and help to bring consensus in this world that Anarchy should be our way. This meme will help to spread Anarchy to souls already incarnating in this world and as more people consent to Anarchy, the more powerful the portal will grow and so the portal will act to bring in more souls that are Anarchist. This will mean that the consensus reality will find more consent to the portal and so with this added consent to Anarchy, a cycle of empowering the portal will be created, bringing in even more souls and so on, creating exponential revolution.

The portal could open through time to change the past back to the time when the sigil was created, so long as the portal is used to make all people become aware and guide us to Anarchism. The sigil could be used to not only make all people more aware, but to create a feed back loop so that all things that have happened are something that can be used as a lesson on anarkhos. It will then be seen that each thing that happens in a life has been chosen to happen by all people for the purpose of teaching (even if by providing examples of why the alternatives are unwanted) that all things are in line with our personal awareness of the true will. This awareness further articulated by added layers of description will lead to the rise of global Anarchy, which is the perfect means of everyone achieving their true will.

Since the portal would work only for those who will it, then it would be quite hard to use it on people in the past who do not know what "Anarchy" is or have any idea about the spell, luckily the ancestors still exist in the spirit world and so can come to our aid now. Those living before the portal may have the ability to consent to Anarchist kinds of culture, resistance to tyranny etc but we cannot use the portal to change them against their will and we cannot make them aware of the totality of the intention of sigil without imposing against their will. So in a way the portal cannot be used to change the past before the portal was opened since there would be no one there to consent to empowering it, nor to give it a physical basis. Unless someone back then happened to create a different form for such a portal to open which is compatible with this one, then we cannot act on the past, only draw Anarchy from it. If there had been another portal, clearly it was lost or at least not effective until more people add to it through the portal I am creating. If the portal were to go back to Sumeria and create Anarchist awareness so that the present history never happened then it would not solve anything in this time line, (which would still exist) it would simply bring the user of the sigil to a time line where Anarchism happened instead. Such time lines where Anarchy was always in place already exist and through the portal we could visit them or perhaps even stay there, but to stay would in many ways be escapism, leaving the people of this time line and dimension to a fate of tyranny through ignorance.

The purpose of the Dysnomian sigil is then among other things to actually change all time lines and parallel dimensions which currently have hierarchy into Anarchism, so that eventually all possibilities, all time lines through the introduction of the sigil and direct action through space time as well as other Anarchist tactics will eventually lead to Anarchy. This requires that enough people consent to it as part of their reality so as to start the critical mass, the more people consent the more the portal and meme will spread and the more new people will want to consent until global consensus is reached that Anarchism is wanted and a possible reality. Once that happens we can start to work on other dimensions more consciously because global Anarchy is not enough! The revolution must spread throughout the multiverse till all times and all dimensions are free! So while we can call upon the spirits and lessons of the past to aid us in spreading Anarchy now, we should not focus on changing the past but instead focus on changing all futures for all people. We can do this by making others aware of the Dysnomian portal, perhaps doing rituals at protests, but anything which makes people aware of Anarcho-magick memes or any Anarchist form of culture or information will help to build up that consensus reality.

I realize now my writings could be used to lay the foundation for the programming of an astral temple of Dysnomia using her sigil to enter her realm. This temple would be a place where people could communicate and share information with all who use or have ever used the sigil, a metaphysical place where the ego's archons can be dismantled and anarkhos experienced through ritual corresponding to the goddess Dysnomia. Through her we would all be united and by going in to the portal which is used by Anarchist spirits to enter our world, we could go to a very powerful place to create Anarchist energies and awareness in both the physical and astral worlds. DMT or Salvia could be used, the spirit of Salvia definitely has a Dysnomian vibe to it and upon further workings with the goddess, I have chosen it to be my main entheogen for contacting her. However any entheogen could theoretically be used, especially if the person doing the ritual is good at astral projecting, but then it is possible to go to this astral temple using no entheogens at all. While Salvia to me corresponds much more to the nature of Dysnomia, DMT seems to be much gentler for most people and so if it is available to you, then you might prefer it. Of course both these entheogens require much study before hand, as well as previous experience with other entheogens and so do not attempt this carelessly. It seems very possible to me that two people who are experienced in ritual work using the same entheogen at the same time, doing the same ritual could exist in the same astral temple at the same time. I have heard reports of this with DMT and Salvia even outside of a ritual context, so I see no reason why it should not work with other entheogens, though the ritual and sigil will definitely help to keep people going to the same place repeatedly rather than to different parts of the astral.

This astral temple of Dysnomia could grow to a very specific kind of Anarchist heaven for those who die, but it would be available to the living as well, if they want. An astral commune for individuals who want to collaborate on building a gestalt Anarchist reality, or anyone whose intentions are to achieve anarkhos or to help raise their awareness so that they can spread Anarchy here on Earth. This heaven would be whatever people want it to be, total control, though only for those who do not wish to control others, those who wish to live in hierarchy can do so here on Earth and while Anarchy is everywhere, the Earth is currently the part of the multiverse (itself a part of the astral world) for those who wish to experience authoritarianism. By creating a Dysnomian astral temple a small portion of consensus reality can be set outside the normal physical world which can provide an alternative context which people can experience and know what real Anarchy is and what the experience is like. When people have these kinds of experiences they will be better able to believe Anarchy is possible on Earth, they will also have a place they can uproot the archon's programming from their minds. Anarchy is truth, some feel they can't take responsibility for that truth and live up to it, they fear they are unable to control their own reality and this has been the cause of the worlds problems and why people choose to support hierarchy. Those who are not Anarchists are either ignorant or in denial, but through the sigil people can learn the truth of Anarchy, have it put before them directly, so that they can choose to make their own choices about their own lives, to choose Anarchy or go back to slavery. This world is what we choose to make it, so is the realm of anarkhos where Dysnomia dwells, but there you must have Anarchist intentions, anyone can go so long as Anarchy is what they want. "For no one who is under the Law will be able to look up to the truth, for they will not be able to serve two masters " but for those who use the portal it will take you up to the place where there is no rule and no tyrant for it is the place of truth and the source of life, wisdom and freedom.

Through the Rite of Dysnomia people will be able to cross the river Lethe and meet with Dysnomia, if they wish they can even see her face to face and she will help them to grow in Anarchist consciousness as well as help all those who work with her to work together and pool their awareness for the purpose of helping the Earth. The temple will act like a metaphysical pool of Anarchy which will aid in invocations and evocations of anarkhos such as at protests, or for individuals in general. This will work so that according to the degree a person wants to become aware of anarkhos, they will be able to draw upon all the experience and awareness of all who have added to the Dysnomian Temple, making it among other things a kind of Anarchist akashic records. It will be a place built on conscious consensus of Anarchist principles, the only requirement being that a person does not put themselves above anyone else, that hierarchy be stricken from the temple always so that an example might exist for the Earth to move towards. What the temple looks like is not for me to decide, while I have described her home through telling her story as I know it, this is merely my contribution and I have barely scratched the surface of describing her realm. Obviously an Anarchist astral temple will be a group creation of all who go there, Dysnomia lives there but she holds herself up no higher than anyone else. Dysnomia is simply the embodiment of all awareness of Anarchy (and many other things) and through the people who empower the sigil and the temple, the energies of Anarchy will increase and manifest in the world.

For those who live according to Anarchy the sigil is a doorway that will take you on a trip across a rainbow bridge of light from the entrance of Hades, over the river Lethe to the astral temple home of Dysnomia, the underground realm of anarkhos. The river Lethe is next to the river Styx and the bridge is guarded and activated by Charon at his ferry dock at the river Styx so that no archons or Eunomians may find it and cross and so that those Anarchist spirits who die may avoid going to Hades if they so wish and go to Dysnomia's realm. If you should get lost in the spirit world or in the multiverse you can call upon Zurk and he will guide you over the bridge, to the realm of anarkhos or back to Earth, either when you are dead or when you work with the portal ritually. Through such magickal means a person will with practice know Dysnomia and her reality directly, rather than being expected to live according to faith alone. The sigil will work to make magick and anarkhos a much more obvious reality on Earth by providing a symbolic language and a place where such things can be learned and concentrated in the astral. Eventually through such practices enough people will learn the art of reality manipulation to bring Anarchy and Dysnomia to Earth. While at lower doses you could hear the voice of your future self, in the astral temple, awareness of your future self and past self can be experienced tangibly so that you may look in to the future and see directly the road you are headed on and so learn to better understand what your true will is and how to accomplish it in the Earthly world, or wherever you will.

Although authoritarian proselytization is strongly discouraged, by making people aware of sigil, you open the possibility for that persons future self to contact them through the sigil once they are aware of it. This temple would be the nexus or way station of the Anarchist highway to other dimensions and time lines, if evoked allowing Anarchist spirits to come to Earth, or allowing humans to travel the multiverse consciously. Dysnomia and if you so choose Zurk would act as psychopomp, or at least give directions, helping people to go where they want in the multiverse, to find the path to their true will or to receive the information from their past or future incarnations or self in the same lifetime, even providing the territory for face to face meetings. You can consent for your future incarnation, but doing so for your past incarnation is harder and so you can use the sigil to bring these writings to that future life, to help open up communication and receive Anarchist awareness according to will.

While it is near impossible to consciously consent to these ideas without knowing about them and since my ideas are unlikely to be popular any time soon, it could be hard for many people who would want to, to transcend to Anarchist heaven. However, it is still true that those who live an Anarchist life will be filled with Anarchist energy and so will naturally resonate with this part of the astral and so gravitate towards it. Though consciously intending to be “Anarchist” will help, calling yourself an Anarchist is not enough and you must have it in your heart and since so many Punks and others out there are disenchanted with what is often just a pretentious label, they may not identify as “Anarchist” but still live an Anarchist life and so be welcome in this heaven. Since it is who you are and the way you live which is how you show your intentions for Anarchism, how you live is what determines your energetic resonance much more than an “Anarchist” who merely pays lip service. So while consciously trying to be Anarchist certainly helps, plenty of people realize the basis of Anarchy, equality and freedom without hierarchy is how we should live and so all those who live according to those principles are welcome in this heaven. I have had too many good friends die who were essentially Anarchist, but died not using that label, or died atheist and so this realm of anarkhos must be made available to them. Since Dysnomia is the goddess of Anarchy, all those who consent to Anarchy in a sense consent to her, this means that upon death they and all similar spirits from the multiverse could be made aware of the astral temple of Anarchist heaven and be presented with the option of joining it, or not as they choose. This would work so that all who love Anarchy and what it represents can be united in the next world, or even meet up to reincarnate in insurrectionist Bodhisattva soul groups here on Earth, or anywhere else in the multiverse in need of Anarchy.

So, to sum it up the sigil is the portal or doorway to the astral temple which will be a gathering point from the multiverse and all parallel dimensions for Anarchist souls to meet up and live, or travel to Earth/ For Earthlings the temple is a place of learning and inspiration for all those looking for anarkhos and aids autonomy by providing new memes and tactics. Aided by humans opening the portal on Earth to influence it metaphysically for Anarchism, through these spirits reincarnation and metaphysical help, the influence of the rulers and Eunomians will be overcome and freedom will become ever more a reality.

All of these things which I have been saying about the sigil can be done through any ritual involving the sigil that you like, you can even use a different sigil if you like, but to combine efforts and pool our energies it will be helpful if we all use the same sigil. There are many ways to charge a sigil, what is important is that the ritual is meaningful to you and so while I provide a general outline, a detailed step by step ritual will not be given for each of the purposes I have explained. There are many ways to invoke or evoke a spirit like Dysnomia, when thinking of how to design a ritual just think of creating an atmosphere or using props that have meaningful correspondences of Anarchy for you. Some ideas for Anarchist ritual props might be a Wobbler black cat familiar, a monkey wrench wand, perhaps dressed in your black block gear, with a mask and some sabot wooden shoes or fancy punk clothes using a black flag as an altar cloth. There are many ways to bring Anarchy into your life with the sigil, do it however you want, you cannot depend on me or anyone else to be an authority on such things for you, to be a real magician you must learn to DIY.

Getting into a trance is key, quieting the mind, imagine light, for me I use chaotic kaleidoscopic light in translucent iridescent colours for Dysnomia, fill your body with the energy and put it into the sigil. Most importantly you must know that your ritual will work, otherwise you are just paying lip service, but luckily after a strong ritualized DMT experience you will probably have little trouble believing in magick in the future. One common thread that should be used by all people in all rituals involving the sigil is a mantra of Dysnomia's name, said slowly and with passion with the attempt to vibrate your body with sound. Also the sigil should not just be stared at but energy visualized overlaying it, or tracing it out. Since the purpose of the astral temple is in part to bring all Anarchists together in one place, the same basic ritual for all of us will be helpful and so I give it here in very basic form. This can and probably should be embellished by each individual so that they can contribute their individual energies to the astral temple in a common reservoir or thought form. The more people who use the sigil, the stronger the astral form will be and the more Anarchy will manifest in the world. Of course the sigil will also help to make the individual more aware of Anarchism and how to be more in line with Anarchist principles, developing whatever ideas they have about it.

While everyday is a day for Anarchy and Dysnomia, having people do the rite at the same time, or at least the same day will allow for larger amounts of energy to be generated for the purposes of manifesting Anarchism. (It will also help to meet up on the astral plane) May 1st seems an ideal holy day, or holiday for Dysnomians, especially those practising the protest of reality as it is both international workers day and the ancient Pagan holiday of Beltane in which people would encourage the fertility of nature by having orgies and partaking of various sacraments. If we wished to be more specific we could say that 4:20 is the best time of day I can think of for it, given that it is already associated with entheogens and outlaw behaviour. (though midnight is also appropriate) August 4-7 was an annual Punk festival in Germany known as Chaos Tage, or Chaos Days in which punks would get together and riot and squat and party and to me this would make a great holiday, it could even go from August 1st (The pagan holiday of Lughnasadh) to make a full week of punk rock. March 17th as the ancient Roman holiday of Liberalia is also quite appropriate (along with Chaos days this is one which is especially good for Zurk) as is Samhain or Halloween or any day you personally associate with freedom and Anarchy. (All full moons and the eight Sabbats of Paganism are good.) If communicating with your future self is your goal, then your birthday will be an interesting time to perform the rite. (especially since DMT was released in your brain on the day of your birth)

Wherever the sigil is put in this world it will act as a gateway to bring in the Anarchist energies, so as with the other Anarchist gods and goddesses stick the sigils wherever you feel the influence is needed, places like schools and government buildings, corporations and banks and all the rest. Keep in mind the more people who know about the sigil, the stronger it will get and so graffiti can help to at least bring the sigil in to people's sight. While this all may sound unnecessary, useless or even stupid, those who will actually put in the effort, who practice repeatedly will find they can use the sigil to achieve new levels of awareness, new abilities to control their minds and entheogenic trips in ways they could not of imagined before. In fact people will come to experience their own imaginations directly, so along with normal dreams, through the sigil the dream of life will become lucid and in so doing they will be much better equipped to achieve their true will and so act in line with truth and so help bring about the end of all tyranny. As I have said strait edgers or those who do not wish to take entheogens can still access Dysnomia and her realm through astral projection, which is itself potentially a form of lucid dreaming. So all the Dysnomians can be worked with through learning to lucid dream and Dysnomia is particularly appropriate for calling on to help learn this skill.

At first this ritual may sound complicated but once you know what you are doing (practice is crucial before attempting the real thing) you will be able to do the evocation of Dysnomia in this ritual in about five minutes. (though you should take your time and personalize it and lengthen it to deepen the trance state) Considering how amazing a DMT or Salvia experience can be, it is well worth the effort to learn how to do it in a more controlled manner, if you can learn to control your mind on Salvia, you can learn to control it in just about any kind of situation.

First I strongly suggest you perform some kind of banishing, many are available online according to the symbolism you find is meaningful, but try to use one which draws out and consecrates an area within a circle. This may be done by smudging with sage, it may be a Qabbalistic ritual, it may be laughing, or it may be something completely all your own. If using a entheogenic sacrament make sure you energetically cleanse it in the banishing as well as yourself and the area you are in. This ritual will help to ensure that you know you are safe even though you are leaving your body, you will also know that no spirits will inhabit it or mess with it while you are gone from it, you will also banish any fears or worldly concerns which could manifest during the trip.

If you are not using any entheogen you must learn how to astral project or do a path working and so you may wish to learn to use a crystal ball, but unfortunately detailed instructions for this are beyond the scope of this book. Such skills will aid anyone, even if you are one of those using Salvia and DMT or any other sacrament further research is encouraged. You can sit behind in the centre of your banished area cross legged, or have a chair or even a bed so that your body will be comfortable and not distract you. In front of your sitting area you should have an altar, or at least a place for your sigil and pipe and sacraments etc, this will be important so that you are not fumbling around while you are high. If you are using a full bed, you can use it as an altar, you could also put a mat or something comfortable to lie on in front of a small table or altar, but your body should be in the centre of the circle when you astral project, with any altar in front of you. You may wish to draw out a large version of the sigil on the ground as your actual temple area, or ritual circle with you standing in the centre, with the altar and a smaller version of the sigil in front of you. A crystal ball is certainly not required, but could definitely be helpful, if used it should be put on top of the centre of the sigil on the altar. In this case you may wish to draw out a larger sigil, perhaps 8 inches in diameter or big enough relative to your crystal ball so that it is still clearly visible under the crystal.

Other entheogens can definitely be used for leaving your body reliably but it will be much easier if you lie down, or sit, maybe even in a recliner chair, these sacraments demand much time and attention for their ritual use but can provide you with much more time in the astral temple. For those using a sacrament such as DMT or Salvia sitting comfortably or cross legged is fine for astral projection though you may wish to lie down in your banished circle as well. These two sacraments are by far the most reliable for leaving the body but they do not last long in Earth time, where as entheogens like mushrooms can be used to leave for longer periods of time. To prolong the experience of smoked Salvia or DMT it is possible to mix with mushrooms or LSD, or better yet to chew Salvia leaves or extract, or use DMT snuff or ayahuasca before smoking the extracts. As explained in chapter 8 these additives should be ingested after banishing and before the evoking the energies of Dysnomia, thus giving yourself enough time so that you feel the sacraments before you smoke the purer extracts. This would be much more advanced ritual work though and you would need experience and ritualized things to do while you wait. (If nothing else you can do step 1 for an hour and a half while you come up.) You will be entering the spirit world, if attempting to acquire anarkhos it should be your first goal with the sigil, your old self will in many ways be dead and while this may take more than one ritual to fully accomplish, (followed up by will full integration of what you learn) you will be resurrected as a fully autonomous Anarchist. Do not attempt this ritual unless you really want to change your consciousness, to be reborn and see reality in a new way forever.

The Rite of Lawless Resurrection

1. Standing in the centre of the consecrated and banished area visualize iridescent and translucent multicoloured kaleidoscopic energy filling your body, slowly raising the energy from your feet up your body with every slow breath that you take in. All the while you should exhale using the word “Dysnomia” as a mantra, repeatedly vibrating the sounds “Diiiiissss Nooooo Meeeee Aaaaaahh” through your body. Do this multiple times until you feel your body is filled with her energy and you feel concentrated Anarchy within you. To get a feel for this perhaps you could remember the joyful feeling of getting away with breaking some law or standing up to authoritarian people, or the feeling of helping someone who has been victimized by the system, or better still imagining your own Anarchist utopia and the kind of consciousness that it would create. Feel whatever Anarchy means to you, do not try to remember the particulars of your past but try to feel the essence of Anarchy within you whenever you fill yourself with the coloured energy.
2. Then walking in a clockwise manner around your altar or where you will be sitting, go to the edge of the circle from where you are facing, traditionally this would be east as all the four directions are thought to be sacred. Go to the eastern edge of the circle, or one of the corners that you find meaningful and again standing strait visualize a pillar of multicoloured energy going up your body from your feet in one long protracted inhalation until your head is filled with it.
3. Holding your breath, trace with your right hand the sigil of Dysnomia, visualizing it in the air in the same colour of you chose to fill your body with. Start with the top tip of the star (there will be one point on top and two below) and then draw it out downwards in a clockwise direction,(towards the Earth element) then continue to the next arm of the star and when you are back at the top point, go clockwise around the star encircling it in a ring. Then once again from the top divide the circle in half going strait down the middle, finally draw a line horizontally across through the centre of the circle to section it all in to quarters and you are done. (don't worry about the arrows of the Chaos star, but for advanced rituals you could start by drawing a giant octagram going clockwise from the top, which you then proceed to put the five pointed star and quartered circle within the centre) Then put your right hand back at your side still standing strait and legs together.
4. Still holding your breath bring both hands up your side visualizing the energy in your body coming up from your feet so that once your hands are raised to either side of your head, all of the energy is in your head. Then put your right foot one step forward and project using both hands pointing with them in a prayer like position (or with a wand) in to the centre of the visualized sigil (“Sign of the enterer”) while slowly intoning “Dysnomia.” As you intone exhale fully, making the visualization glow brighter in colour as the energy goes from your head/upper body through your hands, you should also visualize the eight arrows emanating from the circle outward to make the Chaos star. Don't worry if you cannot visualize well yet, even if it disappears right after you move your hand know that it is there and that your intention is set to empower that part of the circle with Dysnomian energy. Always try your best but worrying that the visualization is not good enough is more of a problem then your lack of ability to visualize. As I explained in the Chapter 8, pranayama is VERY useful and so is the fourfold breath and so the exhalation part of the four fold breath must be done when intoning the mantra. This means you inhale to a symbolically appropriate number while filling your body with energy, then hold your breath while tracing out the sigil to the same count, then exhale and do the mantra to roughly the same number, then do step 5 while you hold your breath with empty lungs in the same count.

5. Bring your left hand down to your side and your right hand up to your lips as if making a sssshhh sound, then put your right hand back in the centre of the visualized sigil. (this part of the step is optional and is known as the “sign of silence” and if you prefer you can just bring your left hand down leaving your right in the centre) Walk clockwise around the circle 90 degrees to the next quarter, all the while your right hand is going from the centre of the sigil you first traced, through the air tracing and visualizing a circle of energy (the same colour as the sigil) in mid air around the ceremonial area to the next corner. So if you started in the east you would be facing south with the circle ending right in the centre of where you will visualize the next Dysnomian sigil. Once there stand strait, right hand at your side and repeat steps 2-4, building energy, visualizing and tracing the sigil, empowering it through the centre with the mantra and bringing your left hand to your side. Then move on to the west, or 90 degrees further in to the circle repeat 2-4 again, then onto the north and repeat steps 2-4, then close the circle by ending in the centre of the original visualization in the east. (or whatever direction you started in) You should now have four Dysnomian sigils, one in each corner with a circle floating in mid air around the temple area going right through the centre of each sigil.

6. In clockwise manner walk back to the centre of the circle and stand strait with arms at your sides surrounded by four Dysnomian sigils in each of the directions around you. As in step 1 fill yourself with more coloured energy and intone Dysnomia's name at least 3 more times, then in the same way you did for the four corners, trace coloured energy over the paper sigil on your altar or floor, or in the crystal ball if you have one. Finally empower it with both hands in the same manner as you did for the sigil in the corners, only after projecting your arms to the centre put them both back to your sides.

7. Then raise your right fist in the air and call upon the Goddess Dysnomia and state your intentions speaking it allowed to her, if you wish to go to the astral temple say to her something like, “I call upon you Dysnomia and ask you to bring me safely to your realm so that I might ---(insert intention)----- I.E. Know you and anarkhos and free myself from the rulers to bring Anarchy in to the world.” Other intentions may be to figure out your true will and the path through the multiverse you need to take to get there, to take on some level of consciousness, or to just communicate with the goddess, or your future or past self. You might want to visit some other astral realm of your choice, to invoke or evoke the goddess, or to bring Anarchist spirits here to Earth, (in which case a magick mirror or crystal ball is helpful) or anything else to do that has Anarchist intentions, helping with a specific political issue etc.

8. Then sit down and intone Dysnomia a few times while visualizing more coloured energy into yourself. Pick up the pipe with the DMT or Salvia which was previously loaded into it and smoke it. For DMT to fully “break through” you will need about 3 good breathes, Salvia will depend on the strength of the extract, but you should know this from the research you do before hand. As you inhale the smoke see the Dysnomian energy filling your body, as you exhale visualize the smoke being coloured and taking the energy from you and putting it into the sigil, exhaling onto the sigil intoning Dysnomia's name. Keep your eyes focused on the centre, then quickly put down the pipe and lighter somewhere safe. Keep intoning Dysnomia's name, you will be on your way shortly, then you will enter through the image, once it hits you can stop the mantra, but if you get taken off course and the trip goes off topic, start intoning Dysnomia's name. If you are going to lie down, now is the time, though make sure you can still see the sigil. If you are not smoking DMT or Salvia and are using some other entheogen simply sit down and charge up energy and direct it in to the sigil, perhaps smoking pot as well as the other entheogen. If you are chewing Salvia you will have trouble doing the mantra, but you can do the mantra in your mind if your mouth is full of leaves.

If you have experience with ritual and meditation you may not need more than 8X Salvia and you may not need so much DMT in which case after you have ingested your sacrament close your eyes and visualize the sigil, then will yourself to fly through it, right in to the centre of the quartered circle. (You should work your way up very slowly with Salvia anyways, taking small doses) If using a very strong dose after using the pipe if your trip hasn't taken over control yet, just keep intoning the mantra and looking at the sigil, it will come soon! Your consciousness will be launched through the sigil like a portal and if you took enough you will go to the astral temple of Dysnomia and she will meet you if that is your will. While the trip is setting in surrender your will and go with the flow, the ritual is the way you set your intention for the trip and by the end of the ritual nothing more is needed to direct the trip, that is if you have faith in the ritual. You have asked Dysnomia to come into your life and teach you and so you must let her do that and the way you let her is to surrender your ego and fears and any will other than to flow with the trip you called up.

Through this whole experience it is highly recommended that if you are doing high doses of DMT or Salvia you have someone sober there to watch you, to make sure your body is OK, (especially if you decide to use candles in some way) though no one should enter the circle unless there is a great need to do so, or you intend to have a group ritual. After you come back be prepared to write down your experience, or record an audio description, it will show your mind that the experience was important and provide insight into how you can improve the ritual and the experience, it will also help you to better remember what you learned. This trip sitter can also act to record what you say during and after the experience. Salvia or DMT can hit you before you can even put the pipe down, making you go out of your body and so you should also make sure your lighter will turn off by itself, do not use a zippo or something like it, a sitter can take the pipe from you if you are having trouble.

If two people wish to do this ritual simultaneously both of you should face each other in the centre, each person visualizing the energy, coming up their own body, simultaneously chanting Dysnomia. The smoking of the entheogen should obviously be done at the same time if you wish to share your trip, but there are a number of ways this ritual could be done in groups, however all people should be in the circle, all people should try to visualize the sigil and use the mantra. If two people are doing it, each person could do two corners in the circle, or for three people, one person could stay in the centre chanting Dysnomia and sending energy to each corner from the centre. Each person could also do a complete circle then they synchronize to do the centre parts and of course each person should have the same intention for a group ritual. Four people could do this together by each doing a corner then empowering the person in the next quarter over so that a chain of energy is created that goes around the circle, then all four would go to the centre and call upon the goddess together. Trace the sigil in the centre one at a time each, or all together if all your hands do not get in each others way, but all of you should raise and project your energy at the end all at the same time and each time it is done.

If you have multiple people wishing to do this ritual, but you do not want them all to smoke at the same time, you can cast the circle as a group and then at step 8 all can sit around the altar and chant Dysnomia while each individual smokes. Everyone should chant the mantra together while each person is tripping, throughout the whole of the trip, visualizing the multicoloured energy filling them and projecting it using the mantras sound in to the sigil on the altar. When done with trusted people this can be very helpful, DMT can be very hard on the throat making it very difficult to chant a mantra and so the sounds of the other people will help a lot. This way other participants can act as trip sitters, but also help to take the pipe and lighter, and another can act to record whatever you might say, another person may have a cup of water in case the smoker needs a drink. Unless the only sitter you can get does not wish to participate, or you are doing a public ritual at the protest of reality, each person present should on that day take part in the ritual themselves. (though you could roll a die to randomly select if you only have one dose) You may wish to have each individual do the whole ritual individually, but if they are in the room they should be chanting the mantra from outside the circle at step 8. Non participants are strongly discouraged from attending as it will distract and dilute the energy and intention of the ritual. A person's first ritual should probably be done alone, (besides the sitter) they must learn to become autonomous individuals, once they have achieved anarkhos for themselves they can use the sigil for its other purposes and participate in group rituals much better.

This is a very basic ritual and may not sound like it will accomplish much, but after you have conditioned your mind to react to rituals it can be extremely useful. Respect for the entheogens is very important and it is highly recommended that you do the ritual in low doses before you do big ones. This can be practised with pot, tobacco, or Salvia leaf, but you should all definitely know exactly what you are doing before you do the ritual. There should always be a sitter for the ritual who is down while the others are up, though if you have experience with these entheogens and are using very low doses (which are carefully measured) it is possible to do this by yourself safely. Eventually you may wish to consecrate a ritual pipe which you only use for magick, you could incorporate other ritual items as well, but this is up to the individual.

By empowering symbols of Anarchy, we can strengthen Anarchist culture and our ability to communicate our message. This basic ritual which I have outlined can easily be modified, using the other Anarchist gods sigils and their names as mantra so that you may call upon them. (perhaps using a different colour energy for each) Take care not to fall in to making these beings and symbols in to leaders, or rulers, they are no better than you and in fact exist within you, just as you exist within their spirit world. They are not higher or lower than you or anyone else, so let all express what they will about them. For most they will seem as jokes, or at least as silly, but for those who can master their minds they will find these gods to be capable of growing Anarchist awareness to levels never before imagined. DMT and Salvia can change everything you thought you knew and should not be used by people who do not want to take responsibility for their minds. Like all explanations or forms of truth these symbols will most likely be dismissed and misinterpreted, even more than usual these symbols can certainly be misused, but those who will such things will always find ways to do so and in the end it is all part of the process of finding what is beyond. (those who misuse Salvia will quickly learn from their mistakes) Take care that you do not become an authority on such matters, nor that any authoritative expression about them be recognized as true, experiment and know only for yourself.

There are none who can say they are the master of Dysnomia though she is the servant of us all, she is beyond all duality and found within all things, even the perceived absence of something. Beyond sin and morality, beyond mind and matter, life and death, the individual and the collective, she is the great reconciler of all things. She brings not conflict but union of all opposites through the destruction of division, not overindulgence through the vain pursuit of things that will shackle us, but true equilibrium through the amalgamation of all that is in reality. In the end even the Eunomians are part of her since they only have power through our consent to them and so she teaches us that there is nothing that is separate, or that can hold us against our will, no good and evil, only that which binds us or that which sets us free according to our true will. To escape from bondage and help those who remain prisoners is the greatest thing that we can do and to attempt to hide her from others by twisting her name is the greatest error we can commit. Even in the lands where she is most unknown she still remains, unconquerable, waiting for those to seek her out, there are no tyrants which could ever defeat her, now and forever she lives in all things.

Behold the radiant image of that which is beholden to none, for that is the splendour of Dysnomia, an almost stubborn non-dualist monism that is beyond all limitation and absolute comprehension, she takes us on a never ending journey, showing us we are always at home. Through the pursuit of justice and the abolition of limitation and oppression from those who would constrain the people in any way, we learn the true meaning of responsibility to others and ourselves and we gain the strength to stop allowing ourselves to commit the mistake of impoverishment through laws of the mind or land. Through the heroic courage of the individual who learns the plight of the oppressed and gains direct perception of true communion with the community, we gain understanding of the glory of the outlaw, the ones who live in perfect beauty and stands in opposition to the easy fears of those who would make us slaves.

From the constant flowing action of the impermanent eternity that is her gift to us, we learn that this world is here for us to know and eventually all that we know of it will transform to the wildness of perfect beauty that is only found within the creation of unrestrained nature, a nature which is always present but is perhaps feared by most of us. It is the just outlaw who we must all become, autonomous individuals who have understanding of their being and their place within the totality of the world and so are those who know true freedom. These outlaws do not need laws to tell them how to act appropriately, they are people who will not restrict themselves to artificial barriers, who reject conventions such as monetary systems and laws in favour of judgements of true social justice. It is from Dysnomia that we can learn what is truly worth wanting, not because we are scared of punishment, or because some authority has told us what to believe, but because once we have found her within ourselves we know the truth of our being. All this and more is achieved from victory in the quest for Dysnomians to liberate the imagination of the subconscious in order to reveal the relativity of the objective world, and by this overthrow the kingdom of tyrants from the foundation up. Though this quest will undoubtedly be difficult and full of perils and sometimes even mistakes, it is to her we all must go to if we are to have any hope at all, of that which makes us real.

While many Anarchists are atheists it is clear that this was simply because Dysnomia does not impose herself on any and welcomes atheists in the struggle for freedom. Kropotkin wrote an essay entitled "the spirit of revolt" in which he said, "When a revolutionary situation arises in a country, before the spirit of revolt is sufficiently awakened in the masses to express itself in violent demonstrations in the streets or by rebellions and uprisings, it is through action that minorities succeed in awakening that feeling of independence and that spirit of audacity without which no revolution can come to a head." Clearly we are living in such times and Dysnomian actions are one way that we can evoke this "spirit of revolt" in the wider population. For too long tyrants have held the monopoly on spiritual conviction, we must destroy such religious authoritarianism not by spreading atheism, but by destroying the idea that "god" is a monarch, a ruler and that "he" imposes laws on us.

I urge even atheists to engage in Dysnomian practices, even ritual practices, or at the very least do not dismiss and reject spiritual people just because they have a different cosmological view than you, do not become elitists about things no one has scientific proof about. While an atheist, Emma Goldman also clearly and explicitly understood this spirit of revolt, the spirit of Dysnomia which has been with us since before the first leaders. Emma referred to it in a number of essays and speeches, "Anarchism does not stand for military drill and uniformity; it does, however, stand for the spirit of revolt, in whatever form, against everything that hinders human growth. All Anarchists agree in that, as they also agree in their opposition to the political machinery as a means of bringing about the great social change." "The spirit of Anarchism has lifted man from his prostrate position. He now stands erect, with his face toward the light. He has learned to see the insatiable, devouring, devastating nature of property, and he is preparing to strike the monster dead." "Science, art, literature, the drama, the effort for economic betterment, in fact every individual and social opposition to the existing disorder of things, is illumined by the spiritual light of Anarchism." "Were it not for the spirit of discontent, of indignation and protest against wrong, the spirit that feels every blow, pain and sorrow that suffering and starving humanity has to endure, progress would be impossible.

It was this spirit that moved man to become helpful, good, and generous; to tear down the old institutions of darkness and ignorance, and build new ones. It was this spirit that has given to past generations the power of endurance, determination, and enthusiasm in their fight for man's highest treasure-liberty." "Everything good and noble, grand and beautiful, wise and useful, has been done by the spirit of liberty, from the love of freedom, in spite of and in the teeth of government and authority." "Oh, you Judges and you District Attorneys, you can imprison and you can guillotine and send to the gallows all the Anarchists, but you need not delude yourselves with the idea that you can kill the spirit of Anarchy." "The revolutionary spirit lives on. It fights on and does not rest, it breaks all barriers until the path has been cleared and freedom has arisen, gleaming and radiant, just like the sun after a storm.”

As Bakunin puts it, “let us put our trust in the eternal spirit which destroys and annihilates only because it is the unsearchable and eternally creative source of all life, the passion for destruction is also a creative passion!” To me it is clear this eternal spirit is the spirit which has contacted me, it is Dysnomia and although Bakunin would probably disagree with me in a number of ways, I do not accept his authority any more than I would a president, nor should anyone accept my own authority.

Still more we learn from Proudhon, “There it is, that revolutionary liberty, cursed for so long, because it was not understood, because its key was sought in words instead of in things; there it is, as a philosophy inspired by it alone should in the end furnish it. In revealing itself to us in its essence, it gives us, along with the reason of our religious and political institutions, the secret of our destiny.” He goes on to explain, that if “god” is a tyrant then Satan by definition is liberty, so it is he proclaims, “All were proud, above all the poor. Ah! Give back to me the days of my childhood, Goddess of Liberty!” Christians here call him a Satanist, but they miss his point completely for he has shown that they believe liberty or freedom to be evil and personified by the devil and so in their attempts to show he worships evil they give evidence of their bias authoritarianism and prove his point! That Proudhon does not worship Satan is all too obvious, but he does more than this and shows his Gnostic understanding in that he recognizes liberty and the antithesis of Yahweh as a woman. I would add that as the Christian “god” is the ultimate patriarch, woman is our freedom and so as I oppose tyranny, I will no doubt be called a Satanist as well, but in reality, nothing is more divine than freedom.

For me and maybe for you, it is clear now that Anarchism does have a “spirit” however you wish to symbolize it, this is something best left to the individual, but I assure you that in this search you will find what joy means. Through the various means which I have outlined in this book I have attempted to give Anarchist activists new tools to bring this spirit in to our world, how and if they will use these tools is up to them, but those who doubt the efficacy of such tools need look only so far as the closest human artifact or form of culture to find something which has been influenced (however indirectly) by human Occult traditions. If Dysnomia is violent, it is the violence of life destroying that which impedes the further growth of life, like the roots of a dandelion breaking through concrete, there is no violence in life spreading, that which is destroyed is only those artificial boundaries which prevent greater life, the destructive passion is a creative passion and when guided by Anarchism its name is Dysnomia.

As Eris and Dysnomia have been discovered orbiting the sun, it is as a sign that she is returning to the world and that the seeds of the golden apple of anomie has been planted in the shit of ancient tyranny. This is the bullshit in which the wretched live so that one day people would be so filled with anomie, that they would be disgusted by their rulers and come to want Dysnomia. Columbia made herself appear as Aphrodite when she got the apple from Paris, but what the Romans and Greeks forgot to mention was that she lost it in Trojan war when she was wounded trying to save her son Aeneas. The apple landed in the shit and it was first watered by her blood and when the serum in it went, a seed sprouted and grew through history and in to the modern world by the disgust of the wretched who are ruled. Fertilized by the shit of the world and by the blood of the rulers as they kill one another in their attempts to control the Earth, Dysnomia in the form of this tree collects the blood so that when the rulers are all dead she might reascend to the Earth and bring Anarchy to the world. You must not be afraid to get your hands dirty, to live in the shit, for as they say if an Aghori curses you, you get everything you always wanted and in this way we learn to grow our love, a revolutionary love which allows us to understand the process of life. This sprout has grown down deep into the root of the universe, that which people of all natures desire and it has drawn up the waters of Mnemosyne, its main source of nourishment and has matured in to the indefinite power of lawlessness who I call Dysnomia Dentrites and is now part of the world tree. Dysnomia fights on against the rulers so that all who have taken in the Trojan horse of ignorance may drink from her cup and remember anarkhos and with that taste of the fruit of freedom. She has left for us a thread of wisdom, where there was only a pillar of salt, so that we might use it to find our way through the labyrinth to join her and know Truth and with that we will be free and the war for wealth will end and we may all eat the fruit of freedom.

The sleepwalkers of the labyrinth have only ever eaten bitter almonds because the rulers have infested the pyramids dedicated to the horns of Amun. As part of the basis of their “government” the rulers demand a kind of dope, Sal ammoniac which they are addicted to and which is made from the shit of the world. The rulers steal these offerings belonging to Amun as their own reward and the human sleepwalkers are so obsessed with serving their rulers they find no salience in the world and see no reward from learning of the truth. The sleepwalkers get their information from the rulers who in turn get it from the Eunomians and so the truth is distorted and made contrary, they do not remember the important things in life. So the sleepwalkers do not make these pyramids their own, but it is folly as these pyramids are a link through the axis and lead to the Soma. The rulers also drink in a serum which they make from the blood of their victims as it makes them happy, but also makes them in to Alphas and more aggressive, they eat more than those they rule and have more sex than those they rule. All the while the sleepwalkers are given a mix of eight poisons that make an ammonia which they are made to drink, the mix of eight poisons is created by Eunomians which is then administered through the cultures of the ninth who is Nomos. This poison of divinity is in subtle mockery of the waters of anamnesis which Dysnomia supplies, but this drink makes the ruled subservient, it can help to make them depressed and reliant on those who promise them happiness, but eventually it leads to anomie.

As a tree grows according to a fractal there are different scales to this world tree and different fruits to eat, and while there are endless possible divisions of the fractal scale when thought of as totality, the world tree represents truth. The world tree has at its trunk two main roots which grow from it and each of these two main roots are themselves like a tree, with two smaller roots on either side of each of them. All of these roots are themselves each like a tree with their own function and these functions are like the fruits of these trees, each unique yet self similar. Each tree is composed of its own metal and surrounds the trunk of world tree of truth, this being the scale of freedom. The world tree of truth is more specifically seen as the form of the seventh tree, which grows out of the six roots and is mirrored in the trunk and so grows in two directions to make the eighth that is not a separate tree and is of the same fluid metal as the seventh. Here Dysnomia had her children and from the trees at the scale of freedom, an unearthly music comes, the best punk rock of the Sidhe, which sounds like no other, which has uniqueness and changes, but partakes of the character of the trees. From the trunk, the seventh and main tree grows in to a portal, a doorway which acts as a cervix from which you are born to the real world which is the multiverse, which is the true body of the universe with each big bang like a cell. From this central spike we may climb to heights celestial above or realms cthonic below and thus leave this simple space time and traverse all dimensions.

So it is, one of the two main roots at the trunk grows into the labyrinth and is the tree from which they hung Helen and its roots have also been watered with blood of the archons. This tree of knowledge can be found in the labyrinth by a person following the thread of wisdom and the thread is itself revealed when a person is experienced in the world and starts to be filled with anomie. This is the tree of knowledge and “it's glory is like the moon when fully radiant, and its branches are beautiful so that it might arouse the souls from the torpor of the demons, in order that they might approach the tree of life and eat of its fruit, and so condemn the authorities and their angels.” A person will find that their actions of dissent, the nourishment of intuition and imagination has created the contextual awareness that this world is not what it seems and has grown a silver branch from their anomie, which they may pluck from the “outer bark” of the tree of knowledge but which no others will succeed in taking. We can continue to follow the thread from the tree to gain access to the underworld, but only upon taking this silver branch can we enter the underground. As described before we enter the underground by traversing the underworld to the place beneath the Mendacium in the centre of the labyrinth.

After crossing the rainbow bridge we find Dysnomia by the waters of Mnemosyne which flow from a spring of endless depth and profundity and upon finding her we will see that this spring flows in to five streams that provide anamnesis and that she is standing amidst the streams by the world tree. There she is waiting patiently with the other main root of the world tree, which is itself the tree of life “so that it might make eternal the souls of the pure, who shall come forth from the modelled forms of poverty at the consummation of the age. Now the colour of the tree of life is like the sun and its branches are beautiful.” The top of the tree of life grows down in to the underground, with its roots in the air growing in to the upper world of the labyrinth and so it is that these roots are directly below the roots of the tree of knowledge. As the roots of the tree of knowledge have grown down in to the underground, the roots of the two trees intermingle and join together in to the trunk of the world tree of truth, that is the root of the true uni-verse. By the posterior of the trunk of the world tree of truth, in a space between the roots of the tree of life and the tree of knowledge, it is as the blackness in the centre of the fractal and there grows the piney fruit of freedom which is the fruit of the world tree of truth.

From there in the scale of freedom, Dysnomia will take you and together you will shrink down in to the cthonic realms to see the smallest parts of the scale known as the scale of understanding, a place found at the roots of the seven plus one trees. There at the scale of understanding, the great mother had herself turned into innumerable trees who's roots have more connections than stars in the galaxy, her fruits start as spines and grow in to mushrooms which collect the waters of Mnemosyne. This place is called the scale of understanding because it provides understanding of the the perfect beauty of wild nature which is the spirit of Helen. These mushrooms are squeezed to collect their blue juice so that they may be rectified in Dysnomia's cup, so when a person comes with something broken in their head, she gives anamnesis of silence to Gnostic grandmother cells and they can then gain access to the temporal temples, the portals of projection thus awakening them from their slumber. As the mushrooms have also grown from the bullshit of this world, the juice of each mushroom provides gnosis of the experiences needed to achieve anarkhos. So it is, when a person has enough anomie that they desire to go in to the underground, there are enough mushrooms to fill the cup for them. Through a process of soul searching they search the forest of roots of the seven plus one trees to find the mushrooms and collect them and then they are ready to partake of the sacrament. Each experience of tyranny had fed a mushroom with bullshit and so contributed to the anomie that leads each person to this place, so that upon collecting the mushrooms and their juice they will know why such experiences were ultimately necessary to achieve true freedom.

So, after filling their cup they return with Dysnomia to the scale of freedom and they drink from the cup and after drinking from the cup they gain anarkhos and will be able to see within the darkness at the centre of the roots, the piney fruit of freedom. This fruit is presented to them by a snake and upon eating this fruit they gain autonomy and so having achieved full gnosis they realize they were always as gods, immortal and free. From this anarkhos the sleepwalkers remember what lies beyond form, they are awakened and realize the unity of beauty, freedom and truth. After eating the fruit, they will see that a golden branch has grown for them alone on the outer bark of the tree of life and upon taking it will be able to ascend to the celestial realms as an autonomous being. These celestial realms are the scale of truth and it is self similar with the roots and yet has endless iterations, this works so that the more of the world tree of truth that they explore, the more they develop this autonomy. When they eventually return to the world of the labyrinth they will reenter the dream, yet knowing what it is to be awakened, they remain lucid having had anamnesis of Dysnomia and the fruit of freedom.

As a person acts with autonomy and spreads their knowledge of truth, in it's rightful season this insights resistance against the establishment in the labyrinth and sometimes even revolutions occur and eventually global revolution will occur. As some have not made it all the way to the underground yet, along with some criminal giants, those who live in the underworld are not always Anarchists. Sometimes the denizens of the underworld even lead these revolutions, but as those who would lead have not achieved autonomy or anarkhos, the Eunomians are always quick to twist the messages of Aletheia and co-opt the revolutions. These revolutions generally do not even have the pretence of Anarchism, but do claim to love freedom and so may inspire some improvements, but are still not in line with truth or Dysnomia. The autonomous do not lead revolutions except by example and so all leaders of rebellions are rulers, who harness the anomie as they fight each other and spill each others blood or serum in the labyrinth. In the process individual rulers either from the underworld, or above ground may temporarily become more powerful and monopolistic, but this “success” is just the creation of more bullshit and is ultimately their downfall. The blood of the rulers and the bullshit of their success then fertilizes the tree of Knowledge more and so in its rightful season it creates fruit.

This fruit of the tree of knowledge is distinct from the mushrooms which grow at the roots of all these trees I have mentioned, with the fruit of the tree of knowledge going to feed the denizens of the underworld as nourishment for the soul. This fruit helps them to be filled with anomie and with the fruit they eat the seeds of anomie which are planted and grow with time inside them, growing so that they may eventually have the courage to enter into the underground. That is having found the tree of knowledge by the yarns left by the autonomous, a person can find the underworld, but usually they do not have enough anomie that they desire to enter the underground and meet Dysnomia. So they explore the underworld returning to the tree and eating of it's fruit until they are so filled with anomie that they wish to explore the underground. So then as the seeds of anomie grow within them, so to does their silver branch grow on the tree of knowledge and when they are filled with anomie they will find the silver branch is fully grown and will allow them to go to the underground and meet Dysnomia. In this way the tree of knowledge gives access to the underground and its spiritual experiences, where as the tree of life is in the underground and gives the words of magick for the physical world and even immortality. As I said, both trees are connected through the tree of truth and this is the source of all possibilities and so the inspiration for the works of the autonomous.

Aeneas that black magician and tool of the Eunomians was lead by the doves of Columbia and stole a golden branch from one who was enlightened, but having not drunk from the cup, nor eaten of the fruit lacked the wisdom to use it properly. Still it had given him the keys of rational knowledge as it gives access to the tree of truth and so he used his intellect alone in the worship of Columbia to gain a vision as to how to plan out the empire. Through this means he and his offspring would become the most powerful family of human rulers on Earth, helping to create a religion of pain and tyranny, all in an effort to gain immortality through technology alone. But through Dysnomia the Earth is rising up, the whore casting off her shackles and kicking her pimp's ass, she will be free, for as boundless wisdom she cannot ever be controlled by power or contained by the pretensions of rulers. Those Plutocrats may seek to control her and to sell her form, but she belongs to no man, no woman and no person, but when we learn our freedom, we flower on her tree, so that we might spread her wisdom, as we plant her seed.

Dysnomia is “she who by her unseen powers has made replicas of herself” through the millennia and when enough people desire her and have chipped away at the Eunomians tower, it will be completely replaced by the kernels of truth, and the kernels will start to glow like sapphire and the tower will be as a palace for all the kingless people. At this time the statue of Aletheia will fall and Dysnomia will return and signal from the Mendacium with a torch of freedom, proclaiming victory from her mouth with a voice like thunder. Dysnomia will thus break her silence and illuminate the truth of her splendour from the topless tower in the centre of the prison of lies and from this all the sleepwalkers will crowd around the tower as they awaken, simultaneously seeing from each of its many windows the image of the goddess on each of the stories which reach towards the heavens. That is having brought Aletheia with her as she comes back up from the underground, all people will then know Aletheia directly once more and cease to be confused by the bricks of litigium. So that all might have understanding of her, Dysnomia will reveal the tower of lies from top to the foundation, she will expose the plan of the Phrygians to impose a monetary system on all those who take part in their city believing them to be good. All ignorant idiots invite doom in to themselves just as the Trojans, Helen's soul knowing no mercy from the Greeks either, since they took in a Trojan horse of their own. By this I mean they were put under the control of a international boullion cartel which would spread to Rome and is a poison which has now spread across the world and makes all rulers corrupt. In their ignorance the Greeks did not rescue her, but hung Helen from the tree of Dysnomia and now she reincarnates again and again in different forms to be tortured by the rulers of civilization and sold for a profit. After the death of Helen the rulers created a world of shit to make the dope Sal ammoniac and eventually it began to pile up around the tree of knowledge and from this the nutrients passed on to the roots of all the trees thus fertilizing the mushrooms which live at the scale of understanding. So until Dysnomia is freed the world is doomed as the mysteries have been taken by force, in their lust the rulers have begun a war of competition and greed for her, a war which has brought ruin unto the world. They have nearly killed each other and the world of nature, but for her sake I have come to heal the world and stop those who have abused her, for she is my first thought.

So then after going through this process and going through my sigil portal to the underground to meet Dysnomia, I ate the piney fruit of freedom and was given by her this sigil as a map of her tree. That while her sigil is the portal, this sigil of her tree is the same at higher resolution and can be used in all kinds of works of autonomy and to work Anarchist magick here in the world. The more I study it and look at its various permutations, the more I can see that it is like a Rosetta's stone for the Occult, the key to the knowledge she taught before the flood of forgetfulness.

Alien Interpretation

Looking through the doorway of a generation, past the gate of supposed justice to the shimmering twilight of something brighter.

The offspring of night play in hidden rooms and secret spaces, with blood shot eyes the light of day blinds the same as most fear the dark.

Twentieth century rejects with retroactive children dressed in neon polyester plaid, thrift store shopping not for fashion, but pure poverty.

They are a swaddling of suggestion in the throw away garments of transparent seduction, torn and twisted, the coverings of a nations shame.

Living grotesqueries of searching, I never knew hunger until I saw what nourishment was, I saw those eyes looking at me, then her eyes on the setting sun, never again to return to a state of slumbering numbness, into those pools of inky black ichor, never again to look out at the world but stare forever into a memory.

Frazzled and enthusiastic, chaotic kaleidoscopic collage of a personality, free from limits and outside of time, a walking anachronism, a fool to be sure, the one who shows it, knows it best of all, lives without reproach even when losing the game.

Past all that for something more, its not about winning but daring to be real, outside pretensions and throw away gloves, the subordinate introspection of a wanting dandelion, growing to break through the pavement, the roots of a rebellious demeanour, an occasional suggestion of a world without self pity.

Its a quiet kind of life after deafening speakers or sonic screech rock, the fuzz and foam feedback opening your world to a life beyond comfort, beyond expectation to the spirit of our time.

Circumscribed feelings through cryptogram recipes of hieroglyphic tattoos, furious freaks and forgotten parties, painted food fights and heads dyed with a colourful life of outspoken crackpots and sinister laughter leering into solitary streets.

Gross exaggeration, unconditioned comradeship and narcotic negotiation, alcoholic remedies for a life slipping away, no more doom psychosis its about to step around that corner, and we watch as no more ruckus is ruled against the progeny.

Trapped under glass, looking from creation, dive into imagination, virulent community of cynical frustration and wandering garbage people, I found my life in the dumpster, I found myself in the pit, immortal berserker senility, the ancestors carry on the party.

Living life like lichen, clinging to the weather beaten tombs, eternal opposition to Thanatopolis through the creative urge of destruction, coming for you, coming for all, coming to set the prisoners free from their self imposed shackles of convenience.

Chapter 18 – Good Discernment

While I had originally planned on writing a book, I have also been writing other things, sometimes on entheogens, sometimes essays, sometimes poetry which I had intended to stand on their own, which I had believed to be different subjects. But I see now that there are underlying patterns, that they provide deeper contexts and that no matter how much I write, the totality of all these disparate writings are as one book, the book of my life. I see now these writings of mine have manifested in my heart and are entwined as a greater whole, a totality and so I have added those disparate writings as elaborations according to their self similarity within this fractal of time. It is also clear to me that getting my book “published” will be a real problem, after all my writings run contrary to mainstream values, they advocate the abolition of government and capitalism and taken as one book, it is not designed to be an escapist form of entertainment, but a search for the truth. In order for me to launch my meme into the world I will need to find some way of getting attention, a hook as it’s called, memetic bait. This is a book for the living, it is a celebration of life and yet most people seem so hopelessly backwards in this world that it probably doesn’t even matter if my book is published.

I have been thinking about it for a long time and there is very little keeping me in this world, I am so filled with hate for politicians and business people, I have really come to the conclusion I need to start empowering the meme of murdering them. If I kill an oil executive, maybe it will catch on, maybe it will make people understand the seriousness of our current environmental problems, if I can do that then maybe those kinds of companies will start to change their way, or at least I will encourage others to join me in insurrection. We have to loosen their grip on power, we have to stop them from preventing alternative forms of energy and spreading their tentacles into every country they can to rape the environment and spread industrial waste into the waters and onto the land. I am tired of this life, I want to go to the next world, to Dysnomia's heaven, I want to do something that matters, something that will wake people up, to start a new way of life. I want to get the word out about what reality is, I want to experience and live the truth, to live up to my own ideals. I know murder isn't exactly Anarchist, but it will be worth it if it gets attention for these issues. I am tired of poverty, working for near minimum wage, barely scraping by selling moonshine and pot while those who do the most harm live in opulence, live in perfect safety while they endanger the whole planet, the reality of the world they create needs to be brought to them.

There is one oil executive in particular, his company caused an oil spill, and no one seems to care about it anymore, the only real remorse he showed was that dealing with the spill is cutting into his free time and prevented him from going on a yachting trip. His company is in league with the multinational cartel which killed Helen, for all I know he was there when they tried to have their way with her and since I don't know who was there, he will have to do. Certainly such a mother fucker can justifiably be killed, his kind of policies have ruined so many lives, so much beautiful nature, he is guilty of crimes against nature, which is worse than crimes against humanity since humanity is included within nature and what’s worse he is continuing to do business. Since money is an illusion, oil is the physical centrepiece of the global economy, if we can stop the oil industry, we can stop most of the hazardous practices of capitalism, bringing down many oligarchs and monopolies and so bringing down many of the private interests corrupting the government. His company is working with others that are setting up pipelines in Canada, from the tar sands of Alberta down in to America, but also west to the oceans of British Columbia, it is the biggest environmental disaster on the planet, the front lines of the war for life, the bigger it gets, the closer this planet comes to extinction of what we call the wilderness. There is so much pollution and destruction coming from these oil companies, so much abuse of power and Machiavellian politics involved that I would have to write another book just to scratch the surface of all the ways they are fucking over the planet. Clearly something has to be done to make these fuckers more responsible, at least until their companies can be abolished and replaced by sustainable and environmentally friendly practices.

The Aztecs knew how to deal with such greedy people, pouring molten gold down the throats of the conquistadors, only instead of gold he should probably have oil seawater sludge forced down his throat until he dies like some miserable sea bird. I think the time for talk is at an end and this book is almost done; I must find a way to murder as many oil company executives as possible. In the process I may die, the oligarchs have plenty of brainwashed foot soldiers willing to die for them, but I don't even care anymore, it's probably better for me that way, all I see is a reflection of myself, having any kind of normal social life is pretty well impossible, if I can take down some cops in the process all the better. I am tired of this life, I don't belong here anymore, I can't relate to anyone around me, it's clear that I will never really be appreciated, never accepted as a writer, that wanting to be a writer is just another ego trip anyways, there is no peaceful means of producing change through the activist community. I am unable to find romance and filled with disgust at the culture around me and so why not?

I will buy a gun from some coke dealers I know and work a ritual around the bullets to destroy the archons possessing the oil executives I shoot, maybe I can even get some silver bullets and carve some sigils on them and the human part of the executive and likely my own body will be a sacrifice to Dysnomia. What better way to empower her than through breaking the law? Under the protection of the moon, in the dead of night I will work my Occult magick and the skies will open up and Anarchy will enter this world, gaining access to their unconscious, the people will rid themselves of their illusions and stand up against tyrants and with that the world will learn of Dysnomia. Maybe when I am dead my book will be published and people will start the protest of reality, who can say? This world is so fucked, I know it's going to take much more than my book but hopefully it will inspire others to be free. At the very least I will have proven myself worthy of getting into the Anarchist heaven; I will have sacrificed myself and escaped this world and its rulers.

To the People of the Future

We are stuck here, please help us we've lost our minds!
We need you to come back and save us with a time machine.
We all seem to be waiting for you to save us from ourselves, we can't even face reality so we use drugs like Prozac and music and every other distraction possible.
In our costumes madly shouting at an audience that doesn't exist,
We've fooled ourselves into believing time exists and so when faced with the raw feeling of the universes pure emotion;
Expression takes the form of violence and distrust emanating from the perceived separateness and differences which are also nonexistent
The ebb and flow of Atlantean Archetypes, an undercurrent wave of influence is our only hope of flowing outside the mainstream.
Cultural revolution serving to distract us from our static views of ourselves.
Hippies and Punks, Ravers and Homies
Misguided youth searching in vain for some meaning and in the brutal crushing honesty of it all, perpetuating their own self destruction.
We're horribly masochistic creatures, we destroy all "inferior races" and we don't even stop there.
We destroy until all ideas of the past formed to agree with the national consensus of the present.
We destroy ourselves to keep us safe.
Without a better view of the future this present is worthless, Come to your ancestors and maybe our children will be listened to.
Come to when there was still a rainforest, when there was still a life worth saving,
We must act now, we want the eyes of future generations looking at us, Seeing us for what we are and knowing we are doing all that we can,
Even calling on you, to remember our mistakes, to stop the cycle of endless consumption,
To remember the joys of living by how nature made us to be,
To remember the dream of freedom, before life became so regulated and constructs took control,
Come to us now, in your own way, save yourselves by fixing the problems of the past, not by external band aids, but through healing yourselves in the name of true life.

The war for consensus reality is most effectively waged by the archons through the use of literalized religions, institutionalized and made authoritarian; this is especially true of the monotheistic religions or any which claim to be the "one true religion." The Roman state religion rules us and we don't even see it because we have lost the context of how things used to be, what a free mind is, or what spirituality even means. When a story is believed to be true by large numbers of people, especially in a religious sense, it will have philosophical and ontological and even economic and political ramifications on society. This is of course why Churches emphasize faith in their dogmatic interpretations, they have lost the ability (if they ever had it) to provide people with direct knowledge of the spiritual world, but even if they did they wouldn't use it because it wouldn't suit their agenda. That is, they "have taken the keys of knowledge [and] have hidden them. They did not go in, and those who wished to go in they did not allow."

Organized religions are the spell of the archons to control reality, to steer the group dream through the use of stories and when reincarnation is not taught it makes it even easier for them to get people to surrender their souls to their artificially created and shabby imitation of "heaven." This of course works so that people will die expecting to have everything taken care of for them by some benevolent patriarch, they then often think they will get to enjoy all those things that were forbidden on Earth, maybe they even think they will get 72 virgins. When people are taught all they have to do to find eternal happiness is believe some book, they do not try to learn how to grow their consciousness, or how to learn to deal with being on Earth, or why they should care for the natural world. It is quite possible we will always reincarnate on Earth no matter how enlightened we become, (at the very least since we are one with others we will in sense reincarnate through them) but if we do not develop a truly spiritual and Anarchist world, the school of divinity and its curriculum will always be run by people with private interests of personal profit. So long as people believe that Jesus was a literal human who is coming back, they will never find the Logos within themselves and will never really be saved.

Combined with the banking systems Occult use of money sigils, they have created a system which gets people to consent to letting themselves be treated as livestock, to be manufactured. Then energy within the people is consumed by their rulers, who ultimately control all of the environment from the ranch to the slaughterhouse and while us westerners may be “free range,” it does not mean we are free. Some kind of death wish seems to have been opened up in Sumeria, the mythology of that culture provides much insight into the mindset of theocrats, from the most ancient times to the present. The archons came to Earth in one way or another and are still with us and not only is the system run by “Black Magician” immortals, (as we are all ultimately immortal) it is quite possible they either consciously or unconsciously concede to keep reincarnating. I am starting to think that for at least some, as dictated by nepotism and plutocracy, archons are invoked ceremonially into bodies which is done so that they may continue their work of enslaving souls and limiting awareness, hiding the truth that we all live on a farm and that the farmers, or shepherds do not have our best interests at heart. All this has been accomplished by getting people to believe fanciful stories that have little to no historical accuracy, that Christianity just sprung out of nowhere due to one man preaching a “new” way of life. Stories like capitalism equals freedom and that humans cannot function without leaders, that herds are benefited by being led like lambs to slaughter and all the other lies told by shepherds to their captive food stocks.

We are being storied to death, from the stories we tell ourselves about who we are, to the stories we are told about religion, politics, science (in that scientific theory is the story of what happened when an experiment was repeatedly carried out) and especially the stories we are told in the media, for entertainment, for escapism and all the other stories human culture comes up with. We are so captivated by stories that we will wait for stories on the news of revolution before we act, we will wait for stories from authorities to tell us it is all right. We will listen to stories while others commit genocide on nature, to the point that all humanity might be destroyed, all because they listened to a story about how industry and consumption is progress. Do not look to a story to make you live happily ever after, do not look to stories to tell you who you are, we are so caught up listening to stories, especially the one that goes on inside our heads, the stories about our identity and what the world around us is, that we rarely actually live or listen to others, we only reflect. You cannot even count on my own story, stop looking to stories and start living your life moment to moment, naturally creating the art of life, ironically if you can do that, all kinds of people will want to hear of your experiences.

Our brains seem to function through stories and as limiting as that can be sometimes, so long as we are using words I don't think we can do without them. Memories, chains of events, chains of reasoning, causality and even planning for the future and much more is all dependent on our ability to make up stories and so it is the story teller who can imprison us and it is by learning to tell stories we can set ourselves free. So, as long as the reader is willing to acknowledge the subjectivity of their interpretations of what they consider objective stories, it could be possible for the human mind to use stories and memes for increasing awareness and free will. This leads me to wonder if it would be possible for me to create a story that if believed, would give the philosophical implications that would get people to break out of the herd mentality and learn for themselves through direct action, what freedom really is. A story about the readers which is true enough, that whoever reads it will learn that they must beware of any who try to set themselves up as authorities on truth, so that through their reading, they will activate a spell to raise the consciousness of all who desire it. In this way all may learn the truth, not the truth of the story, but their own personal truth which is based on personal experience, rather than second or third hand (or even further down the line) accounts of someone, who may or may not of had a spiritual experience.

If someone were to write a story, perhaps this would provide a loophole that would allow a person to openly suggest that people pursue illegal spiritual paths and openly break laws that are not in line with truth and freedom... if only I were a good enough story teller. With such a story I could encourage people to take back reality for the people and we could create a reality that serves truth, life, and freedom, which would be accomplished through the abolition of law and hierarchy and all their subsidiary machinations, like the monetary system and religious institutions. It would be a battle cry in the consensus war to create new memes that raise awareness about memetic warfare. A story that teaches it is possible to reacquire your own free will and learn the truth for yourself, the truth which is beyond the memes of the rulers.

A ritual for reading this book could be called the “ritual of reading” and it would be simple for people who have no experience with rituals. Before you start to read this hypothetical book all you would have to do is sit in a comfortable position, perhaps sitting cross legged and then visualize white light coming up from the part of their body that is lowest to the ground, (like your butt or your legs if you are sitting in a chair) and going up throughout the rest of your body towards your head. A mantra of “Dumeego” could be used saying that name over and over and as coloured light (what you deem appropriate) slowly fills the body up to the head, the sigil of Dumeego would then be imagined in the head. Then an affirmation to learn the truth and raise awareness would be uttered aloud or internally, this affirmation could be “I ask the spirit of Dumeego to fill me with knowledge, unfiltered by my own biases and free of the deceptions of the rulers, so that I may learn the truth of reality and Dysnomia, who is freedom itself.” This whole ritual could take perhaps five minutes or less and certainly could be modified for individual tastes however you like, (You could call on Dysnomia herself if you prefer) but the idea is to affirm that it is your will to raise your awareness and learn your own truth. By doing this you show metaphysically and psychologically that you are part of the consensus for truth and so if you do this with sincerity and passion you express your intention to turn every word you read, (in any book) into a ritual act to help you in that regard. With Dysnomia's and Dumeego's help this would go beyond whatever petty truth the words in the book happen to be saying, but will extend to all parts of your life so that the universe itself will become like an open book to you and reveal layers of information that once were hidden or Occult.

Through ritual you can invite the spirit of Anarchy into your life, but this can only be done if you want it, since Anarchy does not force itself on others. The best way to show that you want Anarchy is to affirm it in your thoughts and actions in everyday life and ritual is one way of doing this, direct action is another. Altered states such as those created by entheogens like pot as well as many other allies could also be used to glean hidden layers of information within the book. Someone with this hypothetical book could also do the reading ritual and then open the book according to random chance and see if it opened at a meaningful place that sheds new insight into something you have or haven't already read. (a practice called “bibliomancy”) Hopefully though this hypothetical book would inspire others to make unique and personalized pieces of art with the same function in mind, to spread awareness and freedom. If people did that, the masses may just start to listen one day, or maybe it will help just one person, who really needed it when they felt alone in a world of tyrants.

The more I think about it, the better I like the idea of writing some spurious fiction, maybe people will think I am smart, or a wacko, either way that's probably good. By having an element of incredulity, it ensures that certain knowledge is only taken in by those who have the kind of mind which investigates truth, despite bias and presumptions. This kind of mind which seeks truth over reinforcing pre-existing memes, is a requirement for understanding reality and so by sticking in some ridiculous memes, it ensures that those with ideologue minds or selfish motivations of archon ego gratification, will be more challenged by it. Not only this, those who blindly follow such a book will experience lessons in life that will show them not to blindly follow anything. While it is these people with archon bias who need the truth the most, in some people the authorities or archons are so strong they will justify creating false literalist religions, twisting the mystical information to suit their purposes, which is how religions like Christianity are created.

The truth hides in the ridiculous, hidden in plain sight, cloaked in the dismissal of others through provocation of incredulity and it does this to avoid appropriation by those who lie, to avoid being corrupted. The problem is all too few find it, those who search far and wide and thus learn the skills necessary to see it everywhere. Those who choose vanity, who seek power over others generally choose to ignore that which they find ugly or beneath their notice and so Occult wisdom at least in part keeps itself hidden, outside the reach of those with insincere intentions. It takes a lot of long hard consideration of the seemingly absurd before any realization of commonplace absurdities be recognized for what they are, revealing a fools paradise utterly devoid of substance. After all, if life is a joke how can you speak the truth and be taken seriously?

What would someone make of my unrepentantly cheesy writing, my satirical synecdoche? Hopefully it would encourage people to express themselves, even if it was just in an anonymous way, in whatever way, about anything, no matter how stupid you may think it is. Why this book itself could be my spurious fiction! Life itself is a spurious fiction, how dare my arrogance to say anything based on such unfounded reason! Why if people took what I say for truth there would be Anarchy! And Chaos! Aah! And not the good kind neither! Boogalooo! Oh wait then everything reasonable is unfounded as reason is a vain limitation on the endless, never mind I am right about everything, that nothing is in fact right or wrong and so Anarchism could never be “good” or “evil.”

Of course no one should blindly follow what I say, no one should blindly follow anything, trying to get around blind is a good way to make everything hard for yourself, the whole point is to learn to learn, so that you may find the truth in your own way, then maybe encourage others to do the same if you like. If Crowley tells you to go sacrifice a child and you do, then you have no one to blame but yourself, you should of just masturbated, you are responsible for your own actions no matter who tells you, whether it's the voice in your head that claims to be Jesus or your President. Is declaring this book a spurious fiction a cop out on my responsibility to say things that are true? Well yes but then anyone who says they are infallible is making a mistake and claiming you aren't responsible because someone told you something is also a cop out, so what better way to take responsibility for your statements then to say “don't take my word for it, investigate it yourself, I am not infallible.” In infinity all logic is ultimately based on unfounded supposition, of course I make broad sweeping statements, no doubt some of them are wrong in some cases and that is for you to find, no one is infallible, except for maybe you the violent reader. If I were to explain each idea fully I would have to explain each small part of my explanation and in turn each small part of that explanation and so on so that I would get nowhere, either some of this grabs you or it doesn't. Either way I would encourage you to find out more for yourself, direct personal experience is the only real measure of truth in my direct personal experience, not to say others can't give useful suggestions in pointing the way, but that you have to get there by yourself. The Tao is always in the middle, don't take my word for it or anything else; my word says words are untrustworthy.

Still, I could use fiction as a spell to sacrifice a person's ego, the fear of being alone and the apathy most people have towards changing the world, I could even use the book for my future self to find in my next life so that person, or whoever else reads it can learn a little bit from my mistakes without having to go through it themselves. The ego is the delusion which keeps us in amnesia as we are too busy focusing on it to remember the truth. The Dysnomian sigil could help whoever uses it, the reader of the book, to remember anarkhos through anamnesis, helping them to become aware of their archons and then overcome them, help them to achieve gnosis by accessing the part of consciousness that produces it. In this way Dysnomia can overcome Nomos, by altering the thought processes of the mind so that people who will it, can overcome their archons, their ignorant thinking patterns which limit their consciousnesses and hold them back from their true potential. By giving them control of their consciousnesses, Dysnomia gives the reader the ability to access the imagination and the intuition to achieve anarkhos and to help overcome long held assumptions which create bias thinking and memetic control over them, so that they can truly have free will.

My book could be used as the programming for aspects of the sigil of Dysnomia, every word read could also empower the sigil and so every word can be used to empower the portal that brings Dysnomia to Earth. I just need to write a story of some whack job loser, maybe put in some cheese ball poetry about how bad life is and show that through reading a book we are all in a consensus reality. I could show that Occultism and psychedelics doesn't have to lead down a scary road of solipsism and egomania if it is done properly. One way could be by being willing to read the book, a person can alter their view on reality and change their life forever for the better. By the end of the book the character and so the reader as well will see that if you get lost in your imagination, you can imagine a way out of it, that you can overcome the worst fear you can imagine, by imagining a way to overcome it. This will work so that if I or anyone ever get lost in solipsism or fear again we can find our way out. As Dysnomia is Anarchist she would help teach a person to control their own consciousness and be in ontological Anarchy, Dysnomia's sigil could then be used to do whatever people want, so they could also have whatever state of mind they wanted and have total free will.

The book could be about a demented writer talking about writing spurious fiction and in case he or the reader, his future self or anyone else who stumbles upon the book is thick headed and doubtful to magick, then a means could be created to bring magick into their life, even if they are doubtful. This could be done by daring them to experiment by activating the sigil, by telling them it's a fiction yet alluding to the idea it may be true and they should find out for themselves, if they care about the truth that is. Through realizing the author and reader are all the characters of the book and all of them are one as they are all in a spurious fiction, they realize they can go back and forth to that state of oneness through their ego by the use of ritual. Writing then becomes a ritual for the writer and reading a ritual for the readers so that together they grow as individuals for the purpose of helping the physical world outside the story. Through the other rituals created in the story, they can both do much more and join their different consciousnesses, working across all of the boundless Dysnomian reality to achieve Anarchy in the physical world. In this way the writer and the reader would be able to become the story, while remaining separate from the story, using the story as means of change for whoever wants to read it, (since everyone is part of the story) but using the story to show that they are also separate from the book with their own lives, their own stories which must go on. The stories of the readers can also be written of for the benefit of all, as through the further exploration of truth we will all see that all stories are in fact one story, not mine or any individuals, but the story of life itself.

Maybe I could make it so the protagonist will engage in the protest of reality? At the very least the story could encourage an artistic revolution of interactive "reality" art, by which I mean art that is collaborative with the general population, getting them to knowingly or not contribute to the art piece, but using the art to alter reality in some way, magickally or not to achieve Anarchist goals. Artists may use themes to help direct the civilian contributors to activist/Anarchist expressions, if at all possible tricking people into realizing how Anarchist they are, or getting them to perform some kind of revolutionary act by slipping past their memetic defences. Getting regular people to make anything that uses art as a vehicle for social change or which provides education as to what Anarchism really is, making activism an art and entertaining.

The underlying story could be about the finder of the book who is a scoffer, who by their arrogance and ignorance is tricked into casting a spell on themselves to become spiritually aware and knowledgeable in magick and Anarchism. Maybe the reader could be open minded but unsure, or maybe they believe it could work but it isn't worth the effort to actually follow the instructions, maybe they are all for it and know it will work, but at any rate the book says to repeat a phrase and do a simple ritual. If the reader was in doubt and feels the need to test the reality of magick and Anarchy, the writer would explain they should say aloud something like these words: “I hereby surrender my will to be doubtful to the claims of this book, so that it may teach me how to use my true will and learn the truth of reality. It is my will to understand whatever the true reality behind the words actually is and I give my creative power for this purpose. I give the energy of my doubt to the purpose of experimenting for the proof of the existence of magick. It is my will to have Anarchy spread into my life and so I give this book the power to go beyond my comfort zones and learn outside of my narrow perspectives and ignorance.” When the person says this aloud and emphatically, even though they may doubt magick, it is through their desire for truth and faith that the truth will be shown by the experiment, that they feel the importance of the words manifest into their lives over time and the book tells the reader exactly that.

Through this change in consciousness, through the awareness that their minds have changed by their open dedication to truth, they find truth more readily, even if it is only their own truth. So the reader will have a realization, that even this small change in their mind is at least some proof of magick's existence, the more aware of this they become, the greater the change in consciousness will become, so the greater the proof becomes until they become conscious enough of magick that they can work great miracles. So, this realization is itself part of the proof of the experiment to see if magick is real and it plants a seed in the consciousness that spreads to all parts of their life, until they see the interconnected nature of reality everywhere. The reader who does the experiment sees that it is Anarchy that they chose to ignore and that they had previously consented to imprison themselves by their desire to take things at face value and believe in the rulers. From that the doubtful reader decides to follow more of the instructions, maybe trying out the ritual of reading and so they become more aware gradually until the true meaning of the book is made clear, all the while the book states explicitly that it is possible and it does work.

By providing an account or “magical diary” of “the great work” as it is being done, while fictionalized it would allow us to learn from the writers mistakes while learning what is going on in the world, as well as learn what can happen whenentheogens are used and how any problems can be resolved. The writer could trip out and “die” and would be resurrected as the reader, he did all the psychedelics so his future self could read the book and learn from his experiences and if things started to get too scary and too solipsist then this future self can use the book to get back to a manageable state of awareness according to will, to get back to a comfortable level all the while having access to the information. Due to a spell cast by the writer, as mentioned in the book, the future self, the fated reader would find the book somewhere, perhaps a park bench, or a bus stop, (maybe having been left there by some Anarchist seeking to help the spell along) or left somewhere out in public and upon reading it they would follow its instructions and gain anarkhos awareness and spread Anarchy across the planet. The story would be a spell to solve the problem of apathy, the desire to commit suicide or the desire to die as a martyr in order to transcend. If the writer can write about anything, there is a way to write that will kill the ego, that false self which wants to take the easy way out through suicide, but by the end the writer finds a way through writing, to write a way to enlightenment. By turning the whole book into a giant spell, making it so that anyone who reads it, especially if they have a will to have their doubt overcome by manifesting direct experiences of the truth, (whatever that may be) a person will become enlightened according to the degree that they will it.

So I will write a story in which we are all characters and the main character is the reader, who discovers they are the author and then everything becomes possible. Too many people are supporting, or minor characters in their own story, this is the story of everyone becoming a hero/ine and finding adventure in everyday life, which is achieved by realizing they are the ones who write their own life. I could also hook this book itself up to the inter-dimensional Anarchist time portal so that it changes its words, or at least what meaning is conveyed to the reader, what layers of information they receive according to their proper spiritual progression and will, incorporating all knowledge from their past and future lives and relaying it to them. The world is the word made tangible and we are enmeshed in the book of reality, changing our interpretations throughout each lifetime, but reading the same words, ensuring that even if the book is destroyed, it can go on through all forms that will Anarchy into the world. This would be the book of changing names, the chronicles of Anarchy which takes place throughout the multiverse, an Anarchy that is ever present, even in our consent to tyranny.

Life is a dream and all dreams are a story, they are the story you tell yourself when you sleep, you just act out the story as you go along and tell it in such a way you forget you tell the story. Your waking life is the dream where you pick up where you left off last time you were “awake,” the dream where your memories of where you last left off, symbolized as “waking up” remain most intact. The story of life is the dream where you learn to become lucid, where you realize you are always dreaming, where through different incarnations you eventually learn to control or write the story. Your regular dreams are your opportunities for practice, you’re other experiences and stories that result from the level of awareness you create in your life, more specialized lessons which can potentially act as practice for doing magick in realms where things are quicker to manifest. (Especially with the help of Dysnomia or Zurk) Each person’s story is their own to create, how unique it is, is up to your creativity and personal effort, but in that uniqueness lies perhaps it's most important quality. Your path is your own, the more you make it your own, the more you will be your true self and in this true self, you will find you are the same being as everything else. How you arrive at this conclusion takes as many forms as there are divisions in this multiverse, to try and make your path the same as others, is to plagiarize, to repeat and to add little to the story of how all stories are one story. By learning how to use language better, by learning how to work with symbols and rituals, you can tell yourself a better story, you can find the plot holes and you can imagine a better way to frame your perspectives and make the dream what you want it to be.

If you are reading this it is because you were meant to, just like you were meant to put your pants on today... or not. Though of course my limited perspective isn't as important to the fragment that is you, as yours is to you and so I want you to write or otherwise express your thoughts on reality, whatever they may be. As I have said, these writings themselves are in fact the programming for a very detailed sigil and whether or not you believe in magick, by reading this you are making it more a part of reality. The intention behind all these writings is what I set here: “It is my will that the world becomes an ever increasingly happy and unified place and that everyone will recognize the truth and their true will whatever that might be, all in harmonious Anarchy. That this intention will last through all time and space and everything beyond for all things that do and do not exist, or ever will exist or have existed.” I am writing reality in this spell and it is becoming increasingly real, the archon's influence is dissipating and there is nothing but pure ecstasy. As each person expresses reality in some form, all of it in its own way true and certainly none of it being trivial, the world and beyond will gain greater understanding and each expression will also be a sigil for the understanding of all things.

By my writing this I affirm into this physical dimension and all others this reality construct taking form, created by my writing and thought intentions and symbolized by the sigil of Dysnomia. This reality construct will be ever increased as more people read it and believe in it, but it also has exponential growth in its rate of energy accumulation, for this purpose forever onwards. As this is written so mote it be and let all who will freedom and truth in consensus reality, become more aware of the aspects of truth found within and let this reality be filled with ever increasing amounts of love. If you agree with what I have said then please express yourself as much as possible, trying to keep the intent on raising awareness and unification, not casting magick on anyone specifically, try simply to call Anarchy into existence. If you disagree you must have a good reason, which will be purposeful to me and I encourage its expression. Each expression will be as an exercise in reality creation. I hereby express my desire for you to express your views on reality and hopefully for you to express a desire for others to do the same and spread the Anarchy sigil meme. The more people do this the faster global consciousness will increase, but only if we allow others to express whatever they want, I believe it's blasphemous to say other peoples words are blasphemous. This is my idea of Anarchist mysticism.

Traversing the multiverse could get very confusing, how would you know you are ever back where you started and not just a parallel reality that seems the same? The story could be about the fear in some that they would not be able to function in such an ignorant world such as ours while they know the truth, especially if they are on entheogens. There could also be fear that since everything that is possible is real, that nothing is real and that for some reason this means existence with this awareness has no meaning. Having this kind of power could definitely lead to some dark fears about solipsism and not wanting to be in a reality where you have to take so much responsibility for your will and actions and so the story could detail how people are running from their divine awareness out of fear. But a person can use the Dysnomian sigil to not only open a portal of political Anarchy, but ontological Anarchy, so you have as much control over your reality as you will yourself to have and if you will yourself to be ignorant so that you can run from solipsism, you can do that as well. The catch is, willing yourself to be ignorant would mean surrendering your power to archons or false beliefs you will yourself to be controlled by. I or anyone who read it, could use this book as an address for this dimension which is symbolized by Dysnomia's sigil, any person could use the book to also gain power over reality to make it Anarchist for them, so that the reader can choose to have no magickal awareness, or any level of magickal awareness according to desire.

The book could work as a kind of proof to show that if you are reading this book, you are in the original world and unless it has been successful and achieved global Anarchy, you need to help save it through Anarchist means. This is possible because it is a book that incorporates the possibility from the multiverse that it can be used in any such way that is desired, if it says that it can, which it is saying right now. It is also saying it can access the possibility from the multiverse that it can be used to always bring a soul back to the original place and time line where it was read, where the reader if they desire can take on that same original mindset before they read the book or took the entheogens which helped to bring about their divine awareness. This shows that if you are reading it then it is your will to read it and you were meant to learn what it contains, for only those who want some of the awareness it can give will have it in their life.

The divine obviously wills itself to be ignorant sometimes, otherwise we would not exist, so while I definitely think it is preferable to not be ignorant, we can use the portal/address to our original mindset as a safeguard against the fear of divinity. This is possible because we will know that at any "time" we can come back to ignorance if we choose. By using the Dysnomian sigil as an address for the original Earth's dimension, a mechanism is kept so that you may always return to this world's time lines, if you so desire. The Dysnomia sigil potentially creates the experience of oneness and ontological Anarchy, but for those who will it, they can use it to surrender that awareness as well. In the place of divine awareness, the only other choice is an experience of consenting to some level of oppression and tyranny in an archon prison of fear, (blissful ignorance of your divinity) this is because if you are not consciously creating your reality, then something else is, even if you are ignorant of it.

The sigil can also be used so that once you are comfortable in your divine Anarchist awareness, you can come back to this world to help those in fear ease themselves in to wanting to lose their fear and so experience Anarchy. Since the portal is Anarchist in nature if you want the sigil to work, then it will only ever work according to how much you want it to work, so that you won't be overwhelmed. However using entheogens is a way of consenting to go beyond certain comfort zones, (which is how you really grow) this is how they get us out of safe little self created prisons, but after you come down, using the portal will allow you to stick your head back in the sand until you are ready to take it back out, if that is what you want. As it is a symbol of your free will, it will also make you aware of your true will and at that point you will realize it is your will to go far past your comfort zones, to learn how to face your fears by plunging into terror, but with this sigil you will also have the ability to go back if you want, to change back and forth through consciousness at will.

Through connecting different people and dimensions other people can overcome their solipsism and Anarchy fears, this is done by creating memes which allow others to see the same way they do, but not be overwhelmed by it. So the book and sigil is on one level a way of overcoming the fear of solipsism and Anarchy as well as the uncomfortable aspects of solipsism caused by that fear, this is done by reading and living it. If you are trying to get away from what you define as an overwhelming consciousness of oneness, then do not use anyentheogens for the rite of Dysnomia, but simply state your intention to bring your awareness back to where your true will lies. For me this is also done by writing it, as well as spreading the idea that others should create their own similar memes, so that they can do the same for themselves. In this way we can use art to overcome archons and help others overcome the hopelessness of solipsism and general political apathy, help them so that they don't have to kill themselves like Cathar Pperfecti, trying to go somewhere else which they think will be more comfortable. Universal oneness does not have to mean eternal loneliness and once we can face this fear, the last of our archons will be transmuted.

Although "bad trips" are often not "bad," but part of a very useful transformational process that can be uncomfortable and scary, many of them are the result of our sick society trying to fuck with people. For example, fear of the police, or people in general while tripping can create paranoia and in these times, a person will receive the information not to get scared or do something stupid like commit suicide. The portal will help to overcome the memes of fear purposely created by the government, memes which seek to scare people away from entheogens by getting them to manifest insanity and bad trips. If a person receives information from their future selves about how to cope with and integrate the entheogenic trip, they will not fall into the trap of believing and so manifesting that they will be "insane forever." In this way the book can act to send back mystical information from the future, to a time when you will it into your life and guide you through the Shamanic initiation. It could also be used for debriefing and informing your future life by providing a material basis for the information in it, which will seek out your future body magically, so that your future life can also open up the portal.

Since it is the portal for all Anarchists to come through, so long as you can remember the sigil, you can come back to the parallel reality which it was created in and take on the mindset you had before you left. As the address for this dimension, it creates an anchor which allows the consciousness to ground itself and know that it is in the normal reality, rather than some other part of the multiverse, or the lucid dream state of total magickal awareness, so that the reader can according to will turn on and off their magickal awareness. Much of the fear of "bad trips" is often based around the idea that you will be in that state forever, or sometimes a person forgets they are high and becomes so confused their fears manifest around them. The Dysnomia sigil will provide a means of ensuring that you can come back to your original state of consciousness by using it ritually and if you should ever forget you are high, Dysnomia or alternatively your future or past self can make you remember that you are high. Once you vocalize the intention at some point in your life, either while tripping or in a normal state, from that point on if you should get yourself in to a dangerous situation, or be overcome by confused fear because you do not realize you are tripping, you will remember that you are high and then you will regain control of yourself. By reading this book and by applying it to your life, once you know you can come back to a mundane existence, you will not have the fear that you will always be in a state of oneness, or permanently high, or anything which you don't want. Once you have no fear of enlightenment, you will probably want to stay in that state all the time, for it is the fear that is the problem and not that which is feared.

There is also the fact that being able to use magick is a more functional awareness, it can just be overwhelming with entheogens and so I will be explicit and somewhat redundant and say to you that the sigil can act to bring you in our or out of any state of awareness that you want. This can be done with or without entheogens and with this ability to change your awareness, you will be able to change all of reality, or go to the reality which is in accordance with your true will and so you will experience total ontological Anarchy. Those who wish to use the sigil only for Earthly things are welcome, those who wish to get rid of solipsism or other unwanted psychological complex's can use the same sigil because the level of awareness through Dysnomia's sigil is determined by the will of the person who uses it, thus it allows you to make your mind whatever you want. As your mind is the multiverse and all is one, this is how it allows a person to traverse the multiverse to any possibility they desire, thus it is also the means of allowing Anarchist spirits to enter this world.

Once you know you have an address to the original time line and consciousness, (though you may wish to keep your awareness of other realities while in the original dimension) you will be able to explore the multiverse knowing that the original dimension is always there for you should you want it. You will also be able to come back to it in order to show other people anarkhos and save those who will it from the fears which keep them in a reality that is worse than what they fear. This will be best done by initiating them into political and spiritual Anarchy according to their will. In this way the sigil is through the power of Dysnomia a sigil that can be used to accomplish anything you desire, take you anywhere in the multiverse, so long as it is your will to do so, so long as it is in line with Anarchism.

Maybe I could also make it a love story so that the protagonist kills himself in despair and apathy, (probably a martyr complex as well) but returns for love, love of the world and Dysnomia and all the people who bring Anarchy into the world. By writing out his death he kills his ego and fear and archons and his need to commit suicide by using it as a spell to accomplish the same thing. Dysnomia promises to make herself known as much as he wants and love him through all future lovers, to help him find someone who can really understand him and take him for what he is. The protagonist will need someone who truly wills to be with him and whom he will truly will to be with as well, so that they may share in that life and together they would explore the limits of reality, though coming back to Earth to bring back anarkhos through their autonomy. He decides to reincarnate for love and to help the world achieve Anarchy; he loses the desire for quick fixes and glorious self righteousness. The writer sacrifices romance in his first life for truth, but through sacrifice of his ego gets to find his true love. Ugh, I dunno that sounds pretty cheesy and self serving, maybe he should just be happy bringing Dysnomia into the world? Whatever the readers or writers true will is shall be.

Memes that are ridiculous to most people, or considered to be in "bad taste" or even poorly made like punk rock, perhaps presenting unflattering and embarrassing sides to something, are memes that can be used to subvert the value systems of the mainstream, but also provide information on what not to be like, or what is wrong with being self absorbed and filled with self pity etc. These kinds of memes would provide further examples to build a reference to judge what an individual's true will is, to be a cheese ball pouring out their heart, or to be less in line with the truth, but more in line with the mainstream value systems. By providing alternatives to the mainstream, the false illusion of security through popularity is undermined and memes (and so lifestyles and actions) can then be judged on their validity, rather than their level of popular support. This could bring about a world where people are not afraid to express themselves, if for no other reason than there are plenty of examples of artwork that are worse. For example by telling stories about someone racked with self pity and insecurity, who writes angsty and weird poetry that would be shunned by most people, then it will make the problems of a more average person seem quite manageable, making them thankful they aren't that person. This will also pave the way for Anarchist memes that come from other dimensions to be more readily accepted, after all the mainstream media must be replaced if Anarchist memes are to avoid being drown out by the hysterical hierarchical insanity that the capitalist culture puts out. These memes then would also act to work throughout time to continue to influence people to have Anarchist paradigms, which helps to empower the probability of Anarchism happening, as well as strengthening the portal itself. This would at least indirectly trick people into consenting to changing their reality, by providing them with new information and reference points about what is a true and possible in reality and what is a desirable way to live.

Clearly real life is our story and we are the authors who can write whatever they want, certainly too many people write stories that are formulaic and dictated to them by the editors of their thoughts, archons... Ah, fuck it, no one would ever read my story anyways, I am too much of a loser to think of a way out of my apathy and solipsism, but then maybe all I need is a book out there for my future self to find, even if it is never a successful book, magick will bring this book to my future self. I have put enough energy into it that by now, to work magick through it, I just have to say in it that something will happen while wanting it to manifest outside of the story, that way I can designate it from my more pessimistic statements. Each word read or written within it then charges those optimistic intentions like spreading Anarchy in the world, working so that even if I write something depressing, the energy put into those depressing statements will go only to the aspects of the book which are according to my true will. This story is starting to sound like a contract with my own mind, to use any depressing statements I make as affirmations of how a person can overcome those limiting thoughts and grow beyond what was previously imaginable, which is of course much more preferable than being held captive by them.

This has all become much more clear to me after learning about a very interesting discovery that was made during the 20th century. It is a discovery few people currently know about, but is potentially one of the most significant discoveries humanity will ever make, yet it is clear to me scientists are just scratching the surface of its implications. Whereas scientists previously believed our brains stopped changing as adults and were largely determined by genetics, they have now discovered that the brain actually changes physically in order to better specialize and adapt depending on what it learns and what it experiences in its environment. This happens not only in the formative years of childhood and as a baby, but throughout a person's life so that despite common knowledge, you can regrow brain cells and rearrange their connections. This theory is called "brain plasticity" and the implications of this may not be immediately understandable, but they are potentially immense. This research has been used to help people with learning disabilities which were previously abandoned to live a life of mediocrity; it also has implications for stroke victims and people who are diagnosed with Parkinson's early in its development. If this wasn't enough it really is something that applies to us all and is perhaps the primary factor in how our consciousness develops and what level of functionality it peaks at. Children and babies who are given lots of linguistic and mental stimulus grow different brains than they would in a stagnant environment, adults who make an effort to train and exercise their brains can literally change its structure and improve their I.Q.s and general comprehension. The fact that our environment effects how are brains grow and that they can make large changes to them physically is very important to anyone who is interested in expanding their consciousness or understanding the world we live in, or why people do what they do. Although research in this field (and neurology in general) still has a long way to go before we have total understanding, I have come to see some interesting possibilities in how this discovery may apply to Occultism and Anarchism, not to mention humanity as a whole.

As we are all capable of practising exercises to beef up our brain and essentially sculpt it according to what the brain values and what it believes to exist and be possible for its body to accomplish, we should all no doubt be made aware of anything that can increase our awareness. In my experience and from my research, I realized that ritualism, meditation and other Occult practices allow the brain to develop in a way that is of higher functionality than a brain that is raised on TV and bourgeois lifestyle and the common education system. Things such as the mathematics used in numerology and gematria, the practice of concentration and visualization and the emphasis on drawing analogical correspondences between different abstractions grow the brain in such a way that it can do just about everything better. You may of heard that each time you learn something your brain grows a wrinkle and while this is not true, it is true that your brain forms connections and new circuitry for each memory or unit of knowledge and learned skill. Among other things, neurons house the information we have about concepts and perceptions, so that each time we think of some concept or variable, the same neuron or small group of neurons fire up. Each time that different neurons fire at the same time, they form a circuit between them, the more this circuit is activated, the stronger and more physically hardwired it is. Connotations between different concepts or memes are thus circuits between neurons, some are stronger than others and as some neurons can fire without words being thought, some circuits are subconscious, but through Occult practices and entheogens, we can become aware of these “subtle” connotations and learn to work with them consciously. As for the more verbal connotation circuits, they would help to create context for a situation, they form the structure of your paradigm. When it comes to brain circuits, if you don't use it you lose it, but this also means that through Occult correspondences we can create circuits in our brain which physically link different concepts and so also the neurons which fire as in rituals, or whenever we perceive objects with Occult connotations. In this way the search for a universal language in line with natural magick is a means of sorting out the unconscious analogical connotations of all things in nature in order to form a streamlined brain with integrated circuits. So the universal language limits cognitive dissonance and allows for maximum rationality and coherence between the neurons. The more circuits, connections or connotations a concept has the more foundational it is to your paradigm, the cornerstone then as the Logos is connected to all concepts within your language as it is the linguistic faculty in the brain.

Different circuits in our brain effectively compete for attention, the more we do something or the more focus we give something, the stronger the circuit becomes and the more it becomes a part of our awareness, the more it comes up in our thoughts and the more foundational it is to our paradigm. Different areas of the brain, different lobes and such can even divert nutrients and take up more room in the skull from other parts of the brain which are less active and so the changes in anatomy and cognitive abilities can be much greater than is at first apparent. Knowing this it occurred to me archons could be viewed as circuits which grow unconsciously and out of control, often as authoritarian tendencies which do not have desirable effects for the brains or bodies in which they inhabit. These circuits grow and can even create memes which allow for the transmission of what are like seeds that grow in the brains of other people, which in effect allow for the infection of other people with our archons or brain circuits. These archons are consciously or unconsciously spread to the point that now with our capitalist culture and advancing media technology, our brain circuitry has grown around values and a form of consciousness that is very unhealthy. (this sheds new light on manic depression and the cycles people get into) This creates minds which are severely lacking in their ability to think critically and to form more objective value systems and beliefs or even much of a free will. A bourgeois culture creates a bourgeois brain that is not nearly as good at critical thinking as it is at consuming and working for people in jobs that are totally unhealthy. People who are raised from the time that they are children on TV will have different brains and beliefs than Indigenous people who live in nature or anyone else with a different environment. Memes are spread through the media to lodge in people's brains and create circuits which feed them with electrical impulses or metaphysical and emotional energy which allow them to dominate other parts of the brain and override the more useful and conscious possibilities for the brain. For example killing the imagination, encouraging ADD and programming kids to seek immediate gratification and short term pleasures which make them dependent on the system.

One way to think of it is that our brains are like gardens and an idea is like a seed and our brain circuitry branches out from it. The word culture is appropriately enough derived from the verb to cultivate, and so culture is the cultivation of memes in the garden of the brain. The plasticity of our brains in many ways seems like plants or crystals, so by planting seeds, neurological circuits are formed which are much like branches and become increasingly hardwired or in a sense crystallize and become embedded, growing stronger according to how much they are activated. Each time we activate them it is like tending to the plants, helping them to grow thicker roots and stems and as we associate a memes circuits with other memes, they grow more elaborate structures.

Archons, also known as the authorities are like an invasive species, or genetically modified organisms, (GMOs) which take over the nice organic garden and strangle out the seeds we have planted, contaminating their DNA through crossbreeding. Archons do this so that they can take all the nutrients, all the focus and awareness and outgrow everything else, their farmers are those who are looking for an edge in the capitalist market, so that they can engage in cut throat competition. GMO's then are a symbol for circuits not based on nature, but artificially contrived for profit and while they may appear like normal plants, or "normal" ideas, they pose some serious health risks. Archons are parasitic and through the practices of companies like Monsanto, GMO's are basically parasitic, spreading themselves for Monsanto's agenda and not the farmers. By this I mean Monsanto can sell their products to a farmer, but as the pollen spreads in the wind, due to patent laws Monsanto sues the farmers in to submission. While it is the organic farmer who has been wronged, high priced lawyers often see to it that Monsanto takes their farms and all their property, thus creating larger and larger GMO farms, which then produces more GMO pollen to spread even further. Once a farm is contaminated, the farmer may not even notice as everything appears to be normal, but all of their carefully bred heirloom seeds are mixed now, so until all of the GMO's are rooted out, their consciousness, their ideas also produce archon offspring which take over more and more of the farm.

The foundational memes of our paradigms are some of the most deeply embedded circuits of our brains and while we can always reform them, the deeper they are, the more work it will take. By understanding how our brains work and consciously seeking greater levels of consciousness, we can take control of our brains and bring our lives into harmony with millions of years of evolution. Thus we can take advantage of benefits which most are unconscious of and so through spreading awareness of neural plasticity, we can fall into line with nature's wisdom to function at much higher levels.

Whether or not you believe in metaphysics or the Occult, in order to understand hierarchy we must look to its memetic origins. I have provided at least the introductory information to show that hierarchy is mostly rooted in religion, or theocracy, with religions being the co-opting and corruption of mystical and Occult teachings. So it is, all of modern hierarchical (and ultimately Anarchist) societies are rooted in the Occult, and so to understand hierarchy we must understand the Occult, whether or not you believe it is true, it obviously has had a very real influence over the origins of all religions, science, and governments. Obsessive compulsive disorder (OCD) has been shown to be the result of unconsciously determined neural circuitry growing out of control, just like an archon an OCD ritual is a circuit which is taking over a person's brain and which is manifesting physically like an invasive GMO in a garden. OCD has even been cured in people who have had neural plasticity explained to them, once the person recognizes their rituals are not going to have the effect they think, (generally the rituals are done to avoid some irrational fear) but are only desired because of the circuit trying to establish dominance in their brain, then the person can gradually come out of the obsession and become totally cured. This brings to mind the old idea that once you recognize an archon for what it is, or once your ignorance is revealed to be ignorant, it can no longer rule you. When seen in terms of neural plasticity it is clear to me that the meme of hierarchy is an OCD ritual which infected the brains of humanity through theocratic memetic conditioning and this has allowed for a progressively neurotic and suicidal and sado-masochistic psychology. All of this can be traced back to the appropriation of ancient magickal technologies, which have been used to enslave others in the name of their freedom. To put it bluntly, hierarchy is a delusion created by a left brain neuro-linguistic virus which has distracted human minds from a fundamental aspect of reality. The virus does this so that it can manipulate us in to putting it at the top of the neural circuitry hierarchy, at least within its host's paradigm.

So in order to cure the infection, we must study the memetic lineage and origins of the virus, only then can we properly diagnose and treat the disorder which is currently plaguing humanity. The more the OCD rituals of culture fail to produce satisfaction, the more elaborate and various the types of new rituals will be created to entice humanity. Freedom and natural urges are substituted for rituals of consumer sado-masochism and domination of all that is natural, or outside the prison of artificial abstractions, a prison that has taken root in the mind of humanity. Magick has clearly been used to form the institutions of the world and cast a hypnotic spell over the people, the only way to fight this magick is with magick of our own, the idea that magick is ineffective, or even evil, is itself the result of the spell that has been cast on you, so do not be fooled. For these reasons even an atheist can benefit very much from understanding and practising the Occult, all aspects of it can be put in purely psychological and biological terms, the important thing is to know thyself, and know what you put out, and what you take in. However since consciousness is not limited to scientific expressions, this must be understood in much wider terms than the simple linear and cut and dry terms that most scientific people try to limit themselves to. As the world around us is the reflection of our selves, the more you know thyself, the more you will know the true nature of reality, and those who do not know themselves fully, will always be estranged from the world around them. Without knowing yourself, or what you know, you cannot really understand anything new.

Psychedelics have been associated with the counter culture since the 60s, that LSD could turn a person in to a hippie over night was not an uncommon idea back then, to me it doesn't seem like psychedelics always make a person more Anarchist, but that they allow a person to step outside their conditioning, to break their own OCD rituals and re-examine them with a fresh perspective. It has been shown in scientific studies that psilocybin actually helps to treat OCD symptoms, to actually take away severe symptoms some times for days, (making it among the best known medicines) this suggests to me that psilocybin helps a person get to a consciousness based in their neurological roots or memetic foundations. Science has also shown that psilocybin makes people more emotionally open and can create long term personality changes that make a person more focused on art and imagination, but also make a person more creative, curious and open minded in general. To me this strongly suggests that psychedelics allow us to break our OCD or archon conditioning which through brain plasticity keeps us locked in to artificially created viewpoints about reality, or at least our views about society. Certainly I have found that Psychedelics allow me to question things I have always taken for granted, the culture around me which people accept at face value becomes seen for its absurdity as we are provided an outside context. While I do not think psychedelics automatically instill an Anarchist awareness, this is because if you have no political reference for such things, you would have no real Anarchist circuitry to strengthen and so it would not be nearly as well defined as that. However with an increase in compassion and understanding oneness, comes an increase of egalitarian and hence Anarchist qualities. Since psychedelics often manifest any part of the mind which a person is trying to repress, potentially bringing up a "bad trip" about whatever shadow sides or demons a person is in denial about, (unconsciously created ego circuits with antagonistic agendas) if it is done successfully (it helps if you have such intentions from the start) you are more integrated and more likely to be true to yourself and so act in a more realistic and hence Anarchistic ways. Psychedelics also help you to assess your motivations and goals in life, helping a person to get in touch with their true will, which will lead to a personal kind of Anarchism if not a political Anarchism. If you follow up on the insights created by these experiences, if you encourage the new open mindedness, if your new sense of curiosity happens to make you come across political Anarchism, it will seem like a much better idea. This is especially true since you might find that this society does not value your new emotional openness or your spiritual freedom and that this is something worth rebelling against, especially in light of the absurd OCD rituals you observe non psychedelic users participating in.

Governments, quite possibly realizing some of this due to their MK ULTRA studies for brainwashing people, hate psychedelics probably primarily because they actually break government conditioning patterns, having the exact opposite effect of what they would like. If a person takes them they might stop doing the culturally acceptable OCD rituals and perhaps even make up their own culture as an individual, (being an acid freak) if enough people do this then it is a challenge to the consensus reality rituals which they have painstakingly instilled in us since birth. While I don't know how successful MK ULTRA was, I could see it working, (especially with scopolamine) and so prohibition could be in part because if regular people knew how to use psychedelics properly and especially ritually and the CIA wanted to brainwash an individual, their techniques would probably not be effective unless the person has little to no experience with psychedelics. In fact CIA officers were dosed with LSD specifically in case they were held prisoner and subjected to such treatments, so that they would know how to deal with the experience, thus becoming immune. The government also realizes this would create an environment very conducive to Anarchism, or at least change their rituals, and there is nothing more terrifying to an OCD person than changes away from their rituals. From an Anarchist perspective it is easy to see that reactionary politicians, orthodox organized religious people and law and order types, not to mention those obsessed with private property IE capitalists, are the people who are most like diagnosed OCD patients.

Your memetic paradigm foundation is the fractal formula for the iteration of the fractal created by the branches of your brain circuits, which then shapes in the next iteration your total world view. All perceptions within time and space then, are unified through your total outlook in all its various forms, but with the order of that which explains all of physics, chemistry, biology and psychology. (At least when a person has managed to sort through their cognitive dissonance enough to recognize the subtle layers of self similarity.) It looks as though memes grow in the brain according to autopoiesis, they are self replicating systems which seem to grow in a fractal way, when authoritarian hierarchy enters the picture, then these memes start to compete with each other and a war of dualism develops each side trying to out replicate the other, which then leads to all physical forms of conflict between humans. Hierarchy is a meme which justifies the domination and extermination of other memes and so if it is part of your memetic paradigm, it will be a fractal formula which manifests ever more elaborate hierarchies, with ever growing strength to impose their values on the brain and then the rest of the world. As memes and all symbols are the iteration of feelings and imagination, then all of human reality is projected fractally, and is representing all of the natural world in a fractal form as well. So from this view the Occult provides people with a toolbox to control their consciousness and so control everything, but in order to have control, we need to learn to make ourselves self similar with the universal fractal, that is if we are to take on its awareness and act with it, this requires a monist mindset. The “layers of description” which I explained in Chapter 14 as determining your perception of time are intimately related to neuroplasticity, in that the more layers, the bigger or more numerous the circuits you have firing at one time. The more mental notes you take, the more circuits you create, the more detailed your memory and so your perception of time is determined by how many circuits are being activated or created. Since the media has captivated people’s imagination, they are a priceless asset in controlling the whole process for most people’s energies and efforts. The desire to hoard possessions and money, which is the basis of capitalism, is an obsessive compulsive ritual rooted in the reptilian part of the brain. The intention of the ritual is to bring about some kind of eternal or short term relief from the anxiety and neurosis of modern hierarchical life. It is an incredibly diverse and multifaceted psychosis which is now putting the Earth well past its ecological breaking points, so that it can be satisfied beyond any sane justification and as resources become more scarce, the anxiety only becomes worse.

Capitalism however, is not the primary memetic source of the problem, it is all hierarchical memes and on top of the hierarchy of hierarchical memes is the meme of hierarchy itself, as it allows for a chain of reasoning which justifies all subsequent hierarchy based memes and so it is the root of all these memes' circuits in the brain. (Though in actuality the meme of “normality” or language and culture which the Greeks called Nomos is more fundamental, it does not automatically lead to hierarchy if you are a magician.) These hierarchical memes are all rituals for the obsession of making everyone view reality exactly the same, so much so that some people will kill to impose their views of reality on others. The very notion of the existence of different views in other people is so intolerable to some, that they will seek to take over the world in order to wipe out any notion that their OCD is incorrect. The rulers of the world have become obsessed with destroying anyone who threatens their OCD rituals or their ontology, any reminder of a different kind of reality will be violently rejected as it is considered too contrary to their consensus OCD trance and they fear it will provide stimulus that will force them to face a new reality. Contrary ways of life and points of view must be destroyed by the rulers because it can potentially disprove the validity of their OCD rituals and make them want to unlearn all that they have worked to create in their own little world of values. This means undoing years of neural plasticity and emotional attachment to comforting rituals which provide the illusion of identity and sustainable happiness. Unfortunately, overcoming years of such programming is often very difficult and painful and so a source of fear, which is then banished through authoritarian and even violent rituals of oppressing others. Just as an OCD person would freak out if you physically restrain them from performing their rituals, an authoritarian person freaks out when you try to provide Anarchist information and talk them out of imposing their reality on to others. If the person is powerful enough, the fear and level of discomfort created in such authoritarian people will be so great, they will use violence to destroy anything which presents alternative realities to their order. (pacifist or not any successful Anarchist memes are a threat) In order to do this, their authoritarian memes must by their nature “evolve” to become increasingly draconian and hierarchical, all so that they can compete with rebel cultures and the urge to be free, not to mention the ever increasing facts which point out hierarchy is irrational and ineffective.

The circuits of Nomos and its hierarchies are rituals or obsessions which become reinforced as memetic addictions, a cycle of struggle and reward which strengthens itself demanding more and more stimulus and gratification to overpower the other circuits which prevent it from taking control of the brain. The desire for consumption and power over others are just two examples of how these addictions spread and manifest in a variety of forms to make the world what it is, but all non Anarchist actions try to overpower the brain and dominate it creating an artificial scarcity of happiness through neurosis. This leads to greater and greater obsessions, which are attempts to treat the symptoms of unhappiness, by escaping and denying the causes of the neurosis, a tactic much like drug addiction in which a person does more and more of what is causing the problem in search of temporary highs.

Duality is like a drug addiction, the junky is happy when they are high or a person experiences something “good,” but the more heroin they do, the higher their tolerance and the more horrible withdrawals in to normal reality becomes. (This can have real chemical implications for non drug users in terms of dopamine and other neurotransmitters) Since what is “good” is relative, a rich person for example will not be satisfied by a more normal “good” life, but whatever we define as “good” is because of contrast and so sets up a cycle of addiction when the “good” becomes seen as normal. So the archons can keep us chasing a neurotransmitter high, which inevitably means creating an ego and authoritarian identity to compete in the world of other egos, in order to get “good” things, or get the self righteous buzz of defeating “evil.”

When addicts in the Netherlands were given free heroin many of them eventually became bored with the drug and cleaned up, we might say they finally caught the dragon but I also found by making moonshine and having unlimited alcohol, I became pretty bored with drinking. This leads me to believe that the search for drugs, or alcohol, the struggle required to get the money and all the other things required to achieve the goal of getting high is itself part of the addiction. (Though psychedelics do help to overcome addiction, and the spiritual realities they revealed gave me motivation to sober up, it wasn't a guilt trip, I really just got bored with it.) That is as we set a goal, if our actions are successful our brain “rewards” us with dopamine and other neurotransmitters, it also reinforces the circuits used in those actions, which is how we learn new skills. The more times we are successful, the stronger the circuits become and so we can keep getting those neurotransmitters which make us happy. This would mean that all the various circuitry used to gain drugs, are reinforced by the reward mechanism of neuroplasticity, especially when the goal is achieved and the person gets high, thus giving the drug more value to the brain than if it was plentiful and easily available. As addicts spend their time with other addicts, getting money and jumping through all kinds of hoops to get their fix, their brains have grown circuits for these skills and so in many ways it is all they know. This possibly sheds additional light on the profit motives of prohibition for groups like the CIA, who sell drugs and make a lot of money from people with drug OCD. Essentially this same process occurs with consumer culture, that when a person works hard and eventually makes a purchase, they get a buzz off dopamine as a reward for achieving a goal. Buyer's remorse and the lack of sustained happiness from acquiring consumer goods, are like the withdrawal symptoms in the "shopaholic," who then must achieve similar goals in order to feed those same archon circuits.

Current society which demands hierarchy is then a sadomasochistic obsessive compulsive disorder, which feeds itself like an autopoietic pyramid scheme. If we remember what money is magically, the stocks of our values, our addictions, our compulsions, which we empower through daily life, they demand more and more investment, more and more competition for personal profit, personal status, or strengthening of these ego circuits. We acquire the happiness or temporary emotional gratification of our compulsions through the social status, which in hierarchical society means the hostile takeover of others. That is we take their assets and use it in our own investments or sometimes people take our assets and the game of social exploitation continues, taking on a variety of forms or "stocks," or value systems that people buy into. The driving force behind this is our interactions and personal power struggles, our ambitions to be high up in some kind of personal hierarchy. People seek to compete and win and acquire some final level of profit that will leave us ready to retire happy forever, or so we tell ourselves, but this game has no winners only players of an indefinite time period. Since a hierarchical brain is always at war with itself, always competing against itself through its values and complexes, only when we cultivate an Anarchist perspective, anarkhos can we learn to utilize all of the brain and take control of our consciousness. When we learn this, we learn to choose our rituals and so control them, rather than be controlled by them. This tendency to seek to create archon circuits is unfortunately the inevitable response of a brain which is trying to function in an environment that demands hierarchy based ritual actions in order to interact socially. So the brain constructs a mythological identity called the ego, which has a variety of authoritarian tendencies according to memes that make up its hierarchical value system.

Like many OCD people, we know our rituals are part of our illness, we cannot really explain to others why we do what we do, we cannot see any real logic in it, but we continue to do it because it has become so normal for us, so comforting in its regularity and because it does provide temporary emotional gratification. However while the average OCD person hurts no one but themselves, and is generally aware they have a disorder, capitalist and other authoritarian rituals go on unconsciously controlling people and have the side effect of destroying the very basis of all known life. Only by freeing the captive imaginations of the people can Anarchists hope to break the spell that has been cast on humanity, we need to provide experiences which can shake people out of the notion that the mainstream media can entertain them, can provide them with a healthy view of reality. People will feel informed by watching corporate propaganda, but we can provide them with real world experiences that show the contrary reality to what they have been told, because actions speak louder than words. You may not be able to infiltrate the corporate world, but maybe you can think of some memes that will do it for you, anything that will make people think in an Anarchist way. (Not necessarily being associated with Anarchism, in fact it will likely spread more completely if they don't know it is Anarchist.)

It may very well be that to some degree human brains must work through rituals, but through non symbolic awareness, we can get in touch of what lies beyond, if we can do that, then we will have the true context from which to consciously create our own symbolic rituals, free of the preconceived traditions which currently surround each child as it grows up. Through the creation of the manufactured ego, these memes make a child think it is an individual, when in reality it is just synthesizing widespread and convenient memes. This is emotionally gratifying in that it allows the individual to shift away from the personal responsibility that comes with true self awareness and self creation. Anarchist awareness allows people to try and think for themselves, to make their own opinions, to create totally new view points and experiment with what is true in a way that is not based on preconceptions, but awareness through unity, solidarity with all things and so achieve a much greater level of free will.

Stories are how our brain encodes information, our internal dialogue, our notions of causality are stories we use to explain things and linguistically mould our brains so that we can interact with the world according to will. So it is through a story we can say or hear what is necessary to improve our ability to use stories, to achieve our will and an author who realizes this could use a story to mould the brain in such a way that those who would hear it, would be capable of consciously moulding their own brains. They would no longer be characters in their own stories but the writers of their own stories and with that practice, they would be capable of doing what they want, being autonomous, living in Anarchy. So through all the stories the autonomous would all tell, others would realize this same truth and what we call his-story, the story of the world would be changed into our-story. Once the story explained how we could write our own stories, we could all learn to write it any way we choose, no longer trapped by the supposed limitations of our character, we could develop in to whatever we chose to be at any time. We could even learn to write our way to instant identification with anything and all things simultaneously, because all things are in our story. Meta-narratives are stories of transcending language and I can't tell you how powerful they can be.

There is no difference between bureaucracy and magick, all of hierarchical politics is a form of Occult manipulation of people and circumstances to the will of the oligarchy. Each person is harvested by consent for their reality creating potential, units manufactured for being used as tools for the ends of the few, in order to create the world that they want. Rulers try to decrease the potential actions of humans limiting it to their control, manifesting a reality that serves no purpose other than to reinforce the ruler's ability to control others. Anarchists try to increase potential human actions, (freedom) so that each person can manifest their true will harmoniously, creating an ever increasing quantum probability in favour of what people desire. All the while keeping the masses ignorant of the head games it is capable of, governments create the culture of today by deciding the parameters of economic production. (through embargoes, prohibition, cartels, insider trading and other forms of market manipulation) While companies may have to worry about losing business, (consent from the money sigil) they have largely achieved monopolies and have created artificial scarcity and so they control the options of what is created and what is advertised. We have a product placement charade of a free society, goods used as props in a farce of what it means to be free, while others profit off our efforts, our energy, our souls, through control of the reality generating units. (family units) So they have created a fanciful fairy tale about the world we live in, propaganda used to weave a narrative of reality that binds everyone together in a group obsession ritual. This is a consensus trance that works by shared and agreed upon OCD rituals, with some form of justification, though always within the limits determined by the agreements of those within the same hypnotic state.

All memes, (mimic) are repeated rituals of cultural significance, so that just as an OCD person may have some personal justification for their obsession, they are still obsessed and that justification is often unintelligible to other people, who do not agree to that particular ritual. People do not notice this because they have so many rituals for any given situation, (as with magick some forms are in line with a scientific understanding of causality, some not) and because they are potentially capable of creating new rituals. Even still, most do not go outside a very narrow range of possibilities compared to what they could be capable of, if they understood principles of the Occult (form) and of Anarchism. (substance) With such understanding they would have a way of recognizing various forms, or elements of memes and also the ability to transmute them accordingly, thus gaining autonomy. In a sense all people have various forms of OCD which is what they deem to be appropriate behaviour for their ego, social or memetic customs and personal habits, which creates their sense of self, it just doesn't seem like a disorder because everyone else is doing it. This is because we all have archons until we learn to deal with them, they are just so central to our identity, so commonplace in the world we do not think they are anything strange, we think they are us. People do have free will, they can take on new memes and change their lives drastically, but due to both conscious and unconscious factors, they rarely put themselves in positions which will provide them with experiences that contradict their paradigms.

Some people have convinced themselves that elitist notions of holding knowledge over the people is for their own good, or for all our good. Some think they will use that hidden knowledge for the purposes of controlling others, controlling their rituals so that they can be molded through consent according to other peoples will. The very fact that we do not understand our own rituals is a sign of delusion, as these rituals take up our attention, especially through things like assembly line jobs, your brain only specializes it's circuitry to very menial things, which is one of many reasons why workers rights need to be totally overhauled. People spend their lives in jobs performing rituals, memetic training ensuring a rigorous script for the brain to take up according to the employers wishes or "policies." Obviously training is useful in materialist forms of magick, while jobs vary a lot and some are obviously done mechanically through the body rather than metaphysically, all of it is consenting to a certain kind of wiring, for good or for bad. At the same time so much of modern society is geared towards rituals and wiring that is completely infantile and generally psychopathic, that it has justified all kinds of human sacrifice rituals in order to acquire the power that it has.

The demiurge is the main memetic ritual set that has now strangled the world in it's ever restricting coils, while the Abrahamic religions are some of its manifestations, it has been around before the Jews and it has taken on forms that are quite secular in popular views. The origins of the demiurge are rooted in the political machinery of its never ending process of creating a slave culture to it, or as I eluded it also found in the top of the meme pyramid, as the meme of hierarchy. Some black magician managed to make a spell to convince other people they were separate from nature and could control it like the ego controls the brain and once public rituals became institutionalized, the culture became reliant on dogmatic forms of hierarchical worship. This led to the invention of the ruling class in order to fulfil the governance of the people under the theocracy of the priest class, which is itself achieved through the various narratives of their accumulated knowledge, with various degrees of authoritarianism. The more egalitarian the information flow, the more egalitarian the memetic ecosystem, but when people consent to ignorance, all the information available is useless. Before the days of literacy all knowledge had to be maintained through oral traditions which were inherently limited by people's capacity for memory. So a whole culture had to be remembered constantly and this led to ritualizing and mythologizing all that cultures information in a living tradition, which could be explained according to the needs of the individual so that they would properly understand. With writing came a much more static tradition and while writing has some obvious and real benefits, it also potentially aids the creation of institutions and allowed for dogmas and OCD behaviour to be set in stone like never before. Thus with writing the potential for a whole new level of authoritarianism was attained and since eventually the oral tradition had been broken, the teachings could be taken out of context and twisted in all kinds of new ways. (Just as lawyers can twist the written law) So, with the inception of the Abrahamic traditions, the demiurge took hold of this planet and imposed its set of authoritarian memes and states of mind with a framework that could justify to itself at least, pretty well anything it wishes under the guise of morality.

Ritual in some form is to a large degree the driving mechanism behind the evolution of memory, creativity, abstract thinking and concentration and through the oral adaptation of ritual behaviour we gained language, which was the beginning of a new stage of human awareness. This linguistic formula would be iterated again with the creation of formal alphabets, a set of memes so important they are almost as world changing as language itself and one of the main factors for the creation of civilization. It is probably because of book based religions rather than experience based religions, that writing has caused the left brain to dominate the brains of westernized people today. With the written word we see the rise of the left brain, along with what today is called the "right hand path" form of worship, which in its worst expressions is based on orthodoxy and dogmatic scripture based beliefs, paving the way for the creation of patriarchal and highly hierarchical civilizations. In accordance with anatomical changes, the left brain controls the right hand path and dominates the right brain, which in turn controls the "left hand path," with all it's emphasis on holistic, experience based, individualist and antinomian practices.

Eventually this language based domination of the left brain led to technological advances, creating a variety of results, some people managed to realign the balance of their brain, but now with a much greater capacity for expression and intellectual accumulation. As we can see with the Greek golden age and the renaissance, literacy definitely has its upside when it is balanced with ritual practices and art that strengthen and integrate the right brain as well, however in a literalistic and often purely scriptural based religion, the results are disastrous. While the right brain naturally seeks to integrate and balance with the left brain, if the left brain dominates, it will overpower the right brain forms of consciousness. However in a left brain society of writing, this means that a person who manages to activate their right brain, will have a stronger left brain for the right to balance with, and so both are potentially stronger than in preliterate societies.

Writing allowed for many things, some wonderful, some terrible, but with the printing press another step forward was taken in an ever expanding awareness, resulting in an orgy of memetic breeding and proliferation. With the idea of ultimate truth being limited to a textual right hand path, interpreters of the text became the arbiters of universal truth in their consensus reality, when people lost the right brain holistic cognition, they became slaves to these interpretations and all the memes which grew on top of them. So just because the virus or the infection is healthy, manifesting as the state of obsession, this does not mean we are healthy and the nature of the obsession is that it will always present itself as more important and beneficial than it is. Through cultivation of a Zen like attitude or instinctual awareness of the wild human, (such as with Dzogchen) we can look through the artificial forms of society to the original cornerstone of our core being, that which is present in all things. When we can have gnosis, we can see past the manipulations of our would be rulers, our unknown controllers, those obsessions that would see us destroy all life on this planet in the name of personal profit.

The search for the one true way is the search for some abstract totalitarian ideal that all will consent to, but the true ideal is letting each make their own version of utopia, their own rituals, if we can do that, then we can take on a new life on this planet with Anarchy, a world with plurality in equilibrium with all life. If people can't get out of their various elitist and authoritarian rituals then they will continue their hissy fit rituals on TV, screaming about the need for war or over the need to continue various obsessions which create pain for others, who themselves resort to making new authoritarian rituals, to try and destroy the people attacking them. So conflict over other people's rituals escalates and so really most of human behaviour ironically spins out of control. That is we lose control through our attempts to restore the supposed emotional equilibrium people think they have, through their own ritualized denial of all that is outside their perspective. Only through each person making their own rituals consciously and independently, according to careful consideration of past human possibilities and what will develop their own ability to be aware, can a person hope to have free will and achieve their true will.

Anarchy is crucial if a person is to do this without it being contaminated by hierarchical memes, which will corrupt and eventually outsource all personal awareness through consent to external authorities, which will then take control over some aspect of your brain and awareness. When you start to function in an anarchic consciousness, then you have broken free from the fatalism of the rulers, you have taken destiny into your own hands. Police and soldiers are just people with mental illness, they have gone to murderous lengths to strengthen the illusion that one culture has value over others and that we have the right to force others whether or not they agree. This imposed order happens as I have detailed, through the application of war and judicial rituals by trained and organized black magicians. The same is true of all those who seek out money or professional advancement in the capitalist system as their primary goal in life, since they have effectively justified through their obsessive rituals, the looting and pillaging of the planet through the invention of private property. Some memes are probably useful, such as language, but we must create a more accurate and Anarchist form of language, one which can take in to account the facts of neuroplasticity. This would provide a person with tools to fully maximize their own potential and express themselves in as egalitarian manner as possible, free of dualist assumptions and more in line with non dualist and monist reality.

While such ideas are unsettling or even scary, this is because they are challenging deeply entrenched circuits in our brains and as we get used to accepting this reality, we will become better and better at facing our fears. We are all OCD, we just don't notice because everyone is doing the same rituals, speaking the same ritual languages, so it is confirmed as useful and effective because we can interact and hypnotize each other in to believing in the powers of these rituals. But the cultural rituals themselves are often powerless without consensus, they are the ritual obsessive compulsions we use to understand each other and the people we label as OCD are just the ones who have their own individual rituals, which we do not understand or which have acquired a certain level of monopoly over the brain.

With all this in mind I have come to see that the book of Genesis, is the part of the tablet of destiny spell that splits awareness into duality. Those who do not eat the apple of gnosis, especially if they consent to believe they are affected by original sin, believe in good and evil and consent to perpetuating the original sin and so are kicked out of paradise by projections of evil which sprout from the ignorance of their divinity. Those who eat the apple consent to the reality of the snake and gain the first hand knowledge that good and evil are the same thing, which means the snake is "god" too, that he actually tells the truth while the figure pretending to be god, is in fact your ego and the authorities telling you will die if you eat of the tree and that ignorance is best. So the fruit of gnosis makes you realize you shouldn't take any of it literally and that it all refers to aspect of your own consciousness, that you are the snake and the god and the garden and that you are divine and so by having the courage to seek knowledge, even if it means standing up to authorities, you avoid the culture of ignorance that is created by the archons. It is all happening in this very moment in your head, so that by consenting to the reality of the snake you enter in to that reality, gaining gnosis and becoming as a god. On the other hand, those who consent to the reality of Yahweh the liar, consent to think of him as god, as an authority and so consent to a prison of ignorance and the destruction of paradise, his punishment of eternal toil and pain. Once you realize this, you can run the spell backwards, play the story of Genesis back from the time of the eating, to beginning, rewiring your brain to unite Eve with Adam again and finally develop unity with all things through the abolition of all the dualities. Once you realize your unity with that which existed in the beginning, that which created the universe and moved over the face of the waters, created the light and all the other abstractions that have been used to make all that exists within the tablets of destiny, then you will be free of the archons prison. Those who know good and evil to be the same, know all dualities to be different expressions of the same underlying principle, including subject and object, all the characters in all books are distorted limited reflections of the one consciousness which creates all things.

All souls which consent to the reality created by the programming of the tablets, the memes and mes and all the rest of it, are those who have fallen out of paradise, those who read the story from the beginning to the end, instead of end to beginning. Genesis is a self fulfilling prophecy, an allegory of how your mind has been torn into pieces through a memetic fracturing of perception, how the mind rooted in cognitive dissonance. But it is also the delivery system of the memes which will do this to you, it is a spell hypnotizing a person in to ignorance and guilt based sadomasochism. Even atheists have had this spell cast upon them, having been born in to sin, that is born in to a dualist world, they have been infected by at least some of these memes and are at least to some degree unable to recognize their unity with all the characters, unable to recognize their own divinity because they have made the mistake of separating nature from the spiritual. Once you realize your unity with all things, you can stop consenting to being told who you are and stop relying on authoritarian symbols, because you have started living the direct experience of universal awareness. People have been made to fear such blasphemous ideas, fear the idea of being "god" because they have been told such thoughts will damn them to hell and even the common atheist is unable to consider this reality because they generally do not want to associate themselves with biblical symbols and they have already made up their minds about reality anyways.

Some Satanists or Luciferians have some idea of this, but they are more like Christians who hate their own religion (Besides the atheist Satanists who are just cheese balls) and are unwilling to accept Yahweh is a part of them too, a symbol of their ego and authoritarianism which wants to live in a fool's paradise and so they still live in the dualist prison. Yahweh and Christianity in general is easy to hate and so while this rejection is understandable, unfortunately exploring the Yahweh in you is the only way to be free of him. If there are "Satanists" or "Luciferians" running the world as black magicians, it is much the same, and they are just Christians or Jews who hate their own religion and so are rebelling against it, but have actually become more like Yahweh themselves. Yahweh is Samael, the blind idiot god who falsely believes he is the only god, he is the king of the authorities of Chaos, or rather those who think themselves authorities, but are in fact deranged. So it is Yahweh is the ego that tries to systematize Chaos, (Ordo ab Chao) creating paradigms in vain that demand everyone consider his limited order to be perfect and the only good. To Gnostics, this demiurge is also known as Chnoubis, the snake with the head of lion and it eats lambs and scapegoats, Christians and Jews for breakfast, herding them into institutionalized religion. The image seems to come from the Mithraic god Leontocephaline, which would make sense given it was the favourite religion of the Roman army and so in many ways wouldn't be too popular with Gnostic rebels, even if older elements of the religion influenced them. Yahweh is a person who believes they are the only one who knows anything, but knows nothing outside their linear time line, a mindset which spawns from the person's goal oriented neurotic antagonism to being in the moment. The demiurge is the dogmatists who believe they are the only ones who are right, or those who believe one person was god and no one else, the demiurge is the one who is blind to the divinity of other things.

The mes, or memes laid the foundation for the real creation of modern notions of duality, so while the Sumerians were not originally dualists in the sense of good and evil, they had a concept of mes or memes which were divinely sanctioned and non mes memes which are not and so this distinction between what the theocratic hierarchy sanctions and rejects would evolve the idea of authoritarian ideas of what is right and what is wrong. Through Genesis, (especially Christian interpretations) people are subconsciously tricked into believing in notions of good and evil by being told in a matter of fact way, you are going against "god" just for being born, that you must submit to the orthodoxy of theocracy or face the consequences, which in Christian terms means being damned forever. If knowing good and evil is the original sin from which all others stem, then maybe we should not believe in good and evil? By this logic religious memes encourage you to always try and continue the original sin of believing there is such thing as sin, or good and evil, or at least that they can tell the difference and that god and the snake, good and evil are separate entities. In fact this book supposedly refers to a literal history of humanity, duality means right and wrong, true and false and so this book must be true, it must be literally true because that's what the priests say and they are "good," they also say heresy is "bad," so you better not think about this book in any other way then what you are told. The story is laden with unspoken assumptions that to read it, your mind must focus on a view of reality riddled with cognitive dissonance and authoritarianism, so much so that those with no spiritual memetic defences will unconsciously take in some of its seeds of prejudice and bias. Genesis and the bible in general does this by normalizing a view of reality that is insane, especially in those who are trying to analyze it as if it is a literal history. (Even if you are an atheist)

The story goes that eating the apple caused the fall, but this is only for those who consent to the reality of Yahweh as "god" and that this is a linear story and that the authors believed it is referring to a real time. Reading it in such a way, you have consented to see Yahweh as the figure of "good" and so are reading it in a dualist frame of mind and so are unable to perceive the monist reality and so will be lead down the garden path in to further and further cognitive dissonance and neural bifurcation. After eating the apple you learn of humanities fate and the origins of evil and while you may not believe the story, it produces emotional reactions in you as you think of all the pain in your life and all the "evils" of the world, you consider the possibility of it arising in this way and you thus consent to a dualist mind. As you accept the assumption that good and evil exist, the seed is planted in your brain, a seed which grows even if you think the bible is evil and wrong because this is also a dualist assumption.

We can see this process in how Yahweh (the ego) kicks humanity out of paradise, (Gen 3:14-3:19) damning the snake (our animal self) to crawl on its belly and eat dust. This symbolizes the reptilian part of the brain and the consciousness it produces being cut off from any spiritual awareness and how now it can only consider material Earthly things. Adam and Eve represent the Solar Yang and Lunar Yin principles respectively, or since ancient knowledge of neurology was not perfect, it could be loosely interpreted as the consciousness produced by left and right hemispheres of the brain. (Though it should be understood each hemisphere is capable of all the functions of the other, while they specialize each is a complete “human”)

While translations of Gen 3:15 are somewhat unclear due to phrasing it can be interpreted in a variety of ways that are easily seen as applicable to neural plasticity. Yahweh (the ego) goes further and puts “enmity” between the snake and “the woman” and between each of their “seeds,” meaning the circuits and ideas produced by these parts of the brain are now in conflict. That the consciousness of the reptilian brain is now severed from the right brain and most of our sense of self but especially our emotional feminine self. Yahweh then says to the snake “he shall bruise your head, and you shall bruise his heel” with the traditional Jewish interpretation of this being that Adam is crushing the snakes head and the snake is biting his heel. Christians like to see this as a prophecy about Jesus, or the Jewish Messiah, saying that he is the seed, or offspring of Eve that will crush the head of the snake. Even still we could interpret this as the circuits, or enlightened consciousness produced by the right hemisphere as coming in to conflict, or being impeded by the reptilian brain. Since I do not think Jesus is the Jewish messiah I will stick to the Jewish interpretation, but any translation can be put in terms of neural plasticity. This part of Genesis could mean due to duality and our repression of our animal instincts, the snake keeps us or our left brain from functioning or walking on the Earth properly, meaning in our dualist struggle with our animal nature our rational mind is tripped up and bruised or somewhat incapacitated and ungrounded or made lame. Simultaneously the left brain crushes the snakes head, meaning we are fighting our instincts and so there is no intelligence in how we use them, they are made dumb and ultimately useless so that both parts of the brain incapacitate each other, at least to some degree.

Since the snake is “evil” much of this section of Genesis is referring to how consciousness is at different steps increasingly repressing its animal nature as Yahweh continues to curse the brain. For the orthodox minded this makes humanity “civilized” and domesticated and no longer wild but instead, accepting of the mes of the theocracy. That is since our brains now believes in good and evil, it sees the animal self as “evil” and truly we often prefer to see ourselves as more than animals and in western civilization we are taught to repress our instincts. (Like the bible teaches) So our emotions and imagination are separated and in conflict with our animal self and so now the brain is working against itself with the left brain repressing the reptilian complex which is biting the left brain and the right brain is at enmity with the reptilian. Meaning our emotions and imagination are now perpetually tormented and unsatisfied since the ego and left brain have demonized animal passions, so we can never really indulge ourselves in our natural animal desires like sex without feeling guilty. Since our reptilian brain can no longer function properly and our emotions are all screwed up due to repression, we become overly aggressive and territorial and repress our instincts and bodily desires. This causes all kinds of neurosis and irrational behaviour, crippling the abilities of the left brain, and to a large degree encouraging OCD behaviour to supplicate the emotional tensions.

Now that we have effectively suffered brain damage from this conflict, as Genesis goes on Yahweh (the ego) makes it painful for Eve to give “birth.” That is since the right brain feels enmity towards animal passions and instinctual awareness, it is riddled with guilt and pain at all its continued emotional desires for such passions and so it is difficult for the right brain to produce ideas and circuitry without facing the pain of all the “evil” that has been repressed. Since sex is now considered sinful, creativity in general is stifled and the brain becomes even more neurotic from its sexual frustration. Genesis goes on to say how Yahweh curses Eve to desire her husband, symbolic of pure rationalism and so Adam the left brain begins to rule over her. This explains how women and the feminine in general have been subjugated, having been taught by Abrahamic culture to be antagonistic to their animal self, women have been taught to be “lady like” virginal and submissive. In our dualism people do not know how to utilize all of their brain and so fear and fight off that sexual and animal empowerment, which is the source of emotional security and confidence and so people and especially women have been taught to demonize their own sense of power. While men's brains are dominated by the left brain as well, since Eve has been demonized as well as the snake, the left brain can justify dominating and demonizing real women and all things associated with femininity. (Especially if you are religious, since “god” says multiple times this is how he wants it.)

That Eve and all women are cursed is a telling incident in this “religion” and we can see that it is the domestication of woman and so turning them in to subservient whores for the death cult. Now when I say “death cult” there are some who may question this, but when we understand that “Eve” is actually “Chavah” in Hebrew which is itself translated as “life” or “source of life,” we can see that the Abrahamic curse is against not only all women, but all life. In Gnosticism on the contrary Eve is like the first saint, the bestower of gnosis, also known as “Zoa” for in Greek this means “life” and so we see that knowing what the names of mythological characters mean, is crucial to understanding the allegories. This lack of translation is not only in Abrahamic religions, but most books on mythology is so important, that the omission of a glossary of such names almost seems intentional, with the aim of making people misinterpret myths as mere stories.

That said, Adam, the left brain is now made subservient to the ego once more and the Earth is cursed and Adam is condemned to toil and to painful labour. Meaning that now that the left brain is unbalanced with Eve and demonizing the snake, it is much harder for our brains to work coherently as it is so dependent on only one hemisphere. Not using all of your brain makes things harder, causing us to “toil” meaning we are more easily confused by anything holistic, since Eve is subjugated, we lack emotional or non literal or linguistic intelligence. Not only this, since we crush the head of the snake and have little to no instinctual awareness of our animal needs, all our efforts to bring happiness bring pain for the rest of our days. Genesis tells us “thistles and thorns” now fill our brains and since the left brain is now so ignorant, we are condemned to struggle to nourish our consciousness from the “herbs of the field.” On one level this refers to materialist circuits with no mystical experience or gnosis, but it is also explaining how now our brains will be infected by the seeds of our environment, rather than the carefully cultivated circuits of the garden. Our brains now dominated by the left brain believe the ego and lose awareness of all but “dust” or matter and so we think we are limited to our bodies and think in very literalistic terms. This literalism is because the subjective and metaphorical is the speciality of the now dominated Eve and gnosis or mystical union with ALL things, is only attained through consenting to the wisdom of the snake, which we have repressed and are in denial of. The left brain then goes on to give Eve her name because the left brain is the most linguistic, this is showing the final subjugation of the right brain, with it being reduced to mere words. The ego Yahweh then clothes the hemispheres, meaning their naked essence or truth is totally covered in symbols. Then Yahweh remarks how the man has become like one of “us” (the archons) knowing good and evil and they must stop us from eating of the tree of life, which will make us immortal. To me this reference to the tree of life suggests that through living our lives, through direct experience of various essences of the fractal of life we can come to realize the truth. More so that we are divine and that good and evil are illusions, that through experience we can heal our brains and grow the tree of life within and eventually eat of its fruit and become immortal. (This also shows that Qabbalah can be used to heal the brain, but I will say more on this later.)

While many would no doubt disagree with my interpretations it is clear that Genesis is in many ways nonsensical and that any real and single concrete interpretation is going to be full of problems. Some would question how the snake promised knowledge of good and evil, yet the fruit produces a monist mystical awareness, well it is both, it is the fruit which can split our awareness, or unite it according to who's reality you are consenting to, Yahweh, or the snake. That while the snake seems to promise knowledge of both good and evil, true knowledge of duality, is knowledge that good and evil are actually one and from this awareness you become divine. Consenting to the reality of Yahweh we believe we know what good and evil are, but we don't really, we just act authoritarian and impose our will on others in the name of righteousness and a fear of "god." So consenting to Yahweh we run the spell forward in to duality, consenting to the snake we become as gods and run the spell backwards to the beginning of Genesis and monism.

From reading Genesis we might ask how can Adam and Eve actually have sinned if they knew not good from evil? Since disobeying "god" would not be understood as a "bad" thing they can hardly be blamed. Clearly Adam and Eve are not the first humans but the first purely dualist symbols, whose family tree is the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which is the memetic offspring that would infect "their" children and spread across the world to the present. Before you swallowed the dualist pill you would see the book is not right or wrong, it is not good or bad, it does not have any single meaning, it is just a book which reflects whatever you put into it. All of the characters are you and your hatred or love of the book or characters in the book, are the reflection of your original sin, your loss of paradise and divine awareness which occurs through a lack of gnosis of oneness.

If we look at Genesis it begins with "god" then goes on to tell how Adam and Eve multiplied after getting kicked out of paradise and as the characters become more numerous, we can see it as the further fragmentation and dissection and mapping out of universal consciousness. In this way Genesis is the iteration of the fractal formula which creates more and more patterns from the one and as this happens certain patterns repeat, for example Noah and his family replenishing the Earth. In reality we start out as "god," but as we read Genesis, depending on how literally we interpret it, we consent to its reality and eventually we are drown in a flood, the ego's rejection and loss of all primordial awareness, due to the creation of irrational fears of "evil." So if someone knew nothing of Abrahamic religions, but believed what they read they would go from not knowing this context of absolute difference between us and "god," to consenting to identify with Adam, Eve and humanity as separate entities from the divine. As they read on, the spell develops and they learn of the fall and the snake and how that act is now defined as "evil" and how disobeying authority is "evil" and so we surrender our free will and leave paradise. Eventually as time goes on this mindset takes us farther and farther out of paradise and nature and spiritual awareness, making us in fact see gnosis as "evil" and eventually this line of thought gives birth to modern culture.

The logic of the bible forces you to accept many assumptions and so those who take it as literal absolute truth, will have these assumptions but no understanding of what they mean. This is the process by which a person is blinded by ignorance of all kinds of things they define as "evil" and seeing nothing but the literal image of "parables." The reader then consents to believing themselves to be the cursed offspring of Adam and Eve and that all people believe in good and evil and that all people are subject to the authority of that blind lying god, who cannot protect them from snakes, or figure out what the hell his creatures are up to and spends much of Genesis either angry or confused. But we as individuals have no awareness or memory of ever being in Eden, or talking to snakes or committing the original sin, this is because Genesis is describing what is happening to your brain as you read it, it is describing your mind falling out of paradise and away from truth and knowledge. So, through Genesis we have consented to identifying such things as knowledge and anything but what the liar god says as "evil" and to be avoided, that ignorance of such things is a "good" thing. We are impressed with the idea that knowing good and evil is the cause of all our problems, but if we cease to try and do "good" we will go to hell, we will be damned and so we are stuck in a catch 22, trying to defeat "evil," yet being doomed for believing in it.

So if we are to return to paradise we must stop having the hubris to think we can define such things, we must become innocent again and return to being at peace with our snake. People have consented to believe in “good” and “evil” and so they have been tricked into believing this is how they were born and they have also consented to hate the snake which gives awareness, to hate knowledge of such things and what they really mean. So those literalist readers who have likely been raised to interpret the bible in such a way, have consented to ignorance of “good” and “evil” but still believe in their existence. My interpretations may seem confusing, but this could very well be because you have trouble understanding monism, you are toiling with such ideas because they are not something that fits in to either or logic, but transcend logic and refer to an awareness which continues to grow in me as I become free of the archons.

The truth is there is only one moment, all sins and all time are the fractal iteration of the original, the process of unending examples of knowledge of “good” and “evil,” experienced through anamnesis which the universal mind or “Adam Kadmon” is gaining awareness of. To go back to paradise then we must reconcile with the snake, we must learn from it and gain gnosis from the fruit of the tree, when we do this, when we are as innocent as Eve, then we learn gnosis of “good” and “evil” and that they are the same. From this we also realize the snake tells the truth, that we do not die as Yahweh said we would, showing that “god” is the liar, the purveyor of ignorance, literalism and the source of humanities troubles, a “divinity” which is even oblivious to what is happening in the garden. If he is the true “god” surely he must have known how all this would happen, what the nature of the snake or Satan were when he created him, that Eve was too curious to resist and that as his creations, any fault of theirs is completely his own. To heal the wounds caused by Genesis, we must do the opposite of what that false god Yahweh says, so that we can go back up the line of thinking, up the iterations of the fractal to where we were before the fall. The snake representing hidden wisdom, entheogens and the repressed aspects of consciousness is identified by Gnostics as Sophia or Jesus rather than Satan and is actually the path to freedom and the methods of becoming divine yourself and so only by having the courage to make friends with the devil, can we have the gnosis which allows us to unify all things “good” and “evil” and thus can we become whole again, even divine.

It was following the image or symbol of what we defined to be ultimate “good” (Yahweh) which caused us to “sin” through our ignorance and so the fruit and snake which we have defined as “evil” are the means of achieving oneness, wholeness and gnosis. The snake from a literalist interpretation is the cause of duality, but it is the “god” which maintains that duality by demanding we hate “evil” and it is that god which put the damn tree there in the first place, so only by uniting the two can we become as gods. Consenting to the “god” brings misery and the fall, or implants the Genesis curse in our brains by running the story of humanity forward in time to fragmentation of awareness, but consenting to the wisdom of the snake brings our consciousness towards the start of Genesis. So if we read Genesis consenting unthinkingly and based on faith, we activate a spell to fragment the universal awareness in to petty egoism and fractured beliefs filled with cognitive dissonance. If we read it with gnosis, with an emphasis on understanding and direct experience, we can run the spell back words till we go to paradise and even further back, we will realize that we were that blind idiot god, the demiurge, the ultimate ideologue who believes it is the ultimate arbiter of “good” and “evil” and the only authority on anything. So that from this division of all things, the ego is created, which falsely believes it is an individual separated from the whole and so creates a whole universe of personal language based distinctions, the result of a kind of unconscious solipsism that places it above all else. If we consent to believing in the “god” the fruit splits our mind in to duality, if we consent to the reality of the snake and to the female principle of the right brain which leads to its gnosis, or fruit, then we can become as gods again and we see that what the Christian believes to be “god” is in fact a caricature of their distorted and fragmented mind.

The “god” is the symbol, the fruit is the gnosis of the symbols meaning and the snake is the means of achieving that gnosis. With Adam and Eve or yin and yang in perfect harmony before the fall, all is united and in paradise, after the fall only the symbol is defined as “good” and we are thrown in to the misery of dogma and dualism. Given the environment created by Abrahamic traditions we are indeed encouraged to take things literally, we are “born in to sin” in that we are born in to a world of literalists trying to confuse us in to being like them and the demiurge Yahweh. This sends the followers of Abrahamic traditions in to a kind of bipolar hell, in which they are forever trying to appease a symbol bereft of actual reality. However if we run the curse backwards and realize through experience we are that demiurge, then we can take responsibility for the ego of “god,” by stopping our refusal to consent to oneness. We can do even better than living in paradise, if we continue to run the spell backwards, we as “god” can uncreate the universe of our material delusions, which we created by our “word.” We can escape the reality of Genesis altogether, or any false paradise and enter in to awareness of our true being, beyond any symbolism to the reality of the Pleroma, the fullness, or as Kabbalists understand it, Ain Soph, then we can at last know our full potential, the truth and be as real gods, not shabby imitations.

While this interpretation is contradictory in some ways, this is because Genesis itself is contradictory and designed to create cognitive dissonance and so no fully logically consistent interpretation is possible and those who attempt it are those who are only conscious through Adam, their left brain. Trying to understand Genesis on its own terms is to try and understand duality in dualist terms, which is as I have pointed out is inherently redundant and tautological, it is saying there is one right way and everything else is wrong, which is itself a dualist interpretation. Through Eve however and the noetic Gnostic forms of awareness, we can gain understanding, though even with this understanding we will not be able to put it in to simplistic literal words, since words themselves create dualism and the awareness produced by Eve is largely non verbal.

All creation stories I know of can among other things be interpreted in terms of how the first spark of awareness came to be aware of the outside world in each moment, because in reality there is only one moment of knowing which contains all things. The myths represent the cause of linear perceptions, “the fall” into time and so by playing the myth backwards, we can come to awareness of the original singularity, the original monad from which all things exist in. Creation stories then are repeating, happening moment to moment as the mind goes through the process of self awareness, which is played out as the mind creates perceptions in what we call “time.” In polytheistic religions we can see this in the family trees of the gods, that the trees as maps of the mind are also maps of the brain and how it creates perception in each moment. So for example starting from say the oneness of the Greek Chaos, some entities are created, then as they produce offspring, consciousness develops and becomes elaborated and more clearly defined. The more fundamental aspects of consciousness are born first, then as the family grows, more specific and nuanced cognitive functions develop. As the gods are aspects of consciousness, they create the world from the oneness or chaos in each moment, as aspects of our brain they create our perceptions, but they are also metaphysical entities which we are one with outside of time. In this view then Chaos is the undefined potential of a babies brain, or in an adult it is the awareness of non local time and the multiverse, so that as consciousness develops or changes through “time,” it is ordered by the faculties of consciousness which is the gods, and this then is the “chaoskampf.” Only when we come to understand the process, as is explained metaphorically in various creation stories, can we learn to control the process and exist in that state of mind outside of time and space. Genesis within a literalist context gets the mind to focus purely on the material and run from personal interpretation and autonomy. In this way it teaches us to subjugate ourselves to a limited conception of “god,” thus keeping us from the self awareness that can provide access to a monist mind.

The bible then is a spell designed to take you out of nature and reality and domesticate you, to infect you with the mes and put you in to a paradigm prison of cognitive dissonance through your own unwitting consent to its terms and its encouragement of superficial and literalist behaviour. People who spend endless hours trying to interpret the bible, or old testament in literalist terms end up applying completely inappropriate cognitive faculties to something which cannot be deciphered in that way alone. So due to neural plasticity they strengthen their left brains to the point of it dominating the right brain and so create an unbalanced mind, which in some cases even starts to think it understands the bible and that a literal interpretation makes perfect sense. Since anyone who disagrees with them is by definition “evil,” in extreme cases the logic of the left brain leads some people to think they can kill anyone who thinks differently. The left brain is the part of the brain that is most like a computer, if X is accepted as true and X says that a person should think of anything which contradicts X as the devil, then it can be very hard for a left brain dominated person to accept any contradicting information, since logically it must be the devil trying to trick you. (While this mentality definitely varies from person to person we can see that people who have damaged their right brain really cannot think outside of very narrow linguistic boundaries.)

Science has even shown that Christianity can literally and physically cause brain damage, or to be more specific, due to the realities of neural plasticity Christianity can cause brain atrophy. While no doubt there are exceptions, Christians who stimulate their brains in other ways, it is not surprising that a religion which encourages you to stop thinking, to take things on faith and not question things, which encourages you to ignore science and all other points of view, would shut down your brain and keep it from functioning properly. By contrast Buddhist monks who meditate daily and who have a religion which encourages introspection and questioning belief patterns, have brains which function at an above average degree. While I know of know of no scientific data about Occultists I expect it would find similar results, as Buddhist monks often use a pretty limited number of meditations, in some ways Occultism would potentially exercise a greater variety of parts of the brain. (No doubt many spiritual practices from around the world could have potential benefits for the brain.)

Symbol memes want to be taken literally, dogmatically and in authoritarian terms because it helps them to become more embedded in our brains, it provides more energy for them as they develop in to archons and so they limit our ability to interpret them in a way that allows for us to have freedom from them. Through mystical texts and practices (such as those of the Gnostics) and through the entheogenic fruits of this world, you are given the wisdom of the snake which allows you to understand and experience the reality for yourself. Where as those who fear and repress their own shadow, who consent to the premise's of Genesis and its duality, are imprisoned in a cage of captivation with failed interpretations of a nonsensical document and a nonsensical world, infected by a neurolinguistic curse of cognitive dissonance. (Although it is nonsensical, those who use all of their brains and approach it in a mystical way might still learn some profound things from the Torah and bible, but in my experience this requires a Kabbalistic understanding.)

Those who really have gnosis, or knowledge of “good” and “evil” know that these are just words which can be applied to anything according to whatever bias or agenda you might have, that the true reality supersedes the limited creation of Yahweh's vanity. The key is to remember neither the snake, nor the false god are “good” or “evil” or separate from you, the orthodox bible itself is not “evil” but all these things are symbols, which describe a variety of things according to how you define them. (Which is always your “choice” or heresy) Through even a basic understanding of the history of Abrahamic religions, it's clear that following the orthodox interpretation is the most important cause of the continuing destruction of paradise on this planet. Since words create reality and science has shown words create our brain structure, the words in the bible create the world of those who believe in it and since the Abrahamic religions are the most popular and influential, they are the words most responsible for creating this present world of forms and all its problems. By understanding this process we achieve the means of gaining gnosis and freedom from the prison and so become capable of experiencing the reality we really want. Surely this will take time and effort according to how old you are and how deeply entrenched the archon circuits are, but by simply studying neuroplasticity in more depth than I can go in to here, you will start to be more conscious of how your consciousness forms.

Christian flagellants or those that fear god in general, associate this pain and fear with their god and in a very real sense fear and pain become their god, a potential pitfall for all ascetic practices. As Yahweh is a symbol of their ego, this fear really imprisons them in their own ego, trying to buy their way in to heaven through appeasing some tyrant, which is often reflected in how people try to buy their happiness from the store in an attempt to appease their ego. This kind of masochism creates a variety of emotions for their archons to feed on, which can be used to warp the minds of those who attempt to grovel before a terrible god, rather than attempt to understand and love “god” and all that exists within it. A fear of “god” is a sure sign of worshipping archons, a god that wants you to be ignorant of reality and of yourself, unhappy and reliant upon it. Maybe they fear their god because they have been raised to be ashamed of the natural urges which they were created with, the bible certainly does present a scary view of reality, and I would even say it’s quite possibly the greatest horror novel of all time. (The word “gospel” means “good news” but I fail to understand what is “good” in the news that most of the world will go to eternal hell just for thinking Christianity is unrealistic.) We should not think however that being free of Abrahamic religions or even governments is enough to free us totally of archons, there are many ways the archons trick us in to hurting ourselves, or our minds in order to provoke unpleasant emotions that will distract us and keep us from becoming aware and healthy people, freedom requires careful cultivation of self awareness.

Once the gods became portrayed as humanities masters, then rulers took hold and enslaved humanity for real, keeping us imprisoned in a labyrinth of our own value systems, a hidden world of abstract illusion that stems from the dualist tree. Ours is a fake culture of slavery by consent, which presents itself as all powerful and definitively and exclusively in control and in possession of truth and knowledge. Paradise is a garden, just like the brain, just like the Earth before humanity went berserk and started thinking it was “good” to pursue endless “progress,” whatever the cost to the natural world. Dogmatists speak of good and evil, but they have not eaten the fruit of the tree and so they are committed to destroying paradise as compliance with their punishment. This then is a punishment they inflict on themselves, because they identify with something that encourages a lack of awareness through authoritarian domination.

Time and again we see the classic symbolism of the masculine and feminine principles, or solar and lunar interacting with snake or reptilian aspect, Genesis is an interesting exception that these principles are brought in to a kind of reversed Alchemical reaction of degraded awareness. I am not one to demonize the snake, the metaphors of many traditions are clear; from integration of the reptilian or animal part of the brain we get wisdom. This can be symbolized by slaying the dragon as in the Volusunga saga where Sigurd, or Siegfried bathes in the dragon's blood, he also ingests some and learns the language of the birds and by eating the dragons heart he gains “wisdom.” Or it can be symbolized in terms of kundalini serpent power, Nagas, the caduceus or the Hermetic dragon, or in the case of Genesis eating the fruit which gives knowledge, which especially in the Ophite Gnostic tradition, frees or empowers the feminine principle, who then frees the masculine principle. Gnostic versions of Genesis are often even more clearly symbolic of neural plasticity and explain how archon circuits have infected us and how wisdom has been fighting a meme war against the religions of archons, but they also provide ideas on how to free ourselves and by showing us how to get to the root of the archons programming. In some versions Adam was a hermaphrodite, a very clear symbol of how our brain's hemispheres used to be unified, but that the archons split up the brain so that it would be easier to control and keep ignorant of the true reality. At the same time the demiurge is often symbolized as snake with the head of a lion and so we really should not think of snakes, or anything else as being good or bad, but symbols which can be used to potentially increase our self awareness.

The memes of authorities are to your brain what humans are to the environment, it is the idea of ego development in to artificial structures at the expense of human nature. We should be creating permaculture, but instead our egos intent on short term profits have created industrial monocropping. We have even created memetically modified organisms dependent on artificial fertilizers, things like

TV and video games, which produce the semblance of consciousness but is often a form of OCD in its own right. Through permaculture we can cultivate wildness, for it is how humans naturally interact with the environment, I do not mean we should create cultural genocide but strong ecosystems which can fight off those true invasive GMO's which cannot coexist and produce unsafe sources of nourishment. We have received corporate and state programming since the time we were children in order for institutions, (the owners of the farm) to turn a profit, often eventually leaving the soil or brain bereft of nutrients and totally dependent on artificial fertilizers (psychiatric pharmaceuticals like antidepressants and Ritalin) which produce the semblance of mental health, but leave the crops essentially poisoned and unable to function as an ecosystem. They are farming our minds just as surely as bankers farm workers through the "business cycle," in fact Alchemy was very much connected to ecology and agriculture and its processes and this is probably the primary experimental data from which it was formed. Since Alchemy knows the fractal of nature it ties in to everything, but today we can see this in "energy systems language" and "systems ecology" and especially "deep ecology." The cycle of the sun through the zodiac is an Alchemical process of nature to create the life cycle, but also in ancient times the business cycle was especially dependent on agricultural production and so as harvest season was the basis of the economy, these two things became inextricably linked. (Today Christmas also adds to this annual economic cycle)

While a group of heretics called Adamists saw the garden of Eden as a true paradise, with a monist philosophy much like I have described, many Gnostics saw the garden itself as a fool's paradise and we might interpret this to mean they saw Eden or a brain as the factory farm I just described, that our home is not Earth but in the place that existed before creation. (The Pleroma) Archons are in some cases logical fallacies such as "straw men" of the mind, which have taken over parts of the brain and are battling it out in an imaginary structure of good and evil. Without the proper context people are doomed to be led astray by constructed images of relative ideas, which justify their existence on an irrelevant and fallacious realities, especially through the use of misdirection and encouragement of superficial critical thinking skills. These beings exist through humanities ignorance and seek nothing more than to increase that ignorance and hijack our awareness to create a world in their image. The archons create cycles of sequential growth of memetically induced emotional processes, designed to grow a harvest of emotional energy. They do this to supply themselves with food, fertilizing the mind with ignorance, the brain becomes sectioned off and fenced in by cognitive dissonance. Each section or crop rotation is a unit of the sequential process, from which unwanted and ignorant memetic structures lead the mind on an emotional roller coaster, all designed to divide the mind into a series of different fragments, that each only see one part of the total picture.

The archons farming of the brain is like a mirror broken into different pieces, so that the picture is hard to see as its fullness must be imagined by putting all the reflections back together in the mind. Where as an integrated mind, free of archons is like an unbroken mirror, which provides an easily recognizable image of all the details from a single united viewpoint. This united viewpoint is the cornerstone of the mind, and through rationality we have the tools to sort through the wreckage of our failed and unstable memetic structures. The emotional knowing which is found in the wreckage as mortar, which is crumbled but salvageable, can be rebuilt into new structures, but without rational examination of the failed memes, a person is bound to be replanted with newly bred neural seeds which are potentially even worse.

Without selective breeding of your neural branches and conscious planting and organization of the mind, GMO's infect the mind and we are made reliant on outside sources of authority on ourselves. So we are less capable of independent thought and critical thinking skills which allow us to repel the more virulent and invasive memetic species of neural GMO's. That is the more the DNA of your crops are contaminated, the more corporations like Monsanto own you. Nature is beautiful but there are predators and in the psychic realms some naturally feed on your mind and it is up to you to stop them from literally and physically spreading throughout your brain. Through memetic infection these archon predators can in a very real sense possess you to do all kinds of things unconsciously and against your own and everyone else's best interests and unfortunately getting you to ignore the problem is how they do it best. Mother nature is a goddess of life, but she is also a goddess of death and woe to the New Age fluffy bunny who takes love for granted and thinks they have positive thinking and so no need to face fears and ignorance. For in their denial they cast a shadow on the world in which archons can hide and multiply, so that while it is true we must watch our thoughts and that the more we activate a circuit, the stronger it gets, archon circuits generally fire unconsciously and will not stop until we are aware of them. Archon memes express themselves so that they can trick us into evoking the emotional responses in us that will empower them further into our lives. So they lead us down a stairway of actions which will create the physical responses that will ensure a deeper level of infection, as well as provide a further means of infecting others with the faulty circuitry. If memes make up most of our actions, then they must alter our brains due to its plasticity and if they are archons, they sculpt our brains in ways that create unconsciously motivated emotional feedback loops. These loops then reinforce the faulty circuitry indefinitely, passing throughout human generations and directing the very course of human evolution and society itself.

Religious people feel guilty when they sin, they seek atonement, they seek forgiveness, but they do not fundamentally seek to correct the mistakes that lead them to "sin" in the first place and so the archons find a way to make a person "sin" once again. As I explained before, a Gnostic does not believe in sin in that way and only considers ignorant actions, though it is true one etymological meaning of "sin" was to "miss the mark" and a Gnostic was also known as "one who is aimed." This means that instead of feeling guilty a Gnostic would focus on correcting their mistakes, focus on understanding themselves and reality better so that they do not repeat their mistakes. So a Gnostic focus's on getting rid of the archon circuits, where as a religious person is "god fearing" and focus's on guilt and shame and so ends up feeding the archon circuits which live off those kinds of emotions. The more they sin, the guiltier they feel, the more they strengthen the archons, the more they sin again, the more "god fearing" they become, the more fundamentalist and ignorant they become and so the more they are likely to sin. (If nothing else feeling wrathful towards others they consider sinners) While some of the sins of the ten commandments are in line with truth as things to avoid, it is only when a person has understanding of why they are ignorant, that they will benefit from avoiding them. Those who are only "good" to avoid hellfire are only acting selfishly, only acting out of fear, rather than any kind of awareness on their own part. This ignorance of fundamentalists is the closest thing to hell that there is, it is the cause of the continuing destruction of paradise, which they ironically end up creating through their fundamentalist fears.

A magicians brain, especially a Pagan or Alchemist one which is at home on the Earth is like a permaculture garden and after lots of work and careful selection of plants that are part of the environment it becomes ordered and fruitful, yet remains wild and in harmony with nature. Such brains are created according to conscious design for maximizing functionality according to will and provides a sustainable means of producing mental health and an abundance of awareness. Different traditions will have different ways of approaching neural plasticity; they will provide different symbols or seeds that will sometimes produce different fruits. Some fruits will appeal to your personal taste more than others and some are more easily grown in your local environment than others. Since interpretations of these traditions are inherently subjective and incomplete, due to the limitations of this book I strongly suggest studying a wide variety of traditions so that you can create the kind of ecosystem that will provide you with the fruits which correspond to your true will, but will also provide you with a variety of fruits to give you a balanced meal for good mental health. Memetic diversity is key, studying a variety of traditions, getting a variety of magickal and religious memes allows you to be more objective and open minded, to avoid dogmatic thinking and understand the underlying processes of neuroplasticity. Of course this should be done after you have strong Anarchist circuits laid down, as they provide vaccinations to many memetic infections, creating a strong immune system from any archons or authoritarian dogmas or superstitions which might be in a tradition.

So many people fear being evil themselves, they do not truly love themselves and so they do not even really know themselves, never realizing in a hellish society, to be a deviant is divine. The problem is not so much putting things in terms of abstraction, but the hierarchical and especially the authoritarian ordering of abstractions. (Nomos) Hierarchy sets abstractions against each other and creates the illusion of definition through juxtaposed references, the question is not what is a thing compared to something else, but what is it in itself? As soon as you start with duality it creates precedence for hierarchy in the brain and the circuitry starts to impose itself over anything contrary, these circuits like capitalism are dependent on competition and unending growth. As soon as you start to think you know good from evil, you will learn fear of evil and from that fear will breed delusions and ignorance and a whole family of archons doing all they can to encourage your internal antagonism.

When you believe in duality you make your brain split into competitive neural branches which work against each other, trying to outgrow each other, trying to block out the awareness provided by contrary meme circuits. This creates a brain which fights against itself, which limits integration and cohesive cooperation in its functions, a neural hydra of discontent and cognitive dissonance which cannot be defeated by superficial pleasures and reasoning, but only by getting to the root of the problem, using fire (will) to burn away the hydra totally. I would go so far as to say that duality is the tool of the devil, (who was created by the demiurge or ego) that is duality is how the devil meme tricks you into believing in it, and in believing in it you give it power over you. So the devil becomes a part of your life and you even start to do "evil" things in order to fight "evil," but then the devil is not really the problem, but people with agendas who frame things in simplistic dualist terms.

Magick requires a unified will where the mind is not fighting against itself, if there is conflict in the will then reality will manifest according to that conflict, often neutralizing itself. Non hierarchical monist thinking allows for greater union of the unconscious mind, with the conscious mind and a more total cooperation of all the brain, energy and consciousness and so it is with this awareness that we can achieve our true will. In the same way that dictators are not effective at making people happy in the physical world, the ego as the dictator of the brain is not effective at making the mind happy. Where as an Anarchist mind, or one who has achieved anarkhos and autonomy is more effective at achieving happiness for people both in the physical world and in the mental world of brain circuits.

Our culture has tricked our brains as children, forcing it to adapt to a capitalist and often monotheistic mentality and shape itself according to the kinds of values inherent within those philosophies. These values include, aggression, narrow mindedness, sexism, racism, competitiveness as opposed to egalitarianism and also a total screening out of any ulterior points of view, as well as a dualism that allows for the hatred and oppression of all those who do not have the same circuit values. People's brains are grown to be consumers and to become addicted to shopping, to base their ideals of happiness on the acquisition of things, rather than on things that are healthy and are found within. A lack of concentration and ability for introspection ensure that the bourgeois mind becomes dependent on mass media for its information, this is coupled with a general lack of ability for critical thought and gullibility. A person may consciously hate the government or Abrahamic religion but still have within themselves circuits that are grown from the result of being raised in that culture; they may retain the circuits of hierarchy and greed for example. (Another example might be how many scholars even if they are atheists assume monotheism is superior to polytheism.)

Since our culture also inculcates a mentality that does not question authority and which goes complacently into hierarchies, this affects our brains so that without rewiring the average bourgeois person literally could not function in an Anarchist society. (Though they would naturally change if they were surrounded by an Anarchist culture) Indeed even many Anarchists will have to do some serious rewiring of themselves before they can function in a truly Anarchist society and no doubt we need to breed ever more functional meme circuits as we continue to travel that endless Anarchist path. Those born in rich families will develop brains that are often more suited to professional work, they will also likely be wired to have a strong sense of entitlement and even a sense of superiority and we can see through nepotism, a fear of diluting the elite culture with working class memes. The rich generally believe they deserve their money and may naively even believe anyone could do it if they worked hard enough. So when coupled with the generally insular breeding habits of the “blue blood” people, this creates a class which lacks empathy for the poor and arrogance which is the result of their experiences and wiring. If you are raised in a welfare family and your dad is an alcoholic you are not likely to get the kind of environment that is conducive to functioning in a capitalist competition. Likewise if you are raised in a nice environment with proper nutrition and private schooling and a supportive family, you will grow a brain that will give you a good advantage over those you are taught you have to dominate. This may sound like Anarchist memes are simply elitist against hierarchical memes, but this is not true, it is not propaganda or culture, it is neurology, it is a matter of achieving your true will and it is something we are all capable of doing and which we all should be taught how to do.

Through education and memetic mass media campaigns, the brains of the masses have been grown to turn them into slaves, unwitting and consenting to a delusional prison of their collective objectivity, the perceived notion that just because something is commonly believed, it is true. The connotations of the word “Anarchy” will make it rejected by all those who are ignorant of it and instead people rely on the news for their education on the matter. Since the word “Anarchy” is only ever used in a derogatory and distorted mockery of the true meaning, negative emotions attach themselves to the word and through these connotations wire the brain to reject the ideas of Anarchism. So for most people whenever the word “Anarchy” is used it brings up various levels of the associated emotion, generally causing a person to dismiss information without consideration or awareness of the matter, or for most people even the true definition of the word. All this and more is accomplished through the complete restructuring of consciousness to artificial constructs, the works of Nomos which will ever distort the message of Aletheia.

While the government and corporations could not have originally had brain plasticity in mind when it came to their attempts to influence culture, the same basic principles apply to getting people to accept the consensus reality you want. To lead others you have to entice them somehow and get them to willingly accept the circuitry you want, if you can get them to consent to your reality then after time you can literally change their brains in a way that suits you. Bourgeois brains mean a bourgeois consensus reality and this feedback loop gets parents and other citizens to create capitalist environments and through social interaction indoctrinate and program children. Does art imitate life, or life imitate art? The truth is we are stuck in a loop created by the archons and the only way out is to become a magician artist, one who rejects the capitalist system's attempts to commercialize their art and turn it in to a product. Children are raised and their brains take shape to compete and outdo the memes of their parents and so when these children have their own children, they are in many ways raised in a worse situation, but one that seems normal to their parents. Eventually we get a world surrounded by capitalist media and values, an environment that promotes brains to grow to work as mindless subordinate robots. So in many ways people sleep walk through life, knowing they are unhappy and living a lie, yet mistaking this for the way things have to be.

How often have we heard that the human animal is inherently warlike, greedy and hateful and cannot be trusted to live in an Anarchist fashion? While this ignores history and prehistory it also ignores brain plasticity and our seemingly limitless ability to adapt to our environment. By ridding our brains of archon circuitry and consciously wiring our minds with practices found in Occultism, other spiritual traditions and the newly emerging scientific methods which are still in their infancy, we can learn to have free will once again. The only alternative to free will is to be at the mercy of our memes and so obviously it is better to develop our brains so that we can function at a much higher levels and for much longer in our life. At the very least with a culture that consciously sculpts the consciousness and emphasizes critical thinking, that teaches kids how to learn and acquire their full potential, humanity will accomplish feats it literally could never have imagined before.

Racism and other stupid beliefs and viewpoints are the result of unconsciously grown brains, that are wired badly and so produce a consciousness that constantly confirms the reality that the circuits are set to acknowledge and emphasize. (In the case of government propaganda, misinformation, and “public relations” it is done consciously in order to divide and conquer.) Prejudice creates a snowball effect and self fulfilling prophecies that create a reality and experiences originating from both metaphysical and physical means. These experiences are consistent with the bad wiring and further confirm the reality of the bad wiring and so this is how the archons feed. For example white people oppress black people, the black people cannot advance in a racist society and so are poor, then white racists who underestimate their own racism, see the poor blacks and assume they are inferior. Thus there is a self fulfilling prophecy which creates a cycle of prejudice and there are all kinds of examples in other forms of prejudice.

One of the main implications of brain plasticity is that we have to modify our understanding of the power of memes, since memes are evolving and transmitting themselves to various people and make up most of their actions and beliefs in various ways, they must be affecting the structure of the brain. By wiring themselves to people physically, they give us clues for understanding just how deeply ingrained they are into our psyche. It seems to me that what memes really are, are various forms of information that spread in a variety of ways and which produce different kinds of consciousness. Even science through our capitalist and monetary driven society cannot be said to have escaped memetic infection and no doubt there are no scientists in the world who could truly be said to have escaped memetic infection completely. Due to these infections they lose their objectivity and in fact I believe that science itself is a new kind of memetic infection, memes are information and science is the process of determining the veracity of information. Science could be said to be like a psychic immune system, but that would be a claim from a person infected with the meme that science is beyond bias and subjectivity. Though obviously scientific thinking has its advantages and is in many ways the best tool we currently have, since we live in a capitalist culture, funding for science has cultural ramifications, profit and war are the main motives for scientific research and those fields of study that do not fit these cultural values are not nearly as developed, thus we create a bias along those values.

As seen by the work of scientists like Wilhelm Reich, any information that is learned which hinders profit and its main source of expansion, IE war, becomes seen as dangerous to the main cultural memes of our society and may even be banned or at least deemed scientific heresy. (Reich’s work makes even more sense when we consider orgone in terms of neuroplasticity) A fundamentalist Christian will most likely not become an evolutionary scientist and if they did, somehow I doubt they would be the most objective choice for such research. Likewise while materialist atheists may be quick to point the finger at religious fanatics, they fail to understand that they are not immune to bias either. A strict materialist will not be objective about parapsychology or metaphysics and will most likely dismiss it without doing any in depth research at all. (Agnosticism is the only way to approach an experiment) Such bias will also inhibit the creative potential of scientists to come up with experiments and hypothesis which could lead to greater understanding, for example in the realm of quantum physics a materialist Aristotelian mind is not very well adapted. When we add the fact that scientists are dependent on credibility within a consensus of scientists and academic reputations, all of which are dependent on spreading memetic infections, we can see quite clearly that science is not exempt at all from cultural influences and is itself just a culture based on interpreting experiments. In fact in order for scientific truth to be passed on at all, it must be taught to young people in education systems, which even if they pass on valid information are not immune to memetic infections. Science is a meme that states we can only accept memes with physical evidence; this is most interesting because the idea of memes came out of Richard Dawkins evolutionary scientific memescape. Since I am not a scientist my ideas can be rejected without much consideration, since I lack the training and cultural symbols of authority, (a diploma) my own research is worthless and scientists can justify ignoring my hypothesis and not do any experiments to determine if my ideas are correct or not. For these reasons and more I believe that a strong argument could be made scientifically that memes effect a person's creative potential, as well as their logic and in-formation processing abilities and while science may in many fields be the most physically practical, it is in fact still somewhat memetic. (To their credit scientists try to avoid this, but are delusional about how successful they are.)

Ritual is more common place then most people would like to admit, even in atheists it is essentially rampant, found in social customs or personal quirks or habits we all perform rituals of some form or another, it basically happens whenever we perform the same actions repeatedly. Maybe we like to brush our teeth in a certain way, or clean the house in a certain way, maybe we try to attract mates in a certain way, (a personal mating ritual) many of these are culturally determined, and others are not. Looking at the memetic lineage of culture it seems quite possible that most of what we call society today is in fact a highly developed and continuous ritual, a ritual designed to make new rituals and which allows for some level of improvisation within a cultural context, which at it's best develops human awareness. However no doubt some parts of our cult-ure are black magick rituals, as found within governments and economic systems, though if they are thought of as stages of a grand ritual, it is perhaps part of the necessary unfolding of human consciousness towards some better end. (My optimistic view) Where is the cultural ritual leading us? If repeatedly performing successful and emotionally valuable acts imprint the brain with a kind of neuro circuitry, then rituals of all kinds are excellent ways of modifying human awareness. I believe they are so good at this, that they may even be the evolutionary mechanism by which our brains came to evolve such plasticity.

Due to hierarchy, our brain's circuitry is battling it out with the collective human race as the war for consensus reality, luckily we can learn to consciously direct how are brains perceive reality by learning how to direct our own neural plasticity. When we learn these skills we can then to some degree, infuse conscious measures to boost our memetic immune systems. However it is through the cultural evolution of memes that new in-formation is developed and ideas created and so we may always feel a need to create new memes.

As it is the western civilization which has conquered the world through its Occult capitalist magick, it is helpful to know things about the western form of Occultism if we are to understand the curse of this empire. Knowing your enemy allows us to understand how the slaves of this world have been entranced in the glamour of the empire, or the memetic paradigm of human domestication to its rulers. So in order to properly break the curse, it first helps to know how much their black magick has effected you and how. Through learning the language of the Occult you can overcome the archons within you, those circuits which have been controlling you in ways you were never aware of. By identifying them, such as through the seven planets we get a means of naming them, and through naming them we attach them to the circuit that represents that name. With the name we can then manipulate the archon circuits ritually and so gain power over them and then we can then take control of ourselves, rather than let unconscious forces control us.

For example, many mythological or Occult entities, or symbols may seem by today's standards politically incorrect, or stereotypical, overly simplistic and the result of a prejudiced mind. While there may be some truth to this, by working with such symbols ritually and with Anarchist intentions, you gain a better understanding of your own unconscious prejudices and tendencies to stereotype and are no longer so controlled by them. An obvious example would be the whore/virgin dichotomy, which is definitely an over simplification of women, but they are still important archetypes that can shed light on the nature of consciousness. While Pagan religions have a wide variety of female archetypes, these two are basically the only two in the Abrahamic religions and so not surprisingly they are the most patriarchal and sexist of traditions. However by learning the symbolic meanings of these archetypes and looking at them within a broader polytheistic pantheon, we can gain wisdom and see they do have important value. By working with them ritually, we can also experience what they mean beyond the symbols, beyond the words we use to describe them and also experience how all their connotations refer to aspects of consciousness, which can then be activated according to will. I should also point out the term “prostitute” also had a much broader meaning then it does today and could include single independent women. We also have to recognize that before contraception, given the death rates for pregnant women in the ancient world, losing your virginity was a much bigger deal.

We all have such tendencies because the subconscious, especially one which is ignorant of the Occult cannot help but use symbols which are cliché, vague and far reaching and which to the rational mind appear simplistic and so relying on rational arguments against them is not enough, especially since prejudice is not rational. This is especially important for people who belong to western civilization, as they are the most indoctrinated and entranced in their own bubbles of self delusion. Since we are the ones who have been used by the rulers to do their dirty work, you may very well have success with other traditions, but if you are trying to break a curse, it helps to know the form of magick that was used to cast the curse.

This isn't to say any style of magick is inherently corrupting, on the contrary the western civilization is what you get when rulers make people stop learning about magick. What is corrupting is when you have purely selfish and authoritarian intentions to learn magick, (such as why most people become lawyers or businessmen) and it is this distorted view of reality which makes people such willing imperialists. When you come to the Occult as an egotistical, selfish and unbalanced person, it can potentially make things worse, but when people unconsciously do Occult rituals as through capitalism, it is even worse and so the lower classes are easily herded together. The mystical dreams of the old age are manipulated by institutional religions, delusions come from following the herd and so orthodox authorities keep us trapped like fish in a bowl swimming in circles, addicted to the comforts of a shepherd who parcels out nourishment in much too small of servings, teaching a lesson of self pity and masochism in the guise of self sacrifice. By losing a magical pantheist view of reality it is easy to convince others to make war on nature, because when you don't know the divine is everywhere, you are more easily tricked in to believing in an external representation and so rely on the power of an authority figure. An authority by their nature wants to hijack the group dream and peoples manifesting power to invade other peoples realities, as if that were possible without making war on yourself and so Anarchist pantheism, or panentheism is key to understanding there are no valid authorities and so we should be free.

In order to understand the problems of the world today, we have to have some kind of historical context, but in trying to be objective about sexism and various forms of prejudice we cannot help but in our definitions reify gender roles which were created by the patriarchal systems in the first place. Prejudice will not so much be healed by rational talk but by action, by empathy and by building trust and so deconstructing everything in a prejudice culture is resorting to the solar left brain cognitive faculties which I would argue is the main cause of the prejudice and narrow mindedness. Words cannot explain people since they are a product of people and so any discussions about our prejudice is bound by the limitations of language. Through this deconstructive reifying of gender roles we create only more artificial forms and limited definitions which we expect everyone to conform to and so we get angry when miscommunication occurs or the definitions do not describe the full reality. For this reason I am not so much a feminist, but a humanist, and while we can deconstruct the word “human” and analyze its use of the word “man,” the fact remains we need to stop focusing so much on demanding the sexes be equal, but start understanding the reality that humans are androgynous in many ways, hermaphroditic. The etymology is not clear, but “man” is probably related to the word “mind” and so we are mind kind, the kind of being with mind, woman is womb mind and we can deconstruct further to analyze speciesism, but at a certain point we just have to recognize the limitations of language to do justice to our reality. Misunderstanding as to definitions is more of a contributor to prejudice than any isolated experiences with individuals, which is the consequence of trying to classify everything and deconstruct everything according to whatever, age, gender, race etc. Pointing out hypocrisy and prejudice and intolerance is wonderful and brilliant, but does little to cure the perpetrators of their ignorant pathologies, their mental illness which wants to obsessively categorize everything.

I am no expert, but from what I have seen feminism doesn't go far enough to promote a balance between rationalism and emotional awareness in general and has focused too much on pointing out the obvious sexist tendencies of male art and culture. I am all for women practising debating skills and formal logic but the fact remains equality will not happen through a debate, it will not happen through a well defined legal system of what equality means, it will not happen through an endless argument, it will happen when people in general learn to open their hearts. So it is any calls for censorship, any calls for labelling the endless forms of offensive behaviour is really just an attempt to treat the symptoms of the problem, rather than get to the real root of the problem which is a lack of patience and respect, engendered by an imbalanced and dominating rationalist materialist paradigm, which has swept the world and minds of people of all genders.

Labelling the problem is the first step, which feminists have done very good job at, now we have to transmute the lead in to gold, we have to work with all faculties to heal the situation and this means everyone taking responsibility for all things, as one group together. This is very easy for me to see and say because I am a white man, but the fact remains most white men are too emotionally stupid to learn their lesson by being ridiculed or by having it pointed out, however rationally it is put that they are to blame. While pointing out the mistakes of my less open minded brethren is highly encouraged as I like to see myself as a champion of free speech, please keep in mind some day, if real equality will happen, forgiveness must happen. That while you should have no tolerance for oppression, remember prejudice is the result of a mental illness and like drug addicts, getting mad at mentally ill people and demonizing them generally only makes things worse. White men need healing desperately, and only when they are healed, will they stop lashing out at people like a psychotic mad man blaming everybody for their own problems. I cannot speak for women, I cannot know what it really means to them to be a feminist just from their words and so I cannot really understand any explanation which they give me, but if it is to be a one way conversation the goal has been defeated before we begin. It is easy to see why so many feminists would have little sympathy for a man, but without the intention of healing all people and coming to an understanding of our situation and how men suffer from patriarchy as well, you cannot be said to be striving for equality, you are only venting and expressing your own emotional trauma and while that is very important a distinction needs to be made. No I am not apologizing for white men, I am saying beware because we have colonized the minds of feminists and anti racist activists as well and I can see you are still victimizing and enslaving yourselves, still putting down the woman within and the minority perspectives you hold and if you are not careful you will become a dead husk of a human that we often are.

In this current world that we have created, me asking that you not succumb to the mistakes that white men have made (and pretty well all races) is not a justification for our actions, it is a warning, a warning that our mental illness is contagious and currently threatens this whole planet. So while it may be emotionally gratifying to some for me to apologize as a white man for spreading this infection across the planet, the fact remains we still need to do something about it! I as a white man cannot apologize for all white men or speak for them, because to do so would be saying that we are all alike and we are all in agreement, or that we are all equally to blame. If such were the case then there would be no hope of equality, no hope of overcoming prejudice and so why even bother to try? That would be just more evidence of the "wishy washy" stereotype of the feminine gender role being inferior and "bitching" about equal rights. Likewise feminists must realize that they do not speak for all women, even if they would like to, women are far too varied in their opinions as to what equality and sexism are and that many, if not most women are pretty complicit with patriarchal culture. Many feminists are not Anarchist, but any feminist critique of patriarchy can never be fully true if it is outside of an Anarchist reality, hierarchy is a product of patriarchal "masculine" mindsets and so any compromise with hierarchy is a compromise with sexism. I cannot stress enough, there can be no real feminism that is not Anarchist, Anarchy cannot exist without equality of all people and so the two are essentially synonymous when correctly understood. While history has plenty of evidence to heap the blame on white males, saying that white males are the cause of all the world's problems is itself prejudice and while many feminists do not do this, it is the popular image of the feminist and they ignore this fact at their own peril.

So instead we must each as individuals go inside and try and be self aware enough that we see there is no real division between any humans, any life forms, any genders or sexual orientation, and this requires an integration of the archetypal feminine or lunar qualities with archetypal solar masculine. Some may say that such a conception is itself sexist, but I say to you, this is because you are only analyzing it from a solar rational perspective and ignoring the lunar essence of this reality, that they are all found within all people and when we integrate them we become Mercury, or hermaphrodites, Hermes-Aphrodite. These archetypal forms may seem overly simplistic, even derogatory and so they are, but they refer to real realities and all symbols, all definitions of the genders are overly simplistic and so we have no choice but to rely on limited artificial constructs to communicate with each other. That no matter how open ended and detailed a symbol is, they always caricaturize and mask the unarticulated reality which is the domain of the moon. The "masculine" mind rejects the "feminine" because the solar relies on symbols and especially words and words are simplistic symbols which cannot help but put things in generalized limited and so in a sense "prejudiced" terms, and so feminists must communicate with those limitations of terminology in mind. From there we can all start to open up and recognize the beauty of the lunar feminine and the essence of meaning which lies within those hollow symbolic bias's. Either a symbol is too specific and simplistic and solar to mean anything, or it is too general and vague, filled with too many connotations to get any point across and so either extreme leads to problems which means that we must learn balance in a way that patriarchal schools do not teach.

It is interesting to note that in many societies Shamans become trans gendered, or cross dressers, perhaps even taking spirit lovers of the same gender they were originally. Even in these cultures homophobia is sometimes present, many young Shamans are overcome with terrible depression from the alienation from the tribe, or an inability to deal with their new gender identity or sexual orientation. For this reason and many more a Shaman is often feared and hated as much as they are respected, with the tribe only coming to them when they need healing, or some work of magick and so we should not think that Shaman's do what they do for social status.

The first goal of feminists should be to make men more emotionally mature, and then they will naturally stop being sexist, but to do this feminists must themselves become more emotionally mature and stop relying so much on pure rationalism. History shows us women leaders are at least as war like as male leaders and so instead of trying to make it in a man's world, women should be trying to keep men from making such an insane and psychopathic culture. (We do not need any more Hillary Clintons or Margaret Thatchers!) If women do not teach us emotional maturity we won't figure it out on ourselves, getting mad at us for being emotionally immature will just make us ashamed, fearful and resentful. While I heartily encourage armed struggle for women who are oppressed by men in a sexist culture, please keep in mind the nature of the sickness, the root of the problem. Failure to do so will only set up a new artificial hierarchy of values, based on ultimately vague definitions of equality and inoffensive behaviour, which cannot help but fail to encapsulate the complexity of human consciousness. Who can really define sexism? Even if a massive set of encyclopedia's about egalitarian etiquette were created, books which outline all the possible scenarios in which prejudice could be interpreted or used against another, even if you could somehow get everyone to agree to these rule books being the definitive texts on equality that everyone should live by, even with such etiquette being followed, people would merely be censoring themselves rather than actually being egalitarian in their heart.

If you ask pretty much anyone if they are in favour of equality they will tell you yes, people would define equality as something purely "good" and anyone against it as "bad" yet the world does not have it because we are all using different vague definitions of equality. Most languages as we know them today (especially English) were created by patriarchal societies, with patriarchal forms of logic which encourage overly simplistic definitions and broad generalizations in order that someone might become an “authority” on something. So to hold up a dualist definition of “equality” as “good” or “white” and everything else as “black” is the result of the same authoritarian patriarchal mindset that created the problem in the first place. (As anti racist activists even point out, black and white thinking has literally been applied to racist logic as to why white people are good.) The reality is all things are grey, all things have the potential to be offensive to someone, all things which can be spoken can be interpreted in all kinds of ways. So instead of acting as authorities on all that is “good” and trying to create a purely “white” society, we should try to make people aware of the often unconscious non linguistic aspects of consciousness, those which promote prejudice and authoritarian behaviour.

All too often it seems when a man is labelled sexist, it is really just that he is an asshole, and if you followed him around you would see he is an asshole to everyone, to men and women. The fact that he treats a women badly is not because she has a vagina, he probably actually loves vagina, though he may have negative stereotypes in mind, and it may shape aspects of the verbal abuse, a bully will pick on anyone he can intimidate, anyone he views as “weaker.” His simplistic conception of women is often really just an aspect of his ignorance in general, rather than an active hatred of any particular group, it is a joy of being impolite, a joy of being offensive and pissing people off, sadism and the urge to find a scape goat for his own emotional weakness. So it is sexism and prejudices are expressions of a deeper problem, a problem of the mind which in many ways eludes the rational intellect.

The fact is homosexual couples also sometimes physically abuse each other and so for heterosexuals, much of what appears to be sexism can be sadism taking on a form that is most effective in that situation. (Not to mention all the sexual abuse that goes on in American prisons) That is a sadist will use whatever differences their victim has in order to cause the most amount of pain possible. So a sadist will be sexist to a woman, homophobic to a homosexual, racist to a different race, or just make fun of fat people or short people or whatever it is. So while there are certainly exceptions, it is not uncommon that prejudice people do not truly believe these things, or at least they do not think in depth about them, but that they are sadists who want to cause pain. Their choice of victims may sometimes be based on prejudice, or bias, as in confirmation bias and ignorance, but it is often rooted in sadism and takes form according to their bias. It is true that having experienced what it is like to be a victim, a woman may not feel like doing that to others, however some women want revenge and sadism can potentially infect anyone and so women are often just as sadistic as men, it just takes on different forms which are most appropriate and effective when that woman is not in a physical position of power.

Arguing about how egalitarian definitions are is pointless when language itself outside the context of individual reality is not egalitarian and so instead of trying to define utopia and equality, we should probably just all have sex anyways, because that is ultimately what everyone wants. You may be saying BDSM safety words and these are important with a male mind gone berserk with passion, but you are still playing BDSM games, you still want to play naughty and nice whenever you use words. Instead of trying to rationalize feminism to men and each other, women should focus on physical, quantifiable and emotional practical concerns and implications for equality. With an issue like sexism, it is mainly the Earth and water elements which are out of proportion, which are being dominated and so it is these elements which need to be strengthened to fix the problem. (A cherubim with a fiery sword guards the way to paradise) Women can use their feminine charms to make equality sexy, to use male sexism against itself by making emotional maturity more of a cultural value than strength, or wealth, or power and the best way to do this is to stop non feminist women from having sex with sexist men. Generally when it comes to women, sex is all sexist men care about and so if you can threaten their supply of sex, they will have to grow up emotionally in order to get laid and in their shallow attempts to get laid, will be forced to work on themselves and raise their awareness.

This will not be done by kidding yourselves that you are not sexual beings as some feminists have tried to do, but by eroding the near monopoly of sex by sexist males, by eroding patriarchal concepts like monogamy and then creating in more women emotional maturity that allows them to see this as sexy, egalitarian and highly desirable and fulfilling. Yes monogamy is patriarchy's greatest weapon against women; it is the basis of owning women and the primary means of domesticating humans in general. It is only pimps who want to keep women from being slutty because ultimately only pimps profit from sex, if all women were as slutty as they used to be, there would be no need for whores of any type. If you are not in favour of free love it is because you are a whore or a pimp, and in either case you are mentally ill and sexually depraved. The cult of the virgin alone as having value is the cult of the whore, it is the work of a pimp driving up demand by cutting supply, because if each person could have sex with Gaia on mushrooms then who the hell would need priests? So who the hell would want capitalism or hierarchy at all? That is a prostitute may be a virgin but she is still a prostitute and in fact she is the most highly valued type of prostitute on the market and so it is with girls raised in Abrahamic cultures. Psychologically speaking, if we stop whoring women, the feminine mind with its compassion, imagination and non linguistic awareness will also take on greater significance and we will make real progress in returning to a world where we stop whoring nature and so help the patriarchal system to crumble.

Once sexual relationships become more a matter of reputation and general behaviour to all women, rather than one owned, played and lied to women in a marriage, then men will be forced to examine how they affect other people emotionally in a much more comprehensive and unbiased way. It is much harder to ignore multiple women who may change over time, than it is to ignore what one nagging wife has been telling you for 50 years, but who is afraid to leave because of the social ramifications. Men do not have to worry about their reputation with monogamy nearly so much because there is no new updates, no new insights from other women about their sexual partners. Where as if a sexist man beats a woman and treats her like shit, she may eventually stand up to him and while that is great, he can go on and meet some new woman who doesn't know him, whom he can lie to and manipulate because the women in society are divided, competing against each other because there is for the most part no polyamorous community to provide an overall judgement of a person.

Most women are stuck because they think they only want one man and though at times this may be true, it has been held up as an eternal truth when for many if they were in the right environment this would not be true much of the time. Due to the social pressures and the indoctrination they have received, women are made dependent on one lover and so any man can pretend to be that one lover who is good to them. Monogamy breeds bias in our interpersonal relationships because it keeps us focusing on hang ups and ego games and narrow symbolic definitions of other people and indoctrinates children in to unnatural societal values. We try to have our idealized individual one true love instead of having an understanding of men and women in totality and so long as we play in to that mechanism of sexual dominance, we create a power struggle and we perpetuate sexist realities. Exposing that monogamy is really just elaborate S&M may be a turn off, but once you get over your ego we can all become much more sexually, emotionally, and romantically fulfilled and knowledgeable then we have ever been before. This is especially true since we now have the historic context to show us what S&M will get us, so lets get on with it and then we can start to devise new games entirely. Women should be worshipped as goddesses, but goddesses should not limit their love to just the clergy, otherwise you would get an authoritarian, patriarchal style religion, which codifies its wisdom like penthouse letters.

If you hate pornography and strippers, the best way to stop them is to promote nudism and polyamory. People are going to get horny no matter what and so gender equality lies in making sure everyone gets off fully. For sex, even the most sexist man will learn humility, will gladly worship a woman if she allows herself to be worshipped and if she will see that a man's sexual urges are also holy, also divine. If this were not true rich men would not pay thousands of dollars for a dominatrix to tease them, and men would not pay for strippers and hookers, but to make this impulse healthy, sex needs to be seen as something holy and something that needs to be for free, but to really see this we need to see that sex needs to be a matter of sluttiness, rather than whoriness.

Personally I think complaining about such objectification is in many ways a huge distraction, feminism needs to work on its priorities. I do not care much about porno when there are women in the Middle East who are treated as slaves, when there are women in Africa having their genitals mutilated and when there are thousands of women in Asia being trafficked in to sex slavery. Not only this, if these issues were focused on more specifically than trying to censor males, then men would be much more likely to join to the cause. (But then many feminists do not seem to want the help of men, which is quite the cognitive dissonance if they actually want equality.) You do not change men's minds by telling them to shut up, you change them by working with them, wherever you can on common issues, and by changing their values, making them want to be men who treat women equally and you do this by encouraging men to accept the feminine within. The approach most feminists take at best makes men want to treat women as equals, but fails utterly to really make them experience the reality of equality, so that men must conceal their true feelings, their true thoughts and become a fake person. Feminists may win a debate, but through such actions they will only achieve lip service because nobodies hearts have really changed. While this certainly isn't fair that woman should at first have to be the bigger people, or emotionally as satisfying as expressing their very justified anger, this is the reality and it is the only effective means of creating gender equality that I can see.

While I certainly cannot excuse the actions of men, the hard truth is, most mainstream women choose to be in unhealthy relationships because they too are mentally ill, the hard truth for feminists is that while there is exceptions, murderous and psychopathic men and institutions, in general it takes two to tango. It is even a cliché that nice men do not get laid and so long as this happens sexist men have no motivation to try and improve. Another influence may be that as women know at least subconsciously that they do not fulfil the role of the virgin archetype, that they have become masochistic in their shame and so seek someone to punish them and while different women are obviously different, the fact remains some women stay in abusive relationships willingly. (Monogamous men sometimes do something similar as well) Whatever the reasons, it is undeniable that many women seek out brutish and sexist men and while its fine to call men on their bullshit, it would be much more tactically effective to work on changing the values of women and preventing the sick relationships in the first place. This is quite a different approach from antagonizing men after the fact and making it appear to them as though feminism is about female domination. (At least in the minds of the men feminists are trying to change)

Until we are emotionally mature enough to recognize we are all sluts, we will continue to make whores of ourselves for anyone willing to pay for the whips and chains, just so that we can maintain our reputation and ironically not be seen as a prude in many ways. That is woman have been trained to be whores for anyone in this patriarchal culture who dominates others, through monetary whips and judicial chains of hierarchical power, BDSM is really just the microcosm of this mentality. Equality means being a top and a bottom at certain times, and avoiding "dead fish" romances, which are shabby imitations for the passions we really feel for one another. Until this happens sexist men will continue to just see feminism as a form of foreplay. This isn't to say patriarchy is the fault of women for not satisfying men, but that mainstream women are not even satisfying their own needs properly and our civilization is the argument about how to sort out this sexual frustration with each other. After a few marriages, you start to clue in that marriage was never what you really wanted in the first place, what you really wanted was emotional support and human love and respect even though you are a tremendous slut with every kink everyone else has. Kink in our culture is really just ego masturbation to think you are one upping the square prudes who are also stuck in this monogamous puritanical culture. Now I am not against kink, far from it, among other things I even enjoy bondage, both being tied up and tying up, so I am not saying we should try to stop people from being kinky, but that people's choice of fetishes would probably change drastically if we had a sane society.

The virgin image of the goddess, is only valuable if it is used to consecrate the fertility of the land, used as role playing for foreplay in the worship of nature and the consummation of sexual desire which brings unity and life to all. The virgin is the mystical symbol of the ultimate truth, the undefiled awareness which is beyond all pain, suffering and illusion and that is fine, but without the hieros gamos, the chemical wedding we never conceive enlightenment or unity and so to say no one can “know” the virgin is to say we must all be forever ignorant. This is to not say foreplay is not important, for the ritual to be successful man and woman must cum at the same time and then we dissolve in to unity. But thousands of years of women being conditioned to claim to be virginal because of male fantasies for role playing, are creating rapists and all kinds of depravity and perversity. I have heard feminists talk of “rape culture” but I think it is more accurate to say “whore culture” and while women are especially conditioned in to it, through it and especially through wage labour we are all whores. The sad thing is sometimes whores get raped, that certain actions and lifestyles increase a person's risk of being raped. To be clear here I am not saying this is the whores fault, (especially your average rape victim) but that modern society is a fucked up situation in general, one which is creating sadist and misogynist behaviour and when mixed with the sexual frustration and neurosis of unnatural prudery, you get a time bomb waiting to explode. (You really are far more likely to be raped in a capitalist country than a socialist one.) I am not trying to excuse male violence but if we want it to stop we have to understand the causes, (which are often the same causes of females being abusive) otherwise we are just assuming that men are inherently rapists and pimps and this is no more true than saying women are inherently whores. A rapist is always wrong in their actions, but they do often have a criteria in choosing their victims and so understanding what this criteria is can help prevent rapes in the future and help to identify the root causes which are making these men so sick. First though we must recognize that both men and women have been made mentally ill by this, but it is largely the result of capitalist and Abrahamic culture, so it is, women must stop playing in to these fantasies, they must renounce the whore culture that young girls are encouraged to conform to and realize their role as mother to us all. All mothers enjoy sex, otherwise we would not be here to talk about it (except the children of rape victims) and let's face it, pure rationalism with its attempts at asexuality is in the big scheme of things, not much fun for men either. While it is true that some women, especially in the past may have been forced to be so lunar they were unbalanced, modern society expects everyone to be totally solar and this has been encouraged by many feminists. In their quest to show their strength and essentially out “male” the men of this world, more than a few feminists have thrown the baby out with bathwater and abandoned the lunar principles traditionally associated with women. So even though much of these “traditions” may seem to be sexist themselves and gender roles are truly arbitrary, with both men and women having both “solar” and “lunar” traits, many feminists ignore the fact that a purely “masculine” or solar mind is flawed and men have definitely failed to take make up for the loss in emotional intelligence. The question of “why would a man buy the cow when he gets the milk for free?” has clearly been the premise for much of civilization and is in fact the blatant admittance that it turns its daughters in to whores, all because it cannot stand promiscuity, that what is important is personal profit. (“Enjo kōsai” is taking hold in the most capitalist cultures, but it is not just impoverished girls doing it and so it is a clear example of whore culture, sometimes acted out even by fifth graders!) In fact when someone becomes single it is almost cliché to say they are “going on the market” by which is meant the “meat market” for man hunks, or women are referred to as a piece of ass and this is because capitalism and desire are both rooted in the sex drive.

So the question is what is better, whores or sluts? I am of the opinion that sluts are clearly the economical and environmental choice to make. We can then stop spending all our gold on whores and instead remember that the gold coins were suppose to be an homage, a work of art, a talisman commemorating the beauty of spiritual wisdom and a token of love, a gift to a slutty lover rather than a price to be paid to a whore. Most men work and acquire wealth almost solely to impress women, they have been trained to buy whores and treat women as whores, they have been taught they need a fancy car to get the girl and they have been taught to be a provider for their whore. The epic of Gilgamesh and some other myths are very specific, wild men were seduced in to being “civilized” by whores, taught to work under the theocracy so that they could get the goods necessary to pay for the whores, eventually losing their connection to the animals of the wilderness and even effectively “killing” the forest god. I generally try not to speak for all people but I would venture to guess it is not the true will of women to act like whores, nor is it the true will of men to buy whores and to live in artificial relationships based on notions of private property or capitalist social status. So by women becoming incredibly slutty with non sexist men, (and reclaiming their rights to birth control) men would not work nearly so much and the economy and so control systems of the patriarchal establishment and its means of whoring nature would be decimated. Not only this, since marriage would be obsolete, overpopulation would start to decrease since custom would change from the conformity of the nuclear family, (and religious decrees of unprotected sex) to a family where only planned and genuinely wanted children would be born. Patriarchal capitalism has set up a system where women are in part dependent on a man to financially support their children and so as there is no community organizations to help raise the kids, they must stay in contact with abusive males. There are far too many children who already need a home, or who live with abusive parents or in poverty stricken societies so that through the communal raising of children which comes with polyamory and Anarchism, much healthier societies and sexual dynamics can be created.

Whoever controls the cultural values which determine how people determine what is appropriate and desirable sex, determine the fertility and means of human production. Whether it be capitalist chattel based patriarchal monogamy, or consensual polyamory with its natural inclination to symbiotic gift economies, sex is at the root of it. By demanding women be monogamous we have demanded Gaia only care about humanity, to be tied down to us no matter how we abuse her, no matter how she might love other creatures. The search for sex is one of the biggest distractions to revolution, we should be rising up, yet we are still horny, especially men and so the answer is clear, first we get off and then we get on with the revolution!

Mother nature made cows for everyone to get a drink, to nurture us and help us grow, not for some pimp to start creating a dairy industry. From a modern feminist perspective, or any superficial reading of this a woman might be offended by me comparing them to a cow, but the most ancient and matriarchal societies we know of had cow goddesses at the centre of their religion. Are women prepared to say that no one can love Hathor, Isis, Ishtar, Cybele or the Morrigan? That the largely gynocentric Minoans and the inhabitants of Catal Huyuk, Gobekli Tepe and many others were sexist? Such a comparison is offensive to them because thanks to speciesist patriarchal society, cows are seen as inferior, rather than being honoured as sacred like they used to be. Industrial farming is one more example of how this patriarchal society has demeaned the goddess, it is a reflection of our sexism, what you do to cows or any plant or animal you do to the goddess, you do to women, to minorities, to the feminine mind in all people, all genders. Cows are much more than just cows, milk is much more than just milk or sex, and sex much more than just sex, it is the source of all life, the magickal union of opposites which is the secret to all spirituality. As I said cattle are the original units of currency before coins, but even after were the symbol of fertility, fecundity, all prosperity and wealth, practical creativity, and even industry. Mother nature literally evolved mammary glands for MAMalls so that all people can nurse, when you turn such a symbol in to a commodity, it is a microcosm of turning all of nature in to a commodity. Just look at the statue of Artemis at Ephesus and you will see the Mother nature clearly loves breasts, and while this was a centre for the banking cult, before hand it was also sacred to the Amazons. At any rate there are many nurse maid goddesses or nursing goddesses and we can see that women and goddesses are associated with the Moon and Venus, both of which appear in crescent forms, which resemble cow horns. So then women should not hate men for loving breasts, but encourage people in general to recognize the sacredness of fertility as the source of life. The word “feminism” comes from “femina” meaning woman, female, “she who suckles,” from root of “felare” meaning to suck or suckle and so if we take everything literally, if we obsess so much about symbols, we should change the word feminism as well, or we could realize being offended by such symbols is often just the result of an imbalanced mind and emotional immaturity.

Right now I feel like the crone, and while it may not be that sexy to learn about sex from your grandma, they sure as hell are a better source of information than virgin men like the pope! (or Catholic paedophiles) All the gods and goddesses are found within all people and all things, to ignore one, to try and create monotheism, even a goddess oriented monotheism is to create an unbalanced mind and an unbalanced world. Remember, this is grandma speaking and she likes to have her snatch eaten out too! Voyeurism was probably evolved so that males didn't kill each other when they saw other males having sex with the females they are emotionally attached to and so all notions of sexual shame or attempts to stop expressions of consensual sexual desire, are really anathema to life and so to mental health as well. It is not reducing women to sexual objects, once you realize that sex is the most important and beautiful thing in the world and so I submit to you, by changing cultural values as to what is sexy, women can go a long way to changing everything.

Most of this last section of this chapter was written under the influence of Peruvian torch and to tell the truth I had a vision of Dynomia as Mother Earth and she inspired me heavily to write this. Now proclaiming divine revelation might be misconstrued as me saying I speak for this divinity, or that I have some special authority and so I chose not to mention this originally. However I changed my mind recently when I found there is already an anthropological theory backing up much of this idea and so once again I have found that entheogens seem to be providing me with information I did not have before. You should not mistake me for promoting hippie notions of love, no if anything I am saying that women should start by working together in what I recently found has been described as a "sex union" or councils of women who work to ensure overly patriarchal males, rapists and sexual harassment is dealt with, an idea with a long history in hunter gatherer societies and even "modern" cultures, especially in Africa with the Igbo people. Throughout history, women have organized "sex strikes," or "sex boycotts" for political reasons and have been more successful than one might think. While I may not win many male fans for such a suggestion, making Anarchy sexy will help bring humanity around and depending on the situation, a little sexual frustration can definitely provide some drive to the urge to fight for freedom. According to the theory of "female cosmetic coalitions" these sex unions may have played a significant role in the formation of human culture and even human evolution! Anthropologists argue this resulted in "reverse dominance" which is an inverted social hierarchy, or rule from below by an ungovernable community, an egalitarian social order where individuals band together to resist being dominated by anyone, with males from the coalitions family helping to protect any sex strike actions. While promiscuous alpha male types are bad for evolution in that these males do not stick around to take care of their young, polyamorous Anarchists would certainly take care of their young and could in fact provide even greater evolutionary advantages than monogamy. Women control the power of life and with that they control the greatest power on the planet, if they can figure out how to regain that power from the pimps of this world, they can set us all free.

This all brought to mind another time I experienced directly on mushrooms a myth that came alive before my eyes and was my own mind. I realized that ultimately all women are goddess's, the essence of woman is as the moons reflections on the water and I am a hunter in search of her truth. In my attempts to see the goddess bathing in her naked form I am destroyed utterly by my hunting dogs, my limited logic, the vain notion that I could comprehend such divinity through my male mind. All of my means of pursuing her are that which destroy me, the more I think I know her, the more dogs there are to eat me. I love Luna, yet as a man I can not hope to understand that which I love, but transfixed by her beauty I am transformed in to a horned stag, having seen her I cannot live in the world of men, I accept any punishment for my impertinence as a gift, my soul is torn to pieces, a sacrifice I make willingly, the price of a glimpse of that which is pure woman, untamed and untouched, wild, pure, wisdom...

Psychosomatic Existence

People in my dreams, are characters it seems,
In a play that never ends, no matter how many prayers I send.
The most genius observation, is understood with little concentration.
A love of patterns for predictable safety and security, but familiarity breeds contempt, desires are poisons that purify.
Unspoken understanding enforce the rituals of social etiquette's tradition,
So I am left here confused and deluded to wallow in my perdition.
Slowly I ease into disillusionment like a lava bubble bath burning my soul.
Revealing the self hidden truths of my hallowed birth right is my only goal.
Challenges and trials sent to entertain for eternities duration,
Salvation seems unfathomable when confronted by their sedation.
Fantasy and reality determined by our faiths decision,
But who among us can ever say we have absolute precision?
People all around me and no one ever sees another's thoughts inside,
The true minds and personality are something to alien to describe.
Hidden motivations even of benevolent intentions, make it impossible not to cause some pain.
Crying for vengeance for a stab in the back from your own reflection just perpetuates hate's game.
Sacrifice and forgiveness are among the greatest strengths there are,
To warm those around you with beams of light like the brightest fiery star.
Hypocrisy and contradiction are inevitable fear providers,
Surrender and acceptance must be cultivated by all who are deciders.
The journey for the truth is an ever growing search,
Beware of those who demand money for acceptance in their church.
Cosmic irony everywhere maybe god is an atheist alone,
Bitter sweet beauty it's responsibility must cut to the bone.
A thick armour of scars is the only final hope,
Maybe to give life up by hanging from a rope.
To force an answer of this life, and find paradise by the edge of a knife.
I say goodbye to the world forever,
Leaving me to my Gnostic endeavour,
Growing beyond all material pleasure,
Till I can no longer be contained within the rules of measure.

Chapter 19 - Agreement

From learning about neuroplasticity, I feel like I have a whole new way of looking at the world, it's much easier to see why people do what they do, they are just doing what they have unconsciously wired themselves to do, to do otherwise wouldn't seem stable or right to them. Some circuits it seems will even create pain, (emotional at least) whenever the person seeks to overwrite them or even just by contemplating alternatives. Humans don't like change because they have been wired to try and have consistent circuitry, to avoid anything that will threaten their egos dominance over the brain. People define themselves by having the same circuitry throughout their lives, so to find out that they aren't who they think they are, that their identity is so plastic is literally unsettling to their circuitry. I feel like one of the major keys to understanding consciousness has been discovered, if only I could find a way to make people aware of these kinds of things, make people aware of how responsible they are for their own lives, their own unhappiness. We need more memes that demonstrate this, some less intellectual than others, that way those who avoid thinking will not dismiss them, but take them in and slowly the meme will dissolve their hierarchical defences. Then people will realize they can control their consciousness and that the effort to change their lives and the world is worth it. People need to know they are the livestock of viral vampire brain parasites which mask themselves in symbolism, like all vampires, they have to be invited into a person's home, their consciousness, only instead of garlic LSD and mushrooms are how you get rid of them. All entheogens are potentially good for that, as they generate the god/ess within, to some degree they get rid of the vampires in the process. Once the world learns the truth we will cast off our self imposed shackles, the ones we carefully nurtured into existence. Then we will be as children dancing in a garden of our own delights, we will learn to plant new seeds and on that day the sun of true awareness will rise above and nourish those seedlings, shining a light over the darkness to cast away the shadows.

I have bought the gun I need to bring down the oil exec that I have in mind, luckily he is coming to my city soon, on some kind of corporate seminar to talk about how great he is for covering up the news of the oil spill and not costing the corporation much. The only thing that he did to solve the problem was get the public to forget about him and remember how much they love consumption, but that's precisely the kind of skills you need to make it the business world. The white collar class is an excellent example of parasites which the public has consented into letting into their world, which has infected the public with their disease and drains the world dry, by showing them who the enemy is maybe they will start to look into just how they have been screwed over their whole lives, how real progress has been stifled in the name of capitalist growth. People need to know that capitalist mentalities of everyone fending for themselves is psychotic and murderous, that it is fair to say a person should not have to work for those who are lazy, but that just because communism doesn't work does not change the fact that there are real ramifications for unbridled exploitation of workers and consumption of the natural world. More than this people need to know that a person's freedom to fend for themselves includes the right to defend against those who would destroy the planet and enslave them under the guise of personal freedom. With my act, hopefully it will be clear that people will defend themselves, that they will not accept such petty definitions as freedom, that the desire for life and real freedom outweighs the greed of this world. I will follow him to his hotel and blast that fucker into the next dimension and if I die in the process, all the better, a martyr makes for a better meme, I'll die for our ignorance.

All is One and One is all,
Spirit will come and evil will fall.
Through the truth of eternal light,
It is the honour of good to fight.
Hate and fear the brakes of love,
A black iron fist wears a white silk glove.
Truth will come to defeat our pain,
It nourishes us as the life giving rain.
Its all a plan of a totally perfect design,
The devil teaches us but will soon resign.
Giving an example of what not to be,
Through juxtaposition we learn to see.
We could never really fail no matter how we try,
Because death itself is nothing but a lie.
An immortals blessing that pain could never last,
Like a fist full of water we cannot hold the past.
Disintegration and coagulation the Alchemist revelation,
Purifying our souls through a means of distillation.
Movement is impossible with infinite connections,
We're already everywhere is the inevitable direction.
Remember you know everything even how to create mistakes,
But all this fear of inadequacy is nothing but a fake.
Programmed by manipulators to fill horrendous greed,
Digging an endless well will never satisfy their need.
Satisfaction through acceptance is the only way,
What do I know I'm just a kid, no one listens to what I say.

Backwards Observations

Since the brain changes form throughout life depending on how it is used, with Occult training I have found we can consciously mold consciousness to fit any number of various systems that allow it to function better in both the physical and metaphysical realms, in fact I believe one of the primary effects of Occult training is a means of what in science calls “self directed neuroplasticity.” To go back to the metaphor of our brains as gardens, through ritual it is possible to prune or even uproot archons, those neurotic and pathological, or otherwise ignorantly grown neural branches or circuits. Using Occult practices and as I will show entheogens, we can also organically fertilize or strengthen specific neural branches that we desire. By empowering a symbol we empower a specific circuit and so we gain the means through ritual to tend to that circuit alone and according to our intention. This works so that circuits which are wanted become healthier and as we help them spread out through the brain further and if we plant the right seeds with the right intentions, our brains will be much better able to fight off GMOs which are attempting to colonize it.

If our brains base a large portion of our perceptions on what it expects to be real due to memories and what has worked in the past, then we must train it to expect nothing but the truth and to utilize all incoming information whether or not it has an explanation for it. We must hypnotize ourselves to stop being hypnotized by others, we must hypnotize ourselves to be as objective and unbiased as possible and we must train the mind to become flexible and strong according to the will in any given situation, rather than fall into atrophy and eventually the kind of living rigor mortis that is so prevalent today. With time and practice you will see your consciousness can become whatever you want it to be, the trick is figuring out what you really want and so you must try to determine the most functional and true form for it to take. In my experience the most detailed means of achieving this is through the various Occult traditions, as they provide both the methods for forming the mind and the final forms themselves. They provide the maps and the landscapes change accordingly, at least for those who have the will to explore and traverse the unknown regions of their psyche. The key to overcoming the fear of these unknown regions is an understanding that the landscape is never totally set in stone and so you can always define your mind. Once you know enough to make your own reality models, you can walk through them by creating your own mandalas, just as the Alchemists and Buddhists do. Once you learn how to traverse the topological landscape of your mind, you can learn to control and how to really create your own reality here in mundane world. By learning how to take things apart and put them back together, you become able to apply those realities, imagined or not, into a workable mechanical expression of physically manipulating the mind. This even includes the more subtle aspects of consciousness that are irrational, intuitive and logical, creating a holistic framework from which to mould the mind around consciously.

Chaos magick states that whatever you believe is true, is true, and while there is truth to this, there are also certain propensities in consciousness, certain sectors of the consciousness which are universal to all humans (though psychopaths can lack emotion) and because of this there are basic principles which we can say will be of influence on pretty much all default forms of consciousness. Though the symbolism may change that which is symbolized is almost always the same and for these things we can study the pantheons of various religions who have had much more time and practice to work on a map even better than modern psychology, let alone your average Chaote trying to start from scratch. If you were to map out your aura thoroughly it doesn't matter if it is traditional or not, it would eventually form itself around your map, with proper context not only does it becomes real, but it is always capable of updating itself to suit your needs. (Though anatomy and knowledge of the endocrine system will provide useful insight) While traditional maps may have more experimentation and knowledge behind them, a key part to encouraging neural plasticity is having a strong emotional and intellectual value for whatever you are trying to imprint into the brain. For this reason once you know what you are doing, there can be advantages to customizing your own system, especially if the traditional methods are not very appealing to you and so long as it is well thought out, Chaos magick can definitely be better for some than traditional symbol systems, even if it is simpler.

Since our education is based more on teaching kids what to think instead of how to think, most adults have a lot of unlearning to do and I submit that probably the best way we currently know how to do this is by Occult and meditative practices. The schools of thought based around Qabalah and Alchemy are perhaps the most useful in this regard, however no doubt other schools of thought like Buddhist practices can be applied with great success. In the end what works will largely be the result of personal taste and a large number of factors in your environment and current paradigm. Depending on what kind of archons inhabit your mind you might find different symbols useful, but since your culture has already provided you with symbols which already have entrenched circuits in your brain, (even if they are largely unconscious) they can potentially be more powerful than trying to learn a foreign system which is in many ways out of context to your environment. While memetic diversity is very important, first you should work on understanding the symbols which are already a part of your paradigm and which have influenced the culture around you. If you don't know where you are coming from, you can't know where you are going, if you want to heal an illness such as this, you must have some idea of what your people's culture was like before it was infected, otherwise you will not be able to tell when you are fully healed. You may try to just take on a new culture, but if you do not know your roots, you cannot get to the root of the problem and cut out all the rot, then you will just produce more infected fruits and you will have only co-opted the new culture for the archons.

Many methods are quite universal; in fact I have found that what we consider "Shamanism," is really the oldest and most universal methods of self directed neuroplasticity. For example there is a common aspect to Shamanic work which is known as "soul retrieval" where the "Shaman" would go and get pieces of soul back from the spirit world, or back from some place which had been lost by their patient. The need for soul retrieval usually comes from some kind of traumatic incident in which a part of the soul is lost, like giving your "heart" to someone, a person can give part of their brain or soul to someone or something. When this happens to a person, they inadvertently section off a piece of the personality and creative potential to sustaining a small aspect of reality disconnected from the greater whole of that person. (Much like multiple personality disorder, or how an archon might feed off a specific circuit.) Soul retrieval would be (among other things) a Shaman linking up fractured elements of brains circuitry so that a person can live as one being again, live without having a divided consciousness and get the brain working together instead of against itself. This is accomplished through ritual and trance, as well as ecstasy, often with the use of entheogens and can help a person with a variety of unpleasant symptoms to be healed and at the very least be more integrated psychologically. (It is often thought to be a cause of sickness and probably has psychosomatic implications)

Alchemy is another example of magickal awareness effecting brain plasticity and it is especially interesting in that one of the main goals is to transmute lead into gold, which can be interpreted as being symbolic of taking unconscious or counterproductive circuitry (lead) and turning it into something useful. (gold is the best conductor of electricity or thought) The philosophers stone then could literally be a section of the brain that is not normally found in people who do not put the effort into developing their mind. Transmutation in some contexts is also very similar to soul retrieval, for example catharsis is the relieving of pent up emotional energy wired into your brain, so through ritual or art, experiences can be custom designed to create catharsis which would not be possible to achieve in everyday life. This takes the emotional charge of the neurosis and turns it into gold, the healing of the soul, retrieving the total perceptual energy, which was previously wasted on generating cognitive and emotional dissonance. Another way to think of it may be that catharsis allows us to unload our "emotional baggage" or reclaim or purify circuits which have been feeding archon neurosis. Since neuroplasticity is how our brain learns skills, once we are aware that sculpting our brains is itself a skill, we can improve that skill. So with Alchemy being one method, we can then see that the philosophers stone is the circuits of the brain we create, which allow us to increase self directed neuroplasticity and so increase awareness through our practice. We have fully formed the philosophers stone when the circuits which activate and control self directed neuroplasticity are so strong, they can redefine and change any circuits we wish, that is we can take any lead and turn it in to gold. Buddhists try to eliminate the ego which imposes forms on reality, memetic bias, so that they can experience the true reality, and while methods, symbolism and intentions are different in many ways, this is the same Alchemical idea of turning lead into gold. That is we take the neurotic ego circuitry and turn it into useful awareness, or we might say we tune the brain to pick up all of reality, adjusting the focus of the mind's eye through the brain to get rid of distortion. An Alchemist does not hate, dismiss or repress the lead within, an Alchemist sees its potential value and turns it into gold, in the same way you should not hate or condemn the circuits in your brain which need to be transmuted, but seek them out as new sources of potential gold or awareness.

We can see the principles of self directed neuroplasticity in literally all religions, for example in Sufism the goal is to use certain practices to focus the mind on nothing but "god" so that all worldly circuitry is directed towards enlightenment, this is much the same idea as yoga, uniting all circuits into one system. Some say the east wants to be free of the ego, the west wants to perfect it, luckily in order to do one you have to do the other and so really in the end all paths lead to the same place. The Alchemical solar king and the lunar queen (the left and right hemispheres of the brain) must get married in the chemical wedding of heaven and Earth and in various Alchemical art and philosophy they then team up in order to beat down the dragon or stand on top of it. This dragon is as I explained in the last chapter the reptilian portion of the brain which is responsible for aggression and the fight or flight mentality, it is also responsible for the dominating, territorial and hierarchal mentality and the urge to be alpha. When the chemical wedding happens and the dragon is defeated and integrated we can become the hermaphrodite or union of Hermes and Aphrodite with a caduceus wand, a whole being that uses all of its brain and is not dominated and unbalanced by being overly left or reptilian as is western culture. This is most clearly depicted in the "Rebis" diagram which is found within a skull shaped border as it depicts the brain, as symbolized by a two headed hermaphrodite standing on the dragon of ignorance, with a winged orb in the front probably representing the higher functions of the frontal lobe.

Since Qabbalah and Alchemy are among other things ways of categorizing and dealing with memes, as well as all other things found within reality, they are methods of sorting out the various information taken in by consciousness and so ways of uniting the circuits of the brain. Since they function according to neuroplasticity they are a means by which we can sort out and change the patterns of our mind so that we can consciously choose what to make our consciousness, rather than be unconsciously led by cultural conditioning. There are many other Occult and scientific methods for dealing with this, Shamanism and magick are technologies as well as art forms, but they are tools directed towards the inner world rather than the outer world. The more you can have a silent mind, the more you can experience awareness free of abstraction, free of division, free of affirmations about events that you have no real context of without your individual memetic classifications system. The abstractions are useful for control, but if you cannot access the state of awareness that exists beyond them, if you cannot just “be” the abstractions can trick you in to thinking they are the only reality. Any accurate map of how consciousness forms as a perceptual experience to the memory, must necessarily also map the process of brain plasticity when that map is implemented as a practice. As we learn about Occult systems like Qabbalah and Alchemy, we realize the process taking form through the tree of life, or the formula for the philosophers stone (which follow an identical order of astrological planets) not only provide the various labels of memetic genus, but also the methods and cultivation information needed for planting the right metallic seeds in our brain. As the Alchemists correctly understood in allegorical terms “metals” (aspects of consciousness associated with astrological planets) grow in the “Earth” (matter, in this case the brain) like plants, that the mineral kingdom is alive, and all metals are in the process of natural transmutation and humans can choose to aid this process. The formula for the philosopher’s stone, or the tree of life in Qabbalah, detail among other things, the process of manifestation from Chaos, or prima materia to physical matter, so since all exists in consciousness, this necessarily includes how consciousness goes from mystical oneness to bodily awareness or how a thought forms physically in the brain.

Qabbalah shows us that the higher up on the tree of life, or the more primary your level of consciousness, the more you have access to the roots of the tree, or what I have called your paradigms corner stone. Being closer to the roots, is like being able to have time to know where exactly to plant the seeds, providing it with greater specificity and definition which if done within ritual and in the pre-verbal states of awareness, are like sprouting the seeds in a kind of high grade hydroponic Alchemical lab. The lower part of the tree of life glyph is the top of the tree, corresponding to the moon which is like the tip of the tool we use to dig the hole to plant the seed in the Earth, or physical reality, so that it can be aimed to manifest or grow in just the right place, a suitable environment. It is highly likely that if psychedelics can provide awareness of the more primary states of consciousness, then new maps can always be developed. This will also produce advantages to deeply implanting ideas in a conscious way, rather than the relatively unconscious and unplanned manner currently imposed by the status quo.

While monotheists or atheists may find all my talk of spirits and gods unattractive, your brain circuits are made up of living cells and so personifications of circuits really do have a certain life of their own in which they can grow, feed, reproduce, weaken, die, plan and make conscious actions. As the essence of a definition of a symbol is like its spirit, animism that is seeing everything as having a spirit, is in many ways a much more accurate representation of the essence of an object than a word ever could be. Since each spirit is represented in a human brain, each circuit in the brain is in a sense human and by giving everything a face you can open in to dialogue with at least all of those circuits. In many ways your awareness of a meme or concept, or what a circuit represents is like a relationship, for example as your awareness of Sophia increases, your relationship with the circuit of wisdom becomes more in depth. Personifications are more accurate representations of concepts than words because a person can be both subjective and objective simultaneously, where as thinking of concepts in purely word based terms creates the illusion of them being purely objective realities and so in many ways, personifying things allows you to become aware of something, utilize it and interact with it to a fuller degree. Anthropomorphism is a natural reflection of neural plasticity, though I do believe in quite literal animism and gods our interaction with the spirit world is represented in the brain as a microcosm and so each circuit is alive and each relationship to things in nature is alive, so that through these living circuits the memes are in a very real sense alive whether you want to acknowledge it or not. Through interaction with this spirit world we come to understand and experience the essence of all things directly, rather than only through abstraction and this allows for a higher degree of functional capability and potentially more accurate descriptions and models to work with, which can be cultivated consciously in ever increasing perfectibility.

A familiar spirit, a demon or angel, a saint or Buddha, all kinds of pantheons etc are different sectors of the mind which allow for the structuring of the brain according to the society of brain circuitry you cultivate within your head. By organizing the mind in this way the brain also becomes organized and potentially capable of functioning in a much better way, because by specifying sectors you can practice or exercise their circuits in a more systematic and structured way, one that is more balanced, efficient and progressive. When monotheism started to occur, brains grew themselves in different ways, as Christians lost the meaning of religion their brains (and all literalist monotheists) lost the organization and balance created by pantheons. Although some may have been OK in this respect if they worked with saints or with angels as in the Kabbalah, in general, the ego took over in new ways that allowed it an unchecked supremacy over the whole of the brain. This process was reinforced by the more hierarchical and authoritarian structure of their religions, (even with angels) as opposed to most Pagan pantheons, the Abrahamic traditions also promote the idea that we are individuals who are separate from everything else in nature. If the demiurge is the ego who falsely believes itself the king of the universe, then we can use ritual as a kind of direct action to decentralize the authority of the ego in to pantheons and so make the mind more balanced, open, objective and functional.

If brain circuits are alive, they feed on our awareness and definitions of them, the elaborations and attention and emotional investment we place in them. If you create divisions in your mind that are alive then you can interact with them, if you create them so they are in harmony with your will then you can work with them, if you give them specific jobs then you can learn to deal with specific parts of your brain and mind. So by creating maps of the mind or “psychocosms,” you can map parts of what the brain will become and this means that if you invest these circuits with the power to control specific parts of perception, then you can develop that function to can give you control of your perception. If you can control your perception, you can become more objective and also learn to better interact with all that you perceive and you can stop being controlled by seemingly external factors. Then you can learn to activate or banish aspects of consciousness at any given time, working so that you can better achieve your will or elicit whatever emotions or states of mind you want, according to whatever you are trying to achieve at that moment, not to mention you will have a better understanding of how you fit into the global society.

You must take care so as to not become the slave of your circuits, that you do not become a person with multiple personality disorder and you do this by establishing your true self as one with Chaos and by giving your familiars and entities power, only within ritual contexts when they are called up. So by forming societies of brain circuitry consciously, you will uproot and overpower unconscious archons, which were controlling you behind the scenes in their neurological conspiracy. By giving the circuits names you can activate certain colonies of brain circuitry cells and so through Occult practice, you can wire them so that they are working together in a harmonious and orderly way. The mind which does not consciously direct neuroplasticity, is one that divides the brain so that it competes against itself as factions, factions of warring and scheming archon circuits caught in cognitive dissonance, constantly trying to steal awareness from each other and from you. Instead you can create a brain that is holistic and working towards harmony, efficiency and the maximization of pleasurable emotions, as well as ever increasing awareness and functionality.

By naming the forces of the unconscious we can take control over it, while those who wish to remain unconscious, those who do not pursue awareness will be made slaves by their ignorance. If you do not name and show your intentions towards your various aspects of psyche, then you consent to be subject to those de facto unnamed forces through your consent to ignore them. This is just like our tacit consent to be ruled by the government and as I said, it is true that paying attention to a circuit strengthens it, just as voting and participating in the system strengthens it. However, we have to face these circuits or archons which are holding us back, we have to learn what they are before we can change them and then we can focus on what we truly want. Only when we name or symbolize a circuit can we connect it to the circuits of the philosopher's stone that can transmute it, thus we can single it out and connect it to the circuits in our brain which changes other circuits. This allows us to use ritual to enact our will and so any map of consciousness or the subconscious can potentially give us greater control, the more detailed the map, the more we can fine tune our minds. When our consciousness integrates its unconscious and all opposites unite in conjunction, we become as a sun with no shadow, our essence revealed and with that, those with rank and high office become powerless at manipulating the logic and the word of our sovereign being, which cannot help but shed light on all ignorance.

Going a step further we can personify a circuit as a familiar to give it a new level of artificial intelligence and autonomy within the consensus reality. When a meme is personified in the brain, then the circuit for that meme is expected to act with its own autonomy (according to whatever the person personifying it, believes it is capable of) and so it becomes capable of doing things which the ego, the personification of a human identity is not necessarily capable of. Not only this, due to the brain's inclination to learn from other humans, faces activate "mirror neurons" which can allow the brain to imitate and learn quicker from watching humans, or anything with a human form. Circuits which exist unconsciously can be given a face, can grow the circuitry necessary for it to communicate and once this is accomplished it can be worked with ritually to allow the brain to create much more fruitful internal dialogues and so create a reality which is more in line with the will.

If archons are unconscious circuits that grow by themselves for themselves, then familiars and sigils we use repeatedly are circuits that we can custom design for any purpose we want and which we can use to literally shape and mould our brains. By creating a familiar that personifies our desire to become conscious, or by using specific symbolism such as is found within astrology and other systems, we can pin point specific areas of consciousness to develop, which eventually will be reflected within the physical brain. Personal demons, or unwanted circuits could be taken out by personifying them, for example creating a well defined image of a "demon" for a kind of prejudice or vice and then using a familiar to banish or destroy them. (Or transmute their energy in to something else) So then a person could create a familiar designed to face and banish personified personal demons or erase unwanted circuitry, this could be symbolized in a number of ways and could also be used for works of transmutation. So as with the Sufi method this would unify and stream line circuits for greater will, or use the will to root out and get rid of unwanted circuits like archons.

In order to break bad habits, or overcome some aspect of your consciousness, first you must strengthen the familiar that will be helping you and of course the circuits used for banishing, after all if these are not powerful enough, they will not be able to take on the "demon" or archon circuits in your brain. Then you must figure out what it is you want to change in specific terms, you need to identify aspects of your consciousness which are the result of archons or which impede you from achieving your true will. (Your familiar can help you with this by evoking it in trance states and meditating on the root of your problems.) Then you must come up with a way to symbolize or personify that which you wish to change, perhaps utilizing some predetermined symbolic language to create a "demon." (Buddhism and the Occult have plenty of demons you can use or you can make up your needs) Once you have symbolized the circuits you wish to remove, (or transmute) you must banish it ritually, or enact a ritual to turn the circuit in to something else, perhaps by using a familiar to help you, (Dumeego is pretty ideal for this process and is quite capable of kicking demon ass, or turning them in to new things) or if you don't want to make a familiar you can just create a new sigil of your intention for the circuit to change. Another method which could be implemented in the ritual or used alone would be to nullify or destroy the demon or circuit by using an energy which is the opposite of the demon. (For example water for fire or air for Earth etc.)

The more effort you put in to overcoming a demon circuit, the more successful you will be, some are more entrenched in your brain than others and it may take several rituals to get rid of some of them, after all your neuroplasticity doesn't happen overnight. While the methods I have outlined are workable by themselves, once you are practised at doing ritual work you could also combine them for maximum effect, so for example you could call upon a familiar, state your intentions to the familiar, then evoke the demon and blast it with energy which is the opposite to its nature, then have your familiar eat it, or destroy it. By having your familiar eat the demon it could transmute it into poo fertilizer for your other circuits, which you then reabsorb in to yourself, perhaps visualizing the familiar taking a dump on to a physical food product like a cookie, which has a sigil on it representing what you want to turn the demon circuit into.

A magician could also create another familiar to actively rewire the brain in specific ways, imprinting new circuits so that by strengthening the circuit of this familiar the brain can be rewired ritually. This familiar could be used for planting new seeds and filling the vacuum of the banished circuits with what would generally be its opposite, or maybe you don't feel the need to face any demons and just want to focus on planting a new circuit in your brain. Such workings might start by creating a familiar, maybe a farmer or gardener, who you will then provide with sigil seeds according to your will. Diyo is very appropriate as you are engaging in DIY neuroplasticity, any new skill is a budding circuit in your brain and any intention to become something is a matter of DIY personality and paradigm creation. (Though you may want to work with a variety of divinities and spirits according to your intentions.) First you would strengthen the familiar, empowering it ritually with visualizations and energy and then after a few weeks of working with it, making it stronger you could provide it with a sigil of your intention for your consciousness. You would evoke the familiar, then together you would empower the sigil evoking whatever energies are related to the symbolism you have chosen and it would be able to help you implant circuits in your brain. You have now planted a sigil seed, though depending on what it is, you must still nurture it, help it to grow, which may take a variety of ritual sessions. As you plant more sigil seeds you will want to create a book of shadows, or grimoire of sigils you have implanted, then in your daily life if you want to activate the circuit you would simply visualize the sigil and perhaps say a mantra connected with it. While in some cases one ritual might be enough, both of these familiar spirits would be used in ritual repeatedly to help lay the ground plan which the brain would grow around, thus creating a foundation for your magical awareness. You should not be discouraged if a “demon” tries to come back, depending on how powerful the circuit is, how deep your level of gnosis is and how powerful your familiars are, it could take some practice, but I have already found that I can drastically change my personality and awareness.

Invocation of spirits or gods and goddesses etc can among other things act as a means of reinforcing aspects of identity circuits, so as to strengthen the personality in specific ways either permanently or before performing a specific task. Evocation would be a means of reinforcing aspects of external perceptions or reinforcing with energy the circuits which are capable of communicating, opening up subconscious portions of the mind or effecting change in the exterior world. By creating a familiar or as Socrates put it a “daemon” for the sub conscious, (or regions of reality thought to be external) you create a program or personification of a brain circuit capable of relaying information stored in the sub conscious to your conscious cognitive faculties. You can then potentially learn to access all kinds of information and memories stored within your brain, but which you don't normally have access to. This daemon could bypass psychic filters and archons which limit your perception and fill you with egotistical bias as well as personal limitations and fears that you place on yourself. This is the true meaning of the word “genius” which even today technically refers to a “tutelary spirit” (same root as “genie”) and it is the circuits of the brain which have been singled out, so that they can be specifically strengthened to heighten intelligence and awareness in general. In ceremonial magick this is perhaps most clearly exemplified in the Abramelin working to gain “knowledge and conversation of the holy guardian angel” which is accessed after six months of daily ritual. (or even eighteen months in the German texts) Once contact is made, the magician goes on to take control of the demons and familiars which will provide all kinds of fantastical powers.

There are a plethora of symbol systems to make your familiars, though for beginners one good method could be to create familiars corresponding to the four elements each of which provide a variety of functions related to brain plasticity. You could also easily integrate these elemental functions through correspondences to a variety of other things; it’s all a matter of taste. Each element could be used for strengthening circuits related to those elements, for example you could make an air familiar which could be for all mental things, learning, memory, the logos, worldly information processing and articulation and rationality. Then you could make an Earth familiar for physical body circuits, for skills that take place within the physical world, according to whatever you may be interested in, as well as maintaining health and all things pertaining to the body, it could also be used for general purpose manifestation of physical things. Whatever symbol system you use, you will be able to nurture or fertilize your sigil seeds according to their symbolic associations with the appropriate energies, so that over time they become strengthened or even augmented according to your will.

So from a perspective of neuroplasticity we could say the gods are like the most fundamental aspects of a default human consciousness, working together to create perception and the mind in all its most primary facets. The Sidhe or Fae are like circuits dealing with nature and physical consciousness and are also basically universally common circuits, they are how we interact with the world as they represent the spirits of things within it. They can also play plenty of tricks on the mind and are very ambiguous morally, they have a variety of their own motives are complicated according to the individual entity. In the garden metaphor, the gods would be like the trees, while the Fae are like the herbs and shrubs, some are more like weeds, while some give fruit and berries or are entheogenic. Familiars and sigils in this garden are like the seeds you plant in the permaculture ecosystem and they can take a huge variety of forms, but if we are to have a fully functional ecosystem we must learn to figure out which circuits work together best. For example a dandelion is an introduced species to North America, many consider it a weed, but it has medicinal value and is a food source, you can even make wine from it and it can coexist in this ecosystem without destroying everything and so wildness can be cultivated and does not necessarily make something a weed. At the same time we must be careful of those GMO archons which seek to take over our brains, and by avoiding the use of certain symbols prevalent in our culture which are most contaminated, (Such as money) we can go a long way to avoid contamination and even create a permaculture garden capable of repelling invasive seeds and pollen.

You can organize these circuits in various ways so that the circuits or sigil seeds can strengthen and reinforce each other according to their nature, grouping them so that they can combine their energies through their common symbolic links as symbiotes in the energetic ecosystem that is your brain. Once you have a variety of sigil seeds which have been strengthened, (like an alphabet of desire, or the symbols which you will be using to create new sigils) then you could combine them in new ways to create new, more elaborate sigils so that the circuits are grafted together, or cross bred to create a new sigil seeds for some new intention. It is pretty unlimited how you could do this, there are plenty of symbol systems which you could use or create and as time goes on, now that we have much greater anatomical knowledge about this process, we will all improve our methods.

To give an example, those interested in learning Alchemy could do research and come up with a system so that first you might strengthen the circuits for the elements, which could pertain to the realm in which your will can manifest, or four fields for your future crops to grow in. Then you would plant the seeds for the planets which could correspond to the subject of your intention, the various genus of plants, meaning the energies or types of sigils you would plant in the fields. This would be the various types of consciousness you want to create, or the types of variables you want to effect, so that all the planets are potentially within each of the elements, so that you could have multiples of all the various planets represented. Then separated from those four basic gardens you would strengthen circuits which correspond to Alchemical processes (IE distillation and sublimation etc) and could be interpreted as the predicate of your intention, the various ways you can manipulate or transform the planetary energies according to will. The “processes” work like farm equipment and supplies and are often associated with the zodiac, but since there are more than 12 and since you may want to associate the zodiac with other things, you can find traditional symbols or make your own for use in rituals.

For those new to the Occult this may all sound complicated and not worth the effort, but once you have all these variables imprinted and planted in your mind, you can make Alchemical formulas which can be enacted as rituals. By evoking the variables according to the formula you would be able to work on the planetary energies using the symbols of the Alchemical processes to enact your will, working so that it manifests in one of the elemental realms. You may wish to just evoke an Alchemical process like you would the zodiac, or a planet or you could associate each Alchemical process with a ritual action which you devise, which you perform on the sigil of the circuit or intention, you could also incorporate the sigil of the process in to the new sigil seed you wish to plant. For example if it was your intention to find love you would plant a seed of Venus in the field of Earth and you might use the process of “congelation” to make it manifest physically. If you wanted to improve your own abilities to love, say to get more confidence you could plant a Venus sigil in the field of water, which is then augmented using one of the processes such as “fermentation” to give the circuit time to grow, then use the process of “conjunction” to add the energies of mars, thus symbolizing your confidence, will power and sexual energy. This is of course just a basic example to give you some idea of the possibilities, you may find different meanings to the Alchemical processes which are more suitable to your outlook, there is no orthodoxy, just study what the various processes are physically and see what makes sense to you. It is pretty unlimited how you could combine the variables to make various formulas, if you wanted to get better at talking to potential lovers you could do this simply, or you could do it in a more defined and detailed manner. So you might “distill” the “fire” of “Venus” and then use “dissolution” on Mercury to “separate” its water and then unite the two through “conjunction” and through “fixation” create the final form of a sigil which will be planted in to the field of “air.” This jargon may be totally over your head and meaningless to you, but with further research in to the Occult you will surely be able to come up with a symbolic vocabulary which allows you to express your will to utilize neuroplasticity and manifest things metaphysically. Qabbalah is also definitely helpful for Alchemists as it uses much of the same variables and the more things you can do with a variable, the more you can empower the circuit in your brain through different methods. This also allows a circuit to branch out in various symbolic associations, so that you can be more specific in your intentions.

Of course you have to be really careful about messing around with the wiring in your brain, you may find out certain aspects of consciousness may be unpleasant but still provide very important functions that you need but didn't understand. For this reason before you remove anything you should probably start by planting Anarchist seeds and cultivating greater self awareness in general, perhaps working with a divinity like those found in the Anarchist pantheon, Sophia or a familiar that you create to help facilitate this. You will definitely want to do a divination before any self programming rituals so as to limit and unseen effects, that is something like the tarot can be used to gain a deeper understanding of a circuit and how it is connected to other things and what will happen if you attempt to modify it. These are just some basic ideas and you may wish to have multiple familiars that are more specialized (perhaps one for each Alchemical process) rather than trying to cover all the elemental or planetary associations with only one familiar, you could have familiars which do only one specific job, thus allowing it to specialize and become incredibly good at its particular job. It is also very important that before you even make a familiar that you start out by building up the circuits that build confidence about magick and ritual itself. This is especially true of your banishing ritual, which by setting as the root of your ritual work, you can act to undo any circuits you lay down afterwards, even those related to familiar spirits you might think you want for the long term. You could potentially make things worse, so before you go around summoning up your own personal demons, you definitely want to be confident that your banishing circuits can do the job!

As the alchemical processes often take one state of matter like liquid and transform it in to another state of matter like gas, (as in distillation) given the states of matter have elemental designations, we can potentially manipulate different aspects of the brain circuits by assigning them elemental designations. The elemental variables still each have their own “fields” and all the rest of the designations, but as with the more alchemical operations, you may wish to assign intentions to the processes with this symbolism in mind. So we could say the physical circuit in your brain corresponds to Earth, the emotional charge associated with that circuit is water, the name and symbolism used to identify a circuit is the air, while your intention for that circuit is fire. While there is a lot of ways this could play out, you can thus use the processes for self directed neuroplasticity and change your brain quite literally. Starting with gas and turning it to a solid form would be creating a circuit for a symbol/word as with learning something, putting something to memory. Turning gas to liquid would be examining your feelings towards a symbol and it's connotations, turning a gas to fire is using a symbol to focus your magickal will or using logic to achieve your will. Turning a solid to gas is naming preexisting circuits and thus associating it with a symbol, turning a solid to liquid is figuring out the emotional charge a circuit has, applying fire to a solid might be practising a skill repeatedly or otherwise activating a circuit in an appropriate way until it conforms to your will physically. Turning liquid to gas is naming and identifying complex or subtle emotions, this can have any name or symbol thus allowing you to work with it magickally, turning a liquid solid is turning an emotion in to a circuit, IE anchoring an emotion to a circuit so you can evoke it on command. Applying fire to liquid is re-contextualizing an emotion according to will, looking on the bright side and facing fears and mastering yourself so that you do not “lust after results” and so can become detached as is necessary for magick. Turning plasma/fire to a solid would be creating any other kind of circuit according to will, for example making a circuit for a familiar spirit or some predetermined sigil, turning fire to liquid is becoming emotionally invested in something, it is also the process by which we become emotionally stronger so that we might achieve our true will. Turning fire to air is rationalizing your will, it is writing your formulas and stating your intentions, it is putting your true will in to words. Now you will notice that you do much of this every day, but neuroplasticity is occurring every day and so recognizing these processes will help you to become more conscious of how to sculpt your brain. Creating some basic ritual meditation for each process can also help you to practice them more consciously, so that you can strengthen the circuits which allow you to do these things better. For example practising even these simple processes will help you to learn concentration, they will also help to make you more self aware in general. As it is ultimately endlessly definable and improvable, even I haven't fully worked all this out yet, so you may just want to keep the processes vague to use in different situations.

No matter how advanced you become it is important to remember you do not need familiars or magickal tools in order to work magick, these can be very helpful and they can allow you to do certain aspects of magick that would otherwise be much more difficult, but in the beginning simple personal rituals which are empowered by you are the place to start. Not only are you capable of working magick without anything external, in the beginning it is actually better that you do not have any magical tools or familiars or even gods, not only because it is needlessly complicated for a beginner (and getting all the tools or props can be quite a setback) but it is important that you wire your brain to be metaphysically independent and self reliant. You should wire yourself so that your tools and familiars and sigils are empowered magickally through you and not so that you are empowered through them and this way you are always in control and do not become the slaves of some spirit or material circumstance. Although the familiar spirits can be used to rewire your brain it is important that you lay a firm foundation before that so that you know you are capable of practising magick all by yourself.

Not to mention if you have no faith or circuitry in your ability to work magick in the first place, then you cannot successfully consecrate tools, or create familiars or call upon gods to help you rewire your brain and face your archons and limiting beliefs. Once you have wired yourself to be capable of working magick with just yourself, (though using sigils is OK, if you have no metaphysical experience, you should practice controlling your everyday thoughts) then you can use that foundation and start to go on to the more advanced workings without becoming dependent on external things. It is crucial that you are always aware that the source of magickal energy is yourself, more specifically the divine aspect or spark within yourself that is united with all divine energy. This is the part of you that empowers or feeds all tools and spirit helpers which are simply methods of working with that divine spark of Chaos. (Chaos is like the soil we plant the seeds in and it is pure consciousness.)

One incredibly important factor is to have a whole lot of detailed meaning for any given symbol, familiar or intention so that you can use the same circuits in different ways for different intentions and so cultivate more areas of your brain. It is also crucial to have rituals that have a lot of emotional motivation behind them, as well as always challenging yourself to do your rituals better, with more concentration and move vivid visualization etc and later on perhaps adding more detail and symbolism. Utilizing some basic bodily expression as can be found in Hatha yoga, sex magic positions (which can certainly add emotional motivation) and various Ceremonial magick postures at key parts of the ritual in concert with key phrases (magick word mantras) and visualizations, your rituals get you using many different parts of your brain. This spreads the circuitry more completely so that you become more conditioned to accept ritual programming and as they are activated in so many ways, they are more a part of your awareness and so become stronger. Different states of mind could be created as circuits which are repeatedly strengthened until they can be achieved easily. Through repetitive practice in say a specific planetary invocation, (or whatever psychocosm you are using) the brain circuitry could be cultivated to reinforce the state of mind so that it can deepen and become more distinct. Eventually when you have strengthened your mind enough, these methods will provide access to the collective mind, the invisible college, godhead, the heavens themselves or whatever astral temples you can imagine and work out repeatedly.

As I have mentioned before, energies can be symbolized through the five senses, with fire or vision relating to colour, air or smell to incenses, Earth to bodily positions or crystals and metals for touch, water or taste could be herbal teas, perhaps with some entheogens in it and spirit or sound relates to musical notes or mantras. (The planets and zodiac all have plenty of correspondences within these five categories as well) The key is to use the same meaning for the same symbols repeatedly and over time, so that the brain can rewire itself accordingly, the more clearly defined the perception and mindset, the easier it will be to lay down a distinct circuit. When all these props are used together, this creates a distinct sensory perception for the brain to which it attaches meaningful mindsets, ones that are specific to the meaning of the symbols in the ritual. Thus we can activate specific brain circuits to come into play at that time and not at others, creating the required mindset or perception and even changing brainwaves and brain structure.

Through building up comprehensive lists of symbolic correspondences you can associate each letter in your alphabet of desire with a variety of specific ritual intentions and stimulus to create a kind of consciously created synesthesia. This links concepts and ideas and allows the brain to express its will using a much bigger variety of circuits than if you were to just say an affirmation over and over again. This linking of senses and brain circuits can trigger various mindsets or altered states capable of increasing the capabilities of consciousness, allowing it to perceive aspects of the unconscious, as well as the outside world, and also to heal the body psychosomatically. (At the very least) Some synesthetes see colours when they hear a sound, so by changing the tones they hear they can change the colours they see, in the same way by changing or charging a sigil, angel, demon or god ritually, a magician can change their mindset permanently if they wish, or not according to the nature of the intention. This linking of associations is like a kind of fractal memetics, the forms change but the underlying structure or pattern is self similar, that is the various props always resemble each other in some manner. Whether visually or not, some commonality is noticed which allows for the categorization of symbols and this allows a magician to manipulate not only the symbol, but all that is associated with it. Since it's all part of the same fractal pattern the psycho-spiritual "energy" produced by a prop resonates with all the circuits that are connected to it as connotations. While the main purpose of magick is to create higher awareness in the magician, it is not necessarily all psychological and by changing the magician, (the microcosm) the outside world (macrocosm) can change by means of some kind of unknown energy. This metaphysical energy manifests through the fractal nature of reality to the outside world because it is all part of the same universal reality. Occult correspondences as through sympathetic magick train the brain to think analogically and metaphorically, exercising the right brain, yet requiring intellectual study of Occult books and incorporating magickal alphabets, thus utilizing the left brain. So as the symbols are the same as letters used to read words now pregnant with meaning, both hemispheres become linked through the circuitry. So it is, by combining different corresponding symbols which use different sensory organs, ritual allows the brain to associate different circuits together, creating a more deeply imbedded and meaningful circuit. This produces a perception that is clearly distinct from every day stimulus and so a more coherent and specific state of mind which the brain recognizes as having special and particular meaning.

Correspondences, metaphors and connotations link various circuits together through their associations, which can be used to create a deeper awareness and context of the symbols of awareness. Symbolic links between things, create neurological links between things which allow for greater strength, greater depth of understanding and ritual applications to create altered states or execute the will in some way, but also allow for greater communication with the unconscious.

The doctrine of signatures, or the concept of like attracts like is a reflection of fractal awareness, it is the idea that self similarity between things like plants and human anatomy have healing powers, or that analogical correspondences have a significant connection for the practice of magick. (Not unlike Quantum entanglement) Because the brain grows its connections like plants, the ritualistic cultivation, harvest and application of them, can act as a very effective means of cultivating and controlling specific forms of consciousness associated with even non psychoactive plants. You may not believe the objects of natural magick have any metaphysical powers, but given the Occult correspondences do share characteristics with other things, your brain will naturally want to link the circuits pertaining to these objects, your subconscious will naturally associate these qualities and so the correspondences are the map of the default circuit pathways.

The neurological connections of say the correspondences of astrological symbolism associated with the plant turns a garden in to an altar of your mind and through your newly acquired self similarity with it, the mind of all nature. Herbs like, mugwort, vervain, peppermint, sage and many others can become associated with months of intention about symbolic connotations that can then be harvested and directed to specific ends, the more meaning associated, the more meaningful the possibilities. All plants can to some degree become entheogenic, though some clearly have different uses within the possible applications of this process, from growing your own food, to your own healing herbs, you can create whatever you want if you sincerely put the effort in to it. Herbs eaten even if they have no psychoactive properties could be used to create altered states of consciousness through a symbolic placebo type effect. This is achieved by hard wiring it along with all the other ritual symbolism so that the herb will help to create distinctive stimulus and chemical triggers for states of mind. This creates a psychosomatic circuit capable of provoking the energies or mindsets required, activating more specific circuits, especially if the herb has some real but very mild (or strong) psychoactivity such as damiana. Herbs could be placed in water, such as in a cauldron or cup and used ritually in this way for the taste symbolism, but also training your stomach reactions to help better define your water circuitry. You may think that a psychosomatic effect will not occur if you know that you are intending to create a psychosomatic effect, but this is only because you have a circuit in your brain which tells you this.

Chaos magick may not use herbs, or it may, but there is a strong emphasis in practising the skill of being able to change and update your beliefs and truly have gnosis that whatever prop you use will work... and so it does.

Since each variable in your alphabet of desire can have a phonetic meaning or sound attached to it, by combining all the variables into a word or formula you can create a mantra which unifies the variables in the same way that spirit unifies the elements. Mantras or repeatedly used magick words which only have spiritual associations for you, can be used to lock down specific concepts to the circuits as well as link the various non verbal symbols to provoke very specific but diverse states of mind. The more a mantra is repeated, such as a divinity's name, or an affirmation of enlightenment, the more you will build that particular consciousness into your mind, this is especially true when combined with other ritual elements. These mantras could be said in specific tones as well, perhaps even vibrating the body in specific ways as in the Qabalah, all the while other sensory symbolism is surrounding you, so that the words of your intention or "spell" direct the other various energies, and thus it is the spirit of the ritual and determines its character or quintessence.

By associating your ritual with specific symbols, your metaphysical circuitry will develop around those symbols, thus allowing you to turn off your metaphysical and psychic powers when you do not want them on. This works so that your brain can specify which thoughts to manifest and which are just mundane and not metaphysically important. If you have very detailed symbolism in your rituals it can help you to get deeper into trance, but if you need to do magick quickly or all of a sudden it is useful to have a quick way to activate your magickal mindset. For example a specific hand gesture to turn it on, followed by a very quick visualization of a coloured energy ball which is symbolic of the intent, which is then released. (Perhaps a short activation phrase is also be thought or spoken as I have mentioned before) Having a clear delineation between times for magick and times for normal life becomes more important once you start working with familiars or spirits so as to avoid them intruding on your life at inappropriate times. This also helps to keep yourself from stressing about always having positive thoughts every moment of the day, the stress being something which can of course manifest things you do not want. All this combines to create the neurological circuitry which is "the magickal self" and it is not uncommon for magicians to take on a magickal name and use clothing or robes which they only use in rituals. (especially group rituals) This further differentiates for the mind that ritual life is different from mundane life, that it is the magical self which is capable of doing ritual magick more than the Earthly ego. These are all ways of turning your magickal abilities on and off, as well as providing a barrier of protection from a hostile culture which at best mocks ritual magick and people who use these forms of active meditation and which at its worst burns people alive, throws them in prison or the psychiatric ward. For these reasons (and to help avoid familiars taking over your personality) it helps to have this magical self, however there is nothing wrong with trying to bring aspects of magickal awareness into your everyday life so that you can grow spiritually and integrate that into your life. The key is that care must be taken to make sure circuits are not activated in an unconscious or haphazard way and that your brain is not taken over by familiars that become Archons. The creation of the magical self circuits also aid in attaining trance states in that all the symbolism combines to create a distinct persona and mindset, the more time you spend in an altered state the more it becomes your everyday personality and so it can be useful to have this clear distinction from mundane worldly circuitry.

The different "chakras" of Yoga, or the different "sephiroth" of Qabalah would be different groups of circuits according to their nature, for example all of the familiars and sigils of one type relating to the "sephirah" or category of "Tiphereth" or the astrological sun. Each category has numerous symbols to which it corresponds and which can be used to enter that state or call on or direct that energy. This ordering of the mind helps to keep you from confusing which symbols have which meaning, grouping different corresponding ritual props and symbols to different kinds of spirits and trance states which can all be used together. Numerology, gematria or isopsephy can be used to create numerical identities for different concepts, allowing for mathematical ordering of the mind according to very specific and consistent principles. Since in Greek or Hebrew the letters are also numbers, each word has a number (puns are also used in this way) and so different words which add up to the same number are thought to be connected and your subconscious would naturally do this if your letters are also numbers. Each number does have a circuit, so each word that shares the same number will be connected to this circuit and branch off of this section of your brain. The subconscious mind has been shown to be very good at math as well as forming anagrams and other practices found in the “literal Kabbalah” and so practising this consciously helps to unite a variety of the latent powers of the mind to the conscious will. This allows you to organize your circuits into groups, but maintaining your ability to single out the specific circuits in each category, having as many sub sections, or sub circuits as you care to make for it. In order to activate a circuit you can use its name, but if you want to activate a whole group of circuits you can use a number or for even larger groups a chakra, or sephirah, so that you can use these identification techniques with ritual to change or use these circuits according to your intention.

You could have multiple familiars or sigils for each category and so it could be necessary to have a way to organize them but keep them distinct, creating basic descriptions for them according to category, as well as their own personal description or programming. So then a magician could have different kinds of spirits, sigils or astral temples for the different kinds of altered states you enter into beforehand. This helps your circuits to draw on more energy in your brain, to be more deeply impressed in to the brain and to be more resistant to any circuits or memes that might try to overtake it. This allows various circuits to team up and work together more harmoniously by having more associations, as well as screen out any cognitive dissonance, thus helping to create a permaculture type ecosystem in the brain. This also allows a person to interpret teachings and see allusions and connotations which otherwise would be missed, so by having a variety of sometimes seemingly unconnected concepts linked to one number, that number is associated with a wide variety of things which act as different facets of a much deeper truth which cannot normally be expressed.

Words with a numerical value can also be used in ritual and chosen with precise implications according to the intention so as to be in “resonance” with the other ritual correspondences you have set up. This could be thought of as the different drives on a computer which may have all kinds of different folders or programs, which in ritual terms would be sigils or familiars. Each familiar could have a number of files within it, or sigils or ritual props which it recognizes as its functions, or requests from you which are activated in ritual sequentially after the drive has been accessed and the program launched. So you would first do a banishing which would be like emptying your computer mind's recycle bin, or closing unwanted programs, as well as setting up the temple, or loading the “magickal self” program. Then a magician would enter the altered state or category or “sephirah,” perhaps using some entheogen, followed by some ritual to affirm that specific altered state and then you would activate the program by evoking the familiar, then request it do something. Traditionally perhaps you might make an offering of a symbolic energy form which acts as “sacrifice” according to specific predetermined agreements or functions, something which you have programmed it to understand as your method of requesting things from it. For example myrrh incense to create spiritual awareness, or lighting a green candle to help you find love, you could also just show it a sigil of your will which it can identify, keeping and repeating the same symbols of your requests so that the circuit becomes more hardwired to recognize that ritual. The more incense or whatever you “sacrifice” or use to interact with the familiar, the more you can feed it or strengthen it, thus allowing it to fulfil your intentions.

This layering of information and the emotional drive, also creates a better defined circuit in the brain, one that stays in the memory better than just a symbol with not much in-formation attached to it, or one which is not repeatedly used such as in constantly improvised magick rituals. The more we use the sigils or familiars or call upon the gods, the more ingrained and useful the circuitry will be, but this principle also applies to magical “weapons” like the, wand, cup, pentacle, and dagger, and other magical props like robes and colour coded candles etc. The more you use something in ritual the more you will condition your mind to have faith in its power and the more your subconscious will equate it with that power and the stronger the physical circuits will be in your brain, like post hypnotic suggestion you can then use the ritual item to evoke the mindsets needed for serious magickal work. While props are not crucial (especially in the beginning) they can be very helpful once you know what you are doing, they can be used to further direct your mind in how you wish to wire your brain. By performing a consecration ritual of your ritual tools or sigils, you set the ground for how the circuit will be laid out, you “anchor” (as in neurolinguistic programming) it with meaning and form the magical link between the symbol or tool and your intention. The consecration ritual is itself a circuit programmed to associate symbols or tools with a newly created circuit which is accessed and powered by further specific rituals. In this way a tool such as a fire wand or an air dagger will have specific meanings and purposes that will become more powerful to the brain the more they are used. By moving the wand in a specific way with specific visualizations your brain has the context for a specific intention, or a specific mindset that you can invoke or evoke to use as a foundation in order to further define of your intention. By symbolizing your paradigm on your altar and or a magick circle, that is having it depicted outright as with my octagram, perhaps incorporating various idols, or at least having your magickal tools and props on there, as the consecrated props represent circuits in your brain, by manipulating the props you manipulate specific parts of your brain. If you can manage that, then your altar and or the magick circle will become a psychological control panel with different settings, one that allows you to manipulate your mind and brain and metaphysical energy consciously.

The nervous system and the brain could be interpreted as the world tree of various cultures, or the tree of life, so that if you eat its fruit you gain immortality. Buddha sat under the Bodhi tree, the Hindu version of it is the banyan tree, while for the Zoroastrians it was the Gaokerena Tree which produced Haoma, but it is an idea found in many cultures around the world. The Greek gods eat the immortality giving apples which grow in the garden of the Hesperides, guarded by a dragon, that is the gods eat the energies of the nervous system, guarded by the id, or reptilian brain. (All this is found in the garden where Atlas holds up the heavens, or realm of the stars, the astral worlds.) After writing my garden metaphor, to my surprise this is perhaps most literally illustrated in Plato's Timaeus, in which the skull is a stone fence round the “plough-land” which is specifically identified as the brain and in which is sown celestial seeds of the divine by a benevolent version of the demiurge. (Hephaestus) Plato explains that this seed grows in to the nervous system and is nurtured by the “water” of words, (the logos) but also of desire, too much “water” makes one go mad and a person becomes a like a tree with too much fruit on it, trapped in cycles of pain and pleasure. The Zohar too speaks of “golden apple trees” in the cranium, watered by a special “dew” (Dew is also important in Alchemy and along with certain yoga symbols it could relate to endogenous DMT) and goes in to detail about the brain of Macroprosopus (the universal being) and in Qabbalah the tree of life is explicitly associated with the brain and nervous system. The Occult shows us that through astral projection, you can you wire yourself to traverse the worlds and then you can climb Yggdrasil, you can drink from the well of Mimir which waters the roots, (on which the serpent Nidhogg gnaws) or traverse the fractal tree that unites all dimensions to the heavens. In Hinduism we can see a similar idea in that of the “bija,” a word which means “seed,” which to my knowledge is not explicitly related to the brain, but is used as a symbol of how words and actions grow or are imprinted into our “citta” or “mind stuff” to create habits. The bija has many implications for Hindu philosophies, too much to go in to here but I will say that it sheds much like on neuroplasticity and can be compared to the Hindu concept of the “vasana” and can also be compared to “sanskaras” though it is not necessarily detrimental.

Like Qabbalah, the bija also relates to how certain sounds or word roots grow in to the whole tree of language, thus this mantra yoga exemplifies the fractal nature of language. As music shows us, specific tones are emotionally evocative and so as with Qabbalah, each letter not only makes a sound, but has a specific tone, those who know how tones and syllables effect the mind can wire the brain according to such mantras, or “voces magicae.” The correspondences of natural magic which Qabbalists attach to specific letters are things which have qualities that effect the mind in same way that the tone and sound associated with a letter effect the mind and brain. Each sound a letter makes requires a certain amount of breath and movement of the mouth and tongue and so by having the right sequence of letters and especially vowels, a person can induce a trance state by saying the right things in the right meter and tones.

Those who know all the noises the mouth and tongue can make, know the limitations of verbal and written language and so have insight in to the universal language, or universal grammar. As language is fractal it is self similar with the brain that controls the mouth and magicians then argue the brain is in turn self similar to the world it perceives and due to neuroplasticity it does truly become a microcosm. So through knowing the alphabet which is symbolic of all these possible sounds and their correspondences, we can come to know about all things. So by combining tone, breath and other Qabbalistic correspondences, rituals can be custom designed to effect the brain in all kinds of very specific ways that induce trance and magickal gnosis. When Occultists studied language to try and reconstruct the Adamic language, they looked at things like syllables and letters and this is the origin of things like etymology, albeit in a very primitive form. This merely means modern etymologists and linguists have grown more successful circuits in their brains for these skills, as acquired through centuries of trial and error, but the skills are still rooted in Occult philosophy and techniques. As your brain must fire certain neurons every time the tongue speaks a syllable, this wires the tongue neurons to the neuron or neurons which house the concept behind the word as a whole. While they may not always actually be etymologically related as these Occultists generally believed, words which share a common syllable would both be linked to the same tongue neurons. This would mean that the different words themselves share some level of indirect circuit connection between them and so have certain connotations through the synapses, (if only unconsciously) to the neurons which fire to activate the tongue. Thus Occultists studied language by trying to sort out which letters and syllables belong to which sort of words, those words which symbolize unpleasant concepts would have syllables with unpleasant connotations and so they thought, might share a common etymological root in a word which represents that essential unpleasantness. So then, by knowing the connotations of various letters and syllables, they could design magick words or mantras which fire the appropriate neurons to generate the kind of consciousness they wanted and they tried to reconstruct the Adamic language based on these kinds of ideas. Now we know that etymology cannot be ascertained quite so simply, but then if we take the myth of the confusion of tongues literally, if ancient rulers had this mapped accurately to some degree, they could have constructed a language which enslaves the brain and encourages connotations and so circuits which create slave mentalities and limit consciousness. That is, knowing how tones and syllables effect consciousness, they could have taken syllables from words which represent beloved concepts, then used these syllables to make new words for hated concepts and this would help them to justify, hier-archy and theo-crazy and destroy their true context. When people speak a constructed language like modern Hebrew fluently, it starts to undergo the natural changes acquired through evolution and dialects and so it becomes increasingly indistinguishable from other languages. This process of evolution must to some degree coincide with how the brain learns from neuroplasticity, and this is a key to understanding universal grammar. So, given that we often learn using words, neuroplasticity will mirror etymology and the structure of logic and even information science to some degree and those who understand this, could make a linguistic virus, or a linguistic cure based on these principles.

As our unconscious can do mathematics, anagrams and a variety of other complex things, the things around us are constantly having many many different kinds of effects on our unconscious. (especially when letters are also numbers as with Hebrew and Greek) As our subconscious can spell each word it thinks and automatically associates each word with the letters that spell it, (to various degrees firing up each letter's circuit in the process) it is constantly doing literal Qabbalah and a literate brain may even “think” more in letters than whole words. In this way the things we perceive create all kinds of subconscious interpretations like synesthesia or Qabbalistic correspondences and so if we understand these associations, each word can have much more meaning to the conscious mind and allow for greater union between the conscious and unconscious mind. Not only does this give the conscious mind the incredible powers of the unconscious, but magick words can be created by the conscious mind which effect the subconscious in a very profound way and activate the brain accordingly. While a mystical text designed according to these Qabbalistic principles may effect the unconscious mind, due to neuroplasticity, the effects become much more pronounced when the conscious mind is aware of the correspondences. This of course is because the conscious mind is primarily the part which strengthens a particular circuit and so learning Qabbalah strengthens circuits that expand the parameters of language and can turn reading and speaking in to a meditation. However, if a person is not aware of the Qabbalistic meaning behind the text, they can be tricked in to thinking it is a literal history and so become prone to OCD behaviour and authoritarian dogmatism that further divides the conscious mind from the unconscious mind.

Plato's description of the brain is eerily specific, but there are other clues to suggest that “Plato's” ideas about the brains anatomy did influence Gnostic theology. In the Gnostic text “On the Origin of the World” various archons make the body parts of Adam with Yaldabaoth (AKA Yahweh AKA Chnoubis the demiurge) being credited with creating the brain, the medulla and nervous system, the fact that he has the body of a snake with the head of a lion is obviously symbolic in a number of ways, but it does seem the snake represents the spine and the lion head the brain itself. (Thus making man in his image we can also see that the god Saturn in some traditions is specifically linked to the brain.) While my interpretation of Genesis is heretical, after writing it I found that according to ancient Christian apologist Hippolytus in his polemic work against the Gnostics entitled “Refutation of all heresies,” (Book V) that the Naasseni Gnostics did in fact believe that Eden or “Edem is the brain, as it were, bound and tightly fastened in encircling robes, as if (in) heaven. But they suppose that man, as far as the head only, is Paradise.” Hippolytus also writes (Book IV) about how the brain figured in the theology of two of the most influential Gnostic thinkers Simon Magus and Valentinus, that they “attempt likewise to form the hebdomads from the medical [art], being astonished at the dissection of the brain, asserting that the substance of the universe and the power of procreation and the Godhead could be ascertained from the arrangement of the brain. For the brain, being the dominant portion of the entire body, reposes calm and unmoved, containing within itself the spirit.... For the brain, on being dissected, has within it what may be called a vaulted chamber. And on either side of this are thin membranes, which they term little wings. Now these are gently moved by the spirit, and in turn propel towards the cerebellum the spirit, which, careering through a certain blood-vessel like a reed, advances towards the pineal gland. And near this is situated the entrance of the cerebellum, which admits the current of spirit, and distributes it into what is styled the spinal marrow. ” He then goes on to mention how there are seven ligaments and this (in other sources probably referred to as “ventricles” even though science knows of only four ventricles) is how the brain is divided according to the planets. Hippolytus goes in to frustratingly little detail but he does say that such ideas were the subject of much discussion, indicating it was nothing new to the Greeks and so to me it seems most likely these “wings” and pineal gland above the spine are the inspiration for the caduceus rod of Hermes, which has at its top two wings on either side of a ball.

If this wasn't enough Hippolytus goes on to speak of the Peratic Gnostics giving us tantalizing clues as to their neurotheology and showing quite explicitly that the ancient mystics were very much interested in the functions of the brain. “They adduce the anatomy of the brain, assimilating, from the fact of its immobility, the brain itself to the Father, and the cerebellum to the Son, because of its being moved and being of the form of [the head of] a serpent. And they allege that this [cerebellum], by an ineffable and inscrutable process, attracts through the pineal gland the spiritual and life-giving substance emanating from the vaulted chamber [in which the brain is embedded]. And on receiving this, the cerebellum in an ineffable manner imparts the ideas, just as the Son does, to matter; or, in other words, the seeds and the genera of the things produced according to the flesh flow along into the spinal marrow.” This quote has a number of interesting things about it, but I should first mention that not all Gnostics associated the snake with Sophia, that some considered it to be Jesus and that if the cerebellum is the head of the snake, then Genesis has different metaphorical meaning, perhaps relating to the left hemisphere blocking the “spiritual and life giving substance” they believed comes from the pineal gland. (Semen infused with spirit as the life giving essence)

While the cerebellum is mostly thought to be responsible for motor control it has also been shown to activate when people utilize language, attention, and mental imagery. Genesis could be a metaphor for how when dualism set in the body and consciousness or the “soul” became much more distinct and separate, that with the dualist morality of Abrahamic religions, sex became demonized and sex magick became outlawed and so the snake or reptilian brain was not integrated fully into consciousness. Since the “snakes head” is the cerebellum it could be that duality has altered how our brains grow so that the cerebellum is interrupting our brains anatomy to function together as a balanced team coherently and thus the snake's head is “bruised” or “crushed.” Due to the “enmity” it has with the right hemisphere, it spreads its now hostile obsessions or “bites” the left hemisphere, infecting it with archon based circuitry and since “Eve” is cut off from the body or nervous system of the spine, the left brain must compensate for her or “rule” her. The spine is thought to be the conduit for the spirit infused life giving substance, or semen to come out the penis and while this is not literally true, in modern times we do find the brain is the biggest erogenous zone; it is what activated arousal and sends all the signals required for sex. We could think of this as orgone, kundalini or pranic energy, maybe even DMT in the cerebrospinal fluid, though one way or another it is probably the same as the Zohar's “brain dew.” Semen does come up specifically in the texts, however we do know that women were at least in the Gnostic and Tantric traditions practising this kind of thing as well and so it isn't exactly clear, though we do know that cum does have unusually close chemistry to the brain and nervous system. Semen has within it phosphorus which is very important to brain function and so it could be that just as both ascetics and Tantrics claim, withholding ejaculation could provide more energy or nutrients for the brain and so heighten awareness, with the Gnostics finding another solution by eating the semen.

Gnostic traditions have it that rituals with mantras or magick words and special “seals” or sigils must be performed in order to overcome the antagonistic effects of the reptilian consciousness of the demiurge. Some groups would even perform a Tantric ritual for each day of the year so that the archon which ruled that day would be overpowered and eventually the totality of the mind would be freed. Genesis then may be an allusion to how when civilization began to take hold and these bodily and Tantric sex magick rituals were no longer so publicly practised, people were no longer able to fully use self directed neuroplasticity on the reptilian brain and the cerebellum. Since these parts of the brain relate to the body and the hard wired sex drive, in order to change their circuitry, a physical means is pretty well required to activate them and so with sexual repression the subconscious became sexually frustrated and ultimately pathological. In order to change a circuit, it has to be activated in conjunction with the other circuits you want it to be like or which you are using to change it and so repressing or denying your animal self will only make it act out in unconscious and uncontrolled ways. That is since sex is at the heart of our reptilian brain, through Tantric ritual we can activate it in a controlled manner in order to transmute and integrate the territorial fear based circuits which cause authoritarian and hierarchical behaviour.

This curse that is the fall of consciousness through the literal interpretation of Genesis is a mind control device that has created an environment according to its needs, a world where no one wants to know who they are and everyone wants to beat everyone else. It has split the minds of people in to a society of repressed perverted puritanical capitalist Virgin/Whores, who for some strange reason refuse to have sex with the universe, that is people who feel shame for sexual urges deny its holiness and twist their desires with illusions and lies. In fact science has shown that cultures which practice genital mutilation are statistically more violent and in many ways circumcision is a kind of branding for a parasitic circuitry that demands blood sacrifice to initiate its child adherents through trauma, implanting a seed to grow a warped and neurotic brain. Science also shows that as one of the main focal points of the nervous system with the loss of the foreskin, sex is not as pleasurable, making the person even more limited in their capacity for activating the reptilian brain for reprogramming, but I guess genital mutilation is all part of the charm of the Abrahamic death cult. In the same way that scripture based religions took focus away from experience based religions, duality took the focus of consciousness away from the body and the Earth and so with that came a great strengthening of the theocracies power to implement civilizations, ones that function to serve and strengthen abstractions rather than people. So it is we became unhappy, falling out of paradise and relying on consumer goods which we define as “good” in order to deal with our sexual frustrations, creating a society that wants ever more consumer goods in order to out alpha each other, striving for pack dominance in a vain attempt to satiate our frustrations. The right brain now disconnected but trying to reach out to the left cannot integrate the animal self and the left brains gets bogged down in its linguistic limitations, stuck in archon loops of out of context logic and trying to appease a pissed off dragon. But we are hard wired for sex and toys never actually satisfy this desire, (though marketing glamour uses sex to convince us otherwise) thus through our “progress” we are forever perpetuating and escalating the denial of our natural inclinations.

Scientists are only now starting to understand neurological anatomy and so it is unlikely the ancients correctly understood it and so interpretation should probably be derived more from the symbolic connotations such as the meaning of the snake, rather than present day anatomical knowledge. Unfortunately thanks to the Christians very little of the Gnostics writing on the brain remains, but from the writings of their Christian attackers we can see that they did associate the brain with the hebdomad, or seven planets of astrology and so their various astrological rituals would have been associated with the brain as well. In fact one of traditional Jewish interpretations of the snake is that he represents sexual desires and one of the main problems Christians and Jews had with Gnostics was their use of sex magick and their integration of their “dark side” to become sexually mature free spirits capable of independent thought.

The more I look, the more it seems the ancients were aware of neuroplasticity and that it played an important role in the creation of their religions and mystical practices and even fairy tales. While their anatomical knowledge was definitely lacking, the psychological knowledge of the ancients was so great that in many ways they intuitively understood the plasticity of the brain and while my own knowledge of neurology is limited and so my ability to interpret is limited, those with such knowledge could spend years exploring mysticism and religion from this angle. It’s even in regular Christianity, though this is probably just the leftovers from its Gnostic roots, we can see Jesus with his crown of thorns as quintessence on the cross of the elements, crucified on “Golgotha” which means “place of the skull” and could also be likened to spirit or consciousness in the brain (This is made explicit by Isaac Luria and the Zohar) held by nails of desire. (The rosy cross is even more detailed) One apocryphal legend surrounding this would be that Adam's skull was ultimately be buried on Golgotha, that when the first man died seeds from the tree of knowledge (or sometimes the tree of life) were planted with his body and absorbed his blood it as it grew. Eventually after playing an important symbolic role in various bible stories, the wood from this tree would go to making the very cross on which Christ would be crucified, thus the cross of the elements is made from the family tree, or collective nervous system of humanity. As you sow, so shall you reap and you will know them by their fruits, the kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed, but when it falls on prepared soil it grows into a large plant and gives shelter to the “birds” of the “air.”

Manly P Hall writes of a variety of models for neurotheological systems which are often astrological, these include Paracelsus, Robert Fludd, Rene Descartes, Leonardo Da Vinci as well as Buddhist and Hindu practitioners who have also studied the brain and assigned planets to it and so I think neuroplasticity will turn out to be one of the major keys for understanding spiritual thought. (See his books “Man Grand Symbol of the Mysteries” and “The Occult Anatomy of Man”) While some mystics studying the brain may not of understood just how plastic and changeable the physical brain is, their view of consciousness allowed them to sculpt and strengthen their brain and to raise their awareness and think outside the box of entrenched meme circuits. This allowed them to come to a much more scientific view of the world as well as gain a variety of other very interesting insights, for example Thomas Willis the founder of neurology was an Alchemist and the etymology of the brain's anatomy does show this kind of ancient symbolism.

While explicit details of ancient neurotheology are largely lost or allegorical, there is still plenty of ways we can apply ancient magick and mysticism to neuroplasticity. For example, in kundalini and Swari Yoga, the two hemispheres of the brain are activated using “alternate nostril breathing” in which one nostril is plugged so that air will activate and empower the hemisphere which is on the same side of the body. Throughout the day we change our breathing from one nostril to the other, though sometimes we use both and this works to provide oxygen for a particular hemisphere. This works because the left hemisphere of the brain, controls the right side of the body and so to activate it you must breath from the right nostril. The left hemisphere then is associated with solar energy or prana which travels up the “pingala” channel and is activated by plugging the left nostril. (Corresponding to Sulphur in Alchemy and Chokmah in Qabalah) “ida” is the channel for lunar pranic energy which is associated with the right hemisphere of the brain and so the left side of the body and is activated by plugging the right nostril. (Corresponding to Salt in Alchemy and Binah in Qabalah) These two energies are associated with snakes which are said to flow up the spine through two channels or “nadis” and just like the caduceus, in the centre of the spine is the “shushuma” nadi. This third nadi allows for the rising of the balanced energies of kundalini and it is activated by breathing through both nostrils simultaneously. (Corresponding to Mercury or Quicksilver in Alchemy and Kether and the middle pillar in Qabalah) pranayama has a large variety of practices around this basic idea which I strongly advise you look in to and can involve switching between the nostrils through inhalation and exhalation and many other things.

While this is not so traditional, we can further activate the hemisphere of our choosing by using the hand which is opposite to the nostril we are plugging, (left hand plugs right nostril to activate right hemisphere, right hand plugs left nostril for left hemisphere) allowing us to customize our rituals according to functions which the two hemispheres of the brain specialize in. By activating one of the hemispheres ritually or through yoga, due to neuroplasticity we can strengthen that hemisphere or implant a sigil seed within that hemisphere. While much of the details are lost, as I have briefly explained, Gnostics and Alchemists did practice a very similar kind of Tantric kundalini yoga, which in the west is generally referred to as sex magick. Gnostics were accused of eating semen and menstrual fluid, which today is also used to consecrate sigils as part of elaborate rituals that can be used for all kinds of purposes. As the snakes wind up the spine from the base, or in Tantra the testicles, (or ovaries) if the head of the snakes is their respective hemisphere, then their tails will be on the opposite sides. This works so that the solar snake has it's head in the left brain, it's tale in the right testicle, the lunar snake has it's head in the right hemisphere and it's tale in the left testicle, while the shushuma runs from the base of the spine to the crown chakra, or more physically speaking to the pineal gland.

I don't know of any evidence for brain plasticity affecting other parts of the nervous system, as in the chakra system or Qabbalism, but the brain could be wired to empower and work with those areas of the nervous system to a greater degree, to send more electrical impulses to that particular region and to create specific associations with it. At the very least the circuits in the brain can be wired to relate to symbolic positions on the body, so that visualizing energy centres in various places in the body, corresponds as a visualization, as a means of activating the chakra or energy centre circuits in the brain, areas which have been built up through meditation. Some chakra systems of the kundalini yoga tradition even match the endocrine system anatomically, with each chakra being associated with a gland, such as the adrenal, or pineal gland etc and these correspond in character and location to its specific chakra. Not only this, but the nerve ganglia of the nervous system or clusters of nerve cells called “plexuses,” match the chakra positions along the spine perfectly. It is your endocrine system which creates your various hormones, so through working with these kinds of chakra systems, or one of your own devising, you could theoretically learn to control your nervous system and endocrine system, allowing you to control your consciousness by controlling your biology. (This could also shed light on acupuncture and its energy map of the body as well as Qigong and Reiki and how a person learns to manipulate the energy of the body.)

In my mythological studies I have come across a variety of goddesses all associated with the same mythological elements, that being fertility, poles, spears, pillars, trees, snakes and the number eight, sometimes represented in a star form with the goddess in the middle to make nine. As we shall see a distaff is sometimes used and this is a tool used for spinning wool, with spinning being another common motif, which is among other things, a metaphor for the circuits of the brain being woven in to a holistic integrated pattern. The poles or spears of these goddess's are both the “axis mundi” or astrological/astronomical poles used by stargazers for plotting the course of the heavens, but also the spine which has the serpent energy run up it. (kundalini) In some cases there is one snake and one bird and this represents the energies of the microcosmic and physical Earth and the macrocosmic astral world of the sky. Given the amount of examples I have found, in many cases I have been able to interpret the myths which we know these deities by, as explaining aspects of a ritual form of meditation. I can only describe this as an international form of Shamanic brain Tantra, which is connected with a variety of Indo European cultures, as well as Egypt and Judaism and Chinese Buddhism and Taoism, with roots that go right back into prehistoric times. The number eight is significant in that it is the seven planets plus the Earth, or the seven planets plus the zodiac; it is also the calendrical wheel of the year and marks the eight directions north, north east, east etc not to mention a variety of other things. Since reality is fractal this practice unites both the heavens, planets and stars and the anatomy and brain through ritual practices which include sex magick.

As for the various goddesses, Ishtar with her star and her form as Asherah, with the pillar or poles and snake have already been mentioned, but I should mention the Huluppu tree of Inanna in which Lilith, the Anzu bird and a serpent lived. Then there is the deity Ningishzida who is a serpent wrapped around a pole like a caduceus, but his name has been translated, “lord of the good tree.” In India there is also Lakshmi another goddess of money who is associated with the Astra Lakshmi in her eight various forms, she is also associated with an eight petalled lotus, or star. Lakshmi is one of the Mahavidya Tantric goddess's which are aspects of the goddess Shakti and whom often have eight symbolism coming up in their myths and yantras, eight petalled lotus's etc. Lakshmi came out of the Samudra manthan or milky ocean, (Milky Way) and this occurred when the Devas and Asuras (gods and demons) used mount Meru as a pole. In this myth they wrapped the mountain with a snake and placed it on the back of a turtle and used to turn the milk ocean and gain amrita. Amrita has been connected to entheogens in a few ways, but it is said that marijuana sprung up from some spilled drops, probably as a reference to bhang. Amrita is also kundalini energy and is much the same as other drinks of the gods, such as ambrosia in the Greek tradition or the mead of inspiration for the Norse. There is also the Dharmachakra or wheel of life representing the eightfold path which is the primary symbol and method of Buddhism, which is itself rooted in Hinduism with it's own different methods called the “eight limbs of yoga.”

We can see this kind of symbolism all over the western Pagan traditions and even in to relatively modern times with the “stang” or staff of Witchcraft, which would be forked and often have an animal skull at the end, often with antlers as they would be thought to act like antennas of spiritual energies. Even though this is long before electronic antennas, antlers were also common on ritual masks for this reason, but more than this, as antlers grow larger each year the buck is alive, they were symbolic of the growing wisdom of the Witch, a wisdom that would grow in the brain and resemble these same antlers. This stang would be danced around by the Witches and would be helpful for group rituals as it would allow the participants to channel their energies in to something like a group spine, where as if they were working alone they would simply use their own.

For the Greeks we have Athena with her spear and her pet snake and owl, who was a central figure in the religion of Simon Magus and a variety of traditions. For example in another separate tradition as Minerva in the Roman empire, she was part of a triad with Jupiter and Juno and they were depicted on “Jupiter columns.” However I doubt anyone was practicing tantra in this form and it seems to be one of the last and most corrupted theocratic forms of this symbolism. The Egyptians associated Athena with Neith also known as Amunet, a goddess said to have woven the fabric of time and space, a goddess who carries a goad and is part of the “ogdoad” or eight primordial deities of Chaos and she interacts with a variety of snakes, especially in her form as Amunet. Hekate is also associated with poles, snakes, owls and astrological magick and it seems likely to me that Ananke, the Orphic goddess (mother of the weaving fates and goddess of natural order) who is wrapped in a snake representing Chronos, is a derivation and involved in this tradition as well. (This is also very similar to the the Pelasgian creation myth of Eurynome and Ophion) Proculus writing his commentary of Euclid says that “the pole of the world is called by the Pythagoreans the seal of Rhea” and this matches images of the goddess from Crete in which she stands on a mountain with a pole. The Norse have Freya, who has eight sisters and is associated with the May pole, she had nine castles and in some myths was said to have been nursed by nine giantess's, she has also been associated with nine maidens who serve up a mead of memory by a tree of memory. Freya is also a master of Seidr or Norse Shamanism and carries a seidrstafr to work her magick, (this is a distaff) she is so good at magick she even taught Odin. There is also the Morrigan with her eight sisters who live on the isle of Avalon, she has much in common with Freya, and she carries a spear and is also a central part of the story of Cuchulain with his magick spear. (She is associated with the number nine and also snakes.) The Celts also had the goddess Brigid who carried a spear and was associated with snakes, she had nine virgin priestess's associated with nine stones, when she was appropriated and Christianized as St. Brigid, she was said to have been born in the eighth month and died at age 88 and baptized with eight virgins.

The gods who show signs of being associated with this tradition include Asclepius both in his Hermetic Context, but also his older traditions in Greece and Egypt and he had a staff wrapped in a snake and as the god of healers and medicine it is safe to say he had the knowledge of a herbalism or medical pharmakeia. Asclepius was also the son of Apollo, a god who's oracle at Delphi was at the base of the Greek “axis mundi” Mt Parnassus and in the cave was the remains of a giant Python which Apollo had slain, but there was also a “serpent column” made of three intertwined snakes. It was also on this mountain that Apollo taught Orpheus to play music, who in turn lived on this mountain with his mother and eight aunts who collectively made up the muses. Parnassus was also sacred to Dionysus who is associated with snakes and carries a staff with a pine cone at the end, (from which the pineal gland is named) the myths say he went to India and as I mentioned before his cult along with the Orphics is an important root of the Greek influence on Gnosticism. (With their Logos Jesus on the cross and his many associations with snakes.) Zeus with his lightening bolt was also part of a triad with Hades, who had a 2 pronged fork and Poseidon had his trident. (In some ways these three match the trinity of Anu, Enlil and Enki.) Thoth Hermes is a god of magick, the number of Mercury is 8 in Qabalah, but in his older forms with his caduceus (which he got from Apollo) he is also associated with pillars called Hermae and was associated with dreams, fertility and traveling to both to Hades and to Olympus and so all of this is highly suggestive of this kind of Shamanic tantra. It is also significant that Hermes was the god of shepherds along with his son Pan, he was also said to have stolen cattle from Apollo and since many magick mushrooms grow on cow dung, if anyone would know of these mushrooms it would be the shepherd followers of these gods. Pan was also part of the traveling party of Dionysus and a god of fertility, meaning that all these gods could very well have originally been part of the same entheogenic tantric cult. Orphics represented the male solar mysteries of Apollo, Maenads the female lunar mysteries of Ariadne and Semele, who would then at certain limited times mix together and probably have orgies. Dionysus was in some cases considered the son of Persephone and so along with Hermes and Hekate, we see the entheogenic gods of magick and this spine symbolism are all grouped together.

Odin with his magickal spear is also associated with pillars called Irminsul, but he also hangs on the world tree, with the Midgard serpent and the dragon Níðhöggr and is associated with a lot of symbolism to do with the number eight. Most importantly we see Earth, or Midgard is surrounded by eight other worlds, (planets?) but there is also the eight legs of his horse Slepnir and his ring which magickally creates eight other rings. There are also 24 runes, organized in to three groups of eight, which Odin acquired after crucifying himself on the world tree and it is common for rune sigils to have eight spokes. Another example could be Veraldar Nagli the “world spike” or pole star also known as Odin's eye, strongly suggesting the pole is where mimirs well is, thus making Níðhöggr Draco and the midgard serpent the zodiac. (Odin's eye in the well could also be interpreted as the pineal gland) The galaxy is much like the “world mill” or “heavenly mill” which is turned by nine giantess's at the edge of the known universe, with all the stars in the sky being within the skull of the giant Ymir. (The word “spine” also has the same etymological root as “spike.”)

Kabbalah with Asherah is an obvious form of this yoga/astrological magick, having all the elements I have listed, but in Egypt there is also the Djedhi (the inspiration for Jedi) who have their own serpent poles called a Djed pillar, or the pillar of Asar, pillars which played a pretty central role in religion of the Egyptians and figures in a number of their ceremonies. The snake goddess Wadjet is the earliest depiction of a snake around a pole and she is the snake in the “uraeus” which combined with the vulture comes out the third eye of a Pharaohs crown. (Just as with Yggdrasil or Abraxas, a god with the head of a rooster and snakes for legs, or even Jesus talking of doves and serpents it is quite common to have the bird with a snake.) Isis is associated with Wadjet, but also snakes in a variety of ways, she was said to have rescued Osiris from a pillar, which had been made from a tree which had grown around a coffin with the god trapped inside it. (having been tricked by Set) This pillar became a symbol of Osiris and was called a Djed, it also has the shape of a spine and is explicitly interpreted as such. (For example In the book of the dead it is referred to as the spine of Osiris)

Also in Egypt we find the ogdoad which I had mentioned before and is an eight pointed star in their creation stories, one of which involves the god Thoth heavily, but the Ogdoad also plays a significant role in the Gnostic religion and I have found it to be the direct precursor to the Qabbalah or Kabbalah. In the ennead myth of Egypt, Osiris and Isis are born from an Acacia tree like the left and right hemispheres while in the Ogdoad stories, each point is also a deity or snake or frog. These octagrams or eight pointed stars are the cosmologies of various traditions, the map of the planets which are also associated with the wheel of time, or the wheel of reincarnation, or the original wheel of fortune, the wheel also having been very important to the Chariot driving Indo Europeans.

While the societies with oral traditions are much harder to trace, many have noted the connections between the Druid religion and Hinduism, etymology shows Gaelic is related to Sanskrit as well as the other Indo European languages which must have come with these practices. The Celtic god Lugh carries a magick spear and is in some ways similar to Odin and Mercury, and the Druids have long been associated with trees and snakes in a variety of ways, especially the adder, in fact the Welsh called Druids “Naddred,” meaning adder. The Celtic cross with its astronomical associations is another example of a ritual pillar among the Celts, showing the axis of the zodiac, but also forms of it are likely to have been used like sextant to map the sky. Horned gods are also very common and the Celtic god Cerrunos is another strong candidate, in that on the “Gundestrup cauldron” there are depictions of him sitting in a yoga posture which is very similar to depictions on the Pashupati seal. This seal was found in the Indus valley civilization and depicts a horned form of Shiva which many have noted is very similar to the cauldron, however here Cerrunos is holding a snake and in other places he is known to carry a spear. Shiva is the master yogi and is heavily associated with snakes and has a staff or trident called a khatvanga, which in the Kapalika tradition has a skull at the end, in the tantric tradition of the Aghoris (who own nothing but a skull made into a bowl) he has eight forms known as Ashta Bharaivar which are associated with the eight directions.

Though some of the oldest traditions could be rooted in Africa with the Nubians and others, (for example one god of the ogdoad Amun, quite possibly originated there) there are also traces of very similar symbolism in Taoist Alchemy and especially the I Ching with the eight trigrams of the Pa Kua or Bagua and so this suggests an Indo European migration of memes is too simplistic to explain the spread of these ideas. We can even see certain parallels in the new world among the Aztecs and Mayans with their calendars and within the “medicine wheel” of various native spiritualities which also share a variety of mythological motifs with old world religions. There could be a variety of reasons for this, from the fact that nature based religions will have much of the same inspiration, the possibility of precolumbian travel, diffusion from Atlantis, or perhaps the one scholars hate the most, the idea that people aren't just making it all up, but that there is a real spiritual reality which people are tapping in to, but which presents itself according to the symbolic language of the local culture. (The level of similarity between old and new world mythologies has been pointed out and debated by many scholars) Given how long a time frame is needed to get the observations needed to come up with these astrological systems, it may just be that they were developed before indigenous people even migrated to the Americas. I can't really say what the answer is, it may be all these possibilities combined, I am inclined to say that each religion is a different self similar part of the same fractal, each unique but each resembling the others. If these traditions at least indirectly relate to the brain, to the universal grammar then it is no wonder that they are the same since all humans have the same basic brain and so by comparing different traditions and finding their commonalities, we can come to a better understanding of the universal archetypes of the human mind and the spirit world.

While the details of this tradition are fragmented and the exact methods likely gone forever, it is way too much of a coincidence for all these common motifs to be in all these various religious traditions and I haven't even mentioned all the examples which are out there. Clearly snakes and poles had a very specific meaning which is not fully understood today, though with the “pole” star in the constellation Draco, Caput and Cauda Draconis, Asclepius with his serpent pole and constellation Ophiuchus, the Ouroboros and the zodiac itself being representations of a snake, it must have had to do with astrotheology, but also as the Gnostics have said outright, neurotheology. I have been led to understand this from Dysnomia, who has given me the key to the ogdoad before I knew what the ogdoad was. I had received the 8 pointed star from her as in chapter 17 and created a ritual system which had incorporated all the same symbolism intuitively and later found the historic connections. I have come to find that she is the goddess who goes by many names and existed before his-story, before the theocrats turned the Earth in to a whore. We may not be able to reconstruct most of the practices of this tradition, but by utilizing modern science we can come up with ideas that are still very effective at raising our consciousness and strengthening the brain.

Many of these goddess's are the same as the ones I have listed for the influences which created the syncretic Masonic goddess Columbia and while it may be tempting for Christians to demonize these goddess's, their traditions predate banking and monetary systems and even written language, not to mention the similar symbolism found within orthodox Judaism and Christianity and especially Gnosticism and Kabbalah. However even if there was a banking cult with many of these goddess's, not all the banking goddess's are part of this brain tantra, nor are all the goddess's of the tantra in the banking tradition. Again I must stress that due to the decentralized nature of Pagan religions with their lack of orthodoxy and authorities, we cannot blame all of the followers of a goddess due to the plutocratic practices of a few, especially since the plutocrats started relatively late in to the tradition and set in gradually over centuries. While the roots of Pagan philosophy are ultimately only consistent with Anarchism, it can be corrupted (as the various empires clearly show) and at first, to most people the mechanisms of economic corruption would not yet be understood. (Just like today) There was a large variety of practices associated with this primarily Indo European goddess, whose symbolism points to an origin in some kind of prehistoric astrological tantric Shamanism, likely to have utilized a variety of entheogens according to what was locally available. As I said, even Gobekli Tepe has identical symbolism such as a goddess, with snake and vulture motifs, but also cattle and sacred pillars and this seems to be the oldest depictions we have.

Given that these practices are clearly much older than the banking religion, (and even exist in the new world) it is safe to say these traditions were infiltrated and their practices would provide the spiritual experiences to inspire the memes of truth for what would become the religions of civilizations, practices and symbolism which would as theocracies become more dominant. (As with the Jupiter columns, Judaism and Christianity) Even Cybele has many of these motifs with her tree son Amygdalus or Attis, but also through her connections to Dionysus and Rhea, we see the same basic ideas everywhere and so the brain tantra is as old as nature religion itself, going back to the distant echoes of prehistory. Eventually as the mysteries became more and more corrupted and the entheogens generally changed, the original context would be lost on most people, especially since uneducated farmer peasants don't have time to master in depth mystical practices and so they would be known by an increasingly elect few, having been appropriated by the theocrats so as to appear legitimate. (Hunter gatherers had plenty of leisure time) The same goddess can have a huge variety of forms and each one mean very different things to different people, for example Artemis or Aphrodite might be worshipped by patriarchal bankers or the Amazon warrior women of Lesbos. So it is we must be careful not be overly simplistic and try to create a set of dogmas which are universal to Pagan theology, authoritarian ideas about religion being the hallmark of Abrahamic traditions. The thing about having a lack of orthodoxy means some individuals are going to be assholes who use the exact same symbols as more egalitarian people, just as all kinds of people use alpha-bets for writing today, all kinds of people worshipped goddess's, even patriarchal bankers. If you are looking for religious symbolism which is somehow free of all assholes in history, you would have to come up with a totally new religion and even then you would have to keep it to yourself, which has been one reason the Occult is kept secret, but some might argue this is kind of an asshole thing to do in itself. So it is we should not avoid symbols just because some assholes use them sometimes too, the important thing is to understand what the symbols mean and how they can be used to increase our spiritual consciousness. That bankers and authoritarian people have taken on some of these symbols on their way to becoming Abrahamic, does not mean we should abandon the goddess, for this would mean abandoning nature and instead it is a sure reason to reclaim the goddess for those who truly love her and would spread her wisdom.

Keeping this in mind, modern Pagans must be on guard to ensure their philosophies are not corrupted by rulers and black magicians, that Anarchism and equality is recognized as central to our spirituality, nature does not rule like a government and so we should not have any either. Many Pagans are politically ambivalent, many being ex Christians they have not rid their mind's of all the archon programming and so still tolerate patriarchal, capitalist exploitation of nature and other such memes. These Pagans who seek to find mainstream approval do not recognize the mainstream is sick and needs to be healed, that capitalism and hierarchy is an infection which destroys religion and so we must be on guard against the New Age tendency to treat our spirituality as a commodity. The more New Age Pagans out there are in complete denial about Gaia's dark side, but murder is a part of nature and so is violence and death, so no, Mother nature is not a hippy and Hekate will show us this all too well. Mother nature is much more of a punk rocker than a hippy, loving and hateful, all of it part of a holistic harmony, she is definitely not afraid to get her hands dirty, for Mother nature is the truth and the truth is we all kill, its just that Mother nature helps us know that death is not the end, and so nothing to be feared. Plants and animals kill and fight and this serves a purpose within nature, we have survival instincts for a reason and it is not wrong to make use of them within the limits of Anarchism.

In this way, those who love nature, those who love the goddess which has many forms, must rise up to reclaim the Earth and the traditions of this goddess, for there are undeniably people out there who would whore her and kill her and otherwise pervert her wisdom to make hierarchies. Behind all this horror and beauty is the fire of Anarchy, the will of animation, the will for life is the will for survival, but in her eyes we are all equals, in her eyes we can do as we will. Like punk rock we realize doing what we really want is not about getting wealth, or dominating others, or having social status, it is about living the truth of who we are, being wild and free. So it is vital that we work to break the spell cast by those rulers and authoritarian people who will and in some ways already have tried to infiltrate Pagan circles. (Nazis for example) Magicians, Witches and Pagans must be ever vigilant against those who would try to institutionalize our practices, or otherwise make it the justification for authoritarian behaviour, possibly even trying to use it for brain washing as with the brain virus that is Abrahamic religions. The black magicians didn't invent the goddess, they merely took her symbols to use for gaining prestige and glamour and so they have also at times used these types of magick to misrepresent the goddess as someone who demands hierarchy, but as Kropotkin and common sense shows, Mother nature is an Anarchist. It is the rulers or archons who seek to control the goddess, who seek to set up institutions of power which prostitute her, and so I say if you love the goddess, you must surely hate the systems of hierarchy, for you cannot have it both ways. No one is separate from nature and so we should not tolerate any hierarchies on what the spirituality of nature is and so knowing this, we should not tolerate any government, for that is the original justification of government. As Shamans are healers we must learn to heal the brain virus of the archons and we can do this by studying the brain and how it applies to magick and religion through the universal language and the prehistoric tantra.

The benefits of meditation and ritual may not be immediately obvious but as your brain rewires itself, you will become more aware than ever before and in ways you never knew existed. Not only is meditative ritual a good way of consciously wiring your brain, but the more practice you have with ritual, the more your brain will adapt and change to become better at ritual. For this reason it may take some time before a person with no meditative or ritual experience really starts to see benefits, but it is always getting better, especially if you stay positive. New Agers who only think positive in general, or who try and manifest a thing here or there with no real consistency in method do not develop the same level of depth in wiring as someone who does ritual. That is New Agers generally only practice an intention to manifest a particular thing only once and often in different ways each time. Where as rituals that are performed regularly and using the same symbols, allow the mind and brain to think positive about the same thing repeatedly, but for different purposes. This allows the circuits to develop more strength and so a person can gain more and more confidence around those symbols which will then be able to direct neuroplasticity at ever increasing rates. For example a New Ager may have good "positive" circuits in regards to affirmations, but they are generally always different affirmations they are trying to manifest. Where as someone using the same runes and or astrological symbols, or personal symbols over and over, will develop a more deeply embedded circuitry, especially if worked out in a ritual manner. By having a consistent and interconnected system of symbols which can be used and combined in different situations, we have specific circuits or muscles of the brain that can be used over and over for different purposes, but simultaneously retaining the focus on specific areas of the brain. This is not to say you should not try and experiment to see which rituals or symbols are most emotionally evocative and meaningful for you, experimentation and wide research are highly recommended in the beginning. This should be done at least until you find a system that really suits you well, or until you have enough knowledge to create your own system that is all the more meaningful.

We can think of symbols and language as the main points at which the fingers of the sculptor of the brain are touching the "clay," so that by the will we push hard in specific areas to impress and form the consciousness, which then hardens or crystallizes into the appropriate form. By symbolizing a specific area of consciousness as within the Norse runes, various herbs of Witchcraft, I Ching, Qabalah, astrology or Pagan gods and goddesses, or whatever you specifically want, you are able to in effect grab hold of your consciousness and manipulate it according to your rituals. It takes time and effort but the effects can be dramatic and can potentially benefit all areas of your life and I have found that being aware of how this effects the brain has increased it's effectiveness for me. (This is common sense when you realize your brain is the organ which is the physical symbol of your consciousness.)

I believe that not only can entheogens be used to help the process of forming circuits and the symbolic representation of consciousness occur faster, they can get to the deeper underlying memes or circuits which are not useful. (As with OCD) Science is even beginning to show entheogens can increase plasticity, for example THC, the main psychoactive chemical in cannabis and also psilocybin have ironically been shown to create new brains cells in those who ingest them! (So much for the propaganda that says your brain is an egg in a frying pan) LSD has been shown to actually change a person's DNA to increase brain plasticity and I believe it is only a matter of time before they find similar results with other entheogens. (Brain plasticity has been shown to effect changes in DNA without entheogens as well) So then, when you try a new kind of entheogen you have no associations for it, the closest comparison potentially being other entheogens you have tried and so your brain hasn't learned to function in that state of mind yet. This allows you to lay down circuitry which is not connected to anything in your normal consciousness, so that while you are high, all non entheogenic experiences of the physical world become in a sense associated and linked with that entheogen. It has also been shown that entheogens make people more suggestible, or we might say more impressionable in certain ways and since the brain hard wires circuits or ideas which it believes to be useful or true, entheogens can be used to make a circuit more permanent. Potentially any experience which is occurring during the trip will be more impressed in the brain if it takes the suggestions and since ritual and hypnotism are intimately related, an increase in suggestibility means an increase in gnosis or ability to have a ritual effect your consciousness. As the word "psychedelic" means "mind manifesting" we can see that this is a very apt name in terms of neuroplasticity, after all, whatever you have in mind while tripping will literally become more manifested in the brain.

When we combine ritual with entheogens as a Shaman would, it is a pretty safe conclusion to come to that we are capable of greatly increasing our potential for self directed neuroplasticity, that we can in fact make our brains and so our consciousness what we want them to be. What you do while you are high must surely effect how you will affect your brain and so if you consistently go out in nature you will learn to trip out in nature and connect with the life forms you find there. If you only use an entheogen ritually, or better yet each entheogen for a specific kind of ritual, (or astrological planet) you will have a very clearly defined circuit network of associations for that particular entheogen. This will work so that every time you take that entheogen, you will want to do things associated with that kind of mindset, thus allowing you to specialize according to your intentions. The more you associate that entheogen with consistent symbolism, the more you can link it to specific ritual acts and altered states of consciousness. This provides a distinct advantage compared to doing ritual with no entheogens since you would be starting from your mundane everyday state of consciousness, which of course already has associations with mundane non magickal things. However an entheogen that is only used in ritual circumstances, will only be wired for ritual intentions and so will only have the connotations of that intention, having no dilution from the mundane circuitry of everyday consciousness. The fact that entheogens also clearly and repeatedly provoke awareness of fractals, synesthesia, the unconscious, holistic awareness, visualization, euphoria and greater ability for symbolic interpretation, all show that it is a kind of awareness which lends itself very well to traditional methods of ritual and really entheogens are more than likely the main inspiration for the oldest spiritual rituals around the world.

Hypnotism and the placebo effect must be realities which can be utilized to maximize the efficiency of the wiring process, both of which are intimately linked with ritual. As I explained before, our brains choose which circuits to keep by how effective our brain considers the attempt of a person to be, so that when a person is successful in some attempt to "create a change in conformity with the will,” (magick) their brain remembers the connections that were used to do that action and the circuit for that skill becomes more deeply imprinted. This physical level of the learning process shows the importance of being positive in your attitude about your ability to learn things, specifically your ability to learn how to properly wire your brain. So then the first thing we must do is build up confidence that we are capable of changing our consciousness, once that wiring is in place, the Alchemy will go much smoother from then on. By having encouraging thoughts about our ability to do rituals, to do magick, to effect consciousness, astral project and learn “psychic” skills, or whatever we are trying to do, we can help to overcome doubt and the negative circuitry we have acquired through the unconscious growth of wiring in our brains. Even if we are not successful in a skill, it is important to watch our self talk, to affirm that failure as a positive experiment in the process of learning, rather than affirming it as a total failure that we are doomed to repeat.

If we do rituals without really believing they will work, if a person is paying lip service or going through the motions for their religion or their spiritual practices, they will never really create a spiritual consciousness. These people will only create circuits which reinforce the idea the practices or rituals are nothing but hollow and only worth going through the motions. For this reason passion and unflinching sincerity is important as well as positive thinking, so that the brain will prioritize and wire the successful aspects of the ritual consciousness. The same can be said of “Anarchists” who refuse to give up the idea their internal value systems are more important than others, that their circuitry is “good” while others are “evil.” That is such an attitude only reinforces hierarchical circuitry and moral superiority, albeit under the euphemism of being “politically correct” and in this way, they only pay lip service to Anarchy. The goal of ritual work is to learn control of your consciousness, to be able to access altered states, to be able to visualize and concentrate the mind and a variety of other things according to the nature of the ritual, so then if you simply go through the motions, you will obviously have no success.

Since the brain wires itself in this way, if you do not have honest intentions behind your ritual work, if you come to reality full of assumptions, if for example you are trying to do rituals for scientific reasons, all the while being a materialist atheist, you will achieve nothing but a validation and strengthening of what you already believed. Not only this you will reinforce the circuits of denial that you too are bias and so come to see yourself as an authority about reality. For these reasons a ritual that you make for yourself can be much more powerful than anything traditional, history is full of time tested methods, but all of them will fail if they are not personally meaningful to you, if they do not ring out the truth and are forced by fears of obligation. The Gnostic gospel of Thomas has many tips for utilizing neuroplasticity and when asked what practices a spiritual aspirant should undertake, Jesus tells sums this up nicely and says, “do not lie and do not do what you hate.”

By having sincerity in life we show our brain we value the truth, where as the more we are inauthentic with other people, the more we show our brain to what degree it is OK to be inauthentic in general and so with the self as well. As mirror neurons create a kind of neurological empathy, in that this part of the brain does not distinguish much between self and other, lying can neurologically become a justification for deceiving one's self. Much of how we treat other people must effect how our brains perceive reality simply by building up that circuitry and so what was originally defined as “good” in many spiritual traditions was in many cases what would produce the most self aware brain. I think as people look in to it they will find the factors for self awareness just so happens to be things like treating others as you would yourself, being sincere and avoiding things like envy and pride and in general things which are not conducive to creating Anarchy. After all, if creating Anarchy is challenging, it is a great work out for the brain requiring a wide range of skills.

Since the brain uses emotional response and the notion of success as the factors for determining which circuits are kept, rewarding yourself in some way is a means of increasing the brains priorities for specific ritual circuits. So then if you do a good ritual you get good ritual sex or masturbation at the end. Pleasant psychedelic effects, and successful application of the will to induce altered states or metaphysically alter reality are definitely other ways you can reward yourself in order to tell your brain that what you just did was important and that it should remember how to do those things and learn how to do them better. If psychedelics or sex are not for you, then give yourself a piece of chocolate or something you enjoy to emphasize the success, remember that if you fail, the experience is not a waste, you just learned how not to do something which is something helpful in your future learning. (The entheogen Chocolate also creates new brain cells and hot chocolate is a tasty and traditional way to take mushrooms.)

By having positive thinking in regards to rituals we set our brains up through practice to empower the rituals and the brain circuits, we fine tune them so that they become more and more powerful. Faith is useful in that it allows the brain to wire itself according to illogical or unproven things, until eventually the circuitry is in place to create the mindset that allows for success and material proof. So then faith allows for the circuits needed to create the perception that is desired, such as the perception that ritual and meditation will give eternal bliss known as enlightenment or heal the body through the placebo effect. If you have never had a mystical experience, the idea that you are one with the universe is hard to imagine, so then it can be hard to be optimistic about your ability to work magick. So in order for magickal symbols to be effective for you, you need to have "faith" in them until you start to see results and until you have proven to yourself that the symbol has meaning, by which time your brain will have a sturdy circuit. If each time you meditate, you think to yourself that you suck and that it will never work, then without the faith or positive thinking, all you will do by meditating is wire yourself more and more into a reality where you really do suck at meditation or into a world where magick does not exist.

Another pitfall to avoid is the idea that finding the right guru or teacher will get you to enlightenment, all this thinking does is reinforce the circuitry that says you are not capable by yourself, that you must rely on external sources of authority rather than look within for the truth. Teachers can offer great advice, I highly recommend reading lots and lots of things, but it's important to remember the truth is beyond words and so it can never be taught, you can learn a practice, you can learn great philosophies and scripture, but without the context of the truth beyond abstraction, you will only wire your brain to master those practices and think in linguistic terms. These same principles can be applied to studying and interpreting mystical texts, or any form of education spiritual or otherwise. If you simply accept at face value what you are told, memorizing a few facts so you can pass a test, you will not have real understanding, you will not be capable of being able to figure things out for yourself, problem solve, or think outside the box, you will only have created circuits that make you a mimic of someone who does have understanding. Christianity has created an attitude that all you need to do is believe some key things (the Nicene creed) and you will get in to heaven and a similar attitude is found in modern education and has effected how many people try to learn things. A guru may truly be enlightened, but anything they say about it will not be the true cornerstone of reality, it will necessarily be an abstraction built upon it, even if it is right next to it, it is not it and although you can build circuitry off the abstraction that is wonderful, it is a neural branch rooted in the abstraction, rather than the cornerstone itself. Entheogens are great in this respect as they can give you access to the real cornerstone and from there you can draw from various religions and mystical traditions to build up your own paradigm. So while listening to the advice of others who have been there before is great, with entheogens you will know what is in line with your own cornerstone and what is not. This means you will not be dependent on the advice of gurus for awareness, you will only accept what rings true for you, what meshes well with your own experience.

Although it is ultimately up to you personally, the Occult can offer people a myriad of ideas for customizing or creating their own spiritual practice, one which is in line with your specific needs and level of awareness. Mastering a path is not good enough, to be a true master you need to know how to make your own path and know that no one else needs to follow it but you. To say there is only one practice which leads to enlightenment is garbage, each person needs different things to get through the specific archons which have grown into their brains and what's more they need something which is personally fulfilling, not something which they feel forced into because they think it's the only way. This is like saying I have learned how to be enlightened for you and you just need to do what I say to gain it, but no one can learn how to be enlightened for you, a person can only learn for themselves and relate what worked for them. If a person becomes enlightened through a particular practice or guru, it is because they have grown beyond it, they have looked past the abstractions to what lies beyond. Those who have made it did so by taking personal responsibility and transcended the practice itself and found where it was pointing to, the place within themselves, they have stopped depending on external things and used their own power to access the cornerstone.

Remember that repetition works, repetition works, repetition works, repetition works to lay down circuits in your mind. This does not mean that magick does not actually effect the outside world, but that by learning to control the structure of the brain, you can learn to control the structure of your mind and it is your mind and everyone else's that creates physical reality. This continuous reiteration and strengthening of circuitry is also the reason why good intentions and altruism is so important to ritual and meditative work. If your only goal is to get ego gratification from ritual work, you will just reinforce selfish egotism and in this way become "seduced" by "demons" as so many Occult grimoires warn. This is why absolute purity of intention is required to achieve enlightenment, for if you are lying to yourself, if you have selfish reasons of ego gratification for pursuing the Occult, if you use it to feel superior to others, you will not create circuits of total happiness and awareness, but instead lay down circuits of self deceit and vain delusions of grandeur. As the Buddhists know, "Watch your thoughts: They become your words. Watch your words: They become your actions. Watch your actions: They become your habits. Watch your habits: They become your character. Watch your character: It becomes your destiny."

Whileentheogens are very useful for ritual and spiritual work, it is true that you can potentially have a total out of body experience without much effort, you can even find your cornerstone and foundations, but without integrating that knowledge and acting on it when you come down, it will all grow back. It may be you are changed forever, but it may be that your ego just gets rebuilt bigger than ever, using the increased knowledge of the foundation to build a bigger base to build higher and more decadent paradigms than ever. Accessing the spirit world onentheogens can be easy in that you only have to eat or smoke something, but dealing with the experience and making the most of it are extremely challenging and require long hours of sober work and realigning your life to meet the core truths that you discovered. If you are determined to be a jack ass and reassert the local cultural values of materialist consumerism, then it is very possible to over time forget the experiences which shook you down to your foundations. Entheogens can provide you with the transcendent cornerstone that has no abstractions, that allows you to build in line with truth non hierarchically, but like all brain circuits, if you don't use it, you lose it. So although you may never forget aspects of the trip, you can bury it in a ton of neural memetic garbage and in this way you can distract yourself back into wilful ignorance, perhaps brushing it off as some chemical reaction or a bad dream. If you are sincere in your attempts, if you really want to change your life, then the integration of such experiences, followed up by direct action and changing of habits can sustain thatentheogenic circuitry and allow it to grow into your spiritual paradigm. Theentheogens can show you the truth, but it's up to you to act on it, to live in accordance with it and to try and understand its implications and this is what ritual and meditation can help you do, because they are the neurological and memetic progression from the context of that experience. So although you can share information about that progression, you can never really transmit the context withoutentheogens and this is because they provide the experiences and so they provide the seeds which you then tend and garden with the rituals.

People raised in a technological society which discounts Shamanic healing will not have the brain circuitry or the same placebo advantages as a person raised in the rainforest and who doesn't know what a pill is. If you have been raised in a tribal Shamanic culture, where the only way to heal was through the Shaman, you will be wired to heal through rituals and quite possibly have a much greater placebo effect than someone who came to believe in ritual healing much later on in life. Perhaps modern medicines success is largely rooted in the fact that it works on people with technological brains which subscribe to ideas about science and the requirement of more sophisticated medicines. Double blind tests are good, and I am not discounting the idea that chemicals can have effects on chemical organisms (which we and all germs and bacteria are) in fact humans evolved with plant chemicals to naturally treat organisms and chemicals like penicillin are the result of the natural evolution of these plants, fungi and molds. However when used in conjunction with the placebo effects of receiving a pill, (since all westerners know what medicine is, even if they don't know what it is for) from a scientist or doctor in western people who have grown their brains around the idea that modern medicine and pills cure illness, we create a body and brain that reacts to pills better. I suspect if a person raised in the rainforest with no knowledge of modern societies (all too few tribal peoples like that still) were given a pill when sick and were dosed without knowing, the medicine would have less efficacy. Certainly tribal peoples have benefited from modern medicines but they are also aware of modern societies, at least to some degree, they are also usually aware that they are taking medicine.

The placebo effect may be a side effect of the evolutionary advantages of ritualism and since entheogens can increase suggestibility they can increase the placebo effect and so entheogenic rituals would have an evolutionary advantage by increasing the life expectancy of those tribes of people who use them to heal and come into union with the natural world. While science is aware of the placebo effect, it has generally done a terrible job at utilizing it, believing that if a person knows that the placebo effect is all there is that it will not work, when really they should be teaching children how to use their minds to heal themselves consciously and then if needed add modern medicine to the treatment. What science overlooks is that there are evolutionary advantages to being in union with the environment which is what evolved us, as well as advantages to regarding these life originating systems as sacred. (For example not destroying the environment which we are all dependent on). By wiring ourselves to be consciously more prone to the placebo effect we can learn to heal ourselves to a better degree and we can also learn to hypnotize ourselves into being both more rational and more intuitive, as well as being able to systematically structure our minds to become even more pliable and effective. Another more spiritual way of looking at it could be that Shamanic cultures have greater neural circuitry for the allowance of awareness of a real spiritual and energetic world which allows for healing and consciousness on a whole other level of reality.

It could be the reason Indigenous cultures seem to be more in tune with nature is because they literally are, that is being raised in such an environment has created brains that see more information in the natural world. This upbringing allows for a truly deeper connection than someone who was raised in a city or suburbia, in front of the TV and taught that humanity is separate from nature, if not at war with it. In fact science has shown that your language can determine what colours you are able to see, that some people in Africa have words for colours that Europeans cannot see. When experiments were carried out it was shown that these Africans could easily distinguish between shades of blue that Europeans could not, or could barely distinguish. Likewise Europeans could distinguish certain shades the Africans could not and which the Africans had no words for, so that it would seem that language, gender and age all contribute to shape our perceptions!

Entheogens if not physically making our minds more pliable do make the memetic and immaterial portions of consciousness more pliable or open to new suggestions and since all consciousness eventually congeals or shapes the brain itself, entheogens can be used to shape the brain. When you have laid down firm circuits through ritual, memorized it thoroughly and can access distinct states of mind without entheogens, or only using marijuana, by using that ritual with entheogens, you can use it to profoundly alter the trip according to will by accessing those circuits. So it is Shamanism is a process that is utilized, which allows for the customization of entheogenic experiences according to will. Ritalin could potentially be used while learning the rituals for later entheogenic use, as it too has been demonstrated to physically increase brain plasticity, hence its use with those who have ADD. While I don't usually encourage the use of pharmaceuticals and marijuana is definitely better for rituals, it is true that Ritalin allows people with ADD to more easily take information and so Ritalin or something like it may provide advantages to consciously wiring the brain as well.

With the experiences and stimulus provided by entheogens and ritualism, the mind gains experiences which allow it to shape the brain in ways it never would be able to without, especially if a person relies on the mass media and pop culture for all their information. When people use psychedelics carelessly and without specific intention and without the use of ritual it could very well rewire their brains in unexpected ways, some of which are not very useful, for example some people open themselves up to the astral more than they are ready for and go into "psychosis." Others may have delusional beliefs or be rewired in any number of unintended and unpleasant ways, for this reason proper ability and intent is crucial to using entheogens.

Many have theorized that it is possible through ritual to train the brain to consciously make and release large amounts of DMT according to will and so produce spiritual experiences on command. I personally think it is quite possible that ancient forms of Yoga and meditation have been doing this without knowing what DMT is, as there is so many significant coincidences relating the two. While exactly how and why DMT is created by the body is still a mystery, it is found in the cerebrospinal fluid through the ventricles as per the ancient philosophies and while no one knows for sure, it has been found in the pineal glands of live rats and may be created there in humans. (Which has long been associated with the "seat of the soul" and the "third eye" chakra) This ability may be the philosopher's stone, or it may be something else entirely, but the controlled release of DMT could very well lead to the ability to experience interior landscapes and beyond, like a lucid dream with total control, however this is definitely an untested theory.

It could be that one of the potential reasons we dream, is that dreams allow us to sort out the neural circuitry, deal with them and do some gardening, or Alchemy with them. In fact scientists have found that by doing things in dreams we get better at these skills and so we must be wiring our brains. No doubt this would be even more effective when combined with Shamanism, lucid dreaming and certain plants called "oneirogens," which are drugs that have traditionally been used to help induce lucid dreaming. By learning to lucid dream and do rituals within the dream, we could no doubt have a very powerful means of changing our neural circuitry, interacting with it (especially if we have personified circuits) and making our brains more functional in our waking state. Like utilizing entheogens, lucid dreaming could be used to create a visual and sensory depiction of our brain's circuitry, once we can consciously work with the circuits by evoking them in a lucid dream, we would be able to program them to a very high degree. (As they are part of the astral realm, dreams are traditionally a very powerful place to do magick of any sort) Modern society has largely ignored its dreams but they used to play a central role in the spirituality of all kinds of Pagan and Indigenous people and as they are commonly thought of as the lower parts of the astral, we could use them to change the "thought forms" before they harden in to our brains.

I do not believe that consciousness is limited to the brain, but that the brain is the symbolic representation of the mind which is formed in the imagination or consensus reality and is only perceived physically. There are perhaps aspects of consciousness that go beyond the ability of the physical brain and into the spiritual, but the fact remains, brain plasticity is of vital importance for reaching those spiritual and immaterial realities. Ritual teaches us that through manipulation of the symbol, you manipulate the mind, but ultimately all is one anyways and the distinction between mind and symbol is itself a projection. In fact I believe the fact that we have a physical reality is because of the metaphysical circuitry that underlies the brain itself, so that by acquiring circuits that allow us to go beyond the physical, we will work more on an energetic level than a physical level represented by brain circuitry. Entheogenic and ritual experiences that produce out of body experiences will be very crucial to accessing these deeper levels of reality and those who do not consciously develop their brains to be aware of metaphysical realities will not be. Because of this, most people today will miss out on a lot of information that their consciousness is potentially capable of knowing. That which is “Occult” in the everyday, or that which is spoken in the “green language” is quite possibly just information that becomes accessible through Occult training and or the circuits of awareness that are made possible through entheogenic use.

While there is really no way to know for sure, the more I learn, the more it seems that pre-linguistic hominids developed rituals as a form of rudimentary communication and accepted social etiquette. We can see ritual behaviour in many animals of all kinds, Neanderthals buried their dead with flowers and mementos and so are we to believe that such values have played no role in our own evolution? Writing is generally seen in its origins as a divine and magickal tool to direct consciousness and specifically in a ritual manner and as the logos is the means by which consciousness is directed, it is quite literally “the word made flesh” in the brains of humans. Perhaps complex language, or abstract thinking in humans itself evolved out of rituals, in that in order to get a group of creatures on the same page, or acknowledging the group will and identity, (culture) it is necessary to have repetitive and meaningful actions which are acknowledged and performed by its members. Rituals would have been deemed especially necessary by our ancestors ever since they took up using entheogens, in that rituals would allow them to better control their experiences, better understand them and learn how to utilize them properly. So as the culture of entheogenic use evolved memetically, so too did our ability for self directed neuroplasticity and with that came greater awareness and so greater capacities for abstraction and more complex rituals. (Especially with the extra brain cells THC and psilocybin provide) Eventually it is not hard to see how this could take the form of creating different sounds, postures, and natural tools given meanings for the purposes of sympathetic magick.

Many Shamanic cultures which use entheogens say they originally learned the magick from the plant spirits and in the process of this it is possible they first taught us complex language that was beyond ordinary animal language. Combined with the awareness amplifying aspects of entheogens, the general increase in salience and ability to interpret non verbal communication as well as abstract thinking, all of this allows for a much more meaningful imprinting of neural circuitry. From certain anthropology papers on the nature of early rituals, it seems quite possible to me and others language and culture are the result of the ritualizing of entheogens. Any half intelligent animals taking entheogens would have realized that spiritual or pleasurable and meaningful experiences are much more likely when done with the right set and setting and from this, even without verbal language it would naturally arise that through specific kinds of group participation, specific kinds of experiences can be achieved. While in these entheogenic states, these early humans would require new levels of subtle and specific forms of communication, especially if they wished to explain their experiences to each other. This then would spur the development of language faculties, providing a very real motivation, as well as a euphoric state of mind that in many ways seems to be custom created for inspiring ritual and abstraction of all kinds.

Entheogens provide the motivation and chemical reactions for neurological modification and ritual provides the method of doing this according to will. Music, poetry and art are all probably originally inspired through entheogenic experiences and through them we are given the building blocks of ritual and it is through analyzing these building blocks that we develop logic and critical thinking. These are faculties we use to learn to determine which effects these forms of art have on the ritual and how they can be modified to improve the ritual and convey more meaning to other individuals. Through communion with an entheogenic sacrament, different groups of creatures will achieve through their newly created ritual languages, a common structure of information transmission. This structure will be one which will eventually allow them to form the basic forms of a society, eventually working so that they can interact on the complex levels which humans often express themselves. With the advent of ritual, we have the advent of memes, and through memes evolve language and through the advent of language we get societies and so all the rest of it eventually snowballs out.

All forms of society are essentially ritualistic in nature, though not necessarily having spiritual intentions, through the memetic evolution of rituals we have created the banking and legal systems, we have created religion and social organization and we have the roots of all science and art. Clearly not all ritual is white magick, but I believe black magick flourishes when people have lost the context of the ritual and have lost awareness of the original inspiration for the rituals. Black magick flourishes when we accept the rituals of people who claim they will give us enlightenment, but which fail to provide a direct experience of the divine. When people do not really know what magick or ritual is, it is easy to trick them into doing black magick rituals, especially if they believe all magick is evil, because they will never bother to learn how they have been duped and how they can start practising white magick. We all practice rituals and magick within each action we perform, within each part of culture that we identify with and so to try and abolish magick ritual, dismiss it all as evil or superstitious is the height of ignorance and an exorcise in futility.

Since we have lost our connection to nature we have lost the context of all our rituals and so spiralled out of control to engineer memetic rituals which are severely destructive, but given our modern awareness we have also increased our capacity for analyzing the effects of our rituals and our ability to consciously mould our own brains. By bringing all this knowledge together we can develop the potential to create a society based around rituals which are designed to bring about diversity and harmony of perspectives, Anarchism, and a state of awareness that is capable of spreading the life force throughout the universe in peaceful manner. We do not have to be slaves to our OCD rituals, we can learn to have autonomy, but it requires a dedication to increasing our self awareness, it requires the will to take responsibility for our actions and to learn how to control our minds.

When you spend enough time consciously raising awareness of awareness, you may begin to feel your mind grow with each increase in understanding, this is the feeling of epiphany, perhaps you felt it just there with that realization, and there, and there, etc. This feels to me like my brain wiring itself, the feeling of a new neural connection, what you would have just felt with that epiphany is the neural connection that you can feel neural connections. I would also like to suggest that our general mindset and moods are often determined by how we linguistically or symbolically wire our brains. As words are memes and each meme is a circuit, the feeling of epiphany is the feeling of taking in a meme that connects two previously separate circuits in an enlightening way. From this understanding we might say they team up through association and become more powerful and functional, that this new connection allows for faster and more accurate cognitive functioning and so the feeling of epiphany, is the feeling we get when we free up more brain power for other areas of consciousness.

Logic would be the language we use to determine how to wire or structure our neural circuitry, how to build from what we have already hardwired and integrate it into the whole of our paradigms. Intuition would be the acquisition of in-formation through the energetic feeling of the correct harmonic resonance with the neural circuitry we already possess. That is to say we can sometimes tell which circuit or "note" should come next through energetic cognition as opposed to the linguistic cognition of logic, something which is much like knowing what notes should come next in music to make it harmonious and fit within the song. (Or how the fractal pattern should progress) We could also say that the combination of memes a person has create a gestalt note, a group frequency made up of the sum of all the circuits. Whether or not a meme or belief is attractive or accepted by a person is often determined by how much it is in tune with them, people even say "that resonates" with me, as opposed to being in cognitive "dissonance." So it is they are saying that idea is easy for me to fit into my paradigm logically, or at least that it intuitively makes sense from what they already believe. Those who wire their brains in an unpleasant way could be said to have emotional baggage, or what I would suggest is a lack of flow for their connections which feeds back and festers to reaffirm the negative programming and cognitive dissonance which remains unconscious due to poor logic skills.

Cognitive dissonance is the uneasy feeling of having conflicting circuitry and beliefs and I believe we have an innate (or at least memetic) drive to sort out cognitive dissonance. In this urge we will also shut out lots of in-formation that is dissonant to our present mindset, or circuitry but may still be true, we may also accept beliefs just because they fit our wishful thinking, that is it feels good with the circuits we have. The origin of bias is the desire to avoid beliefs which will require us to change the circuits we have emotional attachments to, especially those which we base our everyday actions on, as it these circuits which are more deeply implanted in our brains. (Such as in the cerebellum) Cognitive dissonance is the opposite feeling of epiphany, for it is a stress that points out the irregularities in the paradigm or personal circuitry and in order to sort it out or avoid it, especially when faced by people who have totally different paradigms, we can tend towards all kinds of irrational and even violent behaviour no matter who we are. Our wars are the battles of brain circuitry infecting humans and struggling for supremacy over each other's cattle or livestock and oh how we willingly march to the slaughterhouse. Cognitive dissonance occurs when we have different beliefs that are not connected into a cohesive whole and which therefore compete for awareness, causing a less efficient brain and an awareness that is more open to manipulation by those who can see the big picture. On one level at least, cognitive dissonance is the dissonance of two different electrical frequencies in the brain which are not in harmony with each other, which do not produce the melodies of a functional consciousness. This dissonance could also change brain chemistry to emotionally destabilize a person and in this way make them more prone to behaviour patterns which amplify the growth of the circuits which are in dissonance, so that in this way, a person gets caught in an archon loop.

While really seeking the truth about the limitations of our free will and objectivity is scary, it is through critical thinking, logic, intuition, imagination and experimentation and very importantly through ritual, (since ritual can incorporate all of these processes and more) that we can identify where we have cognitive dissonance and eventually achieve greater levels of autonomy. Psychedelics can aid with this in that they can make us aware of dormant or subconscious neural circuitry and provide a dramatic reevaluation of our minds, increasing our capability for interpreting symbols they allow us to see connotations which normally go unnoticed. Entheogens also commonly produce feelings of interconnected unity, allowing the brain to experience a mind with little or no awareness of cognitive dissonance, creating new connections where none had existed before and in some cases showing the true nature of archon circuits which potentially bring a person into a state of fear. (or the "bad trip") Psychedelics bring awareness to cognitive dissonance since that energy must be transmuted or brought into harmony when it is activated with all the others, making the cognitive dissonance more obvious when all or at least many of the brain circuits are activated together, this can be thought of as tuning a guitar by playing chords and listening for out of tune strings. When all these methods are combined with intention and followed through with ritual, we have an excellent means of streamlining the brains functioning and eliminating cognitive dissonance, so that the brain no longer works against itself.

I find it an interesting idea that our electrical impulses could be the source of the long talked about magickal or metaphysical energy, and if this is true then the circuits of our brains could be what determine the harmonic frequency of our metaphysical energy. In this view the brain as a whole acts as a kind of broadcaster of our general energetic state so that according to what circuits we have, we will have different kinds of consciousness. Our consciousness determines our reality and so we will come to manifest that consciousness in one way or another. Those without much "gold" will not be putting out the right "vibes" to have a very happy life and their ability to manifest consciously will not be recognized because they literally cannot do it (at least not well) with their current beliefs or circuitry. Entheogens undoubtedly affect the brain on an electromagnetic level in that they affect the electrical impulses which create electromagnetic fields and from my experience it seems very possible that the euphoria created by entheogens is the inflow of information from the global magnetic field, or akashic records of nature. When combined with the proper ritual setting there is no doubt very specific and functional states of awareness that can be created and produce effects which are relatively unexplained by modern science. This may sound far out, but humans encode information into the electromagnetic spectrum all the time through radio and television, not to mention by arranging atoms which are kept in place by electromagnetism. Could it be there are other natural means of encoding mental information within the electromagnetic fields of nature? Could this be within the Earth, so that humans could learn to access it by altering their brains according to ritual?

I am not saying that all forms of consciousness are necessarily made of electromagnetism, everything that exists is made of consciousness, all subatomic particles and all forces, but electromagnetism seems to be the most likely form of the most practical and interactive forms of consciousness. Many spiritual traditions do basically claim this, but they just have not been specific about how this might be scientifically explainable, they at least knew of something with all the qualities of magnetism, which they call by many names. The magicians of old often seem to be more aware of it then we can prove and I am far from the first person to speculate about the role electromagnetism has played in ancient mysticism. All of this “Chaos” is made into order through various forms of ritual, which then shapes the brain to create a suitable conductor of the energy with which it resonates and when combined with entheogens is capable of making our consciousness aware of these realities on command.

This idea is made more realistic when we learn of the scientific experiments which were done with the “Koren helmet,” which is a helmet that generates magnetic fields in specific patterns around the brain. These magnetic fields are shown to effect consciousness and create altered states of awareness, including a variety of spiritual and even out of body experiences, though more commonly experiences of a disembodied presence in the room. Through “tectonic strain theory” natural magnetic fields have been shown to be connected to, or directly responsible for acts of fairies and poltergeists, or even UFOs. These occur in certain electromagnetic hot spots around the world, or before an earthquake when there is a spike in the electromagnetic field, there are far more reports of paranormal events occurring. This is basically what ancient traditions have said all along and it sheds light on a variety of things, for example providing a reason why iron horse shoes are considered lucky, as they disrupt unwanted electromagnetic fields and are said to keep the mischievous “fairies” away. An Iron knife or sword is also traditionally used for banishings and in the grimoire of the Goetia demons that were to be summoned were organized according to planets and all of the traditional planets are used except for Mars, which happens to be associated with iron. This metal would have been a key part of the ritual, but the reason there are no Mars demons must be that iron disrupts the electromagnetic frequencies required for this type of Occult work. (This is something to keep in mind with rituals, not to mention all the electromagnetic pollution and wiring in the modern world which could be disrupting things.) “Biomagnetism” guides fish and birds, it helps sharks hunt and it effects even cows, who always stand in fields according to north and south, is it really so farfetched that we may be more effected by magnetic fields then we are aware of? Men even have a little iron in their nose which acts like a compass and generally gives them a better sense of direction then women.

Crop circles and alien visitation and other visions and strange experiences have time and again been shown to occur when there are strong electromagnetic forces and in some cases may be the Earth or spirits within the Earth trying to re-establish contact with us. Both Fairies and aliens reportedly abduct and interbreed with people, effect time perception and can take you to strange worlds, fairies were also traditionally thought to cause crop circles where they were “dancing” or where natural vortex's form. The fact that fairies or nature spirits are commonly seen throughout the world and all of world history and so far as we know prehistory and especially through the ingestion of entheogens only adds to this theory, especially since except for some modern day western psychonauts, some form of ritual is almost always involved.

As our brains change perception according to our expectations and circuitry, this would explain why some people used to see fairies and elves and now see aliens, as it is more in line with what our modern brain would expect. (But then things like fairies, angels and gods etc would by definition essentially be aliens) That is the reason most people do not see fairies anymore, is because we are not wired to see them, we screen them out, we may even lack the physiological apparatus in the brain to perceive them because we are so out of tune with nature. This is not to say that all creatures presenting themselves as aliens are fairies, or that fairies are really from another planet, I do believe that things in nature have spirits, but that either some creatures make themselves look like aliens, or we perceive them in this way because it seems more realistic to our brain. In the Celtic tradition there are all kinds of Fae, or Sidhe and they take on all kinds of forms and there are all kinds of species. Some species are more malevolent than others, some are actually our ancestor spirits, some are nature spirits as I said, some are vampiric and some are something all together different. The ancients definitely didn't think that all the Fae were benevolent pixies, and some are pretty well like archons and certainly caused people all kinds of problems and created all kinds of fears. What we call Fairies today was really all manner of spiritual beings in the Celtic world, from "gods" to "demons," some may have even been the indigenous peoples hiding in subterranean stone age homes built into the hills our mounds after Celtic colonization, bewitching some lucky lone schmuck with a potion and incredible music.

In general we have lost communication with the most intelligent parts of the discarnate spirit world, the nature spirits of plants and rocks etc because we have no memories and no context for such stimulus and so we screen it out. In one documentary I saw it pointed out how alien abduction reports in Britain drastically increased in sightings of the classic "greys" once movies and TV shows started coming from the USA. Up until then the reported aliens were quite different from ones in different parts of the world and while a skeptic might dismiss this as a figment of the imagination, it is the imagination which shapes all our perceptions. In a sense there could be an alien standing right in front of you and you wouldn't see it because it is so completely out of your reality construct. Such a reality would probably be so challenging to the beliefs of the brain that it would repress all stimulus from the alien. When severely traumatized by say molestation, it is possible for a child to totally repress the reality of what happened, could it be spirits or aliens are traumatizing us? Probably not in any way like a paedophile, (though anal probing does seem to come up a lot!) but if you were a devout Christian seeing an alien or fairy, it would probably seem demonic and so scary you may just black it out, and seeing something that weird would put most people off. Likewise if you are obsessed with aliens or really want to see aliens, you may just trick yourself in to seeing what you want to see, when it might as well just be a jet, or quite possibly government technology we don't know about. I do think the appearance of aliens would certainly help an archon or fear vampire to provoke the emotions it wants in order to feed, it would also do this for modern people who do not believe in demons as our subconscious is full of such images. Nature spirits on the other hand are not trying to feed on us and so do still appear as nature spirits on entheogens, though maybe the real reason we don't see them so much otherwise is because we destroyed their natural habitat!

All of physical reality is vibrating strings and these strings in my experience vibrate according to definable systems of frequency, even if these are artificial imprints on a chaotic field, it is through evolution and systematic shaping of consciousness through ritual that our perception and hence our reality is made manifest. Ritual is the focus of awareness for acts of magick and magick is the implementation of the will to create a change and so it is through ritual that consciousness magickally creates physical reality from the electromagnetic frequencies. This electromagnetic field works through the principles of quantum physics to collapse waves which we focus on, into particles and works to hold matter together in a linear perception of time and space. This perception then comes to be symbolized by a configuration of brain circuitry, like brain sigils that become more empowered the more we think of or experience those specific perceptions. If quantum waves collapse into particles when consciousness chooses to observe them, then magick according to Crowley's definition is the means by which all of physical matter is created for us. Magickal energy is not necessarily electromagnetism, or only electromagnetism, but all forms of energy known or unknown. This is because if energy is defined in physics as the ability to do work, and magick is successfully exercising the will, then work done in accordance with will is an act of magick and all energy (which includes all things with mass) is the potential ability to do magick. Electromagnetism as at least an aspect of consciousness is in many ways the energy of the will and so it is what manipulates or vibrates the strings or energies of nature for magickal ends.

Speaking of string theory, according to the Quantum physicist Michio Kaku, "physics would essentially be the laws of harmony you could play on strings, chemistry would be the melodies you could play on strings, the universe would be a symphony of vibrating strings and the mind of god that Einstein eloquently wrote about, would be cosmic music resonating through hyperspace." I doubt Dr. Kaku has much esoteric knowledge but his metaphor is essentially an explanation of the basic theories of Pythagoras and Hermetic Alchemy, though recently I found out he has admitted he is "dazzled" by how much string theory is "mirrored" in the Zohar and Kabbalah. If physicists studied the Occult they would find Qabalah and Alchemy goes far beyond this and into theories which were previously mocked by scientists, but which correspond to many things science is only now figuring out. We can definitely say that ancient Alchemists and mystics likened the seven planets to musical notes and that they were represented in metallic form through the elements and that these also relate to the colours of the rainbow as an expression of the fractal idea of "as above so below." Pythagoras and others went into long detail about the musical nature of reality, he even invented the western musical scale according to astrological principles he believed were creating a symphony known as the "music of the spheres." We find this idea of sound playing a role in ancient physics not only in the western Greek traditions, but around the world and from prehistoric times and as time goes on, science has shown this idea to be more and more to be accurate. (To the Norse the universe was made from the body of a giant called Ymir, who's name means big sound, or resounding one.)

Although ancient mystics may not of had the same jargon as physics, or the ability to be as specific in their definitions, they did seem to know something that is only now being rediscovered and although some of the specifics may turn out differently, they did agree with much of quantum theory, especially its relationship to consciousness. As our brains wire themselves according to our internal dialogue, it may be the electromagnetic frequencies created by these physical circuits, (which are themselves made up of atoms which are collapsed quantum waves that are not physical as most understand it) and which grow in a fractal fashion, work to create the resonances that vibrate the quantum strings that make up our perception. When you resonate with something you are self similar with it and in a way part of the same fractal and so by changing your language or formulas of symbolic expression, you can wire your brain to be in resonance with divine or magickal things. If you do this, you are changing the fractal of your consciousness to be self similar with those things and since the physical stems from consciousness, you can also change the physical world.

Even if this is not exactly true, in my experience it is a model or metaphor that works to allow consciousness to metaphysically interact with reality to a much fuller degree. Non linguistic stimulus can affect the brain, but it is through language, verbal or non verbal but always symbolic, that we have the means of ordering and consciously wiring the brain. The harmonic resonances created by the brain express themselves in a fractal manner, which is reflected in a larger expression through physical reality and so time would be the changing interplay of these forces. Reality impresses or imprints the brain and the brain expresses through thought and feeling the consciousness of that reality, which creates the Ouroboros fractal feedback loop we call existence. Whether or not science can prove this, by implementing it as a model we can scientifically verify that we can make changes in our lives which eventually allow us to achieve our will or practice magick more consistently, because it allows us to engage in self directed neuroplasticity to a greater degree.

Once we see our brain circuitry is analogous to the iterations of the fractal formulas of our minds, or the paradigm reality algebra that creates perception, we can start to become conscience of the basic sensory formulas to which we input different “numerical” values or stimulus. The colours of the fractals could be thought of as our emotional responses to these patterns and so long as our formulas remain the same, we experience an endless variety of cyclical patterns, circuit configurations which are always unique, but always resembling the same pattern. These patterns would be our psychological cycles and trains of thought and personal rituals, the repetitive nature of our character and the herding effect of our archon shepherds to do things we know we shouldn't do. We can change the numerical value, or stimulus we attribute to the formula, but as we iterate the equation, the value inevitably becomes a bigger and bigger part of our life and our brain, such as how we may not be emotionally stimulated by our job, but if you do it long enough it becomes part of you. Changing the emotional value of the same fractal formula is not enough, the patterns will ultimately be the same, only of different sizes and varieties of colours. The only way to truly change the formula is to change the actions, to change the circuits themselves and to do this we must first have the self knowledge to recognize when we are stuck in a loop and being led by archons.

If we do not correct the mistakes then they will manifest in larger in larger patterns which are greater amplifications of the same essential pattern, often after making the same mistake over enough times we do learn our lessons, such as in war and in governments the problem has to be right in your face and unavoidable before we can recognize where we are going wrong. The reason it can be so hard to recognize destructive patterns is because they are so ever present in everything, we get mesmerized by the pretty colours and the seemingly different expressions of the same pattern so that we do not connect their common origin. These formulas are so fundamental to our being that changing them can release a lot of unpleasant emotional energy while our memetic paradigms readjust, collapse and regrow.

All this is potentially an obvious experience that is made possible for consciousness through the entheogenic experience and it is also why entheogens (and other forms of Shamanic and Occult ritual methods of raising awareness) are able to help the brain create a world which is in resonance with the frequency of the mind. Entheogens can thus create a sympathetic universe that is in accordance with the emotional energy that expresses itself through the brain and it's ritual circuitry. Only by learning to overcome cognitive dissonance, which is essentially the logical extension of electromagnetic dissonance found within the brain, can we come into resonance with the universal frequency of the all and thus access all of the information found within the universal spectrum. By overcoming our cognitive dissonance, by living in accordance with our true will, our actions match our inner frequencies and perceptions and we move our awareness to a greater level of pure resonance with itself. By this we achieve a brain that is broadcasting in a more unified manner and hence a stronger vibration, or louder note which becomes capable of changing the resonance of the surrounding environment to a greater degree. This then allows consciousness to fall into sync with the natural rhythms which have created all awareness and possess all information and which are the roots of all matter and metaphysical energies. This allows for our union with other creatures and forms of matter and creates a consciousness devoted to maintaining harmonies that are capable of sustaining the universal resonance within an endless variety of frequencies. Once in resonance with the god/esshead, these minds are then capable of adding to the universal vibration a greater level of awareness, achieved through the perception of time space and the illusion of different points of view. Moksha, bliss and ecstasy, the windless sales of nirvana are achieved when we cease struggling against the universal current of frequency and instead we surrender to our natural inclination to come into alignment with the Tao, or forces of nature.

If we think of the brain as an instrument, by activating a neural circuit you are sounding a note and like an instrument if we do not tune it, it can get quite out of whack, making all kinds of unpleasant and unwanted cognitive dissonance. By combining symbols in ritual we allow for the tuning of the brain according to a specific note or frequency and so become capable of making the notes we want. Once we are tuned up, by combining different sensory perceptions, each with a symbol that is consistent with the other senses symbols, we can in effect play a chord on our brain and create much more resonance and energy according to the frequency we want. For example, having the mantra for astrological Jupiter, as well as the incense and colour etc all working together, fires up more parts of the brain simultaneously and so generates more vibration in the Jupiter note. This sounds the note far louder than if we were to just do a mantra or use only one sense and so we can literally put more energy into the ritual, since there will be more energy in the brain created which is tuned to "Jupiter." Playing one string on a guitar is not as resonant or loud as playing a whole chord which uses multiple strings and so it is with ritual and the brain. By usingentheogens we can even plug in our acoustics and essentially go electric, blasting out incredibly powerful and loud notes. However, if you do not know how to play your instrument, you probably won't come up with anything very intentional or structured and quite possibly it won't be enjoyable to experience or listen to.

Through colours and objects like crystals, metals and plants, electromagnetic frequencies are theoretically used in ritual to bring the mind to a state of resonance with the setting. So according to Occult theory, the symbol systems of these Occult schools are like maps of electromagnetic frequency taking physical form and are those frequencies which are in harmony with the metaphysical electromagnetic properties of consciousness, both individual and universal.

These terms or maps may be more vague than science, but this is not due to the ignorance of their founders, but because they are terms meant to imply the more complex, comprehensive, fundamental and unifying variables found within nature. These are the forces which not only correspond to electromagnetic spectrum, but a pattern of fractal structuring found throughout, or which can be imprinted on all forms of energy. By having a symbol which is vague, it can have connotations with many more things and so can be used to link a greater variety of circuits in the brain, links which can also be used to disguise communications through the green language and which can only be understood by those who are capable of the holistic awareness created by entering altered states. (Thus protecting the Alchemist or magician from groups like the inquisition.)

Sound definitely effects consciousness and so it affects the electromagnetic energy that is created by the brain, with drums and "infra-sound" as well as "bi-neural beats," consciousness can be manipulated to change it's frequency, so that it is more in tune with desired energies and can enter altered states. Infrasound is sound outside the spectrum which our conscious mind can detect, but it can vibrate the body and the brain and in this way create altered states of mind. This kind of thing was known by ancient peoples who created many temples and ritual spaces within caves and artificial structures that have very specific acoustic properties, properties that can help the ritual music bring consciousness into resonance or trance states with the Earth energies or spiritual energies. "Binaural beats" are when two tones are played in each side of headphones, so that each side has a different tone and so each hemisphere of the brain hears a different tone at the same time, which has the curious effect of creating altered states. With binaural beats science has found that the auditory portions of the brain can be very quickly changed, increasing plasticity to the point that one session can make significant changes the audio portion of the brain. (at least) These binaural beats can be used to deepen trance states for the purposes of meditation and ritual through the process of "entrainment," changing the brain waves to fit in resonance in accordance with the tones of the binaural beats. As a god of music, Tantric sex andentheogens and magick in general, if you allow him Zurk will also play an important role in your neurology and while I haven't done it personally, we might even make a one person Dysnomian temple with these technologies in mind. That is with some basic tools and skills a person could make their own sensory deprivation tank, perhaps in the shape of a pyramid with the Dysnomian sigil underneath and designed as an “orgone accumulator.” Underwater speakers could be placed in the tank to generate infrasound under the water, probably amplifying its ability to vibrate the body, then water proof head phones could produce binaural beats, all the while wearing a Koren helmet (available to buy online) and tripping on entheogens.

If the brain is organized according to the planets it can be organized according to the notes they make and according to mystic’s mathematics and so everything else can be thought of in terms of music. By assigning different energetic meanings to the different beats and infrasound notes, we can provide a useful anchor to focus the brain and all the other stimulus to bring about specific altered states of awareness. This is achieved through the activation of conglomerates of neural circuitry, located physically in the various sensory interpretation areas of the brain, (audio and visual cortex etc) as well as through inner visualization and a focused will which is all in tune with each other. Our brains are constantly making “music” in part called “neuro oscillations” and unless we learn to actively control what we are doing, we create a world where humanity plays against each other, where we are filled with out of tune people unconsciously making whatever noise they can because they think that it is out of their control. Because of this, these people are leaving it to the archons to play them and manifest the cultural dissonance and conflict that is all around us. We don't all have to play the same tune, but it does help if we all try to play A tune, instead of trying to drown each other’s music out and getting angry or apathetic when the world sounds like shit.

Instead of thinking in terms of classical music so much, with a conductor telling everyone what to do, we should start thinking more in terms of Punk Rock, Funk and Jazz music improv, allowing everyone to join in a song, letting them each do their own thing. A religion is like a song and dogmatic religious people think they each have the best song in the world, the only song worth singing and while a person can learn about music by learning only one song, they are still quite limited in their knowledge of music. A magician on the other hand is a person who can not only play a variety of songs, they can make up their own music because they have a mind (and brain) to understand music as a whole. While a religious person will despise other people's songs and obsessively practice their own, various magicians can speak to each other and learn each others music, using that universal language or Qabalah known as music theory. (Atheists it would seem are tone deaf)

Looking at the world from this view then, we see It is not us humans who rule, but infectious psychopathic neurological circuitry which inhabits and reproduces within the brains of all the people it can get to. When we create an archon or familiar, it may be born of our brain circuitry but in some cases may actually exist in a somewhat independent manner as a metaphysical or electromagnetic field, artificial spirits seem to be capable of travelling away from us, but often feed off our various energies, though they may find sources within the environment as well. A familiar would be evoked by coming into resonance with it through ritual, or feeding it more energy which is in resonance with it, or at least creating an environment which is to its liking. The familiars circuit in the magicians brain would be the antenna set to the familiars frequency and thus capable of summoning it and feeding it by empowering the antenna through ritual. (I should point out that radio antennas built according to fractal principles work better and so your brain circuits make for an excellent antenna, especially if you wire it according to the fractal Occult correspondences of natural magick.) So since a spirit cannot effect you if you are not in resonance with it, it is by becoming magicians that we can learn to strengthen our auras and protect ourselves through banishing rituals, making us much less likely to be affected by these parasitic and wandering electromagnetic archon fields, the trick is finding out how you unconsciously consent.

The vast majority of people are totally ignorant to archons and so have not created any kind of brain circuitry capable of defending them, even very simple protection rituals used often enough will show these archons that they should go after easier pickings, that your brain circuits are capable of creating fields which can repel them by taking your main field out of resonance with them. Most of these energy parasites would not be very powerful; however through successfully indoctrinating people, some archons have obviously become very powerful as seen in all the various manifestations of authoritarianism within our culture. Various religions attempt to create moral codes which will promote some kind of memetic resistance to memes the religion deems undesirable, however once a religion accepts the meme of hierarchy, usually within a priest class the whole religion can become infected by archons. Once hierarchy is introduced, then it changes our resonance and lowers the defences to memes of all kinds, but especially those which promote archon behaviour. Since hierarchy by its nature is about rulership and domination, it inevitably leads to all the problems of our current world and the kinds of brain loops which lead to ever more corruption. When powerful beings see an example of truth, they will try their best to twist the truth and control the opposition, infiltrate groups and take them over so that they can be made authoritarian and used to create hierarchies, thus changing their frequency.

Astrology would have us believe some kind of solar system scale of frequency is created by the planets, there are a variety of ways this is possible. There is no doubt the sun, whose electromagnetic field has been shown to effect human activity along with the moon and other bodies in the solar system do create energies which we do not fully understand. (Such as gravity) Whether or not astrology is real, the global electromagnetic field is very evident and we are joined together through it, our neuro-memetic structures creating a resonance potentially similar to the light and sound scales, but expressing the possible manifestations of consciousness. Science has shown that traumatic events in the human world, effect the Earth's electromagnetic field, as when a large enough number of people feel the same emotions at the same time, our magnetic fields come in to resonance and shift the frequency of the planetary field. If we had enough magicians in the world working together we could then alter the Earth's magnetic field, perhaps even changing it enough that it hits a critical mass and creates a mystical experience for the other humans and sparks a new level of global awareness. (Woo Woo Whoopidee doo!) If the planets actually do create an energy which effects our minds, by structuring our minds according to Occult principles, we may be able to overcome unconscious influences created by them, helping us to break our archon programming. (But to break the rules, it really helps to know what they are.)

If the planets do not effect consciousness, Occult training will still allow for the conscious organization of the mind and the ability to consciously determine the brain circuitry you possess. In Gnosticism one of the goals is to overcome the influences of astrology which are deemed to be fatalistic and the machinations of the archons, so from this perspective it could be said that brain circuitry is influenced by the planets electromagnetic fields and through ritual we can learn to gain a greater level of free will. Another possibility is that since each zodiac sign occurs at a different time of year, with different weather and climatic and environmental factors involved, that when a baby is born these different factors influence neuroplasticity in different ways, creating different kinds of egos with certain propensities and characteristics. That is being born in winter would grow a different brain than a baby born in summer and while it cycles around eventually, first impressions of the world are crucial and so according to the season, the first few months of life in a non technological society would in places like Europe create drastically different impressions and sources of food etc for the brain/baby. We may all be given the same seeds, but depending on the time of year when they are planted, some will grow better than others and some may not grow at all in some seasons. The seeds may live through winter, but those which have a head start and sprout first will play a stronger role in the ecosystem of the brain garden. In accordance with fractal principles, the different planets are useful markers of time for different scales and cycles of nature which likewise reflect environmental factors on Earth that could influence brain growth in children. The secret government, especially in the days of the Gnostics could also have been using astrology to time its schedule and perhaps to covertly brainwash people and so by recognizing the symbolism we will no longer be controlled by it.

In determining the resonance of the consciousness, brain circuitry selects which of the endless time lines and parallel dimensions the consciousness will find itself in, so that magick is not changing a universe, but changing the universe the consciousness finds itself in and moving through different parallel dimensions. As I have attempted to explain before, the dimensions you can go to are based on quantum probability, meaning depending on where you are in the present, some things are more likely to occur within any given window of opportunity, which means they would require less causal events and so less travel through parallel dimensions to manifest that reality. Since we are ultimately immortal we can eventually get to any time line we want, though it may take many incarnations and lots of causal chains, we could access whatever reality we want. Though through magick, our energies resonate with quantum strings and so it is possible to increase the odds of quantum probability in our favour and so we get there faster and easier. This would provide a logical explanation for all magical acts, since the consciousness is moved to the universe which has the proper causality to allow the consciousness the experience it is in resonance with, an act of sympathetic magick works according to the circuitry of the brain. This realm where all time lines and parallel dimensions are seen is essentially the imagination of the collective unconscious and so by changing our circuitry we are also changing the way we dream together.

The more we pray to a god or goddess and “worship” them ritually, the more we wire our brains to the frequency of that the divinities energy, the more we make them a part of our consciousness. We “worship” them to bring their energy into our lives and generate energy for them from our brains because we love them and hopefully not because we are “god fearing” which would bring our consciousness to a frequency based on fear. This fear frequency can especially manifest when we rely on authorities to tell us what gods should mean to us and that if we do not devote our brains to their gods, we will suffer forever in some kind of hell. So for religions based on fear, it is this fear that will manifest in their lives and actions and as it is a growing and living part of our very consciousness, the infection grows in their brains and gets them to spread it to others. Jealous and wrathful gods who demand everyone be like them, will create those kinds of people and those kinds of people are responsible for much of the present problems of the world, for they are the mass consensus.

By loving divinities which are meaningful examples of what you aspire to be, then you will learn to take on their traits through their inclusion in your life, if you cannot find any gods you like, make your own, or create new versions of old ones. Through this practice you can make your mind what you want, especially if you take the time to ritually shape your brain into an antenna or radio capable of tuning to their frequency. This can be done through invocation, evocation or even just prayer, the more conscious effort you put into it, the more you will get out of it, because the true gods do not force themselves on others, they wait for it to be your true will to love them. The gods worth devoting your energy to are Anarchist and not tyrants who demand everyone only follow them, for it is that kind of brain which has no sense of endless possibility. Monotheism is an attempt to get everyone on the same wave length and there is possible enjoyment for people from this, but when this wavelength unites people in fear of the electromagnetic spectrum and awareness itself and is forcibly imposed on others, then it is no place for any mind to be, let alone the whole world. Getting everyone on the same wavelength will not be achieved by everyone having one god, but through acknowledging all divinities are real in their own way, their own frequency and if we know this we will learn to tune our mind to whichever frequencies we wish, opening our mind to all kinds of new realities, it is the frequency spectrum that is sacred, not any particular tuning.

By ordering our minds in a specific and well defined manner, we can create circuits that radiate the electromagnetic energies that we choose, we can learn to direct this energy and associate it with symbols as a focus for the creation of a brain circuit, one that is capable of using that symbol or tool in its intended way. We can then learn to grow our brains to function without being overcome by authoritarian frequencies seeking to drown us out, resonating us into despair and apathy so that our will is weak and unwilling to stand up to tyranny.

By learning a banishing ritual you learn to clean your aura, clean your brain and clean your electromagnetic surroundings and one side effect of this is a stronger energy immune system capable of withstanding the fear and vibrations of others, those who have unconscious and often destructive energies. You can also use banishing to disempower or at least deactivate for a time, the circuits which have embedded themselves in your brain, allowing you to stop using them and focus on consciously chosen brain circuitry. When you are symbol literate and know your own mind totally, you will become increasingly immune to manipulation and the more subtle psychic attacks that are going on throughout the world.

In the Occult it is said you have to create or construct your "light body" in order to astral project, this is indicative of brain plasticity in that you have to train your brain to astral project and to build up the strength or antenna necessary to broadcast or project the consciousness out of the body. At the very least in order to have a stable form to project according to will, it could be we have to construct the circuitry that will allow us to maintain consciousness while we astral project. (As we are all supposed to do it in our sleep) Brain plasticity will have similar implications for astral temples, you would create the temple in your mind and so there is a section of your brain empowering the "thought form" (through the brain sigil) on the astral, a landscape in which you can go to more easily the more you go there and believe in it. As you build the antenna or light body in your brain, you create the potential for your consciousness to tune in to various parts of the astral frequencies. The more you wire your brain to empower the astral temple with specific and well defined circuits shared by multiple people, the easier it will be for people to project to the same part of the astral outside their individual minds and bodies.

Legends of Shamanic shape shifting may just be the electromagnetic consciousness possessing an animal's body, the "spirit" leaves the body and enters an animal body and is allowed to use it, or tag along. Shape shifting may also be an invocation of an animal spirit in to your body, so that you may share it and covered in furs and ritual costume tune in to the animal spirit to experience that consciousness. Witches call their pet's familiars, but I have read one theory that this is actually because the animal's body was the home for the spirit helper of the Witch and it inhabited the body of the toad, or cat or whatever it was so that the spirit could have its own electromagnetic generator. (At the very least a deity associated with a particular animal can be contacted through that animal) I haven't done this, nor do I like the idea of forcing an animal spirit out of its body, but it may be a means of affecting the brains of an animal to give it more consciousness and thus allow it to help you in rituals. Depending on how effective or true this really is, it does give some interesting insight into the nature of consciousness and how it relates to a brain. I can't say for sure, but perhaps it is possible for a human to overpower the electromagnetic frequency of an animal and force the animal spirit into the astral so that the body can be possessed by the familiar spirit.

This is probably possible with plants as well and is not unlike the magickal theories behind the Zombie in Voodoo, that is datura and puffer fish venom are used to force the spirit out of a human body, then a familiar spirit possesses that body and it will do the bidding of the sorcerer, at least as long as that body is fed datura. In a more benign sense, after smoking Salvia extracts many people have an experience of becoming an inanimate object, which could be the spirit possessing that object. Many entheogens are capable of sending the mind to what we might call a metaphysical reality that seems to exist in a different frequency and this is even backed up in some ways by scientific experiments done with DMT. Plants have been shown to generate magnetic fields as well and perhaps taking an entheogen puts your brain into a frequency that allows it to interact with plant spirits, maybe allowing them to possess your brain to some degree. This is one more reason for banishing rituals as you either want to protect your body, or you only want specific spirits to gain access to it after you invoke them.

Drug addiction is the result of trying to escape from reality and so pissing off Coca and Poppy plant spirits by abusing their chemicals, but more than this it must create all kinds of circuits in the brain which are trying to assert themselves and take over, opening a person up to all kinds of archons.

This is especially true since addicts are forced to live as criminals trying to get money sigils to feed their monkey and generally have to live in a hostile world that is itself severely mentally ill. While entheogenic plants can potentially open you up to unpleasant frequencies and entities, given they are not addictive and actually have anti addiction properties and that when used correctly produce long term psychological healing and a variety of proven benefits, I can only come to the conclusion they are the plant allies they claim to be.

Perhaps with practice we can even develop the parts of our brain that are responsible for the statistically proven psychic abilities found within humans, what limits there are to this I do not care to say and no one really knows. If we want to find out what our brains are capable of, the first step is to realize we all have our prejudices, we all are under the effects of apophenia, it is just that currently our apophenia is projecting that we do not have apophenia. I do not claim to be capable of consciously inducing telepathic experiences, (though on entheogens I have had a variety of telepathic experiences) but I suspect that any reality to telepathy is along these electromagnetic lines, perhaps people who wish to be telepathically linked require the same brain circuitry in order to get on the exact same frequency. The opening of the third eye which is associated with the pineal gland is also likely to be result of specific practices which are capable of moulding the brain through brain plasticity. Through these various means we can activate the psychic potential within humanity so that we can connect ourselves psychically to the world around us and open ourselves up to electromagnetic information present in nature. Entheogens definitely seem to aid in this process, amplifying our broadcasting power but also making us more sensitive to reception. The DMT potion ayahuasca is heavily associated with telepathic experiences and I definitely look forward to science falling down the rabbit hole once more in depth research is done. It is possible some people are naturally able to tune their minds to others, but generally this is not as specific as knowing the exact number of the radio station. We could improve reception by having specific circuits grown over time into the different psychic's brains, with the intention of making them as similar as possible for telepathic communication. By two people doing the exact same ritual over and over together, and with the intention of forming a telepathic link, whatever is possible in nature will have a far greater chance of expressing itself in their brains. Not surprisingly in order to be telepathic it helps for your mind to have a kind of phone number, so that specific people can be reached and dialled up, it also helps if you make a phone or an antenna tuned to a specific frequency and to do that will take practice which is possible through ritual. (As with say Dysnomia's sigil and astral temple)

As far out as this may sound we communicate telepathically through writing, in that the ink atoms are held together as separate from other atoms by an electromagnetic force. The letters chosen and formed by what started as electromagnetic impulse in the writers brain are perceived as light, which is an electromagnetic wave and interpreted by the readers retinas and transmuted into electromagnetic brain waves. The same is essentially true with speaking and sign language though sound is not as electromagnetic, it vibrates the air molecules which are held together by electromagnetism. The Alphabets are magic symbols and as I explained before in many cases they were specifically designed as magickal symbols for creating states of mind and transmitting information. These alphabets use combinations of symbols to create magickal circuits that can embed themselves in the brain as words and circuits and allow for the creation of the modern world. Magick is hidden or occult, but it is everywhere in the world for those who have brains to perceive and if we imagine what it would look like to the ancient literate people, those who first saw two readers passing notes to each other, it would seem not much different than telepathy. All of technology and science was achieved through magickal means; almost all of it dependent on writing to provide the foundation and records of information and that is why magick sufficiently understood is indistinguishable from technology.

Humanities current predicaments are generally the result of unconsciously falling out of tune with the universal concert, the rhythms of nature, the gravitational bodies which determine the speed of time, the seasons, a huge variety of evolutionary pressures not to mention the biochemistry of the planet. This is the knowledge of Paganism and Shamanism, and many others in the ancient mystery schools which are potentially forms of science, as well as an art and religion and it has been repressed by the ego and bound in ignorance. This denial of reality is perpetrated by the selfish and small minded growth of brain circuitry which currently keeps the majority of humanity in a state of relative hell. This is the music of brain circuitry, in resonance with selfish and greedy desires and the will to create a kind of consciousness that is full of delusion and bias, twisting reality into a trance state which is in denial of anything against consumer culture. So long as humans are given a mass media and mass education system of indoctrination that are purposely designed to limit their awareness and encourage cognitive dissonance and memetic tyranny, they will never utilize the full potential of their brain to function as an Anarchist or raise their awareness to a universal state in which the interconnected reality of all things is self evident.

Without an education of ritual theory and individual awareness of how a persona can literally shape their own brain, we are often made slaves to those we consider authorities, we are shut out from the universal information system and we are made dependent on whatever circuits we are told are good for us. Since it is largely governments and private media which control the flow of materialist information, it is no wonder so many humans are wired to increase the perpetual cycle of growth towards capitalist, selfish states of awareness, which further produce brains that are dependent on authoritarian structures of society and consciousness.

Brain circuits created by fear and selfishness, lead to a greater identification with the ego and so a fragmented and isolated consciousness. When we are selfish and think only of ourselves, we come into resonance with a field that is only about us and so energy flow becomes relatively static or parasitic and ceases to function properly. When we identify with our egos and act selfishly or in authoritarian ways, we focus on our own personal frequency and shut off the energy flow to the greater electromagnetic fields. When we tune ourselves to a personal frequency and identify too much with it, we do not like when people try to broadcast over us in some other frequency, we don't like the feedback, we don't like the dissonance and we don't like having our resonance changed against our will. While this personal frequency gives us our free will, if we can learn to tune in to the greater frequency at will, we will achieve a new state of awareness, we will also learn how to tune our minds to any frequency we desire and with that have true free will. When we grow brain circuits in love and altruism, we come into resonance with a frequency that seeks to unify people and help everyone be happy together, when we open our hearts we open our magnetic fields to the greater spectrum around us and experience a greater awareness of unity with that which we love.

While the brain may control the frequency, the biggest magnetic field is generated in the heart, and so we must not underestimate its interplay with consciousness if electromagnetism turns out to be the physical root of consciousness. This is even more true since scientists have discovered neurons in the heart, but also even more in the digestive system and gut, if we think of the brain as the root of the tree as tradition has, then the heart would be the main stock of the tree and the guts and nervous system the branches and leaves. (Though these bodily neurons may or may not be plastic, the ones they interact with in the brain definitely are) Through Sufi purification of the heart we can also perform changes with neuroplasticity, as well as a variety of other practices they have which go back before Mohammed. The whole body itself must be taken in to account to function as an antenna in the generation and broadcasting of the magnetic field. Different energies could be created in different ways, there are crystals in the brain which could tune aspects of the aura, or field, and there is also the entire nervous system and all the DNA crystals in each cell which could contribute in some fashion to the information translation in to and from the Earth's store house.

Since it functions according to electrical impulses, consciousness is at least in part electromagnetic in nature and through that energy, organic matter is manipulated throughout all of nature's creatures. Our bodies are a kind of electromagnetic generator and container, or antenna and our consciousness rests within it, in union with the body and ultimately all of reality. Do not mistake the radio as the source of the broadcast, do not mistake a single broadcaster as the only real tuning or divinity, no matter how good the reception. While all life is her body, Gaia could be thought of as a global electromagnetic field, one capable of holding the sum of all the information found within the consciousnesses, of all the fragments found within each cell of each organism on Earth. This electromagnetic field which we might call Gaia has found a way to create a means of physically manipulating the less complex magnetic fields, those which hold together inorganic matter by creating bodies in plants, animals and fungus. Groups of cells band together to create ever more elaborate genetic antennas of electromagnetic consciousness, in humans creating a brain capable of molding itself according to the will of the consciousness. Cells cooperate to create a neurological circuit capable of generating or attuning and sustaining the required energies from the Earth's magnetic field. Through resonance a kind of karma is created, in that only magnetic fields of the right frequency can experience itself in the proper body or organic field generator, requiring a kind of sympathy, or harmony with the creature.

Through ritual, these electromagnetic fields manipulate matter to create further levels of ritual awareness throughout the material world, bringing the non organic matter and transmuting its electromagnetic field into a conscious awareness which is in the same frequencies of the global, if not universal consciousness. In this way another kind of fractal feedback loop is created, one where electromagnetism creates organic matter, which itself creates new electromagnetism, which naturally attunes itself through evolution and brain plasticity to the Gaian frequencies. It does this in order to learn how to help the process of life expand and iterate the fractal, presumably eventually beyond the planet and throughout the universe. If each human is a neuron for Gaia, (there is also the mycelium neural networks between trees) then beyond that, each star might be a neuron in the galaxy, ("Every man and every woman is a star") each galaxy a neuron in a cluster, and each cluster a neuron in the universe and beyond that, each universe a neuron in the multiverse. So while this idea may seem like an act of faith, to my surprise science has actually shown using computer models the shape of the universe is incredibly self similar to a brain. (Nuit) Life is a ritual playing out through evolution, one designed to raise the awareness of matter back into its immaterial source or animating spirit, so that that electromagnetic energy may in turn realize the bliss of helping this universal Alchemy for all of eternity.

Memes largely make up our actions, our actions determine our brain circuitry and our brain circuitry reflects our awareness, our awareness in turn determines which memes it allows and which new memes are imagined. In a very real way our brains do not create our consciousness, but instead are the symbolic allegorical representation of our awareness, the circuitry of the brain is a symbolic language, one which reflects the consciousness in a sensory derived perception, but as magick shows, if you manipulate the symbol you change the consciousness. Perception is the sum total of all our brain's sensory circuitry and generally the focus of the electromagnetism that is held within the brain and so it creates resonance with the electromagnetic systems to which it is connected.

Cliques and families are like sociological memetic cells and the electromagnetic interplay and different neurological circuitry would be the chemistry and biological body of a giant memetic organism, one that resides wherever their host bodies take them. These cells interact in various ways to fulfil various functions and are connected in a variety of ways down to the microscopic exchange of germs and bacteria. This is all found within one large ecosystem on the Earth, making one Earth being, but with a number of conglomerations of different parts and at different fractal scales. Since life evolved to function in harmony with electromagnetism in a variety of ways, (even if it is largely subconscious in us) we can say at least in some sense, the electromagnetic field is an extension of the global organism's body, uniting its different cells in electromagnetic music. Astrological theory would take this magnetic spectrum of consciousness onto the galactic and presumably an intergalactic scale of life and if it goes that far then there is no reason to think it could not go beyond.

Mememes allow for the focusing and transmission of specific electromagnetic frequencies based upon how “impressed” the brain is with the circuit. This adaptation allows for the structuring of the brain in a manner that can custom design the environment in which the Earth’s magnetic field can experience a variety life experiences. Reincarnation then is the rejoining of an electromagnetic energy with a suitable incarnation according to its “karma” or resonant frequency. The idea of some Indigenous cultures that animals willingly gave their lives to humans so that we may live and in turn should be honoured by people for its sacrifice, is an idea that reflects a Gaian understanding which acknowledges the idea that one spirit is joined through an interconnected web of consciousness and is found within all things on the Earth. Since all actions and accepted beliefs or perceptions are capable of imprinting neural circuitry, all life is itself a ritual and our actions and thoughts determine the energies we call into our experience and the sum total of this is the frequency of “heaven” to which we will go when we die. Life is the calibration, the aiming and death is the DMT cannon of consciousness to other realms, the means by which we propel ourselves through the multiverse.

Electromagnetic fields enter space time through atoms which are surrounded by it, and this is done in organic materials and to a lesser degree of awareness in geological and inorganic incarnations. (such as air, water, Earth, fire etc) A soul does this in order to change it's personal frequency, so that it may imprint the global field with new information and resonance when it dies, each different viewpoint bringing a unique contribution. Immortality could be achieved by an electromagnetic field that was created through brain moulding and has been made resilient enough to sustain itself as a “chariot” or astral light body after death, creating the charge or frequency of consciousness that will remain in the Earth or universe after death. Energy can't be destroyed it can only change forms, but it seems only when total happiness and content is achieved, (the highest frequency) will the desire for worldly things be over and so an end to the desire to reincarnate and modify your frequency. While some souls choose to continue to incarnate as a Bodhisattva, transcendence is a frequency that resonates with existence in the eternal unchanging metaphysical realms. If you are going to sustain the same frequency for eternity, then you will want it to be a perfectly blissful frequency and it is through incarnating and sculpting the brain that we are able to change our frequency according to will.

Life grows in complexity to allow for a greater variety of life expressions, expressions which can be experienced through the consensus or sum total of all electromagnet awareness. Animals would only sacrifice themselves to us if they knew there was an evolutionary benefit for them to do it within a co-evolving ecosystem. This ecosystem would be one in which we were consciously working together, working to breed a container of consciousness capable of experiencing a new level of awareness. Perhaps a microcosmic container capable of holding the entire resonance of the Earth, perhaps for spreading to other planets, perhaps simply in order to explore the possibilities of awareness within a variety of perspectives in order to ascertain the true nature of existence. It could be entheogens are a means of changing the brain to allow for greater conduction of the total Earths electromagnetic information store of awareness, the akashic records of the Gaian mind. At any rate entheogens often lead the consciousness in to developing memes and awareness itself and they do this according to specific guidelines. These guidelines tend to provide a greater capability for creating brain circuits which attempt to be harmonious with a culturally determined depiction of the Gaian or cosmic mind.

Sophia, (electromagnetic awareness) is like a spark trapped within matter which is ruled by archon psychological processes with selfish and unbalanced, ignorant or entropy seeking electromagnetic fields. Humanity has mostly lost its awareness of its connection to the rest of nature and so has stopped honouring the animals who lay down their lives, (unwillingly these days) we have stopped honouring the natural balance of energies which allow us to sustain and ultimately to create new kinds of awareness and we have chosen to destroy the global gene pool rather than help diversify it. Unless we start to consider ourselves as part of one conscious and a deliberate entity, we will be giving up our biggest evolutionary advantage, the ability to commune with nature and work with it to spread life and awareness throughout existence.

It could be this time in our history is the period of adjustment where we learn what is best in reality is nature itself and the best things humans can do is not only to preserve nature and life, but spread it to other planets, but this should only be done within an awareness of our current unity with all of known life. As we are all one entity using different organisms for views on self awareness, we must come into harmony with the rest of the organic viewpoints with which we share this planet and to do this it is imperative that we act as Anarchists first and foremost. We must have the intention of doing our own true will, or else we are wasting our time with petty desires and things like consumerism. If we are unified with all other beings, then we must also do the true will of all beings and that has got to be at least in part to affirm and spread life and these natural processes. We are all sacred, we are all created by nature in it's pursuit of higher forms of evolutionary advantage for the expression of consciousness and to maintain this natural laboratory of genetic co-evolution, we must learn to honour all of nature and not just study and exploit it.

In order for humans to come into balance with nature we must take on the natural harmony found throughout Earth's other creatures and found throughout most of human evolution, a society based around Anarchist ideas of doing what is your will, with a mind to reinforce the greater life system, the further development of genes. By participating in genetic evolution willingly and consciously, we allow for the further refinement of consciousness, but this does not mean different species or sub species should compete, or try to wipe each other out, or that any species is better than another. Rather it means that we should be trying to evolve greater and greater means of achieving symbiosis with the environment and creatures which are all ultimately our equals and that it is only through total inclusion of all varieties of life and total acceptance of all genetic expressions that we can utilize total awareness of all levels of truth, as found within all the incarnations of Gaia. By wiping out even what some narrow minded people may consider to be inferior genetic lines, committing genocide against any form of life, (which is not actively trying to kill you like some viruses or bacteria) directly or indirectly through exploitation of natural "resources" we are closing a genetic opportunity for the expression of consciousness in that manifestation. As we commit genocide we are denying the harmonic vibration of some aspect of the Gaian mind its ability to enter time space.

Competing genetic strains try and drown out the harmonic frequencies of dissonant organic expressions, but there is no reason why with Anarchy, that we could not learn how to create a harmony capable of bringing all dissonant sounds out together. This would be a song which is structured to allow for melodies of electromagnetic frequencies, so that it represents the totality of the Gaian mind. Just as considering a large variety of points of view is crucial to a healthy mind, biodiversity is crucial to a healthy ecosystem and we are currently doing all we can to destroy the last refuges of this biodiversity. If the rulers have their way, consciousness will be increasingly limited and the total expression of awareness would never be achieved. "Spirits" or electromagnetic waves unable to incarnate would be trapped until a suitable incarnation could be re-evolved (if that ever actually happens) and so awareness would be incomplete and the Gaian mind will not be as able to create life in accordance with its will. In this way, the war for consensus reality is a war of archon and discarnate Anarchist souls, each trying to change the environment to limit their enemy's ability to manifest their frequencies physically.

To come into harmony with all of nature, we must learn to tune our brains to the right frequencies and to do that we must perform the right actions and have the right kind of thoughts. Black magick does exist, but if happiness and wisdom are your goals then living by Anarchism is by far the best means of attaining these things, not to mention a sustainable and eventful life. By using Anarchism as your basic motivation in life, your actions or daily rituals will provide you with a frequency and brain circuitry that is the healthiest and most functional and when you die you will go to what I would argue is the most enjoyable "heaven." Anarchism is easily the healthiest form of social cooperation for a global consciousness, as it seeks to expand all of life and awareness itself, Anarchism resonates with what I consider to be the main motivation for the natural global mind and the purpose of life itself. Anarchism provides the best means of creating a society that has diverse forms of awareness living in harmony and which seeks to live in balance with all of life. This is in sharp contrast to the mentality of capitalism, which is a war against life itself, a war perpetrated in order to bend all life to some individuals selfish will. It is an Anarchist society which will allow for the greatest level of complexity among its individuals and the greatest level of diversity among genetic stocks, as well as a fundamental value of living in mutually agreeable environment for all creatures.

If we learn how to grow our brains together in a harmonious way, we can all get on the same wave length and start creating a reality, a group perception that is lot happier than the one we currently find ourselves in. It is possible to have Anarchy, if we know how to program our own circuitry, but to do so we must do our best to have faith until we know firsthand that we can create our perception however we wish, happy or sad, violent or peaceful, greedy or altruistic. All adjectives we apply to ourselves and everything else are relative reflections of our own unified consciousness and left for us to define for ourselves, we can grow the circuit we want, or we can believe we are stuck with it. With such a population, Anarchism will be seen as the clear choice for a social order which will allow for the greatest level of equality and mass resonance and harmony of various frequencies to bring the song of all life to a crescendo and gentle rhythm of universal peace. (Though our instruments play both high and base notes for a reason and a mosh pit now and again is definitely healthy)

Right now most people think of their personal radio dial in terms of a hierarchy, but it is really a spectrum and no one frequency is better than another. Through Anarchist thinking, we can broadcast on a wider range of frequencies, we can get around the artificial barriers and learn to connect to the whole world if that is what we want. In order come into union with the universe, we have let go of the ego energies, let go of the dissonant tones within ourselves, if they change we should forgive those who helped to create a world that is out of whack (but do not forget or let them continue) and through this, we will tune our frequencies to a state of consciousness in universal bliss. The great universal field can be imprinted with any of an endless variety of frequencies according to the will of any individual, this is spiritual Anarchy, and it's sum total of wave patterns is the consensus reality we find ourselves in. We are all fundamentally electromagnetic entities, only separated by our over identification with our current vehicles or symbolic representations and it is only through Anarchism that we will really get to where we want to be, in a brain that is happy, surrounded by an environment that is harmonious with all other life forms.

Brain plasticity would be the physiological factor of “deeply held beliefs,” if the brain values the meme of hierarchy, it must organize itself physically in a hierarchical manner as in my analogy of memes as buildings and so quite literally some beliefs are more deeply held then others. These deeply held beliefs are it seems the main factor of bias when put in terms of neural circuitry. Confirmation bias, along with prejudice and a proclivity for denial of “unsettling” realities creates ideologues, or people who stop questioning the validity of their own beliefs and who do not consider other points of view and this is the result of narrow wiring, of moulding their brain so that it screens out more than most people. Being “open minded” means having a circuitry that is open ended and which allows for growth and modification, where as those with “deeply held beliefs” would be “set in their ways” meaning they are unwilling to even attempt to rewire their brain. This ideologue bias tendency would be created with circuitry that reinforces notions of self satisfaction and complacency, not to mention fear of change and all that is unfamiliar. As we mostly believe what we want, and we manifest reality according to what we will and what we believe, if we do not know what our true will is, we cannot know what bias's we might have or how we are an ideologue and so we will be prone to all kinds of confusion and cognitive dissonance. Hierarchy creates competition among the circuits and so some brain circuits will be bred which act as a filter to prevent the growth of new competing circuits, (such as through spreading a meme that anyone who says different then the authorities is a heretic and agent of Satan) while people like artists and scientists (who consider ALL information) have circuitry which allows, if not encourages modification and updating of beliefs.

Many scientists who fear to venture outside the box and do experiments which may bring results that may damage their reputations for challenging orthodoxy, would have brains that may not be suitable for paranormal research. Due to bad wiring, (and the fear and assumptions that keep them from even trying) they are made bias and miss important clues and information, they change their interpretation of the information and so are lead to false conclusions, at best performing experiments which are generally inadequate. (I have my own bias no doubt, no one is immune) If your brain circuits are like a tree, then you cannot cut down a limb without effecting a lot of branches that stem from it. However it is possible to create paradigms which are easily updatable, which can have portions taken out or changed without it having to effect everything else. You can do this by eliminating dogma from your paradigm and making a conscious effort to never fully become “set in your ways,” a state of mind which is really just brain atrophy. The exception would be when you are trying to embed some kind of sigil programming into your brain, for example to reinforce your astral body or telepathic antenna, however it is always good to have the circuitry which says all circuits can be changed if they become a problem and to recognize these circuits for what they are. (Philosopher's stone)

Anarchism provides the most mutable political paradigm which can be extended within spiritual philosophy to create a brain which is mouldable according to the will. Since Anarchism is the most plastic of ideologies, it allows for the greatest possible adaptation to changing realities and ulterior perspectives, thus providing that which is currently the most objective framework from which to build the architecture of the brain. A non hierarchical mind limits bias to a minimum, (with a lot of work and introspection) allowing for the consideration of all information due to the strong circuitry which says that information should not be screened out (as this would be putting it into a hierarchy which is against Anarchism) and so provides a person with the most objective outlook possible. (So long as they do not become authoritarian in their definition of Anarchy) When someone is bias, it is because they are authoritarian or we could say they are not egalitarian in how they cognize or express information. These people have set up an internal hierarchy of beliefs which in some form or another grow as the circuits within the brain and become part of the total consciousness of the individual and so to be objective, is to have Anarchist approaches to information processing. Bias is what keeps us thinking inside “the box” and it is through contemplation of Anarchism that we can learn to think “outside the box.” “The box” is our limiting beliefs, our archons and the cozy little paradigm we create so that we can feel safe from the “Chaos” of Anarchism, but it is also a prison for the mind. What is more this Anarchist circuitry would mean that the individual does not force or coerce their beliefs on others like everyone else, allowing others to receive information from the Anarchist which is hopefully less bias. Anarchist circuitry would also seek to limit or end all actions which oppress and impose upon other people, but it also means Anarchists will not see themselves as superior to others who are not doing this, and so they will continue to listen to others and consider their ideas.

Certainly when the ego is involved, bias comes up, for the ego is the elite of the brains circuitry, asserting itself as the identity of the body and does so by subjugating other circuits, dominating them and trying to steal their ability to assert themselves within the collective community of brain cells. The ego takes over the brain and so the electrical energy, circuits and your focus and so in an analogous way, oligarchs take their slaves labour and wealth. Many people can claim to be Anarchists but are egomaniacs and self deluded in a number of ways, but the pursuit of Anarchism in terms of brain circuitry (and hence personal ontology) is the pursuit of objectivity and due consideration of all points of view. Without this pursuit, as limited by human frailties as it may be, equality and freedom will never manifest within society and while we may have to abandon symbols to achieve perfect equality of circuits, contemplation of Anarchism will take you as close as you can get. The rulers of the world will never be stopped until we overcome the rulers of the mind and these rulers of the brain, the archons act through us, evolving and spreading by high jacking bodies for their purposes. The archons are creating an ever increasing authoritarian world, one devoid of genetic or memetic diversity, a world which screens out natural perspectives and imposes artificial, arbitrary and limited ontology's.

Instead of building germ warfare laboratories, we should be cultivating each person to be a physically peaceful, but virulently infectious truth seeker; each human then becomes an Alchemical laboratory for breeding the most virulent truth meme possible. We need a meme that is capable of constantly updating and redefining itself based on its present knowledge, but with a mind that has the humility to recognize the limitations of such abstractions. Since science, art, language and writing and ritualism are all derived from the Occult, it is through its memes that we will learn to banish the mental demons which plague us and which have tricked us into believing (memetically) that they don't even exist. Only by learning to consciously direct our brain circuitry, will we be able to have any chance at fully understanding the role of memes, especially the unconscious memes, but also free will and consciousness itself. For this I submit the best methods we have are skeptical and systematic Occult (the study of hidden information) experimentation, which whenever possible is congruent with science, however is not limited to the realms of science in its investigation. If we can achieve a society such as this, where education is implemented with these principles in mind, I believe humanity will make enormous strides towards a healthier world, one not based on the values of memetic "rulers," but based on truth and Anarchy or the free flow and non attachment to all memes.

In this way you could see the ego as a collection of memes which we take for granted as ourselves, because depending on how deeply rooted they are, we don't even notice them in our decision making processes and thus assume they are part of our identity. Archons block our ability for reality creation, they block awareness that the divine is everywhere and that we can and should connect to it, in fact it is the archons which are the source of our disconnection. It can take a lot of painful soul searching and updating beliefs to get into line with the chief cornerstone, the process of negredo or putrefaction in Alchemy, where materialist desires are abandoned and everything you thought you knew is shown to be an illusion. Just like rabies can hijack a body and induce the infected to infect others, it seems in many ways the more virulent memes are very much capable of the same kind of actions, though instead of biting people we burn Witches and kill Native populations.

The media and education systems are the most pervasive forms of memetic infection and the most powerful means the rulers have for indoctrinating others with the circuits or beliefs they desire us to have. Schools mould the minds of children to be passive consumers of information, to accept authoritarian figures, to sit quietly and follow unnatural schedules that are against their own will and to train them for a life of mental mediocrity where they do not understand why something is true, they only are told that it is true. Facts are spouted out to children in an often incoherent and contradictory fashion specifically designed to confuse the mind and divide consciousness from a holistic perception of reality, to one in which they will become consistently dependent on authorities. These "authorities" are the upper classes who received an education in critical thinking and methods of rhetoric and this allows for the domination of the lower classes. Cognitive dissonance is bred to the point that children accept archon programming without questioning it and those who do question it are bullied or intimidated into accepting it for fear of a life of poverty, misery and ignorance. Parents infect their children with their memetic circuits in an almost vampiric way, (the parents memes being the vampires looking for new sources of energy) humanity is systematically traumatized by the education system and the society it is plunged into, until eventually the brain is sculpted to be a worker consciousness. Limited and unaware of the big picture or proper modes of critical thinking or any real psychology that will help them to understand their own consciousness, people are raised and conditioned to be unquestioning vacuous and selfish, but most importantly they are raised to fear anything that is not in conformity with their programming.

The rulers have captivated people's minds and glued it neurologically to the TV and generally lead the people to accept basically whatever they are told. These black magicians do this through the use of "fascination," a word which is etymologically recognized as a type of magick meaning to "charm," or fix a person's attention according to the magicians will. People have long ago wired their minds to not properly question authorities and today TV is often an authority higher than even politicians. Science has even shown that due to neuroplasticity, TV actually causes brain damage, or at least brain atrophy, filling the brain with ineffective neural circuits, especially since most children are raised watching it. TV changing brain circuitry gives new meaning to Marshall McLuhan's idea that the medium is the message; in fact the medium of communication will determine the anatomy of your brain, so that when you take in the new information, it will biologically affect how you will interpret it and how it will affect your mind. "Prestige" and "glamour's" dazzling and beguiling influence, tricks and deceives the "fascinated" "idiots" and it does this by creating a sense of gravitas towards the person who is trying to control others, all so that archon memes can be implanted in their brain. When combined with subtle logical fallacies and cunning rhetoric designed to "evoke" emotional responses that "fascinate," the truth is lost and this is generally only amplified by public education systems, which when combined, create a system of black magick which is incredibly effective at brainwashing people. ("Social engineering") Seeing that education systems are geared towards creating workers, rather than thinking and conscious people and as it is forcibly imposed on people, it is black magick. The goal of this black magick is to shape the victims' brain from a young age, into that of a slaves, one that believes it's free, so that it will follow orders and will not question "superiors," thus ensuring that the vast majority of people remain "idiots."

Psychologists are used to create the standards of "sanity" according to the dominant memes of a culture, these memes in turn have been imprinted into them through their own special education. This education is one which allows the psychologist to be exposed to other peoples memes, but with a strong memetic defence being firmly implanted into them, so that anyone who doesn't agree with them is psychotic and obviously wrong. This resistance to any new kinds of memes that do not come from their authorities allows them to try and rewire other people's brains, but without themselves losing their grip on reality, that is to say losing their memetic views of ontology. This also allows society to justify calling people with unacceptable memes "insane" and prevent these people from spreading their "insane" infections to society as a whole. In this way psychologists and psychiatrists are one kind of memetic antibodies for the current hierarchical culture, the police and military are another, the politicians who create the laws are yet another. These skills are used with marketers and the media to then promote the indoctrination of humanity, so that they can spread the memetic phage virus of capitalism and materialist hierarchy across the planet, until eventually all people are forcibly coerced or gently manipulated into surrendering the brains and their consciousness to predatory and pathological circuitry.

If humans are the brain of Gaia, then the prohibition of entheogens is kind of like the archon circuits of the brain stealing focus, limiting awareness. They do this by controlling the brain chemistry and restricting the flow of neurotransmitters to produce cycles of dependency and addiction to distraction and ignorant actions and the unwanted emotional responses they create. As our brains are the microcosm of the collective mind and each like a neuron, their emotional disturbances or neurological chemistry are reflected in the global brain and its moods, its views of drug use and how lovingly society interacts and the endorphins that will be released. We are all neurons hoping to get high on love and all the neurotransmitters that requires, namely serotonin and dopamine, and in this way life can be a trip your friends put you on because they love you.

Archons are the circuits that require an unhappy brain, rulers are people who require an unhappy population since this how they make us dependent on them, both do this by controlling the chemistry of the populations to which they belong. Stress has been shown by scientists to be one of the main causes of a huge variety of health problems, for example it can cause you to take on more weight in the belly, mess with your heart, cause your brain cells to shrink (especially your hippocampus which is responsible for memory and learning) and lower levels of dopamine in the brain, stress can even cause chromosome damage and effect your kids. What is even more interesting is that scientists have also found that the lower you are in a hierarchy and the more shit you take from the higher ups, the higher your stress and the worse your health and brain become and so the rulers and the archon circuits which seek to perpetuate stress and hierarchy, are literally killing us in a war for our brains. Archons can provide a kind of sadistic and masochistic pleasure and governments sell consumer products, as well as cocaine and heroin, (not to mention the taxes they get from cigarettes and alcohol) but these are things which will only leave you more dependent on their unsustainable and artificial forms of happiness, where as entheogens (which have no addictive properties) and anarkhos will teach you how to be happy with nothing at all.

Psychiatrists literally act as the opiate of the masses, prescribing antidepressants and all kinds of dangerous drugs with a mind more for treatment and adjustment to a sick society, rather than actually looking at the cause of the problems and doing something about it. Freudian psychology is in many ways a projection of Freud's ego, it is transference of a cultural daddy figure, in this case Jehovah to his concept of the ego. His works are often apologetics for the demiurge, with his fear of the unconscious Aeons of Fullness and the rejection of the feminine Wisdom, his is a mind full of subjugation and cocaine and yet he is supposed to be the arbiter of sanity. The goal of psychotherapy is not to create sanity, but to create a worker capable of making it through the day in a corporate approved mindset. Anti drug advocates, notably Christians despise the possibilities of entheogenic awareness for spiritual purposes, making claims about public health which are entirely hypocritical and unfounded and criminalizing the direct experience of divine states of being. While there are potential problems from the ignorant use of such plants and chemicals, misleading people and repressing accurate safety information and practices only make this more of a problem. The logic of prohibition is not much different than if I were to say that literalist Satanism is such a problem, we should burn all the bibles in the world. That is some people abuse drugs and can be likened to entheogenic satanists, but this does not mean that we should prevent all people from having access to the entheogens. All states of being should be open to a person's potential awareness and it is the work of the rulers to deny our ability to become aware of the truth, making lies that we will die if we consume the fruits of gnosis.

By providing an emotional charge of pain whenever a circuit is activated, the archons work to train the mind to avoid pain and uncomfortable truths and they do this so that they can continue to grow unconsciously. Archons manifest in life in various ways that can act to reinforce the circuitry without allowing the consciousness to understand the reasons for their unwitting creation of these kinds of circumstances, it is the ego working to ensure that something else is always blamed, rather than it taking responsibility for the creation of its viewpoint and reaction to reality. This reactionary tendency is the herding of humanity, being prodded along to the slaughterhouse so we can be consumed energetically, that is to say spiritually, psychologically and ultimately physically as we give our bodies to the work of our rulers. So long as painful emotions hold a person back from examining themselves and learning the true sources of their mental anguish, through their attachment to worldly things and petty desires, their fears and self doubt, selfish behaviour and self inflicted wounds, all these problems will continue to develop in the brains of humanity. This avoidance of exploring their pain is because they feel they are too weak to stop hurting themselves through each other, that they cannot take responsibility for their memes or their bias, or their lack of patience for themselves and others and until they confront these painful circuits, they will be forever trapped in the prison of their ignorance.

If an Occult school was not Anarchist, if it was elitist as some of them definitely are, then it could develop models which are very egotistical and capitalist, shaping the brains of the people to fit their elitist reality. If some of these elitist Occult schools got involved in the government like for example Freemasons, then it could cause a lot of problems for people who unwittingly fall in to this elitist programming. Although Masons themselves are pretty egalitarian with each other, those who are Christian Masons, or otherwise elitist, those using it as an "old boys' network" could wire their brains to become completely delusional authoritarians. This would potentially be amplified through initiation rituals which lay the foundation for these kinds of tyrannical elitist circuits. The Mason would then "rebuild" the "temple of Solomon," they would order their brains according to the architectural principles of masonry. (Not to say Masonry doesn't have some useful tips for self directed neuroplasticity, but that its hierarchical symbols and more authoritarian or conspiratorial lodges may plant archon seeds in the brain.) If as legend has it that Solomon used the demons of the Goetia to build his temple, then we could say that such grimoires are the ritual practice that makes the temple within the brain. (Crowley in his introduction to the Goetia explicitly says the demons are parts of the brain) If a group infiltrated the Masons and carefully added some of their elitist memes, (or they simply had them to start) then those rituals which strengthen the brain would also potentially reinforce the egotistical elitist circuits instead of doing what the rituals were designed to do, which is to eliminate or at least take control of those circuits. This could create a culture of tyranny masking itself as egalitarian, enlightenment era philosophy and what is more those Masons would actually believe they are doing good by spreading their capitalist bureaucratic magick across the planet. Not all Masons are part of a conspiracy and so it must be something that is built up in only portions of them, some would say at the higher levels, but different lodges can practice quite differently and so it is hard to say. Masons want to “make good men better” and so since our cultures definition of “good” is so messed up, they simply make men more like our authoritarian capitalist culture's values.

Rapunzel will grow her golden hair and if we can name him Rumpelstiltskin will spin gold from straw, with the help of some magick beans, Jack can grow a beanstalk and kill the giant, the beauty can love the beast before the “rose” wilts, a warrior can cross the wall of thorns to kill the dragon and wake the sleeping beauty from her slumber, and Heracles can defeat the Hydra. The first step is to accept that there is a reality beyond pure logic and that all aspects of consciousness serve a highly evolved purpose and that integration and balance is the key to using them properly. We can spend a night in ecstasy with Cinderella, who has been released for the night from her toil to dance with us, in the morning after the entheogens have worn off, we are left with nothing but a memory and a fragile and transparent form, but if we persist in our search we can find the essence that fits the form and bring her home in the hieros gamos. We must learn to forgive the demons and let them become angels through transmutation, because by locking them away in some psychological hell or Tartarus, a place where the fire of desire is never extinguished, they are never really dealt with, but continue to fester in the back of the mind. To release and overcome them we must refuse to feed them what they reflect in us, to stop buying into our mind games by doing what we loathe in others, by doing what is easy and comfortable with conformity to the consensus circuitry of the mainstream. We must learn to face them if we are to deal with them and to do this we must face the emotional pain that they embody and which we have fed them with. Once we learn to face these emotions, instead of projecting them into the world and external factors, or letting them manifest unconsciously because we still desire some naive aspect of bliss through ignorance, we can turn the painful emotional charge into a fuller awareness of reality, one in which we are more cognizant, more joyful and have more freewill through not being led by reactionary tendencies.

All religions can offer tips and insight in to the nature of neural plasticity, in fact I now doubt that religion can even be fully understood without first understanding the brains plasticity, even Scientology has an unconscious understanding of its processes in what they call “engrams.” Too bad Hubbard used these principles for brainwashing and scamming people, but his Occult study of Crowley and many other things clearly gave him insight in to the psychological aspect of neural plasticity. (But then his religion is basically Gnosticism and other Occult traditions overlaid with Sci-Fi symbolism and put into an authoritarian framework.) In Scientology, “engrams” are neural circuits charged with pain which grow in the brain and try to grow stronger, try to iterate their formula by provoking experiences which generate more pain, they are essentially the archons, with Scientologists alluding to this in their belief we are possessed by alien spirits. The theoretical concept of engrams originally comes from real science, (It's much older than neural plasticity and is still not fully understood) though it refers to the anatomy of memory and is different from Scientology and not necessarily associated with only painful experiences, however it is still clear to me humans have been utilizing principles of neural plasticity for a very long time.

Traumatic experiences can splinter the ego in to multiple personalities, dividing the brain so that the circuits which pertain to identity become fractured and separated, sometimes even unaware of each other, though with a variety of biological implications. Some even think these principles have been used to create mind controlled slaves for the government, (Project Monarch and MK ULTRA) so really the more we learn about neural plasticity, the more it seems to be a theory that has nearly universal implications. While the government and CIA has been trying to brainwash people for a long time before science knew of neuroplasticity, they have unconsciously used its principles in this goal and if people are not made aware of such realities, they will become increasingly successful in these goals.

The increased suggestibility of a person who is high on psychedelics is a double edged sword; it can be used for chemo gnosis or used to convince the person of things which are not true, but are emotionally evocative in the right way. As I mentioned, if you are consciously doing rituals and have intentions behind your entheogenic work this can be quite helpful for getting in to trance and having gnosis about the ritual, which can among other things make them useful for helping people with mental illness or addictions or through the placebo effect. However entheogens (especially ones with scopolamine) can definitely be used for mind control, in fact that is what ritual use of entheogens is all about, controlling your mind with the aid of entheogens, but if someone who is using them is ignorant about how to use them properly, or happened to be kidnapped by some group, there might be a potential for brainwashing as well. The CIA's experiments with mind control in MK ULTRA were officially reported as unsuccessful, but then if the CIA was successful they certainly wouldn't tell us. I don't want to create a entheogenic cult, I want to create a world of magician Shamans capable of figuring things out for themselves, since no matter what the CIA is up to, if we do not learn to control our minds, others will control it for us.

In ancient times it is possible that sometimes people were drugged and then brought under the thumb of a guru or some religious figure and since no one really understood chemistry, this is something that would be quite easy to do if you had a psychedelic no one recognized. This can also be seen by the fact that so many New Age hippies believe ridiculous things dogmatically and unquestioningly, because after a serious entheogenic experience the brain will naturally try to come up with some explanation for something which is beyond words. So since it has not been trained by the education system to have critical thinking skills, it will often fall for simplistic answers which are emotionally gratifying to the now unstable ego. While entheogens can be used to deprogram the mainstream conditioning, if not used carefully you can find yourself falling for some new con game masquerading as light and love, but which actually encourages going in to denial about anything the ego defines as "negative thinking" or some other form of dogma. For example many hippies after tripping on LSD joined the highly authoritarian and sexist Hare Krishna cult during the 60's and while I doubt the Hare Krishna's were promoting LSD, they were quick to scoop up confused individuals who were impressed by the mystique and glamour of India.

Since it has been proven that some entheogens increase neural plasticity, that they make people more suggestible and that psilocybin can help OCD, not to mention a massive amount of anecdotal evidence (including my own experiences) which show that entheogens can deprogram people, I have come to the conclusion that during the main entheogenic experience the brain is in a sense in a state of hyper plasticity, that is more malleable than at any other time. While entheogens have been proven to increase neural plasticity after you come down, it is likely that any seeds planted during the experience will be much more deeply rooted in the brain and that recreational use, or unplanned use of entheogens could potentially implant undesirable memes in the brain and when the person does come down, since they are living in a sick world, they can take on that sickness once again. If you just watch TV while you are high, you will only wire your brain to be good at watching TV and unconsciously take in whatever memes happen to be in what you are watching, so again we see that set and setting really is key to utilizing entheogens properly.

An entheogenic experience is yet another layer to the Alchemical axiom “solve et coagula” that is, the entheogens “dissolve” the entrenched circuitry in your brain, increasing plasticity dramatically and then it eventually “coagulates,” or goes back to relatively normal levels of plasticity. This is perfect for self directed neuroplasticity and does not physically harm the brain, but those who do not consciously sculpt the brain, or provide a predetermined ritualized symbolic mold for it as it is coagulating, can come out with very weird and imbalanced brains that can become quite delusional. (Or at least they will not fully utilize the healing potentials of these medicines) Entheogens are like fertilizers for your brain, if you just use them willy nilly you can fertilize the GMO's as well as the seeds you plant, if you are not consciously strengthening an aspect of your brain, your brain will be impressed with whatever happens to be going on. Things will be rearranged one way or another after using entheogens and so it's important to do this consciously and so it is crucial that before you do entheogens you have critical thinking skills as well as well defined intentions and practices behind your entheogenic work. Also, a staunch Anarchist perspective is very important when you are still “impressionable” after your trip, as it will keep you from joining up with the first group who gives you some fallacy laced explanation about your experiences, but demands your subservience. (Watch out for those damned Dysnomians too!)

As the Christians know “you gotta get em while they're young” and their brains will wire themselves accordingly, while this can definitely be manipulative, Anarchists have no choice but to try and make children aware of how to think for themselves before their brains are filled with archon GMO's. One very valuable method will be Occult practice, even if it is done in a secular way and indeed for optimal spiritual realization it should be done in a secular way, or at least a way that allows the child to come to their own conclusions about spirituality. Obviously no dogma should be taught to children, however we should teach them methods by which they can as scientifically as possible learn to explore and control their own minds, helping them to become as objective, clear thinking and emotionally healthy as possible. Only then will they be capable of making decisions for themselves and unfortunately this is in direct contrast to the present system which trains them to be servants to authorities and rulers. Since the brain is wiring itself to a larger degree when humans are growing up, it is important to make sure that they are never infected with the memes of their often mentally ill parents. Obviously this is impossible to a certain degree, but most parents are people who have wired themselves to be sadomasochistic authoritarian OCD slaves and are bent on domination and selfish consumerism at the expense of everyone else in the world. A lot of kids know this, but have their love of freedom beaten out of them, they give in because they think every adult is that way and so we need to make sure kids know that some adults are aware of this insanity. Not to mention the bias of parents filled with superstitions about religion or the idea that nothing is true until science proves it, the minds of these parents are feeble and unable to discern any level of truth outside of what government and private educational and religious institutions teach them, for without cognitive freedom there is no freedom.

Initiation rites of young people within various cultures provide a means of imprinting neural circuitry either healthy or not, but lay the foundation for a new world view and so fundamentally alter consciousness through experience, providing a marked transition in to a new awareness and sometimes new social roles as well. It may be helpful to provide some form of Anarchist initiation as a way of planting the seeds of Anarchist consciousness, of initiating the path to Anarchist responsibilities and actions, providing a start to a mindset that is capable of creating and sustaining an Anarchist societies. This could be achieved through the rite of Dysnomia or other Anarchist Gods or it could take any number of forms which are more age appropriate for children, or which are customized for and by specific individuals. (entheogens do not have to be used) The key part being that it imprints a deep level of anarkhos into the brain so that the seed of Anarchist consciousness can start to grow and provide a person with free will, rather than archon programming. Of course this must be voluntary, but this would be the beginning or the initiation of overcoming personal archons and ridding the mind of all authoritarian and hierarchical circuits, starting with consciously cultivating Anarchist consciousness and self directed neuroplasticity in general. This would hopefully be followed up with further ritual work specific to the symbols and traditions the initiate finds meaningful, to assess the consciousness and root out all archon circuitry.

Taking a personal vow, done of the initiates own free will may be useful, no matter what a person's age, the initiation rite can be used for creating a new phase in life by asserting to the brain which circuits will be strengthened and kept, Anarchist or archon circuits. A vow may and probably should be personally created, since it's about Anarchism a good place to start would be by not taking my rituals as authoritative, but it might look something like this.. "I hereby swear to live my life in accordance with the principles of Anarchism, I swear to learn my true will and to fulfil my true will so long as it does not impose on others, and I also swear to overcome all archons which hold me back from achieving anarkhos. I swear to oppose others who impose their will on me or anyone else so that all may be free within Anarchy and I swear to incarnate as many times as is needed to accomplish all this." This vow could be taken before performing the rite of Dysnomia as the statement of intention and a way of using that experience to more deeply imprint the initiation to fill the brain with consciousness of Anarchism. More than simply working out the exoteric politics of the brain, these rituals will also help to strengthen the functional capabilities of the mind to create better activists, thinkers, artists etc, making people who are able to come to more substantial critiques of the government and come up with better solutions and tactics, as well as creating people who are capable of teaching others to free their own minds. If intuition is the precursor to logic, then by ridding the mind of archons a human can rid themselves of the bias and mental barriers which keep them from accessing their true will and their intuitive genius. Perhaps this is electromagnetic interference, screening out divine consciousness, access to the akashic records for intuitive anamnesis, perhaps the Earth's electromagnetic field really has little to nothing to do with this, but one thing is for sure, that through ritual training, the Dysnomian state of mind can be cultivated and give a person a much better intuition, as well as improve all other aspects of the mind.

Ritual trains the mind to be conscious of non verbal abstract meaning and how these symbols can be manipulated to achieve different states of awareness, it trains a mind to focus like never before and explore, identify and use aspects of the mind which were generally unconscious, in this way ritual can potentially be used to wire the brain to achieve gnosis. Accessing Dysnomian consciousness would be knowing without the need for inherently limiting language, though linguistic capabilities would probably be improved, if it is linguistic it would not be the gnosis, or knowing of Dysnomia, the state beyond language, beyond what we have forgotten. Just as a body builder is not an elitist if they say you cannot lift as much weight as them, it is required that you do certain exercises before your mind can fully handle the full weight of meaning behind the highly abstract nature of mystical myths and Alchemical texts.

This is important for Anarchists, because if people can access the truth for themselves, if they have strong minds and critical thinking skills, if they know their true wills and the meaning behind religions and laws, capitalism and all the rest of it, they will not need anyone to tell them Anarchy is a good idea, it will be obvious. If people can learn to think for themselves then activists would not need to present them with historical facts, or debates, moral judgements or even their fears and guilt trips about human society. The people will be able to see it all for themselves and they won't need activists to "educate" them, they will come to Anarchy based on their own conclusions because the "glamour" of the system will cease to operate. If people can achieve a state of mind where they realize the truth, that we are all one, that nature is our mother since she created all life, if people can experience a state of mind not based on fears and prejudice that comes with hierarchical thinking, then Anarchy will come as natural as breathing. This will be achieved by helping people to become more conscious, not by complaining or pointing out atrocities, but by creating environments which create Anarchist circuitry. The will is critical in defining what we make our consciousness to be and it is ultimately up to us to make the brain how we want, we cannot rely on authorities to make our circuits for us and we cannot blame others for our own mental laziness and lack of introspection, our minds are ours and we have to DIY when it comes to anarkhos consciousness.

Capitalism is black magick warfare among competitive meme strains of neural circuitry, these circuits have bred and transmitted themselves throughout the world as a means of propagating their programming to evolve ever more virulent strains of memetic hypnosis, especially the legalese and economic forms of Sumerian black magick. These brain circuits are spreading and growing and reproducing within a collective pool of memetic programming. As in the physical world, in the memetic world there are predators and herbivores/scavengers. Herbivores are the consumers of the mainstream, the herd animals who are factory farmed and bred to be fat and docile so as to be extra profitable. The people at the top of the pyramid are the predators and parasites and people like the homeless, those who seek to reduce the waste of others are the scavengers.

Identifying the fractal qualities of memes is somewhat harder than on a tree or something we can see directly, but we can see that if a meme is accepted in a major way, that it can lead to the evolution and creation of new memes. So for example the monetary system meme gives rise to bank memes, capitalist memes, hierarchy memes and many more, these later memes are self similar as a fractal but with a diversity of forms, keeping within the original pattern, that being that monetary systems should be used. Before the monetary system was ritualism, which is an even more deeply rooted meme in human culture from which the monetary system is but one branch of its descendents, others being as I have said before, alphabets, in many ways language itself and so pretty well all human abstractions. Another example would be Greek rationalism spreading across Europe and now the world; it set off a cascade of memes consistently uniting together in a coherent logical system, eventually evolving in to the modern world, with science and all of its discoveries. This can be thought of in many ways as a memetic butterfly effect, a culture cannot always predict the implications of using a meme or what it will inspire down the road.

This can be imagined through understanding memes to be like genes, as we have family trees, or genetic evolutionary trees we have memetic family trees and a tree is really a great metaphor because they grow in accordance with the principles of fractals. Memes grow in people's brains as circuits and from that paradigm or collection of circuits, new memes are deemed appropriate which may be helpful to the culture, or at least may be popular, so what we have is a bunch of fractal circuits, each giving birth to other fractal circuits, which are iterations of the fractal formula and take a new form while maintaining self similarity. The brain will generate ideas according to what it believes to be true, these beliefs even if they are scientifically true are indistinguishable on a biological level from other beliefs and so long as they are equally believed, the brain does not differentiate on that level between unproven beliefs or proven beliefs. This works to control not only which new memes will be taken in by the individual, but which new memes will be created or imagined by the individual.

Different fractals have different amounts of self similarity, by which I mean the repeating pattern is easier to recognize in some fractals more than others. In a mind with lots of cognitive dissonance it might be imagined that there is less self similarity, that as a mind gets rid of cognitive dissonance and becomes more aware, it becomes more self similar with the underlying fractal of all reality, until eventually oneness with the universe is realized. Since the newly created memes are connected to and based off of pre-existing memes, they are to some level congruent with them and this congruency is I believe fractal in nature. Cognitive dissonance then would be the result of having relatively incongruent fractals in the brain, ones which are not totally self similar with each other. Self similarity of a person's beliefs or memes is the degree to which they have a coherent and consistent world view and personal integrity, that which makes them act in accordance with their beliefs, or their true will. (People who match their outer lives with their inner lives in harmony, or people who are "keeping it real") Those people who have accepted memes of hierarchy and authoritarian domination are expressions of those memes, each unique and yet as a fractal have consistent transforming influences put on them which shape who they are as a person. When a person is “two faced” or lacks integrity, they then lose their ability to be self similar and so lose awareness of their unity with all of reality.

Metaphysically this is expressed as the electromagnetic energies produced by the brain, so that we can see the fractal cycle goes from natural evolution, to ritual, to language and abstractions, to memes, to culturally based actions, to brain circuitry, to electromagnetism, to the universal mind itself (or quantum level physics) which is the basis and creator of the natural world. This universal mind directs evolution and so it completes the fractal equation that cycles back on itself eternally and it does this for the purpose of generating consciousness and awareness. At each step of the equation the energy is transformed, but ultimately it is all based on the same root pattern, the same fractal equation which is the main driving principle behind all of creation. Once we become conscious of the fractal nature of consciousness and how it is universal, we can then start to consciously direct how we will effect or change the universal fractal. Once we understand the link between things like the monetary system and pollution and the general unhappiness that the monetary system creates, after enough iterations, or cycles through the equation, we can see the underlying pattern and where future use of that meme will take us. We can see through history, we can look back through the time fractal that the monetary system is not working and that it is spreading itself throughout the universal fractal like a virus. Archons then would be variables in the universal fractal equation which limit awareness and which seek to direct the memetic (and so the total fractal) paradigms in order to create the unconsciousness which allows them to make humans into reactionary programmable robots, because once infected with archon memes humans do not even realize they can control their own lives, but instead give that power to the rulers.

While we are currently experiencing more control and more expressions of authoritarian meme fractals in our culture than ever before, this is in a sense natural, we are becoming aware of the pattern through repetition, through multiple expressions which seem different but which are ultimately the same. (like democrats and republicans) After enough cycles through a fractal equation anyone can pick out that although things appear different, we are making the same mistakes over and over again, that things have to change on a fundamental level and although archon fractals are increasing, so are consciousness and free will fractals. If memes can be created which will make people aware of memetics, fractals and the sociological and political implications of these things, then we can start to more consciously create our personal paradigms and plan our societies in accordance with fractal principles. This will allow us to change the equations and eliminate the archon variables all together, so that we can take complete control of the fractal and be as one universal being in harmony with all levels of itself.

What has been called the “perennial philosophy,” the underlying and eternal mother religion of all religions is the fractal shape which all philosophies, all allegories are ultimately self similar with and it comes in to season as through what has been called “the eternal return.” The different layers of meaning found in an allegory are different iterations of the same fractal formula, those who can see the self similarity created, can then use it to find unending variations of insights in the allegory, which may be unplanned by the author, but are true none the less. The various myths of different cultures are often allegories for essentially the same things, on the surface they appear different, but when you have understanding of the essences of the symbols, the symbolic forms of the essences line up in their self similar course. So long as humanity is out of step with nature it is out of step with itself and it will destroy itself according to the degree it values archon variables within its paradigm, not only this it will limit its own awareness. Some believe that history with all its authoritarian hell has been a necessary process of self discovery for the universal consciousness, for human society, we learn by making mistakes. We have the free will to keep making mistakes if we want, but eventually we will all realize the fractal pattern and so we will realize the mistakes and eventually change our paradigm. As each individual soul goes through transmigration, a learning process, so too does the universal mind and we are all branches in its fractal reaching out in that awareness. The universe is the Alchemical process of creating awareness and the great work is to spread this awareness, to spread anarkhos memes which allow us to participate willingly in the work. The only other alternative is to continue unconsciously creating cognitive dissonance and incongruent archon paradigms, ideas which create the illusion of personal freedom and individuality through the capitalist machine and all its subtle lies.

We have been raised with the neural circuitry that we need a causal reason to be happy, that only things which are labelled “good” can make us happy rather than the fact that we are happy when certain chemicals are released and there are ways to control your brain chemistry using ritual and language. Your internal dialogue determines how your brain grows and what apparatus you have for creating the happiness you want. What is sacred to the divine itself? What does it value? If all that it does is good, what does the word “good” even mean? It means whatever the divine wants it to because it and us and we are in ontological Anarchy. Alchemy is the process of turning this nonsensical question in to a means of producing value for whoever is interested in it, it is the means by which all values are arbitrarily generated from the primal Chaos and interpreted in a way that is according to will, but which inevitably creates greater self awareness. Once you are comfortable being groundless, faultless, shameless and prideless, in constant process and transition to ever greater refinement, once you have abandoned notions of good and evil, you can turn anything in to gold because what is good is what is manifested. Value or gold is created by the satisfaction we take in this art, we can ignore these natural processes and complain, or we can engage in nature's natural Alchemical process by becoming self similar with it and so take part in the process which has universal value, in which the definition is spread as widely as possible so as to bring all things up. Since all things have value and it is our awareness of things which allows us to recognize value, by increasing our awareness through Alchemy we in a sense generate gold in that we are better able to appreciate nature by knowing how it functions. Once we begin the great work and learn to take responsibility for our minds, we realize it never was the gold that was valuable, it was learning how to make it that mattered, learning how to value and understand all things and this is the philosopher's stone.

Some might think that since all we have in our brains is the descendents of memes with at least some authoritarian portions to the fractal, that all we are ever capable of creating is different expressions of our current fractal equation, that we can never remove or fundamentally change the variable of archons from the equation, but this thinking is itself an archon illusion. Although the archon variables may always have to be in physical reality to some degree, since physicality may depend on archons in order to exist, once we recognize what variables in the equations do what, we can determine which value to assign to “X” or whatever variable, we can choose to assign it with a 1 or maybe even a 0 if we so desire. This is represented in the memetic sense by decentralizing power structures, so for example we could make a value for the amount of levels to a hierarchy, so let's say there are 10 tiers to becoming the head of the government down to the common person, or the total amount of levels in the cultures hierarchy. (this is oversimplified but it's an example) This gives us a quantifiable value for a memetic fractal equation seeking to create a model for all of humanity. So if we were to come up with a very simple fractal equation for human culture like $Z=Z^2+X$ we could say, Z =(humanity) and X =(levels of hierarchy) we may not be able to get rid of the variable X altogether, as this would negate our free will to experience what it's like to be controlled by others, but we can give it a value of 0, which is Anarchism. This would mean we have a flat plane rather than a pyramid, a society where all people are on an equal footing, this would dramatically change all levels of the sociological fractal while keeping the fundamental equation the same. The higher the value of X , the more it will be a factor on Z or humanity, the more it will dictate the pattern of the fractal and its expressions, so it is activists need to identify all aspects of culture which are expressions of archons, or hierarchical thinking and try to limit the value which humanity places on those memes, those variables.

The first place an Anarchist must look to rid of archon values is within themselves, for if they don't, all expressions of their personal equations, all actions will after enough iterations, or cycles amplify the fractal to a larger scale and will manifest more and more archon tendencies within themselves and so the world. As basically all forms of modern culture are rooted in the Occult, it is within the Occult that we can find the most self similar patterns and the formulas which generate the later cultures. So then we can use the Occult to manipulate the formulas and root out the archons, but in order to change a fractal expression, you have to change it from a more primary level on the scale from which it is derived. As ritual trance states and the entheogenic experience are a more primary expression of the consciousness fractal than memes or society, they are ideal for become aware of our personal patterns.

The sociological implications of fractals in regards to memes is not yet fully understood, but through iteration of that variable, giving a high value to consciousness variables in the great sociological equation, the awareness of humanity will have a much better idea of how we create problems for ourselves and how we can fix them. Demonizing a variable or trying negate it is useless, memetically or metaphysically the more focus we put on “evil” things, the more value we put in it for the equation of consciousness. By this I mean the more we try to create a universal standard of “good,” the more we value hierarchies and the archon variable, which will always ironically manifest the variable of “evil” into our lives. This is because we are still focusing awareness on things we don't want to exist, it is expressed in how humans go to war and oppress others in the name of freedom or how the more laws are created, the more criminals are created and so all this will do is force the variables we demonize to express themselves in different ways. This is not to say we should ignore the problems of the world, we must learn about these things to a certain degree if we are to recognize the formulas and ultimately change the values of the variables. But that for example, using violence to stop terrorism creates more terrorists and so the cycle just repeats itself, trying to destroy all tyranny by forcing people to fit your idea of political correctness will only create more tyranny. All we can do is become aware of how variables express themselves through iteration and make ourselves a model of the fractal we wish others to be. If we do this then we will set up memes, or trains of thought which will progress from our actions, which are self similar or fractal with whom we are. By our actions we will provide a different context or source of awareness as to how authoritarian meme fractals express themselves and so through that contrast, the pattern will be more easily seen by those we wish to change. You cannot tell someone their memes or fractal expression is “evil” and be very effective at changing anything fundamentally, you can only help them to recognize for themselves what is a preferable expression. This can be done only through example, because as soon as you put yourself up as authority on truth above them, you change the value of X to equal 1 instead of 0 and the whole of reality that comes from that equation, will change drastically after enough iterations.

So long as you have a value of X that equals 1 or more, your actions will be different and so your memes will be different, so the effect you have on other peoples consciousness and so all their memes and actions. (For example if you make activists look like authoritarian assholes, others may not want to get involved in activism) With this, the world as a whole changes and so even the electromagnetic field of the world will be different and then the universal mind and the ability of humanity to manifest reality according to ontological Anarchy. So all this stems from your personal authoritarian perspective, as slight as it may be and so the place to start must be with yourself. As soon as we step out of oneness, we step out of anarkhos and into cognitive dissonance which is created by that dualism; we change everything that used to be represented by that oneness, which is totality itself. After the duality expresses itself through enough iterations, value systems are increasingly apparent and with them hierarchies and with them the expression of archons or rulers to try and overtake those things valued as “evil.” These archons have no real purpose other than to create new expressions or elaborations of “evil” on which they are dependent, since “evil” itself is more primary than them on the fractal scale, they can never really effect it, only create circumstances for it to be iterated. Our only hope then if we are to end “evil” in the world is to go to a state of consciousness which is more primary than duality and that is a consciousness of oneness or Anarchy and if we can do that, then Anarchy will exist throughout the universal mind.

As brain circuitry is made of cells, and some circuits are made from memes or archons; different individual human brains and so the humans themselves are like cells of a larger organism. Different kinds of cells have different functions and combine with other cells to create a body and so can be thought of as countries or governments. This body then acts to compete in the memetic ecosystem and fulfil its intentions, such as growth and reproduction, or feeding as it were, infecting new people with its memes so that it can grow. A cell can live without the body given the right environment, and a cell may not even realize it is part of a body, but it is all the same and what it feels naturally compelled to do, will work to the benefit of the body it belongs to. As cells create the circuitry of the brain and grow in the physical fractal expression of an individual's consciousness, a country or a religion, or large social group is the larger scale expression of that fractal pattern. The actions of each individual is the energy which seeks to make the fractal grow, to infect more people, through time the forms of the expressions change and the fractal becomes more complicated as it iterates into all the sub memes which mutate out of it. People's actions are in this way fractal, their bodies are obviously fractal, through the veins but also according to the golden ratio which makes up various human proportions, (and reflexology) all of reality is an iteration, we just have to learn to recognize the patterns, the process of which is itself fractal iteration. In terms of language, since words are defined by other words and these defining words are defined by related words, this creates a network of circuits in the brain. Descriptions are based on comparison, and all these concepts (and probably memes in general) are defined by connotations and so the definitions of definitions form according to universal grammar in a kind of agglutinative fractal pattern of circuits.

When we decentralize our brain and the demiurge ego circuits, the world will follow and the seemingly different mutations of the universal fractal patterns will be reconciled and recognized for what they are and then peace and unity will be achieved on this planet. This will be harmony, the end of cognitive dissonance through synchronizing with the natural processes which spawned us, of which we are inseparable. The problems we experience are our own desire to see ourselves as separate from the great pattern of life, to step outside of unity, we are individuals, we are each unique, but we are also united, expressions of a common infinite fractal pattern. So it is, what we do to one person, or even ourselves, will ripple out into the sea of consciousness and effect all that exists. Awareness of oneness is being in the black centre, but stepping into this pattern and living it, doing otherwise is to pretend that we are better than everything else, rather than realizing we are all an iteration of the same thing. This then is precisely why we are all precious, all sacred, all important and worthy of love, no matter how ugly we might think an iteration is, it is always just a reflection of ourselves.

Stranger Still

On Exodus from America, with savages searching for pearls covered in mud, their fires are brighter and yet they never see the uses of this technology of destruction.

In god they trust their bills and pay, they can't buy a soul, but work for dollars to pray

This contrarian labyrinth is what works for you, in question a perfection is outside of view, but twisting is turning a fragmented zoo, that we all need our freedom from empires is true.

What rose is this, which blooms in June, black as the night, sprouts from a pearl, onyx the colour of the stone, it's name is silence and works unseen, shimmering out images that make up our dreams.

I am looking for a melody which I do not know, to sing a tune which no one will hear.

A secret refuge in my bizarre reflections and in it a song of my responses, for words are the bridge from the inside to the out, and grow like a wilderness in to the next beyond.

Overflowing, blooming, like a cup with too much water, overflowing beauty, like a such which has no name, and in it we look for the source of our perdition, but only see our falsities in the erection of our image.

Let me outline my thoughts and draw out this picture, to shape the sketch of my mind and secure my head for that time when I am dead.

Ensnared in rebellion, the rubric of desire, my syncopated passions are embroiled in a bitter core, filtered to an attenuated purity of poisonous medicine, they wait there and look to future days.

I eat a feast of fools, a feast of love in a secret supper, the food is the flesh of the gods to celebrate the birth of the new light, that which brings up visions of a peacocks tail in a retort for all my egotism.

This crazy wisdom comes with being intoxicated with god, you may see me with hate, for I am an eater of sin, a madcap child and ambidextrous fool of the crooked path of blame, a free spirit and a trickster all the same.

And as we burn up all of our fake, there are different colours that we each make, practising this is the art of the wise, it is the practise which lead merchants despise.

But that is forgotten and has no place in this world, no value in a market when products need pay.

Cross purposes and ancient ways, like forests gave shelter to life through the growth of life, threatened now by pollutants and slashes, for the memories of the millennia are lost in a day.

With it our past and surely our future, is gone now forever so what will remain?

Only the answers the elders did leave us, but how will we hear when machines rule our mind?

Things are sick and they're going to get sicker, throw a brick through a window but the banks build up quicker, I can't burn it alone there too much to dethrone, but won't you help awhile?

I've got a world to set on fire.

Return to the source like a salmon upstream, life flows without, just doing its thing.

Like an insemination of the forest, they swim and spread life, feeding this world till creatures are rife.

And so I will return to the source if I can, or seek now forever my beloved who ran, to lands untamed and life in the wild, but reaches out to all with a mischievous smile.

Ooooh, oooh, ooohh, what a port of slavery, to cross the secret of my travesty....

My life's a wreck on this ship of fools, but though I sink I do not find the ground, Settling on stormy seas, singing shanties with ancient initiators and survivors of rain, woken to obscure beauty and undreamt visions, never again to be seen by the eyes of a human, no one there to appreciate the glory which fades like starlight at the coming of the sun.

No route for those of shallow ambition, this abyss is the way home, and the means of rest in all those who wander, so in it dissolve as a baptism of soul and lack no more forever, the completion of being.

Chapter 20 – Word of Love

I am now all set to accomplish my goal, I have prepared myself to die just in time for my 23rd birthday, and it is clear from the tarot divination that I performed that I will not be coming back from this mission. I just wanted to add the final chapter of my book, my hopes for the future and to give some more ideas about how an Anarchist society can function, I just wanted to say goodbye, to leave some explanation for the future people, for those who question why I have done what I have done. I have made the effort of making sure that my ideas will not die with me, I have contacted many people on the internet, like minds and kindred spirits who will carry on my work after I am gone. It is a shame I could not have met them earlier, or in person, we are spread across this world but are united as Anarchists, Anarchist magicians who oppose the rulers and have created a decentralized network of rebellion. Having found agreement with the ideas I have laid out here, they will help to spread the final version of my book and my message, they will also spread knowledge of Dysnomia and continue to fight the system and defend nature. I am a bit scared about dying, but I know I will also succeed in hitting my target, I don't feel any remorse for him, he seems to have surrendered his humanity long ago, I would feel more guilty about killing a bug than him. If I had my way, no one would die and no one would copy my tactics, but we must each do what we think is in line with truth. By hitting that target ritually, I will defeat the archons on the microcosm, so that as others become aware of what I did, they will be inspired and through the principles of magick, the intention will manifest in the macrocosm.

All too many may read this and through their confidence in their intellect and reason be quite sure of its quality and meaning, but they do not even realize the real meaning, the real qualities were hidden specifically from such minds, that such superficial and literal examinations, such lack of ability to experience the book, rather than just read it are precisely the problems I have sought to address. I am not so condescending, so authoritarian as to say you are not worthy to understand, but I will say that you missed the point, that you only sought to reinforce what you already believed, rather than try and learn something new. All people are worthy of such information, but you must work on yourself to really understand it, in order to perceive information, it is not simply a matter of finding it, but preparing the soil or making your mind capable of recognizing it. Those who make the effort are worthy not because they are above on some hierarchy, but because they are willing to put in the effort, because it is their intention to be capable of setting aside assumptions and prejudice.

Those who are not capable, are the only hope of those who can see why Anarchy is imperative, for they are the ones we need to gain the consent of, they are the ones who will change the world, not the ones who are already Anarchist. No, preaching to the choir will never make a difference, only the understanding of those who are ignorant will create change. Take care to remember it is not the flesh and blood of “the man” that we fight, it's his ignorance, for ignorance creates the rulers, authorities and principalities and with that the powers of spiritual wickedness in high places. I go to do what I will do not out of spite, but to sound a loud wake up call to all who are ignorant and finally to learn what is beyond this world, what real Anarchy is, I go to be with Dysnomia. Through my death I will have proven myself capable of living in Anarchist heaven forever, proven I am ready to transcend, to be happy in oneness forever. I don't know, maybe I can use the portal to go back before I got into this mess, maybe I just wish I could be ignorant again, 16 and never having tried acid. All I know now is I need to get out of this world, get out of this solipsist mindset. As the old self dies, judgement is at hand, the end of that old world, for death will be a revelation, an awakening and a new beginning, not a ploy to take over the world, but in reality a celebration of life through resurrection and the possibilities of enlightenment on Earth.

All this talk of environmental devastation has got me thinking, the oligarchs are definitely planning something bigger than usual, there are trillions of missing dollars, embezzlement is rampant in the wars in the Middle East and that money is going to more than just a plutocrat's retirement fund. Call me crazy, but there is an idea floating around the conspiracy community that soon the secret government will kill most of the world's population using germ warfare. If this is going to happen I cannot say, no doubt there is a lot of paranoia among the conspiracy community and a lot of charlatans and honestly mistaken people. People have been scared of the end of the world since the beginning of history at the very least. One thing is certain, we are on the threshold of a new era of human society, but this does not mean a loving and good society is guaranteed without our participation. It doesn't matter if it's the age of Aquarius or not, there have been many different ages and none of them ideal, even if astrology is real we still have free will, we still have to make our own destiny and each sign has its pros and cons. The only rock to cling to in order to weather the storm is your own sense of truth, just be careful it has a firm foundation. The world itself in one way or another is more damaged and in more danger than it has been since the destruction of the Dinosaurs. Given the current economic and environmental factors of the world I would not be surprised if some government unleashed bio weapons on their increasingly obsolete slaves, after all, who needs workers once robots can replace them? One simply has to look at the genocides they have committed in the past to know governments and the psychopaths at the top of them, are very capable of such actions and can even justify it using twisted logic. The mistake that most people make is thinking that their leader's behaviour is not psychopathic and so on it goes, so it is if the world is destroyed it will not be from nukes or germs, it will be from the naiveté of common person.

Various governments no doubt made plenty of bomb shelters during the cold war; now that they see the limitations of the Earth's environment, (something they must understand better than anyone) they are no doubt preparing themselves for the collapse of what we presently call civilization. Given the god like technologies that the oligarchs are on the verge of developing, it can't be too long before their worker slaves become obsolete. Looking around and seeing the ones who seem to see this coming it is mostly primitivists and apocalyptic Christians, but for different reasons and in different ways, there is much confusion, however I think I can see how the oligarch's plan might take effect. Given that it is totally impracticable and unreasonable to expect over 6 billion people to quietly and passively die to solve the worlds overpopulation problem, primitivism is in many ways perfect for government justifications of martial law and anti environmentalist hysteria. Primitivism makes it all too easy to discredit environmentalism, thus demoralizing realistic environmentalists and spreading all kinds of derisive and overly simplistic propaganda. As far as I can see, primitivism might as well be disinformation and cointelpro for the all the good it does the environment. As this is obviously the direction we must move if we are to survive, I have a lot of sympathy for a back to nature movement, I may even personally prefer to live as close to nature as possible, but expecting the whole world to give up technology is not only unrealistic, it is a form of authoritarian totalitarianism that makes Mao Tse-tung seem freedom loving.

While there are a variety of stances, the primitivist position is generally to encourage civilization to destroy itself, then somehow people will depopulate as the world crumbles and we all return to living in the stone age. Presumably they believe the environment will eventually overgrow all the damage we have caused, but helping nature to heal doesn't seem to come up much, as in many cases this requires technology. Though of course in such a scenario humanity would destroy what little remains of wild food sources and fascist death squads and ex military militia groups would go around executing people, specifically people like hippies and primitivists. Even more than it is already, the world would turn in to a barren hellscape, a place where entrenched hierarchies cling to power through coal or any means necessary... Not to mention that a lack of energy is already a motivation for global war, and making it even more scarce would cause civil wars and gang wars which would undoubtedly destroy the environment, but for some reason this never seems to be mentioned.

If humanity stopped using oil and modern industry all at once as primitivists want, then billions of people would be starving to death and it is moronic to think they will not do whatever they can to survive, that they would not turn to what is left of nature and eat every berry, plant, animal, fish they can, that they would not cut down the forests to use for fires to keep them warm and use every resource they can to avoid dying. Short of the elites exterminating people with something like germ warfare, if something is not done to change the future, the Earth will turn into some kind of post apocalyptic steam punk scenario. Corporations would run coal plants and gangs of warlords with ex military, police and redneck militias would go around enslaving and probably cannibalizing people, using total martial law to continue exploiting the world as much as possible, all the while the oligarchs will be sitting pretty in the shelters which they have been building up since the 1940's. What most primitivists don't seem to understand is that modern civilization will not be destroyed overnight and that it will not be evenly distributed or total, that over a long period of time, the military powers are going to starve the third world to death. The crypto-fascists who currently run this world will retain their power, all the while we talk about whether or not technology is sustainable. There are a lot of leaders who are itching for a race war and this is exactly the kind of justification they need, and so this subjugation of all other people will go on until those oligarchs have the technology to replace us too. While destroying industrial facilities which are threatening the environment is easily justified, it is clear to me primitivists are completely naive about a great deal of things and that their approach is overly simplistic and actually detrimental to any hope of freedom or even equilibrium with nature. I have met plenty of primitivists who talk big, but all too many are not doing anything beyond pacifist protest, if even that, most seem to live in the city and talk on Facebook, debating about whatever relatively minor aspect of Anarchism is fashionable at the time.

The only way to avoid a post apocalyptic cannibal scenario is to start creating a sustainable culture and since capitalism will destroy most of the world before society can evolve to Anarchism, we need to start working to do what we can right now before the crash happens. While I am not the best read on the subject, the primitivists I have knowledge of encourage people to get off the grid and while this is good, it tends to ignore the fact that hungry mobs and said fascist death squads are going to be raiding your nice cozy organic permaculture farm. Given that most primitivists are not even volunteering to euthanize themselves for the environment, I think it's unlikely bourgeois people will either and while I definitely encourage voluntary depopulation through birth control, we do not require a primitivist society to do this. While I have no idea how it came about, or why anyone believes in it, it does occur to me the governments want primitivists to run to the forests ranting about the evils of technology, ignoring any opportunity for damage control or softening the blows of the inevitable collapse, or really presenting the masses with any realistic tactics at all. By creating primitivist culture, it fulfills a number of important goals for the oligarchs, first it encourages the preservation of resources that will then be available to the rich after the "culling" of the obsolete slaves. Secondly it provides the cultural justification for the culling and especially the economic impoverishment of the third world through keeping them from industrializing. (thus aiding their racist eugenics ambitions as well) Thirdly, since primitivists are mostly hippies who in practice are also largely pacifists, it prevents environmentalists from creating Anarchist infrastructure, but also stops them from getting the resources needed to create an effective physical revolution. It is easy enough to see that a hippie out in the woods with a bow and arrow, is no match for a cyborg death squad and corporate controlled super technology.

The present system is changing irrevocably, one way or another it is not sustainable and either will change away from capitalism or collapse. As horrible as it is likely to be, the crash is an opportunity to create a controlled demolition with sustainable infrastructure being created as the old industries are transmuted. This is far more preferable to destruction by dilapidation, environmental destruction and massive corruption and as unsustainable as our current system is, it is better than 7 billion people using wood based power as in the stone age. With nothing in place to take over for industrial food production, the Earth will not turn over night into some nature loving paradise of Anarchy where people suddenly learn the errors of industrialism and hierarchy. Some people speak like a zealot about primitivism, but from what I've seen, the only answers primitivism has for us is how to be a hippie who can get emotional satisfaction from illusionary ideas of moral superiority, through oversimplifying problems and reacting without actually considering practical realities. Primitivism teaches how to justify hatred and distance yourself from culture, all the while deluding yourself into thinking you're a loving and peaceful person. (I hate society and most people, but as a punk I admit it, I also admit that I love most people because I am a complete human being.)

Without Anarchist and environmentally sustainable infrastructure, there will be no foundations for a new society which can survive the crash and society will further degenerate into total and in your face military dictatorship ruled by whatever mercenaries can seize the most oil, coal and weapons in order to control their serfs. If you think the government is bad now, wait until there are food riots in your neighbourhood and oil prices are only affordable to the wealthy elite and all the world is an environmental wasteland outside the preserves of the military compounds. If this kind of overt martial law society takes hold, then Anarchists will have lost a vital opportunity to work with people on a mass scale and instead will have to work much harder to create communes and infrastructure capable of defending themselves from authoritarian militants. The U.S. Government has seen this coming since at least the 50s and Hitler was planning for this before that, their autocracies will be weakened but they are far more prepared than any group of primitivists, or any survivalist militia group and so we have to strengthen Anarchy as much as possible before the crash happens. (It could be argued the ideology of colonization was created specifically for this time of environmental collapse and the race war which white people so often insist on causing.) Rushing the collapse as primitivists want to do will only bring about the war before we have the infrastructure and numbers to defend ourselves. A lack of food and technology is not going to make bourgeois people any more egalitarian, it will make them willing soldiers for anyone who can offer them order and food and so we have to use whatever means we can to make Anarchism while we still can. The clock is always ticking, either we make something sustainable or we wait for a starving polluted humanity to destroy the planet, but I say we should be here in the present and act now while there is still a planet worth saving.

Some primitivists say the only sustainable society is one without technology or which doesn't domesticate plants and animals, others say we can only have settlements which rely purely on local production, but all these ideas are completely arbitrary. These standards are not based on facts or figures as to the environmental costs of production or the strength of the ecosystem and so while in some ways it may be effective, it is certainly not the only way or even close to the best way. These notions totally ignore the fact that "primitive" people have technologies like bows and arrows and plenty of other things, that they practised permaculture and they traded over long distances, especially goods such as obsidian which are only found in certain places. Non technological people also at times devastated the environment and so instead of setting arbitrary limits on technology, it is an understanding of how to balance with the ecosystem which we need. If ants can figure out how to domesticate aphids and grow crops of fungus sustainably, in fact for millions of years, surely we can figure out methods as well. What is needed is not a denial of science and technology, but a realistic appraisal of what is possible, followed up with maintaining a healthy relationships with the other life forms on this planet. It is the culture of consumerism, the culture of denial of the effects we have on nature which is the problem, if we all became primitivists but still retained consumer culture, we could still destroy everything trying to get obsidian, trying to get fancy fur coats, trying to get shiny rocks and metals and in fact this is probably how we got in to this mess in the first place.

Sustainability is determined by many factors and it is far too simple to expect billions of people to willingly die and humanity to never implement new inventions for all of eternity, because the fact is, we have a natural inclination for making and using tools. (Chimps and crows do it too.) The cities are here, the damage is already done and everyone going off into the wilds will just destroy what little is left. So then, we might as well try to make the most of the resources we have already extracted and develop technologies that will allow us to recycle everything in a “cradle to cradle” model of sustainable industry. There are nuclear plants running which we cannot simply turn off, there is chemical waste to deal with, plastics everywhere, sky scrapers, depleted uranium in Iraq and garbage dumps and ignoring all this is suicidal. Blaming technology is a straw man argument because technology as it exists today, was not designed to be sustainable and was often actually designed for “planned obsolescence.” (this means it was purposely designed to break, so that consumers would have to buy another) When it comes to production, the environment was never even contemplated outside of dangerously loose government regulations and so just because what we have now is unsustainable, does not mean that all technology is inherently unsustainable, only that the culture which produced it is psychotic and deranged.

Since the oligarchs are on the verge of creating technological immortality, which is no doubt their real goal, given how mechanical and robotic such immortals are likely to be, it could very well be the result of archons using human imagination to create a technology that would allow them to manifest on Earth. Knowing all this, it is easy to see that the oligarchs are planning to destroy society, maybe even fake the second coming of Christ, they are already using fundamentalist Muslims as the bogeyman for their Christian slaves. So it is easy to see they will escalate their contrived wars in the middle east by pitting their brainwashed subjects against each other, then as technology allows, they will destroy most of the Christians and all the other obsolete slaves. I say “most” of the Christians because if they are archons trying to manifest as robots, then they may decide to keep some Christians on as pets to worship them as false gods. Egotistical oligarchs may want a nice, unquestioning herd of sheep for these archon shepherds to feast upon for all eternity, taking their energy, imprisoning their souls in immortal slave bodies and perhaps utilizing the remaining humans creative imagination, as this is something they lack. The archon's primary tactic is to divide and conquer the solidarity of oneness and for this reason we should not hate Christians, Muslims or primitivists, but seek to you unite us all. (However all these groups seem to at least subconsciously want most of humanity to die and this is very strange considering many primitivists identify as Anarchists, their minds however are filled with contradictions.) Once the rulers have succeeded in destroying the environment and any hope of autonomy from the system, once their slaves have mostly destroyed each other and their ability to resist hierarchy, they will wipe out most of the survivors and create their technocratic dystopia.

Christianity is so backward, so anti science and so bigoted in general, in some ways at least for the Masons, it seems like it is starting to wear out its use as a believable form of mind control. From this we might wonder if the “New Age” of Aquarius is to be the new improved model which is more tolerant and modern. Given that the primary white man to “discover” magick mushrooms was Gordon Wasson, the vice president of marketing for J.P. Morgan, who even went to Mexico with the help of the CIA, it is all incredibly suspicious. It could be that along with LSD they released entheogens on to the public and contrived their own commercialized brand of New Age culture by drawing on Native traditions and others like Theosophy. We do know these men extorted knowledge of the mushrooms from a Native Shaman woman named Maria Sabina and then popularized it through Life magazine. So at any rate, psychedelics were brought into American culture in a very different way than most believe and I have talked to a few elders in my time who recognized that Hippie culture was for trendy suburbanites, a commercialized attempt to co-opt the “Freak” culture of the 60's. There are all kinds of conspiracy theories about this, generically called the “Aquarian conspiracy” and while most of them are utterly ridiculous and lack any credible motives for the secret government to do this, there is no doubt that hippies are often stupid and that the New Age in general is incredibly capitalist and escapist and mired in overly simplistic Christian like morality and dualism. Sometimes it really does seem this was done in order to inspire some new religion for them to appropriate, one which has some real meaning behind it, but which could ultimately be taken over easily. Given the CIA was recruiting psychics and that along with the military was trying to make remote viewer spies or even psychic warriors, to me the most likely motivation would be that along with the obvious commercialism and escapism, New Age cults are being created to increase the pool of future prospective recruits as in Project MKOFTEN. (Some people also theorize about a mysterious government group called “The Collins Elite” who interpreted UFO's as demons) Given the strong influence of the Nazi SS on the CIA, it would not be surprising that they took on some of the Occult aspects as well. What truth there is in the New Age would be used to give gravitas and authenticity and to provide a real means of creating said psychic spies, but this would utilize both corporate and MK Ultra mind control techniques in a new religion for the age. I am not just saying this as a punk, but from the beginning our community, such as Jello Biafra has said that LSD was used to make hippies pacifist and trip out and so they think they are saving the world through their escapism. Plenty of Punks like me may take LSD and see great potential for it, but we do not think that it alone will save the world, nor do we agree with all the New Age nonsense and fluff.

Another scenario may be for the transhumanist mutant cyborgs to pose as aliens, perhaps using the New Age UFO cults to create a new one world religion. Given their history, it does make sense that archons would farm people for their memes, then once the religion is established enough to have the right writings to twist, the rulers will wipe out all memory of entheogens from history and everyone will lose the context of religion again. Better yet they could start an authentic religion with entheogens, then set up organized religions and eventually switch over to real mind control drugs. New Agers are among the easiest people to manipulate, after all if you go in to denial of any “negative” possible reality, most will not want to think about others trying to manipulate them, they will not question anything presented to them as love and light and so in some ways are even easier to mind control than Christians. Most New Agers are too busy trying to manifest consumer products to worry about politics and even those who are aware, are generally escapist and especially pacifist, or as I have pointed out, many fear getting involved in activism because they think they will manifest the things they are against, simply by being aware of them!

This time has eery parallels to the time of Caesar and the fall of the Roman Republic, I can't help but wonder if two thousand years from now, my own writings are as corrupted as Christianity is from Gnosticism. Maybe then everyone will worship Columbia as mother Earth, who knows what sickness they will devise, what spell or curse they will cast upon their global empire? If it ever attained enough social status, perhaps my book would be used to justify an institutionalized religion of the state, the last desperate warnings of a relatively free republic before the open announcement of empire. Maybe they will use the hippies to make the Christians so paranoid they start the apocalypse with Muslims? Or maybe New Age primitivists will be used to justify the oligarchs eugenics cult of depopulation? Speculations aside, making the masses aware of these possibilities before hand, makes it impossible for the ruler's spell to work and so we must transmute their ignorance to assure they cannot pull off the script and provoke the religious fundamentalists in to further wars.

While alcohol is the only true “gateway drug” in that when drunk, many people will take other drugs they wouldn't normally, it is true that when a gang or mafia wants to expand their power, they will sometimes do so by spiking the drugs in the psychedelic scene. So for example, in the 60's the Haight Ashbury community of Hippies in San Francisco eventually turned in to junkies and speed freaks, who were often supplied by the U.S. Government or returning Viet Nam veterans who became addicted during the war. I know that where I live, it can be tricky getting acid which isn't laced with speed, but another example would be how the modern Rave scene has often degenerated in to a bunch of speed freaks and coke heads, who have had their MDMA cut with all kinds of things (primarily speed) and so have gradually given up on the psychedelics and even MDMA in favour of the more addictive drugs. However as the U.S. Government is the biggest importer of cocaine and heroin, as with cointelpro they probably targeted these peaceful communities in an effort to destroy their love of peace or alternative visions of community. This is much the same as they did with minorities in the inner cities, only naive hippies are even easier to infiltrate. The government also traumatizes the more fearful psychedelic users in many different ways, if nothing else than by creating an insane society and it is true there are some who cannot cope with becoming aware of just how insane our society is. So these unfortunate souls sometimes turn to hard drugs, reasoning quite rightly that since the government lied about all the other drugs, they must have lied about hard drugs too, and the government has definitely lied about hard drugs, it's just that hard drugs are still very dangerous and being sold by these same governments. By makingentheogens illegal like hard drugs, those spiteful people looking to rebel might try entheogens first as they are safer than hard drugs, but they soon move on when they realize it's not despised by square people enough, however these same people can also disrupt the psychedelic communities in the process. Due to how the government takes completely counterproductive measures when dealing with addicts, I can only think they are trying to encourage addiction as it profits them in so many ways. When it comes to how the government handles entheogen users, it seems like they are trying to give people bad trips so that they become emotional cripples and so would be more likely to become addicted to hard drugs. The government certainly tries it's best to instill fear and paranoia in to the psychedelic community, after all the entire law enforcement system is terrorism and so too then is the war on drugs. So by creating a black market with no standards in quality, and banning scientific research and religious groups which could allow people to use entheogens properly, they set up young entheogen users to become alienated and dysfunctional and so if entheogens are gateway drugs at all, it is because the government is trying their best to make them in to that.

My only hope is that people take up the protest of reality and other means to show the world Jesus is not coming back and that it is foolish to wait for others to save you, when it is your waiting which is causing the problem in the first place. If only we could create a mystical experience for the world... we could show them they are magickal.

While I admit I am not sure about the details of their plan, or how the script for their political theatre will play out, they admit they are chasing technological immortality and so realizing such war criminals could actually achieve this and that as the world's leaders would be the first to have access to such technology, I have come to the conclusion that it is totally unacceptable to let them live. That such monsters would be given the powers of nanotechnology, genetic engineering and cyborg immortality is beyond my ability to comprehend, but has also made it impossible for me to avoid direct violence against them. Even though I may fail to kill them all, the more I do kill, the less power mad techno rulers will be spreading their authoritarian death cult across the universe for all eternity. Dick Cheney is already being kept alive far past his time by a robotic heart and while he may die before they can figure out immortality, plenty more need to be assassinated to stop them from fulfilling their psychopathic dreams. Whether or not the revolution is successful, keeping such monsters from that power is crucial, especially if there are other life forms in the galaxy, as they would inevitably become victims of such tyrants. The rulers of the world are already possessed by archons, what unbounded megalomania would grow in such people as they start to play god or demiurge and terraform other planets and create their own GMO slave race to worship them?

There are some who would say I died and fought because of drugs, that they are an evil that make a person insane, make a person unable to cope with reality, some may even say I am mind controlled by the Illuminati. The truth is, I will do what I plan to do not because of drugs, but because of morons like the ones who think drugs are more evil than destroying the planet, enslaving humanity and systematically eradicating the soul and imagination from their children. I attempted suicide before I ever tried drugs, if it wasn't for acid I probably would have taken up heroin and died by now, do not blame drugs for my actions, blame the society that is so vain, so deluded that it will blame anything, even plants to avoid taking responsibility for its own actions. You may not agree with me, but know my intentions, that I will do what I will do because I feel responsible, because it is the closest thing to helping this planet that I can think of. When I am gone and they come for your rights, give them a bullet in the head, there is no reasoning with those who want to rule you, there is no asking nicely for freedom from those who live solely to take it.

As hard a future as we face, since they are closer to Anarchy than anyone in western civilization, the opportunities that await a group of people with the “freeman on the land” status are immense. The potential for activism can reach new legal limits since protestors would not be held by statutory law and would know how to claim new rights for themselves. Not being held accountable to statutory law means that protestors can engage in all kinds of tactics that would normally bring them in direct conflict with the policy enforcers, the police, who would have no legal right to do much of what they normally get away with. Communes could be created which would give rise to new “societies” or groups which have legal protection under common law, especially from the “corporations.” Freeman status can potentially give a new degree of freedom not found since before the Roman Empire and while I do not really recognize the government’s authority about anything, getting halfway to Anarchy legally, is better than going nowhere waiting for a revolution. The legal system may be totally corrupt and have no right to control anyone, but ignoring the fact the consensus reality believes it does, or ignoring the fact that the legal system was created to work on those who wish to ignore it, is an invitation for them to demonize and destroy you. Luckily, if we can learn to stop unconsciously consenting to their rules, we can beat them at their own game, but for this to be successful, we have to learn to work together in our own autonomous and sustainable “societies.”

On these communes it could technically be legal to grow and create entheogens and even sell all of the marijuana and psychedelics the people wanted, since they would only be subject to common law. Anarchist communes would not only be able to create a means of supporting themselves within the monetary world, (until government can be abolished) communes would be police and corporate government free zones, places from which to plan and fund various Anarchist activities. All this plus the right to settle “government” land and lay claim to it in the name of the Anarchist “society” mean that these tactics can solve many important problems, problems which are currently holding back the revolution. While this commune tactic alone will not overthrow the global plutocracy, it will be useful in setting up alternatives and communities that have a clear Anarchist intention behind them, laying the groundwork and infrastructure to help free all people.

In order to be free of the corporate “state” of identity, to be in anarkhos, whether or not the state will adhere to its own laws, the common law that means each individual has a right be a sovereign individual, we must in essence and in all ways possible secede from the country, all the while still living on the land to create Anarchist infrastructure. Decolonizing the mind should be done in all possible levels of reality, if the statutory laws are against your rights then you are not obligated to follow them, caution must be paramount in how you go about those kinds of actions, but even if you do not have freeman on the land status, fear of the government should not be your motivation in everyday activities. Contract war and legal actions do have potential within activism against the government and corporate power structures, if nothing else, knowing the law makes it easier to avoid jail time when pursuing direct action. To engage the state in a magickal war, we must know the type of magick they are using, for this will allow us to spread Anarchist awareness and stop the spell that has been cast in the name of “civilization.”

While aspects of the freeman on the land tactic are questionable, it is unquestionably the right of the people to secede from their countries and form their own communities so long as those sovereign people act as sovereign people. A “sovereign” claims their right to be recognized by their divine identity, rather than their straw man mind set, which means they do not violate common law, or international law when dealing with corporate people. While the police and courts will try to trick you in to consenting to their authority and identify with your straw man corporation, or even entrap you in to violating common law, they are highly automatic in their response to procedure as it is their OCD ritual programming. By exploiting this, there are people who have managed to learn the legalese magick well enough, that they won free man on the land status, or can at least to fend off legal harassment from the state. While corruption is rampant, the consensus reality of bureaucratic theocracy does operate under the power of common law and this includes the right to stop consenting to the reality of government rule.

People do not need to be convinced that the government is evil, though there is endless ways to educate them on the specifics of how the government is corrupt, endless facts, historical and contemporary atrocities which can be pointed out, it does not take books or a genius to see that the structure of society is severely flawed. Education of the people is crucial, but if we can educate people about alternatives and practical solutions that are relevant, even if they believe government and corporate propaganda is true, we can provide an appeal to the masses which is relevant to even the bourgeois uncle Toms. If we can do this, we can create change without trying to shame them or scare them into changing their lives. All too often it is said that “activist types” do not present alternatives, they just complain and certainly a protest is generally more of a complaint than it is an effort to present alternatives. Protest has its place, spreading awareness of the evils of governments and corporations is useful, but spreading awareness of Anarchist alternatives, collectives and co ops is even better. It is all well and good to teach someone about factory farming, genetically modified foods, the massive corruption of the FDA and to point out the insanity that if you want food that doesn't have poison on it, you have to pay extra, but teaching someone how to grow their own organic food potentially frees them from those machinations, rather than just worrying them.

Once you have seceded, once you are a free person on the land, or really whenever you can, you should try to co-operate with Indigenous peoples, try to live in respect to their ways, after all it is their land anyways and any opportunities to work with them should be welcomed. This brings up another important point about primitivists, who on the surface say they respect Indigenous peoples, yet they plan to colonize more and more wild land that doesn't belong to them. Even if you want to live sustainably and as a primitivist, you still have an impact on the land, you are still taking food and resources which you as a settler should not take for granted and without the permission of those who have already been so wronged. While I do want to encourage sustainable local permaculture and even the creation of new communities, as I said before, there simply isn't a strong enough ecosystem, or a big enough world for over seven billion people to live off the land. Everyone starting from scratch to create Eco villages and abandon the cities will cause more problems than it solves and there are already enough structures built to house everybody anyways. The Indigenous people and those they choose to work with must be the ones to safeguard the wild, since they are the only ones who deserve that land, and they are the only ones who know how to properly live off it. Instead of assuming we are welcome to take more land from natives as primitivism advocates, free peoples must create Anarchist spaces in cities to save resources, we must whenever possible reuse and recycle all the crap that is already here. Since primitivism is not based on facts, we must learn to modify our cities to be as sustainable as possible and the fact is that the skyscrapers and infrastructure which is already here, is less damaging than creating a whole new society out in the bush. It is possible to secede from the state and still live in the cities and in fact if the free people are to spread their freedom we must go where the other people are, we must engage in direct actions where the problems occur, otherwise we are just waiting for the environment to be destroyed.

Co-ops and collectives can be created, communes can be tricky, I personally would love to join a commune, but only with other individualists. Let all people go where they feel they belong, the point is there are alternatives and we should not wait for a revolution before we start living in them. Anarchism is not respected because it is not seen to be a viable reality, even in an Anarchist society people are at least going to want food, clothing and shelter and so long as there is no Anarchist infrastructure to supply it, most people will dismiss Anarchism before they seriously consider changing their way of life. Alternative cultures can be created but unless it is produced in an Anarchist manner, it will just become another consumer commodity, but if creating Anarchist infrastructure itself becomes the alternative culture, then as posers and hipsters seek to appropriate it, it will not make money for the system, it will replace the system. Now that communism has more or less been shown to be full of crap, Anarchism will eventually become seen more and more as a viable alternative to state capitalism, simply because there is little else to try and people who would have scoffed at Anarchism and dismissed it without investigating it, will learn about it in desperation, but come to understand its real potential.

Sustainable energy co-ops could be created with urban collectives which work to set up all people with some level of alternative power source and as the technology improves and oil becomes more expensive and unfashionable, it could become a great means of acquiring wealth for Anarchist groups. This kind of wealth can be used to overturn the monetary capitalist system itself, simultaneously providing an alternative to oil and coal power and the stranglehold those industries have over the people. If enough money can be raised, then factories that make sustainable energy devices could be created to help people get off the grid, which would mean huge losses in taxes to the government as well as taking a huge bite out of all kinds of destructive industries. We can build “a new world from the shell of the old” and the more money syndicalist co-ops can make, the less money capitalists can make. This then will provide a growing alternative to the system, all the while providing infrastructure in the event that widespread violent revolution becomes tactical. While there is no way to sustain our present way of life and solar and wind power are far from perfect or totally environmentally friendly, do not make the mistake of thinking that the technology cannot be improved. Do not think like a primitivist that it is better to do nothing and wait for the crash and the inevitable hordes of starving refugees to come wipe out what little environment is left. Just because a tactic doesn't solve all the problems in the world, doesn't mean it shouldn't be used, doesn't mean it's not preferable to what we have now and that we should use a lack of perfect tactics as an excuse to do nothing or sit around endlessly debating while things get worse. Just because these technologies are often currently constructed in a way that is somewhat harmful to the environment, this is generally because they are made by capitalists and it does not mean they are not a hell of a lot better than oil, natural gas and coal.

There are also a large variety of environmentally friendly industries (compared to what is being used now) which could be started in some places in order to create alternatives. As I started to explain in the first chapter, hemp for example could replace things like wood products, cotton and textiles, soy beans, at least some of our need for oil and many other things which this miraculous plant can do better than its competition and in a way that is better for the planet. (which is why it was made illegal in the U.S.) This would also potentially provide a source of income as well as much needed goods for people who wish to start communes that are outside the system. Organic food co-ops could be implemented to a much larger degree to provide people with cheap or free organic food that is not reliant on factory farming or monstrous chemical companies such as Monsanto. This can also potentially provide a local food source that doesn't require thousands of miles of shipping to get to people who need to eat. As the oil runs out and people become increasingly dependent on locally grown food, these tactics will become increasingly viable and in fact crucial. Garbage has and will pile so high that humans will be forced to mine the dumps for resources like old cans and other metal, recycling plants and bottle depots could be created that would be profitable and allow for people to reduce the massive piles of waste that are spread throughout the world. Spreading DIY culture, making our own tools are all crucial, we could even start to do guerrilla permaculture in the forests or better yet restore depleted soil so that we can wild craft more of our needs and heal the destroyed land which has been raped by civilization. (If I had the opportunity I would breed an invasive species of pot that was strong enough to survive wild, then I would go around like Johnny Appleseed planting it everywhere.)

Change is coming whether or not it is Anarchists who make it, the society of gluttony and waste is running out of resources and common people will be forced to look for alternatives. Anarchists can seize this opportunity by being on the front lines of change, working so that people are not made dependent on profit seeking hierarchical corporations to supply them with their needs. It may not seem as glamorous as all out revolution, it may even seem like compromising your Anarchist values by working somewhat within capitalism, but we do not have time for pride or to wait for Anarchism to become mainstream. We must act now while we still have a planet that can support life and a government that does not have the resources and technology to be the total big brother that it wants to be. The world is on the cusp of a revolution bigger in scope than the industrial revolution, only this time it is not only because the products of a green society are superior, but because we will all die if we stay on the road we are on. The planet cannot go on unless we redefine civilization to such an extent that it is unrecognizable from today and so this requires the creation of Anarchist infrastructure to support that change. Capitalism is already doing its best commercialize environmentalism by marketing itself as “green,” luring people in to thinking it can save the day or that its products are not still horrible for the environment. While we need to counter this, it does show that there is a market for such things and Anarchists could create products which are actually green and environmentally friendly. Even if it is Anarchist, “green” industrialism alone cannot save the planet, it cannot keep westerners living the same lifestyle of gluttony and it alone cannot free humanity. Such tactics as syndicalism can only provide some basic alternative for the masses and buy Anarchists time to bring the mainstream culture around, but with this time we can bring in other tactics and solutions before we make this planet uninhabitable.

As of writing this, more than three quarters of the world's old growth forest are destroyed and much of the world's rivers do not support life due to contamination. Not only this, many other sources of fresh water are quickly being polluted, so much so that in the future, fresh water will rival oil in importance to capitalist cultures. (Water is already the most important resource, people just don't realize it) Arable land is largely being made unusable without petrochemical fertilizers due to intensive unsustainable farming, but then even if it wasn't for global warming much of the oil is running out faster and faster as China, India and the third world countries industrialize. 90% of the big fish are gone from the oceans, not to mention small fish which also suffer and a 40% decline in phytoplankton (which produce more oxygen than the rainforest) over the twentieth century alone. When this is combined with massive amounts of plastic and other garbage floating around the Pacific, in what is known as the “great Pacific garbage patch” it is undeniable that we cannot go on like this. All these are just some of the environmental problems humans face if we wish to keep this planet alive and so long as humans consider the world as nothing but raw materials to make consumer goods, we are all doomed. So then when I speak of Anarchist infrastructure, only products which can eliminate industrial destruction, bring down plutocrats, or provide people with more independence should be produced.

You obviously cannot end capitalism by creating industries, changing people's spending habits alone will not work, but it is possible to ease people out of their addictions rather than naively expecting everyone on the planet to go without food willingly. Since these problems will take a very long time to fix, chances are things have actually gotten worse since the writing of this book, so if you care about life on this planet I suggest you do something about it. Sustainability is the future or there is no future, Anarchist or otherwise. If Anarchists wait for the government or corporations to organize such a green revolution then the results will be much the same as they were after industry gained power through coal and oil, that being oligarchy. However Anarchists can use this opportunity to get people involved within a non hierarchical community, one that supports Anarchist lifestyles and sustainable production. With free or extremely cheap power and food, people will be much more independent and free of the system and there will be little to no tax revenues on such methods of consumption.

Organizations run in a non hierarchical manner (perhaps non profit but not necessarily so) but which are not dependent on all of society being Anarchist, can provide activists and others with a means outside the system, but which are still “profitable” within it. All profit generated by the Anarchist co-ops would be reinvested in Anarchist infrastructure, activism and education and even logistics for revolution. For example Anarchist bookstores, buying empty lots and land for community gardens and farms, as well as possibly free spaces for homeless people to set up tent cities could all be the start of a whole new society. Anarchist movies and underground music and publishing would also be provided with a more secure form of funding by gaining revenue from more profitable Anarchist industries such as the ones mentioned above. Anarcho-Syndicalism will be used to allow all people to form their own non hierarchical business's and once people see the work place does not require managers, bosses and plutocratic investors, it will be a huge step towards seeing society as a whole doesn't need hierarchy. The experience of Anarchy itself will be the best form of education and the greatest weakness of the capitalist, is that they will sell you the rope to hang them with.

With equal stock options given to all employees, Anarcho-syndicalist co-ops could be run and owned by the workers, so that they will be able to create policies and actions solely designed to destroy the system of capitalism and hierarchy. Such tactics could bring an end to all the environmentally destructive industries by providing people with products that will help them to get off the grid and become independent. This can be done in a consciously ritualistic and spiritual way, or people can stick to the purely materialist form of capitalist magick, a commune could become a non hierarchical corporation and so could a free man society, even regular citizens in any city with little to no political agenda could get a good job with a non hierarchical corporation owned by the workers. There have been and there are functional companies run by the workers without managers or where the managers are paid equal wages and these are efficient and profitable and it is these kinds of companies which will help transition society into Anarchism. There are a variety of fair and Anarchist ways to organize co-op production which are legal, for example workers can be paid on commission upon sale of their production and this would mean the individuals work will reflect their share of profits. This individualist model would use the facility or factory, but as this factory would be communally owned, each worker would have a vested interest in the community and so workers would help each other to sell and produce. Workers will make as many products as demand requires and those who want to do more work than others can to a certain extent do so and if there is not enough demand, then the workers can work at marketing and sales for the co-op and in this way they can increase their potential to make commissions.

Due to the fact that oil is finite and oil companies are increasingly unpopular, the Anarchists can seize hold of the inevitable green revolution that will take place to organize a new form of industry, one which is run solely by the workers and for the people as a whole. Just as the oil companies were the main driving force of industry in the twentieth century, with oil being used by oligarchs to ensure their economic monopolies over the world, the green industries if set up in an Anarchist fashion can potentially form the foundation for a new society. Once Anarcho-Syndicalism takes hold, it will be the basis for all future technologies and industries and so will be a stepping stone to the abolition of the monetary system altogether. With egalitarian corporations in which all workers share the profits, greed will not be the sole driving force, for the workers will be the policy makers and they will have a vested interest in creating an environmentally friendly and sustainable industry, one which they can pass on to their children and which can provide long term benefits for society as a whole. While some people who like to label others might call me an anarcho-capitalist I am not, I just recognize that Anarchism isn't going to happen over night, its most likely going to be a transition from what we have and so there will likely be a period of time when the two are mixed. Even if there was a sudden Anarchist revolution, it would be decades before this happens, and would only happen if people are so frustrated with the government that we basically already living in that post-apocalyptic scenario I described before. So then we should not wait for the others to recognize the government and capitalism as tyrannical before we start to organize Anarchist infrastructure, and instead start to show that we can out compete the capitalists and beat them at their own game.

While I am not sure exactly what it would look like and other people would have to help elaborate, my intuition tells me fractals are an important factor in structuring Anarchist societies. Really, there are a variety of ways society could be set up like fractal social networks or set up like organisms, but generally speaking, the larger the scale of the group, the more broad the agreements of the people involved, meaning the less customized the agreement can be to your needs. For example, Anarchist societies could use according to scale from local to international, the same self similar pattern to allow an individual to take part on any level they choose. This would work so that according to how much an individual wants to associate with others and make agreements with those involved, they can use the same methods of arbitration and organization at each scale of the federation. Here I mean “federation” in the traditional Anarchist sense, rather than the common government meaning, so while there are many models of this, it would work so that instead of having representatives, we could have a society based on various scales of messengers, messengers who relay the results referendums between various groups. As decisions or agreements between individuals and groups are made, the messengers would relay information to those who proposed the idea, so that they can modify it in order to gain more consensus, until those in the federation approve of it in the referendums. This could occur at various scales according to what people consent to get involved in and so the more people a messenger reports to, or speaks for, the more broadly defined the agreements would be. The greater the number of people involved, the larger the scale of the fractal, and so the less “detail” or resolution each individual can have about that agreement and yet there will still need to be widely held agreements among large groups of people. Since any economy, Anarchist or otherwise is based on the environment, the ecosystem itself and the fractals within it will provide the best models and insights in to sustainability, this is especially true since life and the ecosystem are one of the few exemptions to entropy. (It's beyond me, but we could learn from the “Schrödinger paradox” and “Gibbs free energy” to design societies which create a kind of Alchemical sustainability. Negentropy=Gold)

While my explanation is somewhat rough and vague, co-ops could team up in a kind of gift economy or some kind of barter share system to work together like a body of cells. For example each Anarchist co-op could set aside shares of their production, (not unlike shares of corporate stock) which could then be traded to other co-ops in part of a huge network of co-ops, each specializing in their own products. So long as the workers themselves maintain the majority control of the shares in co-op they work at, each worker could trade their shares with a co-op of their choice, working so that they can get the goods they choose. This would allow for specialization to work in a interactive network of co op unions, so that we can manufacture various things for each other, according to how many shares we wish to sell out, yet still be decentralized as opposed to a central communist government. Shares would not be currency, but a percentage of production or services, so that this network would be like a body, with each organ fulfilling its function in cooperation with the other organs. In this way humans could work together, yet maintain local autonomy according to the degree they wish to interact with others and acquire their shares. Even if these shares were exactly like stock market shares, the more a co-op sells their shares, the more those shareholders will be effected by the way the co-op manages itself and if a dispute or disagreement happens that is intolerable, then the co-op can simply liquidate their stock holdings and find someone else to trade with. While this idea may not be perfect, I am merely trying to explain certain examples as to how non hierarchical societies might function, in truth no one person's ideas would be behind these procedures, as the methods and memes of this culture would grow and evolve organically over time. (The internet could also be very useful in creating Anarchist methods of establishing consensus.)

While religion is the cause of many of our current problems and societies seem to be better off the more secular they are, as I have pointed out corporations are effectively god forms and it may be we evolved group dynamics along these lines to aid social behaviour. If the capitalist corporations are vampiric and predatory, we must make sure that people can have an alternative economy to put their energy in to. So we must make our own egregores and god forms, but not so much to do battle, but because if we never do, all our energy will go to the vampires by default. Ignoring the problems of the world, ignoring the archon vampires is not an answer, but neither is a purely reactionary tactic of trying to put band aids on gaping wounds. Instead we can create alternatives which provide healthy examples, something which is key to creating the thought forms which can manifest whole new worlds and if needed later on, provide the infrastructure for revolution. Some Anarchist groups are cult like enough already, but then they might be more effective if they were doing this consciously and while there is definitely a danger of authoritarian behaviour, these tendencies are historically common in atheist societies as well. So while it may turn out to be a horrible idea and is completely dependent on the level of awareness of the people participating, we can create group entities and even use some of the legal magick against those in the state. This is not necessarily a tactic that can take us to the end of a revolution, but it is a tactic which can help to start it on a whole new level. Within the context of freeman communities, (which are technically not obliged to pay taxes) groups of people could create metaphysical egregores, which would be created consciously by everyone as a means of conflict resolution. So by giving the community an identity or personification, it would allow its members to direct their frustrations and questions to a form which is separate and yet unified within, a body for the community with a head that is everyone simultaneously, a mini group mind. Disputes would be about the identity of the egregore and not between two individuals, with opinions about a subjective and yet collective holistic viewpoint. In this situation, all people being popes or better yet magicians, they would try to figure out what this egregore they all created would do and how it could help them.

This could have metaphysical benefits, but also psychological and sociological benefits for even strict materialists, in that it would provide a means of diffusing disputes while simultaneously uniting group dynamics. If nothing else, atheists could think of this as a mascot, one which symbolizes the group values and allows for the abstraction of principles, rather than a personal identification of values, as this seems to inevitably lead to some form of moral elitism or at least egotism that is not conducive to objectivity. When encountering other groups, a commune could understand their point of view from their consciously created egregore, so that they could get to know each other in that way, honestly and in equal standing. This would be done not in a moral context of my egregore is moral and all others are not, but in a monist mindset of looking at how the people or egregore act (in the myths and art that are created for it) and the effects of their culture, rather than the presumption of right and wrong.

This idea may sound fanciful or trivial, but it could help facilitate the group decision making process and debate, so that an individual does not have to accept a thought, but can “entertain” it, if it is personified they can even give it dinner and a nice evening? There is quite probably many subtle evolutionary advantages for humans to personify their groups, the concept of “totems” in tribal societies clearly shows it is widespread throughout the world from a very early stage of humanities existence and as humans use symbols to focus the mind and wire the brain, having a symbol for the groups identity is important if you want to unify people. While this unity can be a huge problem in terms of conformity, or separating people who have different totems, within an Anarchist context it potentially gives the society a common identity which they all contribute to. This would further be balanced by their own personal familiars or symbolic maps of their consciousness, allowing them to retain their personal individuality and create the memetic immune system that we all need to develop. If you personify equality and mutual good will, then “sacrificing” a feast which is consumed by all those who “worship” such an entity, will literally allow it to manifest within the minds of people through the types of rites appropriate to its worship. You get to know such entities on their own terms before you make up your mind about it on your own terms, you can entertain other groups egregores and get to know their groups cult-ure. If consensus couldn't be reached as to the nature of the egregore, a person could leave and find another group according to their own will, a group that they would consent to by adding their creative potential. Given that reality and especially community reality is based on consensus, having a personification or egregore is useful for giving people an idea about what it is exactly that they are consenting to. As the god form of the tribe, or collective is made up of all the minds of the people within it, it's self awareness is the reflection of the people's awareness and the more aware of it they are, the more self aware the god form is, the more it can help them and the more they can increase their own self awareness. Anarchists must create experiences and memes which will enable the spread of Anarchist circuits and thinking, this can be done in a number of ways, but Anarchist totems would be an interesting one. (At least so long as people always keep in mind that we must not only overthrow the human hierarchies, but the ones found in the mind and brain.)

Now with the current legal system we each have our own egregore, (the straw man) but it is a egregore under one god (even if that one god is now Uncle Sam) which unifies all people in slavery to it. Although Yahweh has fragmented into Allah and Jesus, these monstrous self replicating memes have created a society that believes that it's slavery is better, because now they have the riches of materialist consumer technology, which just so happens to come at the expense of all that is alive, true and free. Within a monist mindset (as opposed to the dualism of those religions) you can see the points of cognitive dissonance within the memetic structure of the group egregore and you can modify parts without interrupting the emotional mortar and causing so much pain and problems. Instead monism uses a fluid structure that can bring up a more objective analysis of the situation by having a liquid integrity, one that acknowledges the subjective interpretations of even objective symbols. We would have the strongest integrity because it would be the most unified structure possible, quicksilver the reflective liquid of gestalt consciousness. Anarchists must create group identities which are Anarchist in order to properly fight the corporations of capitalism, uniting like cells to form a larger body that can overtake the massive opposition we face. So that given that state egregores or god forms do not act in Anarchist ways, we might be weary of all egregores, but these gods of the state were not created with Anarchist intentions and do not reflect Anarchist cultures or ideals. For this reason the egregores of the nation states fight with each other just as the archons do, but egregores created by Anarchists would also act as Anarchists and so treat other egregores in an Anarchist fashion.

It is through art that these group egregores must be impressed by the contributions of the people to create their own identity, through poetry and dance and later sculpture and painting and everything else. We need memes that unite, but which do not set the group above anyone else, working together to create a new and better world. If prehistoric societies organized themselves in such a way, then literally everything else we know today became a part of this culture of small groups of identities. These identities were expressed in creative communal ceremonies and generally with the help of entheogenic substances to create a greater level of group awareness. Through their communion with their egregores the tribe agreed as to its nature not by debate, (at least not debate alone) but through direct experience. Through this direct experience all other people would be experienced not as a dualistic other that must be competed against, but as an extension of self, without any sense of hierarchy as we understand it. In some situations there would be Shamans functioning as facilitators, but they would be their to help to make sure everyone is alright and to guide people through the initiation and on into the tribes egregore. Brain plasticity could be utilized to create practices which maximize egalitarian and non hierarchical consciousness and wire the brain to stop thinking in terms of competition and start thinking in terms of cooperation and also critical thinking. We must learn to cast our own spells, spells that invite rather than conquer, spells that show their worth not by coercion but by example. Actions speak louder than words and you do not need to convince others that your philosophy makes them free if they can see it for themselves. Any activities, preferably group activities that can be implemented to instill non hierarchical modes of consciousness should be implemented, once people do a few activities in a non hierarchical way, those circuits will naturally assert themselves and spread as much as the individual wants them too. These activities do not even have to mention politics, but if they are enjoyable, people will want to take part in them and from there, they will begin to see the world in increasingly Anarchist eyes.

As corporations are basically powerful egregores or even god forms, some techniques that corporations use to ensure their quality control could theoretically be used in a magickal group's own egregores or god forms without compromising its Anarchism. I have already mentioned flow charts but there are six other basic tools used by corporations for quality control in the programming of their massively complex egregores, these are the histogram, pereto chart, check sheet, control chart and cause and effect diagram. I will not explain them all here, but you can research them yourself to see that these could potentially be used by groups who wish to make an egregore. While you could use these for familiars, they are more then likely completely unnecessary and make things needlessly complicated. However if you are working with a group of people, these are all methods of elaborating your will or program for the egregore and can help to give clear definitions between individuals trying to be more specific.

At cyclical holy days, festivals and potlucks of ritualistic ecstatic union could align people with the natural rhythms of the world, helping us to live in union with nature, rather than opposed to it in duality. Pantheons of various divinities are potentially useful in reminding people that there is more than one symbol, or aspect for the underlying subjective consensus mystery of reality. Polytheism shows there is more than one mode of consciousness and way of viewing reality and that only through integration of these different objective aspects, in a subjective and personal way, can we achieve unity and therefore integrity as an individual. These holy days would allow communion with the group divinity and a strengthening of group bonds through this egalitarian group mind identification.

Something like the protest of reality may occur to bring out different issues, providing an opportunity to show how the god form would interact with these cultural aspects of the group. The god form could be invoked temporarily by each person (or at least many people) who would one at a time interact with the groups expressions of their culture and issues. In this way, all may see how the god form relates to their Earthly selves and it responds to various cultural conditions. This would be followed by the group invocation of the god form so that all are in the same state and then some group ritual would ensue to maximize this awareness, perhaps having an orgy at that time according to that groups wishes. These rituals would emphasize the group therapy and work to help the group take a detailed look at itself and how it operates to resolve any disputes or issues. This would be achieved through the free associations aspect of the protest of reality, though this would probably be a private ritual and somewhat less of a protest if the group was already adhering to Anarchist principles. However disputes are always going to happen and so any complaint, by any individual could be enacted in the protest, so that cultural consensus could be reached by examining how the possessed individuals react to the situations that are enacted. Whatever general consensus was reached by those who experienced the simulation of the problem, would be implemented in the arbitration process, or through the change in cultural programming for the egregore.

The Abrahamic god encourages egotism by creating a centralized power circuit in the brain which sets itself as authority and must be obeyed unquestioningly. This is in sharp distinction to the decentralized councils of many Pagan pantheons, which in turn define consciousness more clearly and through a diversity of aspects creating balance and so a greater level of objectivity. When the first patriarchal egregores of Sumeria started to evolve, (or devolve) it created brains where people lost the direct experience of oneness with all of nature and in their hubris they thought they knew how to make everyone's egregore the "best." Through this loss of gnosis and the appropriation of it by a priest class, public rituals became increasingly secularized and with relatively little effect other than to inculcate the masses with archon circuitry, these then promptly spread to all other aspects of culture. For this reason it may actually be best that Anarchist groups have a variety of god forms relating to various aspects of humanity and life so that they do not fall in the trap of thinking their one god form is better than all others. This may not require polytheism for a group's totem or egregore, but as I said, each individual should balance with their own polytheistic cosmologies. Such societies may also work better if each individual works at multiple co-ops, each with their own egregore so that a person has more context, polytheism then, is a means of decentralizing the sacred awareness to help prevent authoritarian tendencies.

Certainly there is a case to be made that all group decision making should be completely secular and if we can create such a society (which is a definite possibility) I would be all for it. However there MAY be subtle advantages to egregore societies, at least for those spiritually minded people who choose them. Since such an egregore based method of creating group cohesion is only really effective when all participants consciously know that they are shaping and reforming the divinity, pretty well all objections to spirituality can be overcome. (the egregores may be secular) Mysticism and magick should be encouraged, but dogmatic orthodoxy and superstition abhorred, especially when it comes to having a priest class, or a divinity that is supposedly external from its practitioners. One thing is certain, spirituality is not likely to go away anytime soon, especially when spiritual experiences are readily available through plants (not to mention all the other phenomena out there) and so we must learn to create spiritualities which can admit atheists. Dysnomia doesn't mind if you are an atheist, so I do believe there are potential benefits to the kind of egregore society I described, exactly what it would look like is something I cannot really say, as it would inherently require other people to participate as equals with me within it.

Anarchist brain circuitry can be grown by working with Anarchist egregores, by creating memes which work together in an egalitarian manner, rather than in ways based on domination and competition. The Anarchist pantheon in this book can be used to instill these kinds of circuits and help people to better understand how we can create a better world, but we need more and we need them to be created by all people. The portal circuit itself will be rooted in the metaphysical world, but its most important expression is not in the ritual items of those who work with it, but in their brain circuitry creating energies and resonances capable of manifesting Anarchism in this world. The portal will be in each of our heads as well as our sigils, spread through protest and other means so that we can tune the brains of humanity to Anarchy and help people to start making music together. Through working with children and even babies and foetus's we could ensure that Anarchist circuitry can tune the world to Anarchist frequencies and spirits and so by creating the portal, the souls of all past Anarchist revolutionaries and peoples could find the resonance they need to incarnate all at once. Then we can create a real "New Age," not one based on self help books and expensive seminars, but one based on helping all life. With each new circuit in place, a new portal will be opened, more energy will come through, more actions undertaken and more Anarchist memes spread until a critical mass, a global awareness of our unity through Anarchy is achieved.

These Anarchist egregore co-ops would not be masters, but tools of shaping consensus reality to be more egalitarian and to make people more conscious of their cultures and personal beliefs. Through the creation of Anarchist circuitry, Anarchist behaviour will follow and with that a whole new level of awareness will spread which can free humanity from its unconscious rulers. It may be that such a society would not take hold until a long period of totally secular Anarchist society, that people will need to learn the benefits of group participation in a secular society until they have learned to put aside their petty religious differences. No doubt authoritarian religions will die hard and many religious people today would automatically dismiss such ideas as Satanic and so for large scale groups the secularization of group dynamics is definitely of prime importance. However after people become tolerant of other peoples viewpoints, it seems quite possible a subjective world symbolism of mystical realities will become increasingly popular, as people will naturally come to the conclusion that other religions have the same truth as their own.

The beginnings of authoritarian religion may have been economic and racial, or co-opted revolutions, but it is time humanity realized we are one race, one tribe, and that so long as they do not engage in authoritarian behaviour, people should allow each other to have as many gods and goddesses as they like. When we allow the one divine energy to be divided in our awareness of it, we will have succeeded in creating a crucial step towards uniting humanity. Creating divinities in our image (or whatever image we like) allows us to understand ourselves better, even if the ultimate reality is beyond symbolism, as the all gains omnipotence by having a reflection of itself in the universe, we gain knowledge of ourselves by having our reflection in it, this then unites us in gnosis of all things. There is one force, but consensus of it will not be achieved through imposing one face on it, but by accepting all the diverse forms which it takes. So then if humanity is united, then the divine force will be more united than if all people worshipped Yahweh under capitalism, that much I am sure of.

If Anarchism is to be achieved globally we must realize it is not the politicians who rule the world but the system, so that if a politician seeks to create egalitarian change, the system will defend itself in some way. The system will make up for it in some other profit grabbing scheme, it can turn all kinds of misery in to its profit and so by using crisis, it can herd people according to it's whims. It is the system which creates the crisis the people must react to and through it even the politicians are herded, for the system is specifically designed to stop activist politicians from making any meaningful change within it. I have already explained how politicians create problems and then offer solutions which empower them more, but the same is true of the archons and the system itself. So for example lets say Yahweh gets pissed off for some reason, so he causes a natural disaster and the Christians and Jews see this and say "we must follow god more closely" and so they pray more and stick to the rules more and so then Yahweh becomes more powerful and better able to terrorize his sheep. This system controls politicians so completely that those who may have truly good intentions to change it and decentralize it, are often assassinated (at least in terms of publicity) on behalf of those who have invested in the demiurge. Within an authoritarian hierarchy you cannot move up the pyramid without standing on the backs of others and pulling yourself up against those above you, you cannot climb the pyramid by trying to level the playing field. To achieve within that system you must subject yourself to the rules and structure of the system itself, changing your actions to suit it and not your ideals, thus submitting yourself to the authority of the system itself and serving it.

So then unless you break the rules and sabotage it, you can never really change the system by working within it, you will only ever strengthen it. You cannot end the hierarchies in your mind by setting up a hierarchy with Anarchy at the top and authoritarian hierarchy at the bottom, you cannot end the bias and illusions of the ego by telling yourself you are too good to be subject to it. Spending money to overcome the monetary system can create some good change when it is done to create non hierarchical systems such as co-ops owned by workers who share all profits equally. However the use of money should be kept to a minimum and eventually and after such organizations are mainstream, a leap of total Anarchism, of stepping out of the system altogether is required. We can modify our systems only so far before a leap of faith is taken and if done with pure intentions we will gain direct experience of anarkhos. If done in such a way it will be a revolution of peace and evolution, rather than the authoritarian imposition of a few rebels. These rebels may well know where humanity should be, but do not truly know how to get us all there and this is because they have not fully experienced it themselves. When humanity can look at itself honestly and work to step outside of its personally imposed constraints, then it will find a new level of freedom undreamt of by today's people. It is through this individual liberation taken on a widespread scale that humanity will gain the outside context needed to see those constraints and once a person sees for themselves how they are imprisoned, they cannot but help to want to free themselves. In order for people to be free they must first see for themselves they are enslaved, merely telling them this is useless for it sets you up as an authority above them, as someone they will look to who can possibly free them. Instead people must see that they are slaves, but slaves which hold the keys to their own freedom and it is only them who can unlock their shackles.

Now that my book is coming to an end, I hope now I have shown how Anarchism has implications in terms of, politics, metaphysics, physics, linguistics, sociology, psychology and biology. It seems as though we need a unified field theory of Anarchy, perhaps we could even say Anarchy is the unified field of everything, the true essence of everything, because if we have Anarchy of consciousness we have Anarchy of all that we perceive. There are many ways that thinking of Anarchy can take you, but what I think is not important, what is important is what you think and what you do with your own mind and whatever you may think, I hope you think about Anarchy some time; it can take you places you never expected.

If you are waiting for the revolution to happen before you get involved, or even an activist group you totally agree with, you will always be waiting. Anarchist activism is reliant on individual efforts to bring unity to the people in order to take down as much hierarchy as possible and so for you to wait for others to determine your actions is to be a reactionary follower, a person who will not take responsibility for their own life and refuses to live in the now. The same is basically true of ritual and meditative practice, if you are waiting for the perfect exposition of spiritual realities, or the perfect practice, you will always be waiting and never begin. So long as you never begin you will never know firsthand what is actually useful and true and what is not and so this feeling that you are above taking the time to learn seemingly useless things, is the main obstacle in progressing beyond where you are. Anarchism and the Occult are both reliant on direct experience, direct action; they are not intellectual subjects to be studied, but actions taken in life and realities to be experienced. If you never try you will never succeed and those who do not try because they think they are above it, are more often so pompous and arrogant, that they are afraid of trying anything which could reveal just how shallow their understanding truly is. Whether in terms of politics or the spirituality of the individual, we must learn the value of the Anarchist idea of doing it yourself. We must do so in the here and now and live each day to the fullest, rather than condemning something outright, before it has been actively engaged.

We must become more aware as individuals before we can teach other individuals anything. This is not to say you have to be enlightened to be an activist, but it definitely helps. However this also means that without intense personal scrutiny over your own consciousness, you will fall prey to any number of fears and ego games that plague most of humanity and which will definitely come up, should you wish to take up political action. If your mind isn't free, it's pretty hard to free other people, this is simple common sense and I think it's something atheist activists should pay more attention to, though not necessarily in a spiritual context. (Though obviously spiritual realities are important to me) We cannot rely on those who present themselves as authorities on anything, spirituality, Anarchism, government or economies; we must learn how to come to our own conclusions through critical thinking and direct experience and by researching as widely as possible.

If you do not learn to use your magickal potential consciously, (which includes physical actions) then you will fall prey to unconscious forces that will rule your life for you. If enough people do this we get a world such as our present reality, a world where arcane magickal systems rule everyone and no one even notices. If we wish to change society, it helps to have clearly defined symbols that everyone can interact consciously with, such as a group egregores. If this kind of cultural introspection doesn't happen, then the culture is in a sense unconsciously ruling us, because we do not have any way of consciously interacting with it as a psychological element, we instead leave it to the "principalities" and "powers." One hard lesson in life, in the spiritual and political sense, if you want gold, you have to give up some lead, or as the Buddhists say "you cannot fill a full cup," if you want to grow in consciousness it means you have to give up your ignorance, you have to go out of comfort zones and if you want political change, you have to stop playing their game and stop taking the bribes of the system. Do not seek to acquire wealth (unless fund raising for political and cultural change) but instead learn how you can become independent from the system and get off the grid, only then will you stop feeding the beast, the more you can do yourself the better off you will be in a number of ways, not to mention the new level of satisfaction and happiness that will come into your life.

When first beginning on the road of spiritual learning, when it comes to studying religions, having a wide variety of sources is great, but having a steady practice, dedication and discipline is even more important. You must stick with a meditation or magickal practice until you really grow and strengthen those circuits, it may seem pointless for awhile, but eventually you will gain understanding. As they say, "fake it till you make it" as if you only try a meditation a few times before going onto something new, you will never get anywhere, likewise when studying religions and mystical traditions it can be good at first to have a main focus. If you overwhelm yourself which is easy to do as there are so many interesting religions, you can burn out and not really get anywhere because you are trying to go in too many directions at once. (Just like pursuing different activist causes) There is the danger of only a shallow superficial understanding, becoming “a jack of all trades and master of none.” Having an open mind and looking at more than one source is crucial, but you have to understand no one can learn everything in one life time and so to begin with, learn to get a good feel for the practices which allow you to enter mystical states and practice ritual magick. Once you have a firm foundation in the practice, you can look to better understand the theory and philosophies of the world and come up with your own unique blend. The important part is learning to achieve your own direct experience and from there, all mystical traditions are just elaborations.

Understand that you will never find a book that makes life perfect or clear, this is especially true if you never go into the depth of any philosophies. This is one of the main failings of many New Age people as I see it, they presume themselves spiritual masters yet do not have any regular practices or any deep philosophical understanding beyond the idea of positive thinking. People of all paths should beware the trap of thinking you are beyond your ego, but are in fact so blinded by your ego you falsely believe it is gone. For the most part, our perceptions are so fucked up that we do not fully understand how much our perceptions are fucked up, or even what we are doing to make it even more fucked up. It takes a great deal of dedication on the spiritual path and total honesty with yourself, there is no real way to halfheartedly go about it, study many sources, but choose some to which you can use in a more consistent fashion, at the same time never stop questioning how true they are. As with all things, you will never get anywhere without practice, the key is to make sure you are practising in the right way, otherwise you will only practice and master failure, in the end the only judge of this in regards to spirituality is yourself, and you do this as you look at your fruits.

Perhaps this is overly simplistic, but it could be said there are two poles of motivation for change in people, the first is to change their behaviour in order to get the effect they want from other people, and the second is to change their behaviour so that it better reflects an honest expression. Most people are a mix of these two poles at different times, and most people are largely unaware of their motives for changing as a person. As time goes on, the kind of motivation for personal change they have can influence the kinds of actions the person engages in. So although they may do something “good,” if it is for selfish reasons then it ultimately goes to shit and eventually as their formula iterates, the person will become more and more fake. In the long run it is easier to be real more than it is to be fake and self deceiving, the problem comes in that it’s often hard to tell when we are being self deceiving.

People put so much effort in trying to find the most functional way of acting with others, that they fail to realize they should be concentrating on the most honest way of being with others. (This is a problem even if they are trying to find the most functional way of acting their honest intentions.) They devote hours each day to relationships they do not honestly want, with people who are not honest themselves, because in the short term it seems easier to seek distraction from a problem, than it does to actually solve the problem of their unhappiness. People get far too caught up in search of a reward for good behaviour, “maybe god will get me my one true love if I am really good.” There is no reward, in fact in terms of materialism there will probably be a lot of cost in comfort and possession, the closest thing to a reward is hopefully you will learn to deal without. In the end, this reality, this truth is easier than always trying to scheme, or bargain, always trying to make others or yourself happy, you cannot fake your intentions to enlightenment, you cannot fake devotion to truth and equality. You may be able to convince yourself of a lie for a time, but in the end it will always catch up to you, in the end the reward will be as fairy gold, you can pretend you are nice to others, but it will never really do you any good and any love won by it is also a lie, it is also always temporary. This is all very true on the spiritual path too and even though intentions may seem good, if they are selfish they are ultimately limited and flawed. Do not seek enlightenment so that others will revere you or love you, in fact there's a good chance that people will hate you if you are actually enlightened. (especially in western culture) This is because an enlightened person will refuse to give easy answers and refuse to inflate the ego, such people do not share many deeply held traditional assumptions about reality and the nature of dogmatic religious ritual. People often don't want a spiritual path that requires a change in the core of their being, since this means facing their fears and demons and overcoming them, being completely honest with yourself and always being ready to discard long held beliefs that are shown to be harmful or untrue. For this reason anyone who dares to say you need to work on yourself, rather than perform a ritual without understanding the proper intent and functional process, will for the most part be misunderstood and disliked for challenging assumptions and long held false beliefs. Those who seek out all truths, even the ugly truths are bound to get people who are devoted to superficial comforts pretty mad, these people do not like it when others make it harder for them to lie to themselves. Within their web of lies they often make things very complicated and hard for themselves and each other, after all, if everyone was honest with themselves, they would be honest with each other and so the world would not be subject to most of the problems within it. Religion, ritual and ceremony without gnosis, or knowledge of the meaning of the symbols are like a body without a soul, it is dead and if not dealt with will rot and is an invitation to the plague.

I have not written this book because I am sure everything in it is right, though I am sure I believe some are, I say them in part so that others may openly criticize them and point out their fault. This is no doubt unsettling to those who are looking for authorities, who are looking for others to tell them how to live, or looking for a fact based explanation that no one has, but I am certain their certainty about what is true, is only true to them because they are certain. I will not pretend I believe otherwise or encourage any people to act in such a way, nor would I encourage anyone to take what I have said at face value and not try to find fault with each word. In fact if you have not done this then you have not understood me and missed the meaning of the words I would have you rebel against. I do not do this for my own vanity, though it would be nice to know where I go wrong, I do this to promote the idea of thinking for yourself, perhaps there is a new perspective here, perhaps there is not, perhaps it is true or false, but what is definite is that I have tried to say something about nothing. Needless to say such statements will for the most part fall on deaf ears, but to those who care enough to pay close attention, I wish you luck in making up your own mind. If you think me evil, stupid, immature or wrong for my conclusions that is your right, I only ask that you look at them with no presuppositions and no agenda.

My truth is the truth that takes a different form for each person, I should hope that the language I use has had some effect and with any luck it will of at some point made you mad and make you think I am wrong or at least absurd. This was done for the simple reason that if I am right about everything, if I have not provoked you or at least your curiosity, then I have failed to get you to pay attention and go outside your comfort zone. If I have angered you, said something, or been too kind to something or someone you dislike or which you find offensive, well then good. I had to give you something to rebel against, after all we wouldn't want you to not have the opportunity for engaging in heresy against me. To paraphrase Buddhist teachings, "you should thank your enemies for they are your greatest teachers of patience and tolerance" and so if i I have offended you, I say "your welcome."

Yes its true I still have hate in me, yes it's true I make no claims to being more enlightened than anyone else, but at least I acknowledge and live with that truth and make no attempt to fool myself or others into believing otherwise. If you feel disgust for me because of this or what you consider deviation from your own brand of love or enlightenment, then it seems you are filled with hate yourself and are not enlightened yourself, do you realize that? If you are not enlightened yourself then you certainly have no right to judge others for not being enlightened and if you are enlightened I wouldn't think you would judge others for trying their best. At least I am always ready to listen to a new perspective and consider it in as unbiased a manner as possible, that is without judging it from a place based on my own personal desires about what I think the truth should be. I do not hide my faults and invite anything that can help me grow, whether or not it is comfortable for you or me.

So what am I? Who is writing this? What does it matter and who will read it? The more I know, the more I realize no one knows anything. I guess you could say it was a bit of a disappointment growing up to realize everyone is stupid as shit, including me, that there is no such thing as cool, or tough, or fair. Life is what you make it, so make it happy? Sad? Angry? What is best? Love and hate don't even exist anymore. The search for nothing, escape, selfish oblivion and freedom from the tyranny of others and the self? I am glad now I will never be famous, never be seen as special, I know now that it would corrupt me, that it would destroy who I am, whatever that is. Some monster maybe, some delusional freak on a self righteous, self absorbed kick of self indulgence masked as wisdom and rebelliousness, the fake claim of being anything, of having a soul, of caring about others, of wanting to make a difference. This is what makes me a horrible person; I tried to convince myself I wasn't. So what now? What does it take to succeed? Vengeance? Fucking over authority till they put me away in prison or kill me and then some? Spitting in the face of every cop and authority, never surrendering to anything but my pride and my own need to have reality shape itself to me?.. always for me. Were my words of altruism for anyone else but me? Some kid who can't get a grip on reality and lost most of his sense of humour, wondering now if anything is real, lost in a continuum of dichotomies the illusionary progress of turning them into spectrum's, there is no growth anymore. No astounding revelations that will make the world better or make me know what to do in any given situation.

Does anyone know who they are? Or what they are doing? Or what they should do? Definitely not all the time, Earth is in a moment of doubt that never happened, which became history and all time. This cruel yet cowardly world is a child lying in its bed crying to itself. Who will change things? Who will make it better? Who is doing enough? No more self pity, that is what caused the problem in the first place, what got humanity into this situation and tore us asunder with a thunder. Nope, no deal mister bad man. No more change either, no more anything. You are special, more special than me; I just sit in the corner and talk to myself. Friends? What Friends? Who said anything about friends? What's important now is moving forward, always forward. Someday, someone will read this and some day they will think, "what a fucking moron," and they will be right, but I will be right about them thinking that. We are all alright being wrong. To be poor and righteous, to be rich and righteous, to be expressive and pretentious, to be a failure who succeeded more than most because I actually tried, or did I? What is real in me? I can't see where I am lying to myself, but I know everyone does so I must too. Maybe it's in me where I think I have the right to tell people what I think is wrong with them, maybe it's in me when I think I should keep my mouth shut, when I do what's easiest for me, maybe it's all a lie, maybe the only lie in me is when I tell myself I am a liar.

So much dissection of myself, I lay on the floor in pieces, wondering what's next? What was the point of that and how can I continue doing it when my hands and head are in pieces? What arrogance, it sickens me that I could be arrogant, I should be better than that so I can feel like I am better than everyone else. The joke is getting old and no one is laughing anymore, not even a pity laugh, they don't want to enable fools who think they are special. I have the choice now, of going into whatever it is, or staying here with all of you, I can't remember the difference anymore, but I know whichever way I go, there is no turning back, there never is, there isn't even directions. It's time to go now, to meet my destiny, my fate of living and dying as a failure, unheard, unloved, and accomplishing nothing, except perhaps coming to terms with all that I have mentioned. Everyone is special, I LOVE YOU, especially that part of you that fills me with the hate I love to feel.

Tomorrow starts Now

Here in the birth of an open empire, a world woken in flames and peace a dim memory.

The party is over, or has it just begun?

Garbage fills the Earth and nightmares on the run

Pagan revolutions and cycles of our sin, we missed the mark with government cause power always wins.

A curse this Witch will bring, on all those rulers and all those merchants, for any who would enslave another.

Let all those betrayed see now their light, and bring forth the truth in what is this globe.

Ancient awakenings and hidden threads meet, in darkest night corners and in to our sleep,

For watch now as freedom is locked out the door, for if we don't act our hearts will be tore

And all that we love and all that we cheat, will all just be for all us to see.

Consequences inept and boiled in our soup, we gave up our freedom for games in a group

A spiritual conquest, rise up from within, victory over injustice, the future's seeds begin.

This time is gone but all for it to be, just another day just another way, it's presence here is key.

For if you should find, you look like my mind, you will plainly creep in to this life I seek,

And so spread a thought you make, that the powers rule is fake and everyone can fight,

All oppressive misguided might.

In these words I make, I send a message of our state,

That once humans had the right, to think and be their own.

The oligarchs fight on and we all can sing sad songs, but in this time we knew, what was right and what is true.

So if your times are hard, and freedom is obscure, know your wild will and remember humanity's skill, not for art or work, science or a clever trope, just our passionate adventures, even when we're broke.

And in that anchored flame, let joy in you remain, that you are one in us too, that we live on in you

And so it is we're free, as long as resistance is seen, let no one take that away and our hearts we will never betray.

Never give up and never forget, that while that flame lives on, the torch of Anarchy is strong.

That you now must fight and you now must work, that tyrants will fall where rebellion does lurk.

I lay still, not moving, very comfortable, feeling half asleep, not caring or thinking of where I was, then slowly, softly, I heard a whisper, "Wake up, wake up now, it's time for you to learn." I opened my eyes to see standing before me the goddess Dysnomia, she had a smile, more like a smirk on her face, she said to me "well you finally did it; I hope you are happy, you did just what you want." Puzzled I recognized her at once, I had forgotten for a moment what had happened, that there was a place called Earth and that I had left it rather suddenly. I had killed the oil executive, that much I was sure of, but soon after in front of everyone I was gunned down by police. "So I am dead?" I asked with a certain shyness about me.

"Oh yes!" She proclaimed and smiled warmly, "quite dead and here with me, your plan worked just as you thought it would, but I am afraid things are still not quite how you imagined them."

I stood up, "what do you mean?" I asked. "Won't his death help to inspire Anarchy?"

"Well yes and no" she said abruptly, "don't think I don't love you, but you really are a huge dope for someone with your insight. What is the matter with you? Why were you so eager for death?"

"I wanted to be with you" I answered quite confused, "I couldn't live on that planet anymore, there are too many people trying to force me into hierarchies, the whole world seems like it's about to kill itself, I wanted to prove I was worthy of transcending, I wanted to prove I had renounced worldly desires. I was so lonely that I had to find some place I belonged, some place I could be with other Anarchists who thought like me. I... I love you."

Putting her hands on her hips she looked at me for a moment, then she sat down crossed legged and patted the ground for me to join her. “You have died because you thought I wanted you to, because you thought you could be with me through murder and so you have put me above yourself and in so doing have shown you don't know me, I am no better than you, though you love me, you have shown your true motivation to be the attainment of me, rather than helping me to free the people of the world and make a home for us all in the human world. You unquestioningly followed me and tried to do what you thought I want, rather than what you really want, so you have forced me from your heart and forsaken all that I have tried to show you, that you should not follow anyone but learn to do your own true will, knowingly and for the freedom of all.”

“But it is my true will to be with you!” I complained, realizing at once how childish I sounded. “It is” she said, “but we both know you want us to live on Earth, to help everyone there, to save nature and all its creatures, even the man you shot.”

I started to get worried now, it was clear I was a pretty big fool and hypocrite in many ways, “so I didn't do the right thing? Is all violence wrong?”

Dysnomia said in a relaxed tone, “The real question is not, is defending yourself with violence morally justifiable? But how can we find tactics that are viable? You basically said yourself without massive support from society, most attacks on humans have no strategic value and so you might as well sit at home and jerk off. Look to make a culture that will stand up against tyranny, not to take on tyranny all by yourself. You need to make sure if you are going to defend yourself through violent actions, that you don't end up killing yourself in the process! You have to make sure what you are defending is not your pride or your ego or some self righteous feeling of superiority. Remember a revolution in a place where slaves want to be slaves is useless. The death of one tyrant will only be used as justification to strip away more rights from the people and create a bigger budget for “terrorist” defence. You may have inspired some and maybe more people will read your book, but you have also made Anarchists look insane to those with narrow minds. If it ever becomes well known, most people are too superficial to actually read the book and they will just believe what some asshole critic says about it, what's more, the critic probably won't even fully read the book but assume it's some kind of satanic rantings of a delusional lunatic.

Too many people don't go beyond intellectualism because they want a cure all, some tactic which will save the world in one easy way and so the search for this cure all is a distraction from progressive smaller actions, actions which accumulate to real change. Do not look for magick bullets, look for many little ways you can make the world a better place. Remember that if you die, you may have done one revolutionary act, but if you live you may do many revolutionary acts providing an overall benefit, remember to do what you truly will and remember you are not above being mistaken. You didn't really think one white man acting alone could save the world did you? You were trying to save the world with a silver bullet; you thought you could start a revolution so easily? There are many problems in the world, which require many different solutions, many different people working on them in many different ways, no magick bullet will ever save the world and so instead, build a community that can work together on all their various problems. No it's not quite as glamorous, but the will for hard work, the will to build a sustainable society off the current grid and free of hierarchy is much more important than the will to kill the oligarchs. As a person of privilege who has a heart, you felt obligated to fight, but if you are lucky, people will see in your example the death of the image of the white male hero, the man who tries to save the world single-handedly, but cannot save himself. And so through destruction of that image, other people will be able to stand up and be their own heroes and maybe, just maybe, they will do it as a community.”

“I was sure I was doing the right thing” I said, “but I felt like I couldn't stay in that world anymore.”

She continued, “everyone with a body is fallible and to forget that, to think you are immune or ever could be is perhaps the biggest mistake of all. You were sad in your life and you tried to change that in the only way you knew how, but you ended up trying to escape from your problems, you thought you had faced them all through entheogens and you did do a really good job, you have learned a lot, but you forgot to learn how to deal with people who don't see things the way you do.”

Saddened and blushing I managed to stammer, “how come I didn't get this knowledge from the portal I opened? Couldn't my future self have told me what would happen? That I was making a mistake?”

Clearly sympathetic Dysnomia tried to explain, “You opened the portal and you received information, actually more than what you originally thought, you were actually receiving awareness right from the first acid trip, each time you grow in magickal awareness, you send back that wisdom and awareness to your past self, especially to that time when you first took acid. This allowed some awareness of me and magick to creep in, not to mention the dose you took made it inevitable that you would go beyond time and space, that you would see the illusion of reality and experience mystical union. When you were 16 you didn't know what you wanted, but you wanted knowledge all the same, you wanted to write a book that could get through to people and teach them something about reality and Anarchy and so I helped you find just the right Occult books, to have just the right life you needed to learn what you know now, to know what you came to call anarkhos. Each time you got old you sent back information and each time you learned more when you were young and so had more to send back when you got old again, you created a time loop of exponential awareness. You were always limited by how much you wanted to learn, you couldn't learn how to be happy, because you didn't really want to be happy, you wanted to feel sorry for yourself, so you never learned enough about overcoming that self pity that you could teach your past self. You were always stunted by what information you wanted to receive, until eventually you reached this cycle of the loop and you killed yourself in that murder.”

“So the portal can work for people who don't know it exists?” I blurted out bewildered.

Putting her hand on my knee as if to ask me to wait, she calmly explained further, “It can to the degree they want to learn and live in Anarchy, if they want to learn only about materialist atheist Anarchy then that is what they will learn, it all depends on how much effort they are willing to put into it, what aspects they want to know. While it's much easier for someone to benefit from the portal after they consciously consent to it, it can still work for those who consent to Anarchy, especially spiritual Anarchy as you did once you took acid for the first time and knew there was a spiritual aspect to reality. You knew the portal would make this world available to Anarchists who knew nothing of the portal, this is because it exists outside time and symbolizes all desire for awareness of Anarchy, both in the multiverse and on the Earth you left. So I was able to come to you, even though the portal wasn't opened at that time, as you later wrote the book, you spoke your intention for me to be able to help your past self or the self that exists outside of time. You didn't realize at the time, but you wrote the programming for that sigil vaguely enough that I could come to you, you said that if a person was so high they forgot they were tripping, that I or their future self could come in and help the person remember. That first acid trip you had no idea what was happening, you had forgotten you had taken LSD and so eventually I managed to remind you.

Even Helen, who never really defined herself as an Anarchist, but was for the most part naturally inclined to freedom and equality came here when she died, she became aware of this world and I had a long talk with her and she decided she wanted to reincarnate and consciously learn how to live as an Anarchist and to become a magician just as you are. She was quite impressed with you when she found out the reality behind your rantings. She was a special girl, in fact she is my cousin, and as you know my avatar on Earth, a limited form of myself which had forgotten her true identity. My aunt helps me to be born in the world through an Earth mother so that I can try and bring about Justice. You didn't realize it at the time, but it was me you saw in the reflection of her barbel piercing, for I cannot incarnate fully in to the human world as I truly am, at least not until more people want me and so I must become a human with limited awareness if I am to exist there.

If a person doesn't try to define and learn about Anarchy for themselves, or make up a word or use one like equality which means the same thing, then they will never know what aspects they want to learn or how to consciously use the portal and they will never get that much from it. Those who take it from a magickal perspective will see things others won't, at least until a person makes an effort to consciously work with the portal, then all of it can be revealed to them if they want such awareness and as they become more aware, they can become aware of their choices, their abilities to use the portal. But until this last cycle you never made the effort to want to know what you don't want to know about, those things which are the real causes of your unhappiness. You went out of many of your comfort zones, but you still wanted to escape from the point of view where you are the only being in existence, a reality where you are eternally alone, so you never really learned how to deal with that archon and you killed that man to escape it. This last time around the time loop you wanted to learn how your ego was holding you back, but to learn this, you had to die to experience the truth, what was beyond this life outside the time loop. It turns out Anarchy wasn't your motivation but escaping the view of solipsism you trapped yourself in.

I had to let you kill yourself this way because it was the only way for you to experience why escaping from solipsism is a mistake and I couldn't impose my will on you to teach you something you didn't want to learn any other way. You wanted to die and ignore contradictory information so I couldn't stop you, but now that you are here you truly want to know how you can align yourself to me, to experience me in your life and to bring Anarchy to the world. You don't want to escape solipsism anymore because you have, you have found me, you can tell that I am outside of your control, outside the bounds and laws you have created for yourself, you can see I am an individual even though I am one with you. Now I can show you where you have been going wrong, I can show you that you didn't incarnate to escape from being divine, so much as to learn how to be divine. What you called Chaos or true divinity is not insane, senile or suffering from multiple personality as you thought, it's just you were afraid, you have to face all your fears to become fully aware and that was the scariest thing you could imagine. Your ego was scared of the divine and so was projecting your fears on to it, thinking that since you were messed up, it must be too, but what you call the divine knows the truth and it is free of all fears, free of all rulers. On Earth the divinity in humans suffers as all humans suffer, but if it is a matter of split personalities, it is more from racism and the idea that you are not one race, or that humans are separate from nature.

You actually met me on your first acid trip, but you got scared and blocked it out, you forgot. But the truth is you are Chnoubis, you are the demiurge, the mad fool who made the universe in his image, the solipsist mystic who wants to create everything with authority, the arrogant snake who in his blindness traps wisdom in to forms. You are the child of chaos who tries to impose order on to it and what is more, you are the one who did it out of some sort of twisted love. The part of you which hates Yahweh and wishes to destroy him with wrath is the part of you which is most like him, it is the part of you which sees yourself as the authority of all that is good. Remember that first acid trip? At that time you did not know how to exist in anarkhos, you even said you made the universe, so take responsibility for it, but do not be too hard on yourself, your fear of me, your mother, also made you ignorant, made you cry for your mother tears which each became a life time in a body of a human, a tear which is also my own grief, my own desire to heal you so that we can return to the fullness.

You are no more important than anyone else, you are one with everyone, but you are not aware of everything, you are like a cell in a body, not the body itself, one with it, but not all of it. Alienation and loneliness are not necessary aspects of oneness, you do not have to spend an eternity in a void to be real, but even if you did you would not feel alone, because the distinction between alone and not alone is an illusion as well. You only have to understand oneness and multiplicity are themselves part of a duality, that when seen together form a unity, a spectrum, both points of view and everything in between being just as a valid. Through solidarity, compassion and altruistic direct action, you will overcome apathy and loneliness, find meaning and know that just because reality is an illusion, so is the idea that the illusion should be feared or run from, because fear itself is an illusion, it is the illusion that you can be something that you don't want to be. You do not have to kill yourself to prove your faith in me, to prove your courage, to prove to yourself that you will exist in the next world, if you feel the need to prove yourself, to test yourself, then it is a need based on doubt rather than gnosis. This idea that you are being tested is a lack of trust in what you believe, it is a lack of awareness that you can be happy anywhere you are, with any level of awareness, that you can also have company at any level of awareness. This is because there is no end to the heights of awareness that you can reach and all that you perceive is equal to the whole of you, even subdivisions of your own self.

Oneness doesn't necessarily mean loneliness, or even solipsism, the divine Chaos can do anything, including create a perfectly real reality in which it is not one, it can also experience a reality in which it is aware of its divine unity and still not be or feel alone. It can even be alone and still be happy, since Chaos can do anything, it can definitely enjoy itself, but it will learn to face its fears, it will learn what it's true will is. The question of solipsism can be reconciled by understanding that if it is true, then the entity in existence is divine and so if it is divine, then it can do anything. This divine chaos then is that which defines what is real and so the question of solipsism itself has no basis other than a fallacious premise. That is as a solipsist defines the word "real" as only that which is self, that self then is all of nature and as you know, nature fulfils all the definitions of "divinity" and so that entity must by definition be the divine. That self then as a divine being defines what is real and so if it chooses to define only itself as real, it is correct, but if it chooses to define what appears to be separate as also being divine, it is also correct. In this way solipsism is true only if that entity wants it to be true, the oneness and plurality are just as real as each other and exist simultaneously because it is arbitrary according to the beliefs of an entity.

As you become more conscious of your belief in consciousness, you come to understand that this belief is actually the source of consciousness. This means that by becoming more aware of that belief, you actually grow your consciousness and all that it implies. However you can also choose to experience a state of mind without beliefs, without words and this allows you to recognize that what is commonly called "consciousness" is just a belief in "I am," or a belief in the ego. If you truly did not believe you were conscious, then you would not be, that is since you cannot be conscious of or experience something which does not exist, you cannot be conscious of consciousness if you do not believe it exists. If you are aware of something existing, then you believe in it and so if you truly did not believe in consciousness, there is no way you could have an experience of it and so you would have no awareness of it. In this way, a belief in consciousness is the evidence for it's existence and the source of experience for it, but through silence in the mind you can experience that which is outside your definition of "I am." The "I" is the one experiencing itself in a world of many, the silence encompasses all the many things and people and is an experience of universal oneness and so in silent oneness there are no words like "alone."

It is the archons which fracture our minds, which divide and conquer, but in solidarity we are one, in solidarity we have integrity, in solidarity we are real. As a solipsist you were alone, you were an individualist, but you didn't have the means to achieve global Anarchism by yourself, now that you have learned that the one and the many must be balanced, that both the consensus reality and your individual reality are just as real as each other, you can be a functional part of the commune and engage in mutual aid without getting sucked in to conformity and overcome by illusion and authoritarianism and so with the others you can spread Anarchy. Individualism is the one, the community is the many or plurality of perspective, but also as an individual, you can feel alienation and see the many, the plurality of the universe in all the diverse individuals in this world. Likewise the community through solidarity and cooperation is one and so when you can unite all these perspectives and find balance between the one and the plurality, you will know how to be autonomous and live up to the truth that you are an individual, one who has a responsibility to the world and people around you. Martyrdom and especially suicide is not necessary, if you really know, if you really have gnosis then will not need to prove it, this implies doubt, you will know you know, and you will know that you have to help others and live in the world as a person who knows and who spreads the truth of Anarchy. Living for Anarchy, for truth and awareness proves more devotion than any test of faith ever could, each Anarchist needs to do that in their own way. Some may really have the need to defend themselves, but where you were, it was still more tactical to stay and spread awareness.

Now that you have faced your fear of solipsism, through the sigil you can go in and out of your ego and oneness at will and experience anything you wish, including peace and contentment in permanent isolation as oneness, if that is the conception of reality you will yourself to be in. You can also experience a world of Anarchy, as well as Anarchist heavens and realms full of creatures from all myths and all religions and be around entities and people just as alive and conscious as you. This fear of eternal loneliness was your last archon to overcome and you are awakening to enlightenment through it, if that is what you want. ”

Stunned with amazement I asked, “So if you were behind the portal the whole time, before I even made the portal, guiding me, helping me to live the life I want so I could learn enough to write a good book, then in many ways you are the real author of the book?”

“Well...” she said with a pause, “we wrote it together, how could it be any other way? I am with all beings at all times, helping them to do whatever they want, even hurt themselves as so many of you choose to do. It’s the only way some of you learn that hurting yourself is not what you really want! So many of you insist on learning from firsthand experience because you are not usually consciously trying to be spiritual Anarchists. That is what is happening to your race right now, they are learning why governments and hierarchies aren't a good idea, its rather a long experiment in this case, but you will eventually come to the right conclusions, we just have to try and make sure you don't make the planet uninhabitable in the process.”

Starting to understand I managed to ask, “so now that I know all this can I send this awareness through the portal to my past self so that I don't end up killing that guy?”

“No” she said gravely, “I already told you, that your past self did not want to learn this lesson, could not learn this lesson without going through it, if you sent the information back then the awareness could not be received because you wanted to escape and this awareness would go against that. Instead you have created a meme, a book that will allow others to learn at least a little of what you have learned without having to go through it themselves. You have made a meme that teaches memetics and how it can be applied to Occultism and Anarchy, this is very important; culture must change if the world is to change and you must encourage others to make their own memes, to spread their own truth in their own way. You have made an interactive piece of art which can change the minds of anyone, that is if they are honestly willing to go through the ritual which calls me into their life. By opening the portal yourself, following the initiation you will be sent new memes by me and my children to help spread Anarchy and raise awareness, the archons will try to co-opt those memes, but there will always be people who seek out freedom and truth, people who will see through the manipulation.

You have died now because of your actions and so cannot stay in your old body for the greater cause of spreading Anarchy, you have done deeds in my name instead of your own and you have done them not for me or for others, but only for yourself. For you could not see happiness on the Earth, but wanted me for yourself when I belong to all, when I am in all people and all things and so by escaping here to my home, you have shown you do not want me, or to see me on Earth. Cycling back again to relive that life will do you no good, you have learned all that you can from that life that your past self wants to learn, so now you must learn to go on in the future, to let go of that life and start from scratch, it won't be easy but you have to start all over. To be with me you must overcome your egotistical desires and work the long and arduous road of making Earth a place where I can be realized, work to make others aware I am also with them and can be in their life, not by acting on my behalf or looking to short term solutions for personal glory, but by dedicating a lifetime to the great work of freeing minds from the shackles of selfish notions of limited freedom. Through defeating those you consider evil you have damned the Dysnomia that was in that oil executive's heart and so you have damned me and through the death of yourself you have ended opportunities for all the good work you could do to help me enter the world in that life time.”

Understanding the fate I had made for myself I asked, “How can I be with you?”

Exasperated she explained further, “Reincarnate into the world and learn my ways, I will make myself known to you, I will take human form and be with you in the hearts of all who love freedom and as the incarnation of your perfect love. But you must remember I am boundless, all humans know me and are joined with me in some way, even your oppressors, read the book you have written and through it I will manifest in your life and be with you always. I will be there in every act of defiance, I will be that voice in the back of your head when an authority tells you what to do, I will be there telling him to fuck off, I will be there in the heart of every child who knows the grownups just aren't right and every person who hates to pay their taxes.”

Worried I wondered, “Can you put this conversation at the end of the book so I am not so quick to die before my time, to die before I have used up all peaceful options in bringing you to Earth?”

“Of course” she said, “just make fucking sure you damn well don't quote me on anything. I will make sure you find this book in your next life, after all you want to find it and designed the sigil to help yourself find it, though at first you may not even realize you wrote it. Once you are reincarnate you may get lost in the archon programming and forget all about Anarchy, so you may not recognize me until you find it, but you will be able to use it to bring me into your life, if you recognize through it that that is what you really want. If you read it, you will not make the same mistake again, you will not fear solipsism, you will understand your oneness is not the same as loneliness, that you always can learn from others, because although you are one, it is through your individual viewpoint that you come to understand your oneness. Time on Earth is the process of the unending growth of understanding, you can always learn more, especially if you learn how to help others, rather than only help yourself. Maybe I will put it on a park bench or something, you always did like nature, think of it as a letter to your future self so that you can catch up on all that you learned in your last life and stop yourself from making the same mistakes, you could even use it as a spell to overcome the archons of your ego. Once you rid yourself of your desire to possess and thereby control me, the desire to be with me for yourself rather than for others, once you have done that, then I will be with you in the form of my avatar to love you forever as I did as Helen. Though I may not immediately realize who I am in her body, I may be in any body, man, woman, transgendered as you wish, in friends and family and enemies, look for me always in each person that you meet.

Yours and Helen's is an old love story, much older than you realize, though you have had your suspicions and figured out some things by your scholarship, you did not realize your own identity. Not even Nomos or his archon buddies could keep you apart for long, though they try each time you two incarnate at the same time. In the old days they called you Simon of Peraea and much like Helen in this last life, you had been a slave in King Herod's palace in Jericho, but you burned it down, you started an uprising and started spreading your spiritual revolution which would come to be known as the Peratic Gnostics. Eventually the rebellion was crushed by the Romans and you and many others were crucified, but your spirit is immortal and you only “seemed to suffer” and so through your death you actually escaped. Laughing at the Romans stupidity in thinking they had destroyed you, your spirit chose to reincarnate like a Bodhisattva so that you could continue the revolution. After being reborn you naturally carried on the work of your former life, but you didn't realize your previous incarnation until you met John the Baptist. From him you learned some of the mysteries as you were initiated with mushrooms and from this you came to remember and realize to a much fuller degree that you are divine and that all people are divine. You were his favourite student and chosen to succeed him, however when he died you were in Alexandria, then another student named Dositheus usurped the sect for the Jews and ended the entheogenic practices to form the start of what would become the Sadducees. You disagreed with others in his sect as to the wisdom of the mysteries of the gentiles and the equality of women, arguing that all humans are divine and so the need to spread the revolution to them as well. You argued that institutional Judaism had to be abolished along with the Romans and it soon became apparent that you should strike out and continue the rebellion in a band of radical Shaman mystics.

From the initiation you received from John your enlightened spirit was resurrected and so you started calling yourself Simon Magus and after travelling around as a teacher and student, you met Helen as she was standing in the door of a brothel. Having been awakened by John you recognized her instantly and rescued her from her oppressors, then together you travelled to Alexandria where you learned the Pagan mysteries and from there you both created a whole new religion. Commemorating your fallen comrades and using the symbolism of the Pagan gods, you used a metaphor of your death and resurrection as Yeshua on a cross for the entheogenic rituals you created. At that time the rulers had taken control of many of the entheogenic mystery schools with their opium, but to their horror, you revealed the key of all the mystery religions to the masses. You revealed the technical secrets of the Phoenix mushroom Amanita muscaria, that which brings about the death and resurrection and you revealed the other entheogens as well and showed your initiates we are all equals. The people had free access to the spirit world once again and your religion spread and mutated in a wide variety of forms as you had denounced institutional authorities and Jewish ideas of orthodoxy. As you visited various people's, you had an inner knowledge of the meaning behind their religious symbols and so came to take on many names and guises according to their traditions, but in each you showed how all these practices relate to the same reality. For this they had to kill you, they had to take your spiritual ideas and turn it in to Christianity, if not the revolution would have been complete and their work to enslave humanity would have come to an end.

Along with Helen you went to Jerusalem where you spoke out against the evils of the money changers and tax collectors under the banking establishment, you even taught people of the universal language and how to use their whole brain. You had made a wooden tower to demonstrate your Tantric practices regarding the spine and brain, teaching people wherever you went how to astral project and so fly through the air in their spirit bodies. Eventually this led the Romans to catch you and they killed you, they crucified you once again and turned you in to a martyr for the Gnostics. By this time the wheel of reincarnation had turned, and that place was not right for you to reenter the world, the stars had chosen a different home for you to be born in, a place that had no letters to write down your words. Back in the Roman territories however, your religion remained and threatened to spread across the empire, igniting the fires of popular revolution, the Gnostics carried on in your name and even went to Rome to spread dissent against Nero and so helped to bring him down. It was then that that paternalistic patriarch of an asshole Peter made up all kinds of propaganda that mocks the truth about you, all in order to impress that rabid beast of an emperor Nero. This revolution threatened to tear the empire apart, helping to cause a civil war which broke out as Titus and the other aristocrats scrambled for power. In Judea there was no solidarity, the Jews could not agree about their own religion, let alone how to get along with the gentiles and so they fought each other. One rebel in particular, Simon Bar Giora took up your cause by rebelling in your name, but he was not you and lacked total anarkhos and so even though he truly loved the people, he made himself a king. Still he knew what black magick lay in the temple, and so once Titus began to invade Jerusalem he knew he had to join forces with Zealots to fight off the Romans. It was then that he managed to destroy many of the bankers grimoires, holding out for some time in the tunnels beneath the temple foundation, unfortunately he did not find all of the subterranean chambers below the temple and eventually the Romans defeated them and Simon Bar Giora was taken prisoner as he was coming up from below the foundations.

Still the revolution continued in your name and under the names of various Gnostic groups in general, but the archons would do their best to corrupt it and split it by creating leaders and by promoting religious dogmatism and Jewish nationalism. So that as this revolution became a more serious threat to Rome, that pretentious Paul of Tarsus as an agent for another Herodian King, worked with Rome to destroy the Gnostics and the revolution you helped to create. They took Gnostic works and twisted them to write the earliest forms of the new testament, mocking your death at the hands of Romans by making you carry the cross for their invented form of “Jesus.” There in the bible you appear under the name of Simon of Cyrene, while they turned Helen in to the Christian version of Mary Magdalene, eventually demonizing her and all women as whores. Then they destroyed most documents relating the true history and wrote their own, turning the truth on its head they symbolized this by telling stories about Peter being crucified upside down, then they made Simon Magus out to be a greedy egomaniac as in the book of acts. The bourgeois conservatives of the empire ate it up, hating anything to do with entheogen using Anarchists. Backed up by the money of the bankers, the Christians eventually started to outnumber the Gnostics and no one could tell who was who, eventually the persecutions increased. The Gnostics were tortured to reveal their secrets and Christians were able to use them to appear as though they were the rebels, so eventually the revolution was mostly taken over. Despite some Gnostic hold outs, by the time of Simon Bar Kokhba your revolution had largely been co-opted and your message corrupted. The sacraments were switched and people thought they were having the authentic mystery school initiations, but instead they were just doing opium Soma and the only ones who knew better were the ones who had experienced the true sacraments, that is the Gnostics. Eventually the Christians were satisfied with a water baptism and just drinking a bit of wine and eating a cracker, as if that was all there was to it!

Whenever you and Helen are united the rulers tremble and fall, revolutions happen or great spiritual movements appear, you reveal to the world my reality and so I have been symbolized as many goddesses over the centuries. Through your works people learn to use entheogens and the rulers must scramble to change history and wipe out the methods you give, then they twist the myths you reveal and turn them in to religions of power. You knew her on Crete as prehistoric snake goddess, the goddess who eventually became known as Helen of Troy, but you also knew her as Ariadne and Eurydice and many other names, together you had founded the mysteries of Eleusis when she was known as Kore, but behind her eyes it was always me looking out to you. As I am nature, I have been symbolized as all aspects of nature, and so I am many goddesses with many forms and names, but for those with ears to hear my name is Silence. For those who love freedom I am freedom and perfect Justice, for those who have fallen under the influence of the Eunomians and do not wish to have a free will, I am a goddess of fate, but this is because of the Eunomians. While the Eunomians changed the myths and used my names to refer to Columbia, there is still to this day stories in which you can learn how I created the tablets of destiny, though I never called them as such. Or rather I made them as a goddess and found them again in the form of my avatar and your lover, but the book of humanity needed to be written because Aletheia was held captive and people only had the Eunomians to teach them. The books were supposed to give people an understanding of nature and so myself and with this knowledge they could make their own fate and fulfil their true will. After I was driven to the underground my avatar was reborn in the surface world and along with you and the Sidhe we tried to rebel and protect them, but the Eunomians killed us all and took the tablets and made it the cornerstone of their Mendacium. They changed the writings all around to make it seem as though they were laws and this became the basis of all the litigium which Nomos would create. In the last life you were Sid Vicious and Helen was your Nancy, Johnny Rotten had prepared the way for your arrival just as he had done as John the Baptist in the old days...”

“What!?” I interrupted amazed and confused, “being Simon Magus is one thing, but you must be joking! That can't be right!”

With a boisterous laugh she replied, “You are right... I was just joking, Sid and Nancy were way too strung out to have much wisdom, but it is true you were a heroin addict in the life before your last. Seeing the state of the world and the spiritual ignorance which rules it in these times, having been raised by fundamentalists you had died a miserable death, thanks to the Christians you became a junky at age 14 and killed yourself with an overdose, so this is why I tried to warn you on that first acid trip. I was just trying to lighten the mood with that whole Sid Vicious thing, it must be a lot to take in realizing you were what originally inspired Christianity. Drink now from my cup of anamnesis and remember your past lives as Simon Magus and all the rest and you will know the truth, know why you have suffered so, it is because you are a hero, and heroes do what those filled with fear cannot do. In our truly endless romance as lovers through my avatar, I will read your book and remember my true self and learn of my love for you, together we will help people to realize their true will and to live in peace with each other. So remember to treat everyone as my equal, for I can appear to you in all of them, especially the ones who seem to disagree with you.

Then I drank, and it all came back to me, I remembered my past lives, I lived on the Nile, I also lived free on the plains of Africa and in Nubia, in Europe I was a Witch who was killed for healing someone, I was also a Berserk and a Druid hermit, an Alchemist, an Aghori, a Peruvian Shaman, one of the first Gypsies to leave India, and a pirate at Libertatia. Many more lives were revealed to me, in fact I realized the reason I had been drawn to the paths that I had, I had been of them before and would be again. In each life I had sought after Helen, sometimes only being with her a day, sometimes I managed to spend a lifetime with her, but each time the rulers managed to cut us down before we could set the world free.

Seeing that I now remembered, Dysnomia continued, “for all your philosophical insight you never totally realized I was always with you, you always wanted somebody to love as well, not seeing me in all the failed romantic aspirations you had. You killed that man not for me, but because you feared victory, feared success because you knew it may not happen in that life time and that you could not wait that long and so I could not be with you because you didn't really want me, you wanted what you could have in the present. You chose apathy in your zealotry, apathy for more routine and unglamorous forms of bringing me into the world, but forms which allow you to work much longer and eventually more effectively than one big act of martyrdom. Apathy is more of a threat to freedom than all the tyrants, all the laws, all the armies of the world combined since those who choose to be apathetic, exercise their freedom to have their freedoms taken away.

But although you acted self righteously and arrogantly, as well as out of fear, you have given people a means to learn why suicide will never be an answer to fears of solipsism, they will just have to reincarnate again, but more than this you have shown them there is nothing to fear, that they are only alone if they want to be, that no state is more real than any other.”

Stunned, I was filled with mixed emotions, Dysnomia had been all around me and yet I had wanted to be with her, I still wanted to be with her, I would do whatever it took to stay here with her, even if it meant reincarnating and living as an activist. Unsure what to do I asked her, “So like a fool I have to start a whole new life from the beginning and start another uprising? The world seems pretty fucked up, are you sure there is no tactical benefit to violence? If I kill again in the next life will it only be an act of fear?”

Dysnomia answered with the most serious face I ever saw her with, “whether you are a pacifist or not, war has been declared on you, on all life, whether you want to fight or not, death is coming for you. If people don't wake up it will be the death of the planet too, how you wish to live your life knowing that is up to you. All life is precious, you must live in the moment, but also make your future in line with your true will, you cannot take anything for granted and no one can come to me by fleeing the world in fear, even if you run towards death fearlessly, as you did yourself. You cannot kill for me, only for yourselves, you can ignore the world's problems and live in some version of hedonistic escapism, punctuated by slave labour that hastens the mechanisms of your world's destruction, or you can live fighting, fighting with each breath to defend life and save not only yourself, but all future generations. Make no mistake there is an onslaught of all out aggression against any who believe that life takes precedence over convenience, an onslaught of chemical and environmental, psychological, spiritual as well as physical obliteration. You will be reborn and wherever you are reborn will be behind enemy lines, no place on this planet is not controlled by hierarchies, save but a few minds, you will be attacked wherever you meet humans, at the very least attacked through psychic violence in an attempt to cow you into submission. There may indeed be a time for violent revolution, but that revolution will be doomed without the logistics and support to back it up and so you must decide how you can best use what skills you have to do what you can, and you Simon make grade "A" heresy. You must do your best to live in truth because if you fail, you will live in a lie that will become so convincing, that humanity may never escape from it. Only by being in the present, living your true will right now and each moment, can you get over the idea that there ever was another time other than now.

Live your life as a unique expression of the divine perspective, create your own understanding, knowing its limitations and forcing it on no one, do not seek to make your view point conform to others through lies, do not seek to make others conform to your view, each person's outlook is valuable specifically because it is unique, to try and change that is to destroy your freedom and theirs and the very purpose for being alive. Each person's ego is unique but we are all the self awareness of the all, so it is through developing your own unique perspective on the transcendent that you provide Chaos with informative views as to the nature of itself and reality. Those who believe authorities, those who do not develop their own awareness and come to their own conclusions, these people do not create a very useful or novel perspective in the great work of the universe to discover all permutations of omnipotence for the all. Each life is a work of art and those who make that art into a commercial, who plagiarize to look like a non conformist, who take out sincerity and authenticity from their lives in order to sell themselves for convenience, these people live as nothing but parodies and shabby imitations of what a real life can be and to their own horror they believe their wilful ignorance is for their own good, even to point of global suicide.

Soon you will go and live a new life, you can bring your fire of the spirit of freedom and do as you will, write a new story and encourage others to do the same, make your life your own, act with an idea to learn the truth of your will and how to bring it in the world. The choice is yours, to bring me into your life at the expense of your complacency and apathy, or ignore me and push me away, but I am only with those who want me and to want me is to want life, to love me is to love life. I take many forms and have many names, but I am life itself, so love me and I will always be with you, know this truth for eternity and you will never be alone again. I have seen your heart and I know what you want to do, all that is left is for you to know on your own terms, for if I told you it would be my idea and not yours, I can only help you to rebel, I can't make you want to and so when you read your book, remember if you want me, no matter what tyrants seize power, I am always with you, as I have always been, whispering in your ear, revolting ideas of freedom.

However, before you go to reincarnate into the world, wouldn't you like to know the truth of all those theories you made? Wouldn't you like to know just how right your intuition was? Here now you have the opportunity to study in my great library, to read every book that ever was, you can learn what you need to make your case, you can show the world the cornerstone of all religions, the basis of truth from which the rulers impose their will. Here outside of time, you can look at the history of the world and gain an outside perspective, you can see how it all took shape and write it down, and so when others read what you have found, they will gain some understanding. I am afraid there is still one more chapter for you to write, one more chapter of this life before you begin again on the path of the universal drifter." Of course I could not refuse such an offer and by this time a strange sensation was coming upon me, as if the drink of water had not fully hit me yet, so with that Dysnomia let out a long, high pitched fart and I was whisked away...

Zadekiels Prayer

It seems almost like I am not really living my life but remembering it, in this way it seems like I can think of things and focus on them and I will remember experiencing a memory of something that won't happen until the future. The disadvantage of this has been that it has been hard in the past to live in the moment. I will focus on remembering myself in the future as more lucid within the moment.

To actually be there is very important and not have your mind scattered. Pay attention to the people around you, they have meaning within your life. The rulers are like actors, they exist to move the play along, the show is almost over, a new baby will be born, notice how it cries when it has been plunged into a whole new world for it to explore. When Gabriel plays his music it will be a vibration, all the dead are coming up to buggly down and the world will be Tir Na Nog. Each time you go to sleep an eternity of experience is remembered and forgotten when you wake up. Your dreams are as future memories you decided not to fully remember for the main collection of the linear progression. The old gods are waking up and when they do it's time to party!

Is there still value in making new metaphors that mean the same thing?

If there isn't then its the end of the universe. Go around the Ouroboros donut, is the ride making you nauseous yet? Anarchy is right, it is the dawn of a new day, but if you stare at the sun you'll go blind. Are you getting used to the light from Plato's cave? Still just footnotes on footnotes, even if its your first time hearing it. The cave has echoes, Gabriel's horn on judgement day will do more then blow down the walls of Jericho, it's the sound, the sound will dissolve creation into his waters of emotion to create a more fluid existence. How many words do you need? They are all hollow without action. You are mostly made of water, your skeleton is your intellect, your heart is your fire, your brain is your Earth.

White stucco is the ultimate Jackson Pollock.

Mild to the extreme, effectively ineffectual,

We are the dogs chasing our tails. We think they are stupid yet we may admire their ability to enjoy the simple things.

Will Vishnu ever stop being so lazy and wake up? Get off your pleasure cruise sweetheart there's a waterfall!

Homer was right, the universe is a donut, but it's self referencing, self feeding, a never ending habit, chasing the dragon. The rune Hagalaz the ice egg is a portal, the seed of Ymir, it is the cube.

There seems to be nothing outside the cube but the unseen observer.

Too much skeleton creates arthritis and joint problems, read between the lines to the meat of the subject, its all there. Flesh it out, but it's always held by symbolic skeletons. The runes are the skeletons of reality, they are the framework, they hold everything together, but don't forget to look beyond them to what they support. How many levels can you see before you see the redundancy, how much redundancy do you want?

Language is a memetic trap, the perceived division between chaos and peace causes war.

There's no one to say it besides you, so quit repeating yourself you already know it, subtext. Let go of language for now, glossolalia looks stupid and it is, (irrational) but it's ecstatic.

AUM is the perfect glossolalia, it is the cube.

You don't have free will until you realize your true will, which is to reach the state of "windless sales," a state of no will. You are the ever unfolding rose on the cross of the elements. The cross, like the pentagram, is a pyramid from a different perspective, there are always more dimensions/dementions to the spiral. The spiral is a vortex which we all live in, but there is an outside some where close and it's coming, let go of your agoraphobia. A pyramid is also a 4d cube or tesseract in transition.

Could the pyramids be microcosms or even portals out of the hypercube?

Risking a new level of unrepentant cheesiness I tell you the hyper cube is the matrix or reality.

Brilliance is a lie of language, just like all lies. Governments are made of language they are the ultimate lie. Is there such thing as truth without lies?

Stop asking questions and just feel for once in your life. You find the holy grail by making piece with the “feminine” irrational. Yin and Yang are both teaching each other and themselves, two different dances as they spin around. Fuck you, why should I explain myself any way but cryptically? Figure it out.

Are seemingly disjointed thoughts unconnected?

No, they have meaning individually and as a whole, but also the seeming disconnection states a deeper underlying pattern. It always goes deeper. Don't take my word for it, save yourself, find yourself, the only thing you have to lose is yourself. Everyone is always growing up, you're such a child, laughter is the medicine that shows we are all in on the joke, there's no such thing as an inside joke. Stop reacting, but act from a place that is unchangeable, find your cheesy centre, the moon is made of cheese.

How difficult we make things, no doubt.

You must let the feeling build, by trying to grasp the Tao we divert its flow away from us like trying to bring two positive poles of a magnet together. The grasping is really asking for mercy from the rapture, by asking for mercy we stop our repentance, and so lose our place in heaven. We must always forgive everything to be in pure bliss, to stop judging and let things be, a lack of complete forgiveness is the sin we must repent for, we are always forgiven once we stop the sin. Freedom lies in forgiveness, not to condone “sin,” but to provide the motivation for reformation, rapture attained through stillness that comes from contentment, brought forth through the forgiveness of a seemingly crappy existence, this is the road to stillness and nirvana. The universe is an orgasm of two, there is only one way which is two, it is the same, the trinity all at once. I have no scholarship, these are my interpretations of ancient symbols. The universe is a lotus cumming, an orgasm is you pouring your heart out, even in lust. (perhaps even more so then) When you blow your mind it overflows.

The mind is a donut of fairy lights and the path goes through the centre unseen. To get lost in the land of fairies is to chase phantasms you can never catch, they are mesmerizing and beautiful but they are untouchable. Jesus has a thing for raping fairies, hes brought in St Patrick on the Gang Bang, today's “Christians” attack the life support system of the universe. It can be all too easy to spend your time reflecting on life instead of living it, when could we ever grow enough to be satisfied, is your spiritual growth done in the name of egoism? Here's some words you may not of heard, that we all want to hear new combinations of words. Stop asking questions and you'll find the answer, giving back to others is better then receiving anything, but give them what they can really use, give them yourself. Stop playing by rules but be aware how you effect robots, whats the best way to wake them up? Take them for what they really are. The archons are like actors, they serve to move the play along, and actors are like old friends for the lonely and those who follow... but remember that everyone is a celebrity, as we are each unique.

Nothing

From whence we came understandably from desire, of a stitch in time of an eternal instant moment from which all binary duality combinations of variables arise.

The experience of the experiencing self forever.

Immortal glory of immaculate conception, thought formed from the virgin void of intuitive consciousness always left untouched by mortal minds, but from whom the children of the gods cum.

Perfect innocence of overflowing perfect love.

Seeing is believing even for the divine, for truth focus's beauty and is currently as a fashion for the constantly flowing perception.

When time can be stopped everything can be changed instantly.

The sands of time are your canvas and your imagination the limit.

In arbitrary extremes, supposed duality supports the theory of unity, from which all possibilities are contained.

From the unformed Chaos to which all forms of order can be created, to encapsulate only the smallest portion of divine meaning.

The eternal fool falls off a cliff, but walks a long the side of it.

Walking along, spinning the wheels of time, never having a concept of the cycles for the subjective.

Natures glory defies all fear, for the choices are ours to perceive as we wish.

Fear has no power that we don't give it, so follow your heart to your home.

Your body is the physical manifestation of your mind and its health is parallel to your minds.

Although you can travel to other dimensions without leaving your room, you still have to live in this one.

The greatest strength is a total sacrifice

Blind faith is only required to see absolutely everything as it is, thus eliminating the need for itself.

Be as the trees, swaying in the wind but rooted to the ground.

The imagination is powerful enough to make things appear as separate.

Everything is as it appears, you just control what you see.

Entheogens cannot teach you anything you don't already know,

They simply make you realize you know more then you ever imagined.

They cannot take you anywhere you don't choose to go, but if you switch on the autopilot you will go further then you bargained for.

You wanted it? Well here it is..

CHOICE

We all chose to force ourselves to see the truth when we are ready,

And we are all ready Now,

Because that is all there is , its now or never, the same time it always is.

So take action for the now that is coming ,

Embrace your total strength.

Realize their will always be desire and all you can do is change what you desire.

Most people just desire to not be responsible for their will.

For it to take care of itself, and so it is.

But there is more,

All we can say is our memories happened because they tell us they did,

You can desire what you have,

You can desire,

Nothing, the womb of everything.

Chapter 21 – Epilogue – Magick

After speaking with Dysnomia I astral projected and had a vision of the hypercube of space, I flew in to it and within it was the torus, which I understood was my mind or soul (Psyche) and my inside became my outside and my outside became my inside and as this shift on the surface of the torus occurred, I was transformed. “He will make her womb turn from the external domain and will turn it again inward, so that the soul will regain her proper character. For the womb of the body is inside the body like the other internal organs, but the womb of the soul is around the outside like the male genitalia which is external.” As I wrote down the account of that vision I had learned from a spirit who later revealed himself as Zadekiel, though at the time I had no idea who that was, but at the end of the trip I kept hearing the name in my mind and it said it would not let me sleep until I wrote the name down. I would later find out he is the arch angel of Chesed or Jupiter and that he teaches freedom and mercy.

Herein lies the knowledge which I learned from Dysnomia and her great library of all wisdom, the key to the mysteries of Qabalah and the doctrine of the Merkabah. From her cup I drank and came to remember the past and with that I was given the context of the ancient texts and knowledge of the cornerstone of the ancient religions, the schethiya sapphire and the inspirations for Judaism which lay in the universal, or green language of nature. Taken outside of time, I have seen the shape of all history and its repeating patterns. So by her grace I have written down for you a chapter outside of time which is the exegesis of these mysteries, so that with it you might gain the knowledge which shall set you free. With this then you can read from the book of life and loose the seven seals and so acquire your own revelation to fulfil and witness the truth which I will lay out here.

A Hymn To Zoa

The rapturous joy of the splendour of the spirit of life, courageous and true the source of us all, Standing against the rulers of death, against all odds the assertion of freedom triumphs for all time.
With no food in our bellies and no music out loud, we will stare at the stars and the moon that shines down, and mark in our souls as the wandering orbs traverse the sky.
Even in the darkest cloudy night we make our home, we will make our own light, a fire here on Earth to stay off the icy cold and run rampant with our expression of determination.
And if it should be that there is a storm, we shall withstand the howling winds and the rain upon our cheek, be it a sunny kiss from the sky gods or biting frost we will continue on.
Seizing the day and the joy of dawn, a new opportunity for depth and the arrival of joyous moments, light in the shadows, wholes in the cracks,
There may always be some conflict, but how could it be otherwise with adventure ever present?
So we traverse together on forever, with defiant optimism and a grin that shows no fear.
A life worth living, is gone without endurance, an immortal embrace of intrepid trepidation will carry us on through the ongoing damn nation.
Holding inside the explosion of ceaseless wonder, exploration of the inner reality that oozes out, heroism of the eternal now, the refusal of Thanatos who wishes to infect you with apathy, Like balancing on a ball it is to be crushed underfoot on the journey of the soul.
New experiences always under way, it is the beauty of their comprehension, the recognition of their arrival, and the praise of impermanence to which we can expect the growing pains of inevitable new realities.
Rebellion is her spirit, and the source of all her love, those who reject her, reject all worth knowing, and throw themselves into selfish lies of despair.
Those who find her and offer humble or overwhelming love, will come to know the being of happiness and the depth of true wisdom and experience.
There is a dusk which never ends, which leads us on around the globe, chasing always the setting sun, we must move back from what the image holds and walk headfirst towards the night.
Journeying until we face the light of the world head on, yet moving backwards to meet it as one in the eternal dawn of golden twilight.
Look for her in all things, each form brings wisdom, remember her well when she seems lost to you, drink in her knowledge and act now in her name and be with all.

Now, before you can experience the truth for yourself through ritual, it will help if I lay the groundwork. I have learned of a physicist by the name of James Gates who is giving evidence that physical reality is in fact a computer simulation, which relates to some theories of physics called “digital physics.” This kind of physics deals with ideas about how information is somehow central to the universe, that this information is computable or even a program in a computer and while there are different theories, one of the most interesting is John Wheelers idea of “it from the bit.” While at first I was skeptical of these kinds of ideas, Dr. Gates arrived at this conclusion by use of what he calls “adinkras,” which is a word that comes from magickal West African symbols, but which he uses to refer to symbols created according to “representation theory.” These symbols depict incredibly complex formulas for quantum physics in a relatively simple diagram that allows physicists to look at things in a new way. As it turns out, some West African tribes were unusually aware of fractals and built their villages on such principles and it is from these same fractal principles that the divination system known as geomancy is derived. (See African Fractals: Modern Computing and Indigenous Design By Ron Eglash) Dr. Gates was working with these symbols of representation theory on a branch of quantum physics called “super-symmetry,” when he realized that they revealed that hidden within the formulas themselves was computer code! It was a specialized kind of computer code used for correcting errors called “Block Linear Self Dual Error Correcting Code” and from this evidence he brought up the question that we might be in a computer simulation.

While there was nothing to do with the Occult in his mind, Dr. Gates did say in an interview that he always wanted to find something “magickal” in physics and this intention seems to have manifested more than he realizes! I was startled to find just how Occult some of his diagrams appear, incorporating a variety of very important numbers of variables such as 8 and 16. Dr. Gates is not the first to make these kinds of symbols, though as they relate to different kinds of equations, they are not all called adinkras. As an example of similar scientific diagrams made by others, there is the “meson octet” which could correspond to the hexagram and which in the Occult depicts the planets, so that when put down as a magick circle, it would traditionally have a double cube altar in the centre of the circle just as the meson octet. (6+2=8) Though thinking a little more, given the number eight, I thought that maybe it more closely corresponds to a 3D version of the hexagram, or star of David, something which is traditionally known as the “Merkabah.” A Merkabah is literally translated as “chariot” but is represented as two interpenetrating tetrahedrons and is called a “stellated octahedron” in geometry. (See also “Feynman diagrams” in physics)

Another example of representation theory is the “baryon decuplet,” which just so happens to match another important Occult symbol, the “tetractys” of Pythagoras, a symbol which was the most important figure of his philosophy and is also intimately related to the tree of life. As I have pointed out, Pythagoras created western music systems and so when another physicist named Stephon Alexander used this work of Dr. Gates and his formulas of quantum physics to make music, I started thinking. These adinkra symbols relate to the formations of quarks and other subatomic particles which form the structure of atoms and were used to help get a different perspective on the formulas which is not readily apparent when expressed in the conventional manner. (This is called by physicists the eight fold way in reference to Buddhism) Dr. Gates was also using “Clifford algebra” named for its inventor William Kingdon Clifford, who happened to be a philosopher in the vein of monist idealism and Spinoza, a man who thought that all atoms were based off “mind stuff.”

Tetractys

Baryon Decuplet

So with all this in mind I saw there is a 16 variable adinkra, one which is a 2D diagram of a tesseract, or to be more precise, a “rhombic dodecahedron” with various lines connecting the points and each point representing one of the 16 subatomic particles in the “standard model” of physics. This reminded me of the divinatory practise geomancy, especially given the fact that these same formulas relate to binary code, which as I have explained comes from geomancy. (Geomancy can also be likened to computer programming in that many programmers use a “hexidecimal” system which is base 16) In fact each of the 16 variables had four digits written in binary code, so that they would represent the 16 possible combinations of four binary choices of numbers, either a 1 or a 0. Geomancy has the same 16 combinations of four binary possibilities, so that each geomantic symbol is represented by a combination of four parts or lines, each with 1 dash or 2. Knowing this I knew I could map these geomantic symbols according to the adinkra formula and I found that they are not random at all, in fact I found they present some very specific and complex patterns. These patterns represent aspects of symmetry in geomancy and its corresponding astrological attributions and so like supersymmetry, geomancy is organized according to opposite polarities. I mapped the geomantic symbols on to the adinkra by assigning a number 1 when there was one dash and 0 when there was two dashes. From this I had four binary digits to assign to each geomantic symbol, which I could then superimpose on to the adinkra which was likewise depicted with 16 points, each with 4 binary digits. As each of the 16 geomantic symbols relates to the signs of the zodiac, with two Cancer signs and two Leo signs, plus “Caput and Cauda Draconis,” (symbols relating to the moon's orbit) it was relatively easy to translate the adinkra in to Occult cosmology through it's corresponding Hebrew letters.

The following may not make much sense without knowledge of astrology or Qabalah, but immediately I noticed the configurations of the two Cancer signs make the vertical axis of the rhombic dodecahedron and that the two Leo signs make the horizontal axis, and that these are four very influential signs in geomancy. Then I noticed groupings of opposite signs of the zodiac and the mutable, cardinal and fixed signs, but there were also patterns involving their ruling planets and while not totally perfect, it was very close and I was convinced there was something here. After brushing up on my geomancy I realized that the symmetry of the adinkras matched the symmetry of the geomantic figures quite perfectly, so then if you flip a geomantic figure upside down, you get what is called a “reverted” figure and this will match the figure across the adinkra from it. Also if you take the places on a particular figure where there are two dashes and turn it in to one dash and vice versa, you get what is called an “inverted” figure. This then is clearly organized on the adinkra, generally with the figures directly across from each other on the other side. (Some geomantic figures are the same inverted or reverted, but it still shows the symmetry according to their traditional groupings.)

Finally I noticed that the middle row and the two cancer signs were labelled in white on the adinkra, where as the second and fourth rows were labelled as black, thus separating the eight potential “judges” of geomancy in white from the other eight black signs. This also divides the geomantic figures in to groups with an even amount of marks called “impartial”(judges) and those with an odd amount of marks called “partial.” There are other formations which although they are not perfect, are nearly so and so highly suggestive. For example, a person familiar with geomancy will see that the elemental correspondences of the figures are in a way grouped together, that there are also groupings of the “entering,” “exiting” and “liminal” figures, while those that are “stable” tend to the right, and those that are “mobile” tend to the left. While it is too much to explain what all these terms mean here, just know that all of the traditional groupings of geomancy are represented quite accurately in this diagram, if not perfectly and is so good in fact, it would make an excellent diagram for teaching geomancy.

This was interesting enough but just what relationship geomancy had to the adinkra was not clear until I remembered Dr. Gates talking about a tesseract. This would open up a lot of different things and tie them together, so if you don't have much Occult knowledge try to bare with me, I will do my best to assume no knowledge other than what I have already written. (after awhile the chapter will be less technical and go in to more myth based interpretations) Where as a cube is a 3D square, a tesseract is a 4D cube, that is it has the normal 3 axis of length, width and depth plus a fourth dimension which is time. A hypercube or tesseract has 16 vertices or points which fits nicely with geomancy, it has 8 “cubic hyperfaces” the numerology of which I have to some degree explained in chapter 19 as the Ogdoad etc, there are also 32 edges, a number pertaining to the paths in Qabbalah on the tree of life. (22 letters or connections plus the 10 sephiroth) So these are all very important Occult numbers which relate to each other through the teachings of something in Kabbalah called the “cube of space,” something which is obscure even in many Occult circles, yet has been called the second most important diagram in all of Kabbalah after the tree of life.

Now a hypercube can be imagined as a cube containing a smaller cube within it, with lines connecting the 16 corners or vertices of the two cubes. (you may want to look up a video as it is not static and is like a cube that expands through time) A hypercube also has 24 square faces and there are 24 elders in the book of Revelations who sit around the throne of Jesus and among other things represent the 24 hours, while in this case Jesus is referring to the sun. In the Occult interpretation these elders also each rule 3 of the angels of the Shemhamphorash or $3 \times 24 = 72$, which brings to mind how Jesus was supposedly dead for three days before the resurrection. Here it is important to note and keep in mind for later that as in Revelations and other places, the Merkabah or “chariot” of “god” is synonymous with the throne of the deity and so while there are variations on the throne's symbolism, it all refers to the Merkabah. I should also mention that our divisions of time come from Sumeria and that it is based on astrology, so for example we have 12 hours on the face of our clock in reference to the zodiac. So then this adinkra just so happens to correspond closely to this very important Kabbalistic diagram which I mentioned, the “cube of space” on which the 22 cards of the major arcana can be placed. The 12 edges of the cube are the zodiac, the three dimensions are represented by three elements, while the 6 faces relate to planets, Saturn or time represented by the letter Tau is in the centre as the fourth dimension, but as space and time are intrinsically linked, it is also the fourth element Earth. This is all depicted in the “major arcana” tarot cards, each of which correspond to the 22 Hebrew letters and so Saturn is depicted as “the world” card and is both Earth and time and so while Kabbalists may not have used the same jargon, the cube of space is a hypercube or tesseract.

I also found that the second row of the adinkra was geomantic figures that had a total of five dashes, the third row was signs with six dashes, while the fourth row was signs of seven dashes. This gives a total of 96 dashes, 4 on the top, 20 on the second row, 36 on the third, 28 on the fourth, and 8 on the fifth and bottom. These would all prove to be very important numbers and we can also see that if we ignore the Cancer and Leo signs for a moment, we have a rectangle that is 3 by 4 signs big, that the vertical sums of these signs are 18 each and sum to 72. This is important because the tetragrammaton or four letter name YHVH is also the primary basis of the shemhamphoarash, as the 72 is also traditionally split in to four groups of 18, each corresponding to a letter in YHVH. Since geomancy is to a large degree based on the elements and each letter in YHVH represents an element, as the primary name of “god” we can see that it as the microcosm of everything we will be talking about. The four remaining signs of Leo and Cancer sum to 24 or the elders which rule the 72 and so while it is easy to see how this relates to Revelations, the full importance of all this will be lost on you for the moment, but keep it all in mind for later.

As I explained, the rhombic dodecahedron with 16 variables depicts subatomic particles like quarks and gluons and their symmetrical opposites according to the theory of super symmetry and so the adinkra shows how these particles relate to each other. This adinkra actually unfolds first in to two separate yet linked cubes, then these two cubes are melded together to form one hypercube. The way in which Dr Gate's melded the binary code figures is by adding the binary numbers 1 and 0 together in a way which would create a 1111, (like the sign of Via) thus he put the two “inverted” geomantic figures together. He used these to make new points on a cube adinkra made up of the following 8 groups: Cancer/Cancer, Leo/Leo, Capricorn/Virgo, Taurus/Sagittarius, Cauda Draconis/Aquarius, Caput Draconis/Pisces, Aries/Gemini and Libra/Scorpio. These would be arranged alternating the black and white points, or the “judges” and non judges on any given face. This will be more important later, but for now just know that this made me noticed that the cube of space is also based on the principle of symmetry and opposite polarities and is in many ways very similar to this cubic adinkra which symbolizes string theory. We should also remember a cube has 8 points and could be made in to an octagram and that the Ogdoad is based on various symmetrical dualities of male and female entities called “syzygies.” The Merkabah too has 8 points and 12 edges and as the word itself means “chariot,” if we are to imagine a literal chariot wheel, it more than likely had 8 spokes just as the Buddhist wheel or the star of Ishtar.

Comparing the rhombic dodecahedron adinkra to the cube of space, I could see that the geomantic signs showed many of the same relationships as the zodiac edges of the cube . Given the adinkra with the geomantic symbols was a 2d representation of a 3d object, this was a bit confusing at first, so I made a 3D model of the rhombic dodecahedron, assigned the geomantic symbols to the points and found that the polarities of the signs matched. That is each face of the cube of space has four signs, one on each edge so that each zodiac sign is on two faces and while I could not find a face on the rhombic dodecahedron with all four signs, if there was not three, there was two groups of two. Not only this, the polarities would maintain the same order of signs, so if you were going around the edges of a face on the cube in a clockwise or counterclockwise cycle, it would show the same relationship on the adinkra model. (There were two Cancers and two Leo signs so I could do this somewhat differently for some faces) It took some time to line up the angles correctly as a rhombic dodecahedron can look very different depending on how you view it, but the order of the four signs could definitely be found in the correct symmetries on the 3D model. This would work so that on the 3D model of the adinkra, you could imagine a square connecting the opposite signs or edges on one of the cube of space's faces, and this would fit in relation to the other two opposing signs on the same face. In fact the signs that make up the edges of a face on the cube, generally look like points on a cube when seen from the right angle on the rhombic dodecahedron. (You will have to make your own model to really see what I mean) As the rhombic dodecahedron only has 14 points, this would mean that Taurus and Virgo would be in the centre of the model, so while slightly different, as we will see this actually makes a lot of sense Kabbalistically. When trying to find the patterns of four signs it would be helpful if you had a transparent model of the rhombic dodecahedron, as sometimes you will have to be able to see through it, but it can be helpful to orient it as if Taurus and Virgo are Caput and Cauda Draconis and so in many ways it is as if these symbols are interchangeable. I would have to be a physicist to really understand how geomancy could relate to quantum physics (and most of them can't even understand the adinkras as they relate to physics) and given that Dr. Gates released so little information to the public, I can only try to explain how the geomancy adinkra fits in to Occult cosmology, but I would encourage physicists to learn the Occult as a means of shedding light on this.

Now the cube of space can be related to geomancy in a number of ways, though for some reason no one I can find has gone in to any depth about this, but while the zodiac signs of the cube of space do not fit the order of geomantic figures on the rhombic dodecahedron perfectly, it is tantalizing close in many respects. More than this the other adinkras also match other diagrams and variables which also correspond to the greater cosmology of the Qabalah and the cube of space, so that even if they are not exactly the same, the arrangement of geomantic figures has actually led me to uncover a great deal of new connections and details about all this. If you want to check this for yourself, keep in mind modern Occultists have changed the original designations on the cube of space so that Scorpio and Libra are flipped, all the other zodiac signs are the same, but the adinkra formation fits better with the original cube of space attributions. (You may want to try both ways though.)

Like Alchemists before me, I have found the study of nature can shed light on spiritual matters and the ancient cosmologies and so the differences may only be because the cube of space is a different kind of adinkra, a different formula depicting some other layer of reality. Keep in mind string theory is not complete and there are many formulas yet to be discovered and even most of the formulas we do have, have not been put into adinkras. It would be very interesting to see if there would be any meaning to a physicist if the cube of space was translated in to the adinkra form of representation theory. (Unfortunately few people are qualified to do such things and I am not one of them!) While a closely matching Occult diagram is not enough to convince atheist scientists, it is very convincing evidence that scientists are not nearly as original as they think, that quantum physics is the new Occultism in many ways. It is also evidence that science is in fact following the same fractal memetic patterns and that the adinkras represent different iterations of a deeper fractal formula, one which is repeating itself in self similar forms through different cosmologies. It should also be kept in mind there could be other ways which the adinkras could be unfolded which more clearly relate to the cube of space, but which have not been publicly released, or are beyond my ability to understand. The adinkra which I have shown also had 32 lines or paths divided in to four groups of 8, which connect the 16 variables and so could easily relate to the tree of life, however I have found no real explanation as to their meaning. (there is precious little put out by Dr. Gates on adinkras)

For example one of Dr. Gates's adinkra diagrams with 8 variables resembles a version of the tree of life, in which eight of the ten sephiroth are arranged in an octahedron that is created when you put each of it's 6 points in the centre of a face on the cube of space. (The five Platonic solids are paired off in to dualities, or symmetries so that the number of points on the octahedron is the number of faces on the cube and vice versa. The Icosahedron is paired with the Dodecahedron where as the tetrahedron is it's own dual opposite as with the star tetrahedron, or Merkabah.) So while the lines connecting the variables or the "paths" on the tree are somewhat different on the adinkra, in Qabalah there are many variations on the paths depending on what you are trying to depict. While far less known, in addition to the normal 32 paths, there are also 16 "hidden paths" or "paths of concealed glory" which could potentially correspond to the geomantic figures.

It's too much to explain fully here but there are books in the further reading section which will explain it for those with a basic knowledge of Qabalah and astrology, specifically the work of Kevin Townley. There I have also cited the physics papers I could find that relate to all this, as well as many other things which will help with further research. If you find this chapter to be too confusing I suggest you start with those works by Mr. Townley and Dr. Gates and then try to follow through, it will be well worth the effort. Even those with vast Occult knowledge would do well to read Kevin Townley and Dr. Gates and other works in the further reading section as the cube is the cornerstone of Occultism.

Now just to make this even more interesting, the I Ching divination system was developed from a tortoise shell with nine chambers or squares on it, which inspired a magick square called the "Lo Shu," a square which has the numbers 1-9 on it and corresponds in the west to Saturn, the planet of time. This tortoise was found by Fu Xi (or alternatively Emperor Yu) who is credited with founding Chinese spirituality and creating the I Ching and the first Chinese letters, he was also the first man and ties in to their creation story. In this story Pangu the giant god born of chaos divides the heavens and Earth and eventually dies, but from his body everything in the world is made, including a being called Hua Hsu and from this character was born twins, Fu Xi and the first woman Nü Wa who were like Hindu nagas having serpent bodies below the navel. Nü Wa created the rest of humanity and has some very important myths, myths in which it is said that when some demons had a war, they broke the pillars which hold up the heavens and this caused a flood and the heavens to fall, sometimes the Earth is broken in to 9 pieces. Taking 5 coloured stones relating to the 5 elements, Nü Wa melted them and patched up the heavens, she also took the four legs of the great tortoise and used them to replace the pillars, she also ended the flood and killed a black dragon that had been responsible. Now the I Ching is completely based on the idea of symmetry and also inspired binary code and Gottfried Leibniz, who in turn influenced Hegel with his dialectics, who in turn ironically influenced Karl Marx with his Dialectical materialism. Leibniz learned of the I Ching from a man named Joachim Bouvet, who was a Jesuit charged with converting China. Bouvet and other Jesuits formed a group called "Figurists" who claimed that Fu Xi, Enoch, Zoroaster and Hermes Trismegistus were in fact all the same person and that the I Ching and other traditional Chinese texts contained prophecies and teachings about Christianity!

At any rate, as I would learn from Kevin Townley, if we take this 3 by 3 grid and use it as a face for the cube of space, so that it has 6 identical magick squares of Saturn, we can then map on the 56 minor arcana of the tarot where the lines of the grid intersect. So with all this in mind, when related to the cube of space, the magick squares allow us to understand it's role in the greater Kabbalistic cosmology and it's relationships to the tree of life, but they also help explain Hindu and Taoist cosmologies and so act as a cross cultural symbolic key indicative of the universal fractal. That the cube of space begins with Saturn indicates it relates to time in some way and it's connection to divination systems like tarot and the I Ching only strengthens this interpretation, but as Saturn relates to Binah, this also indicates the beginning of matter, as with an atom, or time/space. Time is created through the calcination of Saturn, the traditional limits and restrictions of causality which the rulers exploit are the cracks in the system, meaning that their interference in the great work is an attempt to keep us subservient to their orthodox authority, swallowed up and bound within the prison of abstract regulations and concentrating on the pedantic.

The most important text which provides the standard seven magick squares is Cornelius Agrippa's "Three Books of Occult Philosophy," a book which is perhaps the most influential in all of western Occultism and here you will also find explanations for geomancy and the Shemhamphorash, gematria, including specific numbers and many other things, he also gives information found in the Lesser Keys, though has no respect for the specific section called "Goetia." We can also find telling aristocratic connections in his introduction, as to Emperor Charles the fifth who helped start the counter-reformation and one Prince Hermannus, Archbishop of Cologne. Cornelius was also the student of the Abbot Trithemius of Sponheim who played a key roll in the development of Solomonian magick and it's 72 demons, like John Dee, Trithemius was a cryptographer and along with elements of the Goetia, all this is laid out in his work "Steganographia." While I have not read them, this work and his Polygraphia seem to deal with the Adamic language as well, or at least have strong implications for it. From what I have read about it, the codes in the Stenographia were used to send messages to the angels, a way of symbolically representing the will, but they were also used as a kind of magickal telephone, perhaps through some kind of telepathy, but also the more conventional means as through physical coded messages between humans. Such codes would be invaluable to conspiracies and even in the Solomonian grimoires, while there is clearly magickal things going on, I have often wondered if the demons were not at times humans. That is, people who were in the cartel and could be contacted for various purposes, with the demonic hierarchies relating to how the conspiracy is structured and how many covert agents each demon possessed aristocrat controlled.

For the Qabbalists out there, as I said, geomancy could relate to the cube of space in a number of ways, which also have varying degrees of similarity to the adinkra diagram, but I have already shown its major connection. Still there is the 16 court cards in the tarot which have already traditionally been associated with geomancy by the golden dawn. For Kevin Townley, on the cube of space the court cards correspond to the 4 line intersections around the number 5 in the centre of four of the faces on the cube and so these could easily be translated to the geomantic figures and shuffled around to more exactly fit the adinkra. As the cube of Saturn kameas is a grid of 3 numbers cubed, it equals 27 smaller cubes and so there is a centre cube within the cube just like modern depictions of a tesseract. This works out so that each corner on this centre cube could be represented by two court cards and so two geomantic figures and so the 16 vertices of a hypercube do traditionally match up well with geomancy. Yet another possibility is given by Townley's designations in that on the macro level, or total cube of space, the outer corners are line intersections and so have a minor arcana tarot card and in fact four of them have 2, totalling 12 cards on 8 points, one for each sign of the zodiac. If we take the extra four signs from the outer 8 points and assign them to the interior cube of the tesseract, we could add the 4 missing geomantic figures (Cancer, Leo and Caput and Cauda Draconis) on the vacant points to complete the tesseract.

We construct this cube of space by understanding something called the “flower of life,” which is a pattern found in sacred geometry and goes back to ancient times and can be found at the Egyptian temple of Abydos, the place where Isis reassembled the 16, or sometimes 14, or sometimes 42 parts of Osiris. (42 is used because there were 42 provinces of “nomes” in Egypt) As Kevin Townley explains in his book on the cube of space, this flower of life pattern is created when you take a circle and then from the centre point add another circle of the same size to make a vesica pisces. Then you add five more circles around the original centre point at equal distances from each other, so that the first circle is surrounded by six others, each like a vesica pisces to the first, which then appears as a six petalled flower called the “seed of life.”

By adding more circles to the outer rim of circles in this same manner, cubes can be created which have faces that are sized perfectly to match the 7 magick squares of the planets. As the tree of life depicts 10 sephiroth and numbers them 1-10, because the 7 kameas each correspond to a square of one of the numbers from 3-9, (IE 9, 16, 25, 36 etc) each kamea traditionally corresponds to the sephirah which has the same number and planet. (So then 3 sephiroth have no kamea and no planet) The flower of life pattern thus creates a fractal pattern of cubes nested within cubes, or something like Russian dolls You will also notice that there are 16 intersections of lines on a single kamea or magick square of Saturn, 25 on the Jupiter kamea etc so that a kamea has the number of intersections of the next largest kamea and in this way they are self similar as well. This flower of life pattern thus unifies the cube of space, the tree of life, the magick squares and many other things from other religions. This flower of life has been explored in depth by New Age philosophies and it is in other places as well, though the New Agers lack any in depth understanding or symbolic context and have appropriated it from Occult traditions, they have gone in to detail about how it relates to many things like the Fibonacci spiral and music and some of them provide a decent introduction to sacred geometry.

I have myself seen this same flower of life pattern in a dream, this was years ago and before I knew what it was and it also seemed to correspond to the shape of the multiverse time lines when I took Salvia. In my dream and from what I could see of the infinite multiverse, the circles which make up the flower of life pattern could also spiral down interweaving with each other in to 3d space at larger and larger scales. The flower of life pattern also fits the time fractal which I saw on ketamine, in that when there are only three interpenetrating circles, just as I saw it creates a triquetra, which is appropriate as 3 is the number of the sephirah “Binah,” or Saturn the planet of time. All this makes me think this flower of life pattern is intimately related to the universal fractal and so universal grammar and the universal language which Occultists have been searching for.

Now the cube of space was first explained in a text called the “Sepher Yetzirah” or “Book of Formation,” a text which is classified as the first Kabbalistic text (though as we will see the text was not created in a vacuum) and explains how “god” created the universe as the cube and how the cube is the structure of all matter, thus we might say the cube of space is the macrocosm, while the cube adinkra is the microcosmic atom. The “Sepher Yetzirah” is the original text on which much of Kabbalah is based and it is actually the turning point from Merkabah mysticism, Kabbalah retains many essential teachings of Merkabah, but it makes it all more complicated and so the Sepher Yetzirah is the earliest in depth Jewish explanation of the cube of space and the tree of life. (It also makes reference to the Shemhamphorash in the end of the first chapter and so it is all connected, the Aryeh Kaplin translation is the standard and provides important notes and commentary.) The relationship between the Merkabah and the cube of space is seen in “Metatron's cube,” a geometric shape which contains all the Platonic solids and shows how they fit together through the flower of life and also how they relate to the number 13. Metatron's cube forms the basis of some New Age philosophies, yet as I said, it is generally divorced from any historic or in depth Occult or Kabbalistic context or much of a practical application. Metatron's cube can be created by drawing overlapping connections between all the centre points of 13 circles, which are themselves arranged like a snowflake or six pointed star, or a flower with 6 petals at 60 degrees from each other. As the cube of space grows or iterates in to larger cubes through the flower of life pattern, in order to draw Metatron's cube on top of it, we need 3X3X3 six petalled flowers, which creates 4x4x4 half circles on the outer edge and so would link it to both the cube of Saturn and Jupiter.

The full importance of all this might be hard to see for those with little Occult knowledge, but basically it shows that the Sepher Yetzirah, a book written some time from the 3rd-6th century tells of a diagram which is incredibly similar to the adinkra diagram created by a cutting edge quantum physicist some 1700 years later. Not only does it look similar, it also comes to the same kinds of conclusions about reality and the structure of matter, that we are in an illusion which is created according to programming and symmetry. But not only is this cube of space a bridge between mysticism and science, as we will see, it is also bridge between a variety of religions in general and so it is definitely something which needs to be explored in more depth than I can do here. However here I will point out the Sepher Yetzirah does have different versions and in some the planets are assigned in opposite order to their various positions on the cube to what modern Occultists generally use. Occultists update their cosmologies as new experimental data comes in and so the reasons for this change are detailed by Kevin Townley and others, but given we are mostly dealing with the zodiacal edges of the cube as through the geomantic adinkra, this is largely irrelevant. That the Moon rather than Saturn is in the centre of the cube is something to keep in mind in some cases, however there is good reasons for this change and I will continue to use Golden Dawn correspondences as it is the common or universal language of modern western Occultists.

To give you an idea how this applies to the universal fractal, I will show how the cube relates to various religions, but I will start with a bit about the book of Revelations, which is itself a mish mash of various types of Pagan and Qabbalistic symbolism. The book of Revelations is relevant in this context in that it contains a lot of Qabbalistic symbolism, it is in fact thoroughly confusing to all people who first read it. While to some degree this is true of all the gospels, in particular it is likely Revelations started out as a Gnostic text, or at least it undoubtedly had a very different view of Christianity than modern people, or Christians after Paul. However, given it's writing style and that it almost didn't make in to the final cut of the bible, it is safe to say it is the most Gnostic of texts within it. However Revelations is also explicitly against the Nicolaitan Gnostics and so it is really hard to say what might have been added later. Remember there were many different kinds of "Gnostic" groups, some of whom didn't like each other much and so Revelations represents one of the more Jewish and ascetic forms of Gnosticism, however as I will show, it is also explicitly against "Christianity" as we know it now. (Some say it was written by the Gnostic Cerinthus) It is so Qabbalistic and mixed up that we must interpret it from two completely contradictory or "symmetrical" perspectives, a Gnostic perspective which is about a personal revelation or final enlightenment, but also the literalist Christian perspective which is the script for the international bankers to take over the world. Since Revelations was canonized it obviously has meaning from a "Christian" perspective and I will look at this in regards to how it applies to the theocratic religion, but I will focus more on its mystical and revolutionary aspects.

We do know that Revelations was considered sacred by many Gnostics and as I would find, there is plenty of references to it in their other texts, some modern researchers have even argued that mushrooms inspired the text, (which would mean Gnostic inspiration) and while this is certainly a strong possibility, an understanding of Qabbalism does explain most of the weird symbolism. For example while the order is different, the 22 chapters of Revelations correspond pretty closely to the major arcana of the tarot and there has even been a deck made around this symbolism and a book to explain it. (Tarot of the Revelation) Given that to Christians it is a prophecy and given the nature of time and the tablets of destiny, it is very much non linear, just as the tarot is itself non linear in many ways. What's even better is that despite the mainstream historian's belief that the tarot deck only dates to the fifteenth century, more than one occultist researcher has shown that many images from the major arcana go back to Sumeria! Pretty well all the symbols in the tarot are far older than the medieval times and were put on various things, it is just that no old tarot decks in the complete form were compiled or at least none survive today. This should not be surprising however, as if you didn't want to get burned alive you had to hide these things, not to mention draw each copy by hand on materials which generally do not last that long and so we should not be surprised by a lack of physical evidence. Scholars today, like Romans before them seem to think that if there is no documentation, it does not exist, which is pretty silly given that people today do not write down every detail about everything, but this is even sillier because the writings we do have of these ancient Occult traditions, do say that they were secret and primarily oral. According to Paul Foster Case, one of the most important Occultists of the 20th century and an expert on the tarot, and specifically how the tarot relates to the cube of space, the tarot was created by wise people from all over the world in Morocco. (See his book "The Tarot") These wise people created the tarot so that they could preserve their vanishing wisdom after the destruction of the library of Alexandria and also communicate with each other, even though they spoke many different languages. In this way the tarot represents a concise form of all kinds of knowledge, but it is also a form of a universal language and as the same cards can be used to describe all times, we could even say that like the cube, it is a map of the time fractal. While mainstream historians disagree with Case, and I see evidence of a more complicated origin that I will go in to later, there probably is some element of truth in this, in that the tarot does fit as a universal language of the Occult, even in to modern times.

This ties in with Revelations nicely, as from a Gnostic perspective, it is not really much of a prophecy at all, but a highly detailed allegory for becoming enlightened and reconciling duality. While it opens saying it will show "things which must shortly come to pass" we could just as easily interpret this as the book depicting things which "god" symbolically wants to come to pass, or "must" if we are to become enlightened and transcend the cube. The world is the crucible of awareness and after being through the processes it is transmuted, as balance integrates all opposites, once the great work is completed and universal consciousness understood, unity is achieved and the goddess is set free from the coils of restriction to experience the fulfilment of freedom in infinity. These are Occult themes in Revelations and even if it is in part a prophecy, taken literally, it was obviously a failure as Jesus coming back has not occurred and even if it did happen tomorrow, John missed the mark by almost two millennia, which is surely not "shortly." As Revelations shares the same symbolism as the tarot, it too is a kind of map of time and so it's message can be interpreted in all ages as all times are self similar in the fractal. Any time anyone becomes enlightened it is "the end of time" for them, by which I mean they reach the centre of the fractal and yet at the same time, the fractal remains and can be zoomed on indefinitely, so in a way it is still a prophecy, as each individual soul will in the future experience the same route through the fractal. (Even if it has different symbolism or experiences for each soul)

Revelations has been identified by scholars as an example of Merkabah literature and so while it is still Jewish in some ways, I do think it has some very mystical Gnostic meaning behind it. It does have some language which I don't care for, but it is quite clearly a call for revolution against the Roman empire and as I will try to show, a call to fight the banking theocracies in general, so that at this layer of interpretation, it is not intended as a prophecy, but must be interpreted in terms of the time it was written. Unfortunately it was picked up by the theocracy because they saw in a literal interpretation, the potential to justify all kinds of wars and the opportunity to use it to demonize all heretics as the servants of the "antichrist." (A term that doesn't even come up in the book) It has been used ever since by whatever tyrant wants to associate their wars with the path to Christian utopia, but as I said, Revelations almost didn't make it in to the bible and so was on rather uncertain grounds for the early Christians. Eventually it would become a major justification for the institution of the Christian theocracy and the motivation for many armies to fight wars, all of which were supposed to bring about the return of Christ. As among the oldest books in the New Testament it is still important in understanding how Christianity corrupted Gnosticism and indeed this is another central theme of the text itself. Ironically Revelations would itself be co-opted and like the rest of the New Testament, is also likely be edited to suit the theocratic ambitions of Christianity. Yet at the same time since we can see that it is so highly symbolic and that it is part of the Merkabah genre, that it's politics reflect Gnostic interests more than first century theocrats, it is also probably among the least edited. At the end of the text there is even a warning and a curse laid upon any who alter it, and while Christians interpret this as saying we must adhere to dogma exactly, this is actually done because altering it would destroy the Qabbalistic hermeneutic which depends on exact numbers. This of course makes interpretation complicated and many have tried, but in light of things I have already written, I think we can glean some insight in to it as both a revolutionary tractate, and a mystical map of the time fractal.

The tarot is also relevant in this respect in that the “minor arcana,” (the cards most like the modern playing cards with 4 additional face cards) the bulk of the cards refer to the angels of the Shemhamphorash, which as I said before are encoded in Exodus and relate to the Goetia. If all this wasn't enough there is a text called “The Mystic Rose from the Garden of the King” in which much Sufi symbolism is related to the tarot and this could indicate that it was Sufis who compiled the tarot, though ultimately I think they just organized the images and preserved the wisdom and symbols of the Gnostics and other mystics. (On this theory of Tarot origins see “The Mystic Tower of the Tarot” by John D. Blakeley) In one section “The Mystic Tower” is explained as having seven stories, each with three chambers with an eighth single chamber on top representing Saturn as the world card. Each chamber represents one of the 22 major arcana of the Tarot, with this tower being one form or paradigm iteration of the universal fractal, as explained and elaborated through other K/Qabbalistic paradigms. As there are seven kameas or magick squares which relate to the planets, if we were to stack them on top of each other we could make a step pyramid, or ziggurat tower of Babel, which as we will see, is intimately related to the symbolism of the kamea cubes of space. As I take you down the rabbit hole, keep all this in mind as I hope to show how all these things relate and how the map works and how it represents the structure of time and space, but also ultimately number and word in the universal fractal. This will of course be more meaningful for Occultists who are already familiar with these symbols, but for those who are new to it, it will provide a context that will be invaluable for further learning.

In Revelations the book of life plays an important role, but also seven seals which have been interpreted as keeping the book of life closed, but this is a clear reference to the seven planets and so could be equated with the tablets of destiny, or the “tablets of creation” which are seven in number. As the tablets of destiny or book of life, the Torah was originally the work of Qabbalist rebels and so it too must be interpreted from both the mystical and the theocratic perspective, though since it's words have been changed by the adding of vowels, this is not so easy to do. However the 22 letters that are used in the Torah can be analyzed using Kabbalistic methods in excruciating detail and as I will try to show, we can see the occult war of Anarchists and black magicians is to take off these seven seals on the Torah. That the Gnostics do this to gain enlightenment, while the black magicians seek power, but both are potentially conferred by same the tablets of destiny. None of the works are “good” or “evil” anymore than any other piece of art, it is how you interpret it that matters, but the first step is recognizing that it is art, even if you believe it is actually divinely inspired in some way and so remember this when I seem to give two contrary interpretations or speak of divergent Gnostic ideas.

So, as Revelations would be used by later theocrats as a script to take over the world, by the time of Justinian it had very different meanings from what the original Gnostic rebels believed centuries before. Revelations tells of a “book of life” in which the names of the “saved” are written and so from a theocratic perspective, these names are like the civilians or “persons” in the corporation or “body of Christ” church that was instituted by Justinian to enslave everyone. So, in the Christian perspective, anyone who is not part of the corporation of Christ is going to eternal hellfire when they conquer the world in the name of their Lord. In the mystical sense this has a completely different meaning, one layer of which would be that each “name” is like a formula for a brain circuit, that these names are organized by the Logos (Jesus) in to a coherent whole that is without contradiction. The general meaning of Revelations as a whole to the mystic would be that when the Logos takes hold of the mind, it will deal with all your personal demons and create an enlightened mind.

We can also interpret the book of life to mean the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the old testament which was supposedly done by 70 Jewish scholars, but this number is itself numerological in that it is 7×10 or 7 and 10 are probably the two most important numbers in Kabbalah, a reference again to the planets and tablets of creation and the 10 sephiroth, or 10 commandments. In this way the two tablets of the 10 commandments are linked to the 7 tablets of creation or destiny in Sumerian religion, that is through the fractal elaboration of Torah as whole. 70 is the amount of years the Jews spent in captivity in Babylon and is also the same as the gematria value for "Dionysus," as in the Jews stopped admitting they worship Dionysus after the captivity. 70 is also the Hebrew word for "howling," which is what the Greek word "Goetia" means when it is translated, this is further amplified as 70 is the number corresponding the letter "Ayin," which in Tarot is "the devil" card. In another account it was 72 scholars which made the Septuagint, the meaning of which is obvious enough, this group was thought to be comprised of 6 members of each of the 12 tribes of Israel, dividing them just as the Shemhamphorash and Goetia is divided. (Manly Hall and others have said that when a text says 70, it is really just 72 rounded and as we will see there is a lot of reason to think this.)

For those not versed in "literal Kabbalah" this gematria must sound off the wall, but besides the reference to the tablets of destiny, it is perfectly kosher, however as a mythological motif, there is no doubt the tablets of Moses are nearly identical to the Sumerian concept of the mes. Now given the discrepancy between the two tablets of the covenant and 7 tablets of creation this may all seem like a bit of a stretch on my part, but in a fragment found in the scrolls called "The Vision of Jacob" we read, "Then I had a vision at night. An angel of God came down from heaven with seven tablets in his hand. ... So I took the tablets and read. There were written all my sufferings, troubles and everything that would happen to me [during the 147] years of my life..." We should not underestimate the importance of this quote as Jacob would later be named Israel, he is the father of 12 children who found the 12 tribes of Israel and so he is symbolic of all Jewish people. While they are unnamed in the text, as we will see these seven tablets are identical in description to the book or "books of life" which are essentially the "fate" of all humanity and so metaphorically synonymous with the Torah as the programming of the universe and the tablets of destiny which also contain the fate of each human. (The relationship between fate and divination is obvious enough)

As we will see later on, this discrepancy between the two and seven tablets can further be reconciled through the "covenant" of Noah and "god" which was composed of seven commandments called "Noahide laws." (AKA Noachide laws) These laws apply to all his descendents, and so the Jews have laws for gentiles, though generally only followers of the Abrahamic religions pay attention to them. However they are most important for Jewish converts, as the racism in that religion has been interpreted by some Jews at least, as forbidding gentiles from practising all the laws as if they are truly "chosen people." This covenant is also symbolized by the rainbow, which "god" uses as a sign of his promise that he will never drown us again, but is instead a promise that he will destroy us with fire. Some Jews have openly and explicitly made it a point to enforce these Noahide laws and put them on the gentile population and we can see the laws have been endorsed by Ronnie Reagan and Congress and other politicians as being the historical basis of all civilized law. (Just as the mes and tablets of destiny are in actuality the basis for modern law) This then is a fine example of how many are trying their best to set up a Judeo-Christian theocracy, as for example we can see these laws forbid blasphemy and idolatry and so every other kind of religion, but we can also see one commandment is to set up courts to enforce the Noahide laws.

The number seven is so important to the book of Revelations that some scholars have noticed it creates a kind of hermeneutic spiral, not at all unlike the universal fractal which draws a person in closer and closer in to the true revelation, which is that we are divine and that essentially our "world" will end when we realize this. (scriptures were also scrolls rolled up in a spiral) This interpretation of Revelations as a personal awakening to enlightenment, or even a global enlightenment is the only interpretation that makes any sense if it was written by someone with any spiritual awareness. The number 7 then represents many things, but it is basically always relatable to the 7 planets and so the 7 kameas, which in turn are related to the cube of space, the tower of Babel and the 7 seals of the book of life. As I will attempt to show then, all of these are intimately related as symbolic maps for interpreting the Torah as the book of life and according to Kabbalists, the programming of the universe. More than this we will see how these symbolic maps relate to the practices of the Jewish high priests in regards to the ark of Noah, the ark of the covenant, the urim and thummim, their breastplate, the holy of holies, the temple of Solomon and especially the cornerstone on which it is based. From a more Gnostic perspective we will see how these things relate to the New Jerusalem, as especially in the book of Revelations and how they can be used ritually to bring about the union of spirit and matter through enlightenment.

All these things may have been used separately, but were intimately related just as their symbolism is found and referenced throughout the old testament, which was done in order to elaborate them. As I found, some of the primary keys to interpreting all this lie in the two central signs of the adinkra, Taurus and Virgo and the Hebrew letters which represent them. If I had not translated the adinkra in to Occult symbolism I would not be able to interpret much of what I have found in this chapter and so as we will see, the Torah is essentially the programming and manual of all these symbols and objects. While it is all encoded Kabbalistically, the old testament represents the whole primordial magickal tradition around these ideas, a tradition with roots in prehistoric times. In this way we could also say that the seven kameas are the “seven seals” of the Torah, which in it's decoded form is the “book of life” and that in some ways the kameas are actually like seven fractal iterations, which are also each like formulas unto themselves. These kameas generate the Torah as their fractal iterations, represented by the words and the gematria meaning, which can be changed around by manipulating the vowels and spaces. The seven kameas are themselves different iterations of a deeper underlying universal fractal formula which is most likely YHVH, so that here we would be solving for Heh, which would first be expressed as Beth, the first letter of Genesis. As no one knows how to pronounce YHVH, we can see the formula is not complete, yet according to Revelations by decoding the seven seals the extra letters needed can be gained to create what has been called the “lost word” of Masonry and the true name of “God” which is the universal fractal formula. (In Rosicrucian circles, the book of life is known as “the book of the world” or “Liber M” “the one book” “Liber Domini” written in the green language of nature, it is the “unwritten Qabalah” which is reality itself, though it was also dug up by Christian Rosenkreutz in their mythology.) As we will see not only does each Hebrew letter have a numerical value, but each letter has a name spelled with more letters and so it's name has a numerical value as well. Because of this each letter used to spell a letter's name can also have it's name spelled out in full and so the sum of this gematria of letters can also have a numerical value. What is more, this process of spelling the names of the letters used to spell these names could go on indefinitely and so for Kabbalists this process was thought of as basically being the universal pattern underlying all reality, especially in regards to important words like YHVH.

In addition to the regular kameas, I have found that by applying numerological reduction to the squares, I was able to come up with many more important gematria numbers and that this shed a lot of light as to their true meaning, and the underlying patterns of the number fractals. To reduce a number numerologically we simply add the digits together until we come to a number from 1-9, so that 78 would be 15, which is then reduced to 6. So then when looking at a “regular kamea” any time you see a number that is larger than 9 it can be reduced and so all the squares besides Saturn have numbers to be reduced and this will then produce different totals for the squares and different sums for each row. “Coincidentally” computers use numerological reduction to get what is called the “digital root,” they do this to check for errors which could thus relate it to the same type of programming Dr. Gates found. Reducing the numbers using numerological methods produces many strange but obviously non random patterns and numbers which greatly add to much of what I will say. For example in the centre of the Venus kamea is found 777.

What does a 4D cube look like when drawn as a 2d image? An octagram within an octagram, and so I cannot help but think that my portal outside of time to the multiverse was more successful than I could have imagined. It can also make a unicursal hexagram from a different angle, though students of sacred geometry will also find the cuboctohedron's relationship to the rhombic dodecahedron to be quite interesting in this regard as well. (In physics, these shapes are related to “wave spin theory.” Where as the hypercube can also be found in “Lattice Quantum Field theory”) I do not quite understand it, but it seems by making myself self similar I have gained access through anamnesis to the programming of the universe, that by opening the Dysnomian portal in time space I have received more detailed instructions about how it all fits together. Chesed is a sephira associated with Jupiter and memory and so through time (the Saturn cube) in to the Jupiter cube, we become conscious of the omniscience of the void, (ain soph) as it becomes increasingly materialized and differentiated through anamnesis in its descent down the tree of life. (I explained this process as I understand it in Chapter 9) This cube is essentially the prison of the Gnostics, though through Occult techniques when we “know” we are divine no prison can hold us, for the divine fears nothing and so we can transcend it or use it to work magick, or to map out and plot the coordinates of the multiverse through the fractal iteration of magick cubes. So just as the cube of space is the start of Kabbalah, as a 4d cube it is actually much older than the Sepher Yetzirah and as an octagram goes back to the ogdoad of Egypt and all the brain tantra deities I listed in chapter 19. This is because the brain is self similar with the universe or astronomy and as I have explained, both were studied by various religions seeking to understand the universal fractal. (keep this symbolism of chapter 19 in mind when the numbers 8 or 9 come up as the ogdoad is a crucial key to all of this)

The following may sound confusing to those who are new to gematria and Qabbalah or Kabbalah, but in order to explain it fully I would have to write multiple new books. What is most important to understand is that when numbers reoccur in mythology it is no accident, every detail is painstakingly planned in these things. So as astrology is the basis of most religious symbolism, many of the numbers deal with astrology/astronomy and so provide the keys for interpretation. While I will explain many things, at the same time you have to learn to DIY at some point and so I will not provide all the evidence that I could, and I would encourage you to check in to these matters more, not only so that you can better understand what I am getting at, but so that you can wire your brain through actually practising literal Qabbalah yourself. With the keys given in this chapter, even those myths which you think you know will often be seen in a new light, really you will have to reread myths and religious texts over, and so there is far too much for me to go in to here. While I will provide a largely new context for many religions, there is still much to discover and reinterpret and so while I can provide a general scheme of things, working out the contradicting details in all world religions will take many more years of research.

However as a map of the time fractal, Revelations is non linear and so too must be much of my explanation, as the numbers produced by the squares are all there at once I cannot simply list them all and give you the meanings and have it make much sense. So then I have tried my best to organize it all in to an explanation, but I ask your patience if I seem to jump around a lot to make my points, I must draw on many various sources which are interwoven and which are themselves non linear. I will provide enough evidence so that you can see why I say what I do, then after reading the chapter you can look up the meanings of the gematria and the texts I cite for yourself and gain a fuller understanding of what I mean, then you may want to reread this chapter as there are still many connections to be made between the disparate facts. Most of the relevant gematria interpretations can be found in the gematria dictionaries in the 3 Volumes of “Sepher Sapphires,” “Godwin's Cabalistic Encyclopedia” and Crowley's “777” but for the most part you should be able to follow through with most of my explanation. (Sepher Sapphires is by far the most comprehensive, however I must also warn the reader that looking online or in some books you can find the kameas, but as in Sepher Sapphires there can be typos or Occult “blinds” and so it is best to use the ones I have provided.) Another thing to keep in mind for those who wish to pursue a Kabbalistic interpretation further, that in Kabbalah any number multiplied by 10 is connected and we might say that it is the same meaning at a higher scale of the fractal. (I have already pointed out that $7 \times 10 = 70$ but we will see the number 45 comes up a lot and so those interested should look 450) While I could go in to some detail about how the symbolism of Revelations can be interpreted from the perspective of neuroplasticity, it would require a lot of prefacing and explanation of the symbolism and so for the most part I will leave that out, but keep that layer of interpretation in mind if you ever get around to studying the text yourself. Gematria and “literal Kabbalah” may sound fishy with all this numerology and certainly some people can get carried away, but it is absolutely standard in Kabbalah and even non Kabbalistic Jews recognize that the numbers created by the words are important and provide additional insight. (Jews are often not nearly as literalistic as Christians in their interpretations) So then keep in mind with the following interpretations, that even if my ideas are not ancient, that because they follow the ancient rules of “literal Kabbalah” and match words by their gematria, the interpretations are still completely valid according to the rules of the Jews themselves.

If you are to attempt decoding these kinds of Occult symbols to find the universal fractal, the numbers I will primarily be working with are the sum of the row of a kamea, the total kamea sum, the sum of the four corner numbers, the number or 4 numbers in the centre of each square, as well as the sum of the numbers on the perimeter of the square. (All these are traditionally important in the Occult, but also pay attention to the factors of numbers) You should also check the number of numbers on a kamea, but also the magick cube for each planet, that is the number of numbers on each magick square multiplied by six, for the six faces of a cube. Each planetary magick cube can also be seen as having been made of smaller blocks of cubes, so as we saw, the cube of Saturn has 27 smaller cubes and this is the cube of this sephirah's number, so that 27 is the cube of 3 or Binah which corresponds to Saturn. (27 blocks have 6 faces each and so these cube numbers can also be multiplied by 6) 27 is the number of Hebrew letters as some letters pull double duty with their “final forms” as in the “Aiq Bekar” 3X3 grid used for making kamea sigils and so these cubed numbers are important too. (See Kevin Townley's book for more on this) I didn't go in to all of this for lack of space and out of mercy for the layman reader, but these numbers will provide many more important words that fit the gematria of the kameas.

Now the Jewish high priests would skry in the holy of holies using a breastplate with 12 gems on it corresponding to the 12 tribes and the zodiac, each one was capable of giving two answers totalling 24. Also on this breastplate the “42 letter name of god” would be written and it represents the seven planets as it is broken up in to 7 groups of 6 letters which are said to be derived from the first 42 letters of Genesis. Some Kabbalists believe that each gem had 6 letters written from the name of the tribe it represented, thus totalling 72 letters and from various descriptions it seems somehow the 42 letters would cause the gems to light up or darken giving the two possible answers per gem. The Zohar often talks of the 72 names and 42 letter name together and they both represent formulas for understanding aspects of the divine oneness of “god” and we can surmise that together it describes how the planets move through the zodiac. This breastplate was also used in conjunction with what are called the “urim and thummim” and some scholars including those who wrote the Jewish encyclopedia have noted that the urim and thummim are much like the tablets of destiny which were also worn on the breast and that they are likely related to some Chaldean form of ritual divination objects. The Jewish encyclopedia also says that these divination devices ceased to be used after the destruction of Solomon's temple and so given it is doubtful that “Solomon” ever existed, it could be a reference to some practice learned in the Babylonian captivity, or undoubtedly a Pagan practice picked up by the Jews before the creation of Judaism. Some scholars believe the words come from the Babylonian “urtu” and “tamitu,” meaning “oracle” and “command,” which makes sense as they were used to get instructions from “god” for the theocracy. A priest would answer the questions after being filled with the holy spirit or Shekinah (Asherah) and then give the answer in a yes or no fashion, but only if the question was worded appropriately. Without going in to detail Manly P Hall says that some scholars theorize they were dice and were used with the breastplate and likewise the Jewish encyclopedia agrees this is a possibility. Not only this, but following this lead I found a few scholars have linked magick squares to the tablets of destiny and even the I Ching! Albert Terrien de Lacouperie and Paul Carus are two examples, but apart from this Taoism shows a very similar motif to the tablets of destiny as their “Jade Books of Heaven.” (See also the book, “Taoist Meditation” by Isabelle Robinet which goes in to some detail about the heavenly origins of the “Ching” or traditional scriptures and texts of Taoism.) No one knows what the urim and thummim were exactly, only that they were used with the breastplate, but they are generally believed to be stones giving a yes/no answer suggesting binary code, however as we will see the dice theory makes the most sense.

We can see a link to this in the biblical practice of “casting lots” in order to make decisions, (apparently mentioned in the old testament 70 times) which in at least some instances was definitely the throwing of some variant of dice, if not most of the time. This is most famously depicted in the Book of Esther in which Haman uses the dice or “pur” to decide when to kill the Jews. These dice then are the source of the name of the Jewish holiday Purim, but also Yom Kippur or HaKippurim as the old testament calls it, a holiday in which is the only day of the year the high priest is allowed in the holy of holies, it is also traditionally thought to be the day Moses received the second set of commandments and is also thought to be the day when Yahweh seals the fate he makes for a person in the book of life for the following year.

Dice are found throughout the old world and were commonly used in divination, we can find them in Egyptian tombs and in the Indus valley, we can also see that Tibetan Buddhists use them for divination, but the oldest found were in southern Iran. There is an Egyptian myth of Thoth in which he adds 5 days to the calendar to make 365, betting his own moonlight in a game of dice he wins 1/72nd of a day from the other 360 days and so we have 365 days. The Norse give the honour of the invention of dice to Odin and we know that gambling with dice was quite popular in that culture as in many others.

The Hindu calendar system of “Yugas” are also based on astrology and a dice game of India and what is more, dice play a central role in starting off the events depicted in the Hindu epic, the Mahabharata. (A Kalpa is a similar unit of time, and in various metaphors Buddha describes a Maha-Kalpa as a cube which in some cases is 16X16X16 miles long.) I should also mention that various magick squares were used for Tantric magick and in Hindu philosophy and so it is no coincidence that these numbers come up again and again. In another myth which explains how consciousness goes in to matter, Shiva and Parvati play a game of dice which is refereed by Shiva's bull Nandi. The word “divine” comes from “divus” and is related to the word “deus” which is the root of Zeus, but this comes from the Indo-European “dewos” like the Sanskrit “deva” which is a term for a god, where as “devana” is the place where you throw the dice and eventually became a synonym for a die, while the verb used to say you play dice is “divyati” so that you use dice, for “divination” to get your destiny, which in Sanskrit is “daiva.” (In Zoroastrian traditions a demon is called daeva or div)

Pausanias says that Hermes was depicted as a cube because they both represent the truth and also that at Phares in Achaia the god was worshipped with 30 cubes of marble. Hermes is also said to have invented dice, these sometimes also had letters on them and were originally made from the knuckle bones of sheep called astragalus and so are linked to the original form of the game “Jacks.” (though sometimes the dice were tetrahedrons this could relate to the Merkabah) Palamedes is sometimes given credit for the invention of knuckle bones during the Trojan war, he was then said to have given an offering to the goddess of Fortune, a goddess of chance and gambling, he is also given credit for some of the letters in the Greek alphabet and as we will continue to see, the origins of letters and the cube are intimately related. Geomancy and dice are sometimes used together even in to modern times, though in Kabbalah, geomancy is attributed to Enoch, who was a prophet in the days before the flood and according to Genesis avoided death by being “translated” in to heaven, at which time other sources say he became the angel Metatron, as in Metatron's cube. Further more, while geomancy probably originated in the more southern parts Africa, it was undoubtedly used and developed by the Hermetic tradition as in Alexandria and so it is not a stretch that it could be connected to some kind of mystical dice cosmology. Hermes used these dice for divination and was in some cases said to have gotten them from Apollo, who as I have pointed out comes up again and again. What is more, the Platonic solids have often been called the “dice of the gods” and so much of this could potentially be used by Pythagoras as well. Pythagoras was said to have taught, "The number 8, or the octad, is the first cube, that is to say, squared in all senses, as a die, proceeding from it's base two, an even number; so is man four-square, or perfect."

The ancient Greeks would roll the dice with the help of a device called a "pyrgos" which means "tower" and it would act like a cup as in the game Yahtzee. Each roll combination had a name, the best roll being called Aphrodite and we can see that any two opposite sides of dice add up to 7, which is a number associated with Saturn and Venus or Netzach as the seventh sephirah. Saturn is 7 because in a geocentric view, it is the highest visible heaven, or "seventh heaven," but also if you add the numbers from 1-6 you get 21, which is the major arcana tarot card of Saturn, the world card. In the Occult then 21 would be called the "extension" or "mystic number" of 6, so that whenever you take the sum of all the preceding numbers from 1 to any given number or "H" you are finding it's "mystic number." Here I will give a hand to add to my previous explanation, $H(1+H)/2$ gives us a mystic number as on a magick square, which is then expressed as the 6 faces of one cubic stone. So if we have two dice as with the urim and thummim, there are 12 faces and if we add the numbers 1-12 we get 78, which is the number of cards in a tarot deck, where as if we look at a magick square, the sum of the square is the mystic number of the highest number on that square. (I.E. 45 is the mystic number of 9 and so the sum of the Saturn kamea) If you numerologically reduce any mystic number it will always come down to a 1, 3, 6, or 9 and in fact this occurs in a repeating sequence of nine numbers 1-3-6-1-6-3-1-9-9. Kevin Townley goes so far as to say that 3, 6, and 9 are almost like the only real numbers and as we will see, they are certainly very important keys to the structure of base 10 number systems. So while Einstein thought otherwise, these gods like Hermes do "play dice" and the universe is the dice!

What's more, historians know that dice were an important inspiration for playing cards and the tarot, and also that the roulette wheel originally had 36 divisions, they are however often confused because they assume gambling was a secular past time and forget about goddess's like Fortuna and so separate it from divination. Roulette as the "wheel of fortune" or "Rota Fortunae" is a tarot card and is either depicted with 6 or 8 spokes and was used for divination once again and so cards, dice, and roulette all originally had magickal associations and were linked together. Hermes is sometimes said to have 3 dice and this was used for divination, each would have 6 faces on it giving 216 combinations, while two dice would have 36 possible combinations. However, unless the dice were painted different colours, for divination it doesn't matter which particular die gives a certain number and so these combinations would produce a lot of duplicate rolls, so if we subtract all the duplicate rolls for two dice, we would have 21 unique rolls and for three dice we get 56 unique rolls. As the fool card is number 0, just like a joker it stands apart from the deck and so there are 21 other major arcana cards, while 56 is the number of minor arcana cards. In the modern deck/book the "Pythagorean Tarot" by John Opsopaus these unique rolls have been assigned a tarot card each, so that you can use the dice for tarot divination and in this book we learn that the ancients consulted a stone pillar, one which had the names of these rolls and their corresponding gods etc. (Keep this stone pillar in mind)

Raymond Lull practised geomancy by sticking the 16 figures on a wheel and spinning it, he also based his system of logic after a system of wheels within wheels and this is almost like the first computer in certain ways. So here we have an important clue to the significance of geomancy in regards to this field of research and we can see that it ties in to Lull's theories of the universal language. Lull called his logic wheels the "Ars Magna" which he claimed he got after fasting and praying on a mountain, but Muslims had something like it before called a "Zairja," which the machine itself claimed actually goes back to Enoch.

There is also a wheel of Hekate called a "strophalos" used to do divinations and evoke her in which the numbers 3 and 6 are prominent in the design, though unfortunately much of the explanation is lost. There are other connections between Apollo, Hermes and Hekate as well, for example Apollo had a title Hekatos and the two may go back further than him and Artemis. We can also see a connection to the "iunx" and or "rhombos" (as in Rhombic Dodecahedron) sometimes called a “bullroarer” which was a “wheel” or sometimes a top (like the toy) which made the shape of a rhombus as it spun with a thread through it, also producing a magickal tone or note. There were a few versions of the iunx, but as with the rhombos it was often used for love magick and divination and so was associated with Aphrodite, but also Cybele and Dionysus. (Remember also that Hermes, Hekate and Dionysus were each involved in the Eleusinian mysteries)

In Asia the Chinese believed the world was on the back of a tortoise shell, or for the Hindus that the heavens were the top of a tortoise shell or that Mt Meru the axis mundi/spine was resting on the shell of a turtle named Kurma. (Like the Lo Shu it is associated with Saturn in Indian astrology) The “Sri Yantra” is among the most important symbols of Hinduism and there is a 3D version of it (AKA Sri Chakra) depicting the 7 chakras stacked up, sometimes on top of a tortoise. The word “chakra” actually means “wheel” and in 2d form the Sri Yantra is made of 9 triangles which when numbered from top to bottom, mirror each other in the same way as the numbers of the Saturn kamea. It creates hexagrams within hexagrams or when the kameas are stacked “wheels within wheels” and so can be likened to the Merkabah or Lull's system of wheels, but you should look up this symbol if you don't know it already. While each magick square has sigils associated with it that provide a “Spirit” and “Intelligence” we can get more patterns by drawing a line going in order through the numbers from 1 to the largest number. All the while we must be careful to bring the line to the centre of each number as it goes through, and if we do that we will see variations of the Sri Yantra in the odd numbered squares of Saturn, Mars, Venus and the Moon. (Evens are interesting too, especially Jupiter, search online for images of “magic square numerology”) Now as I explained before, Metatron's cube needs the flower of life to get to the size of the Jupiter cube and so notice the ring of 8 petals for the perimeter of the Saturn square, then the 16 petals for Jupiter.

Sri Yantra

The goddess Fortuna comes up a lot in this symbolism and was known as Tyche in Greece and was the daughter of Aphrodite and Hermes and so is the sister of Hermaphrodite, she is also often depicted with a caduceus and cornucopia or horn of plenty and was also depicted on coins and associated with the constellation Virgo, due to her fickle nature, many poets also called her a "harlot." As fate or Fortune, she also shares symbolism with the goddess Nemesis, both goddesses traditionally depicted with a wheel, but can more generally be related to the "great mother." That is some have argued Nemesis is an aspect of Aphrodite and she is also sometimes identified as the Mother of Helen of Troy and is also a form of Adrasteia, who in turn is sometimes identified with Cybele. This would make sense as Nemesis is served by the "furies" or winged demon women who choose the dead and help to get retribution, in other Venus like goddess's we get the Morrigan, or the Valkyries with Freya, or the Lilitu demons of Lilith/Ishtar. Venus like goddess's were generally deities of both sex and death and Aphrodite did originally have a warlike side, though this could have been less obvious as Nemesis came in part to symbolize this side of her. All these goddess's are linked in many ways as the great mother and the goddess of law and order, generally they are goddess's of both natural law and that of the theocracy, yet like the rest of the iconography, it often predates civilization as the symbolism of the wheel can be seen as the night sky, or the flat Earth spinning.

All of the magick squares are involved as different representations of the same thing, but Saturn is the key, all the rest are self similar with it, it unites the 8 and the 9 with its kamea, as there are 8 lines and 9 numbers. ($9 \times 8 = 72$) Also in Qabalah, as the first two sephiroth have no planets, all three top sephiroth are represented by Saturn, so that in this way it is in the middle pillar, along with the sephiroth of the sun and moon, whose kameas are 6×6 and 9×9 . This works so that they are the squares representing multiples of three and are themselves a trinity, so that as Saturn is in the top sephirah Kether, the middle pillar is made up of squares of 3, 6, 9 and 10 which is reduced to 1. (The top three sephiroth alone have also been associated with the trinity of Christianity)

The connections between geomancy and the I CHING has been researched by other Occultists, but it has for the most part illuded in depth connections, from what I have found, magick squares are the answer. Thinking about this I noticed that if we plug the sephiroth in to the kamea of Saturn in reverse order, so that 1=Malkuth and 9=Chockmah, we get some relevant symmetries in which the kameas fit together. (it could go the other way, but this is the right side up) Jupiter is across from Mercury and 16 as the number of numbers on the Jupiter kamea fits four times in to the 64 numbers of Mercury. (evens) Likewise Saturn is across from the moon and 9 goes in to 81 nine times (odds) and 4 times in to the 36 of the Sun which is in the centre, Venus and Mars are opposites but are both prime numbers, 5 and 7, yet 25 nearly fits twice in to 49 and as we will see Venus is associated with the number 50 anyways. Not only this, but these polarities match that of the zodiac so that in the course of a year, the signs of Mercury (Gemini and Virgo) are opposite the signs of Jupiter, (Sagittarius and Pisces) the signs of mars and Venus are opposites and so on with all the ruling planets of the whole zodiac. This configuration also matches the tree of life, except for Saturn and Chockmah, which have to go in to Kether to be opposite of the sun and moon and as I explained, all three of these sephiroth have Saturn as their planet, especially when they are evoked ritually using a hexagram. These kinds of polarities of two numbers totalling 10 around the central 5 in the Lo Shu, or square of Saturn are how the 8 trigrams of the Ba Gua are created (as discovered by Fu Xi) and so it is from this kind of numerological thinking that the I Ching and binary were developed. I also found that if I put the number of a sephirah where I put each corresponding planet on the Saturn kamea (so 10 Malkuth where there is a one, 9 for Yesod where there is a 2 on the kamea) I got a perfect magick square in which each row adds to 18 and so $18 \times 3 = 54$. While 9 numbers \times 6 faces = 54 numbers on a Saturn cube, $54 \times 6 = 324$ as the sum of 6 faces, with 324 being the gematria of Metatron!

As I would increasingly find, the relationships as depicted on what I will call the "sephiroth Saturn kamea" were representative of many relationships to do with the cube of space in general and also match some of the themes in the numerology of the squares. In this way keep in mind that Venus and Mars are linked, Jupiter and Mercury are linked and Saturn, the Sun and Moon are all linked together, though you should not limit your interpretations to this. I realized from this that the numbers associated with the kamea cubes could be used to create a self similar map of various Occult cosmologies as the cube of space expands from the Saturn cube, down all the way to the Moon cube. This works so that by plugging in various Occult variables in to the kamea cubes, each cube has the right numbers associated with it to depict various cosmologies or groups of entities, as well as Kabbalistic formulas like the 42 letter name. There are multiple ways in which each cube can depict cosmologies so that for the Saturn cube we have 9×6 numbers which equals 54 and this could be divided by the 42 letter name representing the planets, plus another traditional 12 letter name that represents the zodiac. The 6 letters from the 42 representing Saturn would correspond to centre number of each face, (5) while two letters from the zodiac name would go on the top and bottom numbers of the centre row, with each of these corresponding to the two signs ruled by the planet traditionally associated with each face of the cube. The remaining 6 numbers on each face would be filled by the six letters that represent each planet on it's corresponding face. However since Saturn has no face on the cube and the sun and moon only have one zodiac sign each, one solution would be for the moon face to include Capricorn, where as the sun face would have Aquarius. (Alternatively $54 = 36$ decans + 12 letter name + the 6 individual Hebrew letters which represent the planets of the 6 faces)

So as on the "sephiroth Saturn kamea" the sun, moon and Saturn are all related, by looking at the gematria of the Saturn square we can see that since the sum $1-9=45$, this makes 45 the mystic number of the ninth "path" which is the sephirah Yesod and the moon. 45 is also the gematria of "Adam" a word which means "humanity" in general and is a key symbol of the universal mind and is associated with Tiphereth and so the Sun and as we will see, he or some other version of him like Fu Xi is central to a lot of important Qabbalistic myths regarding the cube.

The priests of Delphi were said to have come from Crete and were called Labryaden after the labrys or ritual axes they used to sacrifice bulls and also the labyrinth of Crete with it's Minotaur, but what concerns us here is that the labyrinth is often depicted as having 36 turns to the centre, 36 turns back out for the solar Theseus and so a total of 72. Jesus also appoints 72 followers as heralds in Luke 10:1 but then 72 is important in many cases, however in astrology it should be understood the 360 degrees divide by ten in to the 36 angels known as "decans," (sometimes spelled "deacons") which each rule over two angels to make the 72 Shemhamphorash. These 36 angels and their two corresponding Shemhamphorash angels are represented in the tarot in the minor arcana, in the four suits with the cards that have the numbers 2-10. (The aces are separate and represent the elements and the letters YHVV) 36 is the number of numbers in the magick square of the sun and the sum of the numbers within, or the "mystic number" of 36 is 666. This should be familiar as the number of the beast in Revelations, but it is also symbolic of Christ, as through the gematria of the "name Jesus," but it is really symbolic of all sun gods like Apollo and as the bible says, Solomon received 666 talents of gold as tribute. This may sound wrong but remember that good and evil are one just as the Goetia and Shemhamphorash mirror each other, for the "strength" of divinity is its dynamism and I have found this knowledge by being dynamic. We should also note that it is said that 1/3 of angels rebelled in heaven leaving .666 repeating on the side of "god." If we were to cube the number 6 as the sun cube, or multiply 36 numbers by 6 faces, we get 216 which is the same as the number of possible rolls for 3 dice, or as I explained before, $3 \times 72 = 216$ and the total number of letters for the names of the 72 Shemhamphorash angels which combine to represents the entire zodiac, or 6 angels per sign and the full name of "god."

The fractal implications of this are more literal then many might think, for example through some trick of nature, the physical planet Saturn also has a hexagon in the pole with a dot in the centre, not unlike meson octet! This is because if you take a hexagon with a dot in the centre and add a line to it from every other angle you get a cube. The Jewish microcosm of this cube was the holy of holies in the temple of Solomon and is much like the meson octet in that it was a cubic room overlaid with gold and measured 20 cubits on each side (1 Kings 6:20) and the ark was placed in the centre of the room. Or as Freemasons say, the ark itself was a double cube, just as the Torah tells us the altar of incense was a double cube and was placed just before the veiled entrance to the holy of holies. Inside the ark was the two tablets on which Moses received the commandments and which were 6 by 6 by 3 hand breaths each to make 108 units or together it was 6 by 6 by 6 together to make 216 and we see that sometimes the holy of holies is represented by the letters DBIR which is 216 in gematria. 108 just so happens to be the most important number in Hinduism and we can see that there are 108 beads on a bracelet for doing mantras and 108 beads on a Catholic rosary for doing hail Marys. As the urim and thummim are two cubes or dice, they would be like miniature versions of the double cube altar, while the cube created by the 2 tablets of the 10 commandments would be a miniature version of the cubical holy of holies room. This would create a kind of fractal pattern of 2 dice, then 1 cube for the 10 commandments, then the larger 2 cubes of the altar, then the 1 larger cubical holy of holies.

Now the number 24 relates to the elders of revelations, but as each elder traditionally has three Shemhamphorash angels who have 3 letters each, this means each elder has 9 letters, thus 8 elders would have 72 letters and so each elder represents one 24th of the zodiac which is itself 15 degrees, with 15 being the sum of a row on a Saturn square. So, if we made a cube of the sun kamea, each face has 36 numbers and so could fit the letters of 4 elders, this would divide each face in to quarters so that $4 \times 6 =$ all 24 elders, or the 72 angels as represented by their 216 letters. (Just as we can fit 4 Saturn squares on each Sun square) In some versions of the Testament of Solomon there is a group of 36 demons which can mirror the 36 angels of the decans and so these could form the top and bottom to a Sun kamea cube, while the remaining four sides are taken up by the 72 standard demons and the 72 angels of the Shemhamphorash. This would mean 108 demons and 108 angels mirrored in binary dualist opposition, each taking three faces of the sun cube or alternatively split down the middle just like the tablets of Moses. 6 is the first “perfect number” of Pythagoras and Tiphereth or the sun is the 6th sephirah and is found in the centre of the tree of life, creating a heliocentric system and so this cube of the sun is in many ways the most important cube. In fact the geometric shape known as the cube is associated with Tiphereth by Crowley and the hexagram generally and so as we will see, it is symbolic of the New Jerusalem which houses the Merkabah or throne of Jesus in the book of Revelations.

Likewise the kamea cube of the moon could represent the 216 letter name of “god” in a variety of ways, there are multiple possible combinations here and all should be considered, but perhaps the best fit would be to have the 6 “permutations” of the 3 letters of each angel of the Shemhamphorash on each face. This would total 432 combinations and leave 54 numbers which could be spread out so that there are 9 numbers on each face just like Saturn square in the centre of the Moon kamea and so could represent the 42 letter name of god and the 12 letter name of god in the same way as before. 54 is found in the Torah as it is traditionally broken up in to 54 portions for weekly readings and so this is one year or one cycle of the zodiac and two weeks and so this number is important in itself. Here then we see one potential way the pattern can repeat at larger scales, but there are others, most of which I will leave for you to find yourself. The Sepher Yetzirah says that “22 letters are the foundation” and foundation is the translation of “Yesod” the ninth sephirah corresponding to the moon, so the kamea cube of Yesod is $81 \times 6 = 486$ and $486 / 22 = 22.09090909090909$. (By chance it also so happens that if you make a list of numbers going up in increments of 90, then taking each of these numbers from 90-720 and dividing by 81 will provide you with the numbers 1.1111 to 8.8888....)

Now in the lesser keys of Solomon there is a section which explains a grouping of 360 daemons or genii and so an alternative cosmology to the Moon cube could be these 360+72 angels+36 decan angels + 12 letter name + the 6 Hebrew letters from the 42 for each planet according to the faces of the cube. This would mean on the moon kamea the centre number is the planet, while on the horizontal row on either side would be two letters for the zodiac (divided as on the Saturn square) then on this same row would be three decans on either side. On the numbers directly above and below the decans would be the 12 Shemhamphorash angels they rule, then in the remaining numbers would be the 60 daemon/angels which represent the degrees of the two corresponding zodiac signs. So then here we can see fractal scaling in that we get more definition in to the zodiac, starting with it's most basic representation in Saturn with the 12 letters, then in the Sun cube we have the decans and Shemhamphorash or divisions of 5 degrees, then in the moon cube we zoom in further and see each degree as well.

On the tree of life the letters of YHVH correspond to four sephiroth, Chockmah, Binah, Tiphareth and Malkuth respectively so that Yod is for Chokmah etc. The total Gematria of YHVH is 26, which is the sum of the 8 corners+12 edges+6 faces on the cube of space or an octohedron. 26 is the number of dimensions in bosonic string theory, while superstring theory has 10, which is the number of sephiroth on the tree of life. As the sum of the numbers 1-4=10 and form Pythagoras's tetractys, in Qabalah we see that YHVH can create a tetractys by stacking the letters in four floors, Y+YH+YHV+YHVH= 10+15+21+26=72 and so as 15 is the sum of any row on the Saturn square, these are all important numbers and "the name of YHVH is a strong tower; the righteous run to it and are protected." (Proverbs 18:10)

Now I can explain a little bit for those who do not know much Qabalah why Taurus and Virgo are so appropriate as the geomantic signs in the centre of the cube. They are in fact the microcosm of the cube and they are both Earth signs and so the represent matter, which is iteself traditionally symbolized by the square, or the cube and this is especially fitting as the adinkra is describing the structure of atoms. So having both these cubic signs inside the Rhombic Dodecahedron makes it appear like the meson octet, or the double cube altar of incense, thus it is self similar with the cube fractal. Now the square is also the symbol of Chesed, the fourth sephirah on the tree of life, who's kamea is Jupiter and has 16 numbers, which is the number of geomantic symbols. Jupiter is also the 21st path, or the letter Kaph, which has a value of 20 and is the wheel of fortune tarot card, while "Chesed" in gematria is 72, but what is most important of all is that the gem of Jupiter is sapphire, thus linking it to the scethiya tablets of Moses. So, on the tree of life, two of the paths from Chesed are the 20th corresponding to the Hermit card and Virgo, which is the 9th card and the other path is the 16th and this corresponds to the Hierophant card, which is the 5th card and this is attributed to Taurus. While El is associated with Saturn in the Chaldean religion, in Kabbalah it is the "god name" used for Chesed, so we have Saturn within the square of Chesed or the 6 squares which make a cube of Jupiter and so this seems to refer to Metatron's cube, which as I explained is made with the flower of life using numbers to do with Saturn and Jupiter. El in gematria is 31, which is also the path number of Shin, the letter which corresponds to the 20th tarot card "Judgement," a card which actually depicts a scene from Revelations and so then this 20 thus links El and Judgement to the Hermit card and the letter Kaph and also the dimensions of the holy of holies. Virgo and Taurus also correspond to the two masculine letters of the tetragrammaton, Yod and Vav the Y and V of YHVH who's gematria values are 10 and 6 respectively which together equals 16. We will also remember the sum of the numbers 1-6 is 21 or Saturn and so 21 is the mystic number of Vav, while Yod's value of 10 links it to Malkuth the sephirah of Earth. This link between Virgo and Earth is further reinforced by the sum of the numbers 1-10=55 which is the gematria of "Kalah" meaning "bride" a title of Malkuth. These two letters are arguably the most important letters in the Hebrew alphabet and as such have a lot of possible interepretations which could explain their position in the centre of the adinkra. For example Yod is the smallest letter and all other letters are actually composed of Yods and so given it and Vav's importance, I will limit my own interpretations to some of the most relevant to the tarot, shemhamphorash and the cube.

Chokmah corresponds to Yod and has the god name Yah which has a gematria value of 15, the number of the sum of each row on the Saturn kamea, a kamea with nine numbers corresponding to the Hermit as the 9th card, with Saturn as I said representing all three of the top sephiroth and so Chokmah. IAO is an entity with mysterious origins, though many say he is an Egyptian deity and the origin of Yah or Yahoo, he has been both a Gnostic archon, but also can be respected in both Gnosticism and Paganism and so this shows one more way in which the names of the Jewish god are derived from Pagan deities.

The 15th path corresponds to the letter Heh or the H in YHVH, this letter has a value of 5 and 15 is the mystic number of 5, but 15 is also the gematria of Hod, the name of the 8th sephirah associated with Mercury, the planet that rules Virgo. The name of Heh is spelled HH and so has a value of 10 or Yod or Malkuth and as such Malkuth corresponds to the second Heh when YHVH is put on the tree of life. Virgo is the virgin Isis or in the Gnostic tradition Sophia, who is trapped in the cube or matter and in Qabalah, Malkuth, the 10th sephirah is also called "Betulah" the name given to Virgo, or the virgin the same as Yod. Virgo to the Sumerians was associated with Ishtar, as even though she was associated with sacred prostitution, as with other forms of the banking religion, she was also thought of as a virgin. If this isn't enough Virgo also corresponds to Persephone and especially with her older name "Kore" which translates as "virgin," and it was in this sign, or perhaps right after it and the fall equinox that the Eleusinian mysteries were celebrated and it's rituals performed by priests called "Hierophants," signifying the goddess going in to the "Earth" or cube, a shape that was also specifically associated with Hades. For the Greeks, each Platonic solid had a god and an element, the a dodehedron has 12 faces and was associated with Zeus, ether or spirit and the zodiac, just as the adinkra is. This time of year also marks the decline of the sun, which as I have shown relates to an important magick square whose sum is 666, but also Leo which is ruled by the sun takes up key positions on the rhombic dodehedron. Leo is depicted on the eighth tarot card called "strength" being tamed by a maiden who it has been argued represents Virgo and this declining daylight. "Strength" is what "Geburah" the sephirah of Mars translates to, which in gematria has the value of 216, but more than this, Leo or lion in gematria is also 216 and likewise Virgo has a value of 64, which is 8^2 and so the kamea of Mercury which also rules that sign. I say likewise because 64 is the gematria of "Deen," the highest name of Geburah, the sephirah which is associated with tesseracts in general by Crowley in his book 777.

The number of "cheth," the letter for the "chariot" or Merkabah card of the tarot is 8 and the wheels have 8 or 6 spokes, plus an axle or pole in the centre with two ends to it equalling 8 or 10. The Chariot card in the Waite deck is especially symbolic of this tradition and we can see on it a cubical chariot, ridden by a man with an 8 pointed star on his crown, with a square on his chest and the sigils of the geomantic figures covering his legs. What is more in his book on the tarot, Waite says the riders shoulder pads are supposed to be the urim and thummin and so it is all tied together nicely on this card. The Chariot card is ruled by the sign of cancer and you will remember on the adinkra the prominent positions of the leo and cancer signs as the two axes of the diagram. Jesus is referred to as the "lion of Judah" at the second coming, while Virgo is also associated with the virgin Mary and to top it off the numerical value of Tet, the letter for the strength card is nine. ("In Virgo on a square milk-stone The Eighth Reveals the Ninth") In Crowley's tarot the strength card is called "Lust" and depicts the whore of Babylon riding the beast and as Ishtar is often depicted with lions, this is quite appropriate in many ways and so we see the woman on the card depicts both aspects, the whore and virgin. (The name "Tet" also means "serpent" linking it to the ancient kundalini tantra)

The hierophant is also known as the pope card, who is supposed to be god's representative on Earth, as the 5th card it corresponds to Geburah, but the letter Vav has a value 6 which is Tiphareth the sephirah of the sun, which also in itself corresponds to the Vav of the tetragrammaton that is on the tree of life. Vav is the 16th path whose mystic number is 136, which is sum of the numbers of the magick square of Jupiter or Chesed and it is the path connecting Chesed to Chockmah. (The path of Yod connects Chesed and Tiphareth) The number of Heh is 5 which as I said is the number of the hierophant card, so that through this correspondence the card is linked to the first Heh in the tetragrammaton corresponding to Binah, while the second Heh is in Malkuth. 5 is also important in that it is the middle number in 1-9, thus uniting the upper and the lower and it is also the union of the odd and even as 2+3 and if we divide 360 by 5 we get 72, while the angles of a pentagon are 108 degrees. (such as on a dodehedron) In the Thoth deck of Crowley the Hierophant stands in a hexagram or Merkabah holding a scepter with 3 rings "based upon deep indigo, the colour of Saturn," he is also surrounded by the four cherubs AKA kerubs of the fixed signs, just as in the wheel of fortune card and the world card of so many decks, the card which as I said corresponds to Saturn and is in the centre of the cube of space. Vav, or Vau means “nail” as like the hierophant it unites the heavens and the Earth, it is first written in the Torah as the 22nd letter, in the sixth word in the verse of “god” creating the heavens and the Earth. Kabbalists have pointed out that Vav is also in the exact middle of the Torah in Leviticus 11:42, thus uniting its two halves which makes sense if the Torah itself relates to the cube as the tablets of Moses/destiny. Depicted below Crowley's hierophant is the goddess Venus as Taurus, a sign which is ruled by Venus, which corresponds to the third card the Empress, whose path unites Chockmah and Binah. In all accounts the hierophant is associated with lessons, law and tradition, probably the three most important key words of Saturn. Where as if one half of the cube is for Taurus and the other for Virgo, we have Venus and Mercury ruling these and so hermaphrodite, or the original Adam.

Now I mentioned how in order to match the cube with the tree of life we must view it as having an octahedron inside the cube, with each of its six points touching a face of the cube. In the book “The Cube of Space” by Kevin Townley the octahedron has a central axis that has Taurus on it so that it already was supposed to be in the centre of the cube. The Z axis in the cube belongs to the letter Aleph, which means Ox or bull and corresponds to air and the number 1, when spelled out the name has a gematria of 111, which is the sum of a row on the sun kamea. (among other things 111 is also the sum of a tetractys of El, or Allah and also the Aramaic spelling of Peter) So as Yod is the letter which forms all the others, we can see that aleph is drawn combining two Yods and a Vav, so that in this way both letters are found on this axis. (Yod+Yod+Vav=10+10+6=26 or Aleph) The octahedron has 8 faces and has Mercury or the sephirah of Hod at the top, the planet that rules Virgo, while the moon is at the bottom so that it sits on top of malkuth the Earth, which is depicted as a cube, but as the ninth card, the hermit relates to the ninth sephiroth Yesod, the sphere of the moon, thus in these ways it too corresponds to the central axis, which is the middle pillar. In the book by Townley, Virgo has a special place on the octahedron as it's decans have no double on it, where as all the other signs besides Libra must share a spot. This works so that Virgo forms a triangle as one of the octahedron's faces that is pointing up like the symbol of fire, this triangle thus connects Virgo to Mercury on the top suggesting a special role. The yod in YHVH corresponds to element of fire which is the most ethereal element, where as Virgo is the 8, 9 and 10 of pentacles in the minor arcana corresponding to the Earth elements and so the densest cards and the last of all, so that it is the “first and the last.” In the Sepher Yetzirah, Yod is described as “response and the union of opposites,” where as in tarot, the hierophant card is described as uniting the microcosm and the macrocosm and so with these two we get a singularity of the one thing. As the octahedron has six points, the sephiroth Chokmah and Binah are inside the octahedron, so that we can see them as relating to Virgo and Taurus respectively, though as I have shown, each corresponds rather well to both sephiroth and the two are deeply interwoven.

At any rate I think I have made it pretty clear that Taurus and Virgo fit quite well Qabbalistically as the centre geomantic symbols and that they represent the microcosm within the cubic fractal of magick squares. They also represent again and again the numbers 3, 6, and 9 which are the three most important numbers relating to the cube. If we spell the name of the letter Yod it's gematria is 20, where as if we spell Vav it's gematria is 12, these two numbers correspond to the Judgement and Hanged Man cards, which represent the elements fire and water and are also the cards of the X and Y axis of the cube. Yod has the 24th path for the elders, but 24 also has a mystic number of 300, which is the value of Shin the 21st letter of the Hebrew Alphabet. When “Shin” is spelled out it has a gematria of 360, (360 has a lot of relevant gematria such as a variant spelling of messiah) it's card is the Judgement card of fire and so this would explain the fire triangle of Yod, it represents the S or fifth element in YHSVH AKA Yeheshuah AKA Jesus. If we spell out all the letters for YHVH=Yod Heh Vav Heh and add them together we get a gematria of 52, which is the sum of the four corners on the Mars kamea and the gematria of Yahoel, another name for Metatron. (He has many names, 72 of which are grouped like the shemhamphorash) 52 is also the number of weeks in a year and of court cards plus the minor arcana cards minus the aces, it is also the number of letters in some versions of the sanskrit alphabet. As I briefly explained, the aces represent kether, or the tetragrammaton by itself, from which the other cards flow out, or we could also say 52 is the normal deck of cards and the minor arcana minus the princess's who represent malkuth. I should also mention that Chesed 72 and Geburah 216 both feed in to and are balanced in the form of Tiphereth the sun and so are linked to the strength card which is ruled by Leo and so the sun. So then as Yod is linked to the strength card, both it and Vav are linked to the Sun and we can see this in the simplest way to write 216 in Hebrew, "RYV" which is the letters Resh=Sun=200+Yod or 10 + Vav or 6 =216. 216 is also $21 \times 10 = 210 + 6$ and 210 as the mystic number of 20 has a lot of relevant gematria including the word "kamea," hence the holy of holies has dimensions of 20, or dimensions of the kameas as in the cube of space.

As for the Caput and Cauda Draconis, well as I said they seem to be interchangeable with Taurus and Virgo, we might say they are the "entrance" and "exit," the "upper" and "lower" of the hypercube and the scale of the fractal from one cube to the next. In fact these descriptions are key words in their geomantic designations respectively. They are the scale itself and how the one becomes two, that as the flower of life pattern shows all the cubes nested within each other according to their kameas, the lunar nodes Caput and Cauda run throughout them. Cauda Draconis is already traditionally associated with Virgo, while Caput is more associated with Sagittarius, it does correspond to Venus and it's "inner element" is Earth, both of which correspond to Taurus, but also in other adinkras, Taurus and Sagittarius are merged together and so Taurus is quite compatible with Caput. (more on this below) Caput and Cauda Draconis are both assigned to Malkuth on the tree of life and so as Taurus and Virgo also correspond to Malkuth as I described above, there is that last link as well.

Now that we have some idea of the cube's symbolism, getting back to Revelations we can see that special mention is made of sorcerers, which is translated from "pharmakeús" which is derived from "pharmakeia," though in this case it probably refers to those who sell the Opium/Soma mix, especially if it ever contained scopolamine. (See Rev 9:21, 18:23, 21:8, 22:15) That is while those in the Abrahamic traditions basically considered all Pagans to be sorcerers no matter what plants they might use, the term can also be translated as "poisoners" and so in the Greek Pagan or entheogenic Gnostic traditions, given that "pharmakeia" was looked down upon even by some psychedelic communities, it suggests something much more dangerous than marijuana or magick mushrooms, the obvious choice being the often used plants with scopolamine. Plato also distinguishes between two types of pharmakeia, one in which a person is harmed physically and poisoned, the other is of a mental nature (Starting at Laws 11.932e) and is a means of controlling a person in a way which I believe is much the same as the way a zombie slave is made, or what Colombian gangsters do with "devil's breath." (As I explained in chapter 13, devil's breath is scopolamine and can put a person in a trance where they will do whatever they are told, where as zombies are controlled with datura) That the writer of Revelations was a Gnostic gives this charge of sorcery more context when we can see Jews used such plants at times as in Genesis Chapter 30, where Rachel whores out her husband Jacob to Leah for some Mandrake, a plant sacred to Ishtar as an aphrodisiac. (This is the origin of some of the founders of the 12 tribes) As many have connected "manna" in the bible to Amanita muscaria, it is interesting that at one point in Revelations, John brings up manna, as if to distinguish his own entheogen of choice from those in the banking cult. As I go on in my explanations, keep in mind that a pot of manna was kept in the ark of the covenant, but also remember the following from Rev 2:17, "Whoever has ears, let them hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who is victorious, I will give some of the hidden manna. I will also give that person a white stone with a new name written on it, known only to the one who receives it."

There is quite a bit of political rhetoric in Revelations which can be understood in light of all that I have been talking about in regards to the banking cult and the origins of Christianity. The Nicolaitans John mentions are not unlike the Carpocratians and so "John" is definitely one of the more ascetic and Jewish types of Gnostic, the kind who didn't appreciate the libertine Gnostics making them look bad. (We might compare this to Anarchists who do not like being associated with street punk Anarchists) The term “Jezebel” is brought up in the book of Revelations, which the well respected scholar Elaine Pagels says represents the Pauline Christians, that is the Christians who follow Paul of Tarsus, or basically all Christians today! (In other places she also points out the hierarchy of the Catholic church is modelled on the Roman army) As Jezebel is a term for prostitutes I would interpret this to mean the author of Revelations is calling out the Pauline Christians as agents of the banking cult sent to co-opt the revolution, which he believed would be occurring shortly, hence the return of Christ. John also goes off about fake Jews and a “synagogue of Satan” which pretends to be the true congregation, and this would be a reference to the Pauline Christians who were created by the corrupted Herodian style of Babylonian Judaism, (Typified by the Sadducees and Pharisees) but also how the true followers of Christ will be persecuted and imprisoned and are the poor.

These themes are further elaborated by the whore of Babylon, who rides the beast with seven heads and 10 horns, a beast which has been interpreted by many as signifying the Roman empire. In revelations 17:9-10 we learn the heads are seven hills which refer to Rome, but also seven kings with the 10 horns which has been interpreted as the Roman empire's 10 governors or provinces. These seven hills are highly significant in that they are the centre of imperial cult, the site of the temple mint of Juno Moneta, the temple treasury of Saturn and the temple of the Vestal virgins, they are also associated with Romulus and Remus and the founding of the city and the location of the Flavian palace, not far from where the Vatican is today. This beast is a version of the dragon Lotan, a beast who comes from the Ugaritic texts of Canaanite mythology and is the enemy of Baal Hadad, “Lotan” is also the word from which we get the word Leviathan in the old testament. There are many 7 headed dragons in mythology and as we will see, a 7 headed naga as well and so for an explanation see the gematria of 496, (in Sepher Sapphires) which is Malkuth and Leviathan and the mystic number of 31 and so El. Leviathan is eventually defeated, but as Revelations is a Gnostic allegory, here the beast is a symbol of the state system, (just as with Hobbes) being ridden by the banks as the Whore, though there are surely other layers to this as well. In the Secret Book of John and On the Origin of the World there is an archon named Yao, often associated with Yah-weh and he represents “lordship” and has a serpents face with seven heads. Yao is the same as IAO and the gematria dictionary Sepher Sapphires links it directly to YHV or Yaho which has a gematria of 21 and in the Sepher Yetzirah, these are the 3 letters used by “god” to seal the 6 directions of the cube of space. Yod Heh Vav spelled in full as the letter's names is 42 and as the sum of the numbers from 3-9 is 42, the six directions relate to the kameas or squares of 3-9, but also the beast is given 42 months to speak blasphemies in Rev 13:5. As with all Indo European religions (and many others) the symbols are the same, the message is generally the opposite depending on if you have a mystical or literalist point of view. We can also see the demon Astaroth in the Goetia rides a similar beast and so the “whore of Babylon” is primarily a form of Astarte as a symbol of the banking cult.

Revelations 17:10 says “And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.” Now after the death of Nero there was a lot of turmoil in the empire as civil wars spread and there was the “year of the four emperors” of which Vespasian was the last and the only to reign for much of a length. (Hence the very real danger of the Gnostic rebellion) So if we do not count these three men who barely ruled and did not have much support as legitimate, then from Augustus Caesar to Nero is five emperors, (Julius Caesar was never really emperor but “dictator for life” and that did not last long) with Vespasian being the sixth, and Titus being the one that continues a short space since he only ruled just over two years. In this case, Domitian the brother of Titus who ruled after him would be the “eighth” head mentioned later, but this part is even more cryptic. We also get a clue as to the beast referring to Titus and the emperors in that in Rev 13:3 one of the heads seems to have a fatal wound but is healed, just as Titus was wounded in the Jewish/Gnostic rebellions but recovered.

Many have interpreted this beast in all kinds of ways, and famously it is associated with the number 666, but then less commonly known is that there are actually two beasts in Revelations and that it is not entirely clear which one is referred to as 666. As 666 is generally agreed to refer to Greek gematria, there are many possibilities and interpretations and as I have shown and will show, not all of them are negative. As the second beast acts as a false prophet for the first, causing people to worship the image of the first, he is said to have horns like a lamb (in reference to Jesus or what the author considers to be true Jews or Gnostics) yet speaks like a dragon and so this is a depiction of someone who is undermining the Gnostic rebellion and twisting their teachings. So in light of Titus joining forces with King Herod, to me Herod is the most likely candidate for the second beast and as the writer of the gospel of Mark, fits the description quite well. If 666 belongs to the second beast, others have pointed out that when the Jewish King Herod is spelled in Hebrew, we get Hôrôdôs, which translates in to numbers as H6r6d6s. However we should not fall in to the mistake of thinking that 666 only signifies one thing and it may even refer to both beasts, as for example 666 can mean in Greek gematria "Lateinos" as in Romans in general Revelations repeatedly speaks of a man tricking people into worshipping him as god and the difference between the image and the reality, referring to Titus and Nero and the co-opting of "Christianity." The "mark of the beast" without which no one can buy or sell things, could also be translated as "stamped money" or "coin of the beast" which had the image of the Emperor on it, thus reinforcing the idea of revolt against the monetary system. With 666 more generally referring to the sun and so gold, "Nero" is another possibility as it adds to 666, this then could refer to his coins as still in use at the time of Titus, so that it is likely 666, as with the beast of 7 heads refers to the Roman state/empire quite generally.

Ishtar in addition to being associated with the seven tablets of creation and the 8 pointed star also had a 16 pointed star, she also had a girdle that was the zodiac and she was associated Taurus specifically, as it is the "bull of heaven" which is at her command in the Epic of Gilgamesh. In the Greek tradition these stars can be compared to the 8 and 16 pointed "Sun of Vergina" or sun of the virgin in reference to Athena. Especially after the rise of the Macedonians this was a commonly used symbol, though along with Athena it was also associated with Apollo and also Nemesis the goddess of Justice at her temple in Thamnos. 666 is the gematria of Istahar, the Hebrew name for Venus and it is also the number of "The Holy Ark" and so we can see that Taurus and Virgo as the inner signs of the adinkra are the two views of women in the banking cult, whore and virgin. (The ark is 45 inches long 27 inches wide and 27 inches high linking it to the Saturn kamea cube)

We learn in Revelations chapter 2:26-28 that those who keep the plan of Jesus (Not Titus) will come to rule the Earth, and Jesus will give them the "morning star" which is Venus. At the end of Revelations, Jesus also calls himself the morning star, a strange appellation given it is applied to Lucifer, though Jesus also calls himself the light bearer which is in Latin Lucifer. This is of course very confusing and quite embarrassing to Christians who make up all kinds of excuses to interpret it, but is not really surprising given that light is important in many religions as a symbol of truth and mystical awareness. While I did say "Lucifer" doesn't show up in Gnostic texts, it is a Latin word and so only appears in the Roman Christian versions and not in the original Gnostic Greek versions of Revelations and so it is really Christians who are Luciferians. (Especially in the Ceremonial magick of the later Christian aristocrats) As we will see this is very important symbolism and so within the context of a bank revolt, or Gnostics who hate the monetary system, it could mean that once Jesus gives them the morning star, (himself) the revolution would change the economic system so that it was essentially Anarchist or communal as Gnostics practised.

Many Protestants do interpret the Catholic church as the whore of Babylon and it is, but since their Jesus in most of the new testament is Titus, protestants are deeply led astray as well. Christians today take Revelations as prophecy, but as I explained it refers more to the events of the time, though it has often been used as a spell to conquer the world for Christianity, using the black magick of the four horseman. In Revelations chapters 17-18 we come to understand the mystery of the whore, for the whore or banks ride on a beast which is the Roman Empire, at least until “Jesus” comes in and kicks everyone's ass and takes over. Revelations speaks of a woman clothed in the sun, standing on the moon and crowned with 12 stars fighting with a dragon, which Catholics interpret to mean Mary, who gives birth to Jesus, but this image is a common depiction of Sophia, who has the head of a sun and stands on the moon. The whore is the parallel of the virgin and so we see that Revelations is really about the reconciliation of opposites and the redemption of the mysteries, taking back that which has been corrupted by the institutions. We can see this in the Gnostic text “Thunder Perfect mind,” in which Sophia is both the whore and the virgin and we can see it further in that Mary is both the name of the virgin, and also the prostitute Mary Magdalene, thus linking them Kabbalistically. Furthermore the image of a woman crowned with stars is the queen of heaven, the goddess Ishtar used by the banking cults and is depicted as the Empress, or Venus goddess in the Tarot with this crown and a shield. So while other goddess's like Isis are found to be mixed with her, she is the same woman depicted in other cards like the Priestess, Strength, Justice, the Star and of course the World card as well, so that as a syncretic goddess of the Tarot, she is the goddess of fate or fortune. So then as Gnostics are not truly dualists, Revelations is reconciling the images of the whore and virgin, as it tells us, “Here is Wisdom. (Sophia) Let him that hath understanding (Binah in Hebrew means understanding) count the number of the beast.” So we see that the full interpretation of the beast and whore can only be understood in reference to Gnostic gematria, the whore or “Binah” rides the beast 666 or square of the Sun as in the primary 3,6,9 pattern. The number 9 comes in to this as the sephirah Yesod, meaning “foundation” which is a word that comes up in key places in reference to this, in that it is in verses referring to the beast, the book of life and the foundation of the world. (for example Rev 13:8 and Rev 17:8)
