In more modern times, Isaac Newton was obsessed with finding codes in the bible and especially Revelations as he was attempting to calculate the date of the apocalypse. Now Newton happened to be in England serving as the head of the mint as it was really getting going in it's empire and in fact England was openly intended by these Babylonian theocrats to be the “new Jerusalem” with streets “paved with gold” spoken of in Revelations. (appropriating William Blake's poem in the process) This new Jerusalem can from the banker theocrat point of view be interpreted as a reference to the autonomous financial district of London, called the “city of London” which is a small part of Greater London that has its own special laws, police force and Egyptian obelisk, just as Washington DC does, just as Vatican city does. The London Obelisk has text relating to the Hyksos king Thutmose III and refers to him as the “bull of victory” and was made in “On” AKA Heliopolis, it also has a twin in central park New York. Originally the founding fathers may have intended Washington DC as their own anti Catholic version of the New Jerusalem, but today along with London and the Vatican, we have the respective world headquarters of military, finance and religion in the New World Order.

From a Gnostic and modern Occult perspective, the new Jerusalem is the Merkabah or a golden cube of the sun, it is a city with walls that are 72 yards thick, (216 feet or 144 cubits) and while there are different units of measurements, it was a cube that is 7200000 feet or 2400000 yards high and long. Revelations 21:16 gives 12000 stadia as the measurement used and as the book was written in Greek, we should use the Greek stadia which equals 600 feet according to Herodotus. The book of Revelations says it uses the measurements of heaven and we also see that a cubit is about the length of an arm and this is no accident, as our arms grow according to the golden ratio, just as a “foot” length and so along with the yard, these are two more very old units of measurement. The temple of Solomon is designed to match the human body, the holy of holies is the head and the bible says the human body is the “temple of god” and so I say bring the holy sacraments in to the temple! Chapter 21 contains other uses of the word “foundation” and is also significant in that it refers to the 12 gates of the New Jerusalem, these are built on its foundation and have 12 stones representing the zodiac, so that on the cube of the Sun, every other number on the bottom row is a gate. As I put the Shemhamphorash and the Goetic demons on the four sides of the sun cube, this would total 144 and could thus potentially correspond to the 12 gates of the New Jerusalem. The Golden Dawn explains many symbolic aspects of how the New Jerusalem is the cube of the Sun, but the New Jerusalem is also the Kalah or Bride AKA Malkuth, while the “Lamb” or Jesus is in the centre of the cube where Saturn normally is.

From a materialist perspective of a Christian capitalist new world order, we might also interpret the new Jerusalem as the labyrinth, the system in which children are sacrificed as like unto Moloch or the Minotaur. The earliest texts relating the New Jerusalem come from Ezekiel (Chapters 40-48) and Isaiah in the old testament which provide a lot relevant Kabbalistic symbolism, but additional numerology in regards to the magick squares is also seen in the dead sea scrolls fragments dealing with this topic. In Isaiah 54:11 we learn that the New Jerusalem is connected to the schethiya when we read, “O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.”

Now we have seen how the four fixed “cherubic” signs are important in the tarot, but they are also an integral part of the Merkabah symbolism and biblical descriptions of the “throne” of “god.” So we can see a description in Rev 4:6-9 tells of 4 angels surrounding the throne of Jesus, each with 6 wings to make more 24 symbolism, but they are also in the book of Ezekiel, which along with Isaiah is the original source for Jewish Merkabah symbolism. In Ezekiel Chapter 1 we learn of four angels as part of the throne chariot of Yahweh, each has four heads corresponding to the four fixed signs, but also each angel has four wings and so we have two sets of 16, or two Jupiter square sapphires. Not only this the wings are folded in such a way that it makes a cube around the throne (Ezekiel 1:26) so that the angels each stand on one of the four wheels of the chariot, while the seat or throne of the chariot is itself made of sapphire. (Keep in mind Scorpio used to be depicted as an eagle)

So the Merkabah and cube are intimately related and along with the tree of life, are different forms of the same thing and if the cube is the labyrinth, we can also see that in the centre is the Minotaur or Taurus and that we must get out with the help of the virgin Ariadne. I would also add that as the pope or hierophant represents the system of the archons and the Catholic church is the whore of Babylon, this is juxtaposed by the Virgin Mary or Isis on the adinkra. So then we can only become free by getting in touch with the spirit of Earth, the indwelling consciousness of this world which is Gaia, and in this way we can learn to live sustainably and off the grid of tyranny. For if we are not at peace with nature, we will be helping those rulers to destroy all life, we will be dependent on these rulers and their artificial system with all its hierarchy.

Along with the book of Revelations, one famous example of Merkabah literature is the apocryphal “Book of Enoch,” which was widely read and among other places can be found in the dead sea scrolls. This book details astronomical information and much else, but is most famous for explaining the origins of the “giants” mentioned in Genesis 6:4, “There were giants in the Earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of god came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown.” This book of Enoch while still quite Jewish was left out of the bible because it was not conducive to the goals of the rulers and gives away much of the game. It states that angels called “sons of god,” “grigori” or “Watchers” fell from heaven and mated with human women, they were lead by the angel Samyaza, but also primarily the demon known as Azazel and he is the angel who taught us to use gold and make coins, what stones are precious and also how to make weapons and work metal in general. (“Zazel” is the “spirit” of the Saturn kamea) The offspring of the Watchers were giants, called “Nephilim” or “mighty men” in various texts and corrupted humanity so much that they caused Yahweh to kill everyone with the flood, though as we will see some survived, for example the giant Goliath. (So Yahweh that bungling fool killed almost everyone for nothing) It also has many apocalyptic themes and was read by both mainstream Jews and early Christians. As we will see this myth is central to Gnosticism, though Gnostics would have their own much more anti Jewish interpretations, they knew of a version of the story which predates the book and as we will see, variations of it are found in most religions. Some parts of the Book of Enoch date to 300 BC, others around the end of the first century BC and it was probably known to John the writer of Revelations and so it is quite pertinent that Enoch is often interpreted as one of the “two witness's” in the book of Revelations.

There are actually 3 distinct Enoch books, though one in particular is famous, (1 Enoch) but when they say things like that rich people or people who strive after silver and gold will be destroyed after the judgement, we can see why Catholics didn't take it up. These books also promote vegetarianism and while Jews have found linguistic loopholes around it, even in mainstream tradition they are not supposed to eat blood and so technically should not be eating meat. This is one sign that that some Merkabah mystics became Gnostics, though this would be after taking in more Paganism and it was more a matter of rejoining the original branch of international mystics, rather than creating it from scratch. (Remember that most Merkabah literature is younger than Gnosticism, with 1 Enoch being a rare exception.) Enoch was also taught many mysteries by the archangels, primarily Uriel, though also others and this became the basis of teachings he would write, or have his son Methuselah write, so that it could be passed on down through the family of patriarchs. Azazel was eventually cast down in to the pit of Tartarus by the archangel Raphael and the Watchers were also bound under the Earth by Michael, where it is said they will remain for 70 generations till the time of judgement.

I could see right away that in many ways the Watchers are like the archons of various Gnostic texts who are enamoured by women to the point of rape. These “fallen angels” are the subject of many hilarious conspiracy theories about aliens, but along with the Sumerian Anunnaki are just older forms of the archons. As it is coming from a Jewish tradition, these Watchers are of a more ambiguous character than archons, there is quite a body of literature on them in various sources, but we can see Enoch petitions the Jewish god to forgive them. They are said to be rebels by modern Christians, but if this is the case, Yahweh sure sucks at making loyal angels, even though he is supposed to be all knowing. From this and the ancient texts themselves, we can only conclude then that they are ultimately doing Yahweh's will as his servants and so are archons, that he was punishing humanity for his fuck up because it serves some plan of his to thwart the knowledge of humanity. For example, in 1 Enoch (Ch 68) the Watchers are said to swear an oath, but they do so by a “sacred name” of “god” which is given by the angel Michael and which brings to mind the the Sepher Yetzirah and the Book of Job. “These are the secrets of this oath, and by it were they confirmed. Heaven was suspended by it before the world was made, for ever. By it has the Earth been founded upon the flood; while from the concealed parts of the hills the agitated waters proceed forth from the creation to the end of the world. By this oath the sea has been formed, and the foundation of it.” Furthermore, the name of the deity used in the Book of Enoch is the Lord of Hoasts, or Sabaoth and so Sabazius which brings us back to the banking cult, which I will show is behind the Watchers and the archons.

We can see this quite explicitly in a few Gnostic scriptures, but especially in the Secret Book of John, which speaking of the demiurge states “And he created a plan with his powers. He sent his angels to the daughters of men so that they might take some of them for themselves, and they might raise a seed, to be a respite for them.” The angels fail however and are forced to take on the appearance of the husbands of the women they would seduce, as I explained before, the text goes on to say the archons created money and “thus the whole creation became enslaved forever, from the foundation of the world until now.” As the Secret book of John is perhaps the most definitive Gnostic text, we can see that the issue of the flood and Watchers is quite central to Gnostic cosmology. We can also see similar examples in the Hypostasis of the Archons, with the rape of Eve and the attempted rape of Norea, who is herself an intriguing character and calls upon the true “God of the entirety” to save her, like Azazel, Yaldabaoth was cast into the pit of Tartarus by Zoa after her breath became a fiery angel. Eve had to turn herself in to a tree to escape and this part of the Gnostic text has already been compared with the myth of Apollo and Daphne by scholars, with Daphne turning in to a Laurel tree to escape the embraces of this deity. While there are few explanations, we can also see that according to the Gnostics, the reason for the flood was not due to humanity's corruption, but because the demiurge was “jealous” of how we are more aware than him. The Gnostic texts also explain how there were some humans who survived the persecutions of the demiurge and these are the offspring of Seth, the third son of Adam and Eve and while there is some disagreement with other texts, Noah and his line would bring about the false religion of Judaism. This is all very important as I will try to show that many Gnostic texts are allegorical explanations of how their knowledge predates Abraham and from world religions more generally, we will see that a mnemonic device was literally based on the cube, but that much was wiped out by the demiurge who is symbolic of the banking religion in general. So from texts like this we see the theocratic “rulers” were “jealous” of the true mystics and as is so common for members of the Abrahamic traditions, they destroyed all knowledge which disagrees with them.

Nimrod is said to have the Watchers or fallen angel blood in him and as Masons believe their craft was founded at the building of the tower of Babel and was actually taught by Nimrod, this places them firmly in the traditional teachings of the Watchers. These Watchers taught us some useful things like the seven liberal arts as well as the use of herbs, however they also taught us things like cosmetics which corrupted mankind and which we see in the capitalist archon culture of the present. The book of Enoch says they also taught the use of root cuttings and so while I am clearly not against using entheogens, given the context and that Mandrake is the most likely root to have been used, I do not think the Watchers taught Shamanism, but rather pharmakeia mind control. This can also be seen in Gnosticism in that in the text “On the Origin of the World” the archons taught the use of magick and potions and yet there is all kinds of evidence that Gnostics were into entheogens and their own forms of magick. The seven liberal arts are broken up in to the trivium which is grammar, logic and rhetoric, plus the quadrivium which is geometry, astronomy, mathematics and music, all of which are key to decoding magick squares and the universal language fractal. So much for the idea that magick is unscientific and irrational, here we see logic itself was taught by demons, or more originally daemons! While this is all mythology and the seven liberal arts were spread in Europe by Pythagoras, it does play a strong role in Masonry in which they put them in to steps, or a winding spiral staircase symbolism as if it is inside of a tower, they are also subjects taught by various Goetic demons in the Lesser Keys. Manly Hall points out there were also seven steps or degrees for Templars and also the Mithraic mysteries and I would add that in Mithraism, this is also depicted like a ladder with each step also being a planet.

While his strong socialist politics are the antithesis of the banking religion, it is also true that Freemasons see Pythagoras as one of their mythological founders and no doubt his highly influential ideas were appropriated by the likes of Plato and all kinds of Greeks with all kinds of agendas. Hermes was also said to have been a teacher of Pythagoras, or that Pythagoras learned his wisdom from the “pillars of Hermes” which we will see is a strong connection to this same and nearly universal tradition. Pythagoras was said to be the son of a stone cutter and to have travelled to India, the middle east and Egypt and while scholars may doubt he travelled to all these places, it is at least symbolic of him learning from their traditions. So we see Pythagoreans called the number 1 or monad a “chariot” and the “Tower of Jupiter” and the “Throne of Jupiter” and it sits atop the tetractys, Pindar also speaks of reincarnation as the road of Jupiter, which ultimately leads to the “Tower of Chronos.” There is nothing inherently sinister about geometry or architecture and I think it is likely Pythagoras learned mostly from the Egyptians and eventually this knowledge would be used by the Greeks to make many of their temples in to memory palaces. The Fibonacci sequence is also important in Greek art and many Pagan temples were made according to sacred geometry in order to create physical memory palaces. So then, the architects who were encoding this information had to be especially learned in order to figure out how to make a building that could preserve the mysteries for those with eyes to see. In Masonic thought it is said that architecture is frozen music and in this kind of way, Pythagoras represents the Pagan and non Abrahamic and non banking cult version of Masonry, though as I said, his knowledge would later be appropriated, he would also influence Gnostics.

As the descendent of Enoch, Noah is a central figure in all this and ultimately thought to be the genetic ancestor of all humanity and so as the 10th generation from Adam, he is like the new Adam or a new iteration of the the tree of life fractal. (That is Malkuth is the Kether of the next tree below ad infinitum) The builders of the Tower are descended from the children of Noah, who are Shem, Ham, and Japheth and it is easy enough to see their names are connected to the term Shem-ham-phorash. Genesis 11 verses 1-9 tells of the tower of Babel and the verses 10-26 gives the descendants of Shem, who are 12 in number and include Abraham, the man who passes on the wisdom of Noah and so Enoch as well, then verses 27-32 introduce Abraham in the Torah.

The importance of Noah is further seen in that the Zohar links the ark of the covenant with Noah's ark and so when I speak of either you should treat them as basically synonymous. The Zohar tells us (1 Noah 59B) "Noah below embodied the covenant, modelled on above" ... "Who is the ark? Ark of the covenant. Noah and the ark followed this paradigm. Of Noah covenant is written: I will erect my covenant with you. Until the covenant was erected with him, he did not enter the ark, as is written: I will erect my covenant with you, and you will enter the ark" ... "Then the ark became the ark of the covenant, and the ark and Noah within it, together were a symbol of the supernal pattern." So here we see Noah is the covenant and he goes inside the "ark" and the Zohar goes on to explain that he as a righteous person, like all the righteous are the "foundation of the world," and "Upon this, Earth is established, for it is the pillar on which the world stands" and this is because all humanity is descended from him. As Noah is himself the covenant, he is the tablets or schethiya and also the foundation stone which is synonymous with the cube of space, but instead of being two tablets, as there are 7 Noahide laws, as the covenant he would symbolically correspond to the seven tablets of destiny. As this covenant is "modelled on above" and there are seven laws, this must signify the seven planets and so it is a hint there are seven tablets or kameas, as in the seven tablets of destiny, AKA tablets of creation. Philo in his work, "Questions and Answers on Genesis Book II" also compares the two arks and explains the numerology of the dimensions of Noah's ark, using many of the numbers I have gone in to, including all the square numbers and the number 24. Like the temple of Solomon, here we learn that the ark of Noah is also modelled on the human body and so we have a strong set of connections here which also bring us back to the golden ratio as the fractal of the human body.

Joseph Campbell in his book "The Inner Reaches of Outer Space" compares Genesis to the Babylonian flood myth and points out there are 10 kings with long lives and the sum of their ages is 432000 and likewise there are 10 patriarchs from Adam to Noah. Now Genesis 5 lists their life spans and also the age when they had a child, so when we add all the ages of fatherhood for the first 9, plus 600 for the age of Noah at the time of the flood, it has a total of 1656 years from the creation of Adam, to the time of the flood. Now citing the work of Julius Oppert, Campbell reckons that 1656 years in the Jewish calendar is 86400 weeks, which is twice 43200 showing that these stories are astronomical and refer to epochs of time encoded in myth. He also points out that at Ragnarok, 800 warriors will come out of each of the 540 doors of Valhalla and do battle and so this totals to 432000 warriors. This number is also found in the 432000 years of the Kali Yuga, which is itself a segment of time within a larger cycle of 4320000 years and we have seen that the Yugas are related to dice, but know that the names of the ages in the Yugas refer to the names of various rolls, or the names of different types of dice. As dice form the basis of the Hindu map of the time fractal and as the Greeks and Book of Daniel have very similar systems of metallic ages, they are likely rooted in the same dice cosmology.

These Enochian teachings found their way to Jesuits who then created the royal arch of Enoch degrees of Freemasonry and in this way corrupted the Masons from their original egalitarian ambitions, essentially turning it in to a Catholic cult of archons. These Watchers may also be related to the "Enochian angels," especially through "Dr. Rudd," a man who wrote on the Goetia and Shemhamphorash and fused it with the Enochian magick of John Dee, or really as I will try to show, he recognized these two Occult systems have the same origin. The Enochian system of magick does show correspondences with the cube of space and especially magick squares and it was named as such because the angels that were originally evoked claimed to be the same who taught Enoch. More than this, Masons did use magick squares to write coded messages to each other and this practice even goes back all the way to the Templars.

Gnostics would call Yahweh Samael, and Samael is in Judaism and some Christian thought a name for the devil, in other views such as in the Zohar, Samael is Azazel the primary leader of the Watchers, but then Azazel was commonly thought of by Jews as Satan. So while I and arguably Gnostics interpret this to mean Azazel is an aspect of Yahweh or even synonymous with him, we can think of both of them as the split personalities in the dualist mind of the demiurge. Even some Jewish Kabbalists do basically say this and Carl Jung made the same interpretation and I agree that Azazel and Yahweh are different aspects of the same thing, we could even say that Azazel is the openly “evil” form of Yahweh and the literal “scape goat” for why life sucks for Jewish peasants not clued in to the mind fuckery of the theocracy. As Jesus and the names of the Jewish god are used to control the Goetic demons, Yah, The lord of Hoasts and El being the most important names in this, as we shall see, the Abrahamic god is their leader. This means that while there are demons in the Goetia, it is not Satanic at all, but in fact Judeo-Christian magick, a fact which is perfectly obvious if you actually read the texts. Yahweh is the creator and head of the Watchers, the Shemhamphorash, the Enochian angels and really all the Abrahamic archons and so Satan is really just small potatoes, acting exactly like Yahweh created him to be. Azazel is even found in the Solomonian grimoires, though it is under another name, Corson one of the “Four Great Kings” and so he is one of the four main rulers of the demons found in that grimoire. He has also been called Paimon or Paymon and in this aspect is one in the group of 72 demons and is one of the 6 attributed to Gemini. As Paimon he is the ninth demon listed and has a pretty unique status in the Goetia, he controls 200 legions of spirits, which is more than double any other demon and this is a reference to the number of Watchers in the book of Enoch. Among other things it says that Paimon can tell you what Earth is, what holds it up in the waters and what the mind is and where it is, he can also make any man subject to the magician and so he creates hierarchies through black magick.

As we will see, the book of Revelations makes references to the book of Enoch and in Enoch we also learn of the “tablets of heaven” (Chapter 81) and the “book of life” which sits before “god” on his throne. Enoch is central to understanding the origin of the rulers religion of power and according to the myth of the royal arch degrees of Masonry, Enoch knew that god was going to kill everyone with a flood, so he set to work to build a safe temple/depository for the knowledge of the antediluvian world. This temple was nine chambers, each stacked on one another like a subterranean tower, and on the arch of each chamber was an aperture to connect them. Enoch had received the Torah long before Moses and set it on a pillar with a cube underneath and on this pillar he inscribed the true name of “god” which is the lost word. This basically signifies the middle pillar of the Kabbalistic tree of life, the cube being the cube of space or Malkuth or Earth. Enoch sealed this chamber and fearing that it's knowledge would be lost forever, he built two more pillars outside at the entrance, one of marble with which to withstand fire on which he inscribed a message telling of the middle pillar, the other of brass to withstand the waters of the flood on which he inscribed the knowledge taught in Freemasonry and a variety of Occult wisdom. The two pillars in the depository of Enoch would be cast in bronze by Solomon and turned in to the two front pillars of the temple of Yahweh. They were named Jachin and Boaz and represent the other two outer pillars of the tree of life glyph and play a significant role in the iconography of Masonry, often depicted with Jacob's ladder. This is the same Jacob with the pillow stone, a stone which is also said to have been used as a pillar and so the ladder and pillars are forms of the tree of life. (Likewise the two pillars are symbolic of the two tablets of the law given by Moses)

What's more is that in some variations of the Masonic legend of the pillars, not only was the Torah found in the chambers of Enoch, but also a cube carved from agate, which had on it the “lost word.” (Various Masonic scholars tell versions of this, among others see, George Oliver, Antiquities of Freemasonry Ch 4 which says Enoch's chamber was 81 feet deep, it also equates the god Vulcan with a human Tubal Cain. There is also the Masonic Alnwick Manuscript from 1701 and The Freemason's Monitor 2.1.10 by Thomas Webb) This then would be the cube I mentioned on which the middle pillar was placed and we can see that in Qabalah agate corresponds to both Mercury and Gemini. In this version however instead of the middle pillar there was something else found on the cube and this was a golden Delta embossed with jewels, with Delta being the Greek letter which corresponds to the Hebrew Daleth, which itself corresponds to Venus and the number 4. Also in this version we learn that Solomon found this depository of Enoch and above it he built a “temple of Justice” or courthouse, while underneath his own temple of Yahweh and the “mercy seat” in the holy of holies, he built nine chambers matching the depository of Enoch. These two subterranean parts of the two temples are themselves likely symbolic of the two outer pillars of the tree of life, one of “mercy” under the holy of holies, one of “severity” under the temple of “justice” or courthouse, though given there are 10 layers involved, it could represent the tree of life and tree of knowledge respectively. This mercy seat was the seat of “god,” or more specifically the Shekinah which used the wings of two cherubim on the lid of the ark as a throne. We can also liken this to the two towers, one of hierarchy belonging to Solomon and Yahweh, the other a tower of information created by Enoch to preserve the antediluvian wisdom. (These two towers could be depicted on the “moon” card and “death” card in the tarot, though here they are above ground.) This legend also details how King Solomon, King Hiram of Tyre and Hiram Abiff the master architect had under them 24 “master masons” called Menatzchim, so that all together they formed a high council of 27, (3 cubed) always keeping in mind the King of Tyre was not only Solomon's ally, but King David's as well and so at least indirectly a Zadokite or Sadducee ally.

In some Masonic legends the architect of the tower is not Nimrod but Peleg, the descendent of Shem, his name has a gematria of 113 which has some relevant correspondences such as the Hebrew for the “lovers” card, which in turn corresponds to Gemini. Here we learn that after the fall of the tower, Peleg went to Prussia and made a temple to pray for forgiveness, he also had an agate stone and made a pillar which preserved some history. The Hungarian myths also speak of Nimrod coming to them and having twin sons, Hunor and Magyor who were the ancestors of the Huns and Magyars.

So then, Solomon took the treasures he found in Enoch's depository and put them under the holy of holies in the secret chambers he had made to imitate Enoch. While excavating the foundations of the temple of Solomon, workers intent on building the Second temple found the hidden chamber to the middle pillar and found the book. These workers were the newly released captives from Babylon and when they brought the book back up they saw that it was the Torah which had been lost to them since their captivity. A convenient story indeed, one which I argue would mean that the Torah is actually the book of life given to Enoch, that he passed down to his descendants and specifically Shem AKA Melchizedek and that symbolically the Torah is conflated with the cube and so the schethiya. “Solomon” then co-opted the teachings and yet since he and his temple are not historical in the literal sense, we can see that these co-opted teachings were taken up at the time of the second temple, which was after the captivity in order to create Judaism and the old testament as we know it.

More than this, as the Templar degree is part of this tradition of Masonry, the story is at least mythologically speaking, a strong link to the legend of the 9 founding members of the Templars finding some great treasure under the temple mount in Jerusalem. So, the treasure of the Templars is this knowledge of the Watchers and as we will see, this knowledge is also the keys, or precursors to the magick of Solomon, economic and linguistic information (like the seven liberal arts) used by the banking cult which would become the Goetia. We do not have to take this as history, but it is undeniable that Dr. Rudd integrated the Goetia and Enochian magick and that mythologically speaking, this and many other grimoires trace their origins to these Watchers, or the angels who taught Enoch. As we will see, in Judaism the Watchers are the servants of god quite explicitly and so the magick taught by the angels, would be the same as the Goetic magick used to control the demons. However, there are other grimoires such as Liber Juratus which influenced John Dee and so we should not think these magicians had only one way of looking at things, or took from one primary source. As they were trying to decode the tablets, (Torah) this required ongoing studies and works in progress as the ceremonial magick was reconstructed and perfected, becoming more and more elaborate and integrated with other knowledge. Just like science, experiments and research would lead to a more complete ontology, as with the evolution of the cube of space paradigm.

So it is that lifting the seven seals on the book of life is the same as decoding the tablets of heaven or destiny, which is done through the knowledge left by the Watchers and which has been the subject of myth in a variety of cultures. The tyrants then are trying to gain this power for themselves and have been working on this long before the Templars. In Islam, Hermes Trismagistis is also associated with Enoch and known as the prophet Idris, who in all accounts is the seventh generation from Adam and is often credited as the inventor of writing and astronomy/astrology and is the scribe of "god." As in the books of Enoch he was said to have gone to the heavens and come down in India, the place from which Adam had taken the "black stone" (which was white until "the fall") upon which he had built the first altar/temple. This black stone would be taken to Mecca by the angel Gabriel, where Muslims believe Abraham and Ishmael used it as the corner stone on which to build the Kaaba.

The foundation stone on which the holy of holies was built was thought by Jews to be the foundation stone of the universe itself and so as we will see, it is the "Bethel stone" which Jacob used for a pillow and turned in to a pillar before he had his dream of going to heaven on a ladder. This stone is also said to be the altar used by Abraham when he was about to sacrifice his son and so as we will also see, it is synonymous with the scethiya, or stone tablets that were smashed by Moses and put in the ark, or which Noah represents with his ark and that this is the redundancy of fractal symbolism.

After figuring all this out using gematria and my knowledge of Qabalah and ceremonial magick, to my surprise I have found that the Gnostics were much more blatant about explaining all this than I had first imagined. While I had read some Gnostic texts and gotten some clues to this, it was not until I had done the gematria of the seven kameas that the true context of some verses and some scriptures became evident. I also happened to stumble upon some texts which I had not previously read, but which go in to some detail about how these numbers are actually quite important to Gnostic cosmology. For example the text "the concept of our great power" mentions the 72 languages but also makes some interesting statements about the story of the flood and Noah and how he preached for 120 years. The Gnostic view of Noah and the ark is complicated and contradictory, for example in the Hypostasis of the Archons, Norea burns the ark to the ground, and in the Secret Book of John, Noah was a tool of the demiurge. Epiphanius in his Panarion Ch 26 also tells of how Norea burned the ark 3 times and this was the doctrine of the Borborites and Nicolaitans. The "Apocalypse of Adam" is rather complicated and speaks of many things I will go in to in this chapter, but in it the demiurge mates with Eve like a Watcher and the demiurge and aeons each try to influence Noah, but he and his descendants are named as slaves of the demiurge, Noah is also identified as Deucalion, the protagonist of the Greek flood myth. According to Irenaeus, (Book 1 Ch 18) among other things the Ogdoad refers to Noah and his family, he goes on to explain the importance of numbers in an unnamed Gnostic cosmology and that the 30 cubits of the height of the ark of Noah is the sum of the aeons in the Ogdoad, decad and duadecad and that the tabernacle also had a length of 30 cubits and were thus related. Irenaeus also explains (Book 1 Ch 30) the Sethians and Ophites taught that the demiurge caused the flood because we didn't worship him enough, but that Sophia saved Noah and his family in the ark, so then the demiurge chose Abraham and promised him and his descendants would rule the world, then it explains the demiurge gave Moses the law and created the Jewish ethnicity. The Secret Book of John also says, "It is not as Moses said, "They hid themselves in an ark," but they hid themselves in a place, (showing that the ark is more than a boat) not only Noah, but also many other people from the immovable race." So also in the Gnostic text "The Concept of our Great Power" there seems a more positive view of the ark as the preserver of ancient knowledge, exactly as I had theorized regarding the "flood" of censorship. "For if indeed the ark had not been meant for man to enter, then the water of the flood would not have come. In this way he (Noah) intended (and) planned to save the gods and the angels, and the powers, the greatness of all of these, and the <nourishment> and the way of life." It goes on to say that 120 "is the perfect number that is highly exalted" and indeed we do find that it has relevant gematria meanings, some of which I have already mentioned, but also a Hebrew word for "pillar."

Clement of Alexandria in Stromata Book VI, Chapter XI gives a detailed explanation of it's numerology and other numbers in relation to geometry and music and the ark and so while I figured parts of this out myself, it is good to see explicit confirmation that the ancients saw this as well. Philo in "Questions and Answers on Genesis" also gives an explanation, pointing out that 120 years is according to Gen 6:3 the supposed limit on human life and among other things, explains the meaning of how $64+56=120$. It is too much to quote here but I strongly suggest you look these two up. The Sepher Yetzirah also gives a bit of numerological symbolism in Chapter 4 when it says, "From two letters, or forms He composed two dwellings; from three, six; from four, twenty-four; from five, one hundred and twenty; from six, seven hundred and twenty; from seven, five thousand and forty; and from thence their numbers increase in a manner beyond counting; and are incomprehensible." (However if we continue the pattern then $5040 \times 8 = 40320$)

I would also find that the Zohar is full of this kind of knowledge, though as with all Kabbalah it is definitely less antagonistic to Judaism and instead is content to present an interpretation which creates wisdom. While the Zohar has much to say on the antediluvian world and the Tower of Babel, in terms of the Torah being a memory palace designed like a tower, what is most blatant of all is that at the start of the Zohar it tells a parable called "The old man and the ravishing maiden." There are multiple translations and versions, but in this story, two Rabbis meet under a tower in Tyre, one tells the other of a crazy donkey driver and they meet him and he turns out to be a great sage who tells them that he lived in a tower that floats in the "air." He explains that the Torah is a maiden and this maiden lives in a palace tower and that those who read Torah are like a suitor who waits at the gate, after much study she at first gives a glimpse from a window to those who are dedicated, then the one who courts her long enough sees more and more of her until all her secrets are made known to him.

In one section the Zohar tells of the universal "primeval language" and how it was used to control the heavenly beings magickally. "Its chief characteristic was, it enabled everyone to express himself clearly and unmistakably in terms exactly corresponding to his thoughts, wishes and intentions, otherwise they were not understood and comprehended by the heavenly powers." "This secret hidden wisdom was revealed at first and imparted to Adam who by it became instructed in its secret doctrine respecting the celestial spheres and their guarding angels." The Zohar goes on to explain Adam bears a book with his name and the teachings go on to Noah, then on to Moses and Solomon, where it went to his head and "god" had to send up an adversary (Hadad) and that this is the same knowledge used by the builders of Babel.

In the three grimoires Sepher Ha-Razim, Sepher Raziel Hemelach and Sepher Raziel AKA Liber Salomonis we can see some of the most important evidence of how ancient international traditions surrounding "antediluvian" wisdom are presented in a Q/Kabbalistic framework which has Enoch like Merkabah elements. The earliest book to be written comes from 3-4th century and is Sepher Ha-Razim, in it Noah is taught by the archangel of Chokmah named Raziel all kinds of magick, Sepher Ha-Razim then went on to inspire the other two books somewhere around a thousand years later. The second book, Sepher Raziel Hemelach takes a lot of the information in the first and expands upon it and here we learn that Adam actually received the book from Raziel who passed it down in the family. While the second book is later, this is a much more common variant of the myth in other Jewish sources like the Zohar and from these sources we learn that Adam (humanity) was taught the means of regaining his/our divinity and that this knowledge has since been passed on in secret as the "Book of Raziel." Sepher Raziel Hemelach is interesting enough on it's own and speaks of all kinds of relevant things for this chapter, it cites the Sepher Yetzirah and speaks of gematria, for example as part of a larger argument involving the names of the prophets, it says things like, "Israel proclaims Jacob to be Resh, Yod, Vav in number" or RYU 216 as I wrote out before. While the third is the most Solomonic in nature, it too is said to be the teachings of Raziel and so we know that "Solomon" practised this and it can shed light on the Goetia. Among other important things Liber Salomonis tells us that Solomon asked "Mrs of everiche one of the 72" to help him interpret teachings from various languages, then he called for the ark of the covenant and it is not quite clear, but it seems her magick helped him to recognize or decode the book of Raziel which was inside the ark and given to Adam. Then it explains the book of Raziel has three sections, two “books” given to Adam and one given to Moses on Mt Sinai.

So while each of Sepher Raziel grimoires is very important in it's own right, what is most relevant to us is that Raziel is said to be the source of Qabalah which predates the flood. While these books describing the preflood knowledge are not themselves that ancient, they are clearly attempting to reconstruct the ancient antediluvian knowledge and are carrying on a very ancient tradition rooted in the idea of a book given by angels which explains that astrology and mathematics are the true universal language. From various sources including these books, I learned how this book of Raziel is made of sapphire and Adam became so wise from it, that he had the magick words necessary to control the angels and work all kinds of magick. The angels became so jealous that they stole the book/sapphire and threw it in to the ocean, though later it was recovered by the angel of the ocean and eventually came to Enoch, who then gained his wisdom from it. Then the book was passed on to Noah and from it he learned how to build the “ark” and Sepher Ha-Razim tells us that he placed it in a golden cabinet which of course brings to mind the ark of the covenant. Then Noah passed the sapphire book to Shem, who passed it on so that it came in to the possession of people like Abraham, Jacob and Moses and his line until it found its way to Solomon.

So we learn it is from the book of Raziel that Solomon learned to gain control of the demons and while the aesthetic tone of the Raziel grimoires is somewhat different, they are similar enough that it is clear to me the Raziel school of thought is the source of Goetic magick. That is the Testament of Solomon quite possibly predates the Sepher Ha-Razim, but both these texts present very similar theocratic black magick which stems from much older traditions and which the myths say started with the sapphire book of Raziel. So then for example we can see in Sepher Ha-Razim a cosmology with 7 firmaments, each with hierarchies of angels and while there is too much to explain all the similarities with Goetia fully here, I do want to point out that in the first “firmament” are 7 “overseers” and each of these in turn has an “encampment” and in the first encampment are 72 angels ruled by one of the overseers. The instructions here tell us to call on these 72 angels in the “first and second year of the fifteen year cycle of the reckoning of the Greek kings.” This then shows how theocracy is interwoven with Kabbalistic magick, but in the Michael Morgan translation, we get many excellent footnotes and one here suggests this would be the “Roman indictions” and that this text may have been used by the Christian government of Constantinople.

In the Zohar this same book of Raziel which inspired the three grimoires is spoken of as the “book of Adam” (I will use these names synonymously from here on) and is said to contain 72 branches of wisdom and it is said to be the source of Kabbalah along with the book of wisdom given to Enoch. So here the book of Enoch and the book of Raziel/Adam are definitely separate, yet very similar in the knowledge they contained and so it would all have been compiled and passed on together, just as Liber Salomonis tells us. Liber Salomonis does say that the book of Raziel was distinct from the broken law of Moses as Solomon also found the pieces in the ark and yet they are both sapphire texts and so given that it also says the book of Adam contains a part which Moses received on Sinai, we know that as with the book of Enoch, this is all symbolic and represents the same school of knowledge or information, which itself is the highest magick of Judaism. That is as with the Torah itself, we will see this sapphire or similar book's information is represented in many various forms, but this merely symbolizes different aspects, portions or editions of the same original “sapphire” book of Adam. Needless to say the Raziel grimoires have more than I can explain here, but as we will see, they represent the Jewish mythology and the school of thought which would be corrupted by the demons of Solomonic magick when they stole it and threw it in the ocean, but it is also the means of overcoming these same demon archons.

The Zohar also says that Enoch went to heaven where it was “imparted unto him the secret knowledge of the highest mysteries and of the forty-nine keys necessary for understanding the various combinations of the sacred letters, and which the angels themselves make use of.” The Zohar tells us that humanities' destiny is to relearn the language gradually and that this is the means of bringing about utopia on the Earth in the Kabbalistic sense. This is echoed in the Gnostic Gospel of Truth which states “In their heart, the living book of the Living was manifest, the book which was written in the thought and in the mind of the Father and, from before the foundation of the All, is in that incomprehensible part of him. This is the book which no one found possible to take, since it was reserved for him who will take it and be slain. No one was able to be manifest from those who believed in salvation as long as that book had not appeared.” (It goes on about this book which brings to mind the book of life and its letters) So it is not so much the universal language or that the Torah without vowels is evil, but as the Zohar says, people keep abusing the power. So, by reconstructing the universal language and the Torah as the book of Adam, it's hemp pages will be as the leaves of the tree of life and bring about universal awareness and divine consciousness in all humanity as one united mind and thus it is “for the healing of the nations.”

Abraham learned and received the Torah/Book of Adam from Shem, who was also known as Melchizedek and yet here we find the main point of convergence between the Gnostics and the Jewish mythology, for Shem is also a figure in Gnosticism and not only is there a scripture called the “Paraphrase of Shem” but also one titled “Melchizedek.” (He also plays a strong role in Samaritan religion) This is very interesting in that Gnostics tended to make villains out of old testament heroes and heroes out the Jewish villains and so we can see Shem almost as the original writer of the Torah, or “book of the living.” Even the Jewish tradition says that Shem had the knowledge of scriptures before Moses and so he is the source of the knowledge before the flood, which the death cult of “Abraham” appropriated and changed by rearranging it with vowels and spaces. However as I explained, even “Abraham” is not totally to blame, more so those who purport to be authorities on the Torah and make up stories in his name and we can see that the Sepher Yetzirah is supposedly written by Abraham and so probably the original “Jewish” Brahmanic tradition.

The Paraphrase of Shem is the single most crucial text I will cite in this chapter, but while it is confusing at first, by the end of this it will make much more sense. This text corroborates some key points which intuition and many disparate facts had previously lead me to believe and in it, an unnamed demon (the demiurge) is persecuting the race of Shem (Gnostics) and sends a flood to kill them, but the saviour figure causes a tower to be built and this is the means of their salvation. The text speaks of many demons and “winds” which mate together or that the demons are winds and to me this brings to mind the howling sound of the Goetia, these demons then build the tower which will ultimately thwart their plans. Others have noted a link between the wind howling and the Goetia in other contexts and as we will see the demons do come up repeatedly in relation to the winds. (For example, the Qur'an links Solomon with winds and djinn or demons, see Sura 21:81 and 34:12 for the winds, though there is more in the Qur'an about Solomon and his demons and in the Midrash's and Talmud as well.) The demons and winds are further each given a star which is suggestive of the portions of the zodiac attributed to the demons of the Goetia, the text also speaks of “gates” which we will see is another reoccurring theme. While there is a lot of seemingly dualist language in the text, the saviour figure is in fact playing the demons and tricking them in to their own undoing, in this way the text could be interpreted as an explanation of evil, but also why the oppression of the “flood” and Judaism needed to happen in order to ultimately free humanity. The text says that for the power of the tower to be on Earth, demons were sent by nature and among other things a condemnation of speech occurred after the flood. Then later towards the end we learn how the universal language was lost and that the saviour figure “spoke according to the language of each one. This is my language which I spoke to you. (Shem) And it will be taken from you. And you will speak with the voice of the world upon the Earth.”

The tower in this case seems to have been created at the same time as the flood, or in some translations (as by Michael Roberge) it was made before the flood, so as with other examples I will give, it is as if it was the flood that was the source of the confusion of tongues and the tower can thus be likened to the ark of Noah which saved the human race and preserved the ancient knowledge as a memory palace. Though the tower is more clearly linked to the pillar which preserves knowledge, as the Zohar says, Noah is the covenant and the cube on which the pillar is based and so in some loose ways this fits the Masonic stories of Enoch. The text also goes on to tell how the Sodomites would receive the “universal teaching” from Shem and were unjustly destroyed and this along with the persecuted race of Shem would be an allusion to the banking theocracy wiping out the international group of mystics who created the book of life. (presumably some indigenous Pagans who knew the truth as well) What is more, the word “Shem” means “name” in Hebrew, as in Genesis the reason given for the tower is to make a “name” or “Shem” for the builders and so we see the reason for the tower was to create the name as the fractal formula of all creation. We can also see this in the Shem-hamphorash or 216 letter name which is highly suggestive of the lost word of Masonry. (The gematria of Shem is 340 or Shin+Mem the X and Y axis of the cube or 34X10) The text then goes on to speak out against the water Baptism which scholars have suggested is a polemic against orthodox Christians. To me this anti water baptism which is also found in other Gnostic texts I have mentioned, is at least in part an allusion to how the orthodox are appropriating Gnostic symbolism, but do not use entheogens to provide gnosis of the spirit world as in the Cannabis baptism of fire.

Shem got his knowledge from Noah, who in turn inherited it as the descendent of both Enoch and Seth, who was the legendary founder of Sethian Gnosticism, a group which is thought by many scholars to be the first Gnostics. Seth was the offspring of Adam after Cain killed Abel and according to Muslims, Gnostics and Jews he was very learned, and having himself gained knowledge from Adam also took up astrology/astronomy, in some traditions he is also credited with the invention of writing. To Muslims as I said Enoch was associated with Hermes, but Seth was associated with Agathodaimon, who is another important character in Hermeticism. In the more purely Greek traditions, Agathodaimon was also the husband of “Tyche Agathe” meaning good fortune and he too was depicted with a cornucopia, but also a poppy flower. The Muslim historian Abu l-Hasan al-Masudi says that Seth/Agathodaimon and Enoch/Hermes each had a pyramid as a tomb in Egypt at Giza, but even if this isn't literally true, it shows the myths are related. Josephus says that Shem inspired his descendents to make the two pillars to preserve this knowledge in a very similar way to the Masonic legend, but in this version Adam had predicted the world would be destroyed by water and fire. So from all this we can see the myths say the “Abraham” school had taken over and co-opted a major centre of learning to make an exoteric Judaism for the people, and an esoteric Freemasonry for the high priests, who would also have access to the chambers below the temple. This centre of learning was wherever this Shem character was, and from him and Seth we get Kabbalah/Gnosticism/Merkabah from the mix of Pagan and Indian mysticism which had created them as a universal language. (Seth=700 or Shin+Tau so he too fits in the centre of the cube, or 175X4 as in a ring of rows around the Venus cube, or also 70X10) What is more, we know the sides of the great pyramid are not straight, and so when viewed from the sky it actually has 8 sides plus the bottom=9.)

While Jerusalem as the city where Shem ruled has been named specifically in many of the myths, and Sodom was likely important too, the most likely historic place for at least some parts of all this to occur would be the city of Harran. Harran has a very old history as not only a centre for trade, but also as the millennia went on it later became a refuge for Gnostics, Mandaeans, Hermeticists and others trying to escape Christian persecution, a place where they managed to remain right up in to around the 10th century A.D. These refugees survived Muslim persecution by claiming to be a city of “Sabians” as the Sabians are one of the three groups or “people of the book” who Mohammed says not to mess with, the other two being Christians and Jews. This town not only had a reputation for astronomy, but was said to have been founded by Nimrod and others say it was named after Abraham's brother, much later it was also supposed to have had a special reverence for Hermes and Agathodaimon. As a major centre of learning and astrology, Harran preserved the ancient knowledge, especially the Muslim Alchemists who would go on to inspire European Alchemists, who would then go on to do things like translate the Corpus Hermeticum and found science. So then it is highly likely this town played at least some role in the creation of the memory palace tower of information and the writing of the book of life, which in turn would be stolen by the Jews to make the Torah. This city is intimately connected to the origins of the Tarot and there is even an observatory which looks just like the tower card in the Rider Waite deck. As the 11th century Islamic theologian and heresiographer Abd al-Jabbar tells us, "There are among them, in addition to the people of Harran, another group... They claim to follow Seth's religion. They say that he was sent to them, and they possess his book, which god had descended upon him. Seth was already dead in the days of the flood, but Noah brought them this book – in the sense that he preserved it, not that God brought it down upon him."

The apocryphal "Book of Jubilees" which is also found in the dead sea scrolls says that Harran was founded by the figure who is also from Canaanite mythology named Cainan, the book also says that Cainan found astrological knowledge carved in rock which came from the Watchers. (Chapter 8) This Cainan was the grandson of Shem and according to others was the ancestor of Abraham and while this seems to contradict the story of Nimrod founding the city, with all these texts we have to consider all perspectives and try to figure out what makes sense overall. The book of Jasher says Cainan was the offspring of Seth, rather than the grandson of Shem, but this is a different Cainan and not to be confused, however the two names being the same does imply a Kabbalistic link, just as Cain had a son named Enoch who is different, yet thus linked to Enoch from the book of Enoch. Not only is Abraham supposed to have lived there for a time, but when Jacob had his dream of the ladder he was on his way to Harran. (Gen 28) Harran is appropriately enough close to Gobekli Tepe and a few hundred miles away from Mt. Ararat, the place where Noah's ship is supposed to have washed up in Turkey and so while we cannot limit international mystics to one city, Harran is surely important.

The Zohar (Chapter 82 in "Bereshith to Lekh Lekha") tells us Harran is the place "the Holy One endowed Abraham with the spirit of wisdom (Shekinah) by which he attained to a knowledge of the names and powers of the spiritual chiefs and rulers over the different nations of the world." It then goes on to tell us it is here in Harran using astrological methods that Abraham calculated that Canaan was the centre of the world, so it is here that he reasoned the most powerful ruler had reign and so "god" revealed himself to Abraham and told him to go to Canaan at the age of 74. In the next section the Zohar tells us, "Abraham passed through the land (va-yaaabor)' rather than he marched or journeyed, indicating the mystery of the Holy Name, the Shemhamphorash of seventy-two letters, the almost infinite combinations of which form the signatures impressed upon every living created being and thing. It is also the synthesis of all other divine names."

The Zohar then explains Abraham went to Egypt specifically for its Occult knowledge or "gold," though this was likely to be both physical gold and philosophical gold. This admittance is rather crucial if as I believe, the Jews took the schethiya and much of the knowledge for their religion from Egypt, but it is also crucial for understanding the Hyksos actually plundered Egypt. According to Irenaeus, (Book IV Ch 30) the Gnostic Marcionites also accused the Jews of stealing from Egypt, though we only get a rebuttal and no quotes of the actual accusation, this is a very telling chapter as the nature of the rebuttal implies the Marcionites were accusing Christians of being similarly corrupted by the Roman state. We do get an admittance that Christians were enmeshed in the Pagan economy and were taking money in less than proper ways, but since they have the true faith and give some charity, it is all part of "god's" plan. More than this we get an admittance there were Christians in the Roman imperial palace! "And as to those believing ones who are in the royal palace, do they not derive the utensils they employ from the property which belongs to Caesar; and to those who have not, does not each one of these [Christians] give according to his ability?" Irenaeus justifies all this by asking who doesn't use Money? The answer he failed to give, is firstly Jesus, secondly a variety of types of Gnostics, thirdly a variety of tribal Pagans before the Roman conquest. However the book of Exodus 3:21-22, 11:2-3 and 12:35-36 says that Yahweh used magick to steal money from the Egyptians by making them lend gold and things to the Jews as they were leaving. This is justified by Irenaeus and others as being payment for Jewish slave labour, but as historians know this never happened, it is a faulty argument, but we might also wonder why Jews should not pay money to all those they kept as slaves? This is of course the standard hypocrisy of the Abrahamic religions, but for Christians this is even worse, not only because they have had more slaves, but Ephesians 6:5 tells slaves to be obedient to their masters as if the master was Christ! Author Stephen Huller goes into this somewhat, but see especially the essay, "The treasures of the Egyptians" by Pier Franco Beatrice which explains how Christian thinkers like Origen and St Augustine blatantly admitted to co-opting Pagan wisdom, for example, the 7 liberal arts and interpreted this as taking "riches of sinners" for Christian use, just as Jews did with Egypt.

Now as I said, Sapphire is the gem of Jupiter and Chesed, or as a star sapphire with six rays (like the Hagalaz rune) it corresponds to Binah, or Saturn, showing yet another link between the two. In between Binah and Chesed on the tree of life lies the "abyss" and we can see that the word "sephiroth" is itself etymologically related to the word "sapphire" and so the sephiroth below Binah can be thought of like the different pieces of the schethiya, that is they have entered into time and lost the unity found in Binah. It is said by Kabbalists that there are two Torahs, one is the spiritual Torah which was broken by Moses, which would be the schethiya, the other is the Torah we know and it contains and entraps the first hidden within it and some Kabbalists might say that we as humans redeem "god" and duality by reconstructing it. (Hence the tablets of Moses are explicitly symbolic of the whole Torah) In Exodus 24:10 Moses, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu and 70 elders see "god" uses this sapphire as his footstool and while this could total 74 and this number is on the Sun square, there are various explanations involving 72, such as 72 prospective elders for 70 jobs or sticking Nadab and Abihu with the 70. This plays out in Numbers 11:14-17 and in Numbers 11:24-26 and has been the subject of much confusion among scholars, however it is also often said there were 72 elders in the theocratic council of the Sanhedrin. As we have seen 70 has plenty of meanings as the number of the letter Ayin and so the devil card, but also Gog ve-Magog who are the corrupted nations in Revelations (they are also found in the book of Jubilees, Ezekiel and the book of Enoch) and as before, there is a tradition of separating 2 from the 72. (See also Ezekiel 8:11)

The idea of reconstructing the sapphire would be an idea much like that of some antinomian Kabbalists of the "Sabbatean" variety, who believe in what they call the "Tikkun Hapanim," the idea that we must sin so that we can free the holiness within each act, there by experiencing the essence of all the forbidden parts of "god." As the sapphire is the total law, as each act is experienced so that the soul might have gnosis of the true meaning of the law, it as if they are reconstructing the sapphire one chip at a time. Total awareness or redemption is found by breaking each law in a meditative and conscious way, as opposed to sinning for the enjoyment of it and this is the means of finding the true wisdom of the Torah. This is different but brings to mind the more orthodox notion of "Tikkun Olam" which itself refers to the healing of the world by reconstructing certain "vessels" in each sephirah, fixing them so that the vessels can become capable of holding the overwhelming love of the highest form of divinity. In Sabbatean Kabbalah, the Tikkun Hapanim is especially close to ideas I have explained regarding Cainite Gnosticism, but the idea comes from Lurianic Kabbalah on which this Sabbatean Kabbalah is based. To give you a further idea of the importance of Yod and Vav, I will quickly note here that in Lurianic Kabbalah, they believe at the moment of creation, the YH or top three sephiroth separated from the VH or lower sephiroth and will be reunited by the messiah. In Sabbatean Kabbalah the schethiya can be likened to the Torah, or rather the Torah written by the finger of "god" as in Exodus 31:18 which they call the Torah D'Atziluth, but the Torah we know, the five main books of the old testament was written by Moses as in Exodus 32:15 and called Torah D'Beriah. These Kabbalists (See Reb Yakov Leib HaKohain on the two Torahs) argue the Torah D'Atziluth was made to raise human consciousness so that we could live by a third “Torah of Eden” which contained the law of Eden. After the golden calf incident Moses broke the schethiya and wrote the Torah we know today, which they say was made to make us capable of learning the Torah D'Atziluth, but what was the law of Eden? It was merely to listen to the voice of “god” as in Jeremiah 7:22.

Echoing many themes of the Sepher Yetzirah, in the Zohar we can see that this schethiya is the “foundation stone” and so is linked to Yesod which is the foundation, and this stone is basically defined in the same ways as the cube of space. “When the Holy One, blessed be He, was about to create the world, He detached one precious stone from underneath His Throne of Glory and plunged it into the Abyss, one end of it remaining fastened therein whilst the other end stood out above; and this other and superior head constituted the nucleus of the world, the point out of which the world started, spreading itself to right and left and into all directions, and by which it is sustained. That nucleus, that stone, is called sh'thyiah (foundation), as it was the starting-point of the world. The name sh'thyiah, (or schethiya) furthermore, is a compound of shath (founded) and Yah (Godname of Chokmah), signifying that the Holy One, blessed be He, made it the foundation and starting point of the world and all that is therein.” (Zohar II:222a) Now as I have said Yaho or YHV were the letters sealed in the six directions of the cube, but this was done by Yah spelled YH and the two names are in some ways interchangeable, though YHV more obviously brings to mind YHVH. Here we can see three stages of the name of “god” and as the last Heh corresponds to Malkuth, we could interpret this letter as being the foundation stone itself. (This progression of names matches the tetractys of YHVH which adds to 72) Athanasius Kircher places the 10 commandments on the abyss in his version of the tree of life and so we might say that we reconstruct the schethiya through gematria as in “Sepher Sapphires.”

Now while there are many examples of how the sapphire has been related to Jacob's pillow stone and the tablets of Moses and how both of these can be related to the sapphire book of Raziel, I should probably provide a bit more evidence. Common Jewish interpretations tell us the pillow stone is the same stone which Abraham used as an altar to offer his son in sacrifice (Gen 22) and that this is the same place where the foundation stone was and where Solomon built his temple. This is why Jacob anointed the stone and called the area “Bethel” for it is Beth-El and Beth means house and is the second Hebrew letter and so Bethel means “house of god” as Jacob knew it would be the place where the future temple would be built. (Gen 28:16-22) There is a bit of difference to the “cornerstone” and the foundation stone, but the cornerstone is technically a foundation stone, albeit in this case it is placed in the ark as the tablets which was usually on top of the same foundation stone. However in essence these are all symbols of the same thing and this can be seen in that the famous Jewish sage Maimonides tells us the ark was hidden in a carved out section of the foundation stone to protect it from gentiles etc and as Isaiah told us, the whole foundation of the temple is made of sapphire in the New Jerusalem. The Zohar provides many explanations of all this and so we read, “Under the Holy Throne of Glory is Ya'akov (Jacob) as a sapphire, the sapphire pertains to his aspect of Judgement.” As for Moses' tablets, it is the schethiya sapphire, but we can get a better idea of this through the Zohar, “We learned that at that moment, the time had come for Moses, the faithful prophet, to descend to the world. The Holy One, blessed be he, withdrew a Holy Spirit from a hewn block of the precious stone, sapphire, which is Malkuth, that was concealed within 248 lights, and shone on him. And He crowned him with 365 crowns and they stood before Him, and He appointed him over all that was His. He gave him 173 keys, and crowned him with five crowns.”

First of all we notice Moses comes from the sapphire which is Malkuth, the Earth or foundation stone the same as the Bethel stone and we know Malkuth is the last H in YHVH, but the rest of it is not clear until we know some gematria. In total there are actually 613 laws in the Torah, 365 negative ones or prohibitions (reminiscent of the 365 archons, one for each day of the year!) and 248 positive ones or orders. As one Rabbi pointed out, in Kabbalah (though not in anatomy) 613 is the number of bones in the body and the gematria of Moses, while 248 is the gematria of Abraham and the number of joints and limbs in a body. 248 is the gematria of Raziel, but also “Bamidbar” the Hebrew name for the book of “Numbers” and also Auriel AKA Uriel who is the archangel who taught Enoch. So here then all the laws of the Torah are poetically said to be derived from the sapphire from which Moses and the world comes and as 248 is the gematria of Raziel, we know it is the same sapphire that is the book given by Raziel. The best I could find for 173 is that it refers to the “small gematria” value of the 42 letter name, but when added to 613 we get 786 which refers to things like the ark of the covenant and the “eternal foundation of the world.” Now some readers will have noticed there was two tablets of Moses and only one sapphire, but the Zohar also tells of the sapphire tablets of the law and that “although they were two, they appeared as one” and so together they are the foundation stone, apart they are the law. There is of course more evidence for these assertions but I am limited by space and those who wish can use a computer to search the Zohar for keywords like Raziel, Enoch, sapphire, wheel, tower, babel, flood, rainbow and pillar etc on their own.

So with all this in mind I can get back to my explanation of the kamea's symbolism, as we have seen above the planet Jupiter is probably the most important in terms of symbolism, at least as it relates to the adinkra. We will remember that the letter of Jupiter is Kaph, it has a value of 20 which provides the dimensions to the holy of holies, while the square is the shape of Jupiter as the fourth sephiroth, it's kamea is 16, the number of geomantic symbols and it's gem is sapphire. As Jupiter is opposite Mercury on the sephiroth Saturn kamea which I made and $4^3=64$, we can see that Mercury must also be important. The Chinese did use an 8X8 magick square as a mnemonic device for the I Ching and a pattern of 16 does emerge when you mark out each multiple of four on the square of Mercury. In general, geomancy is linked to kameas in that the “spirits” and “intelligences” associated with the planetary kameas are also traditionally associated with the geomantic figures. In the west we can see a binary pattern in how 1 or the monad, splits in to two, and this forms the first three sephiroth, then 4 elements, then the 8 Ogdoad, 16 geomantic figures, 32 paths and 64 numbers on the square of Mercury, we can also see that the 10 commandments are written using 128 letters and so could be written on two tablets of 8X8 kameas. ($6 \times 64 = 384 = 360$ daemons + 24 elders)

Mercury has a variety of good numbers with some of the most relevant being 130, the sum of the four corners, which is the gematria of things like the Hebrew word for pillars, mountain, Ayin the name of the letter corresponding to the devil card and “a ladder” as in Jacob's ladder. The sum of a Mercury row is 260 which is things like roses, the flowers of Venus, vineyard, “the Moriah” which is the place where the temple of Solomon was built, and “the mighty men” as in the Watchers. Among the other things I mentioned, 64 has a variant spelling of Noah, but is also Adam+Eve (45+19) and “doni” which is the name of the 50th Shemhamphorash angel and corresponds to Gemini. (See also Agrippa's Three books of Occult Philosophy, Book 2 Ch 22, where doni is specifically linked to the Mercury kamea) The lovers card is Gemini ruled by Mercury and depicts Adam and Eve in the garden engaging in the Hieros Gamos with Raphael and the two trees in the background.

The 16 numbers of Jupiter's square is the obvious connection to geomancy and yet I have found only one researcher who has really gone in to any explanation of this, however my intuition was correct again and this “Frater Pyramidatus” has found a major key to all this. (He also has some original things to say about the I CHING and so see the further reading section for his full explanation of all this.) Without going too far into the details of the methods of geomancy, a reading is made from four “mother” figures from which other figures are derived which are themselves combined in a different manner to make yet others. All this is worked out on a diagram called a “shield” which has 15 geomantic figures (row on the Saturn kamea) and in this method there are 65536 possible readings or shields which can be created. (65536 is 2^{16} or 256^2 , and is also the 256th square number to occur.) It turns out from these 65536 there are only 16 shields that have each geomantic figure only once, with each of these 16 shields themselves having one of the 16 geomantic signs standing out once each. (excluding one of the Cancer signs populus) From this the good Frater has managed to plug the geomantic figures in to a square of Jupiter, (remember there are many magick squares, but this square still has all the same numbers) so that if you add the total dashes of all the geomantic figures on any row, it adds to 24. This means that like the adinkra, the sum of the geomantic dashes on the whole square is 96, which is 12x8 or 6x16 like a cube with faces of Jupiter kameas. (The Jupiter cube cosmology could thus be 72 angels+24 elders over the 6 faces, but keep in mind that 96X6 or a geomantic cube of Jupiter is 576 and has relevant gematria and is also 24²)

What's more the Frater also shows how these geomantic forms relate to the numbers of lines and points on the Platonic solids, while still maintaining the principles of a magick square. Thus we have another link to Metatron's cube and by looking up the numbers related to the Platonic solids, their angles and the number of faces, lines and vertices, we are provided with many numbers which relate to the magick squares and their cubes. All these numbers are worth looking up in a gematria dictionary along with the numerology of polygons, as all these shapes make up the shapes of nature, they are intimately related to the universal fractal and sacred geometry.

The Frater also shows how the geomantic figures can be related to the Mercury kamea and relates them to a Saturn square and a square with 4 slots (there are no 2X2 magick squares but this would relate to Chokmah) and when stacked can create a step pyramid or ziggurat or tower! On the geomantic Mercury square, each row adds to 48, and this number also has some very relevant gematria. For example it is the gematria of "Rota" in Latin which means "wheel," it is also "Gedulah" a title of Chesed and also Kokab the Hebrew name of Mercury and much else. He doesn't put the Mercury square into the tower for some reason, but to top it off we can see the gematria of "Babel" is 34, the sum of the row of a normal Jupiter kamea.

While the Frater doesn't go in to much detail, there are 256 permutations on his pyramid, the number of variables in the African IFA divination system, which is also related to geomancy and they could well share the same origins. He also points out two of the 16 shields as having significance, one is for Conjunctio or Virgo, the other is for Carcer or Capricorn, which is ruled by Saturn and translates as "prison." This suggests the prison of duality like the devil card, which is ruled by Capricorn and is the 15th tarot, while Virgo's geomantic figure is named Conjunctio meaning the union of opposites and as like before can be likened to Sophia trapped in matter. Here I will point out that Capricorn is the one "deviant" sign that is out of place on the rhombic dodecahedron adinkra in regards to opposite times of year and the cardinal, fixed, mutable patterns and that Virgo and Capricorn merge in the cube adinkra.

Geomantic Square of Jupiter

Libra	Sagittarius	Cancer Populus	Cauda Draconis
Gemini	Leo Minor	Capricorn	Caput Draconis
Aries	Leo Major	Virgo	Pisces
Scorpio	Taurus	Cancer Via	Aquarius

From this square discovered by the Frater, you will notice that the signs that are melded to make the cube adinkra are organized here in their respective columns, so that the top row melds with the fourth row, while the second row melds with the third. That the "judges" or white points on the adinkra are in the two centre columns, while the black ones are the first and fourth columns and as the cube adinkra alternates it's white and black points, we can see the symmetry is represented on this square. This square has other properties which the Frater goes in to some detail about, which show further relationships within Occult cosmology and so it is all far from random and we can see that the adinkra is extremely compatible with Occult cosmology!

These geomantic shields on which all this is based, are themselves important as they create a fractal pattern as the various geomantic signs are combined and what is more, this fractal pattern just so happens to be identical to what is called the "Cantor set." Named after the revolutionary mathematician Georg Cantor, this "set" was really the first modern explanation of fractals and can be seen by drawing a line, then drawing one third of the line on either side beneath, leaving out the middle third. Under this you would do the same for each third, so that you have a series or set of lines, each time splitting in two, with each of these splits being one third the size of the line above it, or .666 total. Computer chips work through bifurcating binary switches and this is basically like the Cantor set and in fact Cantor was an influence on the likes of Kurt Gödel and Alan Turing and so helped quite a bit to make the mathematics necessary for computers. Today fractal mathematics are used in computers for things like memory storage and graphics and as the Cantor set doubles the amount of lines with each iteration, we can see that it is also like doubling of bits in computers, so that it goes 1, 2, 4, 8, 16, 32, 64, 128, 256 etc and so the 16 variables of geomancy, the 64 of I Ching and the 256 of IFA occur for very specific reasons. (256 is 16^2 and the gematria of the Hebrew name for Deuteronomy) While it is beyond the scope of this book, keep in mind there are higher order cubes than the 4D, that we could even assign a dimension to each sephirah so that traditionally a normal cube goes to Chesed or Jupiter, a tesseract to Mars and so continuing this would mean that an 8D cube refers to Yesod. With each step up in to higher dimensions, the number of vertices or points on the hypercubes doubles, just as the binary sequence and so there are 64 points on a 6D cube of Venus or Netzach, 128 on the 7D cube of Hod and Mercury and 256 on an 8D cube of Yesod.

Like Leibniz and William Clifford, Cantor was also very spiritual and metaphysical in his own philosophy and was not afraid to draw on such old ideas and so while he was viciously denounced in his day, today he is recognized as a genius and a pioneer in the mathematics of infinity and fractals and “set theory.” You will have to read the Frater's work to fully understand what I mean, but as the geomantic signs are placed on the Jupiter kamea and each sign represents a shield structured according to the Cantor set, this geomantic Jupiter square then has fractal aspects to it. Cantor also created what is called a “Cantor cube” which is basically imagined as a cube with an infinite number of definable points in it. So as we could extend the Cantor set created by the geomantic shields indefinitely, we can combine the geomantic signs together forever and so we would have a kind of fractal “Cantor cube,” albeit one which is different than what is normally called a “Cantor cube.”

Now this process of combining two different geomantic symbols together to make a third is a means of making a random number generator, or controlled chaos and it turns out that this same basic process is used by computers to do what is called “parity bit checking.” If that isn't strange enough, because they are so balanced, or we might say “symmetrical,” 4D cubes have been used as models to help design computer networks that use “parallel processing.” So while I don't know how to calculate the odds, the fact that two other methods of detecting computer error codes are integral to all this has got to be a sign of something. I don't know enough about computers to really say what is going on, but with digital roots, and Block Linear Self Dual Error Correcting Code and now parity bit checking, all in what seems to be a form of parallel processing it is quite the coincidence! As this processing would draw upon “memory” stored in fractals and as I explained Chesed is the sephirah of memory or the akashic records, it may be information regarding graphics, or the information that creates virtual reality and so from all this, it is starting to look as though we are in a computer program! Keep in mind that the nature of computers means that no matter how advanced they are, there will always be some errors, or the potential for hacking and this seems to be the basis of some Gnostic complaints about physical reality, though personally I do not think so much that we are in a computer program, but that computers are not what people think they are.

As Fibonacci numbers seemed to keep coming up, I found that some researchers have matched up Pi and Phi to the Torah and even Genesis specifically, which is important as according to the Sepher Yetzirha, the cube relates to the first seven days. That is the cube traditionally relates to the six days in which the universe was created, as each day corresponds to a planet and is a face on the cube, while the seventh is Saturn in the centre, for Saturday the sabbath day of rest. There is in fact so much information that most of it is beyond the scope of this book, the study of the Torah is a black hole that can devour your whole life, but Pi and Phi must be kept in mind. For example, the dimensions for the ark of the covenant and Noah's ark both approximate the golden ratio at different scales, while Pi cubed is 31.00627... and so “El” or “god” for Chesed is basically the cube of Pi.

Now “the Tower” is the 16th tarot card, its letter Peh has a value of 80 or 8x10 and corresponds to Mars, or war, for hierarchy means conflict and oppression and so yet again this leads us back in a curious way to Geburah and so 216. The gematria of “Yesod” is also 80 and a Hebrew word for “throne” and so as we will see Yesod is the “foundation” of the tower which has a throne a top it. (81 also has a word that means throne) In many ways Yesod relates to the ark and the 10 commandments as does much gematria in this which I have not gone in to for lack of space, but to get you started for future research, pay attention to the numbers of the cube of the moon. It is said that Moses received the Torah on Sinai from “the Mouth of the Geburah” and as the word Peh means “mouth,” this is the “tower” of “strength,” or “strong tower” mentioned throughout the Torah. So then in the Paraphrase of Shem it says, “by the mouth of the demon that a tower come to be ” and it is easy enough to see how this connects to the Adamic language and the universal fractal.

Doing a tarot divination to find out more about the cube it was clear I had to pay special attention to Tzaddhi, that this letter had something to do with the “bottom” and that Zayin related to the top. I have found multiple ways of interpretation in this regard, but I will leave that for “those with eyes to see,” those who wish to see a fallen tower and have a will to DIY. (I will give one important clue here for further research: 153 is the mystic number of 17 and it is related to Pythagoras and Jesus as explained in the book “Sun of God” by David Fideler)

Those who are especially spiritually driven will find many interesting things by researching online the connections of things which I have introduced in this chapter, but care must be taken to remain skeptical, especially with the more New Agey type stuff you will find, there are definitely mistakes or outright frauds out there. However given that the same numbers come up again and again and from people approaching it from totally different circumstances then the adinkra I decoded, even if some of what they say is wrong, it must be more than a coincidence.

There is still more to all this, and as I am making a big claim, that is these numbers are part of a pattern that makes up the universal fractal, I will have to give more evidence still. You should know that the numbers of these letters 6 and 10 or Vav and Yod relate to Phi, in that $10/6=1.666$ where as $6/10=.6$ and phi and its reciprocal phi are 1.618 and 0.618 (Symmetry) and so while not exact they are like the fractal variables trying to zoom in on the edge of the golden spiral. If you get in to this gematria you will sometimes see numbers that are within one number to a pattern you are trying to find, in fact according to the rules of literal Kabbalah it is permissible to add or subtract 1 to a word's sum so that you can link it to words which are within that range of error. Unless specifically noted I will not do this as due to the limits of space it would greatly increase the interpretations, but also it is generally unnecessary given how much exact gematria I have found, which is of course always preferable. This rule, called the “rule of Colel” does sound like a wishy washy cop out, but is justified in Kabbalah as they do not see 1 as a number, but as symbolic of divine oneness which is everywhere and nowhere, something like how Aleph is 1, yet as the Fool card in the tarot it is 0. (Binary) Keep this in mind if you wish to explore the gematria of the kamea tower/cube yourself, as it will add a lot, especially for those numbers which do not seem to be meaningful. In terms of the universal fractal we could say words which sum to within 1 of each other are self similar and that self similarity is not always exact, the pattern is “similar” but unique and varies just as the pattern of a fractal is always unique at each level of the scale. This can be likened to the Fibonnaci sequence, in which each ratio is self similar to Phi, or the golden number, but is also unique and variable, thus we are trying to define the infinite at higher and higher resolution in mathematical terms, but since numbers are themselves part of universal grammar and the universal fractal, they are always an approximation on the ineffable.

The exact formula for Phi is $(1 + \sqrt{5}) / 2$ and so we see 5 is again an important number here. If we apply numerological reduction to the numbers of the Fibonnaci sequence we get 24 numbers which will repeat ad infinitum, so that no matter how big the scale of Fibbonacci numbers get, they will always reduce to this self similar sequence. They are the following and go in order from left to right.

1,1,2,3,5,8,4,3,7,1,8,9
8,8,7,6,4,1,5,6,2,8,1,9

Now if we add a number from the top row of 12 numbers to the one below it we always get the number 9, if we add all the numbers except that last 9 we get 108, which is 9×12 and to me the reason why we can reduce all multiples of 9 down to 9, is because it is the key to the universal fractal as shown through the kamea of Saturn. All 24 numbers in the Fibonacci sequence add to 117, which gives the gematria of a reference to Enoch, also "Abdiel" an angel from the book of Raziel and "Kebeyah" meaning cube or dice. ($117 =$ the hypoteneuse of a Pythagorean triangle that is 45×108 and we can also see that $216 + 117 = 333$) There are some who have tried to fit this sequence to the shemhamphorash and while I cannot see how it fits with the gematria or numbers of the names of the angels, 72 does come up and it is true that $9 \times 24 = 216$. (The gematria of the 72 angel names does seem to present a pattern, but I will leave that for another) This means after 9 cycles of the 24 reduced forms of the Fibonacci sequence the last number is the reduced form of the 216th Fibonacci number and by another "coincidence" if we take the 216th Fibonacci number, 619220451666590135228675387863297874269396512 and add these 45 numbers together, the sum is itself 216. (notice on the 10th number the start of 666) Where as the 72nd Fibonacci number is 498454011879264 and if we add these 15 numbers we get 72! The groups of 45 and 15 numbers suggests the Saturn square, but there are many other strange codes within this sequence of 24 involving much of the same numerology which I have gone in to.

In particular three codes are produced from it, which then create a total of 72 Fibonacci sequence like codes. By Fibonacci sequence like codes I mean that like the standard Fibonacci code, you can take two numbers and add them to make the next, then you take the second and third numbers to make the fourth and so on taking the last two numbers in the sequence to make the next. (AKA "lucas numbers") So then there are 72 sequences like this which have special numerological properties and while it is too much to go into detail here, I can say that by making a circle with 24 points that correspond to the 24 numbers above (remember the elders encircle Christ in Revelations) and putting four hexagons in the circle, each one connecting every fourth number, you will see it connects the numbers 3-9-6-6-9-3 but also 1-8-1-8-1-8, (81) while the remaining numbers are the numerologically reduced forms of the binary sequence, (1, 2, 4, 8, 16, 32, 64 etc) one hexagon with the sequence going clockwise, the other counter clockwise. So that as it turns out, no matter how many times you double the binary sequence as in the way computers evolve, the numbers always reduce to the same self similar repeating sequence of 6 numbers. (1, 2, 4, 8, 7, 5)

Another code is made by taking the first 24 powers of Phi (1.61803398) and rounding each of them to the nearest whole number to get a sequence of 24 numbers that follow the Fibonacci pattern. When these numbers are reduced you can make a similar circle which will have hexagons that make two patterns, the first 3-9-6-6-9-3 the other 7-2-7-2-7-2 (72) plus two more hexagons for the binary sequence, just as in the first code.

The third most important code is made by multiplying the first code of 24 numbers by 5, or starting the sequence 5, 5, 10, 15 etc and then reducing numerologically, which can make a circle that produces hexagons 3-9-6-6-9-3 and 4-5-4-5-4-5 (45) plus the two binary hexagons just as in the others. (Try making the circles to really get this) These three codes all revolve around the number 9 and we can see they unite the binary and the Fibonacci in a very important way. This and much more was revealed to me by a researcher named Jain (found in the further reading section) after I figured out all that I have written so far and there is so many eery similarities to my own research that I do think there is some kind of connection... due to a dream he even concluded that it opens a portal in time! While this researcher likened the 72 codes he derived to the Shemhamphorash, I also noticed that as we have three codes of 24 numbers, each code having 4 groups of 6 numbers, we have a total 72 numbers in 12 groups of a 6 numbers, just as the Shemhamphorash or Goetic demons are divided.

When working with this sequence as one continuous line of 24 numbers, I also noticed that the consecutive order of numbers produces sums that match all the squares of the numbers 3-9 and which make up the kameas or magick squares, but not only this it goes in order. So if we start on the 22nd digit in the sequence (the number of Hebrew letters) it is an 8 followed by a 1 which combines to make 9. From there we get the 24th number which is another 9, which then cycles to the start of the sequence adding all the numbers till the 4th number which is a 3, so that it all totals to 16. Not all the square numbers start right after each other in the sequence, there is some overlap or gaps in between, so that for example Mars, or 25 is made up of 5 numbers starting at the 3rd number and goes to the 8th number, but there is never more than a 3 number gap and it always goes in order from left to right. The Sun starts at the 8th number, Venus at the 15th number, Mercury starts on the 4th, while the Moon starts on the 9th and ends on the 23rd number, the same place as where Saturn starts. So I can see with this there is certain symbolic reasons why each square would start where it does, but I will leave that for you to find once you have read through this chapter. Once I explain the meaning of 14 below, if you mark out this pattern yourself, you will see the end points of each planet's square in the sequence also has symbolically meaningful ordinal numbers associated with them.

All this was interesting enough, but it was not tied to the cube of space so much as important numbers in general, however I did find that if I did a numerological reduction on the kamea numbers (IE the sums of the columns or the sums of the squares etc) that they would organize the kameas in the same manner as the hexagons of the 24 Fibonacci numbers. That is the kameas of Saturn, Sun and Moon (the 3rd, 6th and 9th sephiroth) would almost always reduce to either a 3, 6, or 9 and this was also true of the various reduced totals that I got from the reduced forms of the kameas as well. Remember that reduced kameas are the normal kameas with all their numbers, for example 1-36 being in the same places, but numerologically reduced and so when I further reduced the sums of these kameas, it fit the same kind of pattern. Generally speaking they were always the same number and the only squares with that number, though for the sum of a column there would be one for each number, 3, 6, and 9. When I looked at the sum of the columns, or the number of numbers on the regular kameas of the remaining planets, (Jupiter, Mars, Venus, Mercury) they would be numbers that reduce to the reduced forms of the binary sequence. The only exception to this would be the sums of the four corners of the squares, in which case all seven kameas produced numbers pertaining to the reduced form of the binary sequence, with the Sun, Moon and Saturn being the only ones with a value of 2. So by reducing numbers I got from the sums of both the reduced forms of the kameas and the regular kameas, I could clearly see that the Sun, Moon and Saturn stood out and that the reduced numerology did fit quite well with the numbers produced by the 24 reduced Fibonacci numbers.

I took this one step further and multiplied all these numbers by 6 corresponding to the 6 faces of a cube and found that when I reduced them, they all turned in to a 3, 6, or 9, though with the same groupings between the Saturn, Sun and Moon kameas. (The sum of the perimeter was an exception to all this, though it could be a sign of some other pattern) This may sound confusing and in a way it is, but it is pretty simple when you know what you are doing and so to really get a feel for this, I suggest you write out all the numbers for the kameas, both regular and reduced (IE, the sum of a row, the sum of square, the sum of the corners, the centre numbers) then take these numbers and numerologically reduce them. You can also take all these numbers and multiply by 6, which will produce some relevant gematria numbers, though many are simply too large to correspond to any one word.

There are a few more things that need to be pointed out regarding the Fibonacci sequence, for example the Aleph, Mem and Shin axes of the cube are the 1st, 13th and 21st letters of the Hebrew alphabet. I also want to point out that the 5th Fibonacci number is 5, the 6th is 8, and the 8th is 21, but also that the 9th is 34, which is the sum of each row of the magick square of Jupiter, and also a magick octagram that has the numbers 1-16 on it, because as you are beginning to see, these numbers are variables in a fractal and so come up again and again in different forms. 55 is the 10th Fibonacci number just as it is the mystic number of 10, while 144 is the 12th Fibonacci number and the square of 12. If we take the 24 Fibonacci numbers and put them in to three rows of 8 numbers, we will see that these three rows will line up three 1's and three number 8's from the 24 and among the other things I have said, know that 111 is the gematria of AUM, the sound of the Sri Yantra, it is also "enna" in Greek which means "nine" and the gematria for the Hebrew word for "Spiral" סלזוני.

As I explained somewhat before as part of the urim and thummim form of divination and as part of this there was a breastplate of the Jewish high priest, this breastplate was called the "khoshen." The gematria of "khoshen" is 358 and while it was a perfect square it was divided in a 3X4 grid, on which the 12 jewels needed to talk to "god" were arranged. In the book, "The True and Invisible Rosicrucian Order," (Pg 215) Paul Foster Case says that this arrangement was according to a "geometrical formula" based on the number sequence 0,1,2,3,5,8,13, 21, 34,55 and that from this the numbers 3, 5, 8 go to make make 358. This of course is the Fibonacci sequence and while 3, 5, and 8 put next to each other make 358, there is clearly more to it than that, but I am at a loss as to how this all works. (258 =Hiram= the squares of 5, 8 and 13 added together) Surely it must be important and certainly ties in with the rest of all this, but unfortunately Mr. Case never explained it much more than that, except to say it was too complicated to go in to in the book and I have not been able to find an explanation anywhere else. This number 358 has very relevant gematria associated with it, including the Hebrew word for messiah, translated in Greek as Christos, but also the word for snake, as in the snake in the garden of Eden. While the Gnostics saw the snake as a savior figure, even Jesus himself, for Christians too this idea is seen in the brazen serpent of Moses, crucified on a Tau cross in Exodus, which was taken by early Christians as an omen of Jesus. Note also that bronze is made from copper and tin, corresponding to Venus and Jupiter and that these planets are at either end of the Mem axis of the cube, which corresponds to the hanged man tarot card. (4+20+40=64) It is also the gematria of the phrase "son of a woman" in reference to Hiram Abiff, and also the Hebrew for "renewing" which is the name of the 26th path corresponding to the letter Ayin and so the 15th tarot card "the devil." This shows a unification of the Satanic and godly characters, 26 YHVH and the devil, while the snake and Christ are one, somehow then all these words are thus related to the golden ratio and the breastplate.

Pi is made up of 3.1415... or 22/7 or Hebrew letters/planets and the tablets of creation, we can also see this in Revelations in the 22 chapters/7 seals, trumpets and and all the rest of the 7 symbolism in there. We can also see that Moses first learns the name of "god" in Exodus 3:14-15 when "he" reveals it to be "I am that I am" which in Hebrew corresponds to Eheieh, the god name of Kether which has a gematria of 21 and is the highest and first sephirah, bringing us back once again to the world card and Saturn. Keeping in mind there are no decimals in the Hebrew number system, if like Mason's we are rebuilding the temple of Solomon in our brain, we should know that 314 is also the number of acacia, the DMT rich plant who's wood was used to build the tabernacle and the ark of the covenant, a plant which some believe was used in the middle east as an ayahuasca analogue. (314 is also magus, or magos in Greek, but also gamos, as in hieros gamos) I already mentioned Acacia's connection to Isis and Osiris, but it is also a symbol of Astarte and Asherah and is the wood from which her poles or ritual spine would be made, complete with DMT just like spinal fluid. (Cedar was imported from Tyre in huge amounts to make the temple of Solomon, but also make the ark of Noah, in Kabbalah it also corresponds to Jupiter.)

I also want to mention that some people believe the golden ratio can be used to predict the stock market and try to use it that way, that magick squares are also used in statistical analysis suggesting that our own behavior works according to mathematical principles... at least until we acquire anarkhos. Fibonacci numbers have been linked to quantum physics in regards to both time and matter as well as "orbital angular momentum" and so it seems the ancients were quite right to view it as a fundamental aspect of reality. From magick squares mathematicians have developed factor analysis and combinatorial mathematics and by using them we can also work out probabilities as in quantum physics. (Which makes sense given the divination aspects) Magick squares have been used in quantum physics in a variety of ways, so far from what I can find they are relevant to Bell's theorem and quantum entanglement, quantum channels and quantum field theory, they also show relationships to quantum particles (as in the adinkra) and other things I am not going to pretend I understand!

As Revelations is about the end of time, it is also a map of time through this fractal cube of space pattern, the symbols in the book corresponding to the numbers in the squares. All together this knowledge allows for the coagulation of the stone, the Lapiz Philosophorum, for it is the truth and the truth shall set you free. This philosophers stone is the cornerstone from which we build a foundation of 9 and these numbers which I provide are through gematria, temurah and notarikon the key stones of the Torah and sacred geometry and so the universal fractal written in the Adamic language before the confusion, the key to which is the ark of knowledge that preserved the wisdom of Enoch and the “lost word” through his offspring.

Now as I promised to explain, 14 is the card number of Temperence which reduces to 5 (hierophant and Geburah), is ruled by Sagitarius and as the letter samekh shares the axis with Taurus in the octohedron inside the cube of space, we will also remember that Taurus is joined with Sagitarius in the cube adinkra. In between Sagitarius and Scorpio is also the direction of the center of the galaxy, while Gemini and Taurus is the direction of it's outer most area. There are 14 points on the rhombic dodecohedron and 14 cards in each tarot suit, Samekh is the 15th letter of the alphabet and its value is 60 or 10 times Vav and as you know, 60 is the number of seconds and minutes we use for time. When spelled out, Samekh is 600 or 120 and it unites Tiphereth and Yesod as the 25th path and as the mystic number of 15, 120 also corresponds to the 15th path belonging to the letter Heh and the sum of the rows of the kamea of Saturn.

This makes even more sense when we know that the word “gematria” is derived from the Greek word for geometry, and that sephiroth means “enumerations.” There are it turns out 24 factors of 360, which means that with a circle of 360 degrees we can make 22 geometric figures from these numbers by dividing it accordingly. (All these factors are important in gematria, most of which I have already gone in to, just as the 16 factors of 216.) Dividing by 1 or 2 does not create a geometric shape and so 3 or Binah is the first shape which is a triangle with 120 degree angles and so there are 22 shapes which could correspond to the Hebrew letters, or the 24 Greek letters if we include the 1 and 2. Some Occultists have pointed out the 22 Hebrew letters could also correspond to the 5 Platonic solids + 13 Archimedean solids + 4 Kepler-Poinsot solids. Another important clue would be the work of the chemist Peter Plichta, a man who found that by putting the numbers 1-144 in 6 concentric circles, (exactly like a wheel!) with each circle having 24 numbers, then the prime numbers create a pattern along 4 axis, or 8 arms that can create a Templar cross, the kicker being that there are 34 primes! You will have to look this up online but he even ties it in to the periodic table and the patterns created by the elements and so it suggests a kind of Quantum Alchemy with the adinkra.

In numerical terms, as the universal fractal makes up nature, it must be made up of numbers which reoccur in nature and so must be self similar with Pi, Phi, the golden ratio, magick squares, Platonic solids, vowels, prime numbers, and sound/light frequencies and these may in fact be some of it's first iterations. (DNA is quite self similar with this numerology as well) Researching magick squares and the cube of space, Phi and Pi you will find many things, but it should be remembered that it is not unique to Kabbalah, that it was part of all Indo-European religions which is one reason why Christianity had to wipe them out. Apart from maybe the Hindu and Buddhist numerologies, Kabbalah is just the best preserved tradition. I will give you the keys, but there are far too many mysteries, gates or doors you can open to explain them all here and it is you who must go through them.

Music and prime numbers have already been linked by mathematicians (Riemann Hypothesis) and some how it must all fit together, but that is basically the premise of science, that all patterns of nature can be explained by a unified coherent causality. The planets and so the kameas have their tones and while the sigils of the planets which are generated by the kameas are thought to be created according to numerological means, they do look more than a little bit like cymatic patterns, (Hekate's wheel does as well) in fact both cubes and the magick square grids can even show up from cymatic vibrations, such as Mercury's 8X8 grid. Some researchers (Such as Dr. Richard S. Cook of Berkeley University) show how the golden ratio structures the I Ching and so in some ways the magick square of Saturn would also be related. So then since both the I Ching and geomancy use the same mathematics and are connected to this square, it is a pretty strong hint that geomancy is in some way connected to the golden ratio as well. We have already come across the number 432, but it was also the number of Hz which was the standard tuning of "A" set by Pythagoras and twice 216. The doubling binary sequence of 1, 2, 4, 8 etc is also suggestive of musical notes in that Pythagoras discovered that notes go up in the scale of octaves through a process of doubling, that is there are whole notes, half notes, quarter notes, eighth notes and sixteenth notes. While I would be the first to say that skepticism is required, I have come to this line of reasoning quite by accident and after dismissing many similar ideas of others, but if you study Occult symbolism long enough, you are bound to find such patterns in different places, patterns which people have found not knowing about the rest. For example, in the 18th century there were various dice games used for composing music, called Musikalisches Würfelspiel these games were said to be used by even Mozart, Bach and Haydn but are ultimately based in the logic systems of Raymond Lull. If mathematics can be used to describe the world of forms, then any forms inherent in numbers can be used to describe all of this world and so the ancients reasoned we should have a base 10 numerical system because it seems to fit the fractals found in nature best. (especially the human hands) The ancients eventually founded science on these principles and while they may not have gotten everything right, we haven't either, and in many ways we are just now catching up to their understanding of the fractal principles of information.

8 represents the binary world primarily, though also even numbers or multiples of 2, while 9 along with 3 and 6 represents the odd world and that of irrational numbers like Phi and Pi and so $2+3=5$ which is the centre of the mandala, the root of which is the golden spiral fractal. This all ties together in a very nice way when we consider the number 144000 which is linked to the new Jerusalem in the book of Revelations. This number is a good marker of the self similarity created by the squares of the numbers 1-9 and so after I explain this, try calculating it yourself to get more gematria numbers at each step, keeping in mind the kameas of these numbers. So for example $144/16=9$ while $1440/16/9=10$, which corresponds to the 10 sephiroth. $14400/36=400/25=16$ (400 being the value of the letter Tau) and finally $144000/36/25/16/9=1.11111111111111$ and so this is the formula for the number of elect "virgins" who are close to Jesus. (See Rev chapters 7 and 14, while the new Jerusalem is 21) Created another way we can say $10 \times 9 \times 25 \times 64 = 144000$ or 10 sephiroth $X3^2 = 90$ (the degrees of a cube, we could also stick a Saturn kamea in each sephirah) so that $10 \times 3^2 \times 5^2 \times 8^2 = 144000$ and you will notice these three squares are all Fibonacci numbers, 358. You can keep adding zeros to 144 and this type of division scheme will go to 64, but skip 49, and at this point it starts to end in powers of 5, which as the middle of 1-9 is like the golden ratio. (144000 is not divisible by 7 or 81, though 50 and 80 do come up.) In terms of time there are also 720 minutes in twelve hours and 43200 seconds in 12 hours and so none of this is random and is the basis of our conception of time, with the Goetia and other grimoires going in to great detail about the importance of "planetary hours" and how spirits must be evoked at the proper times according to astrology.

Keeping this in mind there is another interesting way to get this number which is $9 \times (5 \times 5 \times 5) \times (64 \times 2) = 144000$ and so as $8 \times 8 = 64$ we see the same three Fibonacci numbers with two tablets of 64, which if you remember happens to fit the ten commandments which are written with 128 letters. While I already gave the dimensions of the tablets in relation to the cube of the Sun, it is still significant numerologically as the numbers are more real than the actual tablets, each kamea is ultimately a self similar representation of the seven tablets of creation and so since 8 has special properties that 6 does not, it is an important layer, just as the other numbers have their own meaning, their own "seals." This formula then represents the two 64 tablets which are like Moses' tablets and so the "book of life," in which the names of the 144000 are written and we might say these virgins are like the citizens of the New Jerusalem. (This is sort of like the interpretation of the Jehovah's Witness's and as that religion of the "watch tower" was founded by a Mason, he had some inside knowledge.) Scaling the other way this would mean each of the 128 letters on the tablets correspond to a 5X5X5 Mars/Geburah cube and each of these cubes is made of 125 smaller cubes, each one with an octagram with an extra one in the centre. The two tablets are the binary set, one like the negative of the other or 1 and 0, thus representing duality and when we remember that the 24 reduced Fibonacci numbers contain one hexagon of the reduced binary sequence going clockwise and another going counterclockwise, we can see these two hexagons relate to the two tablets. (Phi is the 21st letter of the Greek alphabet and looks like 0 over top of a 1, or like an Ouroboros snake over a pole in an oPHite form of Tantra) The gematria of 128 has a variety of important words, but most relevant here is that as there are 4 worlds, each with 32 paths, $4 \times 32 = 128$ and so the two tablets represent the whole Kabbalistic cosmology and so the whole Torah. The total number of letters in the verses which contain the 10 commandments is 620, which is the gematria of "Kether," though it is true the commandments are listed twice in the Torah. The two first verses introduces the 10 commandments and in both these places are identical, each having 64 letters and so if we put these letters on a Mercury kamea, the first letter starting in the top right, then going to the left and on to the lower rows, (as is normal with Hebrew) the four letters which are in the corners would total 216 and spell the Hebrew word for "fear" which would relate to Geburah, as in "god" rules through fear to impose the law.

This makes two ways in which the binary is created from the Fibonacci sequence, but I will show some more ways in which 6 and 8 are the key to uniting the binary, with the unifying principle of the Fibonacci. (This makes more sense if you draw out the circle of 24 numbers with the four hexagons as I suggested) The reduced hexagon binary sequence goes 1, 2, 4, 8, 7, 5 so that 5 is 32 reduced, and so the 24 have a six iteration sequence. 128 also equals 2 to the power of 7, while 64 is 2 (the number of digits in a binary system) to the power of 6, so that 64 is the seventh in the binary sequence and the start of a new cycle of reduced numbers, as in its reduced form it is 1. As the start of a new cycle 64 can therefore go in the centre of the hexagons, but as there are two binary sequences going in opposite directions, if we multiply it by two, we get two opposite hexagons with 64 in the centre, totalling 128. This also fits with the symbolism of the letter Zayin, which has a value of 7 but corresponds to sixth tarot card called the lovers, which as I said corresponds to Gemini and is ruled by Mercury or the 8th sephirah Hod. 8 is the sixth Fibonacci number which happens to fit Michael the arch angel of the Sun, who for some mysterious reason corresponds to Hod, while Raphael the archangel of Mercury corresponds to Tiphereth. From Binah to Hod, or 3 to 8 on the tree of life is 6 sephiroth total and we see that 3 and 8 are the start and end of the same formula as it is written using only "prime factors"

$2^7 \times 5^3 = 16000$ which is multiplied by $3^2 = 144000$ (Remember also that a cube has 8 points and 6 faces) The 6 symbolism was previously shown to represent the New Jerusalem with its walls in the Sun cube and so I have now connected it to the 144000 elect, a number which thus incorporates prime numbers, the binary sequence, the Fibonacci sequence and the squares of numbers, and so it ties it all together, along with all the other symbolism of Revelations. As there are 216 cubic blocks that make up the cube of the sun, 216×6 faces = 1296 which when multiplied by 111 = 143856 or 144 less than 144000 and we will remember the walls of the New Jerusalem are 144 cubits thick, that in Rev 22:2 the tree of life found in the city has 12 types of fruit and gives fruit every month, or 144 in a year. It is easy enough to see that $12 \times 12 = 144$ and so square numbers are important, but perhaps most relevant of all is that $144000 / 666 = 216.216216216...$ and so on, so then we can see all these numbers have very specific meaning behind them.

Now researchers have also noticed that not only is there a repeating sequence of 24, but if you take the last digit of the first 60 Fibonacci numbers this creates a cycle which will repeat with the next 60 numbers, ad infinitum. (the last two digits repeat in a cycle of 300, the last three digits repeat every 1500 and the last four repeat every 15000 etc) These 60 repeating numbers sum to 280, which just so happens to be the sum of the squares of the numbers from 3-9, or the sum of all the magick squares and the gematria of Sandalphon, the arch angel of Malkuth. (280-216=64) Searching out the meaning of the cycle of 60 led me to a researcher named Lucien Khan who had made great progress by arranging the 60 numbers around a circle just like the minute markers of a clock. Here I will point out the Sumerians invented the sexagesimal system which counts in base 60 and was used by many for astronomical work. So if you are to do this yourself you will notice the prominent positions of the 0's at 90 degrees from each other, so that by merging two identical circles of the 60 cycle you can make a vesica pisces by aligning them according to the 0's and some of the 5's. This produces incredible gematria, dividing the vesica pisces in to groups with significant numbers of these Fibonacci numbers, but also producing sums that are very significant, so that the two outer arcs are each important, both apart and together, and the two inner arcs are also important, both apart and together. You can find his work in the further reading section or attempt this yourself, but you will need to make sure the divisions of the circle are each 6 degrees apart, then when there are two zeros put together these are not added to the number of numbers, or when two of the same number have the same point on the diagram, you only count one of them in to your totals. (IE. two 5's only add 5 to the sum of their portion of the designs) In this way you can use the circles of 60 to produce the "seed of life" and "Metatron's cube" as well and this will produce astonishing gematria. For example, by making the "seed of life" with these circles, this researcher pointed out that three layers of flower designs are created, not including the 0's each flower has 108 numbers and these 108 numbers sum to 540, to which I noticed that $3 \times 108 = 324$, which we saw gives the gematria for Metatron! There are also four 0's in the cycle of 60, so that there are 56 proper numbers, which of course is the number of minor arcana cards. Now $1440 = 24 \times 60$ and so the number of minutes in a day, but also the sum of all the degrees on a star tetrahedron. While this researcher was unaware of this, and as far as I know he was unaware of the researcher I found regarding the cycle of 24, he also came to the conclusion that this is a map of time! So then taking the lessons I learned regarding the cycle of 24, I knew I could divide the 60 using hexagons and so got 10 hexagons which definitely do show themselves to have underlying patterns, but in a different way than the 24. If you rearrange the 60 numbers in to different numbers of rows you will see patterns, so much in fact that I can hardly begin to list it all here, but if you research the 24 and also pay attention to what I have done, you will have plenty of ideas of where to go with this. I will add though that with 2 rows of 30 numbers the tops and bottoms all add to 10, that 30 rows of 2 numbers creates a pattern where if you add two consecutive numbers, the next number will be the last digit of their sum. (Lucas numbers are in this pattern for sure) With 4 rows of 15 numbers, the 0's and 5's line up and each column sums to 20 etc, but this is only the beginning. The following is the 60 numbers from left to right, so that each vertical column is a hexagon on the circle going in the clockwise manner and while there is no binary sequence, it is definitely not random.

Now in 1 Kings 7:23 we get the dimensions for a giant bowl propped on 12 oxen which stood outside the temple of Solomon "measuring ten cubits from rim to rim and five cubits high. It took a line of thirty cubits to measure around it." (The Jewish encyclopedia points out that such bowls were common in Babylonian temples and symbolic of the Absu) From this I considered the idea that the bowl was half a sphere and so calculated it's volume to 261.8, with 261 being Moriah, the name of the mountain on which Hiram died and the temple of Solomon was built, but also Adam+Chavah (Eve) +Cain+Abel and then also Jubela+Jubelo+Jubelum who are the three workman who murdered Hiram Abiff. However as we know how to calculate the circumference of a circle using Pi, we can see the bible here is wrong in it's math! Now others point this out to show the bible contains mistakes, but considering this I knew from Kabbalah that such discrepancies are a signal to pay closer attention, so then given that I could see that Pi had been rounded to 3, I started to look at the chapter in general.

This chapter introduces Hiram Abiff in the bible and gives many important details on the construction of the temple and so I knew there were important Masonic codes here. So I noticed that just previous to this, starting at verse 15 we are given the dimensions for the pillars which stood on the portico of the temple, pillars which I knew came from Enoch. As the circumference of one pillar was 12, by dividing by 3 instead of Pi I got a diameter of 4, so then I could calculate the volume of this pillar as a cylinder, which is 18 cubits high, so that $V=216!$ As far as I know, no one else has openly written of this, and together the two pillars are 432. However if we continue reading we notice Solomon added a capital that was 5 cubits high and so the height is now 23 cubits and $V=276$, with this being the mystic number of 23rd path which corresponds to the letter Mem and gives a gematria of a name for "the moon," but also "YHVH our righteousness." (2 pillars is 552 which is not very interesting, but gives "Satan" in Greek) Then 7 chains are added linking the capitals of the two pillars, then more decorations are added to the capitals adding another 4 cubits of height each, so that at 27 cubits high $V=324$, which we saw before is the gematria of Metatron, (AKA Enoch, who created the pillars) while two pillars is 648 and is the gematria of Solomon+Hiram Abiff. So then knowing from Masonic myth that the pillars relate to the cube, I saw that 432 for the pillars +216 for the 2 tablets=648. While if we were to treat the two pillars as having square sides $A=4 \times 8=32$ and so $32 \times 27=864$ or 432 each, then if we add 216 for the tablets, we get $1080=108 \times 10=216 \times 5$ which can be found on the numerologically reduced Sun cube, as 180 is the sum of each face or sun kamea when reduced and so $180 \times 6=1080$, with 1081 being the gematria of Tiphereth! I "coincidentally" discovered this within the hour of finding the sacred geometry information about the cycle of 60, which just so happens to produce numbers like 36, 72, 216, 324, 864 and 1080! Using a radius of 2 and a Pi of 3, try calculating the surface area of a cylindrical pillar with all 3 heights, then it's "lateral surface area," then calculate the surface area with regular Pi and among other things, you will find Pi or actually 314.16, but as it turns out, 314 is also the gematria for a variant spelling of Metatron!

As I knew that Masons symbolize the pillars with the Sun at the top of one and the Moon at the top of another, that some numbers in this like 216 relate to the Sun, while 276 is "the Moon" then it is most curious that the diameter of the real sun is approximately 864,752 miles, which is not to far off from 864,000 while the moon's diameter is 2159.89 miles, or rounded to 2160 miles! (remember we are dealing with fractals, which are not exact, but "self similar") Now given that the Fibonacci is the fractal of nature, the gematria of the sum of the 72 names of the Shemhamphorash angels including their finals is 14683 and so as 24^2 is 576, then by multiplying by 576×25 we get 14400 which leaves 283 extra, which is the gematria of "the ark of the lord." If none of the "finals" are counted, we have the 216 letters and their gematria at 9623 and so $576 \times 16=9216$ leaving a remainder of 407 which is the gematria of "tebah" which means "ark" as in Noah's ark, where as $81 \times 117=9477$ which when subtracted from $9623=146$ which is "sun and moon." Where as 20303 is the gematria of the verse in Exodus (including finals) from which the Shemhamphorash are derived, so given that 25, 16 and 81 have been used for the others this might be a sign that we would get another square number, but the closest is $576 \times 36=20736$ and this is 433 too much, so while this is close enough for Colel to 432, let us see what else can be done. $280 \times 72=20160$ which is 143 short of our goal, but $256 \times 78=19968$ which when subtracted from 20303=335 and "har Sinai" or mount Sinai. There is undoubtedly many other secrets in these numbers and the numbers given in the description of the temple, so keep all this in mind and that in your calculations, Pi should be checked as if it is 3. But what ever happened to those decimal place digits from Pi? Well the first 144 digits of Pi after the decimal place add to 666!

Some other researchers have also noted that you can make a torus from a magick square by taking out the centre number or numbers, this then acts like the hole in the donut, or a singularity so that the edges curve around to the centre. So this made me realize that as the kameas are stacked on each other, these are like the apertures in the subterranean chambers of Enoch or the centre axle which unites the wheels as with Raymond Lull. I found that if you take the sum of the perimeter of a kamea and divide it by the sum of its centre, you will get a meaningful number, the sum of these 7 numbers is 96 bringing us back to the Jupiter cube and sum of the geomantic dashes. The sum of the centres of the 7 kameas=323 which is close to 324 and Metatron, (on reduced kameas the sum is 70) but the sum of all the numbers on the 7 kameas is 7798 and when divided by 323=24.142... Where as if we take the sum total of a single row on each planet's kamea, together they total 1029 and when we divide this by 323 we get 3.18, which is not so far from Pi, but $1029 \times 323 = 332367$ the root of which is 576.512... and so while these numbers are not even, it is suspicious given that $96 \times 6 = 576$ as on the geomantic cube of Jupiter and this itself is 24^2

At any rate, as each kamea can be a torus, each kamea torus can go within the larger ones, exactly like the stained glass skin of the Ouroboros that grows with time and which I related at the start of this chapter as being turned inside out. I also realized if we take the two 64 tablets and flip one and put them together as opposites, we can make a torus with two opposite polarities, with the four numbers from the centre of the square removed representing a black hole or pit and which is the centre of the donut. If we look at the traditional sigil of the Mercury kamea, we can see it shows an 8 symbolism like 8 points from the centre and as $360/8=45$, this would be the degrees of the angles the arms or spokes, not unlike an octagram, so that two kameas stuck together would have two Mercury polarities. While a wheel or torus can be created with all the kameas, this one definitely has some relevant gematria worth looking up. For the most part I will leave that for those who have a will to find such things, but I will say that this is done by checking the rows and columns of numbers that come out from the four centre numbers, along with the four diagonal rows that come off the centre, to make a total of 12 numbers derived, plus the 6 numbers created by adding two opposite spokes in the wheel this creates. (That is the sum of a row minus the centre black hole numbers that are in those rows) 4 of these numbers have the same value as 4 others, creating four main quadrants with the diagonal rows running through them and so if we add the number from the centre, to the main cross of two rows and two columns, it totals 130, which is the sum of the four corners on the Mercury kamea.

There is more to all these numbers and I will say that they will provide the names, Michael and also Abaddon, two characters from Revelations, but also importantly Paimon, AKA Azazel. Paimon=187=the total number of chapters in the Torah, it is also the gematria of "ophanim" which means "wheels" and is a choir of angels corresponding to Chokmah and they are the wheels on the throne/chariot. (The sum of the factors of 187 is 216) This is especially interesting as Michael is not only the 42nd Shemhamphorash angel, but is probably the most famous of all angels, he fights the devil in the form of a dragon in Revelations. Michael also turns up in the Testament of Solomon when the king calls upon his god Sabaoth to help him defeat a demon who is stealing the pay of a boy who is helping to build the temple, a boy who is the son of the "master workman" and so is quite probably the son of Hiram Abiff. Michael gives Solomon a ring bearing the "seal of Solomon," which is variously described as a hexagram or in the Testament a pentagram, or "pentalpha" and at any rate it is used to command the demons. So if we have ourselves two opposite tablets, then it does make sense symbolically that we could associate one with the Shemhamphorash, the other with the Goetia. ($72 \times 2 = 144$) Along with the four groups of 18, the Shemhamphorash are organized into 9 choirs hierarchically, with 8 angels in each choir so that the 8 seraphim angels as the highest rank could each rule over a row on one Mercury kamea, with the remaining 64 angels each getting a number. The Goetia demons are not so neatly organized, though there are seven orders of demons, they have widely variant numbers on each order, (and different versions of the Goetia) we could thus put them on the Mercury kamea a few ways, but probably what makes the most sense is that since kings are the highest rank, 8 of them would rule over a row. (Baal and Paimon are both kings and while Astaroth is a duke in Goetia, in other sources he is a King, I say "he" here because the demon is not really the goddess, but an impersonation for the banking cult.)

The Solomonic “Grimoirium Verum” depicts the $7 \times 24 = 168$ planetary hours on a donut grid, and so we have the Solomonic map of time used to evoke the demons according to their astrological correspondence. If the 168 hours were put on to a kamea torus then 168 can be evenly divided on either the Saturn, Jupiter, or Mars squares when they have their centre numbers removed, and this is the 3rd, 4th and 5th, sephiroth and so as we will see, the relationship between these three squares is very important. Also, $168 - 24 = 144 = 72 \times 2$ and $13 \times 13 = 169$ or 168 with the middle number removed, while if we use two squares to make the torus, two Jupiter kameas are the only ones which will work for 168.

There are doubtless many ways the torus relates to the numbers in this chapter, for example if you calculate the volume of a Mercury kamea torus it has a major radius of 2.5 numbers or units on the grid and a minor radius of 1.5 units and so $V=111.03$, where as it's surface area is 148.04 with the meaning of 148 being found below. If $V=2080$ as with the sum of the Mercury square, then major $R=260$ the sum of a Mercury kamea row and minor $R=.64!$ Where as when $V=666$ the major $R=111.54$ and minor $R=.55$ and when $V=216$ then major $R=36.17$ and minor $R=.55$, if $V=216$ and major $R=25920$ years for the great year, then minor $R=.021$ for the stone, if $V=72$ and major $R=25920$ then minor $R=.012$ for the number of signs in the zodiac. Now While using whole numbers is often good enough, if we remember that there are no decimal places in Hebrew, we can sometimes find the best gematria by disregarding it, other times we have to do some rounding. So then when $V=3.1415$ or Pi and major $R=1.618$ or the “golden number” Phi, then minor $R=.31$ or the gematria of El and when $V=248$ and major $R=Pi$, then minor $R=2$ which again indicates binary. If $V=24$ and major $R=117$ then minor $R=.1$ and likewise if $V=60$ and major $R=280$ then minor $R=.1$ and so this may well turn out to be the key to understanding the Fibonacci sequence.

So from this kind of thinking we can see the 216 letters in the Shemhamphorash are the “leaves of the tree of life” which we saw in Revelations has 12 fruits, it is also the 216 traditional groupings of the Rig Veda which is found in 10 books, with the hymns written on the leaves of the Banyan Tree

Akshaya Vata. (comparable to the kalpavriksha tree) A Banyan tree is a type of fig tree like the tree of knowledge and its roots grow in to the air and its branches in to the ground, which just so happens to match a physical tree found by archeologists in the UK. This “seahenge” is a ceremonial area with a tree that is upside down just like the Qabbalistic tree of life, but which was left by the indigenous people centuries before Celtic migrations. (Thus here is more evidence of the prehistoric roots of Pagan Tantra) These leaves of the tree of life can also be compared to the leaves of laurel or oak, which the Sibyls of Apollo would use for divination as depicted in the Aeneid and also the “mes tree” of Enki and so this symbolism must refer to something very special if it's in so many religions.

3 dice were used for divination by Greek Theurgists and probably Gnostics who would use the roll to find a verse in Homer's Iliad which is broken up in to 24 books, a practice called “Sortes Homericae.” The Iliad was written using dactylic hexameter, which breaks a line up in to 6 dactyls which generally have 3 syllables each. The Aeneid with its 10 books was also used for divination and called Sortes Vergilianae and at times dice were used similarly by Romans. There are also 24 letters in many ancient alphabets such as that of the Norse and Greek's and the Gnostics associated each elder of Revelations with a letter of the Greek alphabet as part of their own Qabbalah. (There are also 24 vertebrae in the spine, seven of which are in the neck.) Indeed ancient poetry was far more complex than today, making use of complicated meters and systems and though they are not as well preserved, we might well wonder what codes could be in such works as the Poetic Edda. (To his credit, Snorri also explains the structure of Norse poetry in the story of Kvasir)

In terms of the numerology of Plato, in his Republic, (VIII, 546a- 547c) he also explains the “bride number” which most scholars believe to be 216, though it is obscured by his choice of words, he speaks of both squares and cubes and it is surely important to all this. Others have argued that he is referring to $60^4 = 12,960,000$ but the truth is probably that both numbers are important in different ways and all possibilities are intended and refer to an underlying mathematical pattern involving Plato's conception of time. Later, (IX, 587b-588a) Plato also explains that 9 is the number of the Tyrant and that a king is 729 times or 9^3 happier than a Tyrant and so here again we have square and cubic numbers and while I cannot claim to understand all of this, I think I have shed some light below. Scholars think Plato was influenced by Pythagoras who in turn was influenced by the Babylonians, but while the Babylonians did figure it in to their cosmology, I have found that Homer could have been a more direct influence.

Every 72 years one degree is made in the “procession of the equinox” in what is called the great “Platonic year,” a process that is now leading us in to the age of Aquarius. (72 was also symbolic of the life span of a human) If we take the sum of 360 degrees on this scale we get 25920 years which is 216×120 , so that each age or aeon or sign lasts 2160 years and this also relates to the cube in that this shape has 24 angles of 90 degrees each, which totals 2160 degrees. The four corners of the Saturn kamea sum to 20, as in the dimensions of the holy of holies, so when multiplied by 6 for the faces of the cube, it totals 120 and this is also the number of degrees on each angle of a hexagon, so that $6 \times 120 = 720$. If we add up the numbers 1-9 found on the Saturn kamea we get 45 which is one 8th of the zodiac and each row on the 3x3 square adds up to 15 which is 1/24th the zodiac and so the number 24 is certainly an important key to all this numerology.

So then we might surmise the 24 books of the Iliad might be broken up by some of these numbers, for example as there is 15693 verses in the Iliad it can be divided by 216 a total of about 72.6527 times. 15693 does not have many factors, but the factors of 216 are numerous as we have seen, so for example (I will spare you all the decimal places) 432×36 and 108×144 are thus linked while 60×261 is also close. This would be the 260 of a Mercury kamea row, but also there are also 261 “nets” for a tesseract and as we saw this is the volume of the bowl in front of the temple of Solomon. The root of $15693 = 125.271...$ or 5^3 and change and when 15693 is divided by 3 as this correlates the number of syllables used in the meter, it thus gives us 5231 which seems to be an important key in this as it is close enough to 72×72 and 81×64 and 16×325 . (The sum of a Mars kamea) As the Gnostics were using 3 dice they had 56 possible unique rolls and so $15693/56=280.23214...$ while $15693/21=747.285$ with 747 giving some very pertinent gematria like “wheels” while $5231/56=93.41$ with 93 being very important to Crowley and $5231/21=249$ with 248 being very important as we have seen.

There is no doubt further numerology here as well, though I haven't gone in depth in to it, but given the meter and the fact that Greek letters are also numbers, it is likely to be a complicated code which would require someone who speaks ancient Greek. There are also seemingly irrelevant repetitions of certain phrases and descriptions in the Iliad, repetitions which I really doubt are random and we do know the Greeks had various gematria like systems which predate Judaism. One Gnostic system is explained by Hippolytus in Book IV of Heresies and as he specifically relates it to the names of characters from the Iliad, it is very likely to be important in this. The order of Greek letters or “ordinal value” can also determine their numeric value so that Alpha=1 and Omega=24 as well as other systems which are described in some detail by Irenaeus and Hippolytus, including a system based on the division of a words numerical value by 9. I have already mentioned Aiq Bekar with it's nine chambers and how Jewish Kabbalah uses it to find the letters for any given number, but a similar system was also used by Greeks called “pythmenes” which also has nine chambers. As scholars believe Jewish Kabbalah was heavily inspired by the Greeks, yet the Torah is clearly structured according to gematria, then it should not be surprising that the Iliad also has similar gematria systems as it predates the Torah. However as we will continue to see, there is reason to believe that large parts of this Qabbalistic knowledge was basically universal and goes back to prehistoric times.

Special attention should be paid to the ideas of the Gnostic magician Marcus and his Soma Sophia, AKA “body of truth” as well as Monoimus and his philosophy of Platonic solids as they provide the best means we have of understanding Gnostic Qabbalah. Ironically Irenaeus and Hippolytus preserved most of what we know about them and many scholars see in Marcus the forerunner of Jewish Kabbalah and even the Sepher Yetzirah specifically. For Marcus there is some detail about the 30 aeons corresponding to 30 letters, (and for others remember this means the ark of Noah) the number 24 comes up too, as for example three Ogdoads and the isopsephy of the name of Jesus Christ which has a Greek gematria of 888. (If we make a Fibonacci torus so that major $R=5$ and the minor $R=3$ then $V=888.26$) Marcus also holds the Greek letter Eta to be the Ogdoad, which would mean it corresponds to the Hebrew letter Cheth and so the chariot tarot card. These triple numbers like 111 and 666 were especially important to Gnostics and Greek gematria and they do relate to the kameas as well. I have already told you how to find 111, 333, 666 and 777, but as the four corner numbers of the Sun square also add to 74, if we multiply this by 6 for the 6 faces of the Sun cube, we get 444 and as the centre of the sun square is also 74 we can get 888 by adding the centre and corner numbers and then multiplying by 6. As 74 is the gematria of Angus Dei in Latin, this then is the meaning of the lamb being the “light” or “lamp” of the new Jerusalem in Rev 21:23.

Homer is coming from an oral tradition and so it should not be surprising if the numerology is a bit garbled or some of the lines are not included in the system, while the repetitions I mentioned could well be the markers which denote the various rolls of dice. Given that the Greek gods are associated with planets it shouldn't be surprising to find astrological correspondences, but it's quite surprising how little I could find on the numerology or astrology of the Iliad. But then academics generally have a disdain for these things, it is just ironic that all this and so much more strongly points to the fact that they are the keys to the mythology. You may disagree with my interpretations or think I am getting carried away, but it is undeniable the ancients themselves thought that number codes were essential to understanding the myths. I did manage to find a scholar who has written about the Homeric description of Achilles' shield and its numerical and astrological symbolism (It was made by Hephaestus) and some people have noticed some astrology in there, but I couldn't find much that was specific. Homer's Iliad really helped to popularize the Greek alphabet and so it would be quite strange indeed if there was not some form of Greek Qabbalah structuring it, but this subject must be for others to pick up.

We do know the bible was similarly used for divination, often just opening the book at random but also with lots or dice, this practice was called "Sortes Sanctorum." The Hebrew Tanakh is also divided in to 24 books and it so happens there are 72 books in the Catholic Bible, (though some recent English translations have 73) the gospels are divided in to 28 chapters of Mathew, 21 chapters of John, 16 chapters of Mark and 24 chapters of Luke. These four gospels are associated with the elements, and so the four fixed cherubic signs of the zodiac as found on the hierophant card, the world card and wheel of fortune card and as Taurus is the 2nd sign, Leo the 5th, Scorpio the 8th, Aquarius the 11th, then we see that $2+5+8+11=26$. You might think this a coincidence but Irenaeus says specifically (Book 3 Ch 11) the four gospels relate to the four winds and the cherubic signs and also that there are 4 covenants, one for Adam, one for Noah, one for Moses and one as the New Testament. Along with the number of books and the four gospels, the number of chapters in pretty well all the various books in both the Old and New Testament have very familiar numbers, but if this wasn't enough, the vast majority of the number of verses is also significant in regards to the numerology I am talking about. This clearly shows the significance of astrology and the magick squares in the vast majority of the bible and while the new testament doesn't fit as well as the old, it still is likely structured in this way, though it is true there are a number of books which have less than 10 chapters. (Another example is that there are a total 260 chapters in the new testament, there are also 404 verses in Revelations and $404/56=7.21...$ with 7 being the main symbol of the book)

While I found a few different numbers which are suppose to be the total number of verses in the Torah, (The five books of Moses) they were close enough that I was able to find some interesting numerology that corresponds to all the various counts. So if we say the total of Torah verses is 5845 then $5845/216=27.060185185...$ and $5845/72=81.18055...$ and as 5845 is an odd number we can leave out the middle verse to make two groups or two tablets of 2922 each, which when divided by $64=45.65$ (two tablets together 91.328125 and with 91 being the mystic number of 13, there are also 91 "governors" in Enochian) and so while it didn't divide completely even, these are all very auspicious in light of everything else I have gone in to. While not quite as good, we find other suggestive numbers with the total number of verses in the whole old Testament, though I found even more divergent counts so it is hard to say, the most interesting I found was 23145 total verses so that $23145/216=107.1527...$ (Which is close enough for Colel to 108) $23145/72=321.4583$ (321 is ROTAS in Latin gematria which will be explained shortly) while $23145/64=361.64$ which split in two is 180.82 . (So that each tablet is like 180 degrees or half of 360) According to the only sources I could find, the total number of letters in the Torah is 304805, so that along with other things we will see, this suggests the importance of the Mars kamea, $304805/5845=52.147$ with 52 being the corner numbers, while $304805/23145=13.169$ or the centre number. If we take the gematria of the 10 commandments 10171 and multiply by 30 we get, 305130 and if we subtract 304805 we get 325 or the sum of a Mars kamea. The total verses of Genesis is agreed upon at 1533 so that $1533/21=73$ and $1533/56=27.375$, likewise Exodus is surely 1213 verses and when divided by 56 is 21.66 which fits the dice rolls rather closely and while the other 3 books of the Torah are not terrible, they are not so good, and so I will leave that and other possibilities for you to explore on your own.

What is even weirder is that if we take the roots of 117 and 280 and multiply them we get $180.9972...$ If we multiply 117×280 we get 32760 and this is a powerful number with many important factors like 156×210 or 260×126 (156 and 126 will be explained below) and $32760/56=585$ which is Elohim Tzabaoth, the god name of Hod and "the seven pillars of wisdom." So then you should explore 32760 thoroughly, but if we subtract 20303 as the gematria of the 216 lettered name we get 12457, the root of which is 111.6109, but also $32760/91=360$ (remember that Metatron's cube is made from 13 circles) However after messing around I found that $32760 \times 4=131040$ which does not seem like much until $144000-131040=12960$, which just so happens to be half the Platonic year and $216 \times 60!$ So then we can see why the fractal is referring to 180 degrees, through the cycle of 60 it is half the great year, but this only made me curious as to the properties of 24. $117^2-12960=729$ or 9^3 while 280^2 divided by the Platonic year has a remainder of 640 and this is the gematria of “Hiram King of Tyre” but also the Hebrew word for sun and “cup of consolation.” After some more messing around I came up with the following, I took 1/3 of the great year which is 8640 then added $131040=139680$ and $144000-139680=4320$ and is 1/6 of the great year. So with all this in mind I took the great year and divided by 3.333... repeating and got 7776, a number which has many powerful factors and is 6^5 but also $131040+7776=138816$ and $144000-138816=5184=216 \times 24$ and is 1/5 of the great year! What is more $8640/5184=1.666...$ which approximates Phi, and likewise $5184/8640=.6$ for reciprocal Phi. Now these numbers bring to mind the bride number of Plato at 12,960,000 and if we divide this by $144000=90$ which is the angles of a cube where as 12,960,000 years would be 500 Platonic years.

We will also remember that 276 is the volume of one of Solomon's pillars when $\pi=3$ and $H=23$, and so 276×27 or the Saturn cube equals 7452 and as 32760^2 is 1073217600 and $144000 \times 7452=1073088000$ then $1073217600-1073088000=129600$ and this is 5 Platonic years, or $5 \times 25920=129600$ Earth years and finally $144000-129600=14400$ which is itself 120^2 and so this brings us back to the gematria of the arks, but if this is not good enough $14400/72$ Goetic demons =200 Watchers, while $32760/120=273$ which among other things is the gematria of “the stone which the builders refused,” “the hidden light,” and “Hiram Abiff!” The root of $14683=121.173$ while $32760^2/248=4327490.322...$ which when divided by 14683 as the gematria of the Shem angels including finals=294.72.... which if rounded to $294=49 \times 6$, the gematria of which is found below. $32760^2/23145$ as the total verses in the old testament= $46369.3065...$ the root of which is 215.335... where as $32760^2/5845^2$ (the number of Torah verses)=31.41 or El.

We will also remember that in the Zohar after Moses was taken from the sapphire he was given 173 keys, well as it turns out $20303/173=117.358...$ which is certainly impressive given how 117 ties to 72 and the Fibonacci. So with that part of the Zohar in mind I remembered the other numbers and saw that 248 for the sapphire $\times 81$ for foundation=20088 and if we add 215=20303, but with the other gematria values of the Shemhamphorash we see that $14683/365=40.227$ that $9623/365=26.364...$ that $20303/365=55.624...$ that $9623/173=55.624...$ So then while there is doubtless more to the structure, given other things which I will not include here, I am quite convinced that the various gematria values of the 216 letter name tie in with the number of verses in the Torah, but that this structure also involves 117 and 280 and the square numbers, as well as 248, 173 and 365 as with the Zohar explanation of the sapphire, but also Metatron's cube, as with Fibonacci cycle of 60 and the Platonic year. I also found that if a torus has a $V=365$ and major $R=248$ then minor $R=.27$ where as when $V=248$ and major $R=173$ then minor R is also=.27, but if major $R=14683$ and minor $R=216$ then surface area equals 125×1010^6 (As 10171 is the gematria of the 10 commandments, then if $V=10171$ and Major $R=20303$ then Minor $R=.16$ and if $V=20303$ and Major $R=10171$ then Minor $R=.32$ while if $V=14683$ and Major $R=10171$ then Minor $R=.27$ and finally if $V=14693$ and Major $R=304805$ then Minor $R=.049$)

While it's relation to dice is not clear, at the very least the 108 chapters of 1 Enoch also seem to be organized according to numerological symbolism, but not only this, given the importance of 216 and 72, these numbers seem to be a hidden structure underlying a variety of sacred texts and so we can also see that the Zend Avesta, or the primary body of Zoroastrian scriptures is broken up into 21 volumes or “nasks.” So that while much of their texts or oral knowledge has been lost, according to another Zoroastrian text called “Denkard” these are broken up in to 3 groups of 7 according to a 21 word prayer. We also know that the Yasna texts which detail the liturgical rights of the Zoroastrians are broken up in to 72 sections and so this and other things leads me to believe that Zoroastrian texts and other religions should also be reexamined along these lines.

Getting back to the Mars kamea I have already explained some of 52s gematria, but 25 is the gematria of a Qabbalisticm for “beast,” which in Sepher Sapphires is described as the union of Samael and Isheth Zanunim the demon of prostitution. 25 is the “god of Geburah of Binah,” but also “Ankad,” a city and dynasty of Babylon associated with Nimrod. 65, the sum of a Mars row is among other things Adonai, Mandrake, temple or palace, while 208 the sum of the perimeter is Isaac and also Hagar. While it is simple enough to see the Mars kamea can represent the 5 elements, with each row being an element with 5 sub elements, $25 \times 6 = 150$ which can be 72 Goetic demons + 72 Shemhamphorash angels + 6 planetary letters for the faces.

There is a magick square with letters instead of numbers which forms words like SATOR and ROTAS in various ways, it appears in the magick of Abramelin and many other places and is the most famous example of letter based magick square. Most relevant for us, it is in the Greater Keys of Solomon as the second pentacle of Saturn and as there are 5×5 letters, it is also linked to the square of Mars and so the 216 of Geburah, but I mostly bring this up because the gematria of this SATOR square goes a long way to explaining why Geburah is so important.

While there is too much to explain it all, this is also important as both the Greater and Lesser Keys of Solomon (Goetia) show many signs of this cube of space symbolism, especially in regards to the number 8. For example the magick circle of protection has a square in the centre and on the sides are written the words El, Hod, Yah and Vau (or Vav) all of which are key words which I have already written of. (There are also “31 kings” in the Goetia which would be linked to the name El and the path of Shin) This square in the circle is also surrounded by four hexagrams, which could correspond to the number 24, or given that they each of have a T or Tau in the centre 28. (See also the title page of “Clavis or Key to the Magic of Solomon” by Joseph Peterson which shows a version of the magick circle with an octagram.) The star of David or a 2D Merkabah is a simplified version of the “seal of Solomon” sigil which as before is placed on a ring used to command the demons. We can see a link to the banking cult here in that Josephus recounts the story of a Jewish man named Eleazar who uses the ring to exorcise a demon in front of the Emperor Vespasian and his court, this emperor being as we will remember the “Father” of Titus AKA Jesus. In some traditions the ring of Solomon is said to contain mandrake which is highly suggestive of pharmakeia and the cult of Ishtar/Astarte/Ashtoreth.

In the Goetic magick circle and some depictions of the seal of Solomon, the “alpha and omega” is also found and this is the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet and is a reference to what Jesus calls himself in the book of Revelations 1:8. Scholars have interpreted this SATOR square as relating to the famous Christian “Pater Noster” prayer as along with Alpha and Omega, it's letters can be rearranged to spell these words. Scholars find it very puzzling but the SATOR square was widely used in the Roman empire and by early Christians, though given it also seems to come from the bull cult of Mithraism, it is questionable if Gnostics used it, however it was used by all kinds of people and is a common key. It even appears in Christianized rune magick of the Norse and given that “Rotas” means wheels, it has been linked by some to the “wheels within wheels” in the Merkabah vision of Ezekiel. Since as in Pompeii we can find the word Sautran written under the square, it is most suspicious that we can see in the Anglo-Saxon poetry text “Solomon and Saturn” elements of all this, as when Solomon is riddled by a Chaldean king named Saturn about various things, such as the power of Paternoster. In fact the letters of Paternoster poetically attack the devil and are personified in a little myth around this idea, which would fit with the SATOR square nicely as it was said to protect against the devil or control demons as in the Goetia where as I said, it is a pentacle of Saturn. In the manuscript a transliterated rune appears beside it's Latin equivalent and so “P” from Paternoster would be the rune

Perthro, which just so happens to be symbolic of a dice cup, used to throw dice and runes in general and is symbolic of fate, or fortune. Given that Perthro would correspond to Peh in Hebrew, which is the tower card, and that Greeks used a pyrgos or tower shaped dice cup this is especially relevant. Nimrod and the confusion of languages are also themes in this text which dates to around the 9th century and so as we will see, there is a lot to show that this poetry is intimately related with all this symbolism.

ROTAS is generally spelled in the Roman numerals and in the Latin form of gematria it has a value of 671 (The same as isopsephy) which is the same as ROTA in Hebrew and so among other things is linked to the words “tarot” and “Torah” sharing their gematria along with “Adonai” which is used in Goetic magick and is an important title of Malkuth and “the gate” from it to Binah. 671 is also AOM a variant spelling of the Hindu AUM or Aleph Ayin Mem spelled in full and is “said to be a veil for the wheel of the law ROTA.” This brings us to Hathor the Egyptian bull goddess of love not unlike Ishtar, who in some cases was melded with Isis and from the words produced by the SATOR square, it is said she is the key to opening the gates of the abyss through Daleth, the letter of Venus. Hathor or Ator is associated with the wheel of fortune card in that ROTA appears on it and the anagrams of ROTA form the following Occult formula, "ROTA TORA ORAT TORA ATOR" translating to “the wheel of Tarot speaks the law of Hathor” or as another translated it “man prays, to the Great Mother, who turns, the wheel of Life and Death.” The great mother is a title of many goddess's like Hathor, Cybele or Rhea, but would also be Isis, who can be seen on the high priestess card with her Lunar bull horns, seated on a cube in front of the pillars of Solomon, holding a scroll which says TORA. (Two pillars are also depicted on the Hierophant and Justice cards) Where as the SATOR square has the the words “Sator Arepo Tenet Opera Rotas” arranged vertically in five lines, each word having five letters, which translates to something like "the planter (or sower of seeds) Arepo has [as] works wheels [a plough]."

ROTA is also 74, the same as Adytum, the Greek word for holy of holies, as I said it is the sum of the corners of the Sun square and the Latin for “lamb of god” as from Revelations, but it is also a Hebrew word for laws, “myrtle” a plant sacred to Venus, which is also another name for Esther in the book of Esther, which as I explained is Ishtar, according to Paul Foster Case, myrtle is also seen as a wreath on the head of the Empress in the tarot. (ROTAS in a 10th century Latin gematria system is 661 which is also Esther) We will also note that Asherah is the Phoenician goddess of fortune, as in the wheel of fortune and that the Zohar says that Binah is called Asherah and its value is 506, the same as another word for ox or bull, specifically Taurus and interestingly we can also see that her name contains the Hebrew word for “loan.” 74 is the gematria of the name for the letter Lamed, which means “ox goad” and corresponds to Libra and so the tarot card “Justice,” but also the Jewish tribe Asher and not only is Libra ruled by Venus, many scholars think this tribe gets it's name from Asherah. (Remember it shares its axis with Taurus and Aleph, a name which means Ox.)

There is much numerology in this SATOR square and the other words, for example opera is 55 which I have mentioned before and is Kallah, the bride of the king of Tiphereth and refers to Malkuth and the new Jerusalem, but also the scarlet woman. Due to the limits of space I will not go too much in to the SATOR square's gematria here, but those who are interested will find familiar numbers come up like 64, but also 250, 660, 256, and 196, which along with the others I have mentioned, should be looked up in the gematria dictionaries. Given it's multicultural use the SATOR square should be checked in Greek and Hebrew, but also Roman and English gematria as this will provide numbers which often have a sinister list of words like Satan, or things to do with the book of Revelations and many other things which I have and will go in to in this chapter. That even our English 26 letters seems to work would be because as Occult tradition states, it was developed by Francis Bacon, AKA William Shakespeare and his friends like John Dee. It would also be used later by Crowley in his “Book of the Law” and those who doubt the importance of this need only search Shakespeare and English Kabbalah online. Both English gematria and “simple gematria” which is based on the ordinal value of the letters should be checked, and don't forget to do the diagonals, even though they do not form words. The Hebrew Spelling of the square can be found in Greater Keys of Solomon and in the further reading section I have provided links to online gematria calculators for all this and while it requires some effort, it is well worth it for those with some Occult knowledge. Some may complain there are too many languages involved here, but magicians were often multicultural and looking for the universal language in numbers! Here I have just scratched the surface but one last thing, the SATOR square is also associated with the Templars and their 8 pointed cross, you will also note the prominent placing of the letter T for Tau, the letter of Saturn and that it was also a form of the cross.

So now that I have explained Mars, on to Venus as the only square left, it's mysteries are deep and much of it either beyond me or beyond the scope of this book. However I will say that the numbers and symbolism of this square plays an important role in both Enochian magick and Crowley's system of Thelema. $49 \times 6 = 294$ or the number of numbers on a cube of Venus and is the gematria of Nimrod, "Elohi Abraham" which means "the god of Abraham" and also Melchizedek the mysterious priest king of Salem (Jeru-salem) AKA Shem the son of Noah, the man who helped Abraham, in some cases killed Nimrod and even taught the Torah to the patriarchs before Moses received it on Mt Sinai. Thus Shem was preserving the Enochian knowledge of the book of life which was in the "ark" as he was the descendent of Enoch through Noah. It is also the gematria of "rose," the flower of Venus and "he skene" the Greek word used for tabernacle in the Greek translations of the Torah and "purple" a colour associated with Jupiter and Saturn and was used prominently in the construction of both the tabernacle and the chariot or Merkabah of Solomon. $294 = 108$ Goetic demons + 108 angels which leaves us with 78 which could be the tarot deck, or we could break this up in to the 42 letter name, the 12 letter name and the 24 elders. Now it is easy to see there are 7 cubes \times 6 faces = 42 but also there are 7 rows on each Venus kamea and so 42 rows on the Venus cube.

175 is the sum of any row or column on the Venus kamea and it is the gematria of Jachin+Boaz which of course are the names of the two pillars which Solomon set outside the temple. 175 is also "bricks for stone" which is part of Genesis referring to the tower of Babel, with the word "brick" here being the same as the word for "moon" we can see then a connection to Yesod. 7^3 is 343 which is the gematria of "the ark of the Elohim" and also "and god said" which refers to how "god" created the universe in Genesis using language and spoken words. 343 is the gematria of "dew of Hermon" which is very comparable to the brain dew of the Zohar, the only difference being that the brain dew flows on to Mount Zion, the site of the first and second temples. Mount Hermon is also where the Watchers are said to have descended and is the site of many temples, including an important one to Baal, which is especially important as in Canaanite/Ugaritic mythology, Hermon was known as Mt Zaphon or Saphon on which the palace of Baal was built. Jerusalem and Zion were seen as the mother of Israel and so became associated with the Shekinah, (AKA Asherah) who in the book of proverbs is much like Sophia, and became associated with the Torah itself, especially the oral Torah of Kabbalah, and so "god" used the Torah or the Shekinah to create the universe.

Here I will quickly point out Exodus 38:8 which tells how the portable tabernacle of Moses was made while the Jews were wandering the dessert. This section of the Torah describes a sacramental basin used for ritual purification, which was constructed from bronze mirrors donated by women who served at the entrance. As women were not allowed to be clergy or "serve" in Jewish religion normally, this is highly suspicious, not only because bronze contains copper which is the metal of Venus, but because the mirror is probably the most important symbol of Venus and Cybele and so this is highly suggestive of the prostitution cult.

The number 49 itself also relates to the "50 gates of understanding," which is associated with Binah and the connection between Binah and Netzach is seen in Sepher Sapphires under the number 28 , which is the mystic number of 7 and so corresponds to both Saturn and Venus. These 50 gates relate to the 49 days leading up to the Moses getting the 10 commandments, a time in which the Jews learned 49 lessons, (Exodus 34:28) with 49 here corresponding to the seven sub sections of the seven sephiroth under Binah, with the 50^{th} referring to ain soph. (Jubilees also occurred every 49 years) The 50^{th} is a gate that no one has gone through, not even Moses and is reserved for the Messiah and so again we see apocalyptic themes. Alternatively the 49=the 32paths+16hidden paths = 48 + 1 with this 1 being the unity of the 48.

At any rate the gates of understanding are opened by the 49 Enochian keys as in the system of John Dee and in the book "A treatise on Angel magic" by Adam Mclean, we can read how Dr. Rudd links geomancy, Goetia and this Enochian system in relation to the "tabula sancta" and the "seven ensigns of creation." (Those already versed in geomancy will know there are various astrological designations for the 16 signs, I have used the Golden Dawn system which is in turn based off the work of Dr. Rudd.) While 7 and 49 are the most important numbers, John Dee's magick fits many of the numbers I have brought up, for example he also incorporated 24 "seniors" who are explicitly related to the "elders" of Revelations as Dee had a keen interest in the book. We can also see that he had a list of 128 angels, matched by 128 demons totalling 256 or 16X16 and that these were put in groups of 16 and 64. (Liber Juratus Honorii has the oldest known version of the Sigillum dei Aemeth which is surrounded by 72 letters) Dee's book Liber Logaeth (Meaning Book of the Speech of God) is the source of the 49 keys and certainly provides a lot of familiar numbers and in it are 96 magick squares, each being 49X49, there are also 5 rectangles which are 36X72. This book deals with how the world was created and also how it will end and the first page is attributed to describing chaos.

In general much of the numerology in all the kameas points to the square of Venus and as I have said, 7 is perhaps the most important number in Kabbalah and certainly the book of Revelations. 7 comes up so much in the book of Revelations that due to the limits of space I cannot go in to much detail, but there are many interpretations available by other people. Exactly how this complicated hermeneutic is broken up is somewhat subjective and so I will leave that to you, but I will say that from what I have found by comparing various lists created by others, in regards to groups of 7 things, 7 repetitions of a word, or 7 references to a key word or phrase like "Christ" or "Book of life" or "Bottomless Pit" AKA the abyss, that there are 42 main groups. $42 \times 7 = 294 = 49 \times 6$ and while as I said this is somewhat subjective, there may be more, but there is no less, so whatever John had in mind, he put 7 in for a very specific set of reasons, generally regarding the 7 planets. In this way the square of Venus is also related to the "seven palaces" which contain the ten sephiroth, though are something unto themselves as written of in the Zohar and Hekhalot or Merkabah literature, but also the Golden Dawn tradition associates them with the seven headed beast with 10 horns. (See Equinox Vol I No. II pages 261-284, appropriately enough in a section called "The Temple of Solomon the King" and this association does not contradict the interpretation of the beast being Rome, as Malkuth is regular physical reality, symbolically the beast then has a very physical aspect.)

So while I have given a broad outline of some of the symbolism associated with each square, there is much more, though most of it will have to be done on your own. I have shown how each magick cube can relate to the same kind of astrological symbolism and this shows self similarity at various scales and in accordance with traditional Occult cosmology. Studying this further will provide even more links between the kameas which will help to reveal the fractal pattern iterating as you become enlightened and find the corner stone. I have already explained how you can get more numbers by numerologically reducing the numbers on the squares then finding their sums, but there is more. So now I would like to show you some of what else I have found, as this will provide you with a greater understanding of the fractal, but also many more numbers that will give important gematria meanings and which will further tell this story. I will not exhaustively detail the meaning of each number, as in order to fully understand some of the meanings, you will need to have a decent amount of Qabbalistic knowledge, but for those who are willing and able, it will provide a lot of insight in to Qabbalistic cosmology and allow you to break the seven seals and gain a lot of insight into the Torah.

To start with however, this exposition would not be complete without a mention of the numerology of the letter Tau which corresponds to Saturn, a letter of which much has been written, for among other reasons because it is itself the cross on which the Christ or the "hanged man" in the tarot

(Mem) was crucified and so the pillar of the spine which allows us to experience time. The word Tau itself means “mark” in Hebrew, as in the “mark of the beast” (though Revelations is in Greek) and we can see in the book of Ezekiel the Tau was written on the heads of all loyal Jews, who were then told to go and murder all the “idolaters,” which unless it is altered from the original text, we can see are rebels to the banking theocracy. This also brings to mind the mark of the corporation of Jesus which I explained in chapter 16 as seen in Ephesians chapter 1, but also Deuteronomy 6:8 in which the mark is used as a sign of adherence to the 10 commandments. In this way then the symbol of the cross is the symbol of Saturn and the banking corporation of Christ, it is also literally the “mark” of the beast placed on the forehead or the hand in the religion of the emperor Titus as Jesus. This may sound strange but the cross was not originally used by Christians/Gnostics, they used the vesica pisces symbol or “Jesus Fish” as in the Flower of Life. (Christians also used a pentagram or five pointed star, but then so did many many people) So while it is ultimately impossible to know what John meant by the mark, he would have no attachment to the cross and as Christianity later became the state religion, in practice the cross is as good as the mark of the beast. That is the cross was placed on many many coins in a part of the world where not being Catholic and accepting the cross meant you could not participate in the economy, thus it fulfils his prophecy even if he didn't mean it to.

Tau has a place in many spiritual symbols, it is the basis of the “trident of Paracelsus,” (Also looking much like an Irminsul) it was also associated with Mithras and can be likened to the Egyptian Ankh or Crux Ansata, while in Masonry it is the T square and can be seen in the “triple Tau” symbol and according to the “Royal Masonic Cyclopaedia” it was marked on the foreheads of Hindu disciples. (Just as in Ezekiel or Revelations) The numerical value of Tau or Tav is 400, which is the number of cubits on the porch of Solomon's temple on which the pillars would be placed, but also 20X20 as the area of the floor in the holy of holies. Sometimes in Qabalah four trees are stacked on each other which are called the “four worlds” each referring to a letter of YHVH and so in this scheme there are 40 sephiroth. 40 being the number of the letter Mem and the hanged man, it is the number of days from the resurrection of Jesus and his ascension at Easter. 40 is also the number of days and nights Moses spent on Mt Sinai until he got the tablets, the number of days and nights it rained to make the flood, the number of years the Jews spent wandering the desert and it is also the number of years Solomon ruled in Jerusalem. A tree of life or “world” can also be put on each of the four corners of the Saturn cube of space and as each sephirah is said to have a complete tree within it, this totals 400, thus making Tau a symbol of Qabbalistic cosmology. 400 is also the square of 20, the number of the judgement card which is ruled by Shin and also the value of the letter Kaph which is assigned to the wheel of fortune card and so Tau is the fractal scaling of the hanged man (or both the Mem and shin axis) on the wheel, which itself represents our solar system growing in to the universe, as represented by the world card, or “universe card” as it also known. Spelled out the letter Tau is TV or 406, Saturn+Taurus and while 28 is the mystic number of 7, the mystic number of 28 is 406. (Tau in Greek has a value of 300, the same as the letter Shin but also the gematria of the name Nimrod and much else.) Obviously this letter Tau is important in mystical cosmology and if you follow my instructions regarding additional methods to use on the kameas, you will find 400 as well as 126, which is the gematria of “neobed” the name of the path of Tau and the sum of the tetractys of Adonai. A tetractys looks not unlike a pyramid or tower and both Adonai and Sabaoth were to the Gnostics at times associated with Saturn. We will also note that Adonai is used in the magick circles of Goetia, especially on the hexagrams with the Tau cross in the centre and so it all ties together quite nicely. In some cases, Tau is also placed in the centre of four pentagrams placed outside the circle, thus totalling either 20 elemental points, or 24 if we count the Taus.

There is no telling how many codes could be derived from the kameas, however given the patterns of the numbers themselves, there are few more things that jump out. For example as I explained, if you take a list of the mystic numbers and then numerologically reduce them, it creates a repeating number sequence of 136 163 199. So along with the binary doubling sequence 1, 2, 4, 8, 7, 5 and the 24 Fibonacci number sequence, they can each be plugged in to certain kameas according to how many numbers there are on that square. There are also more sets of repeating number sequences that can be generated by making a list of the multiples of each individual number from 2-9 and then numerologically reducing them. I would encourage you figure these out as they show fundamental patterns within the base 10 number system. So, if we find all the multiples of 3 and reduce them we get the pattern 3, 6, 9, 3, 6, 9 etc and if we do the multiples of 4 we get 4, 8, 3, 7, 2, 6, 1, 5, 9 etc and so each number from 1-9 has it's own repeating pattern through its multiples. As we might expect by now, 3, 6 and 9 have patterns that relate to each other and are not very complicated or long, while the other six numbers have patterns that are each unique yet related. The key to understanding these other six patterns is looking at a particular sequence and finding the consecutive order of 1-9 within it. As with all these repeating sequences, we have identical and perfectly self similar patterns at different scales, that is no matter how high the multiples, the mystic number or Fibonacci number gets, it can always be numerologically reduced to the same repeating and so fractal pattern.

So, as there are nine numbers in the mystic number sequence, these numbers can fit perfectly on the squares of Saturn, the Sun and the Moon. The Fibonacci sequence has 24 numbers and so can go once on the Mars kamea and twice on the Venus kamea, though for best results, you must leave the number in the middle of the kamea unchanged from the original. So where it says 1 on the regular kamea, you put the first number of the Fibonacci sequence, then the second goes on the 2 and so on according to the ordinal value of the sequence. However, since we want to divide the sequences as evenly as possible on to the kameas, when you come to the number on the middle of the square (13 on the Mars and 25 on Venus) you simply skip that slot on the kamea and continue plugging in numbers to the 14th and 26th numbers until the kamea is filled. The 6 numbers of the binary sequence can be plugged into the Jupiter and Mercury kameas, though as even numbered kameas you must skip over the four numbers in the centre. (The Binary sequence can also fit on Mars, Sun and Venus) We skip over the middle number, but this is the singularity of the kamea, it is the abyss on the map of the universal fractal and we can get very important gematria by either including that middle number in the totals of the squares, or removing it from the various totals. In this way we can also put the Fibonacci cycle of 60 on to the Mercury kamea, which produces many of the most important numbers and a few others which are rather mediocre. With Saturn, Sun and Moon kameas, the mystic number sequence fits perfectly, so we do not skip the middle when plugging in numbers, but subtracting the middle numbers from the totals will provide yet more meaningful numbers. Not only do the sequences on the kameas reveal some of the best gematria, they also show patterns in how the numbers are arranged, in some cases creating something like a spiral around the centre singularity!

If you plug these various sequences on to the kameas, then use the same methods to get number totals from things like the sum of the square, the sum of the rows, (including diagonals) the perimeter and the sum of the corners etc, you will see for yourself what I mean. Always keep in mind the cube, as all but the sum of a row can be multiplied by 6 to produce more numbers. You can also often take a row sum and multiply by 4 as if you were drawing a ring around four faces of the cube, I have not personally done it for all of the rows, but the ones I did do were very promising. For example the sum of the Moon square with the mystic numbers sequence is 351 and we can then subtract 6 from the centre singularity to get 345 and from both these numbers we can get "Moses" and much else. (From this I learned that depending on how vowels are added to the Hebrew spelling of "Moses," we can get a word which means "loan" or "debt" which could certainly change the meaning of Exodus! That is the Hyksos gained financial independence through Egypt being "plagued" by "debt.") We can find "Enoch" on three different squares, but most interestingly he turns up on the binary Mars square which produces a perimeter sum of 78. Now 78 is not only Enoch, but also the number of cards in a tarot deck and the mystic number of 12 and if we then multiply 78 by 6 we get 468 which is "ho kubos" which means "the cube" in Greek. On the Mercury kamea with the binary sequence we find some of the best numbers, but here I will limit myself to the gematria of 97, which is things like "artisan" or "architect" and another Hebrew word for “craftsmen” signifying Masons and the demiurge, it is also “son of man” which is what Titus called himself (though it comes up in Jewish sources as well) and among other things “Liber Mundi” or book of the world.

Pretty well all the most important numbers I have been talking about can be found in this manner, so that 21, 31, 72, 108, 216, 400, 432 etc are all on various squares with these sequences overlaid. One of the most interesting is the appearance of 156, a number which among other things means “tabernacle of the congregation,” but also Zion, Ezekiel and Joseph, (As in the son of Jacob and also the father of Jesus) and then “Eden of glory” the name of the 16th path on the tree of life corresponding to the letter Vav and so Taurus. 156 also plays a major role in both Enochian magick and Aleister Crowley's cosmology, it is far too much to go in to here, but watch out for the star it creates on the Fibonacci Venus square, as it is the value of his goddess BABALON as in the whore of Babylon. For Crowley she was symbolized by the “crimson rose of 49 petals” and in the Enochian material of John Dee, the word BABALOND also comes up which adds a Daleth to make 160. Among the many other important things brought up by these squares is “tower,” but also “Ain Soph Aur,” “Alchemy,” “the flood” and the Greek version of the name Hiram.

As for the sequences created by the multiples of each number, the sequence is determined by the number of the corresponding sephirah, so the sequence of multiples of 5 goes on the Mars square, the multiples of 6 go on the Sun square etc. Plugging these sequences in to the kameas creates many familiar numbers, but also numbers which give the value of Corson (Azazel) and Metatron and other important words and numbers. There are also more number patterns on the squares themselves and Jupiter and Saturn when overlaid with their respective multiples sequences even create new magick squares. So while some squares do produce some less meaningful numbers, we can find some good ones like “Eve,” (Chavah) “fig tree” as in the tree of knowledge, “harlot,” the Hebrew for “Baal” and an important Goetic demon that will come up later named “Asmodeus.” Since these sequences do not always fit as evenly on the kameas, we can just plug them in to square strait through the centre numbers, cycling through the sequence until we run out of room on the kamea. All together though, the reduced multiples of the numbers from 2-9 make up all the non prime numbers above 1 and so they are like the main branches of the fractal that underlies all numbers, with the primes being kind of like fruits or keystones, or the atoms of number compounds.

As I pointed out before, the sum of 1-4 is 10, but many important mystic numbers are created from 1-10 so that $1+2=3+3=6+4=10+5=15+6=21+7=28+8=36+9=45+10=55$. Now 28 is the number of days in a lunar cycle, also known as “mansions of the moon” in Occultism and it is also the number of letters in the first line of Genesis. 28 along with 55 has very relevant gematria words relevant to this which I have not really gone in to for lack of space, the rest of the numbers you already know.

Many numbers can create a particular shape such a triangle, hexagon or octagon etc and collectively numbers which make shapes like these are called “polygonal numbers” and it is from them that we can see why the word gematria is derived from geometry. For example 55 is also the 10th triangular number and so is a number from which you can form an equilateral triangle by using 55 dots, as 10 is also a triangular number, this is exactly the thinking behind the tetractys. In fact every mystic number is also a triangular number and so a kamea unites both square numbers and triangular numbers, where as every other triangular number is also a “hexagonal number” so for example 1, 6, 15, 28, 45. As it turns out you can create yet more repeating number sequences by numerologically reducing numbers which create a particular polygon. So if you find a list online of say heptagonal numbers, by reducing numerologically, you will find a sequence of 9 numbers repeating no matter how big the numbers get and so as each sephirah traditionally corresponds to a polygon according to the number of points it has, each polygon sequence can be plugged in to a kamea. So triangular numbers go in the Saturn square, which we have already done with the mystic number sequence, the square numbers sequence goes in Jupiter and pentagonal numbers go in Mars etc until we get down to the moon kamea with it's nonagonal number sequence. Now there is a decagonal number sequence which could correspond to Malkuth as the tenth sephirah, then it goes to a “hendecagonal” number sequence which is just counting 1-9 normally and consecutively. After this is the dodecagonal number sequence which is identical with the triangular number sequence and so this too would simply correspond to Saturn. After this all the patterns repeat in the same order so that the next biggest shape is the same as the square number sequence etc ad infinitum, thus showing more self similar repeating patterns, containing the self similar number sequences, which also fit at higher and higher scales. As there are 9 polygonal number sequences we can see the hendecagonal numbers correspond to Chokmah and that Kether as oneness or unity has no sequence. Each polygonal sequence technically starts with 1 and ends with 9, but when plugging the sequences in to the kameas, I have found it is generally better to start with the second number of each sequence, which is always the number of the sephirah, or points on that particular polygon. One curious note is that if we plug the nonagon sequence into the Moon kamea, on the second row we find the hexagon sequence in perfect order. If we put the hexagon sequence into the Moon square we get the triangular or mystic sequence on the second row and if we put the triangular sequence in, we get the nonagon sequence on the second row!

In this way I got yet more numbers for gematria, most of which proved to be good, yet were usually ones I had already found. There was one new one which was particularly relevant which is 137, the gematria for “Kabbalah,” “wheel” and a Hebrew word for “pillar,” what is more 137 is also a very important number in physics and is the “reciprocal fine structure constant” and has to do with the strength of electromagnetism. This number shows itself to be important in math as well, since by using two radii to divide a circle according to the golden ratio, we create sections of approximately 137° and 222° . This is also relevant because the “reciprocal fine structure” is believed by some scientists to be governed by “Pythagorean triplets,” that is three numbers which fit in to the Pythagorean theorem. For example the squares of 3, 4 and 5 form a Pythagorean triangle, but also by marking the 3 numbers on the kameas from the various triplets, it actually forms triangles on individual odd numbered kameas! ($137^2 + 222^2 = \text{the square of } 260.869\dots$) Now some would dismiss all this but “numerology” patterns have influenced the construction of the periodic table and according to the mathematician I.J Good, “numerology” (by which he means patterns in numbers rather than scientific observations) played a central role in the creation of the theories for electromagnetism, quantum mechanics and gravitation. In addition to 137, I could find 117 on the Mars square by subtracting the centre number, but also ones like 156 and 351 on other squares and so while not as impressive as some other squares, these sequences are important. I should note here that even when a number does not appear in the gematria dictionaries, it does not mean it has no Occult value, just that the authors of these books couldn't find any words, or they provide words that are not apparently relevant to me. For example there are plenty of numbers in the bible which are lengths of time or numbers of objects or people etc, but these numbers are not generally found in these dictionaries, yet these numbers are explained by the words which have that gematria. (From these sequences I saw that multiples of 39 are often important, 39, 78, 117, 156, 273 and 351 are all highly meaningful, but as $13 \times 3 = 39$, more so multiples of 13)

These fractal numeric patterns are however probably best seen in “Pascal's triangle,” which Hindus relate to Mount Meru and so the chakras, while Indian mathematicians studied it for its purposes of combinatorics. (combinatorics being very important to Ramon Lull and Kabbalists generally) It certainly does show a variety of interesting properties, for example both the Fibonacci sequence and the square numbers are created on it, but also the triangular or mystic numbers and hexagonal numbers. Not only this, but by adding every other number on a horizontal row, you can generate the binary sequence in its reduced form, while the sum of each horizontal row gives the powers of two or the unreduced form. Splitting the triangle down the middle shows symmetry and you can use the triangle to calculate the odds of a heads or tails occurring when you toss a coin, which would thus give the odds for coins used for the I Ching. In fact along with Indians and Greeks the triangle was known to the Chinese who called it “Yang Hui” after a mathematician (he also studied magick squares) but the triangle was also known to Leibniz. Pascal's triangle even generates a fractal pattern known as “the Sierpinski triangle,” which is created by highlighting the odd and even numbers in different colours. As it combines so many number patterns and Mt Meru is the Hindu version of these same western Occult ideas like the Tree of Life, Pascal's triangle is the best example I know of to show how fractal patterns structure numbers and so the universal fractal in general. To make it for yourself you simply arrange numbers in to a triangle such as with a tetractys, so the top number is 1, only here the second row is two #1's and as we will see the number 1 will be the outermost number on both sides of each horizontal row throughout the pyramid. To generate the third row or three numbers then, the two outer numbers will be 1's, but the middle number is generated by adding the two numbers directly above it. So then the third row is 121, the fourth row is made similarly and is 1331, the fifth row is 14641 and this goes on like this to stack more and more rows, but you will also notice each horizontal row if viewed as a single number like 121 or 1331 is itself a power of 11. More information about Pascal's triangle is easy enough to find online as this is just some of the remarkable things this triangle can do, so I do not think it is an exaggeration to say it is the key to unlocking how all this fits together. The earliest depiction as a triangle comes from Halayudha who wrote “Mṛtasañjīvanī” a commentary on an older text about this pattern called Chandaḥśāstra. This earlier text is the first example of a binary number system as relating to poetic meters and numbers of syllables, thus creating a kind of binary mantra yoga in some Sanskrit prayers, but this also means that binary is behind the meter of Vedas and theoretically they could even be a computer program! (See also the “Chandogya Upanishad” and the “Matrika Chakra” and its relation to the bija and mantras and the 8 vagdevatas or deities of language and note also that Sanskrit has 16 vowels and 36 consonants, know also that there are 36 tattvas in Shaivism, of which 24 are in a group.)

At any rate, after reading this chapter to get an idea of the story told by these squares through all these various patterns, if you wish to do this on your own, start with the regular kameas and look at the numbers for these as I have not given you all the meanings from even them. From there look at their numerologically reduced forms of the kameas, then go on to plugging in the mystic number sequence, the binary sequence and the Fibonacci sequence, then you can do the sequences created by the multiples of the number 3-9, then do the polygonal number sequences. Finally I found that by looking at list of the digital roots or numerologically reduced forms of the prime numbers in their order, I could plug these in to the kameas to produce yet more important numbers such as 115 which is Azazel and Baal Hadad, but also 148 which is “Netzach” and “sons of god” and other numbers for Enoch etc. While some of these squares do not produce that many new numbers, the numbers which do come up are in new groupings which thus provides new context to the words brought up. Not only this, but the patterns on the squares and cubes are themselves meaningful and as each number from 1-9 relates to a sephirah, looking at the distribution of numbers gives you an idea of the energy dynamics on each square or row. (Try colouring these numbers in) There are also further subsections of each square, that is patterns in the numbers or groupings, sometimes even magick squares within the squares and so keep a look out for these and with all the various patterns overlaid. One final thing I noticed is that if you take a square number, then skip the next square number and add the one which comes after that, then the sum of these two square numbers equals the four corners of the kamea in between. (IE $25+49=74$ etc) Always keep in mind how all these numbers relate to a cube and also consider how they relate to each other with the sephiroth Saturn kamea.

So now that we have that out of the way, while there is quite a variety of opinions in the Gnostic scriptures, so much in fact that I cannot explain every opinion, by the end of this chapter you will have the context to interpret texts yourself and see the various differences, which are in general united by certain themes like opposition to the Watchers/archons. To start with, we learn in the first “apocalypse of James” there are 12 archons and under them 72 heavens. Alluding to the banking cult and the whore of Babylon, Jesus also advises James to leave Jerusalem “For it is she who always gives the cup of bitterness to the sons of light. She is a dwelling place of a great number of archons.” The Secret book of John gives a very detailed cosmology of both archons and aeons, both of which fall under astrological arrangement, there are different versions of this text but the “long version” translated by Waldstein and Wisse lists 72 angels who created the various body parts of humanity, though in other versions these are demons. Given how the creators of the human body are described and the quotes I gave of the Watcher like cross breeding, we can be sure these 72 were not highly regarded by the Gnostics. Later on this text also speaks of Michael and Uriel and other angels controlling another group of archons and so the demons are under the angels in the hierarchy as in ceremonial magick. In Islam the Goetic demons are called djinn and in the Secret book of John the archons are made from fire by the demiurge, just as djinn are said to be created by Allah with fire.

In the text “Eugnostos the blessed” we are presented with a different scheme and we learn how these numbers apply to the aeons, so that there are “seventy-two powers. Each one of the seventy-two revealed five spiritual [powers], which [together] are the three hundred and sixty powers. The union of them all is the will.” ... “twelve aeons for retinue for the twelve angels. And in each aeon there were six [heavens], so there are seventy-two heavens of the seventy-two powers who appeared from him. And in each of the heavens there were five firmaments, so there are [altogether] three hundred sixty firmaments of the three hundred sixty powers that appeared from them.”

Now Nimrod does not really appear in many Gnostic texts we have, but in Hippolytus (Book 5) we read of the Peratae and how they believed that the stars were “gods of destruction” (archons) and that they believed Moses referred to these as gnawing snakes in the wilderness in Exodus. These snakes are then later compared to those who imitate “Nebro” (Nimrod) and so these Gnostics clearly were antagonistic to the king and his tower. Here we see one example of many in which the Gnostics reference the old testament, but with their own interpretations, this is not always done simply by inverting the morality of characters as with Cain or Esau, but by gleaning true spiritual wisdom from the texts and debunking the propaganda. This is but one example of many and is indicative of their knowledge of the original international Qabbalistic traditions and the memory palace tower that predates “Judaism” and was subsequently taken over by capitalist gangsters. Hippolytus in Book IV of Heresies says the Peratic Gnostics devised their mythology according to an astrological system that divides the 12 signs with 30 portions and each of these portions is divided by 60 and so $12 \times 30 \times 60 = 21600$.

Apart from this the only other reference to Nimrod I could find was in the Gospel of Judas, which certainly has an interesting take on this cosmology, it describes 72 luminaries and 72 aeons or heavens who each make 5 firmaments to total 360. In general the cosmology of this text is something like the Secret book of John or the Gospel of the Egyptians, yet it is also distinct in some ways, though once you know what to look for, there is certainly talk of “people of pollution” and other descriptions which hint they are concerned about Watcher offspring corrupting the world. In fact later archons are created which mirror the aeons and so 12 archons are made to rule over chaos, the first is identified as Yaldabaoth but is named Nebro which means “rebel” just as Nimrod does and so we know it is the same. According to scholar Marvin Meyer, in the Gnostic Gospel of the Egyptians this is also likely to be Nebruel, while I noticed in the Book of Enoch (Ch 68) there is an important Watcher named “Yekun” and this translates to “rebel” as well. In the Gospel of Judas the second archon Sakla is created and while I have just brought up Yekun, from what I see, Nebro and Sakla are more like a version of Azazel and Samyaza. They in turn create six assistants who themselves each make 12 “angels” so that there would be 72 at this level of the hierarchy corresponding to the zodiac as with the Goetic demons, but 80 in total. So while this cosmology mirrors the Goetic, the author is clearly against Nimrod and those he considers to be corrupted by the archons. Judas is also called a daemon and each of the apostles has their own star, more than likely relating to the zodiac and so they could all be archons, in which case it would be referring to the Roman aristocrats who made Christianity. The apostles also have a vision of how Christians of the future will do human sacrifice etc and Jesus tells them they will mislead all kinds of people and so this all has led to a lot of disagreement among scholars about interpretation. Unfortunately the text is incomplete and damaged, however Nebro would certainly fit as the unnamed demon who builds the tower in the Paraphrase of Shem, though a little later in the Paraphrase there is a subtle conflation with another demon who has been identified as Abraham. There is much in this text which is relevant, but I will limit myself to quoting what seems to be a reference to the book of Adam/Raziel, “God caused knowledge to be [given] to Adam and those with him, so that the kings of chaos and the underworld might not lord it over them.”

In the text “On the origin of the world” we learn of yet another cosmology and that Yaldabaoth created the heavens and used matter as a footstool, just as in the vision of Yahweh in Exodus with the schethiya footstool, hence the schethiya as the cube of space represents matter. Yaldabaoth also gave birth to the other archons like Sabaoth, but Sabaoth turned against the archons and the demiurge Yahweh, so after Sophia took him in, the archons became jealous of Sabaoth, and “had become disturbed, they made a great war in the seven heavens. Then when Pistis Sophia had seen the war, she dispatched seven archangels to Sabaoth from her light. They snatched him up to the seventh heaven. They stood before him as attendants. Furthermore, she sent him three more archangels, and established the kingdom for him over everyone, so that he might dwell above the twelve gods of chaos.” Then Sabaoth under the tutelage of Zoa or life created a “mansion” for himself “seven times as great as all those that exist in the seven heavens.” (49) The text also describes how Sabaoth goes on to make a throne like that described in the old testament and the book of Revelations, “which was huge and was upon a four-faced chariot called Cherubim. Now the Cherubim has eight shapes per each of the four corners, lion forms and calf forms and human forms and eagle forms, so that all the forms amount to sixty-four forms - and seven archangels that stand before it; he is the eighth, and has authority. All the forms amount to seventy-two. Furthermore, from this chariot the seventy-two gods took shape; they took shape so that they might rule over the seventy-two languages of the peoples. And by that throne he created other, serpent-like angels, called seraphim, which praise him at all times.” (The Hypostasis of the Archons gives a similar, yet simpler cosmology and chariot, but is important none the less)

This division implies the same kind of grouping as when I put the Shemhamphorash and Goetia on the two Mercury kamea/tablets of destiny, simultaneously using the images of the Cherubim and the fixed signs as in the world card of the tarot. However the use of the word “gods” here is curious, though the Christian Epiphanius in his Panarion says explicitly that for Gnostics, archons, demons and gods could all refer to the same thing in different groups, or even the same group and that even at that time it was rather confusing. To me this indicates that these are distinct beings from either the Shemhamphorash, or the Goetic demons, that to the Gnostics these were the original Pagan deities, the ones which were appropriated and symbolically turned in to servants of the theocrats so that they could control people. Though they are much more like the Shemhamphorash than Goetic demons, the exact meaning of this isn't clear and as in the Secret book of John, both angels and demons are called archons and so the use of the word “gods” here is very interesting and rare. Chariots or Merkabahs are further mentioned in this and a few other Gnostic texts, but here the heavenly “Adam of Light” also creates a realm which has 6 realms inside it, each with 6 worlds or 36 regions total.

As Solomonic magick in general contains demons which have a lot of Pagan symbolism, or even the names of Pagan deities, many Occultists have argued that Jews were demonizing Pagan gods. While in many ways this is true, it is also true that the god names of the sephiroth and the Shemhamphorash angels also often have the names of Pagan deities and so it is more important to see that this was because the capitalist theocrats were infiltrating Pagan religions and corrupting them. So then what we have here with the 72 gods of the Gnostics are the original uncorrupted deities, the representative deities of the 72 groups of international mystics who created the universal language and the book of Raziel, which was then co-opted and turned in to 72 god kings as with the theocratic Goetia and Shemhamphorash. As I will show later, this text like the Secret Book of John clearly differentiates between the Watchers as the servants of Yaldabaoth/Yahweh/Nimrod who try to cross breed with humans and the servants of Sabaoth who opposed them in the heavenly war. This distinction between Gnostic heavens and Goetic demons is further explained later in the text, when the demiurge seeing all this got upset and decided to imitate his son, creating “death from his own death” who in turn had more offspring, “so that they amount to forty-nine androgynous demons. Their names and their effects you will find in the Book of Solomon.” That is the archon servants of the demiurge belong to the Solomonic grimoires and were quite distinct in the minds of Gnostics from the reformed archon servants of Sabaoth and this suggests the Goetic demons in general are the corrupted versions of Pagan magick. We can also see that while the names and some details may be different, this quite clearly shows that the Solomonic magick is far older than what many scholars used to believe. While some scholars have put a some of the pieces together and noticed the archons are related to the Watchers, most have missed much of how this fits together, and I know of none who link all these entities with the Solomonic demons, but there is much more evidence linking all these traditions and there is even a Manichean “Book of Giants.” The Occultist Poke Runyon has noticed links between the Solomonic demons and the Watchers, but he does not go into much detail or speak about the Gnostic archons and instead he focus's on reconstructing Pagan Canaanite magick.

To explain this in more philosophical terms, as with the Gospel of Judas and other places, the Gnostics are clear that the patterns of the heavens repeat, that archons are modelled on the patterns of the aeons and reflect a kind of fractal self similarity. The archons then are like the aeons or Gnostic gods at a much blurrier resolution, one which confuses people and gets them trapped in theocracy and superstition. These lower resolution “deities” or the thought forms created by ignorant humans then have their own parasitic ambitions and so work with the theocrats to keep humanity ignorant and enslaved by worshipping these corrupted and distorted thought forms. Some parts of On the Origin of the World also seems to portray the Anarchist perspective of the Ugaritic texts and so we see that Sabaoth is like Baal who fights the god of the abyss Yaldabaoth who is “Yam,” who is himself the master of Lotan or Leviathan. There is some disagreement as to what this means but the Ugaritic texts give a line in which Yam is also spelled YW which would be transliterated as Yod Vav as in the two letters in the centre of the adinkra! So it may well be YW or Yaw was an original form of Yah or Yaho and eventually Yahweh, while in other texts this would mean Yam is the archon IAO or YAO etc. Yam wanted to impose his rule on all the other gods and is the “beloved” son of El and after Baal defeated him, Baal makes a mansion with the help of Anat, who would become Asherah, who as I explained is the prototype for Eve and so corresponds to Zoa, who also makes a “mansion” for Sabaoth in On the Origin of the World. So then Baal Hadad like Sabaoth has seven “divine assistants” and is the “charioteer of the clouds” and corresponds to Jupiter, so we see that Sabaoth starts in the sixth heaven, then he rises up and is placed in the seventh heaven, where Yam son of El was trying to rule the Elohim. After this we can also see that Yaldabaoth “having become wrathful, he engendered Death out of his death” and while this Gnostic text does not explain how he died, apparently like Yam, Yaldabaoth does die and so creates “death” who in turn makes the 49 demons in the Solomonic grimoire. In the Ugaritic texts Baal defeats Yam, but he is himself slain by “Mot” who is the god of death and who's name literally means “death” and so for the Gnostics here, he seems to be like the reincarnation of Yam. From this perspective the same myth has been playing out over and over through the meme war of the magicians, that while there are plenty of differences, at least some parts of “On the origin of the world” represent a self similar repetition of the Ugaritic texts in it's Anarchist form, where as parts of the old testament represents the theocratic form of the same myths.

While they are even more syncretic than the theocratic Jews, in terms of Pagan Mesopotamian religion, in this text, this rather rare group of Gnostics wanted to reclaim the original mystical meaning behind the Ugaritic tradition which predates it. So the Gnostics mythologically depict Sabaoth/Hadad as turning to the side of Sophia, though exactly what role he had is still very much open to debate. From their persecutor Epiphanius he does say that Sabaoth was generally disliked among the Gnostics and really gives no positive role for him, saying for one group “he is in the eighth heaven, ruling as an autocrat and lording it over the others” so that for whoever wrote On the Origin of the World, even if he means well, Sabaoth is incompetent and still dependent on Zoa to teach him. That he does rule over the archons and so even if they worked with them for magick, they would not be “worshipped” in the same kind of way as Sophia or the Pleroma, they would just be the gate keepers to the real heavens. As we will see there was quite a variety of opinion about Sabaoth and his role in the heavens and even multiple Sabaoths and so sorting out who believes what, or even which group of Gnostics wrote which text is often pretty impossible, or at least beyond me at this time.

Where as Judaism is in part based on the Yam tradition, Yahweh also usurped all kinds of Baal symbolism and is “jealous” of the poetic truth's created by the mystics and so wanted to impose monotheism to create a stronger theocracy. Comparing this to Greek mythology, Hadad would be Zeus, Yam would be Poseidon and Mot would be Hades, who are all children of Chronos and in the Ugaritic texts these younger gods are all like aspects of El competing with each other. So despite the fact they fight each other, Yahweh is a composite of Baal, Yam and Mot and so for the Gnostics too, Yahweh takes on aspects of all these rolls in what is definitely a “confused” mess of contrary symbolism. Some scholars have already compared Yahweh to Yam and plenty more have compared him to Baal and so while at first it seems strange that two antagonistic god's would be mixed to make Yahweh, the symbolism is pretty clear in this case and as we will see, is indicative of Baal being co-opted. The Canaanite pantheon are called the Elohim as they are mostly the descendants of El and given the many similarities between Judaism and Canaanite religion and the use of the word Elohim in the old testament, mainstream scholars have come to the conclusion that this group of Pagans had the strongest influence in the creation of Judaism. That is the “Elohim” are generally planetary deities and so can be likened to the sephiroth, which combined as a whole make up the one Jewish god with all his various aspects, hence the word is plural but refers to one henotheistic being. So then the Jewish god represents the whole pantheon which includes both Yam and Baal and as I have said he is other deities like Set and Dionysus as well, and so it is not totally surprising that he would have within himself opposing figures. (Just as he is Azazel, all these archon or Jewish cosmologies are maps of his demented mind.)

This is also important as the goddess Athirat in the Ugaritic texts is the consort of El, and together they have 70 sons, so that together they total 72. These texts shed much light on the origins of Yahweh and while Athirat is not clearly associated with Astarte originally, like Anat she is also associated with Asherah, who is in turn related to Astarte as the “Queen of Heaven” and as time went on, the distinctions of all of them became increasingly blurred. In the Ugaritic texts Baal is the son of Dagon and not El, yet in other places he is called his son as El is the patriarch of the Elohim or gods in general. While it is Baal in the Goetia not El, El is above the 72 and is a god name used to control the 72 and in other mythologies, Baal would become the lover of his mother Astarte as well, or Anat or Athirat in the Ugaritic texts and in many ways, just as Christian Jesus is another form of Yahweh, Baal (who is not one of the 70 sons) is another form of El, just as Horus is another form of Osiris, but also Dionysus is sometimes like another form of Zeus. (Zeus also has a somewhat similar relationship to Chronos) We can see this in Freemasonry as JAH-BUL-ON who looks like a spider with three heads, that of a cat, toad and a man which is the same appearance as Baal in the “Dictionnaire Infernal” and aside from the spider body, it is the same form as the Goetia and a variety of similar grimoires. In addition to this, the 70 offspring are known in the Ugaritic texts as the “sons of god” who mated with humans to create the ancient monarchs and as this is a name used to denote the “Watchers” or “Ben Elohim” as in the Book of Enoch and other places, they are undoubtedly the same and correspond to Hod's choir of angels under Elohim Sabaoth. The Shemhamphorash as rulers of the world would correspond to the choir called “principalities” which is under YHVH Sabaoth in Netzach or Venus, though as I said, later Occultists also break them up in to various choirs.

In the book of Revelations, the whore who rides the beast can be likened to Anat, who is the consort of Baal, in the Ugaritic texts she also kills Mot and subdues or kills Lotan or Leviathan. (Baal is also given credit for the kill in the texts) Given his attitude to libertine Gnostics, it is unlikely that the writer of Revelations belonged to same group of Gnostics who wrote On the Origin of the World. So that as Anat became Asherah and Asherah is the lover of both Yahweh and Baal, in general in the old testament Yahweh is more like Baal than Yam. On the Origin of the world seems to stand out in this way and so all this blending of deities only really makes sense if the theocrats of Yam are co-opting the symbolism of the other deities like Baal. As I would find, this relationship between Yahweh and Leviathan is key to understanding how he is a composite of these two Pagan gods and so the kinds of politics I am describing.

In Isaiah 25:6-8 Yahweh is Baal or the Lord of Hoasts and “He will swallow up death (Mot) for all time” and Isaiah 27:1 “Even Leviathan the Twisted Serpent; And He will kill the dragon who lives in the sea.” In his definitive translation of the Sepher Yetzirah, Aryeh Kaplan (starting pg 233) translates Isaiah 27:1 and the “twisted serpent” as “pole serpent” which he interprets as the constellation Draco. The “pole serpent” also comes up in Job 26:13 translated in the King James bible as “By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked serpent” and so we know Yahweh made the Leviathan. Kaplan gives a lot of important information about the Kabbalistic context of the Sepher Yetzirah and goes into some detail about Draco which he also interprets as the “Teli” which itself denotes “the inclination of the orbit of a planet from the ecliptic, particularly in the case of the moon” and so this refers to the dragon of the ecliptic or in geomancy, Caput and Cauda Draconis. He goes on to explain that Draco is referred to in the Sepher Yetzirah (6:3) as being “over the universe like a king on his throne” and that Rabbi Isaac of Acco identified it with Baal and idol worship, yet Kaplan misses the obvious example of the Brazen Serpent. He explains there was a male and female serpent, Draco being the male pole serpent and the female being the dragon of the “inclination of the ecliptic.”

Now “Yam” translates as “Sea” in Hebrew and so Yam is very much a sea god or god of the abyss, but just as the old testament masks Asherah or the Shekinah as Yahweh, Yahweh also takes credit for things done by Anat. In the book of Job chapter 41 we get a detailed description of Leviathan and Yahweh brags how he has mastered Leviathan and in Job 41:1-6 we learn Yahweh even domesticated him as he bullies Job telling him, “Canst thou draw out leviathan with an hook? Or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest down? Canst thou put an hook into his nose? Or bore his jaw through with a thorn? Will he make many supplications unto thee? Will he speak soft words unto thee? Will he make a covenant with thee? Wilt thou take him for a servant for ever? Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? Or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? Shall the companions make a banquet of him? Shall they part him among the merchants?” As I would learn from various scholars, in both the old testament and the Ugaritic texts there is a conflation between a dragon named Tannin and Leviathan, who seems to be the same at times, yet distinct at others. This dragon brings to mind the Satan dragon of Revelations who appears with the seven headed beast, but Tannin was also defeated by Anat and possibly domesticated or “bound” or in other translations “snared” as if she would ride it as the beast of Revelations. So bringing up the “twisted serpent” of Isaiah, Anat in the Ugaritic texts tells us, “I have smitten ’Ilu’s (El’s) beloved, Yammu, (Sea) have finished off the great god Naharu. I have bound the dragon’s jaws, have destroyed it, (Tannin) have smitten the twisting serpent, the close-coiled one with seven heads.” (Leviathan) In Psalm 74:13-14 Anat is praised in the guise of Yahweh when she is given the same credits in the same order and we read “It was you who split open the sea (Yam) by your power; you broke the heads of the monster in the waters. (Tannin) Thou brakest the heads of Leviathan in pieces, (Lotan) and gavest him to be meat to the people inhabiting the wilderness.” Yet for all this identification with Baal and Anat, in Psalm 104:26 and other places in Jewish tradition, Yahweh is most definitely the god who created Leviathan and nothing bad is said of Leviathan and so in this guise and in parts of the book of Job, he would be associated with Yam.

While On the Origin of the World fits the broad outline of the Baal cycle myth contained in the Ugaritic texts, there is still plenty of other influences and given all the theocratic tendencies within the Ugaritic texts, we can see that these 70 sons of El and Athirat are still pretty corrupted from the original deities used by the international mystics. Hence for these Gnostics they were both gods and archons, that is reformed archons and limited to the lower heavens, so that as the Gnostics knew these 70 had older origins than the Ugaritic texts, they reclaimed them and tried to reconstruct them in their original non theocratic forms. It is hard to be definite about this part as we know so little about Ugaritic culture, that while it is far far better than the old testament, the Ugaritic texts do have some theocratic tendencies which mutated into Judaism. Yet as with Pagan mythology in general, there was more than likely multiple versions of these stories, which in some form or another must have also heavily contributed to at least some Gnostic thought. Baal Hadad is clearly against the death cult and when reading these myths it is hard to find that much fault with the protagonists and so the Ugaritic texts do show this region had some very true and profound religious ideas. Given the many differences between the Ugaritic texts and On the Origin of the World, it is likely the Gnostics had at least some knowledge of the uncorrupted precursors to the more theocratic aspects of the Ugaritic texts, with these being some other edition or version of the “book of Raziel.” Hence the Zohar tells us the book of Raziel is where Solomon learned his magick, as the Ugaritic texts were a corrupted form of this book, which were themselves further corrupted in to the old testament. Along with Metatron, Raziel does come up in a variety of grimoires, including the Greater Keys of Solomon, albeit briefly. From the time of “Seth” to today, there would be various grades of both the corrupted theocratic forms and reconstructed mystical forms of the same antediluvian wisdom, hence the different names and forms used for the 72.

Some Occultists like Crowley have argued Gnostics practised Solomonic magick, but he died before the Nag Hammadi texts were found and so did not have much evidence to work with. While Sophia in Gnosticism does have similarities with the “wisdom” described in the book of Proverbs, as well as the traditions of Solomon and its erotic descriptions of the “Wisdom” of God, (Shekinah) this is because Sophia or a wisdom goddess is the root of basically all religions and Judaism is corrupted from it's original Pagan form. Of the many examples is Proverbs 1:7, “The fear of [Yahweh] is the beginning of knowledge, but fools despise [Sophia] and discipline.” I would add that those who attain “knowledge” of Sophia fear nothing and so in Proverbs 4:6-7 “do not forsake [Sophia,] and she will protect you; love her, and she will watch over you. [Sophia] is supreme; therefore get wisdom. Though it cost all you have, get understanding.” (While Gnostics were obviously influenced by Pagan goddesses, for a Jewish interpretation of the Wisdom goddess see especially Proverbs 8 and 9)

We can see the attitude of Gnostics towards Solomon in a few texts, as in the Testimony of Truth, a text which says many intriguing things and here we can see the Gnostics considered the Pharisees of their time to be part of this Solomonic tradition when it says, “For many have sought after the truth and have not been able to find it; because there has taken hold of them the old leaven of the Pharisees and the scribes of the Law. And the leaven is the errant desire of the angels and the demons and the stars. (lust for human women) As for the Pharisees and the scribes, it is they who belong to the archons who have authority over them.” This is especially important as Epiphanius tells us that “fate and astrology meant a great deal to” the Pharisees and this fits perfectly with a Saturn cult of legalism. Later on after condemning usurers, we read in the Testimony of Truth, “Others have demons dwelling with them, as did David the king. He is the one who laid the foundation of Jerusalem; and his son Solomon, whom he begat in adultery, is the one who built Jerusalem by means of the demons, because he received power. When he had finished building, he imprisoned the demons in the temple. He placed them into seven waterpots. They remained a long time in the waterpots, abandoned there. When the Romans went up to Jerusalem, they discovered the waterpots, and immediately the demons ran out of the waterpots, as those who escape from prison. And the waterpots remained pure thereafter. And since those days, they dwell with men who are in ignorance, and they have remained upon the Earth. Who, then, is David? And who is Solomon? And what is the foundation? And what is the wall which surrounds Jerusalem? And who are the demons? And what are the waterpots? And who are the Romans? But these are mysteries ...” Unfortunately most of the rest of the text has been destroyed and yet we can see that many motifs of Solomonic magick existed during the time of the Roman empire and that “Solomon” was a hated figure by Gnostics, with his demons being associated with ignorant men, Roman oppressors and the Pharisees of the temple.

In the Second Treatise of the Great Seth we learn, “David was a laughingstock in that his son was named the Son of Man, (Like Titus who destroyed the temple and so the waterpots) having been influenced by the hebdomad, as if he had become stronger than I and the fellow members of my race. But we are innocent with respect to him; we have not sinned. Solomon was a laughingstock, since he thought that he was Christ, having become vain through the hebdomad, as if he had become stronger than I and my brothers.” This hebdomad is the seven primary archons of Gnostic cosmology and these lines are part of a much larger polemic against Judaism and the theocrats. In the apocalypse of Adam we read a list of origin stories for Christ thought to be erroneous by Gnostics, one of which is that “The fourth kingdom says of him that he came from a virgin. [...] Solomon sought her, he and Phersalo and Sauel and his armies, which had been sent out. Solomon himself sent his army of demons to seek out the virgin. And they did not find the one whom they sought, but the virgin who was given them. It was she whom they fetched. Solomon took her. The virgin became pregnant and gave birth to the child there. She nourished him on a border of the desert. When he had been nourished, he received glory and power from the seed from which he was begotten. And thus he came to the water.”

So from both of these sources we learn that Solomon was being associated by some with the figure of Christ and that Gnostics found this stupid and blasphemous. Yet to this day it is a teaching of some Christians that Solomon prefigures Christ, or is an allusion to him in some way, or that as these texts I have quoted show, that Solomon somehow was even responsible for the birth of Christ using his demons. From all these texts we can see that Gnostics saw the theocracy of Jerusalem was represented by the Solomon cartel and was among their greatest enemies and that as in other texts, Christians and others were appropriating their symbolism to create false religions. The Gnostic texts are pretty clear that the theocracies are the servants of the archons and as I have shown have a tradition that mythologically goes to the antediluvian days and unites the Watchers with the Solomonic demons.

The authorship of the Testament of Solomon is disputed by scholars and it shows a variety of influences from the Gnostic, to the Jewish and Christian, but to confuse things even more there are multiple versions of it. The standard exposition of the Testament is from C.C. Mc Cown though it is somewhat outdated in that it predates the finding of many Gnostic texts and so while he too only had some pieces of this puzzle, his work has provided some great insight. While he made reference to Gnosticism and argues for a multitude of sources, his conclusions were ultimately that the testament was Jewish and he is right, in that Jews created Solomonic magick and called up these demons. It is just that “Judaism” goes back to Mesopotamian Paganism and so it was probably rewritten and read by multiple groups of people for multiple purposes, both black magick and perhaps even Gnostic manuals on how to fight the archons of the theocratic cult. That is we have to understand that just as Gnostics were clearly familiar with the old testament and books of Enoch, it does not mean they believed in them in the same context, or practised their teachings. Instead Gnostics would have cited them for a variety of purposes and yet sometimes still used similar symbolism in different ways, that is as I have said, if someone is using black magick against you, to counter the magick, it helps to know the magick being used. Scholars do say the Testament of Solomon is more in the vein of Jewish magick, yet I believe some version of it is a likely candidate to be the “Book of Solomon” mentioned in the Gnostic text “On the origin of the world,” albeit in an altered and edited form.

Now Gnostics were certainly highly knowledgeable magicians and working a variety of types of magick, performing exorcisms and all kinds of grey magick, but as we have seen it is clear that even though Gnostics were familiar with Solomonic magick, they had no respect for Solomon himself nor for his demons. As we know how they lived, we can see that their practices had nothing to do with gaining worldly power as with the spells of the Keys of Solomon, or Testament of Solomon. Gnostics were interested in spiritual warfare against the theocrats and so sought the magickal techniques necessary to counter them and exorcise the demons via brain tantra. Gnostic practices sought to heal both the body and the mind, but to heal the body you have to control the archon which controls that part of the body, but this is quite different than Solomonic magick, which has demons that corrupt governments and impersonate the gods or otherwise tries to manipulate people, or make people sick. Even the Christian enemies of the Gnostics like Hippolytus do not claim they were after institutional power and in fact mocked them because of it and so just as an Anarchist may study a corporation and its crimes, or a “sovereign” human may study the law, it does not mean they want to join up! However it is true that if there is a grimoire with demons who depose kings and such things it is of use to two primary groups of people, covert conspiracies like those of the bankers who want to rule as a theocracy from behind the scenes, and revolutionary groups like the Gnostics who want to overthrow the kings and the religious theocracy so that people can be free. If the magick is done properly the same demons will do what the magician tells them to do whether or not that magician is Jewish or Gnostic or something else. So while Gnostics knew something of the Pagan precursors to the Goetia, some like those who wrote On the Origin of the World may have altered the rituals in the Solomonic grimoires to suit their paradigm, so that the same grimoire could be a guide to corrupting governments and religions, or if the magician has Anarchist intentions it would be a pretty ideal manual of revolutionary magick for overthrowing the theocrats.

In Mc Cown's book we learn of the various versions or “recensions” of the Testament, which add various materials, I have tried my best to study the various versions and there is much to learn from comparing them. For example there is a group of 24 demons, there are also the 36 demons for the decans in Chapter 18, recension B includes Gnostic references and speaks of the “ghosts of giants” while recension C speaks of 50 more demons! This group of 50 demons would correspond to the Venus kamea of 49 just as the 49 demons in “On the origin of the world,” with the extra one being like the 50 gates of understanding. While the references to giants shows another strong link between the Solomonic and antediluvian traditions, these numbers are of course all important and could be applied to magick squares, or supply the 24 elders with their dual opposites.

To quote the Testament itself, one spirit tells Solomon “I am a lascivious spirit, engendered of a giant man who died in the massacre in the time of the giants.” (section 70) Another group of spirits which appear together tell him in section 72 “We are the thirty-six elements, the world-rulers of this darkness.” The demon Asmodeus likewise tells Solomon he was born of a human woman and an angel and so he must be a Nephilim, but also the demon Orniel says he is the son of Uriel and as I know of no other instances of angels producing offspring, he too would be a Nephilim and Uriel would be a Watcher, meaning that Enoch was primarily taught by a Watcher! Along with Michael, Raphael and Gabriel, Uriel is an elemental angel and corresponds to Earth and sometimes Netzach or Venus, thus he is sometimes thought of as Lucifer, though not in the capacity of an evil figure. (All these angels are found in the book of Enoch with Gabriel's gematria being found by taking the centre number of the moon kamea 41 and multiplying by 6 which =246, Raphael can only be found by Colel in that he is 311 and the sum of the four corners of Mars is 52 so that $52 \times 6 = 312$) So while this is only a few of the spirits mentioned in the testament, Orniel and others claim to have sex with humans and one in particular named Onoskelis is pertinent and seems to be a form of Ishtar. She is a demon who sleeps with “dark skinned” people “For they share my star with me; since they it is who privily or openly worship my star” and they do this to get money but she gives little and so is commanded by Solomon to spin hemp for the temple. (another demon appears like a dragon and impregnates women, but the children come out as farts) While there is a mix up between the Watchers and the Nephilim and the Nephilim are generally thought of as giants rather than spirits, as I would increasingly find, there are traditions in which the ghosts of the Nephilim carry on as the Solomonic demons and we can see that “Rephaim” is a term often used for the giants, but also applies to phantoms or spirits.

Remember that the Christian Church too was practising Solomonic magick, even if much of it was destroyed by the Gnostics and Zealots during the revolts. As I learned from Mc Cown, one Christian lamented this fact in the Syriac homily “De magis, incantoribus, et divinis” saying, “Instead of the blessings of the Saints, lo, they carry about the incantations of the magicians, and instead of the holy cross, lo, they carry the books of devils One carries it on his head, and another round his neck, and a child, who knows nothing at all, carries about devils' names and comes (to church) Polluted and abominable priests take refuge in the names of demons... " The early Christian perspectives which I have found on the subject of the fallen angels, while not usually worshipping Watchers, do generally fall more on the side of the Jewish tradition of them being god's servants, or still working with him in some limited capacity. According to the imperial Roman Christian propaganda "Pseudo Clementine Homilies," (VIII. 12-18) we read that the angels asked god for permission to come down. Also we can see the same basic idea in the work of the poet and Bishop Commodian, specifically "Instructiones adversus Gentium Deos pro Christiana Disciplina 3" where he too says that "God" sent the angels, but that they eventually became corrupted and rebelled. These are but two examples, both of which also back up the idea that the ghosts of the giants lived on to plague humanity. So, as "god" sent them as in Judaism, we can only come to two conclusions, either "god" did not know what they would do and so is not the true "god" or he did send them knowingly and is therefore a sick sadist blaming us for being corrupted by creatures, who were specifically designed to corrupt us and is therefore not a true "god."

There are many interesting things in the Testament of Solomon and not long after he receives the magick ring from Michael, King Solomon needs Uriel's help to control Ormias and the angel seems to use dice to do this. Here we read "And the angel bade the whales of the sea come out of the abyss. (a reference to Leviathan) And he cast his destiny upon the ground, and that [destiny] made subject [to him] the great demon. And he commanded the great demon and bold Ormias, to cut stones at the Temple." Then Beelzeboul a form of Baal is called up and used to summon the other demons and learn their names and the names of the angels which bind them. Beelzeboul identifies with the evening star, which is also Venus and while Astaroth is not mentioned by that name in the Testament of Solomon, it would seem that Baal represents the evening star, where as Astaroth or Astarte is the morning star.

In section 48 we learn of a emerald stone which a demon named Rhabdos (meaning staff or rod) promises Solomon he can adorn the temple of his god with. This stone is never named but seems to be the legendary Shamir which was used to cut bricks for the temple as Solomon was forbidden to use iron tools. This Shamir could apparently split rocks and in various traditions came in to possession of Solomon through Asmodeus, or alternatively by an eagle, but like the stone in the Testament of Solomon, it was found on a mountain. The Shamir was said to be created in the first week of "god's" creation and is thus listed as one of the "10 marvels of creation," with some other marvels being the alphabet, the stylus and the schethiya or tablets of sapphire. Not only did Solomon use this stone to make his temple, but it is also said that Moses used it to carve the letters on the jewels in the breastplate of the high priest. Sometimes referred to as a "worm" the Shamir is also credited with writing the 10 commandments on the two tablets given to Moses. This prohibition against iron tools makes sense when we remember that Goetic demons were making the temple and are banished by iron, we might even go so far as to say that Yahweh as the king of the archons, or father of the "sons of god" would likewise be affected by iron. So while the Shamir is generally distinct from the schethiya, it is clearly intimately related and we can see the schethiya is very comparable to another stone in section 122-127, where we learn how a demon named Ephippas lays the corner stone of the temple. In other sources, some legends say that the ring of Solomon used to control the demons actually housed the Shamir worm and so this suggests a stone rather than an actual worm. This stone becomes like a pillar with the help of another demon of the red sea named Abezithibod, who brought the pillar out with him and is the offspring of Beelzeboul. Abezithibod played a role in the exodus and with Ephippas can make a pillar or column float in to the air and we learn that they "will not let go this pillar until the world's end. But on whatever day this stone falls, then shall be the end of the world." We saw this pillar and cornerstone motif before with the description of Noah and his descendents, but also Enoch in his subterranean chambers with the cube, and Jacob who turned his pillow stone in to a pillar and so all these things are symbolically linked together. What is more the Sapphire Book of Adam and the schethiya are both said to have been thrown in to the ocean/abyss just as this angel comes out of the Red sea with the pillar and so these things are linked as well.

One other “marvel of creation” was the staff or rod of Moses and legend holds it was engraved with the names of god on it and so is a clear example of kundalini symbolism in that the names are like mantras for the sephiroth chakras. In the book of Jasher chapter 77, we learn that it is made of sapphire and that this was “the stick with which all the works of our God were performed.” Moses acquired it in the garden of his future father in law Reuel, as if it is a tree in paradise and on it was the name of the Lord of Hoasts and we will remember that Sabazius is the Lord of Hoasts and he too carried a staff. Moses had previously been imprisoned and was not being fed by the guards, but he was secretly being fed by Reuel's daughter, she then helped Moses to escape by getting her father to check on him, though he should have been long dead for supposedly going without food for 10 years. Reuel saw that Moses was still alive and was tricked in to believing it was because of the Jewish god, so after freeing Moses, Reuel saw him with the staff and was so impressed by this he decided to give him his daughter. This staff of Moses is often suspected by scholars to be the same as the staff of Aaron his brother and in Jasher chapter 79, we learn this to be the case. Here it is used in a magickal duel between the magicians of the Pharaoh and Moses and Aaron, where it turns in to a snake and eats the staff/snakes of the Egyptian magicians. The Pharaoh is freaked out by this and because the two brothers look like the “children of God,” he does not understand who this “god” that Moses speaks of is, confused he says, “We have heard that the God of the Hebrews is a son of the wise, the son of ancient kings.” Here then we see the Egyptians believed the Jews worshipped ancient royalty and neither Moses or Aaron really deny this, but say they worship “The Lord God of Gods” which is also telling in that it implies there is more than one god. This staff of Moses and Aaron was eventually laid in the ark of the covenant along with the schethiya fragments and is part of many stories, for example it miraculously turned into an almond tree, which brings to mind the cult of Cybele and her almond tree son. In Chapter 77 we also read that the “mighty men” of the Kenites tried to take it and some scholars believe Moses marrying a Midianite or Kenite Priest's daughter was a symbol of Hebrews taking on the Midianite religion. This is called the “Kenite Hypothesis” and is especially relevant given that some scholars argue “Kenite” is derived from Qayin, or Cain, a name which also happens to mean “lance.”

Now comparing the Testament of Solomon to later Solomonic magick in the Great Grimoire of Pope Honorius III, Nimrod is listed as a demon who's spirit can be summoned and so as a Nephilim descendant, his spirit lives on to serve the theocracy as well. As the Book of Enoch itself tells us of the giants in Chapter 15, “Evil spirits proceed from their bodies, because they are created from above, and from the holy Watchers is their beginning and primal origin; they will be evil spirits on Earth, and evil spirits they will be named. And the spirits of heaven have their dwelling in heaven, but the spirits of the Earth, which were born upon the Earth, have their dwelling on the Earth. And the spirits of the giants will devour, oppress, destroy, attack, do battle, and cause destruction on the Earth, and work affliction.” As Nimrod and the giants, or demons as said to have built the tower as in the Paraphrase of Shem and other places, we can see these are the same as the Goetic demons in that multiple demons in the Lesser Keys actually make towers for the magician. (#38 Halphas, #39 Malphas, #43 Sadnach and #45 Vine)

In a very similar Solomonic work the “Pseudomonarchia Daemonum” the fourth demon Pruflas is said to live by the Tower of Babylon while the description of the 36th demon Gaap tells of how “Cham” or Ham, the son of Noah was the first to invoke the demons and not Solomon, that he wrote a book known to many mathematicians. These demons had offerings and sacrifice made to them and the “exorcists” who served them “mingled” “the holy names of god.” (The Arabic grimoire “Grand Key of Solomon the King” lists 31 names of god used by Adam and Jesus and for the staff of Moses) The scholar Joseph Peterson links this to the book of Bilt or Bilath as in Sepher Maphteah Shelomoh, which is a Hebrew variant of the Greater Keys and in one section explains how to command Bilt, who is in a family of demons “who were princes over all the Caesars, for he ruled in the days of Solomon and in the days of the Prophets” and so this is a very telling admission. This book has another example of black magick for infiltrating kingdoms through a spell to “overpower a king or ruler, or whomsoever thou desirest, to do thy will” and this is done using the 72 names and also the 216 letter name, but also a 72 letter name made from the first 72 letters of Genesis. Similar spells are also found the Greater Keys, one sigil is for a spell to create hallucinations in a person, another spell is to make demons obsess a victim and so clearly a good chunk of this magick is used for manipulating foreign kings, while yet another spell is supposed to give visions like Jacob had with his “pillow stone.”

In another section of the Lesser Keys called Ars Notoria, there are prayers to increase memory and another to be able to use the universal language, this is explicitly done in reference to both Babel and Acts of the Apostles chapter 2 where the apostles can miraculously speak multiple languages to convert people. (Xenoglossy) But there are yet more hints to this as the Lesser Keys tell us the Goetic demons share a fate similar to that of Azazel and the Watchers as it says that Solomon bound the demons in to vessels and threw them in to a “deep lake or pit” in Babylon, were they were released, with Belial becoming a god of Babylon. (Belial or Belias is an archon for Gnostics) Finally we look and see that Astaroth/Astarte will tell us the story of how the demons fell and how s/he fell and in versions of the Goetia through Dr. Rudd, there is even mention of the “tables of Enoch.” (See the Joseph Peterson translation) There is also a section of the Lesser Keys entitled the “Pauline Art” which is said to be from the apostle Paul and was given in Corinth, an attribution which is not generally believed by scholars, but is far more meaningful if as I believe, Paul is a Herodian agent in a Solomonic death cult. In the Greater Keys of Solomon Metatron comes up a few times as well, but also crucially, the conjurations used to summon the demons implore “god” using his Jewish names to among other things, act as a “strong tower” so that the magician can gain control, other conjurations do so by the “tables of Moses” and the “five books of Moses” IE the Torah. At one point the name Yod is used and at yet another point IAO is used in a conjuration with the name “On” as in Jah-Bul-On. Throughout the Greater Keys it is also said repeatedly that the demons fell from the throne of god and were cast in to the abyss and so from this and much more we can see that it is very much Judeo-Christian magick rather than Gnostic magick.

So as I have shown and will continue to show, the ghosts of the Nephilim and some of the Watchers are the Goetic spirits and these are also the Gnostic archons and so this provides a crucial context for interpreting what are generally thought of as three separate branches of mythology. With this in mind, I can start to explain how this involves the theocratic banking cult, which itself is based on the foundation stone of the cube of space. Now the cube's Earthly microcosm could be interpreted as the Kaaba of Islam, a stone which was originally surrounded by 360 Pagan idols and as Islam sees their god as the same as Yahweh, it is heavily associated with Saturn. Even today we can see that orthodox Jews wear a black cube on their head while praying, while the goddess Cybele was depicted standing on a cube and was associated with a black cubic meteorite much like the “Kaaba,” which is itself also a meteorite and Kaaba literally means “cube.” The word cube comes from kybos “a cube, a six-sided die, vertebra” and is etymologically related to “Cybele,” which is also the root for cybernetics and so cyber in general, but is also related to “gubernare” from which we get the word government. The symbol of Islam is also the crescent and five pointed star, both of which are, as we will see, symbols of Venus. So then Christianity has its holy day on Sun-day, Judaism's is on Saturn's day, the holy day of the week for Islam is Freya's day, or the day of Venus which is Friday or Vendredi in French and so this also happens to make the father, son and holy ghost trinity. Cybele was also depicted in a chariot and had the title “Mater Turrata” which means mother tower, or tower mother and had a crown with turrets of a tower.

The Romans would often consult the “Sibylline books” which were nine in number and derived from laurel tree leaves used for divination in the theocracy and these Sibyl priestess's were also closely associated with the goddess Cybele along with Apollo. During the war with Carthage, after a number of bad omens such as a meteor shower, the Sibyls were consulted and they proclaimed Rome could win by importing the cult of Cybele. The oracle of Delphi agreed and so a meteorite was sent for from the city of Pessinos, which the myths say was the capital of King Midas in Turkey, the stone was used to make a statue of the goddess in a temple on the Palatine hill (one of the 7 hills of Rome) and thus she is associated with the beast of Revelations. We have already seen how the goddess Anat is associated with the whore of Babylon and leviathan as the beast, but that Cybele is too, is a sign of their being different branches of the same banking cult. The sibyl oracles were themselves on the Palatine hill in the temple of Apollo and so as the Gnostics like John of Patmos were rebelling against currency, it is most appropriate that the seven hills are the beast of Revelations. (Aristodemus tells a story of the poet Pindar finding a Cybele meteorite in Scholium to Pindar, Pythian Ode 3.77-8 AKA 137b)

Ultimately I have traced this to Inanna, as in her hymns, particularly the hymn of Enheduanna or also the "Inanna B" translation which explains how she had a tiara and 7 Me, or Mes, which she clasped to her breast and that she spoke divine words of An. (though in this translation mes is translated as "divine powers.") So we read, "Like a dragon you have deposited venom on the foreign lands. When like Ickur you roar at the earth, no vegetation can stand up to you. As a flood descending upon those foreign lands, powerful one of heaven and earth, you are their Inanna. Raining blazing fire down upon the Land, endowed with divine powers by An, lady who rides upon a beast, whose words are spoken at the holy command of An!" (This later explains how she sent a wind to destroy foreigners) So we see this text has Inanna even more like Yahweh than Anat in the Ugartic texts and this also shows a very ancient stream of symbolism survived all the way to the Book of Revelations.

So the banking cult had a thing for meteorites in general and the meteorite of Cybele could well go back to Trojan times as in the Aeneid, after Troy was taken the family of Aeneas (the Trojan aristocrats) sought an omen and we read "across the darkness a star ran down from the sky carrying a brilliant light torch" and from this sign of Jove they knew which direction to travel. This then is how they chose to go to Italy and by some accounts the meteorite was taken there and housed by the vestal virgins. Other traditions hold that the founder of Troy, a man named Ilus had followed a cow according to prophecy and where it laid down he was to build Troy, but looking for a further sign he prayed to Zeus and that is where the meteorite landed. Troy was also said to have been protected by a meteorite called the "Palladium," in this case a statue of Pallas Athena which fell from heaven and which Odysseus had to take before the city would fall, the Greeks then took it back to Athens after the war. In the Iliad book IV starting at line 73 we read "Even in such wise as the son of crooked-counselling Chronos sendeth a star to be a portent for seamen or for a wide host of warriors, a gleaming star, and therefrom the sparks fly thick; even so darted Pallas Athene to Earth, and down she leapt into the midst." There was also a meteorite housed in the temple of Artemis at Ephesus, which as a mint of coins was one the centres of the banking cult and at this temple was said to be a stone that fell from heaven. Yet another meteorite found its way to the 7 hills of Rome, this one belonging to the Syrian sun god Heliogabalus, who was closely identified with Sol Invictus, who is himself a form of Mithras and an important part of the inspiration for the Christian Jesus. Heliogabalus had a special place in some of the emperor's theocratic cults as the Emperor had served as his priest in Emesa and the god was depicted on coins and was said to have married Astarte (or others) in what was clearly intended to be a universal imperial religion, the stone was paraded about ceremonially in a chariot.

Mithras himself was said to be born from a rock and Mithraic symbolism definitely ties him in to much of this, especially the figure of Leontocephaline. But the name "Peter" also means rock and as the first pope, this apostle was literally the first antichrist, that is "antichrist" doesn't mean against-Christ, but "in place of Christ" and that is the function of the pope or hierophant as his representative on Earth. Thus his symbol is the upside down cross, he was crucified upside down just as the hanged man in the tarot, he is the symbol of how Mithras replaced Jesus and more specifically Simon Magus. So as the new testament tells us, Titus AKA Jesus tells him, (Mathew 16:18-19) "And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on Earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on Earth shall be loosed in heaven." This certainly sounds like Peter is a heavenly or celestial god or at least doing astrological magic, loosening the stars of heaven etc and we can see that Leontocephaline also carries keys and so this is suspicious to say the least. In Galatians 2:9 Paul calls John, Peter and James the pillars of the church, and in Luke 9:53 John and James want to call down fire from heaven on a Samaritan village, though this could be because they are soldiers for Titus, and so wanted to kill any who refuse him.

While the original Sibylline books were mysteriously destroyed in a fire, at least 12 more “Sibylline Oracles” were written later which were a mix of Christianity, Judaism and Pagan sources and were used by Christians in their attempts to convert the Pagans. (After the fire, Rome sent out envoys to places like Troy in attempts to find other copies) Once the forced conversion process of the empire had taken place and all other religions were outlawed, the books fell out of use, but they do provide so many relevant clues to all this there is not enough space in this book. For example the books detail supposed prophecies which predict Christianity, they also say that Samael, Azazel and another Watcher angel Araquel are good angels which lead to humanities judgement. (Book 2. 215) So then we know the Trojan/Roman Christians saw the demons as servants of Yahweh/Jesus and so as Titus was in league with Herod, these are precisely the kinds of people we would expect to practice Solomonic magick, especially given we know Vespasian had an interest in it through Eleazar. In general these books are a great example of the Pagan and especially Trojan aspects of Christianity and Judaism, but also reflect the banking cults infiltration of Gnosticism and the Roman theocratic form of Kabbalah. Celsus went so far as to call Christians “sibyl mongers” due to their devotion to the books and Cornelius Agrippa also makes a mention of them and also the Aeneid in his introduction. I do believe in divination as I can do it myself, but even if the oracles at places like Delphi started out as authentic, their position of prognosticators of the future would be ideal to infiltrate for any theocrats and so this story of the Sibyls coming to Rome is very suspicious indeed. That is an oracle founded by theocrats which only gives out propaganda and lies would not have any credibility, and so the theocrats infiltrate real oracles in order have authority through their false divinations.

Book 1 of the Sibylline oracles tells much of the story of the Watchers starting just after line 415 where we read what is supposed to be a prophecy of the coming of Christ and we can see in context of the book that it is a reference to the “star” or perhaps meteorite which the three Magi followed. “Then on a sudden there shall be a sign to mortals, when, watched over, there shall come out of the land of Egypt a fair stone; And on it shall the Hebrew people stumble; But by his guiding nations shall be brought together.” As we will see, since the Sibylline books are part of the Roman theocratic tradition, this part of the nativity story more than likely refers to a meteorite. At the end of Book III the Sibyl who authors the books even claims to be the daughter in law of Noah and also of his bloodline and the Christian authority Epiphanius, a man who supposedly debunks heretics says she is Noah's daughter! We can also see in Book V of the Sibylline Oracles a lot of talk of a war in the heavens and stars falling and so it was not uncommon to see meteorites as the wrath of deities and indeed the Sibylline books were consulted when such things occurred.

Today we see that the English Monarchy is the official head of the Scottish rite of Freemasonry and the Anglican church, they are the source of the King James bible and some of the worlds richest people and are the biggest land owners on the planet. The monarchies are rightly the subject of all kinds of conspiracy theories related to this, but it is far too much to go in to here. (some of which are dubious) Suffice to say the English royal family, like all European aristocrats have been inbred to concentrate the psychopathic tendencies of humanity and along with their “order of the garter” are much more powerful than people believe. (The Tudor family's role in Protestantism needs no explanation here, but I should point out that Martin Luther and Philip Melanchthon used comets in their reformation propaganda) Like the Vatican, along with holding stock in various powerful banks and oil corporations, they are involved in the corporation of Christ and undoubtedly world empire. (It is called Royal Dutch Shell for a reason) According to some conspiracy theories the “City of London” which I brought up before is controlled by the Vatican and run by the Rothschilds, who in turn also run the “crown corporations” of the monarchy, who are in turn part of a bloodline of the most powerful banking families in this ancient banking tradition. While some details of these theories may be wrong, or even mostly wrong, do not underestimate class consciousness or the rich elite plutocrats war against everyone else, that is the Rothschilds are the most successful bankers in the world and so who better for the Royal family or the Vatican to entrust their finances?

While the Muslim cube is the Kaaba and the Jewish cube is the holy of holies, the closest thing to a Christian version that I know of is the stone of Bethel, more commonly known as the Stone of Scone, or "Stone of Destiny" (or we might say tablet of destiny) which rests under the throne of England during the coronation ceremonies. Tradition holds that it is supposed to be the same Bethel stone which Abraham used to construct his altar, the same stone which Jacob AKA the Hyksos King Yakubher AKA Israel used as a pillow and which was also the foundation stone for the Jewish Temples. Some believe that the famous stone of scone is a fake, so that Jacob's pillow stone like the Kaaba is from the myths I have read, more than likely a meteorite and so the real one is hidden somewhere, presumably so that the Saturn death cult can protect it and worship in secret. Whether or not the pillow stone was lost and the stone of scone is a meteorite, the concept of the stone of scone is the memetic foundation of the banking theocracy and the Torah and so through my decoding of the gematria and much lore, it seems likely that among other factions the bankers are at war with the Muslims in order to take control of the Kaaba. That the Kaaba may even be one of the tablets of destiny, while the stone of scone is the other, together they function like the hardware of the cube of space and are symbolized by the two schethiya tablets of Moses. The Torah then is actually the programming and manual, the seven planetary magick squares are the seals or passwords, but also through kamea sigils the control panels and first iterations of the most primary fractal formula underlying the Torah. While the Kaaba stone and the pillow stone don't fit the dimensions of the tablets of the law, that numerology is merely part of the Kabbalistic programming within the Torah and so applies in a symbolic way to the hardware of the meteoric stones controlled by the archons. At the very least it is safe to say that for a very long time, very powerful people have been fighting over meteorites, how many meteorites or groups there are is impossible to know, but as we will see, meteorites are intimately linked to notions of rightful kingship.

There are many examples of magickal stones, especially in the Indo-European cultures and so for the Greeks there the Omphalos stone of Delphi, which was said to have been the stone Rhea AKA Cybele tricked Chronos in to eating as he believed it was Zeus. Pausanias and others say that people believed this stone was puked up by Chronos and fell to Earth like a meteorite, while others say it was a cube. Like many sacred stones in the ancient world, as with Jacob's pillow stone and the tabernacle in the wilderness, it was anointed with oil and we can see this practice today in Masonic ritual of laying the cornerstone, but also that many kings were anointed with oil. King Numa Pompilius, the second king of Rome is also associated with a shield, which was said to have fallen from the sky on the 7 hills of Rome and to have had mysterious writings on it and was supposedly responsible for curing a plague and so was made part of the theocratic cult of "Salii." While I found no primary texts mention meteorites in this, this shield called Ancilie is highly suspicious and like the tablets of destiny, the shield was said to grant its owners the ability to dominate the world. While somewhat different, in Egypt there is the Benben stone, or "capstone" of the pyramids (The bible does speak of a capstone) which had an important role, especially in Heliopolis and could well have played a role in coronations as well. There is also the Irish "Stone of Destiny" "Lia Fáil" used in coronations and is comparable to the stone of King Arthur, also the "Stones of Mora" for Swedish Kings and the "Prince's Stone" for Slavic peoples. While easily comparable to the tablets of destiny which confer authority upon the gods, the kings of these cultures were often elected democratically and so would have pre-banking cult ties. (The Prince's stone also inspired Thomas Jefferson) At the same time at least symbolically, some of these stones could well be meteorites or replaced by meteorites when the bankers moved in. Collectively the coronation stones are all obviously part of the theocracy and so it is not hard to see that during a coronation, the monarch would ritually invoke the fallen angel or deity from the stone. These possessed kings then could have easily interbred through the kings Harem of concubines or temple prostitutes and so the meteorites or "fallen angels" had offspring who were "mighty men" or "the men of renown" and kings or rulers of humanity.

In this way the Vatican has defeated its most serious magickal foe, which was John Dee and the Protestant British Monarchy of the Elizabethan era and so now have installed their own German royal family, the house of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, AKA the Windsors. The Vatican made big inroads in to England with King Charles I of England who was married to a Catholic French princess, who among others had the help of none other than one "Dr. Rudd" AKA Thomas Rudd a royal engineer. The identity of Dr. Rudd as Thomas Rudd is argued for by David Rankine and Stephen Skinner in their seminal "Sourceworks of Ceremonial Magic" series of books. (See Vol 1-4 and especially 3-4 but the whole series is incredibly important) These books not only explain the aristocratic use of Solomonic magick in extensive detail, but also present a comprehensive history of Solomonic magick in general, they also provide previously unpublished material such as the Enochian/Solomonic hybrid magick of Dr. Rudd. That is as the Catholics practice the Goetia, through Dr. Rudd they managed to reunite the Protestant Enochian magick of Dee, with the Goetia and presumably used it to help put down the revolt which was urging for a constitutional monarchy. Ultimately however, this attempt to put down the rebellion failed as through the English civil wars, but the Vatican would not give up and would eventually manage to set up their own puppet state in the UK through the current dynasty and through economic means via the Rothschilds and the Scottish and York Rite Masons. The Shemhamphorash, Goetia and its djinn or demons are spirits which seem to be linked to the Kaaba, while the Enochian spirits are tied to the stone of Scone, though of course you don't need these stones to work with them, having such an altar would sure help!

Various Occult scholars say the Bethel Stone is the same as the "Lapiz Exilis," the mythical crown Jewel of Lucifer said to have fallen to Earth like a meteorite when that same angel fell from heaven. This Lapiz Exilis is certainly a dramatic example of this divine jewel mythology and does seem to be involved in a number of ways, linking it to the stone of destiny, or the schethiya. When looking for evidence of the war of conspiracies between non Catholic Mason's and the Jesuits in a fight for the tablets of destiny, we can see that this Lapiz Exilis plays a strong role through the curious figure of Nicholas Roerich. Mr. Roerich was the guru of Henry A. Wallace, the same man who designed the $1 bill and in the diary of his wife and fellow philosopher Helena Roerich, she claims that the Jesuits were in fact harassing them and involved in some mysterious deaths. This is because Roerich was supposedly the holder of the stone, which he may have placed (or a piece of it) in the cornerstone of a New York skyscraper which he had made. Bringing this back to physics, we can see that both Einstein and Max Planck supported his work to bring about spiritual peace on the planet or as Roerich put it, "Let us be united - you will ask in what way? You will agree with me: in the easiest way, to create a common and sincere language. Perhaps in Beauty and in Knowledge."

This Lapiz Exilis is further linked and named specifically as the holy grail as per the poem "Parzival" by Wolfram Von Eschenbach and others since. Eschenbach also speaks of the Knights of the Temple or Templars and how they made a temple on Mt Monsalväsch with a foundation of onyx and he goes in to some detail as to how this temple would house the grail and they would act as it's keepers. While the holy grail is commonly thought of as a cup, it is true that in older times it was often thought of as a platter and so it could well be a flattened meteorite. So then, Parzival may explain why the Templars are said to have found both the ark and the grail, that is because they are the same and they are both symbols of the meteorite tablets of destiny. What is more as the ark symbolizes the covenant of Yahweh and as the grail symbolizes Jesus, it is a symbol of the new covenant, both traditions being built on the foundation stone of Jacob. In Christian and Masonic traditions, Jesus is time and again referred to as the cornerstone or foundation stone and so this connection to the grail is not as strange as it might sound and is actually evidence of Herodian Masons helping to create Christianity. (For example Corinthians 3:11 and Ephesians 2:20) In fact, as I have said, according to Stephan Huller in his book "The Real Messiah," he came to the conclusion that the apostle Mark was the Herodian King Marcus Agrippa II by studying the symbolism of the "throne of St. Mark." Looking at pictures of the throne I could see some familiar Merkabah symbolism, but also a tree of life and what is more, the word for “throne” is spelled Kaph, Samekh, Aleph and this is the same spelling as the Aramaic word for “cup.” The gematria for both words then would be 81 and so as we will see, the grail or magickal cup of entheogenic ambrosia found in various religions, is very much related to the throne/chariot of the Merkabah!

If you put the square of each sephirah number (2-10) on to the sephiroth Saturn kamea I mentioned before, in the same pattern as when I plugged the planets in to it, then by adding the rows you get more important numbers, eerily some of which refer to the gematria and numerology of the “great seal” on the American dollar bill with its eye and pyramid. If you add the two squares of the opposite planets like Jupiter and Mercury you get yet more important numbers, ($16+64=80$) most of which we already know, but this is important as it defines their relationships better. The cubes of the sephiroth can also be plugged in to the sephiroth Saturn kamea to produce other important numbers in the same ways. When it comes to Saturn, Sun and the Moon they are all added together, but with the other polarities the sun is not counted. The gematria of aspects of the seal come up again and again with other numbers I have mentioned and there are 72 bricks on the pyramid as found on the dollar bill. There are actually 21 groups of 13 on the dollar bill and so $21 \times 13 = 273$ and this of course is the gematria of Hiram Abiff! You will also note that a “house chart” used in geomancy and astrology looks like a truncated or unfinished pyramid viewed from the top, or it could also be interpreted as an octahedron inside a hypercube and is similar to the Mercury kamea sigil, but also an old Babylonian text relating to geometrical problems. (Tablet BM 15285) If you take the sum of this square of squares you get 384 which is 64×6 or $360+24$ and so if you add 1, this is the sum of the square of the numbers from 1-10 or 385, which is the gematria of Shekinah and worth looking up. We will remember how Frater Pyramidatus put the geomantic figures on the Mercury kamea so that each row adds to 48, well it so happens that 8×48 is 384 which then is the sum of this geomantic Mercury kamea. If we multiply 384×6 to make the faces of a cube we have 2304 which is the isopsephy of the Greek phrase “the law of symmetry” which certainly ties in to adinkras and the Frater's kameas. If it were these numbers alone that fit the great seal it would be a coincidence, but there are many more relating to the Latin words on the dollar and of course on the great seal is the unfinished pyramid or “topless tower” as at Troy and so is a symbol of the theocratic tower of hierarchy.

The great seal has the words “Annuit Coeptis,” which comes from the Aeneid book 9 line 625 which is written by Virgil and is adapted from the Latin for “Jupiter Almighty, favour [my] bold undertakings.” In context book 9 is interesting, the Latins are defending their home from the Trojan colonizers and are poised to destroy their fleet, Cybele gets Jupiter to save the Trojan fleet by turning it in to sea nymphs. (even though this doesn't do the Trojans any good) The phrase is a prayer from Ascanius to Jupiter as the Trojans are held up in a fortress not unlike their situation in the Iliad and the Latins go on to trap some of the Trojans in a tower standing outside the main gate and they light it on fire killing many.

Underneath the seal it says “Novus Ordo Seclorum” which is commonly translated as “New World Order,” but also comes from Virgil and is modified from his poem Eclogue IV. To give some context of this line, it comes from the part of the poem which says “The period sung by the Cumæan Sibyl has now arrived, and the grand series of ages begins afresh. The virgin Astraea returns, another reign of Saturn commences, and a new progeny descends from heaven.” Now Astraea is a goddess who became the constellation Virgo, she is the daughter of Astraios the titan god of the stars and planets and astrology. Astraios mated with the dawn goddess Eos, a goddess who rides in a chariot drawn by winged horses, together they were the parents of the winds, but in some accounts they also produced Phosphoros, or the god of the morning star and the light bringer Lucifer. (Phosphoros is also an epithet of Hekate) Phosphoros was merged with his brother Hesperos the evening star, who was himself the father of the Hesprides, the 3 nymphs who provided the golden apples for the gods. While it was more common to associate Venus with a goddess, in a hymn to Aphrodite, Homer calls her “golden-throned” and she was also the lover of the Trojan prince Tithonos. Eos is sometimes said to be the daughter of Pallas, the giant friend of Athena, whom Athena killed and thus gained the title Pallas Athena. Thus this is all linked to the Palladium of Troy and furthermore we see that Eos was at times conflated with Artemis and that Pallas was the father of Nike, (Victory) Kratos, (Strength) Bia (Force) and Zelus who stand at the throne of Zeus like ophanim and symbolize his divine authority as deities of the theocracy. (Probably having something to do with Jupiter columns) Getting back to Astraea, she was a common literary motif in the Renaissance as her return was used to symbolize the utopian visions of supposedly enlightened monarchs, but this was most especially used in reference to the "Virgin Queen" Elizabeth I of England. The goddess is found in Paradise Lost and Spenser uses Astraea in the Fairie Queen, while Shakespeare uses her in Titus Andronicus and also Henry VI part 1, John Dryden also wrote "Astraea Redux" to refer to the return of King Charles II.

So these words on the dollar bill neatly tie in the gods of the banking religion as a prayer or talisman to help the American government take over the world for Saturn to reign again, in other translations "period sung by Sibyl" is translated as the "last days" which is pretty apocalyptic, but then all this clearly refers to the Watchers coming down from heaven. More than this, Emperor Constantine and other later Christians would interpret this and the following lines about a boy as being a prophecy given by the Pagan Virgil about Jesus Christ! In fact in the medieval times onward Virgil was regarded as both a kind of Pagan saint, but also a powerful magician, inspiring people like Dante who makes him an important character in his Inferno. In one legend Virgil was said to have carried off a Babylonian princess and founded a school of magick in Naples, but best of all is from Gervase of Tilbury where we can read of the legend that in Virgil's tomb was found the Ars Notoria from the Lesser Keys of Solomon, while from Felix Hemmerlin we learn that he was also connected to a book of Solomon's necromancy and trapped a giant demon in a bottle. As the demons are ghosts, Solomonic magick would basically be necromancy, but these are just some of the legends surrounding the poet, legends which make little sense until we realize Christianity was created by Trojan/Roman and Solomonic magicians.

As the great seal comes from the start of the U.S.A and was put on the dollar bill talisman by Masons who were antagonistic to the Vatican Fascists, it is not likely a Catholic talisman, but one of the Mason branches of the banking religion with their own agenda. To make all this even stranger, the Nazis having gone to Tibet to find the hollow Earth brought a meteorite statue of the Buddha back with them to Germany, it is dated to 8th to 10th century. If this is not enough the original American flag actually depicted a comet or meteorite as the all seeing eye, this was in a blue field with 7 stars in front of it, so that as the same eye is found on the great seal on top of the pyramid, symbolically the capstone of the pyramid would be the meteorite as something like the Benben stone.

Furthermore the Union Jack or Queen Anne's flag which also has the Union Jack on it, has often been called the "meteor flag" and according to historians this comes from Paradise Lost (Book 1 lines 534-544) which describes Azazel lifting the flag of Hell to rally the demons in the war against heaven! Here we read that the flag "Shon like a Meteor streaming to the Wind With Gems and Golden lustre rich imblaz'd" and while I haven't read much of it, I have seen this work has many other clues and many references to Pagan myths and giants etc, even how they fought at Troy. (Book 1 line 575... while in Book 2 lines 706-10 Satan flies like a comet through the constellation Ophiuchus)

So now that we know the Pagan banking cult is intimately connected to meteorites, if it is the same cult behind Judaism and Solomonic magick we would expect there would be some more signs of this. Well as it turns out the Testament of Solomon quotes the demon Ornius who explains, "We demons ascend into the firmament of heaven, and fly about among the stars. And we hear the sentences which go forth upon the souls of men, and forthwith we come, and whether by force of influence, or by fire, or by sword, or by some accident, we veil our act of destruction; and if a man does not die by some untimely disaster or by violence, then we demons transform ourselves in such a way as to appear to men and be worshipped in our human nature." ... "Just as things are fulfilled in heaven, so also on Earth (are fulfilled) the types of all of them. For there are principalities, authorities, world-rulers, and we demons fly about in the air; and we hear the voices of the heavenly beings, and survey all the powers.

And as having no ground (basis) on which to alight and rest, we lose strength and fall off like leaves from trees. And men seeing us imagine that the stars are falling from heaven. But it is not really so, O king; but we fall because of our weakness, and because we have nowhere anything to lay hold of; and so we fall down like lightnings in the depth of night and suddenly. And we set cities in flames and fire to the fields. For the stars have firm foundations in the heavens like the sun and the moon." Now we might question why demons who hate iron might be represented by primarily iron meteorites, but it makes perfect sense that such beings, especially if they are electromagnetic in nature would be banished from heaven through such means.

We can also see in the Book of Enoch this concept of "fallen angels" applying to meteorites or stars in a number of places. The book of Enoch speaks of the stars as both angels and the Watchers in many places, but for example we can see explicitly in chapters 85-87 that they are fallen stars and so meteorites, albeit in an elaborate allegory of how the Watchers, humans and giants relate to animals. (much like the archons) It is easy to see why animists would believe meteorites to be heavenly and have spiritual powers that are distinct from more Earthly spirits and as Judaism is not really an animist religion, this meteorite tradition can only be rooted in Judaism's Pagan past. These chapters include a reference where Enoch goes to a tower which existed before the flood and there are yet more references to fallen stars in chapter 89 which also speaks of 70 shepherds. Chapter 18 is also relevant here and speaks of winds relating to a stone that holds the corners of the world and a mountain like a sapphire throne and a prison for what in retrospect we can see are fallen stars. That the Watchers/Goetic demons are meteorites is a crucial key that is often overlooked and so as Sodom and Gomorrah was destroyed by fire and brimstone falling from heaven, we can see this too is meteorites and so we can see why the Paraphrase of Shem was defending the Sodomites, they were the victims of the Watchers or demons described in the text. I have already shown how the apostles are said to be able to call down meteorites, just as in Sepher Ha-Razim there is a spell to bring down a wall in the same was as at Sodom and Gomorrah. Also in the Greater Keys we read of another obscure name of "god" that is used in the conjurations as well and we learn this is how "god" does his magick so that Zedereza is the name, "by which God will cause the Sun and Moon to be darkened. and the Stars of heaven to fall."

In 1 Enoch chapter 88 there are other references to a different "lofty tower" and yet another tower which scholars relate to the first and second Jewish temples, so this turns out to be an important allusion relating it to all this. Importantly Enoch is very adverse to the second post-exilic temple and considers Judaism after that to be corrupted, making people go "blind." According to biblical descriptions none of the Jewish temples were a tower and so it could be comparing or conflating it with the tower of Babel, which would make some sense as Solomon's temple and the tower of Babel were both made by the Goetic demons. Given the chapters are presenting an allegorical history of the Jews, a history which strangely skips the tower of Babel (if the towers truly are the Jewish temple) it would make more sense as the tower of information or the subterranean chambers created by Enoch to preserve his knowledge, but as the temple it can also be compared to the new Jerusalem. The ambiguity of all this actually helps to prove my point, that all these structures, the tower, the temple of Solomon with its subterranean chambers and the new Jerusalem are all symbolically related and based on the same form of Qabbalistic architecture involving the kameas.

When comparing them, we can see the sibylline oracles is appropriating imagery from the book of Revelations which also repeatedly speaks of meteorites, as in 6:12-14, "I looked when He broke the sixth seal, and there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth made of hair, and the whole moon became like blood; (Eclipses) and the stars of the sky fell to the Earth, as a fig tree casts its unripe figs when shaken by a great wind. (The same as the testament of Solomon and Greater keys above, though here the fig tree is symbolic of the tree of knowledge) The sky was split apart like a scroll when it is rolled up, and every mountain and island were moved out of their places." Destruction by meteorites then, would seem to be the fulfilment of the covenant between "god" and Noah, in which we are promised that "god" will never drown us again, but destroy us with fire. In Rev 8:10-11 we read

“And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters. The name of the star is called Wormwood; and a third of the waters became wormwood, and many men died from the waters, because they were made bitter.” Now wormwood is a herb mentioned a few times in the old testament and in Kabbalah is symbolic of Gemini and given the Goetic demons are meteorites, this quote could in part refer to the fall of the economy and the bankers. We can also see the motif of meteorites in Rev 6:13 and in Rev 12:4 when the YAO leviathan dragon first appears and brings down a third of the stars, but perhaps most relevant is the start of chapter 9 which tells of the angel of the abyss Abaddon. (the end of On the Origin of the World has very similar language) Here in is the key to Enochian magick, the abyss is the centre of the universal fractal and it would seem that Abaddon and Choronzon are both Azazel who is bound in Tartarus till the end of time, aka the apocalypse and in this way Azazel is comparable to Yam as a god of the abyss.

The book “Legends of the Jews” (Volume I) by the renowned scholar Louis Ginzberg is the source of much information in this chapter and from him we can learn many more striking aspects to the story of Enoch as the author has compiled various Midrashes and other sources on the subject. Ginzberg is himself a Jew drawing on all kinds of traditional Jewish writings and literally wrote the Jewish encyclopedia and so we can be sure that he is not simply a racist crank, and yet the book is full of examples of the twisted and hypocritical “morality” and political machinations of Judaism. Along with other sources I thus learned when Enoch became the angel Metatron, he was given 72 wings with 36 on right and left sides, he also has 365 thousand eyes and also a crown with 49 jewels and “god” called him the “lesser YHVH.” (Yaho-el from before or YHV+El=52) Like Thoth or Hermes, Metatron is the scribe of Heaven and he is repeatedly referred to as a youth or being a young “lad” just as Hermes is the a god of youth and Gemini is said to be the eternal child. Ginzberg is also a crucial source for aspects of the story of the Sapphire book of Raziel, but there is also a story of Enoch writing 366 books of wisdom taught by the angels and so we see there was copious sources for this antediluvian wisdom. (Note that Enoch also lived to be 365 and had his son at age 65) Metatron is the archangel of Kether and along with a pillar of fire and a pillar of smoke, Kabbalists say he guided the Israelites through the wilderness in Exodus, (Ch 13) though Exodus does say this was Yahweh. In context it is easy to see this pillar then, either as Yahweh or Metatron is very likely to be a comet, it also appears when Moses parts the red sea and drowns the 600 Egyptian chariots. (Ch 14) Symbolically then, the sapphire footstool in Exodus 24:10 is the source of the “sapphire” scethiya meteorite, so if the pillar is Metatron, it is Enoch and the meteorite is also the teachings of Enoch, albeit in an “Occult” or indirect reference. (See also Numbers 16 for the rebellion of Korah, where some rebellious Jews are thrown into a pit by Yahwehs black magick, others are destroyed by fire or by plague.)

The story of the Book of Raziel and it's relation to the Watchers is explained in Volume 1 Beresheet A Chapters 50-51 of the Zohar and for those who are interested, these chapters provide perhaps the most important keys to all of this. Here the Zohar tells of Azza and Azael (Azael=108) and these are just variant names for the two primary leaders of the Watchers, Samyaza and Azazel. In this version the two go to Earth and spawn the Nephilim, they were sent to Earth because they boasted that humanity is corrupt, but if they went to Earth they would not be corrupted. Yahweh knowing full well they would be corrupted decides to send them anyway and so they mate with human women and here we learn that Eve mated with Samael to produce Cain and that the “sons of god” (sons of Elohim) are his descendents.

Ginzberg too links the Watchers to descendents of Cain, more specifically Naamah the first woman to mate with the Watchers and she gave birth to Asmodeus. According to the mythological origins of Freemasonry (See Ms Constitutions, or the “Old Charges”) Naamah was the inventor of weaving and the sister of Jabal who first built a stone house and tended flocks, he was also the creator of geometry, the next brother Jubal was the creator of music and lastly Tubal Cain, the inventor of black smithing. These four descendents of Cain knew the flood would occur and so like the pillars of Enoch, they made two pillars with their knowledge on it one to withstand the flood and another to withstand fire. This then is another version of the same story, so while there is no mention of Watchers here, as descendents of Cain this is implied, but it also seems to say Hermes was in the family of Shem, but at any rate he found one pillar and taught other men. This knowledge then found its way to Babylon and was used for a tower, it says explicitly that Nemorth, who is Nimrod was a Mason, and that Abraham went to Egypt and taught the 7 liberal arts. Abraham was said to teach a man named Euclid, who in turn taught the bastard children of the aristocracy so that they could become artisans and this very fascinating myth goes on to link the knowledge to others like Solomon and Charles Martel. While Masonic texts repeatedly link their knowledge to that of the Watchers in various ways like this, the importance of Naamah is especially telling when we know that Solomon's wife was also known as Naamah and she was a Phoenician. She is the only one mentioned in the old testament as giving birth to Solomon's child, this child being Rehoboam or Solomon's successor and the one to whom the Greater Keys was dedicated. The book of Jasher says Naamah was also the name of Noah's wife and according to the midrash "Genesis Rabba" 23:3 it says explicitly that Noah's wife was the sister of Tubal-Cain and that she was given her name "because her deeds were pleasing," (here the text also says there were multiple floods) while Sepher Maphteah Shelomoh says Naamah is the mother of the demon Bilt.

Getting back to chapters 50-51 of Beresheet A (Volume 1) of the Zohar, it goes on to explain the differences between the descendents of Cain, the angels who came with Azael and the children they had together, (The giants) all of which could be called "sons of god" but are distinct. Then it explains that "mighty men" or "men of the name" refers to the giants rather than the Watchers or Angels of Azael, (As in Gen 6) and there it draws a link to the Song of Solomon 3:7 which speaks of 60 "mighty men" surrounding the bed of Solomon. (Chapter 3 here also mentions Solomon's chariot and then how he made pillars of gold and silver) These sixty are referred to the six directions as in the cube of space in the Sepher Yetzirah, so we can surmise their would be 10 angels for each direction, thus hinting at the cube of Saturn, 9 for each face, plus 1 more on each face to rule the 9. Here Solomon and the 60 are related or referred to as "Zeir Anpin, which is a term which refers to the sephiroth from Chesed down to Yesod, that is the same planets found on 6 faces of the cube, all of which are below the abyss on the tree of life. Later at the very end of Volume 9 of the Zohar we can read how this is all related to the sapphire stone and how Zeir Anpin is called the Shekinah and that "these sixty illuminated from the twelve boundaries that are in Zeir Anpin were never removed from around the Shekinah" and so here we have the 12 edges of the cube with $60+12=72$. We can then read how the light of these 60 surrounding the Shekinah "imprint" Metatron and are known as the "60 lashes of fire." Now Zeir Anpin is often depicted like a star of David and so is like a form of the Merkabah and so as we know the Shekinah is the schethiya sapphire, this section is describing the Merkabah within the cube, as depicted in Metatron's cube. Thus while the 24 elders who rule the 72 can be linked to the Fibonacci, these 60 mighty men can relate to the cycle of 60 and if we add $24+60=84$ which is the gematria of one spelling of Enoch.

Now in Volume 1 the Zohar does speak of Naamah mating with the Watchers and in Volume 3 Ch 29 it also says the "men of the name" are bastards born of prostitution with the Watchers, it goes into some detail about them being bastards "because there is no greater tyrant, robber, or mighty man than a bastard" which suggests the Masonic story of Abraham and Euclid, it also explains Nephilim is spelled Nefalim in Gen 6:4, meaning miscarriages, which brings to mind archons as abortions. Back again in Volume 1 Chapter 50-51 the Zohar says that the "mighty men" will be used as chariots, like a bridge between the upper world (male) and the lower physical world, (female) which is appropriate given they are half angel half human. This section should be carefully compared to the part in the Paraphrase of Shem which speaks of the demons and the tower as they share many similar themes. For example both speak of "particles" and Shem does "possess a share of the winds and the demons, and a thought from the Light of the power of the Astonishment." The Zohar goes on to say, "These are the early patriarchs" ... "Hence the saying, it is the fathers that are the chariot. Similarly, the same were mighty men from the world." While the implications of this is absolutely enormous, to put it bluntly the Zohar is says Judaism was founded by "mighty men" like Jacob specifically, entities which to me are indistinguishable from the offspring of the Watchers and this is how Jews transcend the physical!

What is more the Zohar tells us the sons of god read the book of Raziel and so it is easy enough to see they corrupted it's teachings so that they and their Nephilim offspring may corrupt humanity with their own black magick. At any rate as the Sapphire book of Raziel is symbolically the same as the schethiya, it explains the Jewish Kabbalistic perspective as to how the theocrats came to possess the tablets of destiny and so how the tablets can both free us through magick and mysticism, or imprison us through the theocrats. This then is the origin of the magickal war between theocrats and the Qabbalist Anarchists and one explanation for why the theocrats use the same symbolism as the mystics. When we unite the various symbolic stories, we can see that the archons or Watchers/angels stole the book of Raziel and read it before they threw it in to the sea or abyss, from this knowledge they added the vowels to create Judaism in order to control humanity. The intention behind throwing the sapphire in to the sea was to keep humanity from the magick that controls the angels, which is then symbolized in the story of the flood of confusion as symbolic of the abyss, this was recovered in some accounts, but Noah as the covenant/schethiya was also the book of Raziel and so preserved the ancient wisdom in the "ark" and passed it on to Shem. From here we could say the book of Raziel was used as the cornerstone for the Torah tower of information, or memory palace as in the Paraphrase of Shem and this was the basis of the teachings of the Gnostics who would free us from these archons. This then is why the Gospel of Judas and On the Origin of the World seem to portray the Shemhamphorash as relatively benign compared to other Gnostic groups, that is whatever group wrote these texts is working with Book of Raziel in it's uncorrupted form. So within the right context we see this shows that the Watchers went on to create theocratic Judaism, as well as Canaanite/Ugaritic and Babylonian religion, while Seth and his line of teaching went on to form Pagan mysticism and eventually Gnosticism, with the teachings of Enoch and the book of Raziel being bound together and read by both groups.

Then the Zohar speaks of Raziel and links the book of Adam to the verses in Gen 5:1-2 and as Gen 5 is the same chapter which gives the time line of the patriarchs being born and which Joseph Campbell linked the Babylonian calendar, we can see from the Zohar there must be a Kabbalistic code written here. In Gen 5 we read, "This is the book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him; Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created." Like the Gnostics the Zohar explains "Adam was both male and female" and two faced and then it goes on to quote Proverbs 18:10 "The name of YHVH is a strong tower; the righteous run to it and are safe." This verse here is given special attention, the Zohar even calls it the "book of the generations of Adam" specifically, so while I had found it earlier I did not know it was so important. Genesis chapter 5 then is at least part of the book given by the angel Raziel and as it encodes astronomical information, the history of kings and a calendar systems similar to the Yugas of Hinduism, it is the Jewish version of the map of the universal time fractal. The Zohar tells us, "this book later came into the hands of the sons of god, the sages of their generation, who were privileged to learn from it and to glean the supernal wisdom."

If Judaism is a distinct religion, it is incredibly unlikely that Gen 5 should match the Babylonian kings list and as both kings and Jewish patriarchs were said to be rulers and the sons of god, we can only conclude they are the same mythological characters. The Paraphrase of Shem seems to imply some similar things, but is basically saying that the demons are the unwitting pawns of the true god (not Yahweh) and that they are ultimately defeating themselves in what is essentially an Alchemical work which purifies the light and is being done through physical reality. (the demons do their best to steal the light, but in time they will be thwarted) In many of these texts I have cited, the Jews fight both with "mighty men" and against the "mighty men" of other people and the term "mighty" refers to the "Gibborim" who in Kabbalistic tradition refers to a breed of giant. The Gibborim pose as holy or righteous people, the Zohar tells us they built Synagogues and Yeshivas as well as the tower of Babel and do great feats, but it is for their own Giant egos rather than service to “god.” So the Gibborim are the most likely to have infiltrated the international mystics, turning the people away from Qabalah and sending them in to literalist orthodoxy, (and Free Masonry) achieved by changing around the vowels and spaces of the Torah and building the physical tower of hierarchy.

In a puzzling move given that Jews are supposed to be against the giants, Ginzberg says that Noah gave shelter to the giant King Og of Bashan on the ark as he had sworn him and his descendents would serve Noah. Later King Og apparently fights with Moses and his army and loses, Genesis also says he lived at a place called Ashteroth-Karnaim. King Og and the Rephaim are also spoken of in the Ugaritic texts where they represent the ghosts of fallen kings and in the Aqhat text they ride chariots and so here we have the most likely interpretation for why the Zohar calls the Patriarchs or sons of god, chariots. In the Ugaritic text “KTU 1.161” there is a liturgy for a dead king in which the Rephaim are summoned and the throne of the deceased king and also the footstool are commanded to weep for him.

Around this point in Ginzberg's book we can see some of the biggest examples of the rampant racism of Judaism in that it says that black people are the “cursed” descendents of Ham which in some traditions is through Ham's son Cush. Ham saw Noah drunk and trying to have a fourth son with his mother, and tried to get his brothers to prevent this and so the Jewish hero Noah cursed Ham's innocent child Canaan as he could not curse Ham directly. (And Abrahamic traditions claim the monopoly on morality!?) So it says “The descendants of Ham through Canaan therefore have red eyes, because Ham looked upon the nakedness of his father; they have misshapen lips, because Ham spoke with his lips to his brothers about the unseemly condition of his father; they have twisted curly hair, because Ham turned and twisted his head round to see the nakedness of his father; and they go about naked, because Ham did not cover the nakedness of his father.” As variants of this story are found in Genesis 9 (which merely says Ham saw Noah naked) and the Book of Jubilees, it was used as a justification for enslaving black people and so here we have a prime example of how Judaism is not a religion at all, but a system of mind control used to enslave humanity. This is also important in that Nimrod is supposed to be the descendent of Ham as through his father Cush, though in other traditions, such as that of Christianity, black skin is the “mark of Cain” and his offspring. As the line of Cain would have been destroyed by the flood, the curse of Ham is probably the explanation for “evil” people and also the explanation for black people and so Ham's descendants become the new Cainites.

Of course given the lack of continuity in Judaism, Cainites are said to exist after the flood, presumably through King Og, but really this whole idea reeks of racism and as Jews believe they are the master race, this is because they think that all other people are contaminated by Cain, or by the Watchers and they call us the “mixed multitude” as described in the Zohar Beresheet A Chapters 50-51. While I do not take these stories as literal or think that anyone's DNA is contaminated or inferior, as we will see, many stories put out by the Jews themselves show that they are more likely to be the ones who cross bred with the Watchers, while Science shows the first humans and the genetic “Eve” were black Africans. Gnostics sometimes speak of “race” but this is more a spiritual race which is not based on human bodies, the Gnostics were made up of many ethnicities and so this is metaphorical, where as again and again Jews are very literal about this. We can see some of this racism in Judaism through the book of Jubilees, which righteously declares “And if there is any man who wishes in Israel to give his daughter or his sister to any man who is of the seed of the Gentiles he shall surely die, and they shall stone him with stones; for he hath wrought shame in Israel ; and they shall burn the woman with fire.”

After this story of Ham, we learn from Ginzberg how the sons of Noah portioned out the Earth amongst themselves and they created the 72 nations and 16 alphabets with various amounts of “lands” and “islands” going to each son and here we see a lot of familiar numbers in how all this was distributed. Yahweh and the angels which helped him confuse everybody also drew lots (or threw dice) to see who would get to rule over the various portions of the Earth, “Each angel received a nation, and Israel fell to the lot of God” and so it is the Shemhamphorash are also archons who rule over this planet. From this we can see why the Gnostics are ambiguous about differentiating between the Goetic demons and the Shemhamphorash, that since both groups serve Yahweh, both groups are archons and so much of the time it doesn't really matter if they are angels or demons. That the 72 descendants of Noah and Shem, Ham and Japheth are also related to the Shem-Ham-Phoresh as the Watchers or "sons of god" is made explicit in Deuteronomy 32 which provides much familiar symbolism, but most importantly we read in verse 8 of the dead sea scrolls version, "When the most high allotted peoples for inheritance, When He divided up humanity, He fixed the boundaries for peoples, According to the number of the sons of god." This whole chapter must be read to understand the Jewish meteorite cult, but will make more sense after finishing this chapter. The next verse goes on to say Jacob and his people fell to the "lot" of Yahweh as if he is one of the sons of the "most high" rather than the same god who allotted the inheritance, then the verse after this compares Jacob to the apple of Yahweh's eye and that god found him in a "howling waste." In verse 11 Yahweh is compared to an eagle, but best of all Yahweh is repeatedly called a "rock" throughout the chapter and it says that the other gods are rocks as well, even specifically mentioning Sodom and Gomorrah, saying their rocks are "poison." This idea of the Zohar that the patriarchs are the sons of god is mirrored by Philo of Alexandria (who explains a Jewish interpretation of much relevant symbolism) when he says, "But they who have attained unto wisdom, are, as they should be, called Sons of the One God, as Moses admits when he says: 'Ye are the Sons of the Lord God,' and 'God who begat thee, and 'Is not He Himself thy father?'" While G.R.S. Mead cites Philo as referencing Deut 32:18 "Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee" but also Deut 32:6 which explains Yahweh is the father of the Jews. By now it should not be too surprising that Yahweh would be symbolized by a rock or schethiya, as the ark and holy of holies was supposed to be the home of both and there are more than a few other similar references in the old testament and for Jesus as well. That this rock of Yahweh is related to the tower is seen in Psalm 18:2, "The lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, (shield) and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower."

From Ginzberg we can see once again that the ignorant and incompetent god Yahweh is to blame for the Watchers as "the fall of Azazel and Samyaza came about in this way. When the generation of the deluge began to practice idolatry, God was deeply grieved. The two angels Samyaza and Azazel arose, and said: "O Lord of the world! It has happened, that which we foretold at the creation of the world and of man, saying, 'What is man, that Thou art mindful of him?' " And God said, "And what will become of the world now without man?" Whereupon the angels: "We will occupy ourselves with it." Then said God: "I am well aware of it, and I know that if you inhabit the Earth, the evil inclination will overpower you, and you will be more iniquitous than ever men." The angels pleaded, "Grant us but permission to dwell among men, and Thou shalt see how we will sanctify Thy Name." God yielded to their wish, saying, "Descend and sojourn among men!"

The Watchers went down and Samyaza fell in love with a maiden named "Istahar" (also spelled Istehar) which as I said before is a Hebrew name for Venus and obviously relates to Ishtar. However Istahar demanded Samyaza teach her the ineffable divine name which allows him to ascend to heaven and upon learning it she spoke it and rose to heaven having never "defiled" herself. "God" felt the need to reward Istahar for not defiling herself and so placed her in the "seven stars" of the Pleiades which as it so happens are found in the constellation of Taurus. Istahar is also known as Estirah and scholars have noted that Istahar is much like Naamah, however they also believe that the Gnostic woman Norea, gets her name from Naamah, (See Ch 21 of the book "Images of the Feminine in Gnosticism") but as with Istahar, in this case the archon Watchers failed to rape Norea and so the Gnostics have their own and opposite interpretation of this story, inverting the Jewish character of Naamah. So Norea was not the source of any Nephilim and for Gnostics she was not a descendent of Cain, but the daughter of Adam and Eve and the sister and wife of Seth. According to Epiphanius, (Ch 26) Norea was also thought of as the wife of Noah for the Borborites, but as with others, Noah was a tool of the archons and Norea is not demonic in any way. That there is a Gnostic version of this woman would explain why the tarot card "the star" depicts the Pleiades and probably alludes to this very same story. Naamah also brings to mind Jewish stories of Lilith as the mother of demons, as Rabbinical teachings also tell us that when Adam tried to dominate Lilith sexually she told him, "We are on a perfect equality; for we are both formed out of the same Earth'. So neither would submit to the other. Lilith, seeing this, uttered the Shemhamphorash" (Here identified as simply YHVH) "and instantly flew away through the air" escaping to the Red sea where she had 100 demon babies a day. From what I know, this is probably ultimately rooted in a Sumerian goddess of the ocean/Absu named Nammu AKA Namma, but we know little of her, she is the mother of the gods and especially Enki and while she is not demonic, she was later seen as Tiamat, who does fit better as she gave birth to demon like creatures. However there is also a female demon named "Abyzou" (AKA Obizuth) in the Testament of Solomon which can be likened to Lilith in that she kills babies and so as the more ancient forms of the myth were lost, corrupted or mutated, the patriarchal Jews demonized her, while the egalitarian Gnostics stuck closer to her original form as Namma, or Norea of the flood/ocean. This story of Istahar is also compelling in that the Pleiades also turn up in the Testament of Solomon as seven demons, but many have also pointed out the Book of Enoch also seems to describe the Pleiades in regards to the abysmal prison of angels. At the end, Shem in the Paraphrase of Shem says he will go beyond this place, "And when the Pleiades separated, I saw clouds which I shall pass by. For the cloud of the Spirit is like a pure beryl. And the cloud of the hymen is like a shining emerald. And the cloud of silence is like a flourishing amaranth. And the cloud of the middle region is like a pure jacinth." This is rather obscure, but a possible explanation comes from the Standford Encyclopedia of Philosophy which says of Xenophanes, that he theorized that the sun, stars, meteors and comets all form from clouds, it also says that he believed the winds were formed by the sea.

While he never cited his source, Ginzberg got this story from the "Midrash of Azael and Shemhazai" and we can also see that here Metatron comes to warn Samyaza/Shemhazai of the flood, Shemhazai's sons also have dreams, one dreams of a giant stone in the sky with writing on it, the other dreams of a tree losing it's branches. Shemhazai also repents and "suspended himself between heaven and Earth, head downwards," (like Peter the hanged man) but Azael refuses to repent and we learn it is for this reason that on Yom Kippur "they cast one lot for the Lord that it might atone for the iniquities of the Israelites, and one lot for Azael that he might bear the burden of Israel's iniquity." That is dice were used to decide which "scapegoat" is sacrificed for Yahweh, and which other goat is given to the demon Azazel and given that dice were also used to control the demons in the Testament of Solomon, that "Zazel" is the "spirit" of the Saturn kamea, we can see the cube is quite important in all this. As the "scapegoat" is supposed to take the sins of the people, in this goat sacrifice for Azazel some early Christians as in the Letter of Barnabas 7:6-7 10 see a foreshadowing of Jesus as a sacrifice to the demon, which makes perfect sense if Jesus is supposed to represent the atonement of our sins.

Later on, as in the stories of Solomon and other Biblical characters, Ginzburg tells us of yet more relevant things, many of which you will have to read for yourself. (For example see King Zedekiah, who's name implies the Zadok priests) The chapter on Solomon is quite revealing however and it turns out Solomon lost his kingship for a time to the Goetic demon Asmodeus who was impersonating him, all because for no real reason he gave the demon his magick ring. This is one of the many strange moves for a man who is supposed to have been the wisest of all time, he was supposedly given a gift by Yahweh to discern right from wrong, so he started worshipping Pagan gods! Bringing to mind the Zohar's allegory of the Torah tower there is also a story of how Solomon, not wishing his daughter to marry a poor man, sends her to live off in a tower with 70 eunuchs, though she does marry the poor man to equal 72 people. We also hear a story of Solomon's throne which is surrounded by chairs for the 70 elders, though it gives us a solution by saying there is also one for a high priest and one for his vicar. This throne has much astrological symbolism behind it with steps reminiscent of a step pyramid and it figures in later stories as it goes to Egypt and eventually finds it way to the Persian emperor in the book of Esther. Many others have written of this throne and it was also said to have the four fixed signs of cherubs around it and Solomon had sapphire footstool just like Yahweh's throne.

Because there is so many variations of these stories it can be hard to make a final decision about much of this, but the mere fact of the incredible diversity of opinions is itself evidence of the decentralized and often non dogmatic nature of early Judaism and Christianity. As there is such diversity, the authority of the orthodoxy is on very shaky ground and so also represents a diversity of political beliefs which are reflected in the various myths. There is the opinion of the theocrats and what would become the orthodoxy with all their vested interests, then there is the original mystics who were undeniably Pagan and focused on overthrowing their Mesopotamian rulers or archons. In the text "Praeparatio Evangelica" by the well respected Christian historian Eusebius he quotes from many sources with many beliefs and so highlights some of this incredible diversity. It also provides many highly significant statements and Eusebius quotes an anonymous source saying, "Abraham traced his family to the giants. While these giants were living in Babylonia, they were destroyed by the gods because of their wickedness. One of them, Belus, escaped death and came to dwell in Babylon. There he built a tower and lived in it. It was named Belus, after Belus who built it." Belus here has been identified with Chronos, but in Book 9 chapter 17 of this same book we learn he had a son who was also named Belus and this Belus had a son named Canaan who then founded Phoenician civilization. While some may simply dismiss this for being contrary to orthodox Judaism, this would be due to the assumption that theocratic Judaism represents the true religion, rather than what I and the Gnostics would argue is the corruption. After looking at so many views on the subject this opinion of Abraham makes the most sense and yet as it comes from an anonymous source it is questionable, but then it is also true that Eusebius as a Christian did not consider it random gossip or anti-Semitic blasphemy, so in light of what I write in this chapter, keep it in mind as a strong possibility.

Most modern Christians and Jews of the orthodox persuasion are to some degree embarrassed by the mention of giants in Genesis or do not even really know about it. The religious institutions do their best to avoid its implications, but if we interpret it as the remnants of proto-Gnostic allegory and mythology against the state, it is all too clear why such stories would be more or less forgotten in modern orthodox circles with theocratic ambitions. I am not sure there ever was an Abraham at all and so the idea that he came from giants is wrong in the literal sense, but the simple fact that people believed it shows that there were many beliefs about this mythology. This fact has huge political implications for a theocracy presenting itself as the one truth and shows that Judaism itself was believed to come from the same Pagan mythology about giants and even Nimrod (AKA Yaldabaoth AKA Chronos) as Belus.

Thanks to the censorship imposed by what would become the Roman Catholic Church, we can see that most of this context would be lost, but the Christian patriarchs like Irenaeus would still take on the tower as a symbol of the Church. I have already listed some examples of this in chapter 16, but Irenaeus was also a fan of the text the "Shepherd of Hermas" in which the church is explicitly referred to as a tower in a very detailed allegory in which Christians and the clergy are the bricks. This text tells of 12 virgins and 6 tall young men who are also angels and "were created first of all, unto whom the Lord delivered all His creation to increase and to build it, and to be masters of all creation." This group built the tower and especially its foundation, taking a square stone for the cornerstone, they themselves must correspond to the 12 edges and 6 sides of the cube, while Jesus is referred to as a "mighty man." There is much pertinent symbolism in this text and while "Herms" may well refer to Hermes, this would be because the text is co-opting Gnostic/Hermetic philosophy for Christianity and in fact this text was thought of so highly by Christians, it was part of the original canon of the New Testament!

While this notion that Abraham and Jews were descended from the giants may seem odd, we have seen that Noah helped King Og and that the Watchers were under the direct control of Yahweh and even the Zohar agrees by calling the patriarchs sons of god and so it seems this is the Gnostic's primary grudge against the rulers. In the book of Jubilees, Nimrod is the father of Azurad who is the mother of Peleg and so this would mean Abraham and in fact all Jews are descended from Nimrod and as Nimrod has giant blood in him, so too must Abraham. (The same Peleg in Masonic myths who was the architect of the tower) We can see yet more examples of the Judeo-Christian alliance with the Watchers and “giants” from their own mouths, especially in the writings of the Christian theologian, Saint Ephraem the Syrian. He says, “Nimrod was a strong giant before the lord because in accordance with God's will he waged war upon the peoples in order to spread them out to the areas that god had allotted them. Therefore if someone wants to bless a leader or king, he says: May you become like Nimrod, a strong giant before the lord, triumphant in the wars of the lord.” This was apparently not an uncommon kind of blessing for leaders and to me this brings to mind modern “false flag” attacks by the oligarchs, here like in so many other places in the bible, god manipulates people in to “sinning,” then punishes them and often many completely innocent people in the process. While the “corruption” of the antediluvian world is itself god's fault, another example would be when “god” hardened the heart of Pharaoh in Exodus to prevent him from freeing the Israelites, then he plagues Egypt as if Egyptians were evil. In some traditions it basically says Nimrod started out a good god fearing worshipper of Yahweh, but then became vain with his success as king of the world, then he slipped in to idol worship and or decided to “rebel” as per his name, but at any rate he had to be destroyed. One of Anat's boasts in the Ugaritic texts is that she killed “the rebel,” so we have a possible explanation for the link between Nimrod, Mott and Yaldabaoth.

So while in most modern traditions Nimrod is seen as an evil figure, as we have seen there are streams of thought in which he was not so bad and so we might take this as a sign that Nimrod was himself the victim of the bankers infiltration. In some traditions (As in the Islamic) it is also said that Abraham went out to meet Nimrod and battle and that while Nimrod had an army, Abraham had an army of gnats and that one gnat went in to the brain of Nimrod and drove him insane. In other traditions this is a mosquito instead and “coincidentally” this story of a parasite entering the brain is also told of Emperor Titus, as Yahweh's revenge for destroying the temple in the year 70 A.D. At any rate, as we have seen, I have only found evidence of Nimrod being thought of as a good person in the Abrahamic traditions and not one in the Gnostic traditions, so that while his mythology is symbolically linked to the tower of information, he firmly belongs to the Solomonic Mason tradition of theocrats and the tower of hierarchy.

The apocryphal texts have many more relevant things to say, for example the book of Jubilees says that Noah planted a grape vine on Ararat, a role reminiscent of Dionysus who taught viticulture and keep in mind also in Genesis Noah gets drunk on wine. In 3 Baruch likewise we learn the tree of knowledge was a vine and that Noah found a sprig of it after the flood, that after praying 40 days he was told to plant it because it's fruits would be a blessing. While it seems to be a Christian reworking of the text, this goes on to explain the communion wine of Jesus in this manner, that “it's fruit will become the blood of God” and the means of coming to paradise. The apocryphal 3 Baruch has many intriguing things to say and shows many Pagan and Gnostic motifs as well as a magickal chariot and important numbers, for example it mentions there are 409000 giants, with 409 being the gematria of the name of the letter “Teth,” but also “temple prostitutes” as in the Lust card of Crowley and also “patriarchs” and “the holy ones” which is explained in Sepher Sapphires as “the serpents who are androgynous.”

In chapter 10 of Jubilees it also refers to the offspring of the Watchers as spirits and so this agrees with the Testament of Solomon's ideas about the ghosts of giants. Chapter 10 also explains how Satan prays to “god” to let him keep a tenth of the spirits, complaining that “if some of them are not left to me, I shall not be able to execute the power of my will on the sons of men; for these are for corruption and leading astray before my judgement, for great is the wickedness of the sons of men.” It then goes on to explain that as these spirits create sickness, Noah was taught by the angels how to heal using the “herbs of the Earth” and he wrote this knowledge in a book which he passed on to Shem. This chapter of Jubilees then goes on to tell of the tower and how “god” confused everyone and then knocked the tower over with a wind. From Ginzberg we also learn of the medical book of Noah and that “This is the source to which go back all the medical books whence the wise men of India, Aram, Macedonia, and Egypt draw their knowledge.” That Asclepius and 40 sages went to India “in the direction of paradise” looking for the wood of the tree of life, that they even found some but were struck by lightning and killed. This idea of spirits causing sickness would go all the way back to prehistoric Shamanistic cultures and Psychedelic “herbs” can certainly cure demon infections and in the Testament of Solomon and other Solomonic grimoires, the demons do cause a variety of diseases. (Both the Watchers and Goetic demons also teach humanity to make weapons and war)

So in Jubilees again we see the Jewish god is in league with Satan and responsible for the archons controlling humanity, that they were purposely “left that they might be subject before Satan on the Earth.” The Jewish apocryphal text, “the Apocalypse of Abraham” Chapters 20-25 goes in to some detail about Azazel being on the side of Yahweh and presents him in the form of a bird that tempts Abraham in to not sacrificing his son. In it Abraham receives a vision and is told that some of his descendents will be with Azazel and they are pictured as being on the right hand side of the vision, which is generally the side of orthodoxy. He even sees human sacrifice being conducted in the temple of “god” and while officially opposed to human sacrifice, there is evidence for ancient Jews doing it for one reason or another, for example Deuteronomy 13:13-18 or in Kings 13:1-2 it tells of King Josiah sacrificing Pagan priests. Then in chapter 22 of the Apocalypse of Abraham, “god” meets with Satan and the sons of god and at the instigation of Satan (much like the book of Job) “god” decides to test Abraham by asking him to sacrifice his son. So as the demons work for Yahweh and cause sickness, it is not hard to see that he would be a death god, not to mention all the smiting and reigning down of fire that he does. While this text has more relevant things than I can go into here, in chapter 10 Yahoel AKA Iaoel AKA Metatron AKA Enoch appears to Abraham to convince him to go on with the sacrifice of Isaac, we see also his body is described as being like a sapphire.

In 2 Enoch and 3 Enoch we can see much of the same symbolism as 1 Enoch, though they are of course more Jewish than Gnostic, yet it is still very different from the mainstream view of orthodox Judaism. Much of the symbolism here is redundant to what I have already explained, but they are well worth reading and add many details which are a bit to complicated to go in to here. However I will say that in 3 Enoch we can find references to the number 72, sapphires and the “books of life” and many other details to this cosmology. In chapter 21 for example we find a cosmology, with sparks likened to the “morning star” and what seems to be a description of a “cantellated tesseract” which has 248 faces. In other places there are references to groups of angels which have 496000 members each, which is itself interesting in that 248 and 496 are important numbers in Quantum physics, specifically “gauge symmetry groups” in superstring theory and other things which I won't pretend to understand like E_8 mathematics. Now we will remember that 248 came up before in reference to the laws and the gematria of Abraham and Raziel and in Chapter 21 of 3 Enoch, since 365 comes up again we can see this is part of it as well, but 496 also came up already as the mystic number of 31 and the gematria of Malkuth and Leviathan and so here we have some very important keys. (497 is also twins) We can also see here that again the Watchers are depicted in a positive light as the advisors of “god” and that Samael is also a servant and there are another group of 72 angels which rule over the nations of Earth like the Sanhedrin of heaven. We can see yet more examples in the book of Jasher (Chapter 3) when we learn that “the Lord then called unto Enoch from heaven, and wished to bring him up to heaven to make him reign there over the sons of God” and as the “sons of god” are the Watchers then we know that Enoch/Metatron became their new leader. In 2 Enoch we can see some very fascinating things, for example the miraculous birth of Melchizedek which others have noted is like a prefiguration of Christ, (this part was even left out of some of the first modern translations because of it's political implications, which is a good example of the bias of Academia) we can also see what seems to be references to something like a hollow Earth, though not so explicitly.

In the R.H. Charles translation of 1 Enoch we see too the “book of life” (Chapter 108) and that Enoch reads many books while he goes to the heavens, which collectively may be what is called books of life in 3 Enoch. What is more, Enoch reads the “tablets of heaven” (Chapter 81 and other places) which give him knowledge of all humanities future and each individuals fate, and so here we have a clear example of a Jewish tablets of destiny which are certainly like the book of life. These heavenly tablets are also found in various places in the book of Jubilees where they prescribe ritual procedures and laws and so we can see they also correlate to the Sumerian mes, so this would also fit nicely as the "tables of Enoch" I cited from the Lesser Keys of Dr. Rudd. The story of the Watchers is in Chapter 4-5 in both Jubilees and Jasher, and in Jubilees Ch 4 it tells us that Enoch was the first to write down a testimony, while in Jasher there is also a very similar "heavenly tablets" on which destiny and "god's" judgement are written upon. So then my intuition was quite correct to link the tablets of destiny to the Jewish traditions and the book of life and this is a clear example of the Pagan origins of Judaism.

As we have seen with Abraham, Moses and others there are plenty of suspicious stories which allude to a "Jewish" infiltration of Egypt and a plundering of it's wealth, but there is yet more evidence from the Jewish religion itself of the conspiratorial activities of it's theocrats. There is so much in fact that I cannot write of all of them, but will have to limit myself to the most important parts, as I did with Esther in Persia. So then we see that while his people were enslaved in the captivity, Daniel would come to be "chief governor" of Babylon under King Nebuchadnezzar, a position he gained through his ability to interpret a dream of the king. While the whole book is suspicious, in Daniel chapter 4 we read about the dream and how the king saw a Watcher descending from heaven and an angel and a huge world spanning tree that went up to heaven not unlike the tower of Babel was meant to. The King went crazy for seven years until he converted to the "most high" god of Daniel, a "prophet" who also brought in more Jews in to positions of power, then after the death of the king, Daniel later came to be second only to King Darius and after Daniel died, he was succeeded by Zerubbabel. (Zerubbabel was in charge of rebuilding Jerusalem and the temple and is associated with the "capstone" as in Zechariah 4:7 we read, "Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.") In the Book of Jasher, Job from the book of Job is an adviser to the Pharaoh of Exodus and not only this, but in various places we learn that Terah, the father of Abraham was also the chief vizier of Nimrod. (or even related to a prince) It is certainly strange that Jews who hate the religious practices of Pagan kings would be so eager to work for them, often complaining of persecution one minute, then bragging how much everyone loved being ruled by these same "enslaved" Jews the next. These "prophets" or patriarchs generally come to power by a demonstration of Occult power, or even terrorizing the kingdom in to submission using black magick, as for example Nebuchadnezzar going crazy, and so we might wonder if mandrake sorcery was involved at times. As with say Esther, it would be easy for a trained prostitute/sorceress to be sent as tribute to the harem of a ruling monarch that had conquered the Jews, then she could drug him with mandrake or some other source of scopolamine and from this turn him in to a zombie slave, once this is accomplished she could bring more Jews in to positions of power.

While the old testament story is suspicious enough, we learn many important clues to the book of Esther through Ginzberg, who also admits Esther is Venus and he also provides quite a bit more astrological symbolism. We also learn of how Daniel practised black magick against the royal family and how "god" set up the emperor and his wife from the beginning forcing them to do his will. It turns out the Jews were also angry at the Persian emperor for inheriting treasure which they claimed was taken from them by the Babylonians (as with the throne of Solomon) and that the previous queen before Esther had held up construction of the second temple. Mordechai had an "academy" in Shusha, not unlike the academies which produced the Talmud and we also learn that he along with all the Sanhedrin spoke all the languages created after the confusion of the Tower. Not only does this provide evidence for Judaism being an international syncretism, it also explicitly shows that the Jewish theocracy used it's knowledge of various "confused" cultures to infiltrate them. Shusha was a trading centre not far from the Zagros mountains, home of Zagreus, the Orphic and Minoan form of Dionysus who was persecuted by Hera. While this might explain some of how Dionysus came to be in Judaism, what concerns us here is that Shusha is also mentioned in the Sumerian myth of the tower/temple and the confusion of languages “Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta,” (As I explained in Chapter 16) in which it is listed as being loyal to Inanna or Ishtar. What's more Ginzberg says that Mordechai actually married Esther after raising her as a child and that “god” sent a female spirit to impersonate her for the emperor. While we don't have to literally believe this, it is creepy and reminiscent of Abraham pimping out Sarah to the Pharaoh, or even a demon ghost as in the Testament of Solomon, thus Sarah was similarly likely to be a mandrake sorceress helping Abraham to gain power in foreign lands. The book details also how Mordechai actually enslaved Haman for a time and that this is one reason for his hatred, slavery was the price Haman paid as he wished to procure food for his soldiers when the two men were acting as generals for the Persian emperor and invading India. By the end, the events had caused a complete loss of credibility for the emperor, while Jews and especially Mordechai were held in high esteem by the government. At one point the emperor even says the name of Mordechai would be placed on Persian coins and after becoming a king of Jews, it says Mordechai was put on a coin, while Esther was put on the other side.

At one point in his life Abraham and his followers were put in prison, (12 in total) but his followers were secretly set free by Joktan, a king who was supposed to be the ally of Nimrod. (See Ginzberg and Pseudo-Philo) In these traditions Abraham was put in a furnace for his resistance to Nimrod, but “god” made the fire kill some 84000 innocent people in the surrounding area instead. This story is presented as if Jews have uniquely suffered from religious persecution, but this is just more evidence of that religion's hypocrisy, for all kinds of people were slaughtered, stoned to death or burned by Jews for “sinning” in some way or another. What is more they certainly would not tolerate true religious freedom amongst themselves and much of the story is about Abraham denying people's right to practice their own Pagan religions. (at this time peacefully, though later not so much) While this story of the furnace is not literally true, it does give you an idea as to the character of Yahweh, in that he doesn't merely save his people, he terrorizes humanity and even according to Judaism itself, he rules by fear, making him by definition a terrorist. Nimrod was so scared by Abraham and his “god” that after this he set Abraham free, he gave him all kinds of wealth, including Eleazar as a slave, who in some accounts such as the Targum is Nimrod's son. This brings to mind the kind of extortion and threats that Abraham would impose on Egypt after they were plagued for Abraham whoring his wife, or the the more general kinds of black magick which are called “miracles” and cast upon other goyim who aren't “god fearing” enough.

Some examples from Jasher would be how Isaac, like his father goes to king Abimelek and pretends his wife is his sister, though weary from the plagues caused by Abraham, Abimelek is suspicious, yet since he is scared of the Hebrew god he gives Isaac power and wealth in his country. Jacob repeatedly cons and manipulates his brother Esau, while Esau as the elder son and his father's favourite was supposed to inherit Isaac's wealth, yet he was cheated by this “holy man.” In the book of Jasher this takes place after Esau killed Nimrod, that having been weakened he was on the verge of death and Jacob refused to help him unless he was given everything. This certainly raises suspicion that Jacob was on Nimrod's side and later in chapter 31, Jacob kidnaps the daughters of his uncle/employer Laban and runs off in a very suspicious way, taking much wealth with him, with one of the wives Rachel, taking her fathers magickal divination “images.” This is all especially relevant as in Sepher Maphteah Shelomoh there is a spell to control a king which I mentioned before, but both Laban and Abimelek are specifically cited as examples of victims of this spell, which creates nightmares in the person and puts the fear of god in to them to make them obedient to the black magician. Then we can read in Jasher how this leads to a war in which Jacob and Esau are about to fight, until “god” sends an army of angels and uses black magick to manipulate people. Then there is a story of Simeon and Levi, the sons of Jacob who slaughter all the men in a city and take the women and children as slaves, all because the king of this city had wanted his son to marry their sister Dinah. Jasher tells this awful story, but it is even worse in Genesis 34 which says the prince Shechem had fallen in love with Dinah and was willing to pay any dowry named. So the sons of Jacob asked that all the men of the city circumcise themselves which is then done, but while the men are recovering, Simeon and Levi massacre all the men because the prince dared to crossbreed with Jews. Levi is the progenitor of the Hebrew priest class and so we see Judaism is not really a religion, but an Fascistic ideology about a master race which will stop at nothing to conquer all other people. In Chapter 35 of Genesis, we see Jacob and the Jews run away fearing retribution and Jacob sets up more pillars on his way to Bethel, and in 35:2 we see his followers had Pagan gods at the time, but they were “put away” for the trip to Bethel, which in context implies they had been infiltrating the local Pagan cults.

Again in regards to the banking cults infiltration of governments, we learn in texts like Genesis and the Book of Jubilees (See chapter 45 in both, though the story plays out before and after) and Book of Jasher that Joseph came to rule Egypt and that he was like a father to the Pharaoh. In Jubilees and Jasher especially, we can see that Joseph was taking advantage of a famine in Egypt and selling food to the Egyptians in exchange for land and gold and had become very powerful. As there was famine in Canaan as well, Joseph's brothers came to Egypt to buy food, (they are the founders of the 12 tribes and had previously put Joseph into slavery in Egypt) but Joseph, who was appointed to look after the food reserves of Egypt not only sent back food with these foreigners, he gave them back their money and sent them back to Israel/Jacob. In Jasher (Chapters 49-50 especially) we learn how Joseph made a great palace and throne for himself, one which was modelled on the land of Egypt itself, that he was given an army of “mighty men” and fought for the Pharaoh and that his brothers had been looking for him in brothels thus signifying he was part of the prostitution cult. Eventually Jacob and 70 followers come from Harran to meet Joseph (making 72) and they are given the “best” land in Egypt and Joseph married the daughter of the high priest of “On,” AKA Heliopolis and this is how the “Jews” came to be in Egypt. Heliopolis is a city strongly associated with the Ogdoad, but later also the Hyksos and to some degree Akhenaten and his sun cult, I also cited the name “On” in the Greater Keys along with IAO, but also the Masonic god, Jah-Bul-On and so as we will continue to see, this is the most relevant city in Egypt in terms for our topic. From these texts it is clear that like Daniel, Joseph was using his dream interpreting skills, divination and other Occult knowledge to infiltrate Egyptian society and that he had taken hold of their economy, that he was conspiring in secret and that this family became rich from starving Egyptians and that this was the cause of Jacob (and so the Hyksos) coming in to Egypt. So then it would seem the Pharaoh and or Nebuchadnezzar were the victims of the dream spell, but we also know from Herodotus the Magi were interpreters of dreams. (See Histories 1.107- 1.108, 1.120, 1.128 which explains that Cyrus the Great was almost killed as a baby due to their prophecies of him overthrowing the king of the Medes. At Hdt. 7.19 the Magi interpret a dream of Xerxes “that all men should be his slaves.”) At one point Joseph keeps Simeon hostage to make his brothers come back and as Simeon and his tribe corresponds to Gemini, it could be a symbol of Joseph holding Jewish business interests or investments. In Jasher (Chapter 58) we also learn that after the death of the Pharaoh, Joseph became the adviser to the new Pharaoh and was “king” of Egypt and while it says people liked him, even here it admits that some hated him, but we can only guess why.

Now as I have said before, characters in the Bible often represent a whole multitude of people and so the interactions of characters are often really interactions of whole populations and we can see this quite explicitly in the Book of Jasher Chapter 10. In this chapter the descendants of Noah go and spread out across the land after the fall of the tower and it tells us they founded cities after the names of the family members of Noah, the most relevant being Ashur the son of Shem. There was a city named Ashur and this was the capital of Assyria and it so happens they had a god by that name from which the nation of Assyria is named after.

While the book of Jasher I have cited was never official cannon, it is a Rabbinical Midrash and was widely read and while we can only guess how old the original copy was, some believe it may even be quoted in the old testament. (The book of Enoch is repeatedly referenced in the New Testament and directly quoted in Jude 1:14-15) Jasher has many more clues to all this than I have cited so far, for example in Chapter 13 Abraham teaches “about 72 men” from Harran and in Chapter 48 we learn of the Pharaohs throne which is atop 70 steps corresponding to the 70 languages. In fact there is too much relevant material, that is examples of corruption, genocide and generally suspicious behaviour, or mentions of either 70 or 72 to list them all. So while some might dismiss all apocryphal books because they are not part of the official bible, no serious scholar of Judaism would do this and we can see the real reason many of them are not canonical, is because they give away too much of the game.

So now let us consider how Judaism came out of an international Pagan syncretism, but to do this we must once again consider the city of Harran. This city also had a temple to the moon god Sin, which was one of seven renown planetary temples of the Mesopotamian world and so collectively, these seven temples would have had much magickal knowledge to contribute to the universal language. Sin was the father of Ishtar and Shamash, a sun god with his own 8 pointed star or sun disk (making a trinity in this tradition) and while I already mentioned that Asherah likely inspired the name of the Asher tribe, it is possible the name comes from the Assyrian sun god Ashur, who in turn has similarities with Shamash. Like the Strophalos and wheels of Enoch, the stars of Shamash and Ishtar could well have been used for divination purposes as the “voices of the gods.” When we compare Ashur and Shamash with Aten, who is the monotheistic sun disk god of Akhenaten and the Hyksos, we can see many similarities. Ashur who was at times merged with Enlil even had monotheistic cults and his disk at times appears above a tree of life and can also be compared to the “Faravahar” symbol of Zoroastrianism and also Hermes' caduceus. This Assyrian tree of life has been shown to have sections or “sephiroth” that match the tree of Jewish mysticism extremely well, in that they share the same titles (crown and glory etc) and these sephiroth also have numerology associated with them, which while different from the Jewish tree is made of numbers I have gone in to here. (See Further reading section) Hippolytus complains of Assyrian influence among the Naassene Gnostics and it is well understood that Syria was a major centre for a variety of schools of Gnosticism, albeit at a much later date. So while many scholars believed Kabbalah to be an invention of the middle ages, the use of such a similar tree by the Assyrians shows it is millennia older, though it is in the form of the Pagan precursors to Judaism. I would also like to point out that in the same way that Genesis is structured according to Kabbalistic cosmology, so too is the epic of Gilgamesh structured off the Assyrian tree, that is according to it's number of tablets. (Gilgamesh has also been depicted in art with the sun disk)

Furthermore Akhenaten was allied with Tushratta king of the Mitanni and his son in law and so while the Mitanni had previously sacked the Assyrian city of Ashur, this was under king Shaushtatar who had as his royal seal a clear variant of this same sun disk with an 8 pointed star in it. (As the bankers are international and profit off war they generally do not have nationalist loyalties) We can also see the Mitanni are central to all this in that their deities are the same as some Vedic ones, others like Mitra is likened to Mithras and at one time their empire went all the way to the Zagros mountains of Iran. So it is the mythology and symbolism of these deities and of Anatolia and Mesopotamia in general, provides many keys to understanding how these various cultures were interacting and so how Judaism came out of an international Tantric Qabbalah. (the ancient name of Turkey, Anatolia comes from the goddess Anat)

We can see more evidence of the syncretic traditions of the international mystics in the gods Apis and Attis, in that both these deities are comparable to Dionysus and Adonis, sometimes having the moon like bull horns on their head they are thus comparable to Shiva. Adonis appears in myths with Aphrodite and can be likened to Tammuz, who is central to important Ishtar myths and the name itself is related to the Hebrew name of “god” Adonai and so once again we see the Pagan influence on Judaism. When transliterated in to Egyptian, Adonai spells “Aten” as in the god of Akhenaten and I also want to point out the archons Adonaios and Adonein in the Gnostic Secret Book of John. Plutarch even tells us, “the Jews abstain from the swine's flesh because their Dionysus is also Adonis, who was killed by a boar.” In this way all these deities are aspects of the same Tantric Kundalini tradition of the original Qabbalistic mystics, who in turn wrote the “book of the life,” which by the time of Revelations had been corrupted in to Judaism.

However while the banking theocracies had co-opted much of this Pagan symbolism, it is clear that many others still understood the true spiritual meaning contained in the mystery schools. We can see in the writings of Hippolytus (Book V Chapter V) a “Naassene Sermon” or really an interpretation of the Naassene Gnostic’s interpretation of many Pagan mystery schools and we can see that this fits the international Tantric context, importantly it includes those myths from Mesopotamia. In this text we see the influence of the Phrygian religion and others, especially the Assyrians and also how for the Gnostics, it is explicitly a matter of individuals “imprinting” their brain to increase consciousness, (White magick) while obviously for theocrats it is a matter of control and power over others (Black magick) and yet it is the same symbolism. Just as “Jesus” has very different meaning to Gnostics than to Christians, Attis has different meaning for Gnostics than what the theocrats believe and in fact Attis is one of the main Pagan prototypes for Jesus. While we must be skeptical of Hippolytus’s objectivity, the Naassenes go on to explain various views of Adam in other religions as a symbol of the unified spirit of all humans. The text explains that “Adam” or humanity came to be enslaved and in this way we see that Gnosticism is not so much a religion, but more a kind of interpretation of all religions, one based on the individual’s mystical experiences and natural philosophy.

Now Melchizedek means “King of Righteousness” as in Melech or King, plus Tzedek which means righteous, but Tzedek also means “Jupiter” in Hebrew and refers to the god Sydyk closely identified with El Elyon, who was worshipped in Jerusalem before Judaism. This was the god of indigenous Palestinian people called Jebusites, the people who founded Jerusalem and we can see that Tzadik is a similar term used for especially holy people in Judaism and has links to the “sons of Zadok” who put Solomon on the throne, eventually becoming the Sadducees. (Ezekiel 44:15 says they are Levites) Sydyk was also said to have been the father of the Dioscuri and Korybantes and so this is all highly suggestive of the banking cult, though it is hard to say exactly how they came in to this as Shem is not demonized by either Jews or Gnostics. Now one point of interest in this regard is the “copper scrolls” which are part of the dead sea scrolls collection and said by some scholars to come from the Herodian palace. These metallic scrolls detail the locations of 64 treasures, with treasure #53 being under a pillar in the “tomb of Zadok” and so along with some other things, this suggests a strong role for the Zadokites in the dead sea scrolls. Some speculate the treasures come from the temple, a few others even see references to the ark of the covenant and the ephod and breastplate, yet others claim the Templars were able to find these treasures, however much of this scroll remains a mystery and unfortunately the locations are only vaguely described. At any rate these Zadok priests are very suspicious and when we remember the group of mystics who made the tower of information were international and not of one race, the Jebusites are among the best candidates for the ones who infiltrated the mystics and turned their scriptures into Judaism. Mainstream scholars even have some notion of this with the “Jebusite Hypothesis” in which the local Jebusite’s ingratiated themselves in to the high priest position through King David, and while David is supposed to have lived quite awhile after Abraham, these are all mythological characters in a mythological history and so again chronology is not that important.

At the very least by the time of David the indigenous Jebusites are becoming very integrated with the “Jews” as they had been around each other since Abraham, but then they were never really that different to start with as Judaism is largely based on the indigenous mythology. As a king too blood thirsty even for Yahweh, David is himself highly suspicious and while he wanted to conquer the city, due to a deal they had made with Abraham, David decided to buy Jerusalem from the Jebusites. As the Gnostics are the descendents of the international mystics behind the original Qabbalistic Torah and as the Naassene Sermons explains, Mesopotamian mythology such as the Korybantes did contribute to the Pagan tantra, we can see in this a kind of “memetic missing link” between mystical Paganism and co-opted theocratic Judaism. That is if there was no wisdom in the Anatolian and Mesopotamian spirituality, the Proto-Gnostics or international mystics who largely lived in the exact same places would not have included it in to their syncretic Qabbalah, so it obviously wasn’t all inherently corrupt or else they wouldn't have been integrating it all in that land in the first place. So one way or another it seems most likely the Jebusites at the time of Shem would have been working for the banking cult and likely infiltrated the mystics, killed many of them and took the book of life which contained the “laws” of nature and metaphysics and turned it in to early versions of the “Torah” as theocratic law. As time went on the infiltration increased and by the time of “Solomon” they destroyed all dissent as heresy against the monotheistic theocracy and in so doing hijacked all the outrage and rebellion against the polytheistic theocrats to use as their justification. (Again given we are dealing with mythology, and corrupted mythology at that, an accurate time line is impossible)

In the section of the book regarding the captivity, Ginzberg also explains that the conquering Babylonian King Nebuchadnezzar was the son of Solomon and Queen Sheba, that “god” directly told him to go and conquer the Jews and that “god” also helped him succeed in a number of ways. Later we learn that Nebuchadnezzar is the descendent of Nimrod (Nebuchadnezzar was also the step son of Hiram King of Tyre) though as Nimrod is the son of Cush, who is the supposed progenitor of black people, this may be through Queen Sheba who is said to have come from Ethiopia. (The aforementioned racist view of black people is probably the origin of stories about Queen Sheba having goat legs and being a demon, though this may be from Cain.) However I have already linked Abraham to the Nephilim family of Nimrod and so this would mean Solomon too is descended from him. After the destruction of the temple of Solomon, we learn that the gate to the temple (and so its pillars) sank in to the Earth, while a Levite priest hid many of the ritual objects or “vessels” in a tower in Baghdad. In some accounts Solomon knew the temple would be destroyed and so created a subterranean area to hide the ark of the covenant. These vessels include things like 77 golden tables taken by Solomon from paradise and in the book of Ezra we also learn Cyrus returned vessels in the form of 30 gold bowls and 410 silver bowls which were taken by Nebuchadnezzar. What is more, 77 is the gematria of the Hebrew word for “tower” and also the word for planet, the word for goat, and the vestibule or entrance hall to the temple, it can also be found on the sun kamea with the hexagon sequence overlaid. (66 and 77 come up in the Ugaritic texts as well) This is important when we remember Solomon trapped demons in water pots, or brazen vessels and that it was commonly believed among ancient Jews you could trap demons in special magickal bowls, almost like a battery holding an electric charge and we can also see that demons like “legion” in the New Testament are driven in to the sea after they possess pigs. Typical of the Yahweh's hypocrisy, even though “god” forced Nebuchadnezzar to do his will, the king was later punished for his treatment of the Jews.

Ginzberg also tells a story of how Solomon flies to a mountain top with the help of a giant eagle to capture Azazel under the name of Azrael. In some traditions at least it is without doubt the same demon though in some Solomonic grimoires, it is true that Azazel is listed as a distinct “demon prince” along with Azazel and with two others, they rule the four directions, but at any rate he is still part of the same magickal tradition. In the testament of Solomon, Azazel is listed as an archangel used to bind a demon and so we see a reversal of roles here, which is also found with another “angel” Astaroth or Astaroth in the Testament of Solomon who binds one of the Pleiades demons. As the testament of Solomon was a grimoire for Jewish theocrats, here we have a blatant admittance that Azazel and their form of Astarte are helping them in these practices.

Solomon's eagle appears in other stories and brings to mind the Mesopotamian myth of Etana, which has various motifs found in Jewish mythology involving thrones, Nimrod and Solomon. The myth starts by speaking of a city built by the gods (Kish) and deals with a magickal tree which grows by a tower which is a shrine for Adad or Hadad, (the text is fragmentary so it isn't quite clear but there is a tower) and in this tree lived an eagle and a serpent. This myth of Etana implores the gods to make Etana their architect and he is thought to be the first king, a man who united all the foreign countries. After some shenanigans, Etana finds the eagle in a pit and he comes to ride the eagle to the heavens to meet the gods in search of the “plant of birth” which will help his wife give birth. (Ishtar gives it to him and so it is probably mandrake) At one point the eagle is called a “malignant Anzu,” but there are more familiar motifs and mention is made of an ox, lions and thrones, so that along with the eagle and Etana the man, we have the four fixed or cherubic signs in a very ancient prototype version of Merkabah literature. (We can also link the four signs to many depictions of the sphinx, which has the body of a lion, the head of a man, the wings of an eagle and the tail of a bull.) So then these stories of Solomon remind me of the story of Anzu, either a human headed, or lion headed eagle who stole the tablets of destiny from the throne room of Enlil and took them to a mountain top. With a human head Anzu is a mix of Aquarius and Scorpio, as in two of the angels which carry the throne of Yahweh, or we might say it is Solomon riding the eagle. With a lion head the Anzu bird is Leo and Scorpio and we do see the bird can breath fire and water, the elements corresponding to these signs.

Eagles also corresponds to Jupiter in Kabbalah and in 3 Baruch there is a Phoenix, which is described as being like an eagle in some accounts, but the Phoenix is also a figure in Alchemy as well as the Ogdoad myth of the Bennu bird/Phoenix and the Benben stone, he is like a benevolent Anzu bird, though the Phoenix has also been interpreted as Venus. Did the Phoenix steal the tablets for the Egyptians and become known as the Anzu? Well in India there is the myth of Garuda, the half giant half eagle who has been linked to the Phoenix, he steals the cup of amrita from the gods, but later comes to be ridden by Vishnu. The Phoenix also appears in On the Origin of the world in a positive way that is obscure yet important, it quotes Psalm 91:13 but also here a worm comes out of the Phoenix and is a human, and later we learn "It was only in Egypt that these great signs appeared - nowhere else - as an indication that it is like God's Paradise." Clement in his first Epistle (Ch 25) shows the theocratic perspective of this bird and as in most other places it is a symbol of the sun, but he also makes it out to be symbolic of the resurrection of Jesus, he also explains that when a Phoenix dies, a worm eats it's body and from this it grows into a new Phoenix, which then flies to Heliopolis every 500 years. This brings us back to Parzival, as Eschenbach in the last part of his work goes in to the Lapiz Exilis, he also explicitly says the stone's magick resurrects the Phoenix and he links it to good Friday or Easter and the time of the resurrection, as well as linking it to a dove. Herodotus gives similar details to Clement and says the bird lays the remains of it's father in the temple of Helios at Heliopolis, while Philostratus says that when not in Egypt, it flies around India and he says it looks like an eagle. If the Phoenix is synonymous with the eagle, then perhaps the Phoenix worm is an obscure reference to the Shamir worm found by an eagle? In Chinese astrology the Phoenix is the "vermillion bird of the south" and in some versions of the myth, Pangu is aided by a Phoenix, a turtle, an azure dragon and a Qilin lion and these relate to the Chinese elemental system and four directions. Chinese astrology has 28 mansions, the last of which is in the vermillion bird and is called "chariot," the vermillion bird constellation has within it stars from Gemini and the constellation Hydra, the stars of the latter being shared with the azure dragon constellation, with Hydra of course bringing to mind the seven headed serpent. The Phoenix appears in Jewish traditions as the "Chol" bird and in 2 Enoch (Ch 12-15) there is a whole order of angels which are called Phoenixes, there is also a demon Phoenix in the lesser keys of Solomon and some have even argued that the etymology of the word "Phoenix" comes from "Phoenicia," others relate it to the Egyptian words PaHaNok which they translate to "house of Enoch." Much of this is highly obscure and there is some reason to doubt these etymologies, so then given how ancient and widely used the mythical figure of the Phoenix is, it is safe to say that like the rest of the deities the demons imitate, this is a corrupted form. Phoenix's are found all over the Occult and in ways that it must have multiple meanings and so a single interpretation is hard to make, but in the most ancient examples, I have found it, or an eagle is associated with some version of the tablets of destiny.

In the stories of Anzu, not only do the tablets sit on the throne, they are linguistically likened to the genitals as a symbol of the creative power of the deity. This lead Blavatsky and others to note that this Anzu story corresponds to that of Chronos castrating Uranus, but also Horus castrating Set and even Ham in a sense emasculating Noah, the "crime" for which he was cursed. As Azazel was depicted as a bird in the Apocalypse of Abraham, it could be a sign that he is like Anzu, but at any rate he does fit that role quite well, especially if Azazel was the unnamed angel who stole the book of Raziel for the

Watchers. These stories of Anzu are also very comparable symbolically to the story of Solomon getting the gem or Shamir in the Testament of Solomon and in this light, as Azazel was cast in to a pit and found by Solomon on an eagle, he is like both the Anzu bird and the tablets of destiny. In some myths Anzu was defeated by the god Ninurta and in the poem "Ninurta and the turtle," the tablets fall in to Absu where they eventually come into the possession of Enki. Just as the Zohar says the schethiya was cast in to the Abyss, Ninurta decides he wants the tablets for himself and so since Enki sees this coming, he makes a turtle from the Absu and gets him to stand guard outside the gate of the Absu. This turtle defeats Ninurta by dragging him in to a pit until Enki's wife tells him to let Ninurta go. So in this poem we see that like the I Ching and the tortoise, or mount Meru and the turtle Kurma, the tablets in the Sumerian tradition are also linked to a turtle. In other myths, along with six other creatures, Ninurta attaches the Anzu bird to the front of his chariot, a dragon to the seat and a "Seven-headed serpent on the shining cross-beam." (This could refer to "Basmu" as the Hydra constellation)

Now as I have said above, Joseph Campbell has linked Gen 5 with the history of Babylonian kings as told in their myths, but unlike Genesis the Babylonians reckoned their history from the founding of the city of Kish, to the great flood as 432000 years. So as Etana was the king of Kish this can only mean that Genesis is directly inspired by the same traditions as the myth of Etana and that it is intimately related to Anunnaki/Igigi/Grigori/Watchers. There is also an Earth goddess Kishar, who with her brother Anshar or Anshur are the grandchildren of Tiamat and Absu, now Anshur is the Babylonian version of Asshur and his name means "sky axle," or "sky pivot." This fits together nicely as it would mean he is the god of the axis mundi, which itself could refer to a tower or world tree as in the Assyrian tree of life, in which Asshur is at the top just like Ain Soph Aur in Kabbalah. As it turns out Asshur is also etymologically linked Ain Soph Aur, what is more Asshur had a "bride" named Malkat or the "queen of heaven" and as Malkuth means kingdom, it is also related to the word Malkat. As the Zohar tells us Asherah is named after her husband Asshur and as Asshur is an important prototype of the Hebrew god, we can see that the divine chaos of Ain Soph Aur has a "bride" which is physical reality or Malkat/Malkuth. As we can see, Etana is comparable to Enoch in many ways and reading the myths of both for yourself only adds to this. Scholars have already noted this and also link them both to the Sumerian king Enmeduranki who also has a myth in which he goes to heaven and reads the "tablet of the gods" and learns magick from the gods and becomes a scribe for them just like Enoch. So if Etana is Enoch, the tower would come before the flood, just as Enoch in the book of Enoch is taken to a tower that existed before the flood and so this strengthens the possibility that the tower of Babel functioned as an ark of knowledge as in the Paraphrase of Shem. Enoch stories are also comparable to those told of Adapa, though as he was the first man he is more like Adam, though in these myths he is tricked by Ea/Enki in to NOT eating the fruit of immortality, and so as Enki is a prototype for Yahweh, this is why Yahweh forbid Adam to eat of the fruit, it is also why Gnostics say the fruit is good.

So other than Abraham's psychopathic tendencies, what signs do we have that the teachings of Shem were corrupted? Like Melchizedek, the word Moloch is also derived from Melech, so that opposition to Moloch then was like a rebellion against the theocracy and the evidence we have of him does show a connection to Baal or Jupiter, but also especially Chronos or Saturn. Moloch was depicted as a minotaur and had human sacrifice rituals being performed that were very similar to those of Saturn in the Roman empire, rituals where large metal bulls were used to cook people alive and execute them for the state. (Bringing to mind the furnace of Abraham) While most of what we know of Moloch comes from the old testament and is undoubtedly propaganda, given the pattern of tyranny, rebellion and co-opting of rebellious religions by the banking religion, by studying Canaanite religion we can gain insight in to the origins of Judaism. Many scholars have noticed similarities between Yahweh and Moloch and Yahweh was also referred to as Melech (A title of Tiphereth) and so while the old testament is against Moloch, scholars have pointed out that Moloch is basically an earlier cthonic form of the deity. From this it seems that "Judaism" started as a revolt against the theocracy of the bankers, represented by Nimrod the builder of the tower of Babel who is associated with Saturn and some argue his wife was Semiramis, a figure who is definitely associated with Ishtar. (While there is reason to doubt this, we know little about a historical Semiramis though there are plenty of myths about her, however one way or another she does seem to be involved in the theocratic tradition and so given that she is not crucial to any of my theories, I ask merely that you keep this possibility in mind.) We can also read from Eusebius that Judea was named from Judah and Idumea, who happen to be children of Semiramis and coincidentally one of the Herods was from Idumea. Along with Yahweh's marriage to Asherah, we can see Saturn and Venus connected in the myth where Chronos castrates Uranus the sky god with his sickle, Uranus's balls and man gizz fall in to the ocean creating the foam from which Aphrodite came out on a giant oyster shell.

It seems a big part of this was a revolt against human sacrifice and that the bankers lead by Nimrod co-opted the teachings of Shem and the mystics under the name of "Abraham," then Moloch was created as the prototype of Yahweh. Yahweh would evolve from Moloch and other deities after continued rebellions, but this would happen over centuries as through people like Solomon and those who wrote the Torah after the captivity. The unbiased history of what occurred was largely destroyed, but the theocratic history would be written as the stories imposed on the letters of the Torah, thus "confusing the tongues" of the people, yet like Christianity it retained elements of the rebel's religion to ensure credibility. Just as Asherah would be demonized and then turned in to Eve, Moloch would be demonized and turned in to aspects of Yahweh, because the rulers lack creativity and will use any symbol against the people. It is mentioned in the bible that Moloch has a star of the "Rephaim" as in the phantom/giant offspring of the "Watchers" and while this star could look like anything, it would either be an 8 pointed star or the star of David, or less likely, a pentagram, though as I have explained, all of these are found in Goetic magick. At any rate this shows Moloch was involved in the Rephaim or Nephilim cult and so as Yahweh is the leader of the Watchers and they are his "sons," then this is one more reason among many, that Moloch is a form of Yahweh.

While Baal Hadad clearly influenced Yahweh, he is also in many ways a major inspiration for the creation of Jesus. For example Baal has a similar communion myth also reminiscent of Dionysus and the Titans, or Osiris being split apart, or the blood of Kingu being used to make humanity, once again the spiritual essence is imprisoned in forms controlled by the archons. (special cakes or bread and sometimes wine were also used as sacraments for Astarte and Baal) Baal means "lord" and it's Hebrew gematria is 33, the number of years that Jesus supposedly lived and the number of degrees in Scottish Masonry and we can see that Baal also has links to Attis and Cybele, but also Mithras. Ishtar or Astarte AKA Asherah or the Shekinah or the Holy Ghost came in to Egypt and was worshipped there first during the time of the Hyksos and she was married in the myths to Set, yet he was associated by the Hyksos with Hadad and so as Set is also a form of Yahweh, we see the "father" and the "son" or Baal as both Yahweh and Jesus are one as in Christianity. (Along with other Pagan holidays involving the solstice, Christmas is celebrated on the 25th of December for the Roman holiday of Saturnalia, as Aeneas has not only Venus in his family tree, but also Saturn.)

The old testament says that Solomon lead on by his foreign wives not only worshipped Ashtoreth, but built a "high place" or shrine for Moloch and so again it seems he was up to some shenanigans. "God" got pissed at this and so we might think it a sign that the cult of Yahweh was antagonistic to the banking cult, except that he got an "adversary" for Solomon, "Hadad the Edomite" who is depicted as human, but like many characters in the old testament is actually representative of a Pagan deity they are impersonating. This Hadad went to Egypt and became very successful and worked with the Pharaoh and so as the Hyksos brought Baal Hadad to Egypt, the story could be referring to this. That is while the Solomon branch remained in the middle east, the bankers opened up a Hadad branch in Egypt, possibly punishing Solomon for not being theocratic enough. However as King Solomon was some time after Jacob and the Hyksos, this would be rather anachronistic and while I do think the old testament and especially stories of Solomon are non linear, there is reason to think that more is going on here. This story is found in 1 Kings 11 and no doubt relates to the power politics of the day, most probably having something to do with the Jebusite infiltration, yet there is another angle to this, the idea that Solomon here represents the god Yam, where as Hadad represents Baal Hadad and so it is a retelling of parts of the Ugaritic myth, only with Yam winning this time. Hadad who's gematria is 13 just kind of disappears in the Torah and a new adversary for Solomon appears. We know that Solomon was the master of the 72 demons and was primarily the servant of El or Yahweh and so this does loosely fit elements of the Ugaritic text where El has 70 offspring.

As I said, Moloch was also a form of Baal, and Baal was a god who had many other forms such as the one in the book of Kings in the story of when "Jezebel" tried to promote Baal through king Ahab. However this dynasty was defeated by the Jewish King Jehu, which is also spelled Yehu and according to archeological records this same man was also called Yaw, which is also spelled Yod Vav! This brings us back to the Ugaritic texts so that during the time the story of Jezebel takes place, as it is the Jewish royal family, the mainstream Baal cult is obviously theocratic and eventually defeated in a rebellion by Jehu as a representative of Yam and Yahweh. For this reason we might think Jezebel is a heroic figure, and it's true we only have Jewish propaganda about her, but as Ahab was a king of the Jews and she was a queen they were clearly not part of the mystical Anarchist tradition. That Jezebel and Ahab had 70 sons shows that they represent Astaroth and Baal as in the Goetia and as the 70 princes of Jezebel were killed by Jehu and they had Israelite blood in them, their ghosts would thus be prime candidates for becoming the Goetic demons or Rephaim spirits of dead kings. Again, this would be anachronistic as Solomon and the Watchers are much older, I think the ghosts of the 72 descendants of Noah are better candidates in many ways, but then Jehu also rode his chariot over the body of Jezebel and so again I must stress we cannot be too literal about all this non linear mythology. If we ignore the time line completely we could say the descendants of Noah are the Shemhamphorash in human form and the descendants of Ahab are the Goetic demons, but in some ways this creates more problems than it solves. So I will content myself to a Kabbalistic interpretation and say that as there are 72 beings in all cases, they are all symbolically linked and each group should be considered in each position and that at the very least it is a repetition of the same meme fractal formula.

So there are a number of ways this story can be interpreted in light of what I have brought up in this chapter, but while Jehu was the one to defeat Jezebel and her son, Ahab died earlier in a battle with king Jehoshaphat, as the prophet Elijah had been spreading revolutionary ideas, to some degree these could have been hijacked by King Jehu and turned into the story found in Kings. Elijah had a suspicious death to say the least, that is he went to heaven in a similar way to Enoch and this is why they are thought to be the two witness's of Revelations. By this I mean Elijah did not actually die according to the old testament, but instead went up in a whirlwind where he saw Yahweh's chariot of fire and we can see chariot symbolism is a reoccurring theme in this story. (as with the number 50) Knowing some parts of this and considering himself one of the real Jews as opposed to the "synagogue of Satan," the writer of Revelations used the term Jezebel to refer to the Pauline Christians, whom he saw as infiltrating his religion with that of the banker's Goetic magick, in a very similar way as had been done before to create Judaism. However John may be working with a different version of the text, or as with some other Gnostics with their version of Moses and other Jewish figures, he sees Elijah in a Gnostic way, but the basis of this interpretation is lost, except to say that John is clearly interested in the Merkabah traditions of Elijah, Ezekiel, Isaiah. However Elijah does show himself to be in the meteor death cult as in 2 Kings 1 he is said to have a leather girdle and he calls down fire from heaven and kills a captain and his 50 men, then a little later he kills another captain and his 50 men, all for no real reason, then a third captain is sent with another 50 men and they grovel before Elijah to spare them. Elijah does spare them, then in 2 Kings 2 he is commanded by his god to go to Bethel and does so with the prophet Elisha, then Elijah goes to heaven. Elisha continues on his way but at the end as Elisha is going to Samaria he stops to curse young boys who tease him for being balled, then 42 of them are mauled to death by two bears!

What we are seeing then is a war between two factions of the theocratic religion, that of Baal and Jupiter and that of Yam and the sea as a representative of Saturn/El, and soon I will try to show how they were combined and thought of as Moloch and Yahweh. So then we have two stories with the same elements of the Ugaritic texts, but interacting in different ways, and this suggests an ongoing cross breeding between the memes of Baal Hadad and those of El or Yam, which is really what the stories themselves say and why the dogmatic prophets were so pissed. The repetition of this same basic thing happening with Jezebel could be because the mythology is non linear and represents different perspectives of the same thing, or it could be showing that once a revolution was corrupted, the people became discontent with Baal, so the theocrats just replace him with Yam in an endless cycle of corrupt governments. (Not unlike Democrats and Republicans) Along with the rest of the anti Babylonian stories in the Torah, it is either just anti Pagan propaganda, or the co-opted history of the people's revolutions, which were included in order to give the illusion of freedom to the brainwashed slaves who left the Babylonian captivity. This is a great example of the differences of the theocratic traditions and those of the people, with the government like Ahab having one set of beliefs, the people having a quite different set, one which is generally antagonistic to power structures.

While this particular story might explain how Jews were originally more on the Baal side and were then infiltrated by Elijah, Jehu and Yam, from what I can see, by this time both sides here were probably pretty corrupt and serving the international bankers as sons of El. As with the story of Solomon, Hadad was sent by Yahweh and in the Ugaritic texts, despite his problems with Yam, Hadad is still loyal to El and so while in the earliest times as a Pagan deity Baal Hadad was far better than Mott, many centuries later, as with Gnostics, Hadad/Sabaoth was an archon. According to the "black obelisk of Shalmaneser III," King Jehu was called Yaw and broke his alliance with Phoenicia and the kingdom of Judah in order to ally himself with Assyria. Solomon was the third king of the Jews and so this was generations later, a time when the Jews were split in to two kingdoms, that of Judah and Israel, with Ahab being the 7th king of Israel and Jehu being the 10th king. (Matching how Enoch the 7th and Noah the 10th) This story thus shows just how splintered the "Jewish" people were and that there was plenty of back stabbing and conspiracies and so just like today, we see the international bankers playing both sides and multiple countries against each other and causing wars for their own profit. All these countries were controlled by capitalist theocracies and so it is not a question of black and white, both Yam and in many cases Baal were very theocratic, however as I will continue to show, the conflict between them is a reoccurring theme in Judaism and the key to understanding how the mystics were originally co-opted.

To really drive this home, we can see that the old testament repeatedly says the Jewish people chose to become Pagans, that they wanted to follow the Canaanite ways and would have gladly done so if not for the terrorist actions of Yahweh, his prophets, kings and Judges. So then we can see in the book of Judges one other form of the same mythological formula, though here it is more clearly a Pagan uprising against the Jewish Goetic sorcerers. In Judges 6-9 we learn of the family of Gideon, who was a judge of Israel before the time of kings, a time when the Jews were still conquering Palestine through ruthless genocide. Here we are given propaganda to feel sorry for the Jews because the gentiles had some success in defending themselves from the invaders, so Gideon is introduced standing by an oak tree and has a vision of an angel who calls him a "mighty man of valour" (Judges 6:12) and the angel tells him he will help his people. So Gideon takes a kid, that is a baby goat and makes an offering on a near by stone along with some cakes, as per the directions of the angel, and the angel put his staff on the stone and the food is consumed in fire and the angel disappears. Gideon builds an altar on the rock and is also told by god to destroy the altar and grove of Baal, (Gideon is also called Jerubbaal) this pisses off the Midianites and leads to war and so Gideon leads 300 men who have trumpets and jars with torches inside. The Midianites are defeated, but war with the gentiles continues, Gideon tries to extort some bread from some people but is denied, he promises to return and tear their flesh apart with thorns and briars and take down their tower. By this time 120000 gentiles have been killed, and soon after Gideon does come back and make good on his promises, killing all the men of the city in the process. The Jews then wish to make Gideon king, though he declines saying “god” rules them, he takes their gold ear rings and makes an ephod, that is a type of girdle which holds the khoshen breastplate for the urim the thummim, “and all Israel went thither a whoring after it.” (Judges 8:27)

Gideon then has 70 sons, then we are told he has another through a concubine from Shechem (As with the name of the prince who wanted Dinah, Shechem is also the name of the capital of the Jews before Jerusalem) and his name is Abimelech just as the king whom Abraham extorted. After Gideon dies Israel “went a whoring after Baalim, and made Baalberith their god” turning away from the house of Gideon as they felt no gratitude towards them. Abimelech has the support of the people of Shechem, he seems to lead a revolt against his own family, killing his 70 brothers on one rock, it doesn't say, but I suspect it was the same rock which had been used by Gideon. The people make Abimelech king “by the plain of the pillar that was in Shechem” and this pisses off his one living brother Jotham who then gives a parable about trees as kings and a bramble king and curses Abimelech with black magick. (72 brothers total) Joshua 24:26-27 and Gen 35 gives the origin of the pillar, which is put up as Jacob is running away fearing revenge for the actions of Simeon and Levi. After three years Yahweh sent an evil spirit to turn the people away from Abimelech (Judges 9:23) and so we can only conclude that if the spirit is doing Yahweh's will, he too must be evil as with Solomonic magick. This leads Gaal to raise an army against Abimelech and after a battle in the gates of the city, Abimelech is victorious. The people of Shechem are still rebellious and gather in the temple tower of Shechem, but after a siege are defeated when Abimelech burns them in the tower. Abimelech then goes to Thebaz, “but there was a strong tower within the city” and the people fled in to it, Abimelech tried to burn down this tower too, but was hit on the head by a piece of mill stone from a woman who broke his skull, and the chapter ends by letting us know the curse of Jotham was successful. So while we only have Jewish propaganda about this story, Abimelech is clearly a representative of Baal, while the blood thirsty Gideon is more like Yam or Mott, while the 70 brothers are the children of El.

From all this symbolic redundancy and contradiction we see the old testament, like the new testament is a mix of various mythological Kabbalistic formulas, each story within it is often a condensed version of a myth from a particular culture merged in to the tyranny corporation. There are disagreements about the details, but we also have to keep in mind the contradictory nature of international mythology spanning millennia, especially in religions without strict notions of orthodoxy. This plethora of similar divinities was confusing for ancient bureaucrats who had to be very specific, hence part of the perceived need for the creation of authoritarian theocracies like Judaism. Those who travelled, such as merchants and masons, who were free to go to country to country, to learn of all kinds of religions and so had a very distinct advantage to the common illiterate farmer who had never travelled 20 miles from home. Having heard all the stories, of all kinds of cultures made it easier for them to tell the best stories, and with that appeal they could win over the most kinds of people, if these merchants had rare astronomical knowledge, converting others would be even easier .

The theocrats may have had an international banking empire, but they needed to pretend to care about all the minor differences in each village, which had its own unique blend of memetic iteration on the mythological formulas and so it became very cumbersome to have to accommodate so many various practices. As “Baal” simply means “lord” there are many Baals which can be quite different and for the Hittites, it is said they had a thousand gods and so during state functions listing each deity and doing rituals for each deity became very complicated, so they merged them in various ways to simplify the customs and rituals. So while Judaism was monotheistic, it is a blend of many different and even contradictory stories coming from many places. The Babylonian/Persian/Jewish banking religion, like the Romans with Christianity, had to accommodate all kinds of people with one story and have something in it to make it appear sincerely spiritual, so each book, each chapter and even each verse may have the same kind of story or some various mix of mythologies, but portrayed in different ways to give different acknowledgements to specific groups of people. So for example in this King

Solomon story, Solomon is Yam, Hadad is Baal Hadad, Moloch represents Mot or El, while Ashtoreth represents a combination of Athirat and Anat who by this time had merged as a combination of Asherah and Astarte. Then in the story of Jezebel we have a lot of similar elements, but it is a different version of the same myth to show ownership over a different group of people with contrary myths, hence it is contradictory. Asherah is mentioned as a distinct goddess in other places, even in the story of Solomon, just as Esther is a distinct character in the book of Esther, because each subculture, or each puppet government and tributary still needs to be represented in the universal theocracy. This is made all the more complicated when we remember there was more than one source for the writings of the Torah and old testament and so all this explains why the time lines are all so screwed up, they were myths and political histories taken from all over and mixed together to make the ultimate state religion. So, when Solomon is binding the 72 demons he is really binding 72 cultures in his economic cartel and he is doing so using the name of El and the lord of hoasts and YHVH who represents the entire zodiac. While the Jews took the knowledge of the people who built the memetic tower of Babel, with the New Testament the Romans were attempting to bind the power of the memes of many more Pagan gods under the name Jesus and the Gnostics unwittingly inspired them. Thanks to "Dr. Rudd" who reconstructed the ancient magick, Occultists would use the Shemhamphorash expanded form of YHVH (along with the sephiroth god names) to bind the Goetic demons and so continue to use the corrupted forms of the Pagan deities. (To the three letters of each angel name is affixed either the ending of "El" or "Ah" thus it is kind of like binding that angel under the formulas of the El or AsherAh corporation.)

We can see this in the Zohar where it makes a reference to the book of Job 1:6 and 2:1 in which Satan and the sons of god come to god to get him to test Job. The Zohar tells us "These are certainly the supreme court, the sons of the Elohim, before whom the sons of the King, namely Israel, draw near. And they are the seventy officials who always surround the King, and they decree Judgement on the world." Here then we see why Gnostics were opposed to the law, it was run by Satan and the archons and administered on Earth by the 70 members of the Sanhedrin. In this regard we can also compare them and the seven primary archons known as the hebdomad that rule over them, as in the Secret book of John to the seven Anunnaki judges, the ones who stand before the throne of Ereshkigal, the goddess of the realm of the dead and the shadow side of Ishtar, a goddess who essentially decrees fate with the tablets of destiny. In light of humans pretending to be gods, these Anunnaki can further be compared to the Apkallu, or seven sages of Sumerian mythology who brought the mes and acted as advisers for the first kings.

That the antediluvian Jewish patriarchs were Babylonian kings is further backed up by the ancient historian Berossus, who was quoted by Abydenus and in turn had his work preserved by Eusebius. From Berossus a priest of Marduk who's daughter was said to be the "Jewish Sibyl," we learn a Pagan version of the flood and story of Babel and also 10 kings who lived a total of "120 sari" or 432000 years and ruled Chaldea. This Jewish Sibyl was also known as the Persian Sibyl or as Pausanias (X. 12) explains, Berossus was her father and some say she was from Babylon. Alluding to the 3 sons of Noah, Book 3 of the Sibylline Oracles is told by this Sibyl and she tells the story of Babel and starting at line 91 says that after the flood in the 10th generation, Chronos, Titan and Iapetus were born and were "very first of mortal men" which can only mean they are a version of Shem Ham and Japheth, an idea others have already pointed out before me. Book 3 of the Sibylline oracles goes on to give a prophecy that the Jews will rule the world after the Roman empire and that it will be as in the time of Solomon, as he ruled before all the other kingdoms. There is some damage in the text itself around this time and so it has been translated differently, but some say Solomon ruled over Phoenicia, Syria, "and of the islands too," Pamphylia, Persians, Phrygians, Carians, and Mysians, others say he merely came before these peoples, either way it places the Jews in a central role in what is clearly propaganda co-opting Pagan myths to use against Pagan people. (See Book Three of the Sibylline Oracles and Its Social Setting By Rieuwerd Buitenwerf on this problem, he says Solomon ruled them) Getting back to Berossus, he gives a different take on the flood as with Xisuthrus, a man who is the same as Noah and was told by Chronos to preserve the ancient wisdom and history from a flood by burying it in the “city of the Sun at Sippara” (Heliopolis is in Egypt, but also means “city of the sun”) and like Enoch, the gods “translated” him from the world of humans. From Berossus, Ginzberg and others there are signs that Noah was a nephilim, though 1 Enoch denies it specifically, it says he looked like an albino with glowing red eyes. Then Berossus speaks of the first people who built the tower of Babel, that they were gigantic in stature and hated the gods, the tower was knocked over by the winds and Chronos went to war with the Titans and the gods confused humanity's common language.

Ginzberg says of Nimrod that he wished to imitate “god” and so built a throne to match that of “god” and on the top of the tower, on the throne “lay a precious stone, round in shape and gigantic in size. This served him as a seat, and as he sate upon it, all nations came and paid him Divine homage.” This of course brings to mind the coronation stone of scone which sits under the throne of England and also the throne of Solomon, but this even fits with the idea that a meteorite sat atop the Egyptian pyramid as with the Benben stone or the great seal of the dollar bill. In the end it turns out after the fall of Nimrod that Abraham would come to “rule as king over the whole world,” a job which he got as he managed to impregnate his wife even though they were both very old, so as a result King Abraham would mint coins depicting him and his wife, thus showing he, like Mordechai carried on the monetary system taught by the Watchers.

Herodotus describes Babylon, and he says that in the centre is a tower which has towers built upon towers up to “eight” with a temple on the top and that it has a couch or throne for the god [Jupiter] Zeus Belus. This seems to be the same tower as described by Eusebius and the anonymous source who said Abraham was descended from giants, a tower which many have linked to the story of Nimrod. Keeping in mind that Chronos is sometimes identified with Belus and had a son with the same name, this could fit well with Berossus as he does say Belus is the Babylonian demiurge, hence we can see why Nimrod is the demiurge. The building of this tower is related in an Assyrian version of the Enuma Elish which was written on seven tablets and depicts their creation story and how Marduk came to possess the tablets of destiny. When Absu decides to go to war in tablet 1, it mentions how the dice had been cast, while in tablet 6 Marduk wants a tower to be built and so the Anunnaki make one for him and it serves as a home for him, Ea (Enki) and Enlil. Marduk also sits a top the tower implying a special seat for him and it says he looks down to the bottom. This myth calls the Anunnaki both “Watchers” and “fallen” and this would be because they had rebelled against the gods in a labour dispute, having been overworked as slaves, humanity was created to do their work for them, which of course brings to mind the rebellion of the grigori. The “Igigi” and Anunnaki are often conflated and it is often unclear who is being referred to, 7 judges or these workmen, but Gnosticism may provide the answer as the 7 primary hebdomad archons create the rest of the archons. (This then leads to the Sumerian version of the flood to kill humanity for being too loud) The tower named Esagila, was the Anunnaki's way of saying thank you for freeing them and as the tower is the home of Marduk, Enlil and Ea, (All gods associated with the tablets of destiny) then it is these gods that Nimrod is imitating and which Jews consider their own. It says there are 300 Anunnaki in the heavens and 300 on Earth which totals 600, then the tablets go on to tell of 50 names for Marduk. While there were 200 Watchers in 1 Enoch, in the Christian text “Questions of Bartholomew” Satan has 600 demons that fall with him and speaking of the angel of hail he says, “when any spirit of us would go forth either by land or by sea, these angels send forth fiery stones and set our limbs on fire.” As Marduk and Hadad are both gods associated with Jupiter, this rebellion would explain how the 70 came to be under the power of Baal rather than El, but as we will see in other ways, the two gods are distinct.

This tower is comparable to a variety of mythologies such as the “Ekur” of Sumerian mythology which means “mountain house” and as ziggurats look much like mountains, this one was the home of various gods and built by Enlil, it also had a “foundation” of lapis lazuli. Now in ancient times lapis lazuli was commonly called “sapphirus” and so much of this talk of sapphires refers to lapis lazuli and at any rate both types of stone refer to Jupiter and so should be treated as synonymous. (See the number 350 in Sepher Sapphires for an explanation of this) Esagila was refurbished in its final form by Nebuchadnezzar, but according to Herodotus was desecrated by the Persian Emperor Xerxes when he invaded the country. As Marduk corresponds to Jupiter, this is the same as the tower of Jupiter or Zeus Belus at Etemenanki and Esagila is part of the same temple complex area and is the most likely to be the physical tower of hierarchy. Etemenanki translates to "temple of the foundation of heaven and Earth" which itself suggests the schethiya or foundation stone and is described in some cuneiform texts as being "seven stocks" high with seven terraces and a foundation which is seven by seven stocks. Seven stocks is 91 meters and so roughly 200 cubits and this is itself important as the foundation is seven by seven, implying the square of Venus, but is also seven stocks high like the cube of Venus. Now 600 is the sum of the perimeter of the Venus square, or as 100 is the sum of corners, when we multiply by 6 for the cube the corners have a sum of 600, the number of Anunnaki and so the Venus cube fits quite nicely. If we use cubits as the unit, the number 200 is the same as the number of Watchers which fell in the book of Enoch. Herodotus gives different dimensions, but by his time the tower was ruined and so we can also read in the "Esagila Tablet," that the dimensions are given in the unit of "chains" as 3X3 and so it correspond to the Saturn square as well. (Through 50 gates, or 50 names of Marduk?) The apocryphal book "3 Baruch" says the height of the tower of Babel is 463 cubits, the gematria of which relates to the sum of the paths of the middle pillar and other relevant things. While they are too late to be the best sources for historicity, John Mandeville says the tower was 64 furlongs high, while Gregory of Tours says it was 200 cubits high and 50 cubits wide, "laid out foursquare" and having 25 gates on each side totalling 100.

The Epic of Gilgamesh is also very important in that it presents many other familiar symbols such as the flood, but most striking of all, Gilgamesh, the king of Uruk and his friend Enkidu are said to be giants. Gilgamesh and his giant opponent Humbaba even turn up in the dead sea scrolls Book of Giants as Nephilim and we can see that in the Epic, Gilgamesh is at first seen as a tyrant and is rapacious with the local women. Furthermore Gilgamesh and Enkidu are compared to fallen stars, and Gilgamesh even has a dream foretelling the coming of Enkidu in which his future friend is symbolized as a meteorite. We can also see in the epic of Gilgamesh that the ark used to save humanity from the flood was also a cube. "Her dimensions shall be to measure. Equal shall be her width and her length. Like the Absu thou shalt sail her." Then a little later we get the dimensions, "Ten dozen cubits the height of each of her walls, Ten dozen cubits each edge of the square deck. I laid out the shape of her sides and joined her together. I provided her with six decks, Dividing her (thus) into seven parts. Her floor plan I divided into nine parts." So here yet again 120 comes up as in the number of years Noah preached, 120 sari or units of time in which the Babylonian kings reigned, not to mention all the other numerology which Clement and Philo explain regarding the flood and the ark and so we can see that the seven parts of the ark are something like the seven stories of the tower of Babel and the floor plan was also divided like the square of Saturn. So while they were probably all used for this same purpose, at the very least we can see that the subterranean chambers of Enoch and the ark of the flood, used this numerology system as part of a mnemonic device, which in turn was used to preserve the ancient knowledge from the "flood" of forgetfulness and memetic entropy. The New Jerusalem too was meant to be a replacement for the physical temples that had been destroyed and so it too was preserving the knowledge of heaven in its architecture, that is as it exists in the mind or astral realms, the Romans could never destroy it.

There are a few more mythological examples that could be the tower of Babel, so we see Esagila is also very comparable to the palace of Baal Hadad in the Ugaritic texts. This palace is made of silver and gold and lapis lazuli, as I mentioned before, it sits upon Mt Zaphon or Mt Hermon where the Watchers came down and as we shall see, it has within it a special throne. Some scholars like John Day say this mountain is depicted in the epic of Gilgamesh as Saria or Sirion which is the home of the Anunnaki and is on the way to the paradise garden of the gods. The Venus cube symbolism also fits here when we know that Anat and Athirat are Venus goddess's and played a crucial role in Baal getting his mountain palace. Like Etemenanki there was another ziggurat at Borsippa which was refurbished by Nebuchadnezzar, it too had seven stories with a cubical temple on the top and was known as the “tongue tower” and “the temple of the seven spheres” with rooms for the various gods and their wives. This ziggurat was primarily dedicated to Nabu the Babylonian version of Hermes, who was also the keeper of the tablets of destiny, and Nabu was said to write the destiny of each person on the tablets just like the book of life in the bible. At least as time went on, the tower of Babel then was likely a composite of various ziggurats which were symbolic of Mesopotamian theocracy in general, while Nimrod too, at least over time became a composite of various kings and mythological figures.

Now all this is interesting enough, but while trying to discredit the Pagans, Eusebius actually gives us further evidence linking the Jewish patriarchs and kings to the Babylonian kings. In Praeparatio Book I chapters IX-X (Though before and after also has much relevant information) he quotes the history of a Pagan man named Sanchuniathon who was said to have lived before the Trojan war in the time of Semiramis. As Eusebius is a Christian we must be skeptical, but the accounts of Sanchuniathon come from Philo and so he would not be able to get away with inventing it all himself. This version of mythology is very thought provoking and provides an alternative family tree for the gods, but more importantly, Eusebius is trying to prove the Pagan gods are but human kings in what is called a “euhemerist” interpretation. He explains that these kings having invented various things useful for founding civilization were subsequently deified and had all manner of allegories and fables added on to their histories to make the various mythologies. Sanchuniathon learned his history by studying the works of the “Ammonians” who are the priests of Phoenician god Ammon (He is the 7th Goetic demon and may be a co-opted form of the Egyptian/Nubian deity, but Ammon here is associated with Baal and is not to be confused with the uncorrupted form of Amun in Egypt.) and that this knowledge was written on pillars in their temples, with each god/king receiving their own pillar. This history he presents uses names from a variety of pantheons and as in a Qabbalistic interpretation it was quite common for Pagans and especially Greeks to refer to other people's gods by using the corresponding names from their own culture. (or create syncretic mixes) Now no one can deny that in some cultures, Pagan kings were deified or were thought to be incarnations of the gods, that union with the gods was even the primary goal of mystics or Theurgists, but it is surely a huge stretch to say that all the Pagan gods ever were is human kings. While I believe in the gods, I have never really questioned if they existed in the flesh here on Earth, though some Theurgist may have spread their religion, or perhaps even the gods appeared in spirit bodies, it doesn't really matter because what is important is developing your own relationship and understanding of these gods. While it is true that even Gnostics said humans created the gods, they did not say the gods were humans, except to say that humans are themselves divine. Though I do believe archons were at times interpreted as human rulers, in some texts the Gnostics clearly saw the Pagan gods as providing great spiritual wisdom, but then when considering if the gods are real, much of this depends on your definition of “real.”

In this history of Sanchuniathon we find all the usual suspects, but what is most relevant is that they are shown to all be related and to have spread to various cultures. For example we learn of El Elyon “the most high” of the Jebusites and the Hysistarians (linking him to Sabazius) and also Sydyc (Tzedek) whom we can see is at the root of this banking cult. We can also read the history of Chronos and how he made war against his father Uranus and in Peraea gave birth to Jupiter or Zeus Belus and others, also how his secretary Thoth-Hermes invented the alphabet and made the letters in the image of this family. Asclepius, Apollo, Typhon/Set and more are all brought up in this story, which is a bit too complicated to sum it all up here, but I strongly suggest you read it for yourself. The followers of Chronos were even called Kronii from which we ultimately get the word “crony” as in crony capitalism, but Chronos is also called Elus in this text and his followers were “Eloim” or “Elohim” as they were followers of El. This is especially important because Troy was also known as Ilium, named for Ilus which has an etymology that can be traced to “Ilah,” the word for an individual god that rules a city state in Arabia, from there to Ilu as we read in the Ugaritic texts and also Ila and Il and from there

Al, or El from which we also get Allah in Islam. Elus is also spelled Ilus and so both are used to refer to Chronos and so along with others, this history of Pagan God/Kings is a history of the theocrats who would infiltrate free societies and eventually become blended to create Yahweh.

Among other things, Sanchuniathon tells of a woman named Astarte who finds a fallen star and brings it to the island of Tyre and places it in the temple and so as we know Istahar met Samyaza, who as a Watcher would also be a meteorite, these stories must be linked. (“Tyre” itself means “rock”) In the Zohar we saw how Samyaza was identified with the name Azza, but this can also be spelled Uzza and this spelling let's us know with certainty where Samyaza comes from, that is he was originally the Arabian goddess Al-‘Uzzá. Now Al-‘Uzzá was one of three daughters of Allah, who were originally Pagan goddesses and Al-‘Uzzá was the goddess of the Kaaba meteorite before it was Muslim. Her two sisters Allāt and Manāt probably had their own stones and together they are like the Arabian version of the three fates, with Al-‘Uzzá especially being associated with Venus, but also Tyche and Isis. Manāt was mother the Nabataean god Dushara (also spelled Dousares) who was worshipped as a stone cube at Petra, he was also associated with both Zeus and Dionysus and like the latter was also said to be the son of a virgin goddess like Persephone. There were sacred stones at Byblos, Sidon and Tyre, all associated with Astarte and so knowing this, it is safe to say that Samyaza became conflated with Astarte as Astaroth in the Goetia and so along with Paimon, we can see both of the main leaders of the Watchers within the Solomonic magick. The 360 idols around the Kaaba thus bring to mind the 360 archons which Gnostic sex magicians would do rituals to free themselves of and so it would seem these 360 Arabian Pagan deities could well be the uncorrupted forms of the 360 daemons in the Lesser Key.

Sanchuniathon speaks of many relevant things, but one of the other things that stand out most is the story of Ousous, the first man to take to sea, a man who also made two pillars, one consecrated to fire, the other to wind. There are giants too, or at least “sons of surpassing size and stature” with mountains named after them like Mt. Cassius AKA Mt. Zaphon for Cassius, but also Hypsuranius who some say founded Tyre. All this in Eusebius is too much to be a coincidence and so as we know the Watchers read the book of Raziel and the pillars that symbolically go with it, that the Zohar calls the book of Raziel the book of the generations of Adam and links it to Gen 5 which is the Babylonian kings list, we know this is the history of the theocrats, or the pillar of hierarchy in a textual form and even the condensed prototype for parts of the Torah. For Gnostics or the mystics it is a history of the archons, the fate of the world which they were fighting and the means of freeing humanity, though no doubt not even Sanchuniathon wrote the whole thing out. As the various myths tells us, the pillars on which this history would be based would also have a section for the magick and astronomy that was broken up in to the various magickal traditions of the old world, (at least) with the Gnostic's trying to reconstruct it and the rulers trying to monopolize it and keep everyone else ignorant. Eusebius lies or gets many things wrong as he is working from the assumption that Judaism is a true religion or in the form of Christianity is one worth spreading at any cost and so without all this other information I have gone in to, Sanchuniathon is very puzzling. However as gods and mysticism must make people enthusiastic about religion before god kings and theocracies can successfully form, not to mention the use of entheogens which goes far back before civilization and hierarchy, given that “Judaism” did not exist at the time of Sanchuniathon, we can see that kings usurped the identity of the gods. Then in order to co-opt the rebellions, the status of god kings was changed to human kings, but since the theocrats still wanted to be worshipped, (like Roman emperors) thanks to the death cult working under the name “Abraham,” these eventually became the titles of Yahweh in the Torah or else Jewish patriarchs as in Genesis 5 and other places.

That this Phoenician tradition is linked to the Watchers and the Trojans is further seen by the explanation of the theocratic origins of the Korybantes and the “Cabeiri” metal workers and of course the Dioscuri. All of these figures are conflated along with the “Samothracers” by Sanchuniathon and are said to be offspring of Sydyc, and to have made the first ship, their descendants also discovered the use of herbs and charms. The symbol of Gemini, the twin brothers of Helen, a sign ruled by Mercury are also two pillars and we can also see in other sources, that like Gemini, the Cabeiri of Samothrace are twins and also associated with bronze pillars. In Sanchuniathon the descendants of the Dioscuri take to sea and find their way to Mt Cassius, AKA Mt Zaphon or Mt Hermon where the Watchers descend, there they are said to have built a temple. Diodorus tells us the Samothracian mysteries go back to the most ancient times and tells of it being colonized by foreigners and that it was from here that “Dardanus and Cybele and Corybas conveyed to Asia the sacred rites of the Mother of the Gods and removed with them to Phrygia.” Ilus, the founder of Troy also had a son named Laomedon, who was not only the father of Priam, but according to Homer, was the father of twin bastards.

Samothrace also seems to be the source of the Pallas palladium or meteorite of Troy, this was through Electra, who had taken refuge there, but for various reasons, generally regarding Zeus's affairs with women. That is in different myths Zeus threw the palladium to Turkey, along with the goddess of ruin named Ate, whom he also threw from heaven and this palladium was the meteorite found by Ilus. Now in Greek myths Electra and Zeus were the progenitors of the Trojan royalty having as their son Dardanus, who in turn is the father of Illus and is married to Chryse, daughter of a human named Pallas. This human Pallas is said by the Roman Servius to be the source of the name for the Palatine hill in Rome, he was also supposed to be the teacher of Athena and so seems to be the human king behind the Titan giant of the same name. Not only this, Electra is also one of the Pleiades along with Maia the mother of Hermes and as a group, the Pleiades were transformed in to doves and then made their way to the stars which bare that name. They were also the sisters of the Hyades, mythical figures which also relate to stars found in Taurus and in various ways are said to have raised Dionysus. (When we know that Buddha is the name of the planet Mercury, it is quite the “coincidence” that his mother is also named “Maya” the Hindu name for the illusionary world.) This story of Electra and the meteorite then is also extremely comparable to the story of Istahar becoming a Pleiade after finding the Samyaza meteorite and so shows a direct link between the Trojan mythology and the Solomonic/Watcher mythology. So then it would seem that if the “book of Raziel” is a meteorite and was read by the Watchers, and the Trojans represent the theocratic cult of the Watchers, then it would make sense that Samothrace would be the spot where they learned many of the mysteries that they would corrupt. Other myths saying the meteorite fell in Turkey as when Illus founded Troy could potentially be a cover up and propaganda to justify it being in Troy after the theocrats stole it, then given that the story of Uzza and the Kaaba is also basically the same, it would seem that after the fall of Troy, this meteorite eventually made it's way to Mecca. As there are definitely multiple meteorite goddess's and palladiums, it could be the same basic mythology is given to different meteorites, as I said, some of them found their way to Rome and that of Athena went to Athens and so it is not exactly clear how many meteorites there were, but one thing is for sure, these stories are too similar not to be linked and so stem from the same ancient meteorite religion.

We can see the twin cult is all over Judaism and so backing up a bit, Jacob and Esau are twins, though Jacob screwed Esau out of his birthright and would not even give his brother a pot of porridge to save his life. King David and his descendents, such as the Christian Jesus, were in turn the descendents of Pharez, who was the twin brother of Zerah and in Genesis 38 we read how they are fathered by Judah, who impregnates his daughter in law whom he believes to be a prostitute. He agrees to pay her a baby goat or kid, but she receives his bracelets, a staff and his signet ring instead. Here then is proof that like his brother Joseph, this important founder of Judaism, Judah the patriarch of the Jewish royal family was in to prostitutes, and that it is associated with twins as with Romulus and Remus and other Pagan religions.

The Jewish appreciation for prostitution is found in many places, so for example it can also be seen in Gen 35:22 when Reuben has sex with his father's concubine Bilhah and along with the concubine Zilpah, she is also the mother of some of the 12 founders of the tribes. These two are daughters of Laban, but see also the book of Judges, as with Samson and his love of the prostitute Delilah. Judges 19 is one of the most disturbing stories of the bible, it tells of a Levite who sends his concubine to be gang raped by the Jewish tribe of Benjamites in order to save himself, it doesn't say she was dead yet, but he cuts her into 12 pieces and sends the parts to the 12 tribes! This sparks a civil war among the Jews and the Benjamites are almost exterminated, after this no tribes want to send their women to mate with the surviving Benjamites, so they all conspire to help the Benjamites kidnap the women of Shiloh when they are dancing in the vineyards. (Shiloh is 345 in gematria and was an important town which housed the ark for 369 years according to the Talmud Zevachim 118b.)

Getting back to twins, as I have said, in Kabbalah Simeon and his tribe correspond to Gemini and I and others have seen plenty of hints to show that Levi at least symbolically acts as his twin at times. Some traditional symbols of the tribe of Simeon even include a tower and a gate, but it is also sometimes associated with sapphires and so he is definitely important. (The apostle Simon the Zealot is often attributed to Gemini as well) While they are not psychopathic about it, as in the story of Dinah, the Dioscuri twins of Gemini rescue their sister Helen from Theseus and in Genesis 49, each of the 12 brothers receives a blessing from their father, but Simeon and Levi receive the same blessing as if they are one. As Genesis only mentions Eve having one conception, it could well be that Cain and Abel were twins as well, though this is more symbolic than explicit. What stands out most however is the traditions as with the Kabbalistic text “Kol HaTor” which translates to “The Voice of the Turtledove” and details how there will actually be two messiahs, one associated with David, the other with Joseph and that they are like twins, with their actually being 156 aspects to the Joseph messiah, as we saw this is because 156 is the gematria of his name. This twin motif is further demonstrated in some Kabbalistic traditions where Metatron as the archangel of Kether or “godhead” is the twin of the archangel Sandalphon, who rules over Malkuth and physicality and is said to be the prophet Elijah transformed. (Sometimes these angels are said to be the cherubs on the ark)

We can further see the importance of the twin cult in the religion of Janus, god of the gates who the myths say was the inventor of coins and also that he gave Saturn refuge after Jupiter rebelled and that he is also strongly associated with the Vestal virgins. The cult of Janus was brought to Rome by the same king who found the shield/meteorite, Numa Pompilius, from whom we get the term “numismatics.” He was the son of the twin Romulus and instituted most of the Roman theocratic traditions and curiously, like Jews, he forbid idolatry and depicting the gods with images. According to the Piso family he was their ancestor and along with Leontocephaline, Janus may influence symbolism to do with Peter, as he also has keys and is found at gates just like Peter. For yet another example, not only have many noted that Gilgamesh and Enkidu are like twins, with one dying and one living like Castor and Pollux, they meet in a doorway or gate and some scholars have even made a decent case that Gilgamesh was none other than Nimrod himself! (others argue for Orion as they are both hunters)

This twin cult comes up all over the place and yet Samothrace was so well respected by so many different people that it does seem to be one source of the uncorrupted and probably entheogenic form of the mysteries. (Though asking where a cult of multi-ethnic nomads come from is a pretty pointless task) There is even specifically a section in the Naassene Sermon for the Samothracian mysteries which tell of twins like that of Gemini, but like the Lovers card of the tarot, are also symbolic of Adam in both his heavenly and Earthly form. We can also see that there are many legends both Christian and Gnostic that Jesus had a twin such as Thomas, the name Thomas even comes from the Aramaic “Toma” which means twin and he was also called “Didymus” which also means twin. (He also happened to go to India according to legend) In the Gnostic sense the twins can be interpreted as something like the “higher self” of Occult philosophy, or in slightly other ways the astral body, or spiritual self which exists beyond the physical, while the physical body is simultaneously here on Earth as it's twin. Mani the prophet of Manichaeism had his “light twin” and we know Mani was also influenced by Buddhism and so we see Vajrapani was the “soul twin” of Buddha. I have also come to suspect Mary Magdalene was in some traditions originally the twin sister of Martha, making them sisters of Lazarus and so while Jesus and Thomas mirror the Dioscuri, Mary and Martha mirror Helen and Clytemnestra. Furthermore John Allegro writes a chapter in “The Sacred Mushroom and The Cross” about the Dioscuri and makes their importance in Christianity a central argument of his thesis, he explains their Sumerian origin and their entheogenic side as through Amanita muscaria and along with other scholars, he says that the twins represent the evening and morning star. (This book is crucial in general and has more details for this chapter than I can quote) As the sons of Zeus, the twins are also called the “sons of god,” but this was changed to merely son of god for Jesus and so in the Christian sense it could be interpreted as Titus claiming to have Watcher blood. The basic Greek meaning of this twin cult is further seen in that Zeus was supposed to be the father of the immortal Pollux and Castor had a mortal father and so was himself mortal and yet they were twins and so here we see an allegory for the body and soul.

So just as the brothers of Helen are the twins, and also part of the Phrygian religion, again we see both tyrants and rebels use the same symbols at times, but have very different interpretations. We can see that the twin cult did play a role in Judaism, Gnosticism and Christianity as well as other purely Pagan people, for example the Alcis twins in Germanic traditions and Ashvins of Hinduism and so when dealing with things like the Samothracian mysteries, we should not automatically think of it as being purely theocratic or corrupt, merely that the mercantile forms of this twin cult were at the root of the banking tradition. There are no “black” and “white” symbols, only grey and we can also see that Pythagoras is from “Samos” and that Samothrace was colonized by his people, that the island was an important source of knowledge for many people and many traditions, both mystical and theocratic, just like the book of Adam/Raziel. Just as New York was home to both Emma Goldman and the New York Stock exchange, there is a tendency for the powerful and the rebels to be in the same cultural centres. Occult symbolism is a language, and as words are symbols, different people can use the same symbols/words in different contexts with other symbols to say very different things, some freedom loving, others tyrannical. As both traditions sometimes use identical symbolism, they can almost be likened to twins themselves, the only way to tell them apart being their politics and economics. One twin gives spiritual liberation and stresses the divinity of all things, the other stresses the need for authority and materialistic tyranny, with the latter imitating the former, not so different from how forms manifest first on the astral, then on the Earth. As John Allegro himself argues, Jewish texts were not purely against the earlier entheogenic rituals and while to me this would be the residue of the original Pagan syncretism which the theocrats appropriated before they replaced the sacraments, we can still find things like proverbs 20:1, which here is probably indicative of Dionysus, “Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.” So too we see in the cult of Dionysus that it became corrupted by the Roman state, while there were still plenty who kept the original Shamanism alive. Once attaining power, the theocracy then slanders the true originators, as did Clement of Alexandria's supposed “quote” of Heraclitus of Ephesus who says, “night wanderers, magoi, bacchants, mystery initiates” (indicating Orphics) would all be damned to fire because they initiate others in to the mysteries outside the orthodoxy and so if Clement is to be believed, here we have not only the oldest reference to “magos” in Greek, but perhaps even the first drug offenders. At the same time in Gnosticism and Buddhism this twin motif is not so explicitly tied to Gemini, so while with any rule there are always exceptions, in general the constellation Gemini, as the most mercantile sign is a good indication of the banking cult, but also writers and travellers and other types of people.

For the Greeks, the Cabeiri are linked to metallurgy and their father is the smith god Hephaestus, while the twins of Gemini are credited with creating the first ships, but also husbandry, or horsemanship specifically, not unlike the horse god Sabazius. In acts 28:11 Paul takes a ship to Rome bearing the symbol of Castor and Pollux, while according to Philo and others, (See some translations of Gen 9:20-21 which then goes into the curse of Ham) Noah took up husbandry but became a drunk instead, thus we have yet more evidence linking him to Dionysus/Sabazius. Undoubtedly whoever was the first to domesticate horses and make bronze or iron weapons, or the “wheel” for that matter, would have a great military advantage and could easily spread their religious ideas over a great distance, even if they were peaceful about it. From all these various international traditions, one branch was corrupted in Babylon and eventually turned into the Abrahamic cult of theocracy. So while the original Qabbalists like rebellious Gnostics would have refused to worship kings as gods, the “Jews” having co-opted these traditions still honoured the kings as human kings, but in most cases made them patriarchs, just as Roman emperors would basically become popes. While Gnostics would rebel by creating myths that strip away any history of the theocrats and instead emphasize the Occult spiritual meaning behind the allegories, the theocrats would do just the opposite and focus purely on submission to authority in order to create the literalistic Abrahamic religions. Wanting ignorant slaves, most of the spiritual wisdom contained in the Pagan allegories would be stripped in the process of creating the theocracies, leaving only a bare bones history of the kings or conspirators, at least for those who lack a Kabbalistic interpretation. If we go back far enough, we see even Chronos and Zeus had Anarchist tendencies, in that when they ruled the world, the myths say it was the golden and silver age respectively and without kings. Sanchuniathon tells it differently because he is speaking of human kings who appropriated the symbolism of these deities, but the Anarchist view of the god Chronos is seen in the Saturnalia holiday, in the earliest pre-Sumerian agricultural societies, or with the story of Samuel where Yahweh warns the Jews to have no kings. So while I definitely don't think that Pagan gods are merely human kings, the history of Sanchuniathon is a history of how the theocrats spread their disease, which in turn was rebelled against by the Qabbalists, the ones who fought against Chronos and Jupiter Belus as related in story of the ziggurat tower of babel.

Eusebius definitely shows a political motive to many of these tales, though ultimately it is with a mind to show how Jesus is the true god. In one section it is written “those who in cities and villages have been excited about this delusion of many gods were all universally serving and worshipping images of the dead, and statues of men who have long since passed away.” He goes on to explain some heroes of old were animalistic and even atheistic, but that some had vague spiritual ambitions and mistook the lower astral entities for the one deity. He then explains a “third and different class cast themselves down upon Earth, and seeing those who had been thought to excel their contemporaries in wisdom, or had become masters of the multitude by strength of body and power of government, such as giants or tyrants, or even sorcerers and quacks, who after some falling off from holier ways had devised their evil arts of sorcery, or others who had been the authors of some common benefit to human life, --to these, both while yet living and after death, they gave the title of gods.” Later we read “For one might say that these daemons are those giants, and that their spirits have been defiled by the subsequent generations of men, and that their battles, and their quarrels among themselves, and their wars are the subjects of these legends that are told as of gods.” From this we can see a number of important things, first of all Eusebius believes that the giants and daemons were originally good, but that their spirits were “subsequently defiled” which is quite a statement if Christianity is supposed to be antagonistic to the fallen angels and their offspring.

Of course this position of Eusebius makes perfect sense if Christianity is a co-opted Gnostic revolution against the “god Kings” and we can see that Eusebius is propagandizing to Pagans and trying to convert them by dismissing their gods as the Nephilim. Gnostics certainly were antagonistic to kings posing as gods, it is just that due to being initiated in to entheogenic mystery traditions, Gnostics actually understood the allegories presented in the mythology and respected religious diversity and in many places clearly understood the archons to be distinct from the gods. Eusebius was friends with Constantine and so his motives and influence are highly suspicious, but important all the same as like many Christian critics, by countering the arguments of Pagans and Gnostics, he preserves ideas which were otherwise destroyed. Given that Jesus never existed in the flesh, Christians are in no position to blame others for confusing humans for gods and so like many Christian critics, Eusebius was clearly aware of Pagan myths matching Abrahamic myths, he was simply creating a purely theocratic interpretation of the symbolism. So Eusebius did just as he complained the Pagans do and took his own religion far too literally, not realizing we are all in fact one and that all humans are divine and that Jesus is himself a composite of Pagan gods.

When we compare Eusebius's version of Sanchuniathon with Berossus, the Ugaritic texts, On the Origin of the World, Genesis, the Book of Enoch and stories of Solomon and his Paganism, we can see that these events are referring to much of the same history. Sanchuniathon describes the history of kings as the rebellion of Chronos against Uranus, with Uranus at one point being aided by the rebellion of Baal Hadad under the name of Demarus and later Adodus. Sanchuniathon tells of "Pontus" or "Pontos" which also means "sea" in Greek and so he is Yam and this fits nicely as Demarus attacks Pontus, though in this version he is eventually defeated by Pontus and made submissive to Chronos. So while Hadad is Demarus for Sanchuniathon, there is barely a mention of Jupiter Belus, who is a distinct king as the son of Chronos and so as with Berossus and others, he is the builder of the physical ziggurats. Remember now that we have already seen that Hadad was a rival of Solomon and he is also found on the Assyrian tree of life and the Ugaritic texts, but he is also in Sanchuniathon where Astarte finds the meteorite and the two come to rule together under Chronos after they had both failed in their rebellion against him. So then if Solomon is Yam in the Ugaritic texts, he is also as Pontus in Sanchuniathon, so that in both these versions Yam wins, where as the Ugaritic texts was anti Yam and pro Baal.

It may be that Ugaritic texts influenced the Gnostic On the Origin of the World, or it may be the Gnostics had access to the mythological precursors of the Ugaritic texts, but we do see in Sanchuniathon, Yaldabaoth represents the king who set up theocratic monotheism, he is Chronos the father of Yam and Mot. However given the character of King Chronos in Sanchuniathon, if we were to compare it to the old testament, as a human the figures he is most like are Abraham and Nimrod, but then as we know Nimrod is the same as Yaldabaoth, this makes perfect sense. King Chronos offered up his "only begotten son" as a burnt offering to this same father Uranus and so this strongly suggests Moloch worship, especially since Moloch was an Ammonite or Phoenician god. Yet Chronos is also said to have invented circumcision and so is like Abraham, the difference being he truly sacrificed his son in this version and Isaac is spared in the Torah. That Abraham was the king of the world has already been explained, so when comparing the two, he does seem more and more like Nimrod as the king of the world. Chronos makes war against Uranus god of the heavens and this fits Nimrod who built his tower to make war on "heaven" and so this would also explain why Nimrod is called "rebel" and yet is subservient to Yahweh in so many traditions. So while Chronos is a rebel, he is a human king and if Nimrod, it makes sense that he would co-opt the international mystics in order to use monotheism to usurp the religion of Uranus. As Chronos ultimately wins in Sanchuniathon, he would be the one who wrote the history and so spread the confusion as a tactic against Uranus, so that Nimrod outwardly becomes Abraham or a Brahman and seizes the book of Raziel from Shem. Thus some texts name Nimrod as the demiurge, yet according to Hippolytus (Book VI Ch 29) the Valentinians believed Abraham was the demiurge and that he was a fool who falsely believed he created the world.

Mot actually comes up in two forms in Sanchuniathon, at the start he is a Phoenician deity, but in his second form he is another dead son of Chronos/Yaldabaoth who doesn't do much, but he is important and as we know for the Gnostics he is the creator of the Solomonic demons, through Sanchuniathon it explains the origins of the Solomonic cult of giant ghost kings. This works so that when Nimrod/Abraham/Chronos appropriated the works of Shem, he passes it on to Solomon/Yam/Pontus and the priests of Mot and this eventually becomes the Goetia or book of Solomon in On the Origin of the World. To get an idea of this we can read this part from Sanchuniathon, "Kronos also, in going round the world, gives the kingdom of Attica to his own daughter (Pallas) Athena. But on the occurrence of a pestilence and mortality Kronos offers his only begotten son as a whole burnt-offering to his father Uranus, and circumcises himself, compelling his allies also to do the same. And not long after, another of his sons by Rhea, (Cybele) named Muth, (Mot) having died, he deifies him, and the Phoenicians call him Thanatos and Pluto. And after this Kronos gives the city Byblos to the goddess Baaltis, who is also called Dione, and Berytus (Beirut) to Poseidon and to the Cabeiri and Agrotae and Halieis, who also consecrated the remains of Pontus at Berytus."

So here we see Pontus is dead by the end of this and it is like the Ugaritic texts in that Yam does die, even though in Sanchuniathon as Pontus he defeated Demarus/Hadad. As with Yam and Yaldabaoth, there is some ambiguity about Pontus being like Mot here, in that Pontus may well be the “only begotten son” which is later named as Iedud. In some cases this is spelled Yehud as in the Yehud coin which as I explained is a mix between the sacrificed son Dionysus and Yahweh, a coin which depicts Yahweh sitting on a winged chariot throne holding a bird. From this explanation of Sanchuniathon, Eusebius also tells us Chronos/El had a coin with similar symbolism, a coin which had four wings and four eyes. Mot in a sense takes over for Iedud, just as he does for Yam in the Ugaritic texts or Yaldabaoth in On the Origin of the World and when Demarus was defeated, he “vowed an offering if he should escape” and so while there isn't enough information to say much, it is highly suspicious given that a little later Chronos sacrifices his son. This then seems to be detailing the end of the Hadad cult and the rise of the Yam/Mot cult of the Rephaim, that is when Demarus surrendered, his religion was co-opted and as a human king he may have even been killed as in the Ugaritic texts, but this would be made to appear like Iedud or Yam/Pontus dying, while the real Pontus would not be sacrificed, but play the part of Hadad resurrected. As Melchizedek is not that different from “Jupiter King,” as Shem he seems to be Demarus or Baal Hadad, so that Nimrod/Abraham/Chronos learned of the Qabbalah from him and turned it in to Judaism. So in the quote above we read how a son was burnt, then it tells of Mot as another son, then in the next sentence we learn how the remains of Pontus were dealt with even though it never mentioned he died, only the “only begotten son.” When it is later explained that Iedud was the only begotten son and sacrificed “as a ransom to the avenging daemons” not only is this similar language to that of Jesus, but even if Iedud is not Pontus, after Mot becomes Pluto it does fit the Ugaritic texts very well. This would explain the rise of the Rephaim cult of the dead aristocracy, that they were avenging demons ruled by Yahweh/Moloch to whom the sacrifice of scape goat blood must be made in order to prevent more meteorites or pestilence from killing everybody. As the Gospel of Judas tells us that Yaldabaoth/Chronos is the same as Nimrod, we are given a crucial clue to this so that Nimrod as Abraham is appropriating the knowledge of Shem/Demarus/Sabaoth.

Melchizedek is like a prefiguration of Christ in a variety of other traditions and not just 3 Enoch and even the New Testament hints at this when it says Jesus is in the same line. The Gnostic text “Melchizedek” is frustratingly damaged, but what remains is very pertinent here as it makes references to Melchizedek as a Savior figure and many interpret him here as even being Jesus Christ. While we cannot make out the context, the text does mention Enoch and Noah and also describes the archons like the Watchers when it says, “pray for the offspring of the archons and all the angels, together with the seed <which> flowed forth from the Father of the All [...] the entire [...] from [...] there were engendered the gods and the angels, and the men [...] out of the seed, all of the natures, those in the heavens and those upon the Earth and those under the Earth.” While it says to pray for them, in context this is definitely not archon worship as the archons are also explicitly linked to “Death” and later we learn that the saviour will “destroy death” or Mot. So then there is certainly reason to link Melchizedek with Demarus/Hadad, a Pagan god whose myths are in their own right already known to be an important inspiration for Jesus. As the text Melchizedek says that Mot or death is heavily associated with the archons, we can see that Mot in Sanchuniathon is connected to the Rephaim cult of Watchers and so the Solomonic tradition as in On the Origin of the World. Once you know what to look for, opposition to “death” actually comes up repeatedly in Gnostic texts or in “The Concept of our Great Power” there is “the ruler of Hades” and Jesus puts him to shame by speaking all 72 languages and resurrecting the dead.

As we remember the Hermetic idea found in the Poimandres that the divine, in the form of an Adam Kadmon like Logos being is in love with its perception of physicality, a goddess or Shekinah, it gives new meaning to the Christian phrase from John 3:16 “For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son.” While echoes of this story can be found in Gnosticism in On the Origin of the World, or the Secret Book of John, for Gnostics this was more a matter of the archons raping or imprisoning the Adam/Eve Kadmon being. Given the banking cult was stealing mystical knowledge from Egypt it could be the creation story from Sanchuniathon is stolen, but at any rate it is very comparable. So for Christians rather than Hermeticism, John 3:16 seems to come from the Phoenician creation story as told by Sanchuniathon. Here we learn of figures which bare the same names as the Kings I have already spoken of, but Mot and others here are thought of as deities and so we read, “the beginning of all things was a dark and condensed windy air, or a breeze of thick air and a Chaos turbid and black as Erebus: and that these were unbounded, and for a long series of ages destitute of form. But when this wind became enamoured of its own first principles (the Chaos), and an intimate union took place, that connection was called Pothos (desire) and it was the beginning of the creation of all things. And it (the Chaos) knew not its own production; but from its embrace with the wind was generated Mot; which some call Ilus, (Mud) but others the putrefaction of a watery mixture. And from this sprung all the seed of the creation, and the generation of the universe. And there were certain animals without sensation, from which intelligent animals were produced, and these were called Zophasemin, that is, the overseers of the heavens; and they were formed in the shape of an egg: and from Mot shone forth the sun, and the moon, the less and the greater stars. And when the air began to send forth light, by its fiery influence on the sea and Earth, winds were produced, and clouds, and very great defluxions and torrents of the heavenly waters.” So here we see that even for Sanchuniathon the Phoenicians did have gods, a cloudy wind, chaos and Mot are each deities, later there is also a Sun deity which was worshipped in a monotheistic manner (Aten?) and so while there are plenty of other reasons to doubt it, a purely euhemerist interpretation of Paganism is ruled out on this alone. However given that there were “sons of surpassing size” this fits well with the Book of Enoch as these “overseers of the heavens” can be interpreted as the Watchers. This fits even better given their association with Mot and the winds, but also their creation of the animals, however these ideas are also very comparable to creation stories in On the Origin of the World and the Paraphrase of Shem.

When it comes to the section where it explains how the human monarchs Astarte and Demarus rule together under Chronos, this would be Yam under the co-opted form of Hadad (or at least they are submissive to the theocracy) and so we see Astarte puts on the head of a bull and so becomes like the image of Moloch or Mot as a god of death and human sacrifice. So while comparing Sanchuniathon to the Ugaritic texts requires some speculations, we can see the death of Pontus is linked to Mot in both cases, who is himself linked to daemons or demons in On the Origin of the World and Melchizedek and that these events relate to “Hadad” dying or taking on the Chronos religion. This then explains how the 70 offspring of El became associated with Baal in the Goetia, while Moloch is linked to the cult of El and Mot, Astarte then puts on the bull's head of El to symbolize the theocratic change in religion. As we know Astarte is like Istahar and Naamah, for the Gnostics she would be like Norea, so that Norea would represent the rebellious Astarte, (she did not become Taurus) where as Naamah is the demon who “pleased” Yahweh and Chronos and was co-opted. In the Greek myths, Zeus, Hades and Poseidon each cast lots to determine who would rule what, just as their Mesopotamian counterparts Anu, Enlil and Enki in their flood myth, but this is also like Yahweh and the Shemhamphorash. We can see in inscriptions at Palmyra that Poseidon was equated with El and likewise Enki or Ea was equated with El in inscriptions at Karatepe in the Taurus mountains. So while Pontus is the father of Poseidon in Sanchuniathon, they would have the same theocratic traditions relating to the religion of Enki and Chronos. So then while Hadad is sometimes the son of El, this would probably be after he was co-opted and Yam and Mot are much purer forms of El. So then, while it isn't exactly clear in the Ugaritic texts, it seems that Mot killed Hadad because he had a feast and invited the 70 sons of El, but did not include Mot who is their brother. Once Hadad dies Anat makes an offering of various animals in groups of 70 as if to placate the 70 brothers of Mott and eventually Hadad returns to life. This fits a brief story from the book of Judges 1:4-7 where the Canaanite King Adoni-Bezek is like Hadad, we learn his land is being ruthlessly conquered by Judah and Simeon, and that he had 70 kings made subject to him, that at his table he had their thumbs and toes cut off before he was defeated. That Yam and Mot are originally allies of the 70 sons of El is also seen in the Akkadian myth "Atrahasis" where Enki/Yam helps the Igigi or Watcher rebels against Enlil/Mot, but they all agree that the work given to the Igigi was too hard for them and so create humanity as a slave race, all the while Anu/Hadad is a distant figure in this story. Furthermore, like Enki, in Sanchuniathon Chronos also casts Atlas in to a pit, not unlike Azazel or Ninurta. In the Ugaritic texts Anat kills Mot and so just as various gods take on the same throne as they kill each other, the kings all contribute to the same theocratic cult which evolves so as to incorporate aspects from all these Elohim deities. So given the clear influence of Mot, this is why the Abrahamic religions have such a particular hate for fertility goddesses like Asherah or the original Astarte, fertility kills death and the Abrahamic religions are literally a Death cult!

At least the death cult infiltrated the international Qabalah, twisting it into theocratic Judaism, but retained many of the original Pagan elements, hence the Gnostics sought to re-present and reconstruct this Qabalah by emphasizing the anti-death and Pagan parts, which at times can also be found in Judaism. This means Baal Hadad/Demarus is Sabaoth in On the Origin of the World and it was probably during his revolution that the international mystics made the tower of information in order to preserve the knowledge of Uranus and Gaia from Chronos. As Hadad/Demarus would also be Hadad the rival of Solomon, as all this was occurring, Solomon/Yam was binding the 72 original gods in the form of the 72 kings in his Sanhedrin/cartel. So when Nimrod gives up his son Eliezer as a slave to Abraham, this is symbolized as Chronos's sacrifice to Uranus, or Yam the son of Chronos dying in Ugarit, or Abraham attempting to sacrifice Isaac, but at the last minute not doing so. That is as Abraham is the same as Nimrod and both are Chronos, his son the Ugaritic Yam/Mot was used to co-opt the international tower of information and so he took over the resurrection symbolism of the Baal Hadad cult. So then in Sanchuniathon the story of Mot is told right after the sacrifice story, yet Mot as Eliezer/Isaac is not truly sacrificed, but he still gets the ghost king cult as the co-opted Hadad mysticism and passes it on as proto-Judaism and the worship of "Moloch." In some translations of Gen 15:2 Eliezer is named as Abraham's inheritor! The Jewish encyclopedia says Eliezer looked much like Abraham, but also that he was the giant King Og of Bashan, which if King Og comes from before the flood, could also show the tower was before the flood. (This also says Abraham made a seat from one of his teeth) So just as Baal Hadad/Demarus had his story of death and resurrection satirically usurped by King Chronos and his son, centuries later Titus and Vespasian took over the Gnostic story of Jesus/Hadad and the Father/Chronos.

Aspects of this are recounted by Plutarch in his work on Isis and Osiris in which he explains that Osiris fought Set/Typhon, who he explicitly says is a god of the sea with 72 helpers. Along with this group a queen of Ethiopia named Aso helped, though given that Yam/Set is like Solomon, this could well be the Queen of Sheba. That Solomon is associated with the sea can be seen in his trade deals with the Queen of Sheba and King Hiram, for example in 1 Kings 9:26-28 he builds a fleet and 2 Chronicles 8:17-18. So while Set is likened to Typhon and tyrants, Osiris is likened to Apis and Dionysus (later we learn how Osiris is Jupiter and so this would be like Sabaoth or Hadad) and Plutarch tells of a legend that Isis wore a bull's skull on her head which was placed there by Thoth/Hermes. While there are some different details, we can see a lot of similarities to Sanchuniathon here and Plutarch is actually denouncing the idea that the gods are nothing but human kings, but does admit some few traditions are based on the history of humans or daemon demigods, though in general he considers the idea blasphemous and the work of atheists and those with political agendas. As we know the Hyksos associated Set with Hadad, this would be the group who by this time had co-opted the Ugaritic Hadad and turned him in to the sea god Yam and were attempting to do the same thing to Isis and Osiris in Egypt, that is they wanted to turn them in to Aten or Yam and Astarte with her bull head. As Baal, Set and Yahweh are all Storm gods, their 72 helpers probably in part represent winds, such as those which howl and relate to the Goetia, though as Mot can be likened to Enlil, Enlil is also a god of winds and even the one who caused the flood. Now clearly Yahweh seems to come from the demon gods of the Pagans, so we see the Babylonian and Assyrian demon Pazuzu may have some role in this, he was most popular around the 800-600 BC and was king of the wind demons and magick was used to get him to counter their disease causing influence. (See also Lamashtu, a demon woman not unlike Lilith) Speaking of Typhon/Set, Plutarch tells us, “he is puffed up by want of knowledge and falsehood, and tears to pieces, and puts out of sight, the sacred word which the goddess (Isis) again gathers up and puts together, and gives into the charge of those initiated into the religion.” There are too many kernels of truth through Plutarch to list them all, but we can further read how Venus is Nephthys and like Netzach is called Victory and that she is the mate of Set/Typhon.

So piecing all this together, the Saturn death cult had been in control in Mesopotamia and they had wanted to install a very authoritarian form of monotheism, so the international mystics rebelled lead by Demarus. However just as the monotheistic coupe of Akhenaten and his allies failed and the rebellion of Amun succeeded, the theocrats usurped the imagery of the Baal cult and so he became like Moloch, a mix of Saturn and Baal demanding human sacrifice and he later became Yahweh. The Chronos cult then built Esagila or the physical towers in the name of Marduk or Jupiter Belus, while the mystics made the tower of information in the name of Shem/Hadad to preserve the original traditions. That the Saturn cult co-opted the rebellion of the Jupiter cult would explain why the Canaanite Saturn god El is associated with Chesed and Jupiter in Kabbalah, not to mention a variety of other things that are beyond the scope of this book. That Chronos or Elus is the same as Ilus who founded Troy fits rather well and would link him to Nimrod and Abraham nicely, Sanchuniathon also says that Byblos in Phoenicia (Home of Philo) was the first city, which is not Troy, but he took the trouble to point out that walls were built. This Baal cycle myth in which Yam is ultimately defeated, would then represent the culture war of theocrats and magicians, one which has been repeating throughout history. So we see that since Judaism was trying to present itself as the underdog rebelling against the theocrats, “Solomon” or Yam had a rival named Hadad, and was lead astray by Astarte and the Baal form of Moloch. (Again the time line is anachronistic, but many quotes show “Solomon” is all over history, as with him being the father of Jesus.) This then also seems to fit the Stories of Ahab and Jezebel who are overthrown by King Jehu, who as we have seen is like Yam also known as Yaw and so as Y in Hebrew is the same as J and I, this would strengthen my interpretation that Pontus/Yam is Iedud or Yehud.

I have quoted this already, but the Gospel of Philip sums it up perfectly when it says, “The archons wanted to fool us, since they saw that we were connected with the good. They took the name of the good (Baal Hadad) and gave them to the not good, (Yam) so with names they could trick and rope us to the not good. As though doing us a favour, they took names from the not good (Yam/Moloch/Set) and placed them on the good. (Baal Hadad) They knew what they were doing. They wanted to grab those of us who were free and make us eternal slaves.” (Even if this quote was not specifically referring to this myth, we do know the archon theocrats use this tactic.) Then we see that Yam took the name of Baal and then once the theocracy took hold, the credibility of Baal was lost under the rule of the Moloch theocrats, so Yam became a good guy in the form of Yahweh and Baal became demonized through Judaism, however Yahweh retains many aspects of Baal because the Torah is the elaborated tablets of destiny or book of Raziel in it's hijacked form. In Revelations John still uses the term Jezebel as a symbol of the banking cult, but this is because once Baal was co-opted and lost his credibility by becoming Moloch, he would have been seen as a Rephaim/archon by most Gnostics, especially since this is how he appears in the Solomonic grimoires. (Remember that plenty of Gnostics did not like Sabaoth even if he was better than Yaldabaoth) This then is why the name Sabaoth was chosen for On the Origen of the World rather than Hadad, as in Sanchuniathon the name “Sabaoth” would correspond to Uranus/Elyon/Sabazius much better than Demarus/Hadad. So if the Gnostics were carrying on the knowledge of Uranus and Gaia, or “heaven and Earth” through the rebellion of Hadad, this would be the pre-flood knowledge that Chronos was trying to wipe out, or more so monopolize to spread the death cult by predicting astronomical events using the stolen knowledge.

Eusebius also cites the Pagan and anti-Christian philosopher Porphyry as crediting Sanchuniathon with having the most accurate history of the Jews, as he was taught by “Hierombalus the priest of the god Ieuo,” with Ieuo being a name which scholars say refers to Yahweh. As Sanchuniathon learned of Jews from Hierom-Balus or we might say Hiram Baalus, if this is the same as King Hiram or Hiram Abiff or someone in that tradition, it would certainly make a lot of sense. So then as Sanchuniathon is telling the story of the Phoenician theocrats, and Genesis says Ammonites are descended from Lot, son of Harran and nephew of Abraham, this could be a sign that Abraham and Lot took their knowledge from the Sodomites who had the knowledge of Shem as it says in the Paraphrase of Shem. While we only have Jewish propaganda relating to this, this scenario would be alluded to in Gen 14, where 5 kings including those of Sodom and Gomorrah rebel against 4 kings of Mesopotamia. The kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fall in to a slimy pit, their cities are sacked and plundered of all their wealth and Lot who was living in Sodom is taken prisoner. Abraham launches a rescue mission for Lot with 318 men and succeeds, taking the wealth of Sodom with him, but after a communion ceremony with Melchizedek gives back the wealth to the King of Sodom. However even in this propaganda there is hints that Abraham is not what he seems and he fought the same Mesopotamian kings who also “smote the Rephaim in Ashteroth-karnaim” and so the people of his giant ally King Og or “Eliezer” who's gematria is 318. (Due to this gematria, the Midrash “Genesis Rabba” 43:2 says Eliezer and Abraham went alone) So given that Yahweh would soon destroy Sodom it is strange that Abraham would return it's wealth, but perhaps he copied a few texts, or otherwise took the Sodomite knowledge from Melchizedek, who may even be fused with the Sodomite king as the rebellious Demarus, while the Book of Jasher says Nimrod was one of the 4 Mesopotamian kings. Even the old testament admits the Phoenicians were allies with the Jews as through King Hiram who helped make the temple and that Naamah, the wife of Solomon was a Phoenician. We have also seen that Yahweh is the leader of the Watchers and the Watchers/Nephilim are the theocrats and kings of the Earth, so then it is pretty clear that Judaism is based on these same Pagan theocratic traditions. Mainstream scholars certainly do not agree that all religion came about in the manner Eusebius/Sanchuniathon describes and they are right, but it is the history of the capitalist theocracies which did their best to corrupt the true spirituality of the Shamanic Pagan Tantra. I may be wrong in some of my speculations, but the similarities between Sanchuniathon and Jewish history are so many that most of it is beyond the scope of this book, but given that Eusebius himself and many other since see it as the history of Jews, it presents some of the best documentation of the ancient theocratic tradition.

There are many ways to interpret aspects of this history, but as it is the cult of the infiltrators who twist all kinds of mythology, this is generally contradictory and anachronistic. For example Pontus is also the father of a woman named Sidon, which is also the name of a city she ruled, but also the name of the son of Canaan in other sources and so the grandson of Ham. But even here this gives us clues as Canaan not only found the knowledge of the Watchers on pillars, both Sidon and Nimrod would be the grand kids of Ham and so the carriers of the Watcher tradition. Jezebel was also the daughter of Ithobaal, who was king of the Sidonians and so as both Yam/Pontus and Astarte were gods of the banking cult, this is exactly the kind of thing you would expect to see if the Yam cult was infiltrating the Baal cult and changing history around. (Perhaps then Jezebel was infiltrating the Baal cult of the Jews to discredit it for Yam to gain power?) We can also see that on coins from Sidon, Astarte or sometimes Tyche with a turreted crown can be found, while on the reverse is a cart or chariot carrying a stone or meteorite representing the goddess. What is more in 1 Kings 16:34 at the end of the chapter which introduces Ahab, it curiously adds a little tidbit about Jewish human sacrifice. “In Ahab's time, Hiel of Bethel rebuilt Jericho. He laid its foundations at the cost of his firstborn son Abiram, and he set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son Segub, in accordance with the word of the lord spoken by Joshua son of Nun.” This refers to Joshua 6:26 where a curse is laid down in the name of “god” that will kill the children of whoever rebuilds Jericho and so even if we give Hiel the benefit of the doubt and say “god” killed these kids, as Hiel was a Jew he would surely know of this curse and yet he rebuilt

Jericho anyways. So then directly or indirectly, Hiel effectively sacrificed his sons in a Masonic ceremony and to me the idea that “god” did the killing is actually worse than a human doing it and as in other places, this shows Yahweh is a god of black magick. From this we might wonder if something similar was happening in Byblos or especially Beirut, as this is where Sanchuniathon says the remains of Pontus were “consecrated.” Knowing all this I do not really need to prove Judaism is based on Baal or Yam, or that one is good and the other are bad, this was never my intention and others have already argued these kinds of things in detail. What I am pointing out is that they both belong to this Phoenician theocracy and so in these forms they are both fucked up and really anyway you look at it, Judaism is utterly corrupt and theocratic.

So while there are a few possible interpretations, the reoccurrence of Astarte, Baal and Yam is a bit too common to ignore and this clearly plays a role in how the banking cult conspired to set up the worship of dead kings. When I say this it makes me a “conspiracy theorist” and so others can dismiss me, yet if you read the old testament, Sanchuniathon, the Ugaritic texts or a lot of these myths, they are themselves conspiracy theories, ones filled with propaganda about rebellions, back stabbing and coupes and so really you cannot interpret these texts without becoming a “conspiracy theorist.” As the primary source of these “histories” is from the tyrants themselves, the exact truth with all the little details will probably never be known, however this is not required and I have shown enough of the abundance of evidence to see that Judaism is based on Phoenician, Babylonian and Trojan theocratic religion and so ultimately it doesn't really matter. What is important is making people aware of the fact that the basis of modern civilization is tyrannical plutocracy and theocracy and that magick is the means of gaining real spiritual truth and freedom. These theocratic ambitions then, are precisely why Gnostics hated Judaism and yet they also sought to preserve the “antediluvian” knowledge from those tyrants who would censor them and this is because rulers always try to change history and destroy true spiritual gnosis.

So then if all this is true we would expect to find similar symbolism in other religions, well it turns out we do. In the poem “Solomon and Saturn” we can also see possible links to Anzu as there is a bird named Vasa Mortis which is imprisoned to the end of time. This Vasa Mortis has been interpreted by scholar Robert Menner as referring to the demon Asmodeus, while the scholar Gilda Cilluffo sees a similarity between the description of this bird and the description of the goddess of fame or Fama in the Aeneid. In the text we read “the bird hath four heads of ordinary men” and so could also be a combination of the the Anzu bird and the descriptions of the four headed cherubic angels which carry the throne of Yahweh as in Ezekiel. There is also mention of 200 guards who watch over the bird and this matches the number of Watchers and so links the bird to Azazel, as in the apocalypse of Abraham. When we see the two words “Vasa Mortis” appear in Latin translations of Psalm 7:14, along with the next two verses it is all very eerily suggestive. “Whoever is pregnant with evil conceives trouble and gives birth to disillusionment. Whoever digs a hole and scoops it out falls into the pit they have made. The trouble they cause recoils on them; their violence comes down on their own heads.”

Solomon and Saturn has often been compared to the Prose Edda, which were written some centuries later and so it is a pretty strong hint that Solomonic magick comes from the Trojan royalty, who brought it to the Saxons along with the theocratic aspects of Odin worship. One part of the Solomon and Saturn reads, "Who invented letters? Mercurius the giant" and here we are to understand that Mercurius is identified as Odin. In some versions of the Prose Edda there is a larger prologue written by Snorri with a story of the tower of Babel, which is supposedly built by Zoroaster rather than Nimrod, but this Zoroaster also came to be called Baal or Bel. In this version, the tower is built by 72 giants called “Risar” and the confusion involves 72 languages and what is more, in other parts of the prologue, the Heathens cannot remember the true name for god, as if they are searching for the lost word as well. Another story is told of Saturnus, who was the human king of Crete and founded 72 cities, he divided his kingdom among his three sons, Jupiter, Neptune and Pluto, but had to flee to Italy when Jupiter rebelled against him and usurped his kingship, but also the realm of Neptune. This then is a version of Sanchuniathon with Jupiter being Hadad/Demarus, Neptune being Pontus/Yam and Pluto being Mott, so when combined with the stories of Odin and the rest coming from Troy, with Troy being founded by the descendants of Saturnus, we can see that Snorri is definitely passing on the theocratic traditions. There are some differences in the details, at one point it says Priam “sprung from” Saturnus and was Odin, then later it says Priam was descended from Jupiter, but this reflects much of the “confusion” with Snorri himself not knowing all of the truth.

When you read versions of the Prose Edda which omit the stories of Saturn and Zoroaster, it can seem as though Snorri has more sympathy for Paganism than he does, but we can see instead that he is spreading Christian propaganda to the unconverted by blaming Odin for the kind of deceptions that are at the root of Christianity. (See Rasmus B. Anderson translation) However in his prologue we do see many interesting things, that in Troy there was 12 chiefs under the high king who ruled which bring to mind the 12 tribes of Israel. We also learn that the descendants of the Trojan “Odin” became the kings and “mighty men” of Scandinavia, but what is most suspicious is that in the beginning of Gylfaginning, Odin the “Allfather” is called the “lord of hosts” and other appellations that are reminiscent of Sabazius. Later on in this chapter there is a list of 49 names of Odin and we can see that both in the prologue and in Gylfaginning there are ideas about the universal language and memory and so for example we are given the following explanation for all the names of Odin. “There being so many branches of tongues in the world, all peoples believed that it was needful for them to turn his name into their own tongue, by which they might the better invoke him and entreat him on their own behalf.”

There is much more from Snorri and in another part of Gylfaginning there is a story where the local king Gangleri was enquiring about the trinity of Odin, Vili and Ve and asked, “What covenant was between them, or which was the stronger?” The answer given was, “The sons of Borr slew Ymir the giant; lo, where he fell there gushed forth so much blood out of his wounds that with it they drowned all the race of the Rime Giants, save that one, whom giants call Bergelmir, escaped with his household; he went upon his ship, and his wife with him, and they were safe there. And from them are come the races of the Rime Giants.” In stanza 29 of the Vafthrútnismol part of the Poetic Edda we learn that Bergelmir was the first giant descended from Ymir and in stanza 31 it says venom dripped from the river Elivagar and this was the source of the giants. Presumably the venom comes from the snakes at the roots of Yggdrasil, but no one knows, we have seen that venom was mentioned at the same time as meteorites in the Inanna B hymn I quoted and in the Henry Bellows translation of the Poetic Edda a footnote here says that Mogk suggests the river may be the milky way. Getting back to Gylfaginning there is also the great hall of Odin called “Valaskjalf” which means “seat of the fallen” and within it is the throne of Odin “Hlidskjalf” which means “gate seat” and which is so high it allows Odin to see and hear everything in the world. Snorri also links Asgard to Troy and in Gylfaginning he says it's walls were built by a giant, in order to keep out other giants, but that the price he asked was Freya's hand, however Loki tricks him to prevent this. Now I have also noticed that some from the metal working race of dwarves, are in the Norse myths, as in the story of Kvasir, not unlike archons, though they are usually more benign and sometimes even quite helpful to the gods. It is interesting that in the Occult, energy parasites are called “larvae” while the Prose Edda says the dwarves are the maggots on the body of Ymir. Ymir was freed from a block of ice by the cosmic cow Audhumla and is very comparable to the Chinese god Pangu, though with Pangu the maggots or fleas and lice became humanity! We can also see that in the text “On the god of Socrates” by Apuleius that good human souls become like guardian daemons and help look after people and answer prayers, but that bad people become “larvae” daemons and often cause problems. More than this, in the Voluspa section of the Poetic Edda (Stanzas 10-16) we are given a list of 72 dwarfs which John Lindow in his guide to Norse mythology argues created the bodies of the two first humans, so that I could not help but notice that if true, (as stanza 17 does seem to say by referring to a “throng,” which would be the preceding list of dwarfs) then as the gods breath life in to the forms, it would match aspects of the Gnostic creation story quite nicely, as the archons created the bodies, but the aeons gave it life. At any rate in the Prose Edda Snorri is definitely perpetuating or creating ideas which point out the more Judeo-Christian aspects of Norse Paganism, and specifically those aspects which deal with the Watchers. Whatever Snorri thought, this is not to say the god Odin wasn't originally based on traditional Shamanic practices that were free of theocracies, especially given that the myths say Odin learned the matriarchal Seidr traditions of the Norse from Freya, though as I have pointed out, she does fit the Venus archetype quite well, as we will see, it is unlikely the Trojans invented the religions.

Many details are lost or unknown to me, but the key to understanding this is knowing the life of Snorri Sturluson, in which we can see outright that he was a Christian monarchist bent on extending the Christian kingdom of the Norwegian royalty. Crucially we can see that he was working with the very same line of kings he said were “mighty men” and descendants of the Trojan Odin. As Snorri was raised and educated in Norway by these Christian aristocrats, (the Jarl) he may have known full well that Christianity is part of the Trojan theocratic tradition, but either way it is pretty easy to see he is a liar and wrong in many ways. That as a politician, Snorri played a strong role in ending the Icelandic Commonwealth and was eventually killed for engaging in political machinations. That the Norse myths are far more than just stories of kings is even unknowingly shown by Snorri himself, as in the epilogue to another Prose Edda text, Skáldskaparmál, Snorri tells us the story of the Trojan war became the story of Ragnarok and a little later we learn, “the burning of Troy they call the flame of Surt.” Now Surt, or Surtr is the leader of the fire giants who attacks Freyr at Ragnarok, he comes with his kin from the fiery realm of Muspelheim, but from the various references to him, it is clear he is a meteorite or comet of some kind. Surtr leads the fire giants and it is foretold he will cover the Earth and heavens in fire and that his fiery sword is brighter than the sun. As with all the layers of mystical meaning, this aspect of the myths is lost on Snorri who makes a very strained argument that all these events refer to humans in the Trojan war.

The writing of the Prose Edda then served three main purposes, the first being to slander the gods in order to aid the conversion process, secondly to legitimize the royalty over the commonwealth, (as if the “descendants” of Odin say to worship Jesus, it must be good!) and third, by writing down the oral traditions in a distorted form it would allow the truth to fade away and get people used to text based religion and prepare the ground for the left brain infection. In Snorri's time, Christian propaganda would seek to present a mix of Pagan and Judeo-Christian ideas to start infecting the many Pagan holdouts who utterly refused Christianity. As the centuries went on Snorri's writings would be used with other euhemerist interpretations of other Pagan religions, all in an attempt to show that Christianity/Judaism is the original one true religion and predates Paganism and that non Abrahamic religions were inspired by demons/kings. These Pagan holdouts would know their own myths and so I do think the Eddas have a lot of authentic Paganism in order to get them to accept it, but this is much like how the New Testament contains many Gnostic allegories, and yet has been interpreted in capitalist and theocratic ways. To me the Eddas are less corrupted than the New Testament and while they helped to preserve the Pagan traditions, by having Snorri write the Prose Edda, it would help to bring the Icelandic Pagans on board with the Norwegian Royalty in the Trojan cartel and while Snorri died backing the wrong aristocrats, ultimately Christian monarchists succeeded using such tactics.

The Sibylline Oracles are certainly euhemerist and so given that Catholicism is based in Roman theocracy and specifically the traditions behind the Trojan Sibylline oracles, to me Snorri, like many Christians is an opportunist who will say whatever is necessary to spread his brain virus and demonize other religions. Scholars have already linked the Voluspá text within the Poetic Edda to the Sibylline Oracles and while Snorri didn't write the Poetic Edda, he says the goddess Sif was a human Sibyl. While there is undoubtedly Indo-European parallels between the Norse and other cultures, I find it very hard to believe that Odin was merely a human Trojan. Obviously one man could not be in so many cultures and pretend to be so many gods like Hermes and Thoth and simultaneously span multiple millennia of traditions. This is pretty easy to see in light of Snorri's life, but the Christians themselves admit to infiltrating and co-opting Pagan religions in what is called “Interpretatio Christiana,” which was made official church procedure by Pope Gregory I. (He was pope from 590-604 A.D. and this doctrine can be read in a letter he wrote to Mellitus, as preserved in the Venerable Bede's Historia ecclesiastica gentis Anglorum.) This is just when the Christian documentation starts, but the practice of taking Pagan gods and interpreting them as historical human characters, or especially Christian saints actually goes back even before Christianity through Titus co-opting the Pagan Christ and turning him in to the "historical" Jesus. But how about some less controversial examples? I have already mentioned St Brigid and there are too many to list them all, but there is also Santa Muerte in the new world who comes from an Aztec goddess and there are multiple St. Geminus's, or St Aphrodite's, but perhaps most pertinent of all is St George who in some legends killed a dragon near Beirut not unlike Heracles and the Drakon Maionios. (See also St Thekla and St Polyeuctes who is Polydeuces) Not only this, it was Christians who took over Pagan holy sites, Christians who took over Pagan holidays and it is Christians who are obsessed with authority and converting everyone to their religion. Christianity is the most blood thirsty, theocratic and imperialistic religion ever devised and the only other religion that comes close is Islam, which is just another mutation of the same archon virus.

No, it is not that Pagan kings created the god's so that they could be worshipped, it is merely that Christians like Eusebius and Snorri use this as propaganda to dilute the Paganism and get free and tribal people in very democratic societies used to totalitarian theocracies. The Pagan influence on Christianity has been written of by so many scholars, not to mention ancient Pagans rebutting Christian propaganda, that you have to ignore a ton of evidence to believe the Christian view. The only defence Christians have against this criticism is to say that the "devil" made Pagan religions to seem like Christianity, just like the devil put dinosaur bones in the Earth and fossils which promote the theory of evolution, what they fail to understand is that even if there is a devil, he works for their god! So then we can see that the Watcher myth and Solomonic demons were used for this very same line of reasoning, that is Christians themselves used to point out the similarities between Christianity and Paganism and they explained the origin of Pagan religions as being the work of the devil (Azazel) and his fallen demons. Altering the history books was not enough in the early stages of Christianity and so euhemerism is a desperate measure used because it was known even in ancient times that Jewish and Christian history makes no sense in light of everyone else's history, and that the civilizations and religions of Egypt and India and others were far older than Judaism and so Genesis makes no sense.

While mainstream historians are fully aware of most of this, the true depth of it has not been understood, for what it really means is that Christianity and Judaism was created by the Trojan "giants," albeit in human form and they are the enemies of the Pagan gods and are bent on creating institutional religions and military and capitalist empires through black magick. Now as with Solomon and Saturn and the Rune version of the SATOR square, (See Galdabrok grimoire by Stephen flowers) the Solomonic tradition has been in the regions of the Norse longer than Snorri and we can also see that mazes in these regions were called "Troy towns," but this is because the theocrats alter history over centuries, so that as it accumulates and the oral traditions are lost, their arguments seem stronger and stronger. That as Christianity is rooted in the Trojan practices, there is every reason to believe that the Trojans were themselves using these same kinds of tactics to install their own kings and religious practices. We can see this in the Imperial cult as Vespasian posing as the Jewish messiah, but also Julius Caesar being represented as Liber Pater, and so there is plenty of reason to doubt that the Pagan religions were founded by the Trojans or even the Babylonians or Sumerians. That while certain capitalist and theocratic practices would have spread with merchants, much of the Pagan religions, including many of their male gods would go back to prehistoric times and the direct democracies of the indigenous and nomadic tribal peoples. What is more, as with the Hyksos/Jews in Egypt in the story of Exodus, the euhemerists wanted to depict the Christians as the underdogs, even though from the earliest times they were sponsored by the Roman royal family and were corrupted Gnosticism turned into necromantic king worship.

This euhemerist interpretation of Pagan gods as being only humans is refuted in more detail by Plutarch when dealing with the ideas of Evemerus (AKA Euhemerus from which we get the word “euhemerist”) and in his book “Morals.” (Starting in Chapter 23 onward, it is right after the stories of Isis and Osiris) Plutarch brings up things like how Alexander the Great claimed divinity, but that people soon after his death would denounce such vanity and rightly so. The argument of Eusebius also makes use of Evemerus, but refuting him is easy enough when we understand that Judaism as we know it did not really exist until about 500-600 BC. This means if there was no Judaism from the time of Adam in the garden, then the only way to explain the origins of religion would be if all people were atheistic if not for theocratic kings posing as gods. In light of entheogens, neuroplasticity, astrology and pantheistic nature worship, not to mention the religions of democratic tribal people outside the old world, this is such an obviously untrue idea that I don't need to go in to it. Eusebius even admits the strong role of astrology and as I explained, even the myth of Sanchuniathon disagrees with his theories by talking about Phoenician gods. Plutarch does bring up the daemons or demigods and explains various ideas about them and how this makes more sense than the gods being human kings. Plutarch explains Isis and Osiris were definitely forces of nature rather than merely royalty, but in some traditions were demigods who became gods, while Set remains a daemon. To which I would add, the mnemonic device does include the history of kings, but that is only one layer of the myths, and it is a layer which was at least altered, if not invented by the euhemerist banking cult. In chapter 31 he mentions the Egyptians sacrifice a pure red ox to Typhon (Set) and that to Pythagoreans and others he is a daemon and associated with 56 sided shape, while earlier he relates how Poseidon is 8 as the first cube. So, when we know that Jews believe they must sacrifice a pure red heifer to their god at the temple foundations, we can see yet more evidence that they are followers of Set who seems to be the most powerful of the evil daemons just as Yahweh. Plutarch believed the gods to be non humans, but explains the older myth became contaminated with Jewish history, that is like me he does not believe the Jews invented the myths, nor the character of Set, but that people spread that idea as an attempt to undermine the original religion. The idea that Plutarch denounces is that after being expelled from Egypt, Typhon or Set fathered Hierosolymus and Judæus and so from this Jews came to Israel. While modern historians and Plutarch believe this to be false, they have not understood why such false histories were made up or that this is a history of some real humans impersonating gods. Perhaps modern scholars think it was the result of antisemitism, but on the contrary, in light of Snorri and the spread of Christianity, we can see the banking cult uses such myths to destroy indigenous history and religion and were doing so even as late in history as the time of Snorri. Set is definitely older than the Hyksos, but real kings did impersonate much older gods and claimed to be the descendents of the originators, only now they want an authoritarian and orthodox theocracy. While we have no dates to work with to say if it is the same Typhon king impersonator, Pliny in his Natural History (Book 2 Ch 23) tells us “a terrible comet was seen by the people of Ethiopia and Egypt, to which Typhon the king of that period gave his name” and so this would certainly fit with the meteorite death cult. Ovid (Metamorphoses 5. 139 ff) and others do say the Greek gods ran from Typhon to Egypt and there they became the Egyptian gods, though I think this refers more to astronomical events in Egypt rather than humans, it is quite possibly both.

So then, what seems most likely is that the monarchies which did develop by the time of Snorri, were the result of the theocratic infiltration by descendants of the Trojans. Most of this work would have been done by the Christians carrying on the Trojan practices who wanted to set up their own theocratic monarchies and so they wrote the Eddas (Prose Edda at least) as Trojan propaganda in order to subvert the far older Norse democracies and religious practices. That is Snorri and his fellow Christian monarchists wanted to make it seem as though the Norse had always been slaves, and in this way they would accept the Christian monarchies. This is not so different from what happened with the “Jews,” who having been infected by the banking cult were trying to “rebuild” the temple of Solomon, when previous to the Babylonian captivity, the ethnic Jews were relatively free and nomadic Pagans and had no truly unified kingdom or probably even monarchs. In this way, it is not as Snorri says, that the Trojans created the Norse myths as allegories for the Trojan war, but that the Christian agents of the Trojans twisted the local Pagan myths and appropriated Odin to preserve the histories of their theocracies, and that while this infiltration was not total, it is at least in part the stories that Snorri passed on and a tactic that Snorri himself was using. That after the ancient “confusion” the Norse would be missing many keys about the origins of their own symbolism and so it seems likely that during the conversion process, the black magicians were using their knowledge of astronomy and the universal language to reinterpret the Norse myths in an Abrahamic context. They could easily have gotten such ideas from their Christian capitalist buddies from down south, as it was the general rule that Christian countries could not trade with non Christians and so there was contact between the Norwegian royalty and the more “civilized” commercial interests of Europe. (Making the religion an old boys network or cartel which goes on today through the Vatican) As we have seen, there was definitely Solomonic influence in these parts, so then it is not unlikely the black magicians cross bred memetic strains which had branched out long ago. (Hence Pagan Vikings felt the need to defend themselves and raid Europe.)

Snorri even basically says all this as he explains that the Pagans had only some kind of hazy recollection of the true god before the confusion and that the Pagans lacked any knowledge of “spiritual” things. As Christianity was the co-opted Gnostic revolution against these kings who claimed to be gods, Snorri at best saw Christianity as the restoration of the true religion, but he was in fact spreading the far more corrupted archon virus. So just as Eusebius is allied with the Trojan/Roman Catholic royalty, and he is drawing on the works of Sanchuniathon, who was himself allied with the Phoenicians who helped create Judaism with their patriarch kings, Snorri and the Christian monarchists would denounce the Pagan religions as being created by charlatans. Then as the ancestors of these same charlatans, they would demand the creation of an Abrahamic theocracy with themselves as the aristocrats! It is definitely strange logic and it is a wonder that they could get away with it, but if the Christians managed to corrupt or marry in to a few prominent families, with foreign money backing them it wouldn't be too hard to convince someone to become a theocratic and autocratic king for Christ. Given Pagan oral histories were held by few, corrupting the history and using texts to alter it would be pretty easy, and this is basically what the Christians themselves say and as a tactic it worked! It seems something similar happened with Plutarch's myth of Set and the Jews, so while religious Jews say it in a different sense, as through the old testament being the history of these same charlatan capitalists, they are too racist to convert most people fully. When the Jews do try to convert people, they would be converts often don't take too kindly to genital mutilation and all the other insane regulations in Judaism, so Christianity was created as a slave religion. Eusebius basically promotes the Phoenician kings as the Jewish patriarchs, while he and Snorri both promote the Trojans through the Sibylline Catholic church, while the Jews explain how the archon kings spread out before and after the “flood.” However as the Gnostics understood in their own jargon, the charlatans are not the ones who created the religions, they are merely the ones who stole the “book of Raziel” and turned it in to the Torah or “tablets of destiny.”

When we remember the Ugaritic texts tell us clearly that the kings come from El and Athirat as the “sons of god,” then it should be no surprise that the Jewish patriarchs are both Babylonian kings and “sons of god.” As the testament of Solomon tells us the demons merely impersonate the gods and aren't actually the gods themselves, but are demons used to usurp kingdoms, so then we can see the demons could well refer to the 70 or 72 descendents of Noah who became kings with different languages after the fall of the tower. As Sanchuniathon is supposed to be writing at the time of Semiramis, if she is Nimrod's queen we can see then that his writings are at least symbolically at the time of the tower and the unification of the 72 Pagan deities, the ones who would be corrupted to set up the 72 theocrats that are the descendants of Noah. There is often ambiguity between the Shemhamphorash angels and Goetic demons and like Yahweh and Azazel in some places they are likely two sides of the same beings, but this would be because both groups are influenced by the older

Pagan deities. Furthermore as the tablets of destiny are made up of “mes” or memes of civilization, it fits perfectly that the theocratic cult would make use of those people who created technologies like metal working, shipping and husbandry. According to the Greeks, Poseidon gave humanity the horse, which links him to the Dioscuri as the creators of husbandry, who are themselves the patrons of sailors.

These god kings then seem to have come to power not only from their technologies, but from controlling temples which housed sacred meteorites, monopolizing access to them and demanding sacrifice. As the demons/angels or gods are the stars and planets, as meteorites were thought of as a fallen star, they are literally a fallen angel and as they often have strange metal in them, given that the “Watchers” inspired metal working, it is not hard to see meteorites helped to inspire black smiths to start using iron. This idea was later confirmed for me and we can see that Indian kings made swords partly from meteorites, that the Mesopotamian myth “Lugalbanda in the Mountain Cave” says that the hero Lugalbanda had an axe and “it's metal was of Heaven.” Lugalbanda is important not only because he has a story with the Anzu bird, he was on the side of Enmerkar in his war with the King of Arrata, as in the Mesopotamian confusion of tongues myth. I also found that while he does not bring up the Watchers or demons, the famed scholar Mircea Eliade makes this topic the first chapter in his book “The Forge and the Crucible,” showing all kinds of prehistoric people around the world made tools from meteorites. As I explained these fallen angels mated with women, that is they became part of the prostitution cults and inspired new cultures, probably in part by destroying cities like Sodom and Gomorrah as they fell to Earth. So then a destructive meteorite shower could easily be used to justify authoritarian and draconian orthodoxies in order to avoid the further wrath of El, thus spawning the new god/kings.

One of the greatest mysteries of history is the “dark ages” of the late bronze age in which huge civilizations collapsed and illiteracy and “confusion” about prior history and religion became wide spread. This is especially important as according to some scientists and archeologists there is reason to believe a comet or meteorites were involved. We can see at this time that Greeks stopped using their original alphabet known as “Linear B,” (eventually switching to the familiar Phoenician type) and that Troy was destroyed at this time, “coincidentally” around a century after the reign of Akhenaten and so the time of “Exodus.” While exact dating is unknown, (Around 1200-1100BC) in the context of all that I have gone in to, this strongly suggests that some of the Hyksos went to Turkey and founded Troy, which would explain how Dionysus found his way in to Judaism. Then according to some scholars after it fell, the Trojans and probably their multi-ethnic mercenaries became the mysterious “sea people,” who like the multi-ethnic Hyksos before them, terrorized Egypt and engaged in all kinds plundering and slave raiding around the ancient world. So then, while Sumerian myths predate this, and the theocratic cult is part of a much older tradition, to some degree it would seem the mes or theocratic memes are the knowledge taught by the Watchers or giants/kings, who made great advancements in imposing their capitalist order on the world during and after these dark ages. Before this economics was more socialist, based on the “Palace Economy” in which wealth was redistributed accordingly by the monarchy and so as iron working became available, this was a time of great change and saw a rise in war and human sacrifice. Importantly, archeologists believe the sea people eventually settled in Palestine and so I would add they became “Jews” or were reuniting with the Hyksos/Phoenicians already there. The Amarna tablets show there was political ties between Akhenaten and various Phoenician factions, so as the Mitanni further north were also their allies, we can see how Trojan, Egyptian, Phoenician and Vedic gods could all be combined by using the Levant as a melting pot. Later through the centuries and especially from the captivity, Babylonian, Assyrian and Persian influences would reemphasize the Mesopotamian roots of the Hyksos and make Judaism as we know it. Whether meteorites caused the bronze age collapse, economics and much else like the smelting of metal came to be changed during this time and so even if a variety of natural disasters and plagues happened, it seems as though the Hyksos and Sea people capitalized on it, and helped to destroy the powerful civilizations of the past.

After this the myths were elaborated and tweaked so that while the Qabalah has its roots in prehistoric natural magick, it is the uncensored and egalitarian knowledge from before the “confusion” or dark ages. This then as I have explained is symbolized as the book of Adam and the book of Enoch as taught by the angel Raziel or Gnostic aeons. As the Torah was intended to be a work of the universal language, it would make sense that it was created to preserve all the various ancient wisdom like an ark, or a pillar/tower, as there was undoubtedly some kind of catastrophe occurring during these dark ages. These proto-Qabbalistic texts would develop over the centuries, with the Hyksos/Trojans and their cartel of 72 kingdoms apparently capturing it and changing it, so that while characters in the Torah often have many traits and symbols of Pagan gods, this is because they originally were Pagan gods in a syncretic mystical text. The Hyksos were the most theocratic cult and so they turned the stories of Pagan gods in to a history of their kings by changing the vowels and spaces, still insisting on Akhenaten's authoritarian view of monotheism. This would work so that as each king managed to infiltrate a particular Pagan religion, he became represented by that god as found in the original Torah, so that most of the stories of Jewish patriarchs and prophets, are the history of how the banking cult has infiltrated various Pagan religions. Eventually these totalitarian theocracies were rebelled against, stories told in the Torah itself, but also through the priests of Amun, who have been rebelling since Akhenaten and passed on knowledge to the Gnostics and Hermeticists.

All this knowledge became mixed and confused over the millennia and represented in the myths as in the Torah and sources I have given, because the rebels and theocrats lived in the same societies and these cultures often made use of both the mystical knowledge, and the mes of civilization. Again the “confusion” of censorship probably happened multiple times over centuries in various civilizations, in part it is also the natural memetic entropy that occurs when translating texts, or the inevitable errors that occur through copying texts by hand. However the bronze age collapse as perpetrated by the Trojans and Hyksos would be a pretty definite example of this censorship and infiltration. According to Mircea Eliade, even the ancient culture of Aboriginal people in Australia and the Natives of the Americas thought of a throne in the sky and that pieces fell off as meteorites, which lead to Shamanism, so clearly these ideas go way back before monarchist/capitalist civilization. He also points out the meteorites were sacred objects long before smelting and iron working became invented, which again shows how tribal/lower class spirituality is co-opted by upper class theocrats to expand their empires. So again I must stress the non linear anachronisms of mythology, which would also be why Sodom and Gomorrah happened after the flood in Genesis, rather than before with the Watchers. After all as the “pillar” or “tower” of the Torah is preserving the ancient wisdom, much of these myths stretch back in to prehistory and so no doubt have become garbled over the millennia as new layers were added to the superficially linear structure of the mnemonic device. I have already written of the founding of Troy coming from a meteorite and so it would be at the right time, though it is also true that meteorites have been hitting the Earth for a long time and each time it would be regarded as a religious event by ancient peoples. While theocrats and metal merchants would have taken all the meteorites they could get their hands on, we should not assume this was a single event, so that meteorites were incorporated in to the same broad religion and magickal practices.

Getting back to the Zohar Beresheet A Chapter 51, it takes the letters of Proverbs 18:10: “The name of the YHVH is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe” and this is then broken up in to 12 groups of 3, totalling 36 letters. This no doubt has a variety of meanings, but most obviously the 12 groups represent the zodiac, with the letters representing the decans. However as we know the “name” YHVH is expanded as the Shemhamphorash, we can see this verse seems to be something like how the Shemhamphorash is derived from the verses of Exodus. This verse in Proverbs is also called the “tower of David” and is associated with Malkuth “because tower is a name of Malkuth at the time of her greatness,” but it is also compared to Yesod and Binah giving it an unusually pure feminine symbolism. Remember Tzadik means righteous as in Proverbs 18:10 and is etymologically linked to Jupiter, but according to proverbs 10:25 the Tzadik is the foundation or “Yesod” of “The World” just like Noah. Knowing this I realized the path of the letter Tau or “the world” unites Yesod to Malkuth and so as Yesod is made of the righteous or Jupiter, Kaph then is the sapphire foundation stone and so its value of 20 is added to the gematria of Yesod or 80 which is also the value of Peh and “the tower” to total 100 as the square of 10 or Yod/Malkuth. If the righteous are the foundation of the world, another possibility is that this refers to the 36 Lamed Vav Tzadikim, AKA Tzadikim Nistarim spoken of in the Talmud and other places. These are men who are like secret Jewish saints who justify humanities existence to YHVH so that he does not kill us all, one may eventually become the messiah, but they do not know each other and often do not even know that they are one of the 36. So we see 36+81 for Yesod=117, or as 280=the number of numbers on the 7 kameas, then 280/36=7.777.... letters for each man. Where as 36+80+100=216 and so as YHVH can be expanded to the 216 letters of the Shemhamphorash, and 36X6=216, then this is the tower of YHVH, which fits with the tetractys of the letters of YHVH, which sums to 72, so if we add the 36 men we get 108.

This is all profound in it's own right, but the groups of 36 letters in the Zohar can create gematria in a number of ways, and as you can see, each group of three letters can be added, each of the three columns of groups can be added and each horizontal row can all be added. We can also take one letter from the top row of a column and add all the letters directly below it so that the nine letters of the top row produce nine columns. While some are not that meaningful, this did produce some good numbers and words, though I will not list them all here. There is numbers like 86, the gematria of Elohim, 156 which is Joseph and BABALON and 342 the number of Corson, which as I said before is another name of Azazel in Solomonic grimoires, we can also find much more here like “Cain” and “Ain” which is one of three degrees of Ain Soph Aur.

Zohar proverbs 18:10

90	10	40	10	6	70	300	2	40
4	90	10	5	6	6	3	200	3
10	10	5	6	4	7	2	90	4
100	50	6	5	6	300	5	100	30

6	5	4	4	10	40
7	5	2	5	300	5
90	6	200	10	6	50
90	4	100	10	6	2
300	10	10	40	3	6
100	70	90	30	3	6

With all this in mind I read in the Prtizker edition of the Zohar (Vol 1 Pg 237) how the verse is spelled in the twelve groups and decided to imitate it, but put the letters of the verse in the sun kamea according to it's order of numbers. So to explain briefly, the Zohar cipher modifies the verse slightly by adding a Vav to “strong” but this still means “strong” (as with the final Heh in YHVH, which again I will mention corresponds to Malkuth) and also repeats YHVH Tzadik at the end so that it all totals 36 letters. As there are three columns, each with four groups which themselves have three letters each, all we have to do to read the verse and get the modified order of letters is go to the top right letter which will correspond to the number “1” on the sun kamea. Then we go down the column taking the one letter from each group that is furthest to the right and continue to plug the letters (or rather the numerical values they represent) in to the sun kamea according to it's ordinal sequence. (Second letter goes in slot 2 etc) We then go to the column made by the middle groups of three letters and likewise take all the letters on the right hand side from each group, then on to the letters on the right hand side of the left column, likewise putting them all in the sun kamea. Then we do something different and go back to the column on the right, to the top group's second or middle letter, then going along the top row we take the middle column's middle letter, then the left hand columns middle letter and continue plugging the middle number/letters in to the sun kamea. We thus take the middle letter of each group, starting from the top right column, going right to left then down one row, then right to left etc until we have the middle letter of all the groups in this order. Finally we take the last letter of each group, again starting on the top right group of letters, but as with the first 12 letters we go down the columns. We now have 36 numbers plugged in to the Sun kamea and taken from the above cipher to get the above square.

This square found above produces even better gematria than the 12 groups by themselves, much of which must be intended by the Zohar as it matches the themes of Binah, Yesod and Malkuth as explained by these chapters. For example there is 406 which as I explained is Tau and 99 which produces “the great sea,” a reference to Binah, there is 369 which is the same number as the sum of a row on the Moon kamea. So along with other things, we get hints that the Zohar here considers “god” to be the goddess of the abyss. While not Hebrew words, the gematria of this square produces the names Aphrodite, Hera and Mary, we also find “the mother of all living” in reference to Eve. We can see the gematria produced by this square is not an accident, or my own delusions because not only does it fit the interpretations of the Zohar, it actually produces the word “Zohar” (212) and we see that this also fits with the cube cosmology I have been detailing, as 212 is also the gematria for the words “cubic” and “harlot” and “rabbi.” In other places we can find Metatron, but also 100 which is the gematria of the name “Kaph” spelled in full, (and so Jupiter and the wheel) it is also the value of the letter Qoph which corresponds to “the moon” card in the tarot and a variety of other things such as Hekate, in that “Hekate” literally means 100 and is the square of Malkuth. (Tau as 400+ Malkuth 100=500 the value of final Kaph and so when we add 500+80+20 we get 600 or final Mem) While some numbers are not that meaningful, they are generally close enough for Colel for very significant numbers, for example 109 instead of 108 and 362 with 361 being the god name of Malkuth and 363 being the god name of Yesod.

If we haven't gotten the message yet, the Zohar goes on to link the book of Raziel to the Song of Solomon, quoting 4:2 which says, “Thy neck is like the tower of David builded for an armoury, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men.” The Song of Solomon is a love song addressed to the Shekinah in the guise of the Queen of Sheba and also in chapter 4, Solomon compares her breasts to twin fawns of a gazelle, her teeth too each have their “twin” and her eyes are compared to doves. In Chapter 7 her neck is compared to an ivory tower and again her breasts are called twins and at the end of the chapter, mention is made of mandrakes. This comparison of the neck to a tower not only brings to mind Cybele as a goddess crowned with a tower, but is a clear reference to the primordial kundalini tradition and its use of tower symbolism for the spine. Now we should keep in mind the name “Mary” means sea or ocean and in Catholic churches there are multiple “black Madonnas” and as black is the colour of Binah, she fits quite well in this. In the Catholic “litany of Loreto” “the Queen of Heaven” is given many more titles such as “tower of David” and the “Tower of Ivory” but also “House of gold, (in reference to the temple of Solomon) Ark of the covenant, Gate of heaven,” and best of all “Morning star.” (Mary has also been symbolized by the rod of Aaron and also the rose) From other sources we can see she is called the “Star of the sea” in reference to the north star, while St Andrew of Crete calls her “an immovable tower of the Church” and also “a most firm tower of hidden hope.” Other saints have called her a tower and as I have explained, the church is symbolized by the tower, thus cathedrals are dedicated to “our lady” or Notre Dame. Now I have already noted that the virgin Mary is Kabbalistically linked to Mary Magdalene and so we see from a Gnostic view this tradition carried on in the form of Mary Magdalene, as Magdalene means “tower” in Aramaic, her name more properly is “ocean tower!”

So from this Zohar cipher not only can we get relevant gematria from the original cipher itself, with its 12 groups and three columns, we can plug the letters in to the sun kamea and get much more relevant gematria. There are even words that can be spelled out in the Sun kamea after we rearrange the letters on to it, though for the most part I will not attempt a translation as I do not really speak Hebrew. For example “Nebo” is found on the column on the right, with Nebo being the Hebrew spelling of Nabu the Babylonian version of Hermes. Mt Nebo is mentioned in Deuteronomy 34:1 as the place

Moses viewed Israel before he died at age 120 after wandering the dessert and according to Christian and some Muslim traditions, it is the place where Moses was buried. In Maccabees 2:4–7 we learn the prophet Jeremiah hid the ark of the covenant and the tabernacle in a cave on Mt Nebo. (Nebo is 58 the same as Noah) As the schethiya and the holy grail have been linked as meteorite stones, legend also holds that Joseph of Aramathea, a rich man and member of the Sanhedrin brought the grail to England as well. In fact there are also legends in which Jeremiah brings the pillow stone of destiny to Scotland, a stone which is also linked to a St Columba, who some believe brought it from Ireland and some further link it to Rosslyn chapel and so Scottish Rite of Masons. Now we do not have to believe all this literally, but the fact that such legends exist is highly indicative that people in the theocratic cult have been active in the UK for a long time and that one way or another, they are the source of such legends.

This deciphering of the Zohar sun square had got me thinking about the possibilities of other words being plugged in to the other magick squares, then I remembered the SATOR square. Now as it appears in the Goetia, it's pentacle is surrounded by verse 8 from Psalm 72, which just so happens to have 25 letters in it just as the square of Mars. So I plugged the Hebrew letters in to the square according to the ordinal sequence on the square and I did come out with some very meaningful gematria, which is very comparable in themes to the Zohar sun square. (Especially in the broader terms of Colel) The gematria of this Psalm 72 square can also be compared to the gematria of the SATOR square in general and among other things it gives further information about the abyss and it's goddess. I also had the idea that if I took the SATOR square from the Greater Keys and pulled out the Hebrew letters according to the ordinal sequence of numbers on the Mars kamea, this might produce something meaningful. Indeed I found that if I took the 25 letters in their numerical order it could be broken up in to five lines of five letters and that each of these was a palindrome! The gematria here also reminded me of the Zohar sun square and the rows of letters, (up, down and diagonal) produced Hebrew words! (I used google to translate this, but it should be looked at by someone fluent in Hebrew) Furthermore after writing most of this chapter, to my surprise many aspects were confirmed by reading "The Beginnings of Masonry" by Freemason Frank C Higgins and while the whole book was extremely relevant, I will limit myself to quote Frank as he explains the value of magick squares and says explicitly, "Understanding this, we can translate into their proper number values the proportions, ground plans, and ornaments of ancient temples, besides countless biblical names and phrases, classic proper names, magick words, and above all the passwords of our Masonic craft which explain the acts and allusions that accompany them. This is really what constituted the speculative Masonry of old time seers..." Then somewhat later after explaining other very relevant gematria, Frank explains how by putting the Hebrew letters of Elohim (86) in to acrostics on the Mars square, the first 5 digits of Pi can be found on the top row when the letter's numbers are reduced, that is 3.1415 and that together these sum to 14 and this relates to the diameter of a circle. The scholar Walter Moeller in his work "The Mithraic origins and meanings of the Rotas SATOR square" explains how among others, the numbers 666, 360, 432000, 25920 (the Platonic year) and 2160000 (Moeller cites P. Schnabel who gives this as the corrected age of the world according to Berossus) can be derived from the square and so while certain parts are questionable, that work certainly strengthens many connections I have made.

Now I have already explained how the 10 commandments are written with 128 letters and can be put on the Mercury squares and also how the 2 verses introducing the 10 commandments are also composed of 64 letters and that the letters in the corners spell "fear" and sum to 216. This last part is pretty well known to Kabbalists and I found it online, but for some reason these Rabbis never seem to go in to the other gematria created by the rows of the square this creates, they also never bring up the connection to magick squares. So encouraged by all the other word squares I made the square of the first two verses of the commandments, writing them out from right to left and top to bottom and totalled all the sums to find one of the best squares of all! The gematria may be somewhat puzzling outside the context of this chapter but upon finishing reading it you will see how it ties together many things relating to the death cult of the archons "Samael" and "Azazel" as the authors of the "Torah," or

“tables of stone,” but also the nature of the goddess of the abyss whom they overthrew and a “precious stone” translated as “agate” in the Septuagint, there is also the number 343 or 7^3 and really too much for me to spoil it here. (the centre letters alone tell of the stone in the water)

One thing the Rabbis do speak of though is that the first two verses of the “Shema” also have 64 letters (Deut 6:4-5) and when written from right to left in an 8X8 square we find the letters for the word “love” written in the centre. Now the Shema is like the motto or slogan of Judaism, it is almost like a Nicene creed for them and affirms the unity of Yahweh, so we also see the gematria of this word for love is 13 and this is the gematria of “achad” which means “unity” or “one” in Hebrew. Writing out this square in the same way as the square of 2 intro verses to the commandments, I saw the gematria values in general were rather marvellous, and that both squares are best understood by comparing them to each other. (Exodus 20:2-14 or Deut 5:6-18) I will not go into it much here, but after doing these two squares you can also put the verses in to the Mercury kamea according to the ordinal sequence and here you will find a most curious thing, that the letters in the corners and middle remain the same as when written from right to left! Keep an eye out for the same totals coming up in the rows as well, and while the gematria is rather mediocre in the ordinal sequence, it elaborates much of the same message. (Colel makes all this much more interesting though and among other things, this brings up more numbers from the regular kameas and cubes) After this I wrote out the 128 letters of the actual 10 commandments (taken from Ex 20:2-17) from right to left and while the second square wasn't bad, the first was not very good. I also tried putting these 128 letters in ordinal sequence and here too some of the same numbers came up, as with the corners, perimeter and centre, but also the diagonals were composed of the exact same numbers! So with all this I can only wonder how many other verses could be plugged in to the other squares to give gematria meanings or spell out new Hebrew words. For those wishing to explore all this further, I suggest you start with the other means of deriving gematria from the 7 regular kameas, then go on to the word squares, as they give away the ending of the story, you can also replace odd numbers with a 1 and even numbers with 0s and while this does not produce great gematria, it reveals hidden patterns in the squares.

I have already quoted the Zohar as to how the schethiya was cast in to the abyss, but the book of Raziel too was cast in to the ocean by the jealous angels and so the two are clearly linked. More than this, the angel of the red sea in the Testament of Solomon brings up the pillar from that sea in the story of the temple's cornerstone, but so too are tablets of destiny associated with the goddess of the ocean Tiamat and so all this ocean or abyss symbolism cannot all be mere coincidence. Volume 20 of the Zohar (Pinchas) Chapters 37, 45-46 and 53-54 explains in greater detail much of what I have gone in to. For example the blue colour of the sapphire as being like the sea and the nights sky and the blue part of a flame which represents the Shekinah or Wisdom, it is also written on with white letters which have a mirroring or binary like effect. As the white letters are contrasted against the dark blue of the sapphire it is as the stars in the nights sky and as the sapphire book of Raziel has 72 branches of wisdom, we can see that each branch represents five degrees of the zodiac. These sections of the Zohar also explain how the names Adonai and Yod Heh Vav Heh relate to the sapphire and how this relates to the chariot/throne and Metatron and Ezekiel, the number 72 and the psalms or music of David. David is credited with writing 73 psalms in the Bible and while the Golden Dawn uses other psalms, Mathers does say the psalms of David correspond to the Shemhamphorash angels, but at any rate David's psalms were definitely used in magickal spells. In ordinal English gematria, Zadekiel has a value of 73, which is the 21st prime number and the Hebrew gematria of Chokmah, it is also the spelling of the name Gimel, the letter which corresponds to the moon and high priestess tarot card I described before. Keeping in mind the rule of Colel, the extra 1 implies the unity of the 72 and 73 and so we see Chokmah is linked to Chesed or 72 by Vav or the hierophant, that 73 is the sum of the gematria of sulphur, salt and Mercury and much else. Volume 13 of the Zohar also has important explanations and speaks of a chamber of the sapphire stone held up by 8 pillars called the “pegs of the tabernacle” and there are other mentions of important things like a measuring reed and other things. (Compare this to Proverbs 9) Again this is all highly symbolic and so just because there is some apparent continuity errors when taken literally, does not mean it is not true, just as there is a ton of contradictions in the Bible as a whole, it does not mean there is no metaphorical meaning.

Now that we have seen the Abrahamic side of the tower and pillars, let us now consider it's origin in the Pagan Tantra, which itself has it's roots in prehistoric times such as at Gobekli Tepe, but would also branch out in to Hermeticism and so eventually become science. Before we start though, we should know that the Book of Jubilees says that Shem/Melchizedek and his offspring were given “the whole land of Eden and the whole land of the Red Sea, and the whole land of the east and India,” “Asshur, and Babel” and “the mountains of Ararat.” As the throne is the Merkabah, as we have seen it is a very important symbol and was thought of as the heavens, while Earth was the footstool of “god” but the throne of the deity comes up in other religions as well.

This symbolism I have been detailing takes a rather strange turn in the Celtic myth of the goddess Tlachtga in which she is the daughter of a powerful Druid who supposedly studied under Simon Magus and her name means something like “Earth spear.” While we can doubt the historicity of all this, in the myth she was raped by the three sons of Simon Magus, and so gave birth to three sons which would go on to give their names to regions of Ireland. (Like the two fathers of the Dioscuri, this rape is a contrivance for the purposes of symbolism) We might dismiss this as Christian propaganda, but there are certain elements to it which suggest more, for example that this goddess is strongly associated with the “finished stone of Forcarthu she left, And the pillar in Cnamchail” which can make people go blind, but there is also a magickal wheel. This wheel was made by Simon and her father and was supposed to be able to fly which is suggestive of the Merkabah chariot or astral body. Despite the actions of his supposed sons, he is called “noble Simon of sevenfold splendour” and splendour is what the name of the sephirah “Hod” translates to. (The Zohar also translates as book of Splendour) So while we do not have to accept this as history, it is true Druids were in Alexandria and that scholars have noticed similarities between Druidism and Christianity, similarities which are much more pronounced in Gnosticism. (Druids hated Romans and so Ireland would be a perfect hideout for Gnostic refugees.)

This goddess, stone and pillar are related to the origin of Samhain or Halloween and Tlachtga has a hill, called the “hill of Ward” close to the hill of Tara where the Lia Fail, or Irish coronation stone is. Tara is also where the throne of Lugh, AKA the “sage's seat” was supposed to be and the story of how Lugh came to rule is also very pertinent here for a number of reasons and so as in other places, the stone goes with the throne. More than this, the Lia Fail was one of four magickal treasures of the Celtic gods, the others being the spear of Lugh, the cauldron of the Dagda and the sword of Nuada, thus we see the four elements and the four suits of the tarot. Lugh came to the court of the gods and gained admittance past the gate by being a “master of all arts,” so upon entering the palace he was challenged to a game a chess. As a game with spiritual origins in India, chess is played on an 8 by 8 grid, but we can also see that Masons use a checker floor for their temples, which is rather ideal for using the magick squares in combination with a magick circle. After winning the game, Lugh sat in the sage's seat and was challenged by Oghma who threw a giant flag stone at him, Lugh threw the stone back and showed his strength, but then put it back in to a larger rock outside the palace as it had previously been broken off. (or alternatively he put it back into the palace wall) According to the historian William Borlase in his Antiquities of Cornwall, the Druids worshipped Mercury in the form of a stone cube and while I couldn't find which god this meant specifically, this would either be Oghma (who is a mix of Mercury and Heracles) or most likely Lugh. In this way Lugh became the king of the gods and lead them in to battle against the Fomorians, who are the Celtic versions of the giants and were taxing the people heavily. One myth of Lugh says that he was born when his grandfather Balor, the king of the Fomorians heard a prophecy that his grandson would kill him, (not unlike Chronos) so from this he decided to lock his daughter Eithne into a glass tower. After some time Balor decided to steal a magickal cow from the god Cian, who in revenge gains access to the top of the tower and so has sex with Eithne, who gives birth to triplets, two of which are drowned in the sea or a whirlpool, but the third is rescued from the waters and grows up to be Lugh. Close to where Balor's fort is supposed to be, this tower was on Tory island and here there is also the "wishing stone" and any who are able to stand on this stone, or throw three stones on to it are said to be granted a wish. This of course brings to mind the Zohar story of the ravishing maiden, or Solomon's daughter in the tower and we can also see Lugh kills Balor hitting his eye with a special stone, bringing to mind David and Goliath.

Now all this fits well enough, but to my surprise some scholars have already connected Lugh to a comet, citing myths which speak of him rising like a sun in the east and being too bright to look at. (See The Celtic Gods: Comets in Irish Mythology By Patrick McCafferty and Mike Baillie and also the book, Comet/Asteroid Impacts and Human Society: An Interdisciplinary Approach) In some places Lugh is also described as being one legged, one armed and one eyed and this is explained as being symbolic of a comet, but also Lugh's flying spear, or even King Arthur and Balor. As King Arthur is associated with grail legends this is especially striking, but these scholars also see Lugh's spear as being like the spear of Longinus which pierced the side of Christ to spill the blood that filled the holy grail. The Arthur myth of "the Wasteland" is interpreted as a story of how a comet created a wasteland, connecting the spear in this story to that of Lugh's as a comet. This was supposed to have happened in 538 AD and science does show that Halley's comet was passing by very close to Earth at this time. Now those familiar with myth will realize that this is a late date for the god Lugh to have lived, but is about right for Arthur and so these scholars solve this by pointing out the human student of St. Patrick, one "Mochta Lugh" which means "mighty Lugh" and he was the first Bishop of Louthe. These scholars theorize that this created a cloud of debris that darkened the sun and stunted crops, occurring at the same time around an outbreak of plague, this was also a key time in the conversion of Ireland. Bringing to mind how the demons are associated with causing sickness, missionaries like Gildas would have taken this opportunity to preach Christianity and a fear of his god and so it was after years of relative darkness from this cloud that Ireland converted. Lugh also has a son who is also a form of him reborn, his name is Mongan and in the myth "Mongan's Frenzy" the god has to go to the otherworld to escape stone hail falling from the sky. The Encke comet is thought by these scholars to have come by around 2500 BC and produced religious upheavals as well, the tail of this comet is also thought to produce the biannual Taurid meteor showers in the constellation Taurus!

With this in mind I searched the Mabinogian, a compendium of Arthurian and Welsh mythology and therein is the tale of Owein, or "The Countess and the fountain." Here we can see Lugh is depicted as black giant in this one legged form, he has an iron spear too and as Owein is seeking a challenge, he advises the hero to go to a special tree which has a special fountain and stone under it, on which a silver cup or grail is found. Owein goes there and pours the water on the stone using the cup just as he was told, then hail stones fall to the ground and nearly kill him and his horse, the tree is left bare of it's leaves just as in Revelations. Then Owein does battle with a black knight and after some very significant symbolic adventures, such as with 24 maidens, a snake and a lion and a woman trapped in a stone, he becomes the king of a magickal land and marries the countess who rules the fountain. If Lugh was a comet, he would not be a fallen angel as comets remain in space, but the tail of a comet or something similar could certainly have brought a shower of meteorites. Here Lugh is depicted as giant, but given that by this time Wales had been under centuries of Christian rule, the Mabinogian in general is more altered than the Prose Edda of Snorri and it is impossible to tell how much might be propaganda from the likes of the "mighty" Christians. Lugh is half Fomorian, but this most likely reflects Celtic monism, just as Odin has giant blood, though in both cases this may also be Christian propaganda. I have already quoted how hail stones were interpreted as fiery meteorites in the gospel of Bartholomew and so given how many times hail comes up in the bible, (as in Ezekiel 13) it is sometimes hard to say if rocks of ice are being referred to or meteorites, but even when it is ice, it could well be as in the Celtic myths, a reference to a comet and the ice that falls from it's tail.

The Mabinogian and its "four branches" are easily shown to have a variety of Christian/Trojan propaganda and in the tale of Taliesin we can read of this Bard of the King Elphin, that he was from "the region of the summer stars." Among other very important biblical and Pagan events, Taliesin also tells us that "I was with my Lord in the highest sphere, On the fall of Lucifer into the depth of hell" ... "I know the names of the stars from north to south; I have been on the galaxy at the throne of the Distributor" ... "I was instructor to Eli and Enoch" ... "I have been the chief director of the work of the tower of Nimrod; I am a wonder whose origin is not known. I have been in Asia with Noah in the ark, I have seen the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; I have been in India when Rome was built, I am now come here to the remnant of Troy." We can see from the text that the 56 poems of Taliesin are encoded with significant symbolism such as groups of 24 and that this is Celtic Qabbalah and through such poems he freed his master Elphin and his wife from the "belly of the Stoney Tower" prison of King Maelgwn. Taliesin seems to be beyond good and evil and engaged in activities to do with both heavenly and evil events in the bible and so we also learn from Taliesin that "The concealed books From Emmanuel's hand, Were brought by Raphael As Adam's gift. When in his old age, To his chin immersed, In Jordan's water, Keeping a fast, Moses did obtain, In Jordan's water, The aid of the three Most special rods. Solomon did obtain In Babel's tower, All the sciences In Asia land. So did I obtain, In my bardic books, All the sciences Of Europe and Africa. Their course, their bearing, Their permitted way, And their fate I know, Unto the end. Oh! what misery, Through extreme of woe, Prophecy will show On Troy's race!" Once again we do not have to take this so literally to understand that the symbolism associated with Taliesin is rooted in Solomon, the tower of Babel, the Adamic language and the book of life or destiny. Among other things this shows the temple of Solomon is also a kind of memory palace to which Masonry provides the keys.

Along with stories from the Book of Invasions we can see the strong influence of the Trojan Christians here and the history of the Celtic kings, but also stories of the flood and familiar symbolic numbers. For example the Book of Invasions tells us of Cessair and her 49 maids who leave to Ireland on a boat before the flood, but they only have three men and eventually all but one man die, with this man becoming a salmon. (Others have pointed out a Celtic version of Thoth in this book) Parts of the Book of invasions reference the Aeneid and there is also the story of Nemed who is descended from Noah through Magog, but him and his men attack the tower of the Formorians on the isle of Tory and so the Celtic mythology is much of the same confused euhemerist Christian propaganda.

Arthur is himself a Celtic god turned in to a human king and we can read in various places such as the opening lines of the Tale of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, how he is descended from the Trojans. It begins by saying that after the fall of Troy the Trojans spread out across Europe, that along with Aeneas came Romulus, Brutus, but also Ticius who went to Tuscany and Langobard who went to Lombardy but that Arthur is the most "regal" of the Trojan line. Starting at line 619 we are given an explanation for why Gawain had a pentagram on his shield and that first of all it comes from Solomon. There are also 5 groupings of 5 symbols which is suggestive of the square of Mars, one of these however is that "all his (Gawain) strength he found in the five joys that the fair Queen of Heaven had in her child." Starting at line 1817 Gawain is offered a ring as bright as the Sun along with a girdle!

While I cannot go in to the full details here, Geoffrey of Monmouth is our most important source for Arthur, but also Merlin and in his "History of the Kings of Briton" he also explains in detail the influence of Troy and the Romans. Now as I have explained the British Monarchy claims to have Jewish blood in them, but some of them, as with the Tudors also claimed to be the descendants of Arthur and so this is through much of the same family tree. We can even see that in Winchester castle the Tudors claimed to have the round table itself and in its centre is the Tudor rose, some scholars even explain it as being like the wheel of fortune, as the wheel of fortune and even its goddess come up repeatedly in Arthurian tales. (For example in the Morte d'Arthur it appears in Arthur's dream) This table has spots for 25 knights, but there are various numbers of knights in the legends and often there are 12 knights, which then brings to mind the 12 tribes, but also the 12 leaders of Troy as spoken of by Snorri. Galahad, the knight who found the grail was also said to be the descendent of Joseph of Arimathea, he also ascended to heaven with the grail in a way not unlike Enoch.

We can also read from Geoffrey the Prophecies of Merlin which were clearly used for political purposes by the British state as it foretells the coming of kings and such things, but also says, "The giant of snow white colour shall shine, and cause the white people to flourish." While telling his origin story of Merlin in his History of the Kings of Briton, Geoffrey takes some influence from Gildas and his story of Ambrosius Aurelianus, (in his work De Excidio et Conquestu Britanniae) but also more clearly from Historia Brittonum which is said to be written by Nennius. While he is distinct from Merlin here, Geoffrey tells us Ambrosius, or rather Aurelius Ambrosius was the son of Constantine III and the brother of Constans II and Uther Pendragon, putting Arthur in the line of Roman emperors!

While the name Ambrosius is telling enough given it's similarity to ambrosia, in Historia Brittonum (Ch 40-42) Ambrosius is like Merlin in Geoffrey's History of the Kings of Briton, in that in both there is a story told involving two dragons. As the story goes King Vortigern wanted to build a citadel, he collected the building materials but they would disappear, so his wise men advised him to sacrifice a child without a father and sprinkle his blood on the foundation bringing to mind the story of Hiel of Bethel and also two pillars of Hypsuranius sprinkled with blood in Sanchuniathon. Ambrosius was found, (though he later says he was the son of a Roman consul) but he is wiser than the wise men and tells them to dig beneath the foundation, there in a pool is found two vases reminiscent of Solomonic vessels, inside the vases was a tent (or tabernacle?) and inside that two dragons. Geoffrey took this and tells a euhemerist Christian story of Merlin, who was said to have an incubus demon for a father and so was a hybrid or Nephilim like being. (The Morrigan is also turned in to a human woman, Morgan) Geoffrey starts this section by telling of Eldol who kills 70 men, then it goes on to speak of Vortigern wanting to build a "tower" but was having similar difficulties. Merlin was found by a gate as he was also to be sacrificed so that king Vortigern could sprinkle his blood on stones of the foundation of the tower, but he also told the king to look and a pool was found with two stones in it, stones that had the two dragons inside. Geoffrey speaks of giants and dragons repeatedly in his History, for example there is a story of Arthur rescuing a princess named Helena from a giant, Geoffrey also explains how Merlin brought stones from Ireland, stones which had been made in to a circle by giants and that from these Merlin made Stonehenge. (Though we know now the stones are not from Ireland) Merlin also explains that a comet (Ch 15) is a sign foretelling that Uther will come to the throne, that Aurelius Ambrosius is dead, and that Uther will have "a most potent son." (Arthur)

Geoffrey shows himself to be well read in a variety of texts that I have found important in the writing of this chapter, he hints at this in sometimes subtle ways with obscure references to those without the proper context. For example in his "Life of Merlin" book he speaks of the Phoenix, but even a "Fury" who "flying all about, shall scatter her poison over" the Normans. While I couldn't find any particular connection, it is also suspicious that Geoffrey tells of a King Solomon of Armorica in his histories and so given all the usual motifs I have mentioned, it is clear he is part of the same Roman school of euhemerist Solomonic conspirators. Like Snorri, Geoffrey is no Pagan sympathizer, in fact he is a Christian monk, he is not intentionally preserving Pagan myths so much as appropriating them to legitimize and explain Roman Catholic rule in the UK as through his history of kings, with Arthur actually fighting off the Pagan Saxons and restoring the Christian church. Both "Merlin" and "Arthur" are said to be Christians and so Geoffrey's story could be about Roman aristocrats impersonating Celtic gods, in fact we can see in Geoffrey's "Life of Merlin" book he explains many things such as that Taliesin learned from Gildas. A little later in this book, Geoffrey includes a cosmology, saying that the creator made the "winds which are said to be four in number; as a foundation He placed the Earth." A little later he explains that evil demons live beyond the moon and cross breed with humans, then a little further he speaks of the ocean and a freezing part of it, that "sands which it is the first to generate from the near-by vapour when it is mingled with the ray of Venus' star. This star, the Arabs say, makes shining gems when it passes through Pisces" and these have magickal properties. Earlier Merlin asked for a building to be made with 70 doors and 70 windows so that he might watch the stars, Venus and Phoebus (Apollo) and give prophecies to be written down on tablets by 70 scribes. While there are doubtless other examples from Celtic mythology of such things, I must leave that for others to find.

In Egypt, Isis is depicted with a throne on her head and her name actually means “throne,” in a sense she was the “gnomon” or throne of Osiris and we can see that the throne of Osiris has been depicted with much relevant symbolism associated with it, such as the Pythagorean theorem, Phi and the Platonic solids. The pyramid itself has a lot of sacred geometry behind it, including Phi and Pi and the exact geometry of this Egyptian philosophy is lost, but many have written of it and tried to reconstruct it. Robert Lawlor in his book “Sacred Geometry” is of particular interest, but his theories are too complicated to go into more than I already have. Given how well all this fits with everything else I have gone into, the throne of Osiris must be important and according to Lawlor, it is the basis of how the pyramids were designed. While the exact meaning of myth is always uncertain, no one can deny the Platonic solids relate to each other through the golden ratio in a variety of ways. The name “Osiris” too has been translated in various ways but it contains the throne hieroglyph as well and could mean something like, “the seat or throne of the eye” or given the symbolism it would make sense to me if the eye is that of Horus which sits in the throne of Isis and both of them together make up Osiris. (Or if the eye is a meteorite, it is as the tablets of destiny as in the myths of the Anzu bird) In Catholicism we see this in the “throne of Wisdom” which came to be associated with Mary as the personification of the throne of Solomon and on her knee, baby Jesus sits like depictions of a young Horus. One title of Binah is “Khorsia” which means “the throne” and the order of angels in Binah are “thrones” supported by the ophanim or “wheels” in Chesed below. According to the Pythagorean theorem, the square of Saturn or $9 + \text{the square of Jupiter } 16 = \text{the square of Mars or } 25$ on a triangle with an area of 6. Or we can see that $3^3 + 4^3 + 5^3 = 216$ or 6^3 and if we add all the cubes of 3-9 we get 2016. This Pythagorean theorem then played a strong roll in Egyptian religion as being symbolic of Isis+Osiris=Horus and it is still very important in Masonry today. (Remember these squares can have the 168 hours)

Now plenty of others have already noticed similarities between Judaism and Egyptian religion and so I will leave that for your own further research, but I have found a few stories which are particularly relevant for us. First we can see the “Tale of the Doomed Prince” (See Egyptian Myth and Legend, by Donald Mackenzie) which tells the story of how a prince of Egypt was fated to die by the seven Hathors or fates, so to avoid this his father raises him in a tower. After the prince grows up he naturally wants to get out and convinces his father to let him do so, so this prince goes on a hunting trip and eventually finds his way to the land of the Mitanni, (Naharina) but pretends to be a runaway and a commoner, the son of a charioteer. The Mitanni at this time are said to have no princes and their only princess is herself locked away in a tower with 70 windows in it just as Solomon's daughter, though this tower is on a cliff 700 feet high. The Mitanni king had said that whoever climbed up the tower could marry the princess and the Egyptian prince manages to do so, but the Mitanni king, like Solomon does not want his daughter to marry a poor man. Only when she threatens to kill herself does the king relent, so they are married and eventually the two go back to Egypt, where the prince is protected by a giant, also translated “mighty man.” Unfortunately there is little more after this as the text is damaged, but what is there is telling enough and surely close to the story of Solomon's daughter, but also Lugh, Moses and as we will see, Perseus, in that a young underdog or even outcast hero eventually becomes king. Now the giant here plays a positive role, but there is strong reason to believe this is a Hyksos influence, as not only does the papyri of this story date to the 18th dynasty of Egypt which was Hyksos, but it involves the Mitanni. The princess also swears an oath by Ra Harmachis who is an Egyptian god, but the way this translation is worded, each time this god is brought up it seems like he was worshipped exclusively or as a monotheistic god. The Egyptian prince also seems to be converted, which is telling as Harmachis was also worshipped and favoured by the Hyksos king Thutmose IV who was the grandfather of Akhenaten and famously restored the Sphinx. Harmachis AKA Horemakhet is said to have come to Thutmose IV in a dream after he fell asleep on a hunting trip and asked him to clear the sand that had buried the Sphinx, in return Harmachis as the god of the Sphinx promised that Thutmose IV would become king. Thutmose IV did come to power unexpectedly and after this the worship of Harmachis spread in Egypt, some scholars think he usurped the throne from his brother, but he is also known as the Hyksos king who forged an alliance with the Mitanni and married a Mitanni princess and so he is the most likely identity I know of for the doomed prince.

In the Hermetic version of the tablets of destiny we can see the famous emerald tablets of Thoth, (translated by Isaac Newton) otherwise known as the turquoise tablets which in the sign of Virgo were set upon a milk stone as written of in the text “the discourse on the eighth and ninth.” Emerald corresponds to both Gemini and Taurus which is clear enough, though it is also true that both Emerald and turquoise correspond to Venus and so here in the centre of the Ogdoad we have Virgo and Taurus symbolism not unlike the Rhombic Dodecahedron Adinkra. The “book of life” can be likened to the book of Thoth which is often related to the Tarot, at least in condensed form, most noticeably in Crowley's deck which takes that name.

The Egyptian story “Setne Khamwas and Naneferkaptah” has many familiar motifs including the book of Thoth which is found within a series of six boxes within boxes, so that all 7 together are like the kamea cube of space. (21 cubits is referred to repeatedly) Though some of the boxes are not made of planetary metals, four are and like the cornerstone of the Testament of Solomon, they are found in the “Sea of Coptos” which would most likely be the Red Sea. Naneferkaptah retrieves the books with the help of magick, making a boat and sailors from wax they take him to the book which was said to be in the sea, but here it is said to be in a river, though Naneferkaptah causes the river to split just as Moses did with the Red Sea when he submerged the chariots of the Egyptians. So Naneferkaptah retrieves the boxes by defeating it's guardian, an “eternal serpent” coiled around it, which can only be the Ouroboros. What is more the book had spells, such as one which taught the language of the birds and reptiles and all animals, another to charm the heavens, the Earth and netherworld and Naneferkaptah also learned how to resurrect the dead, but it was also apparently cursed by Thoth because Naneferkaptah took it from it's rightful place. Then we learn how Setne plays draughts or chess against the ghost of Naneferkaptah in order to win the book, he loses and is mostly buried in the dirt as a result, but uses magick to defeat Naneferkaptah and take the book.

Then Setne meets a seductive woman and priestess of Bastet named Tabubu, a woman whom he tried to buy like a prostitute, but she was not a low born person and was a priestess of Bastet and so after bringing Setne to her home with lapis lazuli and turquoise floors, asked more and more things of him. Finally she asked him to kill his children, all so that they might not dispute their now diminished inheritance, after agreeing to this he all of a sudden wakes up to find himself naked in front of the Pharaoh and his men. It seems Setne was tripping out this whole time, the Pharaoh even asks his son Setne if it was a kind of drunkenness he was under, though it only says, “Setne related everything that had happened with Tabubu and Naneferkaptah.” The Pharaoh tells him to return the book with a forked stick and a lit brazier on his head. While they may not believe the story itself, scholars think this Setne relates to a real man, Prince Khaemweset who was the son of Ramses II, which is especially important as Ramses is thought by many to be the Pharaoh of Exodus and he plays a strong role in some versions of theory of the Hyksos being the original Jews. (Akhenaten had pieces of hemp in his grave at el-Amarna, we also know hemp pollen was found on the mummy of Ramses II. Manniche, Lise. 1989. An Ancient Egyptian Herbal) Earlier in the story, Naneferkaptah eats the book of Thoth and learns it's wisdom not unlike John eating the scroll in Revelations. (more on this later) I can personally testify that entheogens inspire this kind of metaphor, or it can seem like you “download” information in more modern terms, but it is pretty impossible to say what caused the visions. From what I can see this is a story of the original Egyptian Shamanism of Naneferkaptah being rediscovered by the son of Ramses who takes it for himself. Then it appears Setne has a run in with an agent/sorceress from the Hyksos banking cult who probably copied the wisdom for “Moses” to steal as per my original theory regarding his tablets.

As I explained, the pillars of Hermes are sometimes thought of as the pyramids, with legends having it built by Thoth Hermes in order to preserve these kinds of teachings. Remember that Masons trace their origins to the pyramids and so what we are starting to see is not so much an unbroken line from the pyramid builders to the Freemasons of today, but rather an intercontinental tradition of architects and masons, from which the modern Freemasons are drawing upon to make their own Judeo-Christian traditions. In other accounts two pillars were found written by Thoth so as to preserve the knowledge from before the flood, according to Iamblichus one was found in Thebes and was placed in the temple of Amun. (Iamblichus was an important ancient mystic and preserver of Pythagorean knowledge, see his "Theology of Arithmetic" for number mysticism.) The other pillar is said to have been found at Heliopolis, the same place as the Benben stone and so it could have been copied by the likes of Joseph and the Hyksos when the Jews stole Egyptian wisdom. This fits accounts by Plutarch when he writes of Isis and Osiris, he tells of a column at Thebes cursing the King Mnevis (Joseph?) who it seems was worshipped at Heliopolis as a bull god, a king who brought the use of money and luxurious living with him. The pillars were said to have 36,525 works by Thoth which is the number of days in 100 years, but the emerald tablet is also said sometimes to have been found within, but at any rate it is clearly intimately related to all this. Other knowledge regarding the pillars was kept at Hermopolis and there are accounts of it from the historian Manetho, with the last records of the original works of Thoth coming from Clement of Alexandria, AKA Titus Flavius Clemens who as a Christian philosopher for the imperial cult was the kind of person who co-opted and monopolized these kinds of works. Clement speaks of 42 books in two groups, one of 36 books on the usual subjects, the other being 6 medical books and you can read of them and other pillars in his work "Stromata." So then as the Egyptians have their own version of the tablets of destiny, my argument in Chapter 16 linking the Sumerian tablets with Moses coming out of Egypt to get the schethiya is greatly strengthened.

In a Hermetic Qabbalistic work of natural magick called "Cyranides" the letter Kappa, which corresponds to Kaph in Hebrew is shown to correspond to Lapiz Lazuli, the same as Aphrodite, the goddess who would commonly be engraved on such a stone. In some editions of the Sepher Yetzirah, (Ch 4) the letter Kaph is indeed associated with Venus and as we will see, even the Solomonic grimoires associated the Syrian Venus with Chesed. (Mercury is also sometimes linked to Peh) This section of Cyranides also refers to the use of the "Iunx" as a bird, but which has the same name as the wheel used by Aphrodite that I mentioned earlier, because the bird is able to turn it's head all around like a wheel or owl. Later in the chapter of Kappa, instructions are given to engrave agate with Hermes, and other stones with Nemesis standing on her wheel and holding a ruler as a symbol of measurement. This is important as angels with rulers also come up in 1 Enoch, Ezekiel and in Revelations the angels give John a "measuring rod like a staff," we also know that Ishtar had a lapiz lazuli measuring rod in the myth of her descent in the underworld, (line 25) suggesting that it may even be the original use of the sapphire staff of Moses. This measuring rod also signifies the tool of the ancient Masons and would be used for sacred geometry and later this concept of measuring everything would help to create science. As for Kappa in Cyranides, mention is made of what seems to be Aphrodite's girdle which itself is very comparable to Ishtar's girdle and the "ephod" robe or girdle of the Jewish high priests. There is also talk of the stone of Chronos being called the "dragon stone" and this is attributed to obsidian, as in the foundation of the tower in Parzival, but obsidian was also made in to mirrors for skrying and was used by John Dee, the Goetia and even at Catal Huyuk. In this book we can see the Greeks had there own version of the same magick which for many letters matches the Occult correspondences of the tarot and the Jewish Kabbalah perfectly. There are of course differences, but even here it does more to show coherence through the Qabbalah, for example Kappa corresponds to Gemini. That Cyranides is part of the same tradition is found in some translations as an introduction, or a letter from one author Harpocraton to his daughter, explaining that on his trip to Babylon he learned of towers built by giants, that the tower was destroyed and the giants hurled to Crete and that he had the following translated from a iron pillar brought from the "edifice of Solomon." He also gives the dimensions of a “stone” which seems to be the pillar, it is 32 cubits high and 79 across and there were 208 steps leading up to it.

We can further see echoes of the schethiya in the oldest written myth on the Earth, the epic of Gilgamesh, which in the first tablets says to “read out from the lapis lazuli tablet” which is found in a copper box. (A Babylonian “Hymn to Nisaba,” the scribe goddess of writing opens with the line, “Lady coloured like the stars of heaven, holding a lapis lazuli tablet!”) Lapis Lazuli is further spoken of in the Epic of Gilgamesh but most relevant here is the lazuli necklace of Ishtar made by Anu and in some translations of tablet VI, Ishtar offers Gilgamesh a chariot which is made of lapis lazuli and gold and hitched to “storm demons,” then a little later the horns of the bull of heaven are said to be made of lapis lazuli. (Taurus also corresponds to Sapphire in Qabalah) Further on in tablet IX we read of a tree in the garden of the gods which has “lapis lazuli as foliage” which is comparable to the kiskanu tree described in another text called, “the incantation of Eridu.” Here I would like to remind the reader of the Assyrian Qabbalistic tree on which the Epic of Gilgamesh is structured, and the sapphire staff of Moses which he found in the garden. There is also a famous gate of Ishtar made of lapis lazuli and the word “Babel” itself means “gate of God” and we can connect this to 231 as the mystic number of 21 and so the mystic number of the path of Kaph which is the letter of Jupiter and so sapphires or lapis lazuli. (Daleth, the letter of Venus unites Binah and Chokmah and translates to “door”) This number 231 is important as there are also 231 “gates of wisdom” referred to in the Sepher Yetzirah, which are arranged on a wheel and have a variety of Kabbalistic meaning associated with them, but as 231 is linked to Kaph, it is linked to the wheel of fortune. There are 231 pairs or symmetrical two letter permutations of the 22 letters in the Hebrew alphabet and the Sepher Yetzirah explains how they were used to construct the universe and curiously there are the 231 “integer partitions” of 16, or 231 possible ways to add the 16 particles of the adinkra to total 16.

Now in India there is Shesha or Sesha, the snake throne of Vishnu which he uses as a boat on the ocean or river of milk, which can have some pretty different symbolism from the other thrones, but as this is part of the more Tantric tradition, this should not be surprising. Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva can be likened to Anu, Enki and Enlil and here on the back of Sesha, we see Vishnu has his monetary Venus wife, the goddess of fortune Lakshmi. Now India was infiltrated by the merchant bankers, but it survived the Abrahamic colonization of the upgraded theocracy and also retained the older prehistoric Tantric traditions and so is among the least corrupted traditions we have in the modern day. There is much here that is the same as other Qabbalistic symbolism and it is interesting that time and the universe are created when Sesha is uncoiled and cease to exist when he is coiled. Shesha is mostly depicted as a snake with a thousand heads, but sometimes he has 7 and sometimes 5, sometimes many more uncounted, so then he brings to mind Lotan or the beast of Revelations. In fact according to the Vishnu Puranas chapter 5, “Śesha bears the entire world, like a diadem, upon his head, and he is the foundation on which the seven Pátálas rest.” This diadem brings to mind the Lapis Exilis or the crown of Metatron and the seven Patalas are seven subterranean realms not unlike the seven palaces of Malkuth, which as I explained, the Golden Dawn associated this with the seven heads of the beast of Revelations. (Compare Philosophus initiation with Ophite Cosmology in Contra Celsum Book 6 Ch 25)

However as Sesha in a sense rebelled against his cruel brothers and fellow snake people because they were hurting people, when we remember that Peratae Gnostics associated archons with snakes we have here a clue that as Sabaoth is an archon who also turned on his race, he is not unlike Sesha in this respect. So then this Hindu tradition of Sesha more clearly corresponds to the original brain symbolism of the serpent and we see in other forms he is also the snake used to churn the ocean of milk with Mt Meru. “The ancient sage Garga, having propitiated Śesha, acquired from him a knowledge of the principles of astronomical science, of the planets, and of the good and evil denoted by the aspects of the heavens. The Earth, sustained upon the head of this sovereign serpent, supports in its turn the garland of the spheres, along with their inhabitants, men, demons, and gods.” Sesha is also known as Ananta which means “eternal” and so see 786 as he is the “eternal foundation of the world” and can thus be likened to Nidhogg the snake/dragon at the base of Yggdrasil.

While serpents have been demonized by Christianity and even sometimes Gnostics, both groups also have positive images of the snake and so we should not fear the nagas outright as they are often quite positive in Indian mythology and represent the kundalini serpent power. Another example of this would be the highly influential Buddhist teacher Nagarjuna who received the Buddhist wisdom literature or “Prajnaparamita Sutras” from nagas below the ocean, specifically the Śatasāhasrikā Sutras within this, while other myths have him learn Tantra from Vajrasattva in an iron tower in southern India. Then there is the myths of the magickal Chintamani stone, for the Buddhists it came inside a chest that descended from the sky, but for Hindus it came from the naga King at the bottom of the sea.

Now as we know that Vishnu can be likened to Enki or Ea we can read of a Hindu version of the flood myth which shares many details with the others. While there are a few versions, in the “Bhagavata Purana” we read of how after creating the universe Brahma felt the need to rest as did Yahweh, but that at this time the Vedas came forth from his mouth and were stolen by the demon of ignorance Madhu or Hayagrīva and cast in to the primeval ocean or the lowest realms in the cosmology. So just as the schethiya is symbolic of the Torah and is cast in to the abyss, so too were the Vedas and just as Ea or Enki warns the Sumerian Noah or Utnapishtim about a coming flood, so too does Vishnu warn Manu of a coming flood. (sometimes he is called the first human in Hindu mythology) This happens when Vishnu takes the form of his first avatar Matsya who starts out as a small fish, but is collected by Manu in to a jar to protect him, Matsya soon outgrows this jar however and continues to outgrow subsequent homes for himself until he grows in to a giant fish or leviathan in the ocean. Matsya warns Manu about a coming flood and tells him to make an ark or boat that can hold all the animals and seeds needed to repopulate the Earth. Matsya also tells Manu to take the seven Rishis or sages of Hindu mythology who are called “Saptarishi” and play a very similar role to the Apkallu in the Mesopotamian myths. When the flood occurs Matsya then pulls the boat to the Himalayas using either the serpent Vasuki or Sesa as a rope and he also gives Manu the Vedas and teachings and there at the mountains the boat finds ground and comes to a rest.

So then Hinduism has a mythological variant of the tablets of destiny as the Vedas, but we can also see that two tin tablets were found in a shipwreck off the coast of India and these have the mysterious Indus script on it which predates Sanskrit. These tablets relate to the myths of Soma, (as later written of in the Rig Veda) which one scholar at least has compared to the myths of tablets of destiny and the origin of metal working through Indian Alchemy. (See “The Bronze Age Writing System of Sarasvati Hieroglyphics as Evidenced by Two “Rosetta Stones” By S. Kalyanaraman) He thinks that Soma was electrum, the mix of sun and moon, or gold and silver which was first used to make coins. This is not to say there wasn't an entheogenic interpretation layered on to this, as with the Haoma of Mesopotamia or perhaps the story of Kvasir, given that shekel coins were measures of wheat, it would not be surprising if the bankers replaced the Soma entheogen with electrum worship. (especially for fertility rituals in exchange for the opium mix) Given that Enoch was set down in India and this is where the Kaaba is supposed to have come from, that Pythagoras and Dionysus went to India, as did Heracles with his two pillars, it surely must be an important place in all this. Not only does Masonry claim to be in the lineage of Pythagoras, but also “Dionysiac Architects” and as various ancients thought “Jews” were originally from India and worshipped Dionysus, even if parts of this are mythical, the myths were created for a reason. So while there is not a lot to go on, this scholar presents an interpretation of the tablets of destiny which would make a lot of sense given the clear influence of Indian philosophy on the INDO-European traditions and the Pagan Tantra.

Perhaps the most deeply rooted influence comes from an Indian school of thought called Vastu, or Vaastu (AKA Vastu Shastra) which is basically like a benign Hindu Freemasonry mixed with Feng Shui, but it also details Hindu atomic theory. In light of everything else I have gone in to, I believe it could even be the original form of this philosophy, though it is hard to say if Egypt or Sumeria had something like it first, some even say the Indus valley cities are built according to it's principles. As it was the height of their technology, the first master Masons were in the stone age and of a very different character to those today. Vastu is the spiritual understanding behind Hindu architecture and especially their temples and while there are few English translations available, what is available is highly relevant to this tradition of the universal fractal tower.

We can see that Vastu is associated with magickal islands, one source which also had atomic theories (See "Fabric of the Universe" By Jessie J. Mercay) goes so far as to say Vastu's founder is from Lemuria, which was an island south of India. This is especially relevant given other legends of Adam going to Ceylon after the fall, there on a mountain he is said to have left a footprint. These theories are rooted in the mythologies of the Tamil people and these are certainly relevant and quite possibly relate to the earlier Indus valley civilization, but what is most pertinent is that Ceylon was ruled by Ravanna, the demon king in the Ramayana. Ravanna was the son of Kaikesi, who was herself a Daitya, or Hindu demon/giant that was spawned by one of the 7 Saptarishi named Kashyapa (he is also the father of the nagas and other beings) and one of his wives Diti. Ravanna was a reincarnation, one of two twin gatekeepers for Vishnu named Jaya and Vijaya who were punished by being forced to reincarnate 3 times in demonic families. These two were punished for "seeing it in duality" (the realm of the godhead) and because they wouldn't allow either monks or Lakshmi to pass through the gate, as I will try to show given the limits of space, they are the Hindu versions of Azza and Azael.

Ravanna was king of Lanka (AKA Ceylon AKA Sri Lanka) and it's mythical capital Lankapuri, he has a pretty complex character and also had a giant brother named Kumbhakarna, who was the reincarnation of Vijaya, but also a half brother Kubera. Kubera seems almost like a caricature of Yahweh, as he was thought of as both a god of riches and also at various times a demon and was sometimes depicted riding a goat with a club and a money pot. Some say Kubera designed Lanka, other credit Viswakarma, a benevolent Hindu demiurge akin to Brahma who is the god of craftsmen and architects and master of the 64 mechanical arts. Viswakarma is also at times credited with inventing Vastu, but whoever designed Lanka, it was done so according to Vastu along with another mythical city, Dwarka. Kubera ruled as king before being overthrown by Ravanna, (perhaps like Nimrod and Abraham?) he is associated with a 3X3 magick square called the Kubera kolam that adds to 72 in all directions, thus it totalled to 216. (add 19 to each number on the Saturn square) Lankapuri was also said to have had a prominent palace tower, built on three mountains, it's description does contain some relatively rare numbers compared to other traditions, but is also very familiar in many ways. The literature regarding Vastu, the Ramayana, Viswakarma, vimanas and Kubera is so vast that I cannot do it justice here, but Vastu is definitely the richest living and publicly available tradition on ancient Masonry and flying chariots and so an important root of Merkabah and Qabbalah.

Viswakarma is also known as Tvastar, a god who is the guardian of Soma and through his family shows himself to be central in all this. He is the father of Saranyū, AKA Saranyu who some scholars compare to Helen of Troy, she married Vivasvat and by him is the mother of the twins Yama and Yami, who are sometimes said to be the first man and woman, but she is also mother to the Ashvin twins whom I and scholars have already pointed out as being like the Dioscuri. This is especially compelling given that some scholars point out similarities between the Ramayana and Homer's Iliad! (Though here Rama and Sita have twins) Tvastar is also found in a Mitanni treaty as Tūaiāšaratha, meaning "whose chariot is vehement" and this relates to their king Tushratta, whom we will remember was allied with Akhenaten and so seems to have found his way in to Judaism. He has been identified as a Mitanni god along with Mitra, Varuna and Indra, who are all found in Vastu, but Viswakarma/Tvastar was also the creator of vimanas, magickal floating chariots or cities, often 7 stories high like the Pushpaka vimana which came in to the possession of Kubera and was later stolen by Ravanna.

In the Vishnu Purana (Book 1 Ch 15) we can also read of Prahlāda who eventually became the king of the Daityas after their king tried to kill him, so we read, "The flames that were lighted by the king of the Daityas consumed not him"... "and all the Earth trembled when, bound with bonds, he moved amidst the waters of the ocean." ... "the serpents sent to destroy him breathed their venomous flames upon him in vain. Overwhelmed with rocks, he yet remained unhurt” ... “Hurlled from on high by the king of the Daityas, residing in Swerga, Earth received him unharmed. The wind sent into his body to wither him up was itself annihilated by him.” In some stories he was saved by Narasimha who manifested from an underground pillar called "Prahāda khamba" and both he and Prahāda are regarded as positive figures.

As with Hindu mythology generally, there is too much that is relevant in both the Vishnu Purana and the Bhagavata Purana to explain it all here, but Kashyapa and Diti also have two Daitya twins, one named Hiranyakas'ipu which means “the one feeding on gold” the other was named Hiranyāksha “the one with a mind for gold.” (Kashyapa through another wife Aditi is sometimes the father of Tvastar) Now these twins were the first incarnations of Jaya and Vijaya, while Ravanna and Kumbhakarna were the second, and the third incarnations were Shishupala and Dantavakra as in the Mahabharata, another very important myth and one where the city of Dwarka is very important. I will not go very far in to these last two, but the epic poem “Shishupala Vadha” explains the death of Shishupala, while the word play shows it to be a kind of Hindu Qabbalistic masterpiece. For example, in the 27th stanza palindromes are used that can create an 8X8 square through the letters, while the 120th stanza has lines that have traditionally been arranged as a 6 spoked wheel called the cakra-vṛtta or cakrabandha.

What concerns us here however is Hiranyakas'ipu and Hiranyāksha, so in the Bhagavata Purana (Canto 3 Ch 17 titled “Victory of Hiranyāksha over All the Directions of the Universe”) we read, “When they were born, many most frightening, inauspicious signs could be seen in heaven, on Earth and in the sky. The mountains and the Earth shook with earthquakes and there seemed to be fire coming from all directions with meteors falling, thunderbolts, comets and inauspicious constellations. Sharp winds blew that constantly howled and armies of cyclones with dust-clouds for their ensigns uprooted the greatest trees.” It goes on like this giving probably the most detailed description of the effects of the meteorites, but it says of the twins they had “uncommon bodies that were like steel with the size of mountains” and other descriptions which imply they were themselves meteorites. Hiranyāksha dove deep in to the ocean while roaring like an elephant and there he instigated a fight with Varuna god of the ocean and the law, (In Vastu, Varuna is Saturn and goes in the west) who at times is an asura, at other times a deva. Canto 3 Ch 11 of the Bhagavata Purana details the Hindu concept of time from an “atom” as with the Yugas and given that Vastu also gives various theories relating to the atom, this all fits rather perfectly with my interpretation of the cube of space! (Canto 3 and 8 are the most relevant I read, but there is much more in these texts and so see the Bhagavata Purana Canto 10 Ch 56-57 for a story of the Syamantaka gem, a gem which seems to be a comet and clearly has astronomical meaning and shares many motifs with other myths I go in to in this chapter.)

So then these myths like the Ramayana take place in the general area which is also said to produce Vastu philosophy, a philosophy which details how sound and light are involved in the process of the unmanifest divine force, (Vastu) represented by an 8X8 square grid (Manduka mandala) becoming materialized or manifested in time/space, (Vaastu) which they represent as a square grid that is 9X9. (Parusha Mandala) These grids are in fact understood as cubes made up of smaller cubes just like the cube of space, though in Vastu this is explained as squares grids which grow through the whirling wheel motion of a swastika. (again see “Fabric of the Universe”) These wheels would grow through something like centrifugal force in to larger squares until eventually, it manifests physically as say a spinning galaxy or universe. (Again, “The eighth reveals the ninth”) This starts with a central point (Bindu) which then gets 4 more squares around it making a 2X2 grid, this then expands through spinning adding 12 squares to make the 4X4 square, then it adds 20 squares to make the 6X6 square, then adding 28 squares it makes an 8X8 grid, which then manifests physically as the 9X9. Here you will notice the expansions go up in increments of 8 and if you were so inclined the odd numbered squares could build up in a similar way, 1,3,5,7,9 all expanding by 8 in the sequence 8, 16, 24, 32.

Among other mandalas, Vastu works with the “Navagraha” or nine primary variables of Indian astrology, these are 7 planets + Rahu and Ketu the northern and southern nodes of the moon known in the west and in geomancy as Caput and Cauda Draconis and in Vastu they are often arranged in a 3X3 grid, in a pattern that is something like the sephiroth Saturn kamea I made. (Vivasvat is associated with the sun here, though in Vastu this is often Indra in the east) This grid then acts as the floor plan of temples with the variables in various configurations to generate specific astrological energies needed for specific causes, for example, overcoming negative influences in your natal chart. (In one tradition there are 32 main mandalas, including some of the more familiar grid squares which are 1-10 units in diameter) These variables also have a number of natural magick correspondences much like those found in Qabalah, with Jupiter corresponding to the brain and blue sapphire corresponding to Saturn. Each variable also has it's own 3X3 magick square and all of them have significant numbers like 72 and 108, (Kubera is associated with Mercury in the north, though sometimes this is listed as Soma, as for magick squares, he has another square which sums to 72, but this is distinct from the Kubera kolam, which as I said sums to 216.) but the other one which sticks out the most is the Ketu square, which has a sum of 117, meaning it matches the sum of the 24 Fibonacci numbers. (Ketu is also associated with the fish avatar Matsya) As each variable has a number from 1-9, I found that these nine 3X3 squares can be stuck together using the Vastu version of the Sun square as the basis. In Vastu the Sun square is composed of the numbers 1-9 like the Saturn square in the west, so when each variable in the Vastu system is placed in the same orientation as the Vastu Sun square, you can plug in the nine 3X3 magick squares to creates a 9X9 magick square, which you will find adds to 81 in any direction and totals to 729 or 9^3 . Vastu is also associated with the Rig Vedas, Soma and Indian astrology and so is among the most promising lines of research.

So in this we can see a number of very similar philosophical ideas as in Kabbalah, which actually describes the process of creation as “whirlings” of the sephiroth. A ubiquitous symbol of the Sun also known as a “Sun wheel,” the swastika is associated with 17 in Qabalah as it can be formed from the 12 Zodiac signs, plus the four elemental signs, plus the centre which = 17. In the Golden Dawn, swastika zodiac symbolism is overlaid on the Mars kamea and is presented in their “Zelator” initiation ceremonies. This number 17 is central to the work of the famous alchemist Jabir Ibn Hayyan, especially his books “Ahjar” and “Books of Balances” where he creates a system of Arabic Qabalah and gematria in which 17 is used to calculate the elemental composition of all things with an Arabic name. This is done by the numbers 1:3:5:8 which sum to 17 as found on the square of Saturn, the remaining numbers on the square sum to 28 for the Arabic letters. On a vase made by Exekias we can see the Trojan war heroes Ajax and Achilles playing a dice game and on their clothes are the 8 pointed Sun star symbol and swastika sun wheels. (Carl Sagan and others have even argued the swastika is symbolic of a comet's tail) As the kameas correspond to the sephiroth, we can see them as wheels stacked on one another, in a configuration not unlike something Lull might have made, or the Mt Meru chakra system. This is also comparable to kameas as the tower of Babel or the subterranean chambers of Enoch and this is because they are slightly different models of the same metaphysical philosophy and reality. This works so that it starts in Kether, which is sometimes called “first whirlings” and is also associated with the swastika, it is the bindu point and then the whirlings go down the tree to the square of 9X9, which is the last kamea and from there the energies manifest physically in Malkuth.

Given the similarities between Vastu and the cube of space and Freemasonry, we can see here that there were very specific common elements to the sacred architecture of the ancient world. Like Vastu, we can also see that in China, cities, temples, military defences and agriculture would at times all be structured according to magick squares, just as when I quoted the Freemason Frank Higgins. As the throne of Osiris was the basis of temple architecture, it too seems to match quite well with Vastu philosophy and it has it's own fractal accretion of time/space using a similar mathematical “gnomon,” though I do not claim to know much about this. As with Vastu, the first expansion from a square of four sub squares would be the square of Jupiter, which itself can create the double cube altar as in ceremonial magick or the altar of incense, this is through its 16 smaller squares forming two 8 unit cubes and has something to do with the famous “Delian Problem” which is itself related to the riddle of squaring a circle. This is named for the island of Delos, where the inhabitants received an oracle from Delphi telling them to double the volume of Apollo's cube altar while maintaining its shape, this confused them as to the best way to do this, as using regular geometry it is actually impossible. (The story is recounted by Plato) However symbolically it does make sense as a 4d cube, or the double cube altar and as we will see, Delos is certainly an important place for Pagan theology.

By sticking swastikas on all the magick squares and not just the Mars kamea, I found that they show numerical relationships in the square, so that if you add together the numbers from two opposite points they equal +1 the number of numbers in the square. So for example the Mars kamea has 25 numbers on it, if you add the number in the top right corner to the bottom left corner number, you get 26, if you add the number in the second from the right on the top row, to the number on the second from the left on the bottom you get 26 as well. (This combines the opposite zodiac signs when they are overlaid on to the square) This works all along the perimeter of all the squares moving towards the centre row and column, which act like arms of a swastika that go to the centre of the square and these numbers also can be added to their opposite to give 26. Hence Mars is 26 or YHVH or 52 as Yod Heh Vav Heh and also the 216 name as Geburah and the tower card or Peh! This means that Saturn produces a "swastika number" of 10, the moon is 82 and if we remember these are the top and bottom kameas, we can subtract the top from the bottom to form 72. ($81-9=72$ as well) As 50 is the swastika number of Venus, this fits better with the 50 gates and all the other 50 symbolism, but we will also remember that if Venus and Mars are opposites on the sephiroth Saturn square, than $2 \times 25 = 50$. Some of these "swastika numbers" are more important than others, but they are worth looking up and while the Sun has exceptions in places along the perimeter, 37 certainly is an important number. (Remember to multiply these swastika numbers by 6 for the faces of a cube, so that for example $37 \times 6 = 222$)

I will also note that the Greek letter Gamma refers to the element of Earth and Hades and so the cube and in Hebrew is Gimel, that in his book "Fundamental Symbols," Rene Guenon tells us, "In fact, four gammas joined together at right angles form the swastika symbol, as is also the letter G, of the Pole Star which is itself the symbol, and for the operative Mason, the actual throne of the hidden central Sun of the Universe, Yah." The G here refers to the primary symbol of Freemasonry and stands for geometry, and we will also remember Yah is the god name of Chokmah, which also corresponds to the zodiac as a whole and is the name which the Sepher Yetzirah uses to refer to "god" as he sealed the cube of space. The 7 Saptarishi sages of India are further symbolized by the great bear constellation or big dipper, which as it turns out, makes a swastika as it cycles around the pole. Plutarch associates Typhon/Set with the great bear and so this could link them to a theocratic interpretations of the swastika. According to the testament of Solomon, Asmodeus is a demon of the great bear, where as Sepher Ha-Razim references Job 9:9 and says that Noah learned from Raziel "the paths of the great bear, Orion and the Pleiades." Zoroastrians also saw the 7 stars of the great bear as exerting influence on Earth in 7 realms and it plays a role in their cosmology. Adrasteia raised Zeus on Crete and in these myths became the great bear constellation and so given its relation to the north star, is certainly important in this. Another set of myths worth investigating further is the big dipper as the ox cart of the constellation Bootes, or Philomelus son of Demeter and twin brother of Plutus, who is himself not unlike Pluto as a god of wealth.

From Vastu we learn of one version of the myth of Parusha, (also spelled Purusha) that he was the first man or as he was a giant he is like Adam Kadmon/Macroprospus, so fearing he would eat everything Brahma and the Astha Dikapalakas or the guardians of the 8 directions pushed this giant man to the Earth. (An explanation of Parusha can be found in various texts apart from Vastu such as the Bhagavata Purana and also the Rig Vedas and in some cases he is like Vishwakarma/Tvostar.) In total there were 45 deities holding down his body and this became depicted as the 9X9 "Vastu Parusha Yantra" or mandala which depicts a human smooshed into a 9X9 grid and provides the primary ground plan for Vastu. His head is in the North East, corresponding to Ketu and Jupiter, but you should look this up online as this mandala/yantra also shows how various gods are divided on the moon kamea and this shows much more numerical patterns than I can explain here. For example, the centre 9 numbers form a square symbolizing Brahma and sum to 369, on each side of this centre square is a god represented by 6 numbers, on the right side is the deity Aryama who sums to 294. I remembered $294=49 \times 6$, so then I realized each of these 4 god's sums can further be divided by 6 to provide meaningful gematria. The sum of these four gods and their 24 numbers is 984 and when divided by 6 is 164, which is a most auspicious number relating to the stone/cube and is the gematria of "the pillars." Keeping in mind how the swastika number is generated, we can see this is no coincidence and in the four corners of the moon kamea are four squares/numbers, each number representing a god. On the two inner facing sides of these squares are two gods, each with 2 numbers and when we add two opposite gods from across the kamea as per the swastika numbers, we also get 164, or 2×82 . (I should also point out that as Jupiter takes roughly 12 Earth years for one orbit, that Saturn takes 30 Earth years for one of it's orbits, then the first common multiple is 60. This creates a cycle of 60 years which figured in various culture's philosophies such as Indian astrology and Vastu, but also Neoplatonism as through Olympiodorus and so hints at Metatron's Fibonacci cube. Zoroastrians too placed special importance on conjunctions between Jupiter and Saturn.)

I have already mentioned how the Sri Yantra can be made from the odd kameas, but the difference between odd and even becomes more apparent when we overlay the swastikas, as the even kameas require arms with a width of two. You will also notice that on the even kameas the first number "1" is in the top right corner and the last and highest number is in the bottom left corner, thus the swastika shows the symmetry of the square and some of the patterns of numbers. On the odd kameas the highest number is just above the centre number and the lowest number "1" is just below the centre number and so here there is a different kind of symmetry. If you look at the kameas you will find that odd squares have the sum of their rows and also their kamea's mystic number as multiples of half the swastika number and also have half the swastika number as the centre number. Even squares have the sum of their rows and their mystic numbers as multiples of the swastika number and their centres are double the swastika number.

Now this Parusha myth is especially important as his breath was said to be the wind god Vayu, (Rig Veda 10.90.) who in the Bhagavata Purana creates the island of Lanka when he blows off the top of Mt Meru with his winds. At first he fails because the bird Garuda covers Meru with his wings, but after Garuda leaves he is successful, while other sources say he did this because of a feud with Sesa. Vayu is also known as Marut or Maruti which is also a class of wind deities, there being 49 according to the Ramayana. These Marut beings are said to have driven chariots and either Vayu or they are said to have deformed the 100 daughters of King Kusanabha when they rejected their sexual advances. Vayu has parallels to the Amorite god which the neighboring Sumerians called Martu and Akkadians called Amurru, AKA Ilu Amarru, with Amorites being seen as giants in the Old Testament and who just so happen to be ruled by King Og! One of the most fascinating texts I know of which speaks of Purusha and Vayu is the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad, but this marvelous book has many deep philosophical insights. In Chapter 3 and 4 it even intimates something like the cube of space when it speaks of the 6 directions, it gives correspondences to 5 of these directions in chapter 3, but does include the below direction for 6 streams of prana in chapter 4, not to mention it gives a philosophical interpretation, though you should read the whole book. There is also an explanation of Prajapati, who in other texts is sometimes identified with Vishwakarma, though here he is identified with "death" and there is a myth given with an egg creating the god and this brings to mind the Orphic mythology of Phanes, but also parts of Genesis and the Sepher Yetzirah, with the god on the waters and resting after creating the Earth and so on. It is also true that the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad is one of the oldest Upanishads and was written around the same time as the Torah and so it likely to be very important in all this and could definitely shed light on the underlying philosophy of why and how Yah created the cube reality.

While there is no "tower of babel" in Islam, in the Quran there is a story of the Pharaoh who wishes to build a tower to heaven in order to confront the god of Moses. (Suras 28:36 and 40:36-37)

Nimrod does turn up in some Arab and Persian legends and it is said that after failing with the tower, (sometimes before he built it) he hitched some eagles to a chest or ark or palanquin which in Iran was often depicted as a cube and rose in to the sky, but eventually fell to the ground. Furthermore in the works of various theologians we can see there is at least some traditions of Allah confusing the languages and one even says 72 specifically. In Sura 2:102 there is a reference to “Babil” in the story of Harut and Marut, who are variously thought of as angels sent by Allah to teach humanity magick as a test of faith, or in some traditions these angels are thought of as the magicians of the Pharaoh who engaged in a magickal dual with Moses, turning their staves in to snakes. The connection between these angels and Maruti should be obvious enough, there are Solomonic grimoires which purport to teach their magick and the Quran says that Harut and Marut were there at the time of Solomon. The 14th century scholar Ibn Kathir in his book “Stories of the Quran” says that during this time, all kinds of Djinn and sinful behaviour spread across the land. Then eventually Allah restored Solomon and he took the teachings given by the angels and buried them under his throne, which after he died was quickly dug up by the men and Djinn and the teachings were taken as a religion. Just as in the Anzu myth or the coronation stones, the throne is where the tablets of destiny are kept. This story of these two angels fits the Midrash of Shemhazai and ‘Azael very well and given the many links between the Watchers and the Goetic demons, this is shown to be the case in that there are further stories of Harut and Marut trying to seduce a woman named ”Anahid.” This woman has already been noted by scholars to be the same as Istahar/Naamah and she too was moved into the heavens, but in this case she became the planet Venus and her hair is said to smell of amber and musk. While I still believe the Sumerian Namma goddess to be the oldest form, Anahid clearly comes from the name of the goddess Anahita and this idea is backed up by mainstream scholars.

So then we can see that while the time lines are confused, given the international aspects of the various mythological strands regarding the magick of Solomon and the tower, that the tablets of Moses fit very well as a syncretic symbol of the tablets of destiny, as spoken of in various cultures. As at Harran the Sabians and Sufis preserved the ancient wisdom of Sophia in the tarot, so while not technically “Pagan,” Islamic magick has plenty of keys to this, but unfortunately most are not translated. In the Muslim tradition the throne of Allah is called the al-Arsh al- Muhit, it is quite important to Islam and is very comparable to the Jewish throne of “god.” This throne is depicted as being surrounded by the 28 Arabic letters in eight groupings according to their numerical values, (like Aiq Bakir) with each group spelling the name of an angel who holds up the throne at the edge of the universe. It is far too much to go in to here but for more information see especially the mystical Muslim text “Mother of Books” for a Muslim explanation of the throne, letters, Azazel as the demiurge and how these relate to the brain as the “white sea.” This text is a great example of Islamic Gnosticism and there is a Phoenix too and you can gain a lot of philosophical context for Arabic magick from it. (for many kernals, see also the first few chapters of the book, “Folk-lore of the Holy Land, Moslem, Christian and Jewish, by J. E. Hanauer.”) As Azazel is generally synonymous with Satan or Iblis in Islam, the angel who refused to bow to Adam, we can see from a Gnostic perspective that he and the Watchers are the rogue egregores of the divine oneness, the ones who managed to trick the divinity in to the worldly prison of ignorance. (Grigori, or “Watchers” has the same Greek root as “egregore”)

Now there is so much in Zoroastrian texts that show it's similarities to Judaism and these myths and how they relate to India that as with other sources, I will also have to limit myself here to simply scratching the surface. The Zoroastrian text “Bundahishn” details their cosmology and given how influential this religion is, this text gives us many clues. There is too much even in the “Bundahishn” and “Greater Bundahishn“ alone to explain it all here but the Zoroastrian cosmology divided the sky in to a 3X3 square called the Zaych-i Gehan (See Ch 2 and 5) and here we see that Caput Draconis is coupled with Gemini, while Cauda is matched with Sagittarius. This is especially relevant given that Zoroastrians as in the Bundahishn worked with the 28 lunar mansions, so that in this text the first mansion is named “Asvini” as in the Ashvin twins, (In Hindu astrology this is linked to Cauda Draconis) where as other lists started with the mansion Krittika which is in the pleiades.

In Hindu myths the pleiades were the wives of the 7 Saptarishi sages who were divorced and put there after the goddess Svaha impersonated 6 of them, she mated with Agni to give birth to Skanda who is the general of the devas (including the Maruts) and has 6 heads, he was raised by the divorced wives and hence he was also called Kartikeya. Svaha's body is said to represent the 4 Vedas, where as her 6 limbs are the vedangas or skills used by interpreters of the Vedas, but in the text "Harivamsa" we are given an alternative anatomy. This text describes how contemplation of "Ohm" created the goddess Gayatri, who represented a mantra of the same name which was 24 syllables long, Gayatri mated with Brahma to give birth to Purusha, who's body had four parts that came to form the Vedas.

Getting in to more depth as to the importance of Zoroastrianism we can see that in other places in Bundahishn, their form of Satan, called Ahriman has a wife named Jeh, who's name is often translated as "whore" and she urges him to make war on the good god Ahura Mazda and so together they have a child. (Jeh turns up in Manichaean texts as well) So we read of their offspring, "Afterwards, the evil spirit, with the confederate demons, went towards the luminaries, and he saw the sky; and he led them up, fraught with malicious intentions. He stood upon one-third of the inside of the sky, and he sprang, like a snake, out of the sky down to the Earth. In the month Frawardin and the day Ohrmazd he rushed in at noon, and thereby the sky was as shattered and frightened by him, as a sheep by a wolf. He came on to the water which was arranged below the Earth, and then the middle of this Earth was pierced and entered by him." Now this child is variously described as a snake or lizard and so brings to mind Chnoubis, or the dragon of Revelations, especially since the dragon in Revelations takes down a third of the stars, while it is easy enough to see that Jeh is like Lilith or Naamah, or even the whore of Babylon. Given that the gods of so many religions are the planets, it is not hard to imagine that a shooting star or meteorite could be symbolized as a snake or dragon or even a magickal chariot and while there are other reasons for this symbolism, there is always more than one way to interpret these things.

So after a war in heaven demons attack Gavaevodata the heavenly bull, Ahriman even kills him but before this his seed is saved and this is the source of beneficent animal life on Earth. This last part is especially relevant for interpreting Mithraism as Mithras was said to sacrifice the heavenly bull, a bull which plenty of scholars believe to be Taurus and the blood of which is said to replenish life on Earth. Living bulls were sacrificed in Mithraism and the blood was used in eucharistic ceremonies, while others speak of the blood being used to baptize adherents in a bit below, I should also point out the importance of blood in the sacrifices offered to Yahweh in the temple as on Yom Kippur.

In chapter 30 of Bundahishn we learn of the Zoroastrian apocalypse, that as the demon "Gochihr falls in the celestial sphere from a moon-beam on to the Earth, the distress of the Earth becomes such-like as that of a sheep when a wolf falls upon it. Afterwards, the fire and halo melt the metal of Shahrewar, in the hills and mountains, and it remains on this Earth like a river. Then all men will pass into that melted metal and will become pure; when one is righteous, then it seems to him just as though he walks continually in warm milk; but when wicked, then it seems to him in such manner as though, in the world, he walks continually in melted metal." So given that some modern Zoroastrians have already interpreted this Gochihr demon as a comet coming, then it is pretty safe to say that the demon child of Jeh and Ahriman is one as well. In Chapter 28 we are also given a list of 32 demons and their effects and given Zoroastrianism's tendency to symmetry, it would not be unlikely that 32 angel figures oppose them, but at any rate at the end Gochihr is mentioned along with Mushpar and they are said to have tails which bring to mind comets.

Three figures from Zoroastrianism are particularly relevant to us as they can each been related to Nimrod, the first is King Jamshid who was himself an important king and is somewhat like a Nephilim king as he is said to have created the caste system, to have commanded demons, but also that he taught people how to make weapons and armour and other things for civilization. While Vishnu is like Yam in the Ugartic texts as a god of the sea, there is also the Hindu judge and god of the dead

Yama, who I brought up before as the son of Tvastar, his name means “twin” as he is the twin of the goddess Yami, he also rides a bull where as under the name “Kala” he is time and fate. (In Vastu Yama is in the south as Mars) In Zoroastrianism Jamshid is also known as Yima and has been linked by others to Yama, so then this is very comparable to the Hindu tradition, but we can see that Jamshid commanded these demons by the power of Ahura Mazda and was said to be beloved and just, that during his rule the demons were the slaves of humanity. This suggests Jamshid had the book of Raziel, or is much like the positive view of Nimrod before his rebellion, but we know for certain this king also had a special throne that could fly by the power of these demons.

We can also read how Ahriman wanted to overthrow Jamshid and so corrupted our second suspect, Zakhāk who was a prince in another land, so that Zakhāk killed his father by putting him in to a pit. Zakhāk, AKA Aži Dahāka was identified as Nimrod by historian Hisham B. Muhammad and while he is the less likely of the two, his story as in the epic myth/history of Iranian kings/Mesopotamian theocrats known as the “Shahnameh” is certainly fascinating. Zakhāk became king and thanks to Ahriman the first meat eater, Zakhāk was kissed once on each shoulder by Ahriman and from these places a snake head grew and the king was forced to feed them brains. (remember the mosquito brain parasite of Nimrod) So then the demon king would sacrifice people to eat their brains until he was overthrown in Jerusalem by the blacksmith Kaveh, a man who was angry because his sons had their brains eaten. The names Harut and Marut are ultimately Iranian and there are further legends in which they are imprisoned in a well in Babylon, others say they were imprisoned in a well inside a volcano called Mt Damāvand and this is the same as how Zakhāk ultimately ended up and in both cases they will stay till the end of the world. (See <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/harut-and-marut>) In some cases they were hung above the water and it was always just out of reach and so this is like the myth of Tantalus, who was imprisoned in Tartarus in a similar way as he stole ambrosia from the gods in Olympus to bring back to the human world. Tantalus had important descendants and was married to Dione, the name of multiple figures with relevant myths, but she was married to Chronos in Sanchuniathon and was given Byblos. As both Zakhāk and Jamshid show similarities to Nimrod, we might wonder if Zakhāk was Abraham as he was based in Jerusalem, so that he overthrew Jamshid as benevolent version of Nimrod and that this story became inverted propaganda in the Torah.

However Jamshid more closely parallels Noah and in the Vendidad text of the Zend Avesta under the name Yima he builds an underground bunker called a “vara” to protect some people and various types of plants and animals from a winter that kills everyone else. Thus here we can see a stronger symbolic link between the chambers of Enoch and the ark of Noah, but this vara is also said to be “long as a riding-ground on every side of the square” so that it is a square enclosure for humans, while there is another square vara of the same size for the flocks of animals. While it is hard to assign a kamea here, there is also a lot of 3, 6, and 9 symbolism in this, and the vara also had internal lighting and a river which brings to mind the New Jerusalem, but it is also like Noah's ark in that there are Jewish legends of a stone which gave light inside the boat for Noah and his family. This is seen in Genesis 6:16 as the “tzohar” which is generally translated as “window” but according to Genesis Rabbah 31:11 and the Talmud, (Sanhedrin 108b) this was in fact a stone which shone light, making the word not unlike Zohar as splendour. Also in the Talmud we learn that Abraham had a miraculous stone that could heal people and this has been interpreted as being the same stone, some say Abraham hung it from “the wheel of the sun” (Baba Batra 16b) while yet others say this is the same stone as the book of Adam given by Raziel. So then, there are plenty of parallels to Zoroastrianism, but the law of Ahura Mazda was brought to the vara by the bird Karshiya which suggests the stone/law in the abyss.

The third candidate is Kay Kāvus who in various traditions is said to have had the help of demons to found cities and build palaces or towers, he built a tower in Babel or Babylon composed of various metals and types of stone and some say he made 7 temples in Babylon each of a different material. Kay Kāvus also had the help of “Solaymān” in controlling the demons who's name and character obviously reminds us of Solomon, though again this would be anachronistic. Kay Kāvus also attempts a war on heaven and is obsessed with going up there, he also appears in the Shahnameh and he is said to ride a throne in to the air with the help of four eagles, but they fail to bring him all the way to heaven and he falls, yet survives. Kay Kāvus is often thought of as a good king who was corrupted by Ahriman or Satan, in another story he also invaded the area of Mazanderan but it's king called upon demons to bring down stones from the sky and even turned himself in to a stone! Div-e Safid is the chief of these demons and is said to be very big, he could be a comet as he blinds Kay Kāvus and his men, but the hero Rostam undergoes seven tasks and eventually saves him and restores their sight.

In some legends Kay Kāvus is angered when the “khvarenah” is stolen from him which is like a more ambiguous version of the tablets of destiny, conferring kingship and glory and splendour etc and is related to notions of fortune, but in other places this mysterious object is also linked to Haoma. For the Sassanids the khvarenah was depicted as a ring or a bird in a crown with a pearl in it's mouth, but it has also been identified with the Fravahar symbol of Zoroastrianism, that is the winged sun disk which turns up in so many theocratic traditions. This bird is “Simurgh” AKA Saēna the Zoroastrian Phoenix/eagle who sits in the world tree Gaokerena, this is also the tree of Haoma or Hōm which is rooted out in the primordial ocean Vourukasha. (This bird is more important than I can explain here, but see also the story of the albino Zal in the Shahnameh who brings to mind Noah as an Albino) This suggests to me a similar switcheroo between meteorites and Haoma as I hinted at with Kvasir and so at any rate, Kay Kāvus is very important figure. Now one final note of interest was that Jamshid, along with other Persian kings such as King Khosrow were said to have had a special cup or grail which in some legends held an ambrosia like drink that conferred immortality and this cup was said to have aided the Persian kings in military conquests. As with the holy grail this suggests the cup was another symbol for the tablets or at least meteorites, but here this cup was used in divination and was said to reflect the 7 heavens and is sometimes translated as being a “crystal globe” as it was used for skrying.

As we know the schethiya is the Shekinah, we know it is the goddess Asherah and is also the night's sky in the Zohar, we can thus get a new context for this in the book on the ancient philosopher “The life of Apollonius of Tyana” by Flavius Philostratus. Here we read of the same ritual wheels like the Strophalos of Hekate when Apollonius went to Babylon and studied with the Zoroastrian Magi. There he went to a domed temple, the roof of which was blue like “sapphire” or lapis lazuli and that from it hung four winged wheels or “Iygges” or “Iunx” and that these were the “tongues of the gods” and the goddess of fate Adrasteia in particular. The Iygges are the same as “Iynges” of the Chaldean Oracles, a text often attributed to the founder of the Magi religion Zoroaster, which scholars say is an important precursor to Kabbalah and Gnosticism in which Hekate plays a role similar to Sophia. As Hekate is an archon we might wonder if instead of Gnostics being influenced, these oracles belong to the banking cult as with the Sibylline oracles, but then Hekate goes back to prehistoric times and was in the Eleusinian mysteries, so she too was co-opted. At any rate there is much in common in terms of metaphysical ideas and I see no sign of anything really corrupt in the teachings and as I personally love Hekate, I think it is well worth studying as a form of Pagan Tantra.

The book “Hekate Soteira” by Sarah Iles Johnston is a great scholarly work on the Chaldean form of the goddess, she also goes into the Iunx or Iynges and writes of many things relevant to this chapter. For example she theorizes the various sounds produced from the Iynges had magickal meaning corresponding to specific notes to denote the planets and the “music of the spheres” spoken of by Pythagoras. This seems highly likely to me as well, but I would add much the language about the Iynges with their “whirling” is very comparable to the sephiroth, or the wheels of the Merkabah. According to Proclus and others, the Iynges were thought of as “names” or “symbola” which provide the means of creating a magickal sympathy and also map the soul and the general Chaldean metaphysics which states that words or ideas create the physical universe, these ideas being most easily related to the planets. These Chaldean oracles were compared to Plato's philosophy by various philosophers like Proclus, but this concept of Iynges as magickal names is not only like Platonic ideals, but also very close to the idea of the sephiroth, or Jungian archetypes. I believe these names or archetypes act as variables in the universal fractal formula, which itself is the means of the divine achieving self awareness, they are the prime roots of the brain circuit network of associations. When we remember that the word “sephiroth” is etymologically derived from sapphire we get another clue to this from Psellus (PG 122 1133 a) in a description of the Iynges of Hekate similar to her wheel, “Hekate's top is a golden ball, formed around a sapphire, whirled around by means of a rawhide thong, with characters all over it.” The Iynges could also be “triangular or some other shape” and Johnston speaks of a cup with what appears to be square Iynges painted on it, so to me it is not totally unreasonable to think the kameas may have been symbolized in some versions of the Iynges, or strung together as something like a chakra system. Johnston also explains the Iynges were used ritually to evoke daemons thought of as “ferryman” because they could bring the ideas or messages of the divine to the material world, (as for divination) but they also served to bring the prayers of the Theurgists or magicians back to the divine immaterial realm.

Now as the Torah is symbolized by the sapphire, given all of its astrological symbolism, in various ways it is most likely a map of the stars which would be fitting as it is supposed to be the blue print for all creation. This would not be hard to do as the Hebrew letters represent astrological variables, but we can also see from Cornelius Agrippa other Occult alphabets like the “celestial alphabet” or “malichim” which have letters that look like stars connected by lines. Certainly if you could devise a method of determining letters for a certain portion of the sky, perhaps utilizing gematria and magick squares, even if it was a string of nonsense or words without vowels or spaces such as with Hebrew, then any story that could be imposed on it would according to the doctrine of signatures, be a heavenly or divine story fitting the universal fractal. (The same is true if the letters were derived from formations on meteorites) Apollonius also claimed to be a “true Pythagorean” and to have access to a wheel or sphere used by Pythagoras for divination and Robert Fludd even published what he believed to be a picture of the wheel in 1619. So then while Raymond Lull is often given the credit for such a wheel and no doubt he was important in preserving and developing it further into information science, it is easy to see that it's origins are much more ancient and go back before the flood of censorship.

Then there is the Benbina table of Isis, a graphic depiction of Egyptian cosmology which has been interpreted by the likes of W.Wynn Westcott, Eliphas Levi, Manly Hall and Athanasius Kircher and to them it was a kind of cosmological Rosetta Stone matching that of the Chaldean Oracles. Their interpretations have proven useful to my own in regards to the universal language and Eliphas Levi even associates the 21 figures in the central panel to the major arcana of the tarot and the book of Thoth, but also crucially the Hebrew alphabet and the Sepher Yetzirah, a text which he says is based on Egyptian religion. For Westcott it fit with the Chaldean Oracles in which he places the Iynge in the centre, while Manly Hall even thought 12 figures on it “ may well symbolize the twelve convolutions of the brain.” So the Benbina Tablet has astronomical associations, but it is also related to magickal and metaphysical realms and the philosophies of the Chaldeans and so one way or another, even the human brain.

Eliphas Levi deserves a little addendum here as despite the fact he was a Catholic, he is one of the most influential Occult writers of the past 2 centuries, especially in regards to the Tarot. So while he doesn't go in to detail, to my surprise he did relate the tarot to the kameas and the I Ching, which in turn he relates to the Zohar as well. It was quite the synchronicity to read this in his books “History of Magic” and “Transcendental Magic” I just wish he explained it more fully! (Though some of his books are hard to find and I have not read him fully.) As I have explained, the 36 decans and 72 angels correspond to the minor arcana of the tarot and this basic cosmology is explained in the Mathers translation of the Greater Keys, as at the very end he gives an old Solomonic fragment translated by Eliphas Levi. (Taken from Levi's book Philosophie Occulte Serie II Pg 136) This fragment is very important in all this as it ties together many strands, not only the Shemhamphorash, it also mentions Jacob's ladder in relation to the tree of life. It starts out by saying that the “key to the kingdom of the spirits” “is the same as that of the mysterious numbers of Yetzirah, 84” which we know is the gematria of a spelling of Enoch, but also the Hebrew for dream “chalom.” Then it goes on to explain the correspondences of the 10 sephiroth and while there are some different ideas on this in other texts, it curiously says that the demon of Chesed is “Ashtaroth or Astarte, the impure Venus of the Syrians whom they represent with the head of an ass or of a bull, and the breasts of a woman.” Then it explains that Joshua AKA Jehoshua spelled as the pentagrammaton YHSVH fought 5 accursed nations and the letters of his name were used to defeat five different types of giants. Earlier it says that names of the angels like Gabriel are titles rather than names and then before listing the 5 accursed nations it tells us straight out, “the real history of the people of god is the allegorical legend of humanity.” It explains that Pagan gods are demons and that they have heavens for the ignorant and while it is not explicit, much of this smacks of euhemerism and would explain much of the euhemerist fascination with Solomon. We also gain insight in to Solomonic drug use when it says, “In order to evoke Phantoms it is sufficient to intoxicate oneself or to render one-self mad; for Phantoms (Rephaim) are ever the companions of drunkenness and of vertigo. The Phosphorus of the imagination, abandoned to all the caprices of over-excited and diseased nerves, fills itself with Monsters and absurd visions. We can also arrive at hallucination by mingling together wakefulness and sleep by the graduated use of narcotics; but such actions are crimes against nature.” Liber Juratus contains the use of henbane and drugs for evocation and visions and so we know Solomonic magicians used such plants. As Solomonic magick was often Christian, further evidence of Christian pharmakeia is found in the book “Witchcraft Medicine” (Page 51 by Wolf -Dieter Storl) where inquisitors used scopolamine for “truth serums” to interrogate “Witches.” Getting back to the Goetic text of Levi, there is talk at this point of Wisdom and Folly, but wisdom here refers to the sephirah Chokmah rather than the Gnostic goddess, there is also further explanation as to the importance of numbers in Solomonic magick. For example, “Number, weight, and measure determine the form of things; the substance is one, and God createth it eternally. The Letters are from the Numbers, and the Numbers from the Ideas, and the Ideas from the Forces, and the Forces from the Elohim. The Synthesis of the Elohim is the Schema. The Schema is one, its columns are two, its power is three, its form is four, its reflection giveth eight, which multiplied by three giveth unto thee the twenty-four Thrones of Wisdom.” Speaking of the Shemhamphorash we learn that each of the 24 thrones of Wisdom has a crown with 3 rays, each ray has a name and “each Name is an Absolute Idea.” This gives 72 names which are to be written on 36 talismans, 2 on each, one on each side, these 36 talismans are further divided in 4 groups of 9 “according to the number of the Letters of the Schema” and letters of the tetragrammaton. We can see this is the tarot as Yod here corresponds to the flowering rod of Aaron, the first Heh is the cup of Joseph, the Vav is the sword of David and the final Heh is a shekel of gold. “These thirty-six Talismans will be a Book which will contain all the Secrets of Nature. And by their diverse combinations thou shalt make the Genii and Angels speak.”

As the zodiac has been attributed to various parts of the body, and as the 72 archons are thought to have created the body and rule over specific parts, there is undoubtedly circuits of the brain which correspond accordingly. Likewise there are 7 openings in the head, two eyes, two ears, two nostrils and a mouth which correspond to the planets in the Sepher Yetzirah and so while the ancients may not have exactly understood brain anatomy, they would be correct in this kind of metaphor as the brain interprets the sensory data. (That isn't to say the planets don't correspond to other parts of the brain as well, since they create all of consciousness and not just sensory perceptions.) Furthermore we can see that all this is connected to the temple of Solomon which has the stone in it's foundation, as the laws and the temple are symbolically connected to the human skeleton, they are thus connected to the Fibonacci sequence. Remember, the Gnostics also believed the laws of Moses were created by archons, just as the human body was created by 72 archons, just as the temple was built by 72 Goetic demons.

As for the Greeks, the word “Iynx” comes from the name of a Nymph who used the wheel to cast a spell on Zeus to make him fall in love with IO, this pissed off Hera who turned Iynx into the type of bird which bears that same name. (This is also the source of the word “Jinx”) IO was turned in to a cow by Zeus to escape the wrath of Hera and she turns out to be the sister of Phoroneus, the first king of the Greeks after the confusion of tongues. IO is sometimes said to be the origin of the constellation Taurus and so she brings to mind women like Istahar, especially given her royal family. Their mother Melia was an ash tree nymph, who were beings that along with giants (often conflated with the Titans) and the furies, were created when Chronos castrated his father Uranus and the blood fell from the sky. Not only is this blood highly suggestive of meteorites, as I explained before, the semen of Uranus created Aphrodite from the ocean, making her an ocean goddess and even the aunt of Zeus. We can also see this in the epithet "Aphrodite Comaetho," with others having already recognized the idea that "comaetho" refers to a comet, this term is also the name of women in some suspicious myths.

Now the descendents of IO and Zeus came to be rulers of many places, often bearing the names of the people they would rule and so we can see in their family tree the Greek history of civilization through the demigod kings of the theocratic religion. For example there is Sparta, Europa and Memphis, but also King Minos of Crete, the father of the Minotaur and son of Europa and Zeus, Lybia who with Poseidon had twin sons, they were Agenor a king of Tyre and Belus king of Egypt who also had twins named Aegyptus and Danaus. Importantly Agenor fathered Phoenix from whom the Phoenicians are said to have taken their name, but he also fathered Europa and Cadmus, whom the Greeks credited as being the creator of their alphabet, as learned from the Phoenician alphabet created by Agenor. Cadmus also travelled to Samothrace and was the grandfather of Dionysus through his daughter Semele. Much of the story of Cadmus, Semele and of course Dionysus can be read in the text "Dionysiaca" by the poet Nonnus, here (47. 665) we can also see that Ariadne, the Cretan wife of Dionysus was put in the stars of Pleiades after being turned to stone by Perseus as if she is like Istahar. We can also learn of how Dionysus was born from Persephone and Zeus and destroyed by the titans, then at the end Dionysus has twin sons after date raping Aura, a mountain otherwise associated with Rhea is named after them and called Mt. Dindymon, Dionysus also fights giants. Cadmus and his wife were eventually turned in to snakes reminiscent of the caduceus and we also know that he was worshipped as a form of Hermes on Samothrace. What is more, in one version of the Testament of Solomon, Zeus is called upon to control a demon called Katrax, and right after is another demon called Ieropa, a name which certainly brings to mind Europa. To seduce her, Zeus abducted Europa by taking the form of a bull, this form is also said to have become Taurus, thus she also brings to mind Istahar and Samyaza. Snorri says Saturnus did this rather than Jupiter and seems to mix the stories of Europa and IO, while Herodotus says Europa was kidnapped by Minoans. Now all of the myths regarding this family will provide certain clues to all this, but given the importance of Crete, King Minos certainly stands out and we can see that Pausanias tells us that this king doubted that Theseus was the son of Poseidon. So the king took a signet ring and threw it in to the ocean daring him to get it back and not only did Theseus succeed in this, but he also received a crown from Amphitrite the wife of Poseidon.

If this was not enough in some myths the "Telchines" were also created by the blood of Uranus's balls and they were beings who were great metal workers and according to Ovid and others, Zeus sank them beneath the ocean for corrupting the world. (Book VII:365) The Telchines are in various ways associated with Dionysus and Rhea, but were also given the task of rearing Poseidon by Rhea. Strabo says that Rhea or Cybele chose 9 of them to raise Zeus on Crete, in this case they were called Curetes and were a form of the Korybantēs but much of how this fit together has been lost and confused. Sometimes these beings are distinct, other times they are grouped together, yet other times they are like another similar group called "Dactyls," but all these beings are crucially important to our subject. One source says the Telchines were the offspring of Nemesis and Tartarus and so this certainly ties in with all the goddess of the abyss symbolism. (Bacchylides, Fragment 52 from Tzetzes on Hesiod's Theogony 80) Telchines were further said to have been sorcerers who polluted nature with sulphur and the waters of the river Styx, (Strabo 14.2.7) and this is why they were destroyed. Sometimes they are said to have drown in a flood sent by Zeus, other times Poseidon or Apollo destroyed them, but generally in regards to their black magick, they were also thought of as death spirits and were thought to be able to control the weather and call upon hail, Diodorus even compares them to the Magi of Persia. (Library of History 5. 55. 5) In some cases they also made Poseidon's trident and the sickle of Chronos used to castrate Uranus, they are also said to have mainly lived on Rhodes where the flood was, but like Noah they knew the flood was coming (the same flood as in the myth of Deucalion according to Diodorus) and so scattered to places like Crete, Cyprus and Boeotia, an area in which Cadmus would found his city Thebes. King Minos of Crete even had a child named Euxantius by a Telchine called Dexithea and this son eventually became king of the island. The Telchines were said to use the evil eye and shape shift, the former aspect linking them to Sabazius or Dionysus through the hand of Fatima, "hamsa" or symbol of the eye on a hand used to ward off the evil eye, that is just as Sabaoth commands the archons, so too might have Sabazius done, perhaps something like Pazuzu with his wind demons. However Himerius (Him. Or. 45) also tells a version of the the myth of Dionysus where the Telchines attack him and are identified as the titans, while in the Dionysiaca (14. 36 ff) the Telchines go with Dionysus to war in India, one of them, Damnameneus, is said to be the son of Poseidon. (See also Daimones Proseous, giant offspring of Poseidon)

As for the Dactyls, well they were said to be the original metal workers by Diodorus Siculus, (5.64.5) they were not thought of so badly, but taught Orpheus magickal music called "epoidai," or even the original Greek form of Goetic magick called "goeteia," which is related to the words "goao" and "goös." A magician in general would be called "goes" and while this was generally thought to be quite apart from the magick of Solomon, it was a form of working with the spirits of the dead and through the Trojans, I believe it became linked to the more Solomonian and Jewish practices. Scholars point out that Gorgias in "Helen," (paragraph 10) links the "goes" to "magos" as deceivers as a means of defending the adultery of Helen of Troy because she was magickally manipulated. Given that Plato in Laws links pharmakeia to "goeteia" and almost treats them as synonymous, it may well be that "Helen" and or the Greek sovereigns she symbolized were victims of the "persuasion" of scopolamine pharmakeia and this was ultimately the cause of the war. The Dactyls went to Samothrace and are said to be the progenitors of the first inhabitants of Crete and so if Jews are from Crete we have a nice link here, but also to the Trojans and Telchines and all the rest of the banking cult which co-opted the original Dactyl Alchemy. For example, hints to this can be seen in how Hesiod describes Damnameneus and Skelmis as Dactyls, but centuries later for the Romans, as in the Dionysiaca, Damnameneus and Skelmis are Telchines.

Diodorus tells us of Heracles Dactylus and we know his cult came to the Greeks from Tyre and from the Phrygian Mt Ida just as the Dactyls are said to come from Mt Ida in Phrygia. (Diodorus 5.64) This form of Heracles also played a Shamanistic role with herbs and plants to cure daemonic infections, Plato tells us magnets were also called the stone of Heracles and they may have served as amulets in this tradition. For an in depth look at these metal working entities see the book, "Myth, Ritual and Metallurgy in Ancient Greece and Recent Africa" by Sandra Blakely in which she tells us, "The magnet's powers of attraction were attributed to various causes. Thales suggested it had a soul, others that the stone could breathe, that it existed in a male and female form, or that it manifested a daemonic presence. An association with daemonic forces is especially evident in later magical literature, in which a magnet casts a spell on iron, or iron bewitches a magnet." As it turns out, most meteorites are magnetic and so this must have surely added to their mystique, but even Earthly magnets had occult power to the ancients and even until relatively recently, magnetism surely appeared to be magickal. There is a book called "Wissensideale und Wissenskulturen in der Frühen Neuzeit" which is a compilation of essays by scholars, found within is a chapter called "Occult Sympathies and Antipathies: The case of early Modern Magnetism" by Eileen Reeves and this shows there are multiple examples of how the Key of Solomon was associated with magnets and also the practice of baptizing magnets. For example, it cites a text written in 1585 by Tomaso Garzoni called "Piazza Universale di tutte le professioni del mondo" (pg 515) which spoke in passing of the Greater Key of Solomon AKA Clavicula Salomonis and that sorcerers in his time would induce love and hatred through it's magick and would also baptize magnets. While it is too much to explain here, Reeves' essay unknowingly presents crucial evidence for the conspiracy of Solomonic magicians and that the Clavicula Salomonis was for people like Galileo, Voltaire and a real alchemist, Michael Maier repeatedly associated not only with magnets, but with materialist puffer alchemy and charlatans. While there is little that has to do with alchemy in the grimoires I have read, interestingly this puffer alchemy is connected to an interpretation of Ovid and the myth of Acteon and Diana. (See also the floating chariot in the temple of Serapis in Alexandria, apparently suspended in the air by magnets!) I have also read in the Solomonic “Grand Grimoire” there is the use of lodestone and so we should not underestimate their importance.

The Dactyls were named after fingers, as there were 5 males called Dactyls, and 5 females called Hekaterides and together were called Dactyloi, they may have taught the use of finger mudras, but they also had a form of mantra yoga as with the voces magicae called “Ephesia Grammata” or “Ephesian letters.” It was named thus as the Ephesian letters were used at the temple of Artemis in Ephesus, thus highlighting the Phrygian or Trojan banking cult. These “letters” are sometimes identified as six words or perhaps names, they can be spelled differently in the papyri but as ΑΣΚΙ, ΚΑΤΑΣΚΙ, ΛΙΞ, ΤΕΤΡΑΞ, ΔΑΜΝΑΜΕΝΕΥΣ, ΑΙΣΙΑ (or ΑΙΣΙΟΝ) we get 36 letters, with some of the individual words showing really good isopsephy numbers. Plutarch (Quaest. Conv. 706D) tells us that the Magi would instruct people in these kinds of mantras to free themselves of daemonic possession. The Ephesian letters turn up in the Greek Magical Papyri, (PGM) which were miscellaneous syncretic magickal texts derived from a wide variety of traditions, from the more Pagan and Gnostic, to the more Jewish and Christian. In these texts we can see voces magicae and Greek “goeteia” being used in a couple of spells which mention Solomon, one to produce a trance state, (PGM IV. 850-929) another for demon possession and so the idea that Solomonic magicians mixed with Pagan Trojan magick is not as unlikely as it might seem at first. (For demon possession see PGM IV. 3007-86, it makes use of Jesus and the one who struck the giants with lightening, it also mentions 140 languages after the confusion.)

In these texts the Ephesian letters are often used with Hekate, and the 10 Dactyloi are sometimes said to number 100, or to have had 100 offspring called Kourete-sons which became the first people of Crete, while the Dactyloi's parents were the daemon Hekateros and a daughter of Phoroneus. In the PGM Damnameneus is a cthonic goddess of the underworld, while according to Stephen Skinner in his book “Techniques of Graeco-Egyptian Magic” the six dactyl words actually refer to a spell in which Damnameneus binds the demon “Lix Tetrax.” According to him, these are the only two names in the six dactyl words and he also points out Lix Tetrax is found in the Testament of Solomon as dust devil or wind demon! Hekate as we saw literally means 100 and in PGM LXX. 4-25 she comes up in a unique spell as Ereshkigal who is the Mesopotamian goddess of the underworld, and there is also mention of the underground chamber of the dactyls. PGM IV 2708-2784 gives a love spell which calls upon a “giant Hekate” who is later called “fiery,” she also has fire breathing phantoms and this spell too makes use of Damnameneus, then PGM VII 215-18 calls on Aphrodite and uses Damnameneus on a talisman. PGM VII 429-58 gives a restraining or binding spell that works on anything, “even chariots” and this makes use of some of the Dactyl words, here called an “Orphic formula” which fits as Orpheus learned magick from the Dactyls.

We can see magnets come up repeatedly in the Greek Magical Papyri, first in PGM III 187-262 which evokes a deity and like other spells contains a prayer in “dactylic” hexameter. Then PGM III 494-611 which seeks to establish a relationship with Helios, it speaks of various names of Helios and the trees and stones produced by these forms, one stone being a magnet, one name in a separate section being the dactyl Damnameneus. (Lapiz Lazuli is brought up here and other places too, in PGM CX 1-12 it is associated with Aphrodite) Then PGM IV 2145-2240 which uses verses from Homer for various purposes, when combined with a lodestone or magnet it makes a charioteer win his race. Next we have PGM IV. 2622-2707 which is a “slander spell” to Selene, AKA Artemis in which a magnet is carved in to a heart shape with Hekate on it, Selene is later called “only ruler, The Fortune of daemons and gods.” Then we have PGM IV 2785-2890 which is to Selene and we learn some uncommon associations with her, but also Hekate is carved on a lodestone. PGM IV 3125-71 is quite relevant and speaks of Tyche and makes use of magnetite. Then PGM LXII. 24-46 summons “the lord of the winds” and sigils are inscribed on a magnet that is still “breathing” to protect against demonic attacks.

Bringing to mind the container of the urim and thummim on the ephod, it is said that Ephesian charms would be worn in little bags and on a belt, (or breastplate? see Athenaeus Deipnosophistae 12.548c) so according to Professor Sarah P Morris in “the Prehistoric Background of Artemis Ephesia” the practice comes from the goat skin bags of Hittite fetishes and this is the source of the Ephesian letters which was also placed on a statue of Artemis in her temple in Ephesus. The Hittite religion was itself heavily influenced by the Hurrians, with the Mitanni being part of this culture, the Hurrian god Alalu and the myths of how his descendents like the “cub bearer” Anu rebelled, certainly fit the pattern in all this, but you will have to research these cultures yourself. (See the myths “Kingship in Heaven” or “Song of Kumarbi” and the “Song of Ullikummi”) We also know from inscriptions in the relatively close by city of Miletus that Hekate was honoured in a gate of the city by theocratic singers called “Molpoi” or “star-singers.” The start of the festival was on the 7th day of the month of Taureon, (Taurus) and after this theocratic religious leaders called “aisymnetes” would be replaced, goats would be sacrificed and eaten, then on the 10th day the Molpoi carried small stone cubes called “gulloi” in a procession to the sanctuary of Didyma, a word which we saw means twin. (See “Molpoi Inscription”) Some scholars, like Alexander Herda argue this occurred as a New Year festival, an idea which fits well given that the Enuma Elish was read ceremoniously at the 12 day long New Year festival and in the text, Kingu has the tablets of destiny clasped to his breast by Tiamat, not unlike the breastplate of the Jews. Also Yom Kippur occurs 10 days after the Jewish new year Rosh Hashanah and these two holidays are linked together, as we already saw, Yom Kippur is associated with the book of life and dice and goat sacrifice. This Molpoi inscription is actually the oldest evidence we have of Hekate's worship and like the SATOR square and the verses of Exodus from which the names of the Shemhamphorash are derived, it is written in “boustrophedon” meaning you read each successive line in the opposite direction or “as the ox plows” with the sower Arepo. So with the gulloi we have the urim and thummim which would likely go with Artemis as she was closely associated with Hekate and we can also see the Molpoi acted as priests for a form of Apollo and that he had a sanctuary called “Didymaion.” As the dactyloi are in the PGM it would be a good sign to see somewhere that dice come up as well, and while they do not come up in the same spells such forms of divination do come up. While I have previously theorized that the Iliad is structured according to 216 sections for dice divination, it is true that PGM VII 1-148 gives you verses to be used as answers for 216 possible rolls with 3 dice, this however also makes use of verses from the Odyssey. While I do not understand how the verses were chosen, there were multiple forms of Sortes Homericae and I still believe Homer structured his dactylic verse very consciously, PGM VII 423-28 gives a spell to win at dice and so we can at least see that the PGM often pertains to the kinds of magick that were highjacked by the theocrats. (including necromancy) I have already shown how Uriel uses dice in the Testament of Solomon, but I should also point out that in the Lesser Keys a girdle of lion skin is used, lamens or sigils are also placed over the breast, there is even another text which itself is called the “Cingulum Salamonis” or “The Girdle of Solomon.” According to John Dee, Uriel gave him the ring of Solomon to use for magick and likewise we can see that there is a special lamen used in Enochian magick. The Masons also make use of an apron or girdle as do the Mithraic mysteries, and the god Mithras himself, but even Jesus in Revelations 1:13 and so it is definitely an important ritual prop suggestive of how the goddess religions were corrupted.

According to Luke, the apostle Paul was winning many converts from this Ephesian cult, as in Acts this was even supposed to have caused a riot of silversmiths worried they would lose their jobs if no one used idols, but doubtless we are only getting one side of the story here and so to me it is likely Paul was reforming the cult for the Roman state. This is seen in Acts 19 when Jewish exorcists use the name of Jesus, but while it says the possessed person ran away naked, this somehow leads to some Pagans converting and burning all their magickal books on things like Ephesia Grammata. To calm the rioters, in Acts 19:35-37 a town clerk even mentions the followers of Artemis here worship a meteorite or image that fell from heaven or Jupiter, but that Paul and his followers are “neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.” In context of who “Paul” really is, we can see he was reforming the mint/temple of Artemis for the new Roman theocracy, that he was fusing his Christianity with the Artemis cult to preserve the theocratic knowledge held among the local Jews, then he and his followers burned the evidence of the earlier Pagan exorcism practices. (was the riot actually a Gnostic rebellion against the mint?)

In the Aeneid, another group of metal working entities called the Hekatonkheires, fought on the side of the Titans rather than the Olympians and Aeneas is even compared to one of them, this idea is based on the alternative but lost myth, the “Titanomachy” in which Zeus is also raised in Lydia rather than Crete. (We can only wonder what this text details, but it seems to be something like a Pagan Book of Enoch) We can see yet more of a relationship of the giants and the Trojans in the founding myth of England, in which Brutus goes to England (Albion) and fights the indigenous giants. Brutus and his companions keep one alive who is strangely enough named Gogmagog, (as in the book of Revelations or the Book of Invasions character Magog) but was eventually thrown off a cliff in to the sea or abyss by Corineus the Trojan duke of Cornwall. At the coronation of the “Virgin Queen” Elizabeth in 1558, two effigies were created to stand in the “City of London” district within London, one being Gogmagog, the other Corineus. These statues eventually decayed but were replaced by copies multiple times and still today they can be found in the main headquarters of the corporation of the “city of London” known as “Guildhall.” Also found in the “city of London” is the “London Stone” which is not a meteorite but has a variety of legends and theories surrounding it, and while we must be skeptical, some argue that Brutus brought this stone and used it as an altar or palladium to protect the city. Others claim Arthur pulled his sword from it and yet others say John Dee was fascinated by it and did Alchemical experiments with fragments he had chipped off of it.

This myth of Aphrodite in the ocean can be seen in the myth of Asteria as well, like Nyx she is goddess of the night's sky and sometimes the mother of Hekate, she is also sometimes associated with Aphrodite, her name actually means fallen star and seems to be a version of Astarte. In order to escape the advances of Zeus, Asteria fell to Earth and became the floating island of Delos and when her sister Leto came to the island to give birth to the twins Apollo and Artemis, Pindar tells us, “then it was that four lofty pillars rose from the roots of Earth, and on their capitals held up the rock with their adamantine bases. There it was that she gave birth to, and beheld, her blessed offspring.” Asteria's family was intimately related with divination, giants and astronomy, her father aided Chronos in the rebellion and with his brothers were four pillars which held up the heavens. There are 8 pillars in the Zohar and for the Islamic throne but this is still related, as with talk of the four directions in general, this is related to the four elements and this is where archangels or the “Four Great Kings”(like Corson) are summoned in Goetia or ceremonial magick in general. Her father's name was Koios and means axis of heaven, while her mother Phoibe was thought of as the centre of the Earth just as Anshar and Kishar were for the Sumerians. This birthing of Apollo and Artemis was aided by Eileithyia, a goddess who's worship goes back to prehistoric times on Crete, she would later become conflated with Libertas by Pseudo-Hyginus, but in this myth she seems to fulfil the role of the Crone, while Leto was the mother and Asteria the maid. Pausanias tells of a hymn to Eileithyia written by Olen in which she is a fate goddess and was said to be older than Chronos and that she was also the mother of Eros instead of the usual mother Aphrodite or once again Nyx. However according to the Orphic hymns, Nyx was equated with Venus and mention is made of both the fates and necessity or Ananke and in the hymn to the stars we learn that she is the mother of the stars. In this she like Aphrodite Urania, See also the Keres of Nyx which are like the furies or Valkyries, so that all these bringers of death are likely meteors or meteorites. Meteorites are also quite probably symbolized in the myths of the dove goddess Eurynome, who ruled the universe with the snake Ophion, but in some versions of the myth, the pair had their throne usurped and were cast down in to the ocean by Rhea and Chronos. In other myths, Eurynome found the god Hephaestus as he was cast off Olympus and in to the ocean by Hera for being lame and ugly, so she and Thetis nursed him back to health and the smith worked in a cave for 9 years. In some accounts Hephaestus was also the creator of Talos, a bronze giant of Crete, though sometimes he is a giant bull or even Taurus, other times he was of the bronze race descended from ash tree nymphs. Talos would hurl rocks at passing ships but was eventually defeated by the magick of Medea, or according to some vase paintings sometimes she had the help of the Dioscuri who seem to catch him as he dies. In a pseudo-Platonic work, it is said that he circled the island with bronze tablets on which the law of Crete was engraved, as given by Zeus to King Minos. For Sanchuniathon, Nyx is the figure most like a goddess, while Asteria, Leto and Eurynome are all Titanides and so the daughters of Astarte, both here and in the Greek myths they play a neutral role between the wars of Uranus, Chronos and Zeus.

While Asteria was cast down for not having an affair with Zeus, Leto had to have her children on the Island because she did have an affair with Zeus, this is very comparable to the meteorite myth of the goddess Ate and also Electra being raped by Zeus. So from comparing all these sources we see that meteorites are intimately connected to the founding of Troy, Tyre and Rome and that along with Jerusalem and Babylon which I have also linked to the Archons/Watchers/Anunnaki, these were the primary centres of the ancient banking cult. As far as I know, no one else has noticed how all this fits together, but if all this is not enough, Ovid calls Electra by the name of "Atlantis" and so while Delos is not Samothrace and neither is Tyre, as we will see, all these legends of meteorite islands are linked to that flood myth as well. Under the control of the Greeks, Delos did become a very cosmopolitan place and we can see that there was a cult to Astarte, another to Baal, one for Isis (in role like that of Aphrodite and Nemesis) and Serapis and that like in Sanchuniathon, there is a form of Poseidon from Beirut, but even a Jewish synagogue and so it is not hard to see how the myths would become mixed. In fact we know a wealthy Phoenician banker named Philostratus of Ascalon was part of a merchant guild called Poseidoniastae and paid for two altars, one to Poseidon, the other to Aphrodite Urania or Astarte. As Ate is the goddess of ruin and Azazel can be likened to Abaddon the angel of destruction in Revelations, this is a sign of their correspondence, where as Astarte or Samyaza would be Electra.

Electra means "amber," but this is also the source of the word electrum, the mix of gold and silver, sun and moon, or Apollo and Artemis as on Delos, which was used to make the first coins in Lydia and as I said, it also has links to Soma in the Hindu version of the tablets of destiny. But we can also see in Ezekiel, that some translations also depict "god" as what seems to be a comet or meteorite. Just after we learn the throne is a sapphire, Ezekiel is describing what "god" looked like in the sky, and in 1:27 we read, "I saw that from what appeared to be his waist up he looked like glowing metal, as if full of fire, and that from there down he looked like fire; and brilliant light surrounded him." This is interesting enough, but as another example of "confusion," other translations do not say "glowing metal," they say "amber" or "electrum" and so this is pretty different from the image of an old man on a cloud and to me shows Yahweh or more precisely the Shekinah was found by Electra, or at least the Trojan/Lyidian theocracy which created the first coins. (See also Ezekiel 1:4 and 8:2) This would mean Yahweh corresponds to Samyaza, which could be combined with the Azazel meteorite to make the 2 tablets of the ark and if you like, these correspond to the Taurus and Virgo signs in the adinkra.

Eurynome was the goddess of the Pelasgians and while there are many contradicting accounts, they are said to be the indigenous people before the Greeks came to that land and so represent the prehistoric and pre-Indo-European traditions. They were named from Pelasgus whom some myths say was the first man, Herodotus says the Samothracians learned of the Cabeiri from them, though they were not called as such, this and other things leads me to believe that these were the teachings the Trojans corrupted and turned in to the banking cult of metal. Some scholars say the Pelasgians could come from Turkey but long before Troy as through Catal Huyuk, while in the Iliad, the Pelasgians are said to be on the side of the Trojans, while others, like Ovid refer to the Greeks as Pelasgians and so much of this must be speculation as the history has undoubtedly been altered and confused.

This idea of the floating island is echoed in a myth regarding the founding of the city of Tyre by Hercules, who was called Melqart by the Phoenicians. (See Dionysiaca by Nonnos, book 40 starting at 422) While meteorites are not explicitly mentioned, the story has many of the usual elements and to sum it up, it says that Hercules was instructed to go to a floating island of “ambrosian stones” on which an olive tree is found in which an eagle and a snake lived. This tree was on fire, but like the bush of Moses it was not consumed by the flames and after sacrificing the eagle, the rocks became fixed to the ground and this is where Tyre was founded. In the temple of Melqart in Tyre, Herodotus tells us there stood two pillars, one of gold, the other of emerald and so this could fit as the pillars which inspired the pillars of Solomon or Sanchuniathon. (Histories 2:44) These would be the original pillars of Hercules and we can see many ways in which Heracles does have things in common with Jesus, for example both are solar deities, sons of the heavenly father who were both said to have stopped snakes as infants. That the story of Delos is related to this story of Tyre is also seen in that Heracles, or Hercules as the Romans called him was sometimes paired with Apollo of Delos and the two were symbolized as Gemini, (Heracles also had a twin brother named Iphicles) so then given the summer solstice is at the end of this sign, clearly it is intimately related to the sun. Sanchuniathon says Hadad is the father of Melqart, but this story of the pillars of Tyre would also fit nicely with the story of Cainan, the founder of the Phoenician people finding the pillars of antediluvian wisdom, as in the book of Jubilees, but also of course, the emerald tablets/book of Thoth taken by the Hyksos/Jews and their Phoenician allies.

Metamorphoses (starting at 12:1) by Ovid is quite compelling in itself as it combines a lot of familiar symbols in new ways, for example we read of an omen foretelling the end of the Trojans. This starts with an offering to Jove through a large fire and then the men see an “azure snake” which climbs a tree and eats 8 bird chicks and their mother making 9, symbolizing the 9 years they would fight in Troy. Then after eating, the azure snake goes down the tree and turns to stone, so that not only is this like the story of the founding of Tyre, it also brings to mind the sapphire snake/rod of Moses and Aaron, a staff which turned in to a snake and back into sapphire during their duel with the Pharaoh's magicians Harut and Marut. Then Ovid explains the myth of Iphigenia being sacrificed to the virgin goddess Artemis, so that the Greeks can cross the ocean or abyss, but at the last moment she is transformed into a hind by the goddess and is saved from death. This not only brings to mind Abraham's son being saved from sacrifice, but also Esther or the Shekinah who was symbolized by a deer or hind and so as Artemis Ephesus is part of the meteorite cult, Iphigenia would represent the meteorite in this case. Further evidence for this interpretation can be found in a play by Euripides about Iphigenia where she is a priestess of Artemis in the region of Tauris and in the temple there, there was a statue of the goddess said to have come from heaven. Ovid goes on to describe the Tower of the goddess Fama (who was linked to Vasa Mortis) “in the centre of the world, between the land and sea and the wide heavens, the meeting of the threefold universe.” This tower is made of brass and works to echo all the words said throughout the world so that the goddess may learn of them in a way that is something like Odin on his throne. As all the languages of the world would be found at this tower of Fame, it is a symbol of the universal language, it is also the perfect tower for the mighty men of renown who seek fame, but Ovid also provides us with a hint as to the confusion and mixing of mythology when he says, “Fickle crowds are always in that hall, that come and go, and myriad rumors—false tales mixed with true—are circulated in confusing words. Some fill their empty ears with all this talk, and some spread elsewhere all that's told to them.” (It also fits the myth of Etana, the eagle and the tower.)

Even better, a collection of Jewish Midrashes called Yalkut Shimoni says King Hiram of Tyre was made immortal for helping to build the temple, (alternatively 600 years of paradise) but he went crazy and thought himself to be god and wanted others to believe it as well. So he fixed four iron pillars to the sea floor and built on it seven heavens, the first of glass, then iron, lead, brass, copper, silver, gold and so this would be Mercury, Mars, Saturn, Jupiter, Venus, Moon and Sun which thus creates a spiral on the tree of life. (Alternatively this was done on an island off the coast of Tyre) Between them were channels of water that were 400 to 3599 ells and each heaven was 500 ells (The number of final Kaph) bigger than the one below it and boulders and jewels were used on the level of iron to simulate thunder and lightning. Stating that like Yahweh he sat on the sea and with seven heavens, it says that for this hubris Yod (The letter/name of “god” as in the Greater Keys) sent Nebuchadnezzar to dethrone him, the ocean tower sank in to the Earth and every day a piece of Hiram's body was torn off.

This description of Tyre is remarkably like that of the mythical cities of Atlantis as described by Plato in the Critias section of Timaeus, which is itself much like the city of Scherie or Phaeacia as told by Homer in his Odyssey, but then there is also the city of Adocentyn in the grimoire known as the Picatrix and so all this is no accident. Plato describes Atlantis as made of concentric rings of islands which seems similar, the city was filled with towers and gates and it's golden walls bring to mind the New Jerusalem or Lankapuri with it's 7 walls and moats. Atlantis is also rather close to Mt Sumeru for the Buddhist version of Mt Meru, which is also described as having 7 mountain ranges with 7 concentric oceans in between the 7 mountains ranges. So then as Sumeru is Meru and the spine, all these cities can be likened to the familiar stacked concentric wheels of Lull. In the centre of Atlantis was a mountain and on it a citadel temple to Poseidon, and there written on a pillar were the law and history of it's first 10 kings. (The description here of the Acropolis is also relevant) Born of the god Poseidon and a mortal woman they were “five pairs of twin male children” the oldest of which was Atlas and among other important things Eusebius tells us that for the Greeks, Atlas was the same as Enoch. (Praep. Ev. Book 9 Ch 17, while Manly Hall and others have also linked the pillars conveying this history to Solon in the city of Sais in Egypt to the pillars of Enoch.) These 10 kings of course bring to mind the 10 antediluvian patriarchs or Babylonian kings, but it is also said they were judges of this law and wore azure robes and wrote their decrees on a gold tablet, they also sacrificed a bull at the pillar. (See also the “Barton cylinder” which tells of the goddess Ninhursag being impregnated with the semen of 7 pairs of twins) Phaeacia has a royal family descended from giants and also Poseidon and a pillar and along with Adocentyn is associated with Pallas Athena and at Atlantis we likewise read there was a statue of Athena which brings to mind the Palladium. (Odysseus is repeatedly compared to Atlas as well and Athena makes him taller to impress the locals.) Adocentyn was a city made by Thoth in the Picatrix, it was 12 miles across but also had a special tower surrounded by water which was 30 cubits high and from this tower seven lights would colour the city according to the days and the planets which rule them. This city also had four gates according to the fixed signs and a tree bearing all kinds of fruit, which is not unlike the Gaokerena tree of Zoroastrianism which is also said to produce all manner of seeds, but these fall off when Simurgh flies off. Some have compared it to the real city of Harran, but see also the translation of Picatrix from Arabic as there is a story of a king which has to do with an Eagle etc, in this case the city is called El-Ashmunein which is a real name used for Hermopolis. Picatrix Book IV Chapter 4 says, “Use the fixed planets (stars) in building cities and use the rotating planets in building ground floors.” While it is not unthinkable that a meteorite could have destroyed an island civilization, I am rather agnostic about Atlantis as history, but we can see by comparing descriptions that this tower in the ocean was an important mythological symbol. We can see that whether or not it existed physically, it's symbolism relates to the same mnemonic architecture as with the New Jerusalem, temple of Solomon and Tower of Babel and all the other examples I brought up. We might also compare it to Meru of Lemuria, but this suggests the hollow Earth or the subterranean realms of Agartha or the 7 Patanjali of Sesha, or the 7 palaces of Malkuth. In this way all these myths may be referring to an astral temple in the Earth's magnetic field, but are more definitely memory palaces of the pre-flood myths, that is while it's questionable if many of these cities existed physically, either way the descriptions of the cities are undoubtedly different versions of the same ark, one which contained the most ancient knowledge. (Hence Critias invokes Mnemosyne) Tying all this together even more, Josephus tells us (Book 8 of Antiquities) of Solomon's temple and a lot of very familiar motifs and symbolism such as a spiral pillar, (very comparable with Masonic legends about the temple) that it's “vessels” were made of a “copper, precious as gold” which has been linked to orichalcum the mysterious metal named as composing the pillar of Atlantis. (Some say orichalcum is bronze or brass as with towers or pillars in this chapter, but these vessels are comparable to the others in this chapter.)

Certainly many legends surround Atlantis, far too many for me to detail here but many an Occultist has historically seen the island as the fountainhead of the mysteries and the founder of various civilizations, so as Timaeus is the root text of the legend, it is well worth reading. But perhaps most important of all to note with most of these Pagan myths of floods or towers sinking in to the ocean abyss, the tower existed before the flood and hence it is like Noah's ark. Now I have already written of Plato and his explanation of 216 as in the Republic, but the text Timaeus has many many more important clues and while I cannot go in to them all, I will highlight some of the most important. Given that Timaeus also explains Plato's notion of neuroplasticity, it is probably as a whole, Plato's knowledge regarding the prehistoric Pagan Tantra and this ties in to basically all the other motifs we have seen so far. Before going in to the story of Atlantis we learn how the Greek Solon (one the 7 sages of the Greeks) learned from the Egyptians of this myth, this text contains much knowledge about Plato's cosmology, his positive notion of fate, sacred geometry and how they relate to the 6 directions, squares, cubes and ratios and a binary like sequence etc and there is also a creation story involving Hephaestus. (While Gnostics have much in common with Neoplatonism, their antagonism to the demiurge and to fate show they were against core teachings of Plato.) Plato even gives us a kind of atomic theory, one based on the platonic solids and the "elements" they represent, so that triangles are the most fundamental unit of matter. Like sub-atomic particles as on the adinkra, the elements combine in different ways according to the Platonic solids in order to make all the various molecular compounds of nature. Geomancy itself is largely based on these four primary elements and each of the four rows for each geomantic sign corresponds to one of the elements, while each geomantic symbol itself has one dominant element. This means we could translate the geomantic adinkra into the four elements, then from that translate the elements into platonic solids, arrangements which potentially provide a whole lot more numbers. Plato also explains the origins of souls, (Section 41D) that the divine creator mixed the soul of the universe with the elements in a cup, "he divided the whole mixture into souls equal in number to the stars, and assigned each soul to a star; and having there placed them as in a chariot, he showed them the nature of the universe, and declared to them the laws of destiny, according to which their first birth would be one and the same for all,-no one should suffer a disadvantage at his hands." Plato goes on to explain that according to a kind of karma, a soul can return to their star and there they will live happily ever after.

Now the father of Uranus according to Sanchuniathon had the name Hypsistus as with the Hypsistarians, alternatively he had the name of the Jebusite god Elyon, "the most high" heaven, but for the Greeks, as a god he was named "Aether." Aether was said by Hyginus in the preface to his Fables to have mated with Gaia and so produced the Titans and other beings which are the daemons of human vices. Aether is very comparable to the god Aion, who was himself conflated with Chronos and Uranus, but while they are all originally distinct gods this suggests that as in Sanchuniathon, Chronos usurped the imagery of his predecessors. Aion is non-local time where as Chronos is worldly linear time, but Aion himself is not unlike Leontocephaline and here I will add that in Rome he was found on coins with his female counterpart Aeternitas, who would herself often be holding a Phoenix on round stone or globe. These male sky gods have various genealogies according to who you read and are said to give birth to each other, but the oldest form of Aion is to me likely to be the Orphic Phanes, who's teachings were corrupted by the followers of Chronos. This can be seen in some of the Orphic writings where Phanes was the son of Chronos and Ananke and born from an egg, but this Chronos is also identified as Heracles and so this is an example of how King Chronos took over the cult of Heracles/Demarus which was more in line with Orphism. Aion also comes up in the Greek Magical Papyri more than I can list here and in some very telling spells, but see especially PGM I 262-347 and PGM IV 475-829 which have among other important motifs, the use of leaves to write out talismans. There is also PGM VII 579-90 which makes use of the an Ouroboros to ward of daemons, and PGM IV 2241-2358 which also calls on Hekate, or rather the goddess of the abyss who is identified as Hekate and other goddesses for whatever purpose the magician needs. This last spell gives some very telling hints at how the Iynge or “iron wheel” was used with the pole of Hekate. This pole was bound with the chains of Kronos, and from the spell “Aion's / quaking; heaven will be disturbed, Kronos, in terror at your pole o'erpowered by force, has fled to Hades as overseer of the dead below.” Given the Iynges are brought up in this spell it seems likely they could have been placed on Hekate's pole and in the book “Hekate Soteira” which I cited before, the author does explain that Aion too was associated with the Iynges. PGM V 459-89 calls up the “Eternal eye, Daimon of daimons, god of gods, the lord of the spirits, the invariable AION IAO OYEI” and PGM IV. 1115-66 explains Aion as a god who acts like the god of the Sepher Yetzirah.

Aether was also associated with a meteorite and this is through his other name, “Akmon” which literally means: meteorite, anvil, stone, heaven and the word hammer comes from the word Akmen or “stone fallen from heaven.” As it turns out one Dactyl is also named Acmon meaning anvil, while Damnameneus means hammer and so given the Dactyls association with a rare form of Heracles, we can see a strong case for the Dactyls relating to meteorites. So then it is easy enough to see that meteorites played an important role in the founding of metallurgy and black smithing and the Greek word for iron is “Sideros” which is etymologically related to the Latin word Sidus, meaning star.

According to the Greeks, after falling in to the ocean, Aphrodite washed up on the island of Cyprus and this does seem to be the oldest home for the goddess, a place which did have Phoenicians at various times. According to Pliny (book 7 Ch 56) copper mines were found on the island by King Cinyras and he also invented the hammer, anvil and tongs. This king is sometimes said to be the husband of Aphrodite, others say he is the father of Adonis, while Homer says he made a breastplate for Agamemnon, 10 parts of azure blue, 12 parts gold for the sun and snakes as well. (Iliad Book XI)

This etymological root “Ak” is very important and means “to pierce,” it forms the start of the name Akkad, or Akkadians, who were one of the earliest Mesopotamian civilizations. So when we see that Akri means “corner” and Aktan is the number eight, or the number of corners on a cube, then “Akmon” is literally a meteorite as the cube of “heaven” or “space” also known as Aether. The name of the Celtic god Ogmios or Oghma, the maker of the Ogham alphabet may also be derived from Akmon, but Ak is also connected to another Mercurial god, Nabu who was sometimes represented by the monogram AK and if written in Hebrew this would have a gematria of 21. In the Vedic books, the word used for die, as in the singular form of dice is Aksa, which is also the word for the axle of a chariot, though these two words do not necessarily have the same etymological root, in light of my research I am inclined to believe they do. This and many other things hint that a meteorite was being used as a stone to hold the pole or axis mundi and this pole in turn was a marker to measure the movements of the stars and planets. At any rate Aksa as axle does have the same etymological root as the Latin word axis, as in axis mundi and Sanchuniathon also relates the origins of stone worship or “baetylus” or literally Bethel stones to King Hysistus.

From Pliny (Book 37 Ch 51) we do hear of ceraunia stones which are azure in colour and thought to “absorb the brilliancy of the stars” and he speaks of a few varieties, two of which are shaped like axes (labrys axe? Or Lugalbanda's axe?) “which are black and round, he says, are looked upon as sacred, and by their assistance cities and fleets are attacked and taken: the name given to them is bætyli, those of an elongated form being known as cerauniæ.” Pliny goes on explaining another type found where lightning was said to strike and that the Magi look for these but both variety's have already been theorized to be meteorites by some scholars. While this fits quite well it is true that just before this we learn of the stone astrion which means “little star” because it reflects starlight and Pliny speaks of ceraunia as an inferior type of this same stone so that the connection to the stars has more to do with light than meteorites. The lightning stone then may be a “fulgurite,” which is soil turned to glass through vitrification when lightning hits, but at any rate this illustrates the Magi's use of stones thought to come from heaven. Then Pliny speaks of a similar stone called astriotes which he says Zoroaster esteemed for its efficacy in magick. In Ch 54 Pliny says King Numa frequently used magick to make lightning appear and this can be tied to the Testament of Solomon, in that the explanation of the demon Ornia I quoted says that when the meteorites fall, they appear like lightning. However, in Book 2 Ch 38 Pliny explains the idea that most men believe the winds cause lightning and even cause stones to fall from the sky, or in Ch 43 he says that lightning is created by the fires of the stars descending into clouds which have winds in them and so it all fits together. Chapter 45 gives various theories for the origins of the wind and sheds light on the Paraphrase of Shem when we read “whether they (winds) are caused by the continuous motion of the world and the impact of the stars travelling in the opposite direction or whether wind is the famous ‘breath’ that generates the universe by fluctuating to and fro as in a sort of womb, or air whipped by the irregular impact of the planets and the non-uniform emission of their rays, or whether they issue forth from these nearer stars which are their own or fall from those stars which are fixed in the heaven—it is manifest that the winds too obey a law of nature that is not unknown, even if not yet fully known.”

The 1911 Encyclopedia Britannica tells us straight out that baetylus, or baetyl stones, or Bethel stones were meteorites and while I haven't been able to confirm all the following examples it gives as meteorite cults, apart from the ones I have already gone in to, it cites the cults of Apollo Agyieus, Zeus Meilichius, Zeus Teleios at Tegea and Zeus Cassius at Seleucia. (See also Zeus Kappotas) While Seleucia is in Iraq, from other sources I learned of a Zeus Cassius who had a temple on Mt Zaphon, thus he is like the giant Cassius, a nearby city also had a mint and so we see coins from the area with lightning on a throne. Other scholars too have noticed that baetyl stones are meteorites (For example G.F. Moon Am. Journ. Arch. 1903 vii. 204) and yet others point out how in Paphos Aphrodite was worshipped as a stone cone according to Tacitus and we can see that this town had a mint which made coins with the cone depicted on them. An excellent and scholarly book which goes in to meteorites in myths is “Zeus A Study in Ancient Religion Vol III” by Arthur B Cook and here you can get more details to some theories I came up with myself, others I got from him. When speaking of the god Dousares Mr. Cook also considers that Aion at Alexandria who was born of Kore also had a meteorite stone, as well as Venus at Elousa, he also thinks the hammer of Thor, the thunderbolts of Zeus and the vajra of Indra all to have originally been meteorites and links stone axes to the hammer. Others say Apollo had a conical stone or baetyl, it too was depicted on coins, but in the forum of Sicyon there was a stone pyramid for Apollo Carynus and another for Zeus Meilichius and also a pillar for Diana Patroa. Baetyls show up on too many different coins for me to list them all here, so while some baetyls were not meteorites, given how scarce meteorites are, it could be that the banking cult substituted Earth rocks in some cases, or at any rate they undoubtedly encouraged the worship of rare rocks and materials that they controlled, but then as I have said, worshipping stones goes back into the stone age.

Pausanias explains it was common for Greeks to worship “unwrought stones” or “rude stones” more than the best statues and that the Charites were worshipped as a stone that came from heaven to King Eteocles of Thebes (a descendent of Cadmus) Pausanias also explains that Heracles at Hyettus had such a stone and I would add that we know that at Tyre, Heracles was known as “Astrochiton” meaning “he of the starry robe.” Another possible meteorite is found in the late Roman era “Orphic” poem “Lithica” which describes the magickal use of stones and tells the story of Apollo giving the Trojan prince Helenus a stone called Orites, also called “siderite” which could speak and help him tell the future. A translation of the very intriguing Lithica is found in “Precious Stones and Gems” by C.W. King and has some curious explanations which could also be code for entheogens, but other stones discussed are agate, or “Tree Agate” as the stones are repeatedly compared to plants or have the form of plants. Specific mention is made of the blood of Uranus falling to the ground as the “stone of blood” which is said to cure diseases. Other magickal stones described include, lodestones, haematite and the fabled Adamas stone, (also described by Pliny) from which we get the word “adamantine” as it was said to be unbreakable. As Phanes is also Eros it is intriguing that the people of Thespieae worshipped Eros above all others and had an unwrought stone for him, Pausanias adds that Orpheus wrote songs in hexameter for the god's rituals. (See also “aerolites” a Greek name for meteorites, which were used for purification and healing)

Many elements I have discussed in this chapter can also be found in the Gnostic book of Baruch written by Justinian, (Not to be confused with the apocryphal book of Baruch) and while no mention of a cube is made there is a lot of other things. This book is somewhat Jewish in flavour, in that it is relatively misogynist for Gnosticism, yet it is also among the most explicitly Pagan and makes reference to quite a few Greek myths. Reference is also made to Moses and Elohim in a positive sense, yet it is certainly very heretical and details the love affair of Elohim and Edem, who is a personification of Eden, but is also like Sophia as a vengeful ex wife of Elohim, (or Asherah) all the while the god Priapus is the "good" higher deity. The couple give birth to 24 beings, 12 male and good who include Michael and Baruch and 12 female archons who include Adonaios, Naas the serpent, Belias, Leviathan under the name Kaviathan and most importantly "Babel," who is identified as Aphrodite and Omphale a Lydian queen of Turkey. Omphale is understood to be connected etymologically to the Omphalus stone and we can see in the context of all these other myths I have detailed, that here she is representative of the same Venus meteorite and banking cult of Babel and that she troubles Heracles and gets him to cross breed as he pursues his 12 labours and was enslaved by her.

Much of this text must be read to be understood, but in this text Adam and Naas are compared to Ganymede and the eagle which abducted him, the myth of Leda being impregnated by Zeus in the form of a swan, is understood as Elohim being the swan and Leda being Edem. (Remember that Leda gives birth to Helen of Troy and the Dioscuri) There is also a reference to the myth of the miraculous conception of Perseus, who's mother Danae was imprisoned in a bronze tower and is understood here as Edem, she was impregnated by Zeus/Elohim in the form of a golden shower from the sky (kinky Greeks) which is probably a comet or meteor shower. So here in a Gnostic text we find these references and apart from all the cross breeding between mortals and Zeus/Elohim, it is most pertinent in that Danae and Perseus are in their myth locked in to a chest, or ark and set adrift in to the sea. So here in the Greek myth we find the motif of Noah's ark, both in it's capacity as a ship and in the Zohar interpretation of Noah being like the covenant in the ark of the covenant. This then brings to mind the story of Lugh, but also the ark in which Moses, like Osiris in his coffin was set adrift down the Nile and so of course through Moses, this links it to the regular ark of the covenant. (Remember the Zohar says Moses came from the sapphire too) Now when I quoted the Song of Solomon about the "twin" breasts of the Shekinah, traditionally this has been interpreted as referring to Moses and Aaron, and the two brothers are often at least symbolically thought of as twins in many explanations of Judaism. Likewise we can see that Romulus and Remus were set adrift as babies down a river and this is how the she wolf prostitute came to find them. Plutarch says that after Osiris was trapped in a coffin by Set, it floated out to sea and Byblos, which we will remember according to Sanchuniathon is the first city, that as I explained before, the coffin grew in to an acacia tree that was used to make a pillar, (Just as the ark of the covenant is made from Acacia) but what is perhaps best of all, Isis learned this "by the divine breath of fame." (Phoibe the mother of Asteria is known as Dione in Sanchuniathon and is given the city of Byblos.) Furthermore it is said that the Greek version of Noah, Deucalion survived the flood with his wife by taking refuge in a chest or ark and this washed up on Mt Parnassus. So from all these various traditions we can interpret the myths as explaining that the physical meteorite is contained within the ark and goes with the tower as a mnemonic device to preserve the antediluvian wisdom, that is the scethiya is plunged in to the "abyss" of the flood, which is just what the gematria of the kamea's allude to. This then strengthens the idea of a Jupiter king like Hadad creating or releasing to the masses the tower of information as through a revolution against the Saturn king of giants.

Perseus is best known for slaying the gorgon Medusa, who was once a beautiful maiden, but she had sex with Poseidon in the temple of Athena and so Athena transformed her. After Perseus killed Medusa the children she bore from Poseidon, Pegasus and the giant Khrysaor flew out the neck, Khrysaor was himself the father of giant King Geryones. Some say the sword of Perseus was made of adamas stone, others say the stone was used to make the sickle of Chronos, while others still say adamas was magnetic. What is lesser known however is the story of Perseus and Cassiopeia, who was a queen of Ethiopia and the mother of Andromeda, so that after claiming either herself or her daughter to be more beautiful than the Nereid sea nymphs, she angered Poseidon greatly. Poseidon sent a flood and a leviathan sea dragon called Ketos Aithiopoulos which became the constellation Cetus the whale, then the oracle of the Phoenician god Ammon told the parents, king Cepheus and Cassiopeia to sacrifice their daughter. The parents chained Andromeda to a rock for the leviathan to claim her, but Perseus slew the beast and won both the kingdom and the Ethiopian princess. Another Cassiopeia is said by Hesiod to be the wife of the human named Phoenix, where as Pseudo-Hyginus (Astronomica 2. 9) says Cepheus was the son of Phoenix and so given the oracle of Ammon, some have already noted a Phoenician influence in this story. That Perseus is a hero yet goes against Poseidon says something about the Greek attitude towards the god, the human sacrifice aspect seems to be the price paid to the banking cult which was extorting the Ethiopians. After some shenanigans Cassiopeia was placed in the stars as her constellation, she sits in a torture chair or throne and yet this is just one example of how the myths of the constellations in general shed light on all this. (See also the cup constellation placed in the heavens by Apollo) Some say Mithras was identified with the constellation of Perseus, which is above Taurus, in other places the titan Perses has the constellation, he was the father of Hekate by Asteria, there is also the annual Perseid meteor showers. According to Plato, the Persians took their name from a Perses, who was a human son of Perseus and so all this does seem to be quite important in terms of the meteorite cult and shows some similarities between Yahweh and Poseidon.

So here we have stories which are intimately related to the symbolism of the theocratic religion, which was created unexpectedly by Lynx, who represents the older Pagan Tantra with her wheels, but which was subsequently punished by Hera and the theocrats who would set up the first tyrant monarchs. This wheel in various religions as the night sky centered on the pole star is the basis of their cosmologies and also played an important role in ritual through a divination device and even makes up the microcosmic “astral” body or Merkabah as in Ezekiel's vision of wheels within wheels. Ironical that Ezekiel would complain of Jews practicing Paganism while they were all in the captivity and in fact have them slaughtered for doing so, when his own vision of “god” is based on it. Of course it makes perfect sense if the story of Ezekiel is altered, or he is actually trying to co-opt the practices and kill any Pagans who know the truth.

The Christian heresiologist Epiphanius is like Eusebius and a euhemerist and pro Trojan Sibyl, like the Irish, he also attributes the tower of Babel to the Scythians, but he also dates Abraham to the 16th dynasty of Egypt, which we can see is a time of the Hyksos. At one point Epiphanius is trying to refute the “Melchizedekians” who say Melchizedek had no parents and is actually greater than Jesus, to refute this he mentions that others say his parents were Hercules and Astarth and so here again Epiphanius is promoting the myths of the banking cult. Epiphanius also tells us that Sethians believed that Sophia caused the flood, but this contradicts Gnostic texts scholars consider to be Sethian and even other Christian heresiologists.

However this notion of the Scythian origins of Babel is particularly interesting given the “Kurgan hypothesis” regarding the original “Indo-Europeans” as being the direct descendants of the Scythian nomads, we can also see the nomadic Scythians, originating in Iran were well known as horsemen and traders. At any rate the Scythians do show themselves to be in the same family of religions and quite important, albeit in a very mysterious way given how little we know of them, but they are certainly worth researching more than I can do here. Archeology does know of a Scythian burial mound called a “kurgan” in which golden vessels or cups were found containing cannabis and opium residue and so here we see a Soma/Haoma like potion was being used. Herodotus is our best source regarding the Scythians and he tells us (Book IV, but especially Ch 7-10) of the theories regarding their origins, the first comes from the Scythians themselves who say they are the “youngest of all nations.” In this myth “there fell from the sky four implements, all of gold- a plough, a yoke, a battle-axe, and a drinking-cup” and when two older princes tried to take possession of them, the items burst in to flames, but when the youngest and third prince tried, he gained them and so became king.

Herodotus tells us the Greeks have a different story though and that during his tenth labour, herding cattle for Geryones on the mythical island of Erythea, Heracles came to mate with a form of the Scythian goddess Argimpasa and from their offspring come the Scythian monarchy. Like Atlantis, Erythea is beyond the pillars of Hercules and Herodotus tells us the Greeks knew the ocean went around the world and in other sources we can learn how during this labour, Apollo gives Heracles a cup which serves as a boat or ark for him to sail to the island. Argimpasa is a Venus goddess not unlike Anahita and is half snake and half woman and brings to mind Queen Omphale mixed with Naas as in the Gnostic Book of Baruch, but also the Chinese version of Eve, Nü Wa who was half snake. Among other similarities, it is said that Scythian priests called "Enarei" wore women's clothes just as priests of Attis, or Heracles was made to do by Queen Omphale, or various Shamans around the world sometimes do. In other places Omphale got Heracles to kill the Dragon/Drakon Maionios, while Argimpasa tests her sons with a belt that has a cup and so the Scythians made a fashion of this.

As Gnostics are descendants of the original Qabbalists we would expect to find the cube in their cosmologies and while I have already provided some evidence of this as for example Marcus and his Qabbalah and other theories regarding the Platonic solids, it is true the cube does not explicitly come up so much. This is because "kingless" mystical Anarchists would not have much interest in a coronation stone as a symbol, but we can see the cube less explicitly in some philosophies and the simple fact is much of Gnosticism was oral and secret and apart from the Nag Hammadi texts and a few others, it was all but destroyed by Christians. Speaking of the neurotheology of Simon Magus and Valentinus, Hippolytus does say they were inspired by Pythagoras and explains how seven principles of math relate to the planets, "Wherefore all the numbers are seven; so that the generation of things produced may be from the hebdomad--which is number, monad, power, cube, biquadratic, product of quadratic multiplied by cube, product of cube multiplied by cube."

In regular Greek Isopsephy, Aletheia is 64, Baal is 34, Mithras is 360, Gaia is 9, and the number of IO is 80 regularly and 24 in ordinal value, or if spelled with an Omega 810. (Iuvξ the name of the nymph Iunx is 56 in ordinal) Sophia is 780 or 78×10 or 60×13 as with Metatron's cube and the cycle of 60, and as there are 4 zeros in the cycle of 60, $4 \times 13 = 52$ and $780 - 52 = 728$ which is close enough for Colet to 9^3 or 729, but also $117 \times 280 = 32760$ and when divided by 780 = 42. While he is more commonly associated with the letter Omega, the Greeks did use the letter "Chi" as the abbreviation for Chronos or Saturn, so then X was appropriately enough used as the sigil for signing contracts by the illiterate. Chi was also associated with the Sun, especially as part of the Christian Chi Rho symbol and we know the Chi Rho had astronomical meaning. X in Roman numerals is also the number 10, the number of sephiroth and the number of the wheel of fortune card which represents the calendar, the system of measuring time through Saturn on the wheel of 8 spokes, or two overlapping X's.

While this shows Gnostics had some pretty in depth number theories, we can also see in Orphism that the Titans or Giants lured the baby Dionysus away with toys, some of these being a knucklebone or dice, a wheel or bullroarer, a mirror, a golden apple and a ball. In some Greek traditions Eros was the playmate of Ganymede, the Trojan brother of Ilus and they would play knucklebones, sometimes with Zeus himself there on Mt Ida, a place not far from Troy where the meteorite fell as described in the Aeneid. Not only this, in some accounts King Dardanus is said to have survived the flood by taking refuge on Mt. Ida, but I should also point out there are other legends of other survivors as with IO in Egypt. (This is not to be confused with the Mt Ida on Crete, the place where Zeus was raised, though these are connected Qabbalistically.) In the Orphic hymn of Phanes AKA Protogonos translated by Thomas Taylor we read, "Increase of joy and wonder, pierce the very vault of darkest heaven with flashing pinions formed of glittering sapphire and of gold interleaved with spangles of the stars and whirling circles of universal fire." Phanes is another form of Eros and according to Apollonius Rhodius, (Argonautica 3. 132 ff) Aphrodite tells her son, "I will give you one of Zeus's lovely toys, the one that his fond nurse Adrasteia made for him in the Idaian cave when he was still a child and liked to play. It is a perfect ball; Hephaistos himself could not make you a better toy. It is made of golden hoops laced together all the way round with double stitching; but the seams are hidden by a winding blue band. When you throw it up, it will leave a fiery trail behind it like a meteor in the sky."

In the "Dionysiaca" by Nonnos, we can read of Dionysus going to war in India (Pseudo-Apollodorus tells us he set up pillars there) but we can also read of Harmonia, the wife of Cadmus and the daughter of Aphrodite and Ares, or alternatively Zeus and Electra, or yet others say she was the daughter of Atlas. At one point, (Dionysiaca 41. 263, the next book after the founding of Tyre) we can read the story which details the oracles of Harmonia, seven tablets explicitly corresponding to the planets which give a history of all time. Sent by Astraea, Aphrodite goes to visit her daughter Harmonia whose house was "self-built, shaped like the great universe with its four quarters joined in one. Four portals were about that stronghold standing proof against the four Aetai." (Winds) At this home Harmonia is like a fate goddess and served by Eurynome and others, Aphrodite asks her which is the first city and is also in line with the divine laws. Consulting the tablets we learn they were written by Ophion the counterpart of Eurynome, the tablet of Mercury is gold and corresponds to the law, while that of Venus is "a rosy tablet, for it has the shape of your (Aphrodite) star in the East," but the answer to the question is found on the Saturn tablet and is shown to be Beirut. Previous to this, the Virgin Astraea had been shown to have nursed Beroe, goddess of Beirut and daughter of Aphrodite with milk and honey and so she is called "nurse of the whole universe." Then Aphrodite looks into the oracles and sees that in the reign of Augustus, Zeus will "give to divine Rome the lordship" of the world and to Beroe will "grant the reins of law" and that her ships will pacify the rebellion of Cleopatra. Given that Nonnos cites an oracle of Rome's divine providence and otherwise shows himself to be in favor of the state, that he is so interested in Tyre and Beirut and made some of the Dactyls into telchines, that later in his life he wrote a paraphrase of the Gospel of John and became a Christian, it's clear that like Virgil he is part of the theocratic tradition and a tool of the Trojan Romans.

However Nonnos knows his mythology and so sheds light on Pausanias's text the "Description of Greece" (9.8.4 onwards, but before as well as many details) where we can read how Cadmus founded the Greek city of Thebes, which had a tower or citadel called the Cadmea, the city also had 7 gates named for important figures in the region's history. One gate was named for his sister Electra, another gate was named for Proteus who could be a sea god and son of Poseidon, or more likely this could be the twin brother of Acrisius (father of Danae) whose daughters were driven mad by Dionysus. Another gate was named for Amphion as he invented the harp here, but he is another twin to his brother Zethus who are sons of Zeus after he raped their mother, they built the walls of Thebes and the gate may also be named after Zethus's son. Amphion married the Lydian princess Niobe, whose children were killed by Artemis and Apollo and so along with Nonnos there is a strong Anatolian influence here. In fact Pausanias tells us there was also a gate for Zeus Hypsistos "the most high" monotheistic form of Zeus, so that as Cadmus is Phoenician, here we have El Elyon who would become the Jewish god. While the next gate explained is that of King Ogyges who is sometimes said to be the son of Poseidon, other times the son of Cadmus, his name is etymologically related to the Greek word for "gigantic" but also possibly Okeanos the titan of the ocean and there are myths in which he survives a flood and I am not the first to suspect he is the same as the Jewish King Og of Bashan. (The name may also be related to Gog and Magog, but see also the myth of Omphale and King Gyges of Lydia) At one point Pausanias also tells of a log that fell from heaven at the wedding of Semele, who we will remember is the daughter of Cadmus and mother of Dionysus, but that this log was adorned with bronze by Polydorus and called Dionysus Cadmus. Among many other telling things about the Pagan origins of Christianity, Clement in his Stromata quotes an oracle that says "A pillar to the Thebans is joy-inspiring Bacchus." Now Cadmus was credited with inventing bronze working and a zinc compound named cadmea used in creating bronze takes its name from him, so then he could well be the source of orichalcum, but at any rate this Dionysus pillar sounds much like that of Solomon's according to Josephus. Pausanias does also tell us that on the road to Thebes is "a small enclosure with pillars in it" and that the birds will not sit on these pillars, nor the animals come near so the Greek city of Thebes is certainly an important centre for the theocratic cult.

Cadmus and Harmonia also had a daughter named Ino who became queen of Thebes, in her myth she was the second wife of King Athamas and hated her twin step children Phrixus and Helle. So she secretly burnt the crops of the locals, who then went to the oracle in desperation, but Ino had bribed the oracle messengers and got them to say the oracle wanted Phrixus to be sacrificed. The twin's blood mother the goddess Nephele realized what was happening and sent a flying golden ram to rescue them, but Helle fell off the ram and into the ocean, the region then being named Hellespont in her honour. Phrixus flew on to Colchis and was welcomed by King Aeëtes (who originally came from Corinth and who's name means "eagle") who gave him his daughter in marriage, in gratitude Phrixus gave him the golden fleece which was placed on a tree under the protection of a dragon, later it was taken by Jason and the argonauts. Ino then raised Dionysus in what is most likely to be the original form the banker Dionysus cult, as opposed to all the other forms of Dionsus worship, though much of this is obscure.

So from all this we can see the knowledge of the Watchers and knowledge of Adam, Seth, Enoch, Noah and Shem as taught to them by various angels are all quite mixed together and inextricably linked with each other, but also Pagan religions. As the knowledge is attributed to these various people, the variations in the story are the result of different schools of thought, or different interpretations and political interests gaining access to pretty much the exact same pillars or oral knowledge. Elements of the original myth can be found here and there and so it is decoding the book of Adam and reconstructing the mythical universal language, requires an open mind and knowledge of many religions and so we cannot get hung up on elitist notions of dualism. Since "Judaism" is relatively young we can see that while the various myths vary slightly, clearly with so many sources in agreement about so much, Judaism is the syncretism of Paganism, Hinduism and much African wisdom. (Which is precisely why they were demonized) This Qabbalistic tradition was then stolen and turned in to Judaism and instead of being presented as the universal language it was created to be, it is presented as the original source of all religion, with all other religions being "demonic" blasphemy. That is Nimrod seized the knowledge of the international mystics under the guise of Abraham and through people like Eusebius and Snorri, the idea was created that Judaism came first, that all other religions were demonic offshoots spread by kings, who as I have shown are in the same family as Abraham and the Roman emperors. While through the "Indo-European" migrations there may still be a common origin to these non Abrahamic traditions, the ancient Qabbalistic precursor to Judaism carried on underground, as detailed in the legends of the antediluvian wisdom.

In general though Enoch is much more Jewish, while Seth is the most Gnostic, but through tracing the history of Occult practices we can see they all have the same root. As Enoch is Thoth Hermes I don't want to say the Enochian or Merkabah line of mythologies is all purely theocratic, yet Enoch comes to rule the Watchers and so in general Enoch represents the corrupted Egyptian knowledge. According to Epiphanius, the Gnostic Marcion says both Enoch and Solomon did not get salvation and I have read that Mandaeans associated Enoch with Hermes and so when I read in the Haran Gawaitha how it speaks of the false teachings of Mercury, it would seem they had no respect for him either. Shortly after this the text tells how we must be saved from the "children of Krun" which some have identified as Chronos. The book of Enoch is quoted in the Gnostic text the Pistis Sophia as well as the bible, as the simple fact is, that it was widely read by both orthodox and heretical groups.

Enoch does not come up much in the Gnostic texts we have, but the Pistis Sophia does say that Enoch wrote two books of Yew (or Books of Jeu) and so while the Pistis Sophia is of a pretty different style than most Gnostic texts, we know Enoch was definitely not universally hated by them. We can also find Sophia or personified wisdom in the Book of Enoch (Ch 42) and she goes to Earth and returns to heaven in a way that that brings to mind Gnosticism and the Greek myth of Astraea, (not the Aeneid) but we can also find aspects of the much older Sumerian mythology as well. In chapter 92 of Enoch we can read, "In consequence of that which has been shown to me, from my heavenly vision and from the voice of the holy angels have I acquired knowledge; and from the tablet of heaven have I acquired understanding.” Then a little later in the chapter, “the righteous shall be selected from the everlasting plant of righteousness; and to them shall be given the sevenfold doctrine of his whole creation.”

While I do not want to be dualistic, or say that there is no spiritual value to Kabbalah or Merkabah texts, as it is the book of Enoch which found its way in to Dead Sea scrolls and Royal Arch Masonic rituals and because these Enoch traditions are often sympathetic to the Watchers, as we have seen, it is at least contrary to many Gnostic ideas, if not the corrupted form of them. While I did say that Lucifer was not among the Watchers, I did also say there are many Occult traditions which explain the archangel of Earth, Uriel (or Auriel) is Lucifer and that this is one of the main allies of Enoch in this book and given that he is a father of a demon, he too is a Watcher. There is plenty about the books of Enoch that is suspicious and given the murderous mind of Ezekiel and the very notion of “throne mysticism,” Merkabah does often seem to be the theocratic tradition which grew out of the book of Raziel. In some cases some Merkabah mystics may be Gnostic like figures trying to heal the minds of Jews, as I said, chariots and thrones do come up in Gnostic texts and so there are a few “heretics” that could fall in to this category, but as with any religious tradition, you have to judge each person as an individual, otherwise you are by definition prejudice. In a certain sense everyone gaining their own throne or astral body is pretty Anarchist, that is we are all royalty, but given the symbolism and political implications of the teachings, standard Judaism is the most theocratic, Gnosticism the most Anarchist, while Merkabah and Kabbalah are quite mixed and diverse, but they are all rooted in Pagan Tantra.

There are contradictions to be worked out for sure, but this is simply the way it is with mythology, the Torah and old testament contradicts even itself so much that it is not worth me going in to here, let alone disparate Gnostic and Pagan traditions which emphasize individualism. No I do not write all this to promote any particular dogma, merely to show that some work to spread awareness and information, while others, the theocrats work to monopolize and destroy knowledge. I have shown that the Jews themselves claim that Yahweh is in league with the Watchers and demons and consider them to be the ones who laid the cornerstone of their most holy temple, a place from which their god rules over Earth and humanity. I have also shown the Gnostics oppose them as the archons and seek to rid their minds and brains of their influence so that they may themselves become divine and “kingless.” These Gnostics not wishing to rule anyone also seek to preserve the knowledge that existed before the “flood,” before the theocrats took the wisdom, distorted it and monopolized it.

There are still further Gnostic allusions of their attempts to preserve their ancient wisdom, either from the murderous god who called up the flood, or from others who hate knowledge. Some may think I exaggerate the Abrahamic hatred for knowledge, but in many cases these texts which describe the Gnostic attempts to preserve the even older ancient wisdom were themselves destroyed by the Christians, save only the Nag Hammadi texts found hidden and buried in Egypt. To get back to the Apocalypse of Adam which are the words of Adam to his son Seth, it ends by telling of a “rock of truth” on which the words of the true god are placed on a mountain by angels. Also in the text Allogenes, in the end we read that he sought to preserve his knowledge by writing a book and placing it a top a mountain, while in the gospel of the Egyptians, Seth places that work too on a mountain and we learn its name is Charaxio. Again at the end of Zostrianos it says he wrote his teachings on three wooden tablets and further more, there is a text which is itself called the “Three Steles of Seth.”

Finally we can see allusions to all this and especially the international nature of the Gnostics in the “Hymn of the Pearl” which symbolically speaks of rubies from India and tissue paper from China, but also of course Egypt and the land and children of Babel where the “demons of the Sarbug labyrinth” dwell. (Sarbug is in Iran, but the protagonist is also from Parthia which is close by. The labyrinth also turns up in the Naassene Sermon) The protagonist searches for a pearl under the sea in Egypt and which is guarded by a serpent and he receives a letter from his parents that is itself a letter or note and it turns into an eagle, it goes on to speak of a “book of heroes.” In reference to something like the dream coat of Joseph it says of a robe that “the image of the King of Kings shone in full over it, and like the Sapphire stone were its resplendent hues.”

What is more, the Pistis Sophia tells us that two books of Yew were written by Enoch “discoursing with him out of the tree of the Gnosis and out of the tree of the life. And I made him deposit them in the rock Ararad, (Mount Ararat) and set the ruler Kalapataurōth, who is over Skemmūt, on whose head is the foot of Yew, and who surroundeth all æons and Fates,--I set up that ruler as Watcher over the Books of Yew on account of the flood, and in order that none of the rulers may be envious of them and destroy them.” As W, U, O and V or Vav are interchangeable in Hebrew, scholars know this “Yew” is also Jeu, (or Jew) which in Hebrew would be spelled YV or Yod Vav, the very same letters found in the centre of the rhombic dodecahedron! Not only this, the Pistis Sophia is linking the preflood knowledge of Enoch directly to Noah's ark by placing it on the same mountain, thus strengthening my own interpretation as the ark being symbolic of this knowledge. Now scholars do have some texts from the “Bruce Codex” which have been given the title of the Books of Jeu as they seem to fit the style of the Pistis Sophia and the themes attributed to those works. So in the Second book of Jeu (Chapter 44) and the Pistis Sophia (Chapter 143 and other places) it tells of “seven voices” which I believe to be indicative of the seven vowels, but also “49 powers” which could be permutations of the vowel mantras. These would numerologically correspond to descriptions of Metatron/Enoch and as there are also 49 demons of Yaldabaoth in the Pistis Sophia, it seems to have something to do with the 49 demons in the Gnostic text “On the origin of the world” and could even correspond to the 49 keys of John Dee's Enochian system. So while scholars are not exactly sure it is the same one mentioned in the Pistis Sophia, for many reasons they really do seem to fit together and especially with this same antediluvian Enochian magick I have been explaining.

As in Hebrew I and Y and J are interchangeable we can see a relationship between words like Yao or IAO, or Yew as in the Gnostic books of Jeu which is also known as the books of Ieou and is quite possibly connected to the name Iacchus, another name for Bacchus or Dionysus. As we have seen from these names of “god” it is made up of vowels and the secret name or “lost word” could be nothing more than the seven vowels corresponding to the seven planets as in Greek mysticism and Qabalah. A name of vowels is a mantra which represents the full range of potential human syllables in one word and so is a perfect symbol of the universal spirit of the Adamic language. (Not so different from AUM) The Gnostic book of Jeu is very striking in all this as Jeu is the name given as the true “god” as it is also referred to in the Pistis Sophia. The books of Jeu and the Pistis Sophia are among the most practical in terms of Gnostic magick and they both make reference to “Watchers” who are guards at the gates of the treasury of light, that as in other Gnostic texts, once a person knows certain passwords they can pass the archons and leave the prison and enter the treasury of light or Pleroma. Zorokothora Melchizedek is found in both texts as well, or more plainly Melchizedek, he does seem to parallel themes found in the Paraphrase of Shem as he acts like a psychopomp for the “particles of light.” (See PGM VII. 505-28 for a spell that calls on Aion ZARACHTHO which the footnotes connect to this form of Melchizedek. Also PGM V 96-172 is called the “Stele of Jeu the hieroglyphist” which makes demons obedient to the magician) Similar to Manichaeism and other Gnostic philosophies, in the Paraphrase of Shem the “darkness” is having things separated from it and purification is occurring, the light is being reclaimed from the archons who hold it prisoner. From a more purely Alchemical perspective, we could say the Earth is a tremendous engine which continually generates and purifies spiritual light or consciousness for the divine. In the Pistis Sophia, Melchizedek is distinct from Sabaoth, but Sabaoth here is linked to Jesus as well and so in a variety of texts these entities are symbolically linked yet distinct. The books of Jeu contain rituals and many sigils referring to spirits organized in to 12 ranks with 12 each and so 144 total, which suggests the treasury of light is the New Jerusalem, a place which does indeed give off it's own light. There is even a diagram repeated often which depending on how you look at it, looks like a six or seven layered step pyramid!

We do know that on Coptic and Greek magical papyri that IEOU was often invoked along with the seven vowels and that not only were these seven vowels arranged in squares and a tetractys, in other places they even had corresponding directions that would create a Greek version of the cube. So then it not unreasonable to think the “seven voices” spoken of in the Books refer to seven vowels or perhaps the seven “words of power” that Gnostics spoke of and are themselves associated with the planets and six directions and so the vowels as well. Given the pyramid diagram in the Books of Jeu this all strongly suggests the Gnostics had their own name which acted like the strong tower of Yahweh and which worked in a similar way to the Ephesian Grammata and magick of Orpheus, but also relates to the seven planetary squares.

Considering this I found if we use the ordinal value of the Greek letters as was also traditional, then “I” as the ninth letter in the alphabet is 9, IH is one potential Greek transliteration of the Hebrew name Yah and is 16, IAO is 25 when spelled with omicron, or as it is sometimes spelled with an omega it is 34, IHY is a potential Greek transliteration of the Hebrew YHV, the name used to seal the six directions in the cube of space and is 36, (There are other ways to transliterate this but IHY is also found as an abbreviation for the name of “god” in the book of Revelations as in the Codex Sinaiticus, the oldest full copy of the New Testament) IEOU is 49, (hence the 49 powers) and the seven vowels together can spell “Jahovah” as IEHΩOYA and add to 81, (Or in the Jewish magical papyri the letters are rearranged as ιωωουηε) which is the value of IAO in regular isopsephy. IAO comes up all over the place in many forms, but in the Pistis Sophia there is a teaching from Jesus which shows it's beneficial side and while the letters of Jahovah are not in the correct planetary order, it does fit a certain pattern on the tree of life. The missing 64 can be made in a variety of ways using a particular vowel only once, I don't know if it was ever used, but the best I could create was ιεαοω, which would be like a long protracted IAO, but there are all kinds of “voces magicae” which could have that value. (SEMIIAK the Gnostic power word for the sun is 64 and so the sun and Mercury are linked here as well) I have already explained how Jahovah is basically the same as the Roman name for Zeus, Jove, but Joscelyn Godwin in the book “Mystery of the Seven Vowels” also points out that the word is connected to the Krishna chant “Jeye” and importantly the Bucchantes followers of Dionysus chant EVOHE. (Iahve an alternative spelling of Jahovah has an ordinal value of 42 in Greek)

Now despite the fact that the Pistis Sophia attributes the books of Jeu to Enoch, it is clear enough that he was still interpreted in a pretty different sense than the Jewish traditions, so that we can see this type of Gnosticism was among the most like Merkabah and Books of Enoch. Yet at the same time the use of a Greek form of the name Jahovah in a positive sense is pretty weird in Gnosticism, what is even more peculiar is that Yew is spelled Yod Vav just like Yaw as the appellation of Yam and King Jehu. However we can see this is no coincidence as Iedud from Sanchuniathon can also be spelled Ieoud which simply adds a Delta to Ieou and this would strengthen my interpretation of him being Yehud or Dionysus mixed with Yahweh. (Note that in Hebrew “Yehud” is spelled YHVD and has a gematria of 25, while “Yehuda” or Judah is spelled YHVDH and so adds a daleth to the tetragrammaton, separating the final heh and its value is 30) Because of this we might suspect that the Pistis Sophia and the Books of Jeu are an attempt to co-opt Gnosticism and given they are among the youngest Gnostic texts we have, they might actually be that, but we can also see quite explicitly in the second book of Jeu chapter 43 that there is a warning not to divulge the teachings in that book to “any woman or to any man who is in any faith of these 72 archons, or who serves them. Neither give them to those who serve the 8 powers of the great archon, who are those who eat the menstrual blood of their impurity and the semen of men.” A little later we explicitly learn that the Gnostics didn't care for the Shemhamphorash either, the author of Jeu tells us the knowledge should only be given to those who are told among other things not to “desire anything, nor to love silver, nor to love gold, nor to invoke the name of the archons, nor the name of their angels, over any matter.”

The Pistis Sophia also has no love for Yaldabaoth which is here definitely distinct from IEOU or the aeons and so while this text has the most theocratic symbolism of all Gnostic texts, there is often a freedom loving message in the text which is certainly far different from that of Christianity and Judaism and it is often hard to see how it could benefit the theocrats. Again since we know both the theocrats and the Gnostics were reading the material that the Zohar calls the book of Raziel, we should not be too surprised that there is similar symbolism and so the Pistis Sophia and Books of Jeu more likely represent the uncorrupted teachings of Enoch, or rather his knowledge of the book of Thoth/Raziel and the Qabalah which was corrupted and turned into Judaism. While the Pistis Sophia speaks of Yew and IAO in a positive way, in chapters 70-71 and other places there is a 7 headed basilisk or serpents which are archons and which Sophia eventually overcomes and steps on their heads. However what sets the Pistis Sophia apart most is that it makes use of the “Odes of Solomon” and so while this is not so connected to the Goetia, Sophia does use the odes to help overcome the archons. To confuse things more, in both the Pistis Sophia and the Books of Jeu we learn of multiple Sabaoths, that Adamas is seen as a tyrannical figure, yet in the Pistis Sophia we see that Yew and Sabaoth the good are on the same side and so this cosmology was certainly not afraid to mix a lot of things in new ways. (The good Sabaoth could be Demurus, while the bad is Jupiter Belus?) The Pistis Sophia also tells us in chapter 140 that along with all the other signs, when Sabaoth is in Sagittarius and Aphrodite goes in to Gemini, “the veils which are between those of the Left and those of the Right, draw themselves aside.” Pistis Sophia speaks of “twin saviours” which play a significant role in it's cosmology, though given the twin influence in other Gnostic teachings it does seem to fit much more with the spiritual interpretation, then as some allegory about the economy. The books of Yew also have a place for twins and yet if Yew is Yam he is also Poseidon and the brother of Sabaoth or Zeus and so despite the wars of theocratic kings posing as these gods, the gods themselves are not necessarily corrupt and we can see here that Typhon/Set is denounced as well and so this text is also all over the place symbolically. So while there was definitely disagreement among various Gnostic groups and this one is certainly the most suspicious in terms of it's Jewish symbolism, it is often really just a matter of aesthetics. Despite the contrary symbolism, when you have a good grasp of Kabbalah/Qabalah you can see basically all the groups have the same underlying message and beneath all the talk of thrones and hierarchies are ideas that are basically Anarchist.

In the unnamed text included with the books of Jeu (or Bruce Codex) there is yet more familiar symbolism, though the exact context of this is too complicated to explain here, this text is among the most important symbolically. Setheus is likened to a ship filled with good things, (the ark) a field with all manner of trees, (Eden) and a city filled with all the races of humanity. (New Jerusalem) The cosmology is based around the anatomy of a being which lives within Setheus and we read, “there are twelve monads making a crown upon its head ; each one makes twelve. (144) And there are ten decads surrounding its shoulders. (100) And there are nine enneads surrounding its belly. (81) And there are seven hebdomads at its feet, and each one makes a hebdomad. (7³) And to the veil which surrounds it like a tower, there are twelve gates. There are twelve myriad powers at each gate, (144) and they are called archangels and also angels.” Now if we multiply those numbers $144 \times 100 \times 81 \times 343 \times 144 = 56609280000$ and this shows a few curious things in it suggesting the New Jerusalem and cube of Venus. First, $56609280000 / 259200$ (10 Platonic years) $= 222264$, then we divide by 294 (or 49×6) $= 756$ (the gematria of which is Lode-stone or magnet, but also “that is the light of Wisdom” and “sephiroth” “and a great stone” the spelling of the letter name “Nun,” “Whirlwind of YHVH” “ages” “years” and a Greek form of Hiram) 756 is then divided by $108 = 7$ then from another approach, $144000 \times 25920 \times (280 \times 117) = 122276044800000$ and if we divide by $56609280000 = 2160!$

Among other things, this unnamed text also has links to the Zohar in that this crown is linked to the Song of Solomon 3:11, a place just after the song describes Solomon's chariot and pillars and his bed surrounded by 60 mighty men and so while clearly more Jewish and containing more theocratic symbolism than other Gnostic works, even describing some Watchers in a positive way, along with the Pistis Sophia they seem to be in a group all their own. We also learn of a demiurge figure who is called a column, though is not regarded in a bad way, his description brings to mind that of Macroprosopus or descriptions of the face of “god” in the Zohar. There is also another being crowned with 365 substances who uses the Pleroma (AKA the treasury of light) as a footstool and so from all this and more we see that the Pistis Sophia and the books of Yew are like Gnostic Merkabah texts and are in many ways in the style of Revelations, yet with ambiguous monist politics just like the Merkabah and Kabbalah. As there is a wide spectrum from the more Pagan and anti Jewish Gnosticism, to the more Jewish Gnosticism and everything between, the choice of symbolism is not always indicative of their politics, as with Revelations John sees himself as one of the true Hebrews, so is especially angry at the false ones who are twisting the original teachings. Aside from some symbolism there is little that is especially theocratic about the Pistis Sophia or Books of Jeu and plenty which would hurt their plans, though much of this interpretation is far too complicated for here and so must be for you to decide.

While I cannot say which Gnostic group “serves the 8 powers of the great archon,” the reference in the Books of Jeu to those who eat semen and menstrual blood strongly suggests the author is referring to antinomian Gnostics and yet the use of the word “neither” shows clearly that the writer considered them to be a distinct group from those who serve the 72 archons. In Ch 147 the Pistis Sophia does also denounce the Tantric sects which eat semen and menstrual blood, this chapter is also homophobic and so it does share this with Judaism, not to mention the Christian like notions of torture for sinners in the afterlife, however it is also among the most feminist. (In the Gospel of Judas in some translations it seems to be homophobic too, but in others we see it is referring to pederasty) So who are the ones who serve the 72 archons? While it could be a reference to those who wrote On the Origin of the World and the Gospel of Judas, there is little evidence to go on, however it is pretty likely that having faced the archons and freed their minds, some Gnostics would call upon them to work magick. The difference is as I have said, that Gnostics use the symbols to raise consciousness, to overcome the influence of the archons, (including human rulers) while Jews and Christians use the symbols to control others in an attempt to conquer the world and hence are basically black magicians ruled by these archons instead of controlling them. The Testament of Solomon even says that when people do not know the names of the angels who rule the demons, that they will be lead astray and in the later Keys of Solomon used by Christian aristocrats, the names of the angels are not included. (Until Dr Rudd reconstructed it)

Given the similar style between the Secret book of John and On the Origin of the world, I am still inclined to believe that the 72 gods are more like the Shemhamphorash who are over the 72 archons that created the human body and that unbeknownst to the writer of the Books of Jeu, some groups quite likely carried on the pre-theocratic versions of the angels as the original gods of the universal fractal. Even if the writer of Jeu was specifically speaking of On the Origin of the World, for those Gnostics they were not the same as the Solomonic demons and they do not appear to be meteorites and never actually fell from heaven. This is in sharp distinction to the archons and in the Origin of the World we learn that after the archons stole 70 years from the life span of Adam, “when Sophia Zoe saw that the rulers of the darkness had laid a curse upon her counterparts, she was indignant. And coming out of the first heaven with full power, she chased those rulers out of their heavens, and cast them down into the sinful world, so that there they should dwell, in the form of evil spirits (demons) upon the Earth.” This line occurs just before the Phoenix section I spoke of and in the Marvin Meyer translation he makes an intriguing footnote here and compares some water pots spoken of in regards to baptism, as being like those which hold the demons in the Testament of Solomon. The text goes on to explain, “Now, when the seven rulers were cast down from their heavens onto the Earth, they made for themselves angels, numerous, demonic, to serve them. (The 7 themselves being the offspring of death or Mott) And the latter instructed mankind in many kinds of error and magic and potions and worship of idols and spilling of blood and altars and temples and sacrifices and libations to all the spirits of the Earth, having their coworker fate, who came into existence by the concord between the gods of injustice and justice.” Clearly then these archons are the Watchers and so we read on, “For all men upon Earth worshipped the spirits (demons) from the creation to the consummation - both the angels of righteousness and the men of unrighteousness.” And that after the “true man” came from above, the truth began to be revealed as spiritual forces inhabited human forms and bit later we read, “For all knowledge is vested in one angel who appeared before them; (Raziel?) he is not without power in the company of the father. And <he> gave them knowledge. Whenever they appear in the world of perdition, immediately and first of all they reveal the pattern of imperishability as a condemnation of the rulers and their forces. Thus when the blessed beings appeared in forms modelled by authorities, they were envied. And out of envy the authorities mixed their seed with them, in hopes of polluting them. They could not. Then when the blessed beings appeared in luminous form, they appeared in various ways. And each one of them, starting out in his land, revealed his (kind of) knowledge to the visible church constituted of the modelled forms of perdition. It (the church) was found to contain all kinds of seed, because of the seed of the authorities that had mixed with it.” (Compare this with the tower church of the Shepherd of Hermas) At the end of the text the archons destroy each other and the last of them, the demiurge destroys himself, then their heavens fall and the stars fall to Earth and all of it goes in to the abyss, but each human goes to the heaven which is in accordance with their nature.

So while the writer of the books of Jeu is definitely more Jewish and ascetic and probably did not like those who wrote On the Origin of the world, if my theories are correct, given that the 72 gods are not fallen and not Watchers, this injunction against those who follow the 72 would more definitely be against the Solomonic theocrats who are trying to corrupt Gnosticism into Christianity. There are so many factions of Gnosticism and so much contrary symbolism it is often pretty impossible to sort out how they related to each other, but On the Origin of the World is among the more Anarchist texts and so given the lack of evidence, I will have to chalk this discrepancy up to the incredible diversity of Gnostic individualism. Keep in mind if all these various stories have a common origin, then as the knowledge in the book of Raziel was disseminated, some parts would be more emphasized in some branches more than others, that over the millenia each branch would be elaborated and so given enough time, some branches would come to be quite contrary to others, especially given the unavoidable cross breeding between theocratic and mystical memes. (I have noticed more than a few similarities between the cosmologies of the Pistis Sophia, the Books of Jeu and the Benbina table, especially as they are interpreted by the scholars I have mentioned above, but I will leave that for another to elaborate.) Rather than simply 2 or 3 clearly differentiated and opposing orthodox dogmas, Gnostics were like philosophical scientists, creating “thought experiments” for “combinatorial analysis” of every possible interpretation in a wide spectrum of beliefs. According to the texts we have, some groups have certain Anarchist tendencies, other have different Anarchist tendencies and violate the tendencies of the others, but it is likely the most Anarchist Gnostic groups were utterly wiped out, with only the words of their persecutors left to decry them. Given that individual Gnostics could have very divergent interpretations of the same texts, that each Gnostic at times may combine ideas from opposing philosophies, my advice would be to read it all and make up your own mind, make up your own system and experiment to find your own truth, find a deity you feel you can trust and pray for them to teach you the truth.

In “Traditional Witchcraft” traditions and Luciferianism and the very recently created Luciferian Gnostic religion, we can see examples of mythologies that were created in modern times which seek to explain these stories as the Watchers opposing the tyrannical Yahweh. These theories hold that the Watchers taught humanity magick in order to free us and that their family lines as through Cain and the Nephilim carried on in family traditions of Witchcraft through what is called “Witchblood.” These modern mythologies may have something to them, plenty of people claim to be carrying on these family traditions, so while I am very skeptical of these Luciferian traditions, I cannot say completely what the truth of this is, but from what I know they contradict all kinds of evidence. These Luciferian mythologies are generally not written in a very academic style, nor do they generally give sources for their claims other than supposed family members and so understanding any historical basis for such traditions is murky at best. As I generally avoid using Abrahamic symbolism as much as possible, I have not studied Luciferianism or Traditional Witchcraft in depth, (This Witchcraft is very distinct from Wicca) but from what I have read there is definitely a lot of problems with the scholarship behind these ideas. While I applaud their efforts to scour the texts of the church relating to “Witchcraft” these Luciferians apparently fail to understand they are dealing with prejudice propaganda which was demonizing Pagan Shamanism and instead they take the church at their word that Witches were worshipping demons. Driven by spite against Christianity these Luciferians take up Witchcraft as if it truly was Satanic, but unless some Witches themselves lost all context for their own traditions, I highly doubt this. Despite the knee jerk reactions and prejudice of Christian conspiracy theorists, I see little to no evidence of these modern Luciferian traditions as having anything to do with government or corporate groups, that is even if the theocrats are in to Lucifer, they have their own private traditions which is more in the vein of Solomonic magick and Free Masonry.

While there is absolutely no evidence they are Cainites in the Gnostic sense, Cain does play an important role in Freemason mythology, but we should find this difference of interpretation no more surprising than the fact that Jesus is also revered in certain forms of Gnosticism and also in Christianity and Masonry. While it is possible, frankly my research finds little to no evidence for Gnostics or medieval Witches having anything to do with Watchers in a positive sense. Though books like Aradia Gospel of the Witches or those in Stregheria and the traditional Witchcraft vein do have some very interesting and valid spiritual ideas behind them, I can't take them as literal history and I doubt most of the mythology is older than the Gospel of Aradia. With that said we can see that Greek Pagan Witches in Thessaly were known to be able to call down the stars from heaven, or "draw down the moon" according to Gorgias, however given the status of "Witches" in Pagan Greece I do not believe this to be part of the theocratic tradition, there is nothing Jewish here, though there is probably some common roots as from Greek necromancy and goeteia. Cainites were something of an abnormality in Gnosticism and even then we can see that even the Christian patriarchs denouncing the Cainite Gnostics made no mention of Masonry, Lucifer, Watchers, or even really demons. Epiphanius clearly states that Cainites believed they were in touch with angels who helped them to break the law and fight the demiurge and if they were Satanists he would surely point this out. As I have mentioned, in many forms of Gnosticism it was believed that a soul could escape the judgement of the archon Sanhedrin by saying the right passwords, or declaring in the right language that you are from above in the Pleroma or something of that nature. This is eerily like the Free Man on the Land movement, yet set in the lower heavens where the archons guard the way to freedom and those they convict must reincarnate. So then while I could see a Cainite Gnostic working magick to thwart these authorities, it would be pretty strange for them to call upon them in most respects and this kind of magick would be more like learning legal loopholes. At the same time it is likely there were a variety of cults associated with Cain and his ilk and if Jewish tradition is to be believed, then all black people, or otherwise a huge chunk of the world's population would be derived from his line. While I do not take this nearly so literally, it is still true there could be any number of traditions that were associated with Cain and which are very distinct from Cainite Gnostics, but are now long gone thanks to Abrahamic oppression.

Coming from a monist perspective I do not think any symbols are "evil" and so it would suit me just fine if it turned out Witches were engaged in rebellion against Yahweh by using magick taught by the Watchers. I find it a perfectly fascinating interpretation that makes for a great myth, but my own research shows quite clearly Gnostics saw them as archons and so were much more antagonistic to the Watchers than Jews, who repeatedly and explicitly say their god controls them. What is more, as I have shown the Watchers and Goetic demons are intimately related with notions of kingship and theocracy and so are completely contrary to both Witches who were recluse outsiders (even in Pagan cultures) and Gnostics who saw themselves as the "kingless race." The Goetic demons are the servants of people like Solomon and Yahweh himself, so it would be quite strange that the radically anti-Yahweh Gnostic Cainites would want anything to do with them.

Epiphanius has much more that is relevant here and explains the various Gnostic opinions about the archon Watchers, (as with the Sethians etc) but for the most part you should just read him yourself. Perhaps most important of all, the sect of Gnostics called "Archontics" is according to Epiphanius related to Sethians and is said by him to believe that the archon of the seventh heaven, variously identified as Yaldabaoth or Sabaoth gave birth to the devil, that the devil rules on Earth in defiance, but that none of these figures were held in esteem. The Archontics also believe the devil impregnated Eve to give birth to Cain and Abel, (which suggests twins) and that they as Archontic Gnostics come from Seth who was fathered by Adam. As in the Gospel of the Egyptians, Cain and Abel are sometimes thought of as archons themselves and here they are listed right after Adonaios who is the same as Sabaoth. So while the devil is against Sabaoth, the Archontics say Jews come from Cain and the devil and that Sabaoth is their god. While Epiphanius does not give much detail and is refuting them, we can see many of my own theories backed up by the Archontics, that they saw themselves in opposition to the archon powers which rule the world, "principalities" which Epiphanius as a creator of Christian orthodoxy thinks to be rightfully placed in power by the Jewish god. We can see this also in the "Recognitions of Clement" which is mostly Roman Christian propaganda and lies, but in the sections regarding polytheism and guardian angels, it says that Simon Magus argued the god of the Jews is but the head of the Shemhamphorash pantheon and was chosen by lot and is not the true god. So then we can see that he has antagonism to the principalities/angel rulers as well, while Peter is all for them and cites Exodus 22:28 as commanding obedience to them.

In fact according to their persecutor Epiphanius, the Cainites interpret John 8:44 as saying the Jews are descended from the devil, which is just as Jesus says in the bible. Here there is no sign of the Cainites being devil worshippers or honouring the archons, on the contrary, "They are tracing the devil's ancestry to the Lord of all, the God of the Jews, the Christians and all men, by saying that he is the father of the devil's father." Cainites did however identify with the likes of the Sodomites and so could be connected to those who wrote the Paraphrase of Shem, as I explained before they are also said to have had a Gospel of Judas and while it is questionable if it is the same as the one I have already cited, if it is the same it would make them against Nimrod as well and so they would be among the most opposed to the Watchers. So while this explanation is not totally clear, it would seem that for Cainites, Yaldabaoth gave birth to Sabaoth and Sabaoth in turn gave birth to the devil and he gave birth to the Jews and so despite their appreciation for Cain, they do not interpret him as coming from either the Watchers or Satan. When taken out of context this might appear as racist, and for Christians, John 8:44 was and is openly interpreted in racist ways and as justification for anti-Semitism, but as these Gnostic groups included Semites and also saw Christians as following this Satanic tradition, we can see it is actually a retort against the oft stated opinion that Jews are the chosen people destined to rule the world and that the rest of us are just mud blood, or the "mixed multitude."

As for other Gnostic interpretations, while it is a much later text, the "Gospel of the Secret Supper" does share many qualities with this conception of the archons and their relation to humanity. This text belonged to Bogomils, who gave it to the Cathars, but what concerns us most here is that the Cathars taught the god of the old testament was the devil, that Catholicism is devil worship and that according to this text, humans are angels imprisoned in the body created by Yahweh/Satan. When you know what to look for, much of this text, especially at the beginning strongly hints at Satan and his fallen angels being like meteorites, but more than this it also says that Enoch serves Satan and his 67 books are dictated by him. (Remember 67 is Binah and Zayin) There is plenty of familiar motifs in the text, such as the book of life and also the end of the world being connected to stars falling from the sky, but this is only one example of the references to Revelations. There are also legends of the Cathars possessing the holy grail and that some escaped the massacres with it, or with some mystical texts and so given their feelings towards Catholicism, Enoch and Yahweh, they are the most likely candidates for spreading the Templar heresy against theocratic tyranny. At the very least, from the Gospel of the Secret supper it is pretty clear the Cathars opposed the Goetic/Watcher demons who rule the church and that this played a much stronger role in their theology than academics currently think.

The strongest evidence I could find that was even close to suggesting the Gnostics worked with the fallen angels comes from their persecutor Irenaeus. In Book 1 Chapter 15 he quotes a "divine elder" who accuses Marcus the magician of working magick "by means of Azazel, that fallen and yet mighty angel." As Irenaeus does not have first hand knowledge of this, in context of the rest of what he says, it is easy to see that this is the usual slanderous rhetoric of Christians who think any non Christian who can perform miracles is under the power of the devil. If there was any substantial evidence of Marcus actually calling up Azazel or making him a part of his theology, then Irenaeus, who previously went in to quite some detail about this theology, would have made it the centrepiece of his polemic, instead he mentions it as an afterthought. Given that other Gnostics are against the fallen angels and there is no mention of the rest of the Watchers or Nephilim, that despite his use of familiars and magick, the system of Marcus has little to nothing in common with Solomonic magick and so this would be quite a strange exception. So instead we see Irenaeus is just throwing the idea out there to demonize his opponent, as was common he was using the name Azazel for the devil rather than referencing Enoch, not unlike Christians today who think Voodoo and Islam and every other religion are “Satanic.”

It is true that in the Sepher Maphteah Shelomoh there is a spell or “Operation of Simon Magus” which calls up the devil to ask him questions. While this particular spell is not black magick as I have defined it, given what we know of Simon Magus's cosmology, both from his own texts and the descriptions of his persecutors, we know he belongs to the Tantric semen/menstrual blood eaters and was against Yahweh and the 72. While Simon was a magician and likely worked with daemons, we can see that this text is very much based on Jewish magick and so it is incredibly unlikely to have anything to do with the man, this notion is so off base in terms of Simonian doctrine, that I only cite it here for the sake of completeness.

Simon Magus does seem to have connections to the Merkabah however, for example the Christian Cyril of Jerusalem in his Catechetical Lectures, vi. 15 says that Simon Magus used a chariot drawn by demons. According to G.R.S. Mead, in the Christian text the “Acts of Nereus and Achilleus” he is said to have planned to ascend to heaven from a wooden tower in a chariot of fire drawn by demons, though he was defeated by “Peter” in a magickal duel and fell to the Earth and so while we must be sceptical of Chrstian propaganda, this is clearly a reference to Enoch and Elijah.

While we can question his credibility, it is also true that Hippolytus (Book VII) says the Carpocratians made use of demons and magick and thought they could learn to control the archons, yet he also says they hated the angels who made the world and that by hating the archons we become more powerful magicians. Certainly if the archons are a brain disease, a person who faces their demons and overcomes their ego would gain the use of circuits inhabited by those archons and the Carpocratians fit much more into the semen and menstuel blood eater category and so would be engaged in Tantric practices to do this kind of brain alchemy. (If the archons are corporations, their assets can be taken over by syndicalists, or liquified and the wealth redistributed.) It is true an enlightened person who is one with all would have no problem with the archons and so given the sheer diversity of Gnostics, as I have said, some groups probably did work with them to heal the mind, body and spirit and at times quite possibly even for revolutionary purposes. However no one, not the Christians or the ascetic Gnostics seem to think the Gnostic antinomians are much more than a joke, that they are not capable of much at all, let alone international banking conspiracies or running the Roman government. Another thing we have to remember is that there were many Gnostic cosmologies and so even if some were working with demons or archons for magick, they are not neccessarily the same 72 demons of Solomon. Really since meteorites falling from heaven would have been such a powerful event, pretty well all religions would have to find some kind of interpretation for it, at least if they claimed to understand nature. However given that the Watchers gave birth to human hybrids and many Gnostics were against having children, these kinds of Gnostics would especially be against them. This aversion to procreation was partly why Gnostics ate semen and menstuel blood, hence in some ways, some forms of Gnosticism are their own form of death cult, albeit one which is paradoxically very life affirming. But then living under oppressive rule in a system you despise is not very encouraging for someone to want to have children, just as many Anarchists today choose not to have kids. Christians on the other hand reproduce as much as possible to destroy all nature and build up their armies for expanding their empire. The writings of Hippolytus regarding the Carpocratians does not give any of the usual details regarding the Watchers, for example it does not say these archons have anything to do with Solomon or that there are 72 of them and so as we will see, it is quite likely to be a very different system.

While the Church fathers provide some of the best explanations of the Gnostics that we have, this is admittedly cursory and from reading the Gnostic texts themselves and knowing their proclivity for complex symbolism and secret codes, it is easy enough to see the Christians take things out of context and have a rather superficial understanding, not to mention a tendency for exaggeration or outright lies and theocratic propaganda. At any rate the Carpocratians, the Cainites, the Simonians and the sect of Marcus were among the most Anarchist and Tantric and so they are among the least likely to try and set up a theocracy and certainly not a Christian or capitalist theocracy. If we are to weigh the total evidence, we have seen that there are multiple admissions that Azazel has to do with the Jewish and Trojan/Christian traditions as in the Sibylline Oracles, books which that hypocrite Epiphanius himself follows. As for the Gnostics there is scant evidence they have any respect for Solomon or his magick and every reason to believe they hated the vast majority of archons and Watchers. So while there are some accusations made by the Church fathers of black magick amongst the Gnostics, or that they were swindling rich people, it is kind of like going to Mein Kampf for your information about the Jews, the difference being the Christians actually succeeded in their genocide. If we were to imagine a hardcore conservative fundamentalist televangelist and we were to ask him his position on queer vegetarian psychedelic Anarchist heretics, he would not have a very objective view of the subject, and even if he tried his best, he would misunderstand all kinds of things, especially regarding the entheogenic experience. This kind of misunderstanding is seen with Marcus turning people in to prophets after taking communion, also, given the other arguments John Allegro makes in his works, stories of eating menstrual blood and semen were really likely to be code for Amanitas, though eating such bodily fluids is definitely a long held practice in Tantra and so it would not be surprising at all if Gnostics did it too. Given the importance of the fertility cult and the associations of mushrooms with children as explained by Allegro, Amanitas might be more applicable to accusations of Gnostics eating phoetus's or Esau's red porridge, though each Gnostic group would of had different practices and different symbolism. So while I even agree that Gnostics probably did most of the things they are accused of and "criticized" for, most of these criticisms are based on their persecutors own prudish insanity and OCD authoritarianism and are quite clearly taken out of context and largely misrepresented. Who knows, maybe some of the Gnostics were working some form of black magick, given how they were oppressed, facing extermination and a tyrannical Roman government I can hardly blame them, that is without such tactics it is pretty impossible to fight a revolution against those who would exterminate you, but this would still be quite different from what the Solomonic demons are said to do in the Testament.

The Books of Jeu and the Pistis Sophia are definitely a distinct flavour of Gnosticism and as it is part of the same tradition, IEOU would refer to the original "preflood" tradition of "Enoch" rather than the god of "Abraham" or Yaldabaoth. While these texts are explicitly antagonistic to the 72 archons, as Gnosticism is monist we can see that here the archons in this sect do serve a purpose in the grand scheme of things and they too are part of the oneness that must be made whole. In a "fragment" from the first book of Jeu we read, "Save all my members which have been scattered since the foundation of the world in the 24 invisible emanations and their archons and their gods and their lords and their archangels and their angels and their decans and their ministers; and gather them all together and take them to the light." (That is 7 orders of entities in 24 emanations) So we see the problem of evil which various philosophies and religions seek to answer is like the unified field theory of physics, it may never be worked out fully in words, but it is the ultimate goal. The average ceremonial magicians of today generally have anti-authoritarian tendencies and by no means do I wish to suggest we need to start a Witch hunt against such people, by far most of them have nothing to do with conspiracies. It is always tempting to use those with different spiritual views as "scape goats" but we must be careful not to project our own demons on to others, so it is only leaders in hierarchies and capitalists which I have a problem with, as they are by definition black magicians no matter what their ontology or deity.

I am neither attracted to nor repulsed by the figure of Lucifer and as I have said I try to stay away from Abrahamic symbolism as much as possible, finding the Pagan traditions to be much more vital and profound. If modern Luciferians are inspired by Gnosticism that is fine, but from a historical perspective I see little basis to their ideas and so apart from some practical ritual ideas found in Traditional Witchcraft or "Sabbatic Witchcraft," I personally find Luciferianism rather boring. Luciferians then have often fallen in to their own form of knee jerk dualist prejudice against Christians and so turned demons into gods, yet for the most part they reject the Pagan gods which were originally demonized! While they are generally freedom loving, they have for the most part failed to understand Anarchism as spiritual or even political truth. "Satanists" while not generally part of the government are often prone to forms of elitism and hypocrisy as well and here I will add an amusing note that Anton LaVey, the founder of modern "Satanism" called on the Shemhamphorash or angels in his "Satanic" rituals.

It is true that Mason's are in some ways Luciferians, they refer to Venus as the "blazing star," though as we have seen "Lucifer" can mean very different things to very different people. From a Roman or Greek god, to an angel who is distinct from Satan, to Jesus himself and the archangel Uriel, not to mention a variety of more modern cosmologies, the planet Venus is an obvious choice for astrotheological mythology. However he is generally only associated with Satan or evil by Christians, people who are unable to comprehend non literal awareness and often seem to think that all other people secretly believe the bible and are for some reason consciously and intentionally worshipping evil. (Very few Satanists are like this and those which are, are just spiteful towards Christians.) Instead like say the Yazidis of Iraq with the "peacock angel" they may see "Satan" as the ruler of this world, who is flawed yet is serving humanity and god and this may be like the Gnostic interpretation of Sabaoth in some cases. As we have seen, even Judaism sees that Satan is not so much the personification of evil, but a servant of god, his prosecutor against human souls in order to test them.

As the Jews clearly understand, if "god" is "good" and all knowing and "god" created Satan, then the inescapable conclusion is that "god" created Satan for a reason and with full knowledge of how he would act. This reason then must also serve "good" and so even if Satan has bad intentions, he is part of "god's" will and so is ultimately "good." For this reason it is foolish for Christians to hate Satan and also foolish for Satanists to love Satan in rebellion against "god." But since Christians are often so terrible at logic and generally authoritarian, they will ignore other people's interpretations and insist that everyone in to the Occult is Luciferian and all Luciferians are consciously worshipping evil. Due to such prejudices and mental deficiencies they are easily mislead when trying to understand secret societies or politics in general and so can be manipulated in to hysterically fighting anything they think is "Satanic." So to then we should not think Lucifer a good or a bad symbol, it is the goddess Venus, Jesus and Satan all in one. So while some Luciferians or Satanists may work with the Goetic demons out of a kind of spite for the Abrahamic traditions, as we have seen this is quite ignorant as it denies oneness and the fact is these demons serve Yahweh and are commanded in his name or by his angels. Any hierarchical actions are from archon influence and born of dualism and an ignorance of oneness and true gnosis and so is black magick, it doesn't matter if you pray to Jesus or Satan, or even Buddha. If you devote all your metaphysical energies to gratifying your ego, you may not be doing "evil," but will have no energy left to raise your awareness, but if you devote your energies to raising your awareness, you will have little need of ego gratification. The urge to scapegoat any symbol, any one entity for all the problems of the world is a projection of your ego, it is the desire to avoid taking responsibility for your own actions and so this is why I am much more of a Pagan, it isn't based on tautologies and cognitive dissonance and so isn't nearly such a mind fuck. This is just as true as if I were to blame the Jews or the Babylonians for all the problems of the world, as reality is one, true peace and Anarchy can only come when all opposites are reconciled, so then this is a major theme of Revelations, as it ultimately shows how this peace can be achieved.

We can see from the Torah and the book of Revelations that Lucifer is indeed related to all this as with the Lapiz Exilis, but let us look at a few quotes to see how. Lucifer or “morning star” is not really a common term in the bible and as we have seen, Jesus refers to himself as Lucifer and the Catholic Virgin Mary also carries the title and so something fishy is obviously going on. First in Isaiah 14:12-15 a Babylonian king is compared to Lucifer or Venus and we read, “How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High. (El Elyon) Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.” This clearly refers to the same traditions I have been going in to, we see the king wanting to go higher than the heavens like with the tower of Babel, we see the throne or Merkabah, we see the mountain of the Elohim or axis mundi in the north and this is itself telling as Mars and the tower card are found on the north face of the cube of space and finally we read that Lucifer is cast down in to the pit like a meteorite or Azazel. (The Gospel of the Secret Supper makes Yahweh out to be like Lucifer by referencing Isaiah here.) However there is much more and this Lucifer king of Babylon fits the story of the god Athtar, who is a male form of Ishtar (like Astaroth in the Goetia) and in the Ugaritic texts he is a god of Venus who tried to replace Baal when he was temporarily dead. Athtar failed at this however and sitting in the throne of Baal, he was too short to reach the “footstool” (schethiya) and so “ruled in the Earth” which could mean he became king of the Earth (like Nimrod) or some interpret this to mean he went to the land of the dead or a pit of hell. Attar may possibly be depicted as two twin deities Shachar and Shalim, who are also gods of Venus as the morning and evening stars, they are also the sons of El.

Isaiah can further be compared to Revelations chapter 18 which is very anti-capitalist and anti-government, here we read things like “Fallen! Fallen is Babylon the Great! She has become a dwelling for demons” “for her sins are piled up to heaven, (Like the tower) and God has remembered her crimes.” “When the kings of the Earth who committed adultery with her and shared her luxury see the smoke of her burning, they will weep and mourn over her.” “The merchants of the Earth will weep and mourn over her because no one buys their cargoes anymore.” “And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all.” “Your merchants were the world’s important people. By your magic spell all the nations were led astray.” Babylon here is symbolized as the whore and here again we read references to Venus symbolism and what appears to be a meteorite falling in to the sea and this is obviously depicting the banking/theocratic cult as being behind it. As Babylon is here the name of a woman, she is comparable to Babel in the Gnostic Baruch as a symbol of the banking cult in general, where as the name Omphale would represent the Lydians who invented electrum coins, hence her connection to the meteorite Omphalos.

Then also we hear of the morning stars in the book of Job 38:4-11 when Yahweh is bullying Job for daring to question him, “Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the Earth? Declare, if thou hast understanding. (Binah) Who determined the measures thereof, if thou knowest? Or who stretched the line upon it? Whereupon were the foundations (Yesod) there of fastened? Or who laid the corner-stone thereof, When the morning stars sang together, And all the sons of God (Watchers) shouted for joy?” In Job 41 Yahweh brags about commanding Leviathan and we can see all this fits with the symbolism of Revelations 17:7-8 “I will tell you the mystery of the woman and of the beast that carries her, which has the seven heads and the ten horns. The beast that you saw was, and is not, and is about to come up out of the abyss and go to destruction. And those who dwell on the Earth, whose name has not been written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, will wonder when they see the beast, that he was and is not and will come.”

So from all these texts we see the sons of god are the morning stars, their leader cast in to the abyss and yet it is all done by the will of Yahweh, and this then is the mystery of the whore of Babylon. That is Revelations is telling us in a very roundabout way (which assumes it's readers are already familiar with these ideas) that Yahweh took the cult of the goddess, Shekinah or Asherah, Astarte, Lucifer, Venus and the great mother and made it his own when he took the tablets of destiny, but that Jesus as Lucifer is reclaiming and in the process rescuing Sophia. Part of this is made clear in Proverbs 3:18-19 which explains the original importance of Wisdom or Sophia in the Jewish tradition and how "She is a tree of life to those who take hold of her; those who hold her fast will be blessed. By Wisdom the lord laid the Earth's foundations, by understanding he set the heavens in place." As we have seen the Zohar refers to the tower name of "god" as a home for a goddess, especially relating to Binah and the sea, a goddess of the abyss like Tiamat moving over the face of the waters as in Genesis. So continuing on from Job 38 we read "Or who shut up the sea with doors, When it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb; When I made clouds the garment thereof, And thick darkness a swaddling-band for it, And marked out for it my bound, And set bars and doors, And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; And here shall thy proud waves be stayed?" (the "darkness" here is very comparable to parts of the Paraphrase of Shem) This then is referring to the imprisonment of the ocean goddess or Sophia in the world of matter, the world of the cube which is controlled by Yahweh and Satan, who in turn took the names of the goddess for themselves.

Rev 2:10 "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil (The letter Ayin and Capricorn) shall cast some of you into prison, (Geomantic sign of Carcer and Capricorn) that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown (Kether) of life." As life means Zoa and so Sophia, comparing this to the woman standing on the moon and clothed with the sun bearing a crown of 12 stars, we can see this crown is the zodiac and the zodiac as a whole corresponds to Chokmah, a Hebrew word which means "wisdom" or Sophia in Greek. We can also see that Kether means crown and so we might say this woman (Binah or Saturn which also corresponds to the top three sephiroth) is the middle pillar, (Saturn, Sun and Moon) with the zodiac of Chokmah placed on Kether as the top of the head. We can see a parallel to this in the Empress tarot card and the Pistis Sophia Chapter 59 and some other places in the text where Sophia is given a crown by Jesus and with it she receives the power to defend herself against the archons and to overcome the 7 headed serpent and basilisk etc. This then is also comparable to the Solomonic crown made of 12 monads as in the unnamed text in the Bruce Codex and so here all enlightened people are as equal monarchs in heaven.

Yahweh then is the beast, or rather as Job tells us he is in control of him, as in Revelations, Leviathan or the Roman empire was controlled by the bankers and Rev 13:8 "All who dwell on the Earth will worship him, everyone whose name has not been written from the foundation (Yesod) of the world in the book of life of the Lamb who has been slain." (Gnostics having the very opposite of the theocratic interpretation of the corporation of Christ) But Yahweh and Satan will be overcome and the duality of the ignorant minds will end so again I quote Rev 2:17, "Whoever has ears, let them hear what the (Holy) Spirit says to the churches. To the one who is victorious, (Netzach) I will give some of the hidden manna. I will also give that person a white stone with a new name written on it, known only to the one who receives it." Then in Rev 3:12 we learn "The one who is victorious (Netzach) I will make a pillar in the temple of my God. Never again will they leave it. I will write on them the name of my God and the name of the city of my God, the New Jerusalem, which is coming down out of heaven from my God; and I will also write on them my new name." Notice here Jesus says he has a god and not that he is god and as Asherah literally means "pillar," in this way we can see Jesus will redeem the "name" of Sophia and the great goddess who is the true holy spirit. He will simultaneously bring an end to the banking religion and those who prostitute the goddess as represented by the sea, or Mary Magdalene the prostitute, who in her connection to the virgin Mary is also the morning star. All the seven symbolism of Revelations is clear enough in associating Venus with the religion of John, but that he is following the Gnostic interpretation of the antediluvian pillars is alluded to in Revelations 10. This chapter explains how an angel with a rainbow over his head and fiery pillar legs feeds John a scroll/mushroom that is sweet like honey and after roaring like a lion there are 7 thunders representing 7 voices like in the Pistis Sophia. We can also see like the goddess in “the star” tarot card, or the angel in the “temperance” card that she has one leg on the ground, the other on the sea. The Rainbow is a symbol of the covenant of Noah and we can see in the Zohar that it relates to the schethiya and more. (The angel is depicted by Albrecht Durer, an Occultist artist who also used the kamea of Jupiter in a different picture called “Melencolia,” it also has a comet or meteorite in it.) What is more the names and appellations of Jesus and Sophia would have been used in exorcising the demon/archons in magickal rituals designed to free the brain of their influence. Rev 3:20-22 “Here I am! I stand at the door (Daleth) and knock. If anyone hears my voice and opens the door, I will come in and eat with that person, and they with me. (Mushrooms) To the one who is victorious, (Netzach) I will give the right to sit with me on my throne, just as I was victorious and sat down with my Father on his throne. Whoever has ears, let them hear what the [Holy] Spirit says to the churches.” As above with the crowns, this here is describing spiritual Anarchy in Tiphereth and is like the Pistis Sophia where Jesus says that his followers will sit on thrones and rule with him, though it does say his throne will “tower” over the others, all the people will be one with Jesus. (Chapter 96)

As we have seen gematria shows the snake is the messiah, and Revelations shows Jesus is Lucifer and furthermore the “holy grail” is the crown jewel of Lucifer and so as the snake, the grail or cup and Venus are all linked to Sophia, it is through her or Wisdom that all opposites are reconciled in to eternal oneness. While Jesus destroys the cult of prostitution, as I said in Revelations he is born by Sophia, the woman standing on the moon and clothed with the sun and so he is the awareness born of the union of opposites, the spiritual, rather than material electrum. Jesus the son and Sophia the holy spirit are united like Hermaphrodite in the father/mother of the Gnostics and thus by having “understanding” of the trinity, we return to paradise or the “kingdom of heaven.” On the Origin of the World tells us Sophia created the sun and moon and that they bear her seal and so she is the woman standing on the moon. (it also says the sun and moon bear witness to Sabaoth) As in the Simonian Gnostic “Exegesis of the Soul,” Jesus is coming to redeem the whore, to clean up her act as she represents the folly and egotistical materialism and tyranny of the people of Earth and the prostitution of the spirit of the world. There is even some Jewish precedent for this as in the book of Hosea, see also Proverbs 9 where the Shekinah or Sophia is contrasted against the harlot “folly” but also in a very theocratic form, Psalm 45 describes many familiar themes including the hieros gamos and tells of a harem of virgin Jewish concubines and a “daughter of Tyre.” You might ask from what this whore must be saved, but in Rev 17:16 it says even the beast will turn against her, devour her and leave her naked and so this shows the empire is not good for the whore either, the theocrats ultimately destroy the mysteries they prostitute, to which I would add that realizing this is the source of redemption. So then Jesus has chosen her, Helen/Mary Magdalene to be his “bride” or “the bride of the lamb” in Revelations and this is the union of Malkuth and Kether where spirit and matter are united in the New Jerusalem of Tiphereth and from this comes universal enlightenment. Now I have already explained how Jesus has twin motifs, but I should also note that Simon Magus in the very Anti-Simon Christian text “Acts of Peter” is said to have gone to Terracina after the magickal duel with Peter and that just before he died he met up with a sorcerer named Castor. So, just as Simon/Jesus is Gemini, Helen as the woman in the Exegesis of the Soul marries her “brother,” just as Norea married her brother Seth. (While we must keep in mind that in some Gnostic groups, like nuns, all women were called “sister” and like monks, all men called “brother,” Baal Hadad has relations with his sister Anat, though depending on how you want to sort out Astarte, Anat, Athirat and Asherah she is like his mother too.) According to Hippolytus (Book VI Ch 29) Sophia herself is a heavenly Jerusalem and the Ogdoad who created the world and is the mother of all things, where as “folly” “is the power of the Demiurge” (Abraham) and he falsely believed he created the world and that souls were created by him in a similar way as in the Zohar.

When the meteorites fell and inspired these kinds of Pagan myths, the Sky Father began to be seen as more important than the Earth Mother, but with Revelations in an obscure kind of way, we see Yahweh/Elohim and Asherah/Edem getting remarried, the mind of the Sky Father mixed with the matter of the Earth Mother, for we as their children were caught in the middle of this ugly divorce, but the two can be reconciled in the hieros gamos. In the Gospel of Thomas Jesus tells us, "'When you make the two one, and when you make the inside like the outside and the outside like the inside, and the above like the below, and when you make the male and the female one and the same, so that the male not be male nor the female female; and when you fashion eyes in the place of an eye, and a hand in place of a hand, and a foot in place of a foot, and a likeness in place of a likeness; then will you enter the kingdom.'" In this way we should seek out apparent dualities so that we can gain understanding of how they are unified, for when we do this long enough we gain gnosis of oneness.

We can see similar ideas like this in the Jewish tradition as Enoch is like the logos or word of god, (Jesus/Hermes) 49 is a number of Venus and so we can also consider the idea that the crown of Metatron may well be symbolically related to the Lapiz Exilis of Lucifer. As it is highly Christianized, the Lesser keys say that Paimon and Belial with his chariot of fire are under the demon Lucifer and so both Lucifer and Metatron are said to rule over the sons of god. (The Pseudomonarchia Daemonum has a few more details to the story of Paimon and Belial in regards to Lucifer, who by this time would probably be the Christianized version of Uriel) It was Lucifer/Uriel who taught Enoch and Solomon, we will also remember that Enoch was the seventh Patriarch born and so despite his Mercurial nature, he corresponds to Netzach and Venus, with Uriel being it's archangel. This is like how Zayin is the letter of Gemini and yet represents the number 7, that the rose is both the flower of Venus and Gemini and 64 is the gematria of Nogah, a Hebrew name for Venus. In his book "Meditation and Kabbalah," Kaplan also explains (pg 41-42) that in Ezekiel 1:4 a term "nogah" often translated as "radiance" is used to refer to a light above the throne and even the vehicle of Elijah which he used to ascend to the heavens, this then is also described as the chariot or Merkabah. (See #58 in Sepher Sapphires for the spelling used by Kaplan, so while not 64, it is still translated as Venus) What is more, Hod and Netzach both have a god name ending in Sabaoth and are united on the tree of life by Peh, or the tower card, they thus combine to make Hermaphrodite the whole human, or Adam before Eve was separated.

Outside of the Abrahamic traditions as in Hermeticism we can gain clues to the original and positive view of these Watchers or "daemons" before Judaism appropriated the symbols. Zosimos the writer of the oldest known books on Alchemy as we think of it today says that Adam is a Hebrew version of Thoth, who in turn is the Egyptian Hermes and he links the letters in his name to the four directions and four elements. (He was not the only one to do this) Zosimos is clearly aware of the Watcher traditions as in the books of Enoch and says that metallurgy and many other teachings come from the fallen angels who then taught their wives. Explaining the origins of Physics he says that "Hermes made mention of them in his Physika; in fact almost the entire work, openly and secretly, alludes to them." It is true that much of Corpus Hermeticum deals with these entities and also the problem of evil and the nature of oneness in a world with such creatures and problems, in fact there is so much I cannot begin to list it all here, but as we will see, Hermeticists were clearly antagonistic to such corruption. This case of Zosimos is somewhat confusing as he is both an Alchemist and says the art comes from the corrupt angels or Watchers, he seems like the kind of person who would be in to the Greek Magical Papyri and we must remember that if Gnostic Occultists were on one side of a spectrum and theocrats on the other, there would still be people in the middle. "Their initial transmission about these arts came from Chêmes (the name of a giant) He called this book the Book of Chêmes, whence the art is called Chêmeia" and so once again we see the motif of a book of antediluvian wisdom. Zosimos seems to be quite the contradictory fellow as he speaks highly of Judaism and yet is also clearly influenced by Gnosticism and Hermeticism, this contradiction of the sacredness of Alchemy is resolved however when we know that Zosimos distinguishes between spiritual Alchemy and purely materialist Alchemy. (puffers) Knowledge if it is true is worth knowing and as I said the Occult is like science, it can set us free or enslave us and since they learned it from the book of Raziel, this knowledge of the Watchers is not itself inherently “evil” anyways. When used with knowledge of the gods and white magick, this kind of Occultism can actually be used to thwart the archons and their goals and so learning such magick as taught by Hermeticists and Gnostic like Pagans is how we become free of archon control. That is ignoring archons is not a means of freeing yourself and while he has his own peculiar blend of spirituality, Zosimos does show antagonism to parasitic archons. “When the [daemonic] guardians are driven off from the great men they deliberate as to how they may lay claim to our natural tinctures, so as not to be driven away by men, but venerated and invoked, and nourished with sacrifices. This is what they did. They concealed all the natural and self regulating tinctures, not only out of envy, but giving heed also to their own sustenance, so that they would not be whipped, chased away, and punished with hunger through the cessation of the sacrifices. They acted as follows. They hid the natural tincture and introduced their non-natural tincture, and gave these to their priests; and if the common people were neglectful of the sacrifices, they hindered them even in attaining the non-natural tinctures.” From this, his writings seem to imply that if you do not have the spiritual keys like say entheogens, you can be made a slave to materialist and literalist abstractions, these then encourage OCD behaviour to feed the archons or “daemons.” “Natural tinctures” might also refer to neurotransmitters like dopamine, which is not produced properly in the brains of people who are infected by the archons, and so the archon circuits steal nutrients and chemicals from other circuits.

Zosimos may have any number of motives and exactly what religious and political affiliations he might of had isn't clear, from what we know of him he is Gnostic in some ways, but he can also be very pro Hebrew in places, however this may be in reference to the original international Qabbalistic mystics rather than “Jews” in the “synagogue of Satan.” At the same time he thinks of the Egyptians as being non spiritual materialists and so he has definitely taken in some of the Abrahamic propaganda and so this Jewish influence which sees them as servants of Yahweh would explain his ambivalence to the Watchers. Zosimos also shows himself to be familiar with the idea that all this is connected to the magick of Solomon, in a letter to Theosebeia while speaking of such things he tells her, “without being called to do it, offer sacrifices to the daemons, not the useful variety, not those which nourish and comfort them, but those which deter and destroy them, those which Membres gave to Solomon, king of Jerusalem, and of which he himself has written according to his wisdom.” Membres here has been identified as Mambres brother of Iannes or Jannes, and these were the magicians of the Pharaoh in Exodus, AKA Harut and Marut AKA Azazel and Samyaza. According to the Jewish encyclopedia Jannes and Jambres AKA Mambres were sons of Baalam and had conquered Ethiopia, but Moses fought them off and ruled Ethiopia and took an Ethiopian wife, Queen Adoniya so that Moses and this wife would fit quite well as Set and his Ethiopian queen, but I could find little detail here. (While there is many differences, compare this to the Egyptian stories of Si-Osire the son of Setne, who did battle with Ethiopian magicians and was himself a magician from the time of Thutmose III) Zosimos also tells us that there was an Egyptian book called “The Seven Heavens” which was falsely attributed to Solomon and which explains how to trap the demons in 7 bottles made of electrum, but this would further be evidence of Judaism stealing knowledge from Egypt. I have not read all the ingredients for the bottles but they are said to be 9 in number and include orichalcus and copper from Cyprus, and would have 9 letters written on them. (This practice is “Hygromanteia” See Veritable Key of Solomon by Skinner and Rankine, there is also a Solomonic grimoire of this name translated by these authors, it provides 168 angels and demons for the planetary hours.)

At any rate, even if Zosimos is tormenting the demons, given the Solomonic demons do not usually wilfully cooperate, this is not much different from the Goetia or Testament of Solomon and is still Watcher magick. If you are a competent exorcist like say with Eleazar and Vespasian, you could just as easily put demons in to someone as take them out, so we might wonder about Christians and Jews converting people in such ways or using very similar magick to the Gnostics exorcists, but with the opposite intentions. In general, the Solomonic grimoires do not worship the demons, they force most of the demons against their will to serve the magician by the power of El and Sabaoth etc and just because the magician may be “tormenting” the demons does not mean they are a good person. It is just that the demons of the Solomonic grimoires have little use aside from black magick and the texts are not geared towards brain tantra or really reaching enlightenment or anything like that, while some teach the liberal arts, the demons as I explained are used primarily for gaining wealth and taking over governments. However it is true that at the end of the greater keys there are instructions for offering the demons animal sacrifices, so then we know this book does not belong to those in the vegetarian traditions, nor is it likely Zosimos practised this kind of Solomonic magick. To understand this fully, you should know that throughout the Greater and Lesser Keys are warnings not to misuse the magick or do anything sinful with it, but given the demons mostly have no benevolent uses, this is really just a warning not to use the magick against Jews and in the later editions against your own type of Christian. That is it perfectly holy to such people to practice black magick against Pagans or Muslims or anyone not of their faith, but if you help non believers or target members of your own conspiracy for power, you are acting sinfully. Having such warnings and obscure language also helps to provide plausible deniability if your texts are ever discovered and so none of this can be taken at face value.

As we have seen, this Solomonic Watcher tradition in some form or another was widely practised and so while there was two main interpretations of them as either archons, or the servants of Yahweh, there would be a variety of political affiliations with it, as well as a large variety of practices in general. So it is not surprising to find a few positive views of Solomon, especially from a Jew and today pretty well any Solomonic ceremonial magician who is not part of a conspiracy (and they are the vast majority) will tell you there is nothing inherently corrupting about working with the entities, at least if your intentions are right. Remember according to many Gnostics and Kabbalists reality is monist and so not even the Goetic demons are exactly “evil,” it is all part of the oneness, all part of your brain and the grand plan and so the reconciliation of the apparent dualities encouraged by these authoritarian entities looking to inspire fear, is itself the great work. That is I may disagree about aspects of the spirituality of Zosimos and because of his respect for Solomon, I might even think he was worshipping the archons, yet I would not necessarily assume that he was doing so consciously as there are many interpretations about them. Again I will point out the difference between Gnostics and aristocratic magicians like Solomon was that Gnostics sought to free their minds from the archons, where as Solomon used the demons for worldly power and to build a temple to Yahweh, the father of the fallen “sons of god.”

The two interpretations stem from the same tradition as I have alluded to regarding Pagan and Solomonic Goetia, there is a spectrum here between the theocratic and the Gnostic with many variations in the middle, as with another example the Book of Jeu. As such there is far too much to list all examples here, but by the grace of Thoth I have found some key spells which in many ways would be a later version of the kind of magick you would expect to find in the original Pagan book of Thoth/Raziel. Indeed in the three Raziel inspired grimoires I cited, we do see an unusually high level of Jewish syncretism with Paganism and many scholars have noted Liber Salomonis and Sepher Ha-Razim repeatedly cite the Greek Magical Papyri in particular. (Sepher Raziel Hemelach is based on Sepher Ha-Razim) For example with Sepher Ha-Razim there is a spell which calls on Hermes for necromancy and uses myrtle and honey mixed with oil and another which brings control over a king or powerful people by sacrificing a lion cub and calling upon Aphrodite, while in Liber Salomonis Hermes is repeatedly cited as an authority. Right from the start of the Greek Magical Papyri it is easy to see they are based on this same kind of magick that was corrupted by Judaism, though as the Papyri in general has texts from so many sources, some of them are already theocratic magick. So we see, as Zosimos says that Adam was equated with Thoth, then the book of Thoth would be the same as the book of Adam, it is just the Jews copied it from the Egyptians just as they copied the Greek magical Papyri. The primary difference to highlight here is that Pagans and Gnostics sought apotheosis, enlightenment and the development of their own divinity so that they could rejoin the infinite oneness, where as Jews and Christians seek service to the current slave master of the world out of fear and so they hate any knowledge which might set them free.

Here (PGM I. 1-42) we see the use of 28 vowels arranged in a 7 layered tetractys along with another identical tetractys which is upside down, (total 56 letters and 14 layers just as the minor arcana) they are used for attaining a daemon familiar spirit from a deified and sacrificed falcon which is drowned in milk and honey. Given this milk and honey is eventually drunk to help invoke the spirit, as we will see it probably contained entheogens of some sort. Among other telling things, it says Orion ejaculates continuously into the sacred fig tree of Heliopolis and this is the Egyptian tree of life sometimes called a Persea tree associated with the Benu bird, but also Thoth and the goddess Seshat who has what appears to be a cannabis leaf on her head. Seshat and Thoth were associated with the "house of life" which is also in the story of Setne, but see P. Brooklyn 47.218.50 for how it relates to Merkabah like Egyptian symbolism. The very next spell (PGM I. 42-195) is of a more sinister nature and it is referenced in Sepher Ha-Razim, (See the translation by Michael Morgan as he has an index with all the PGM references he found, as there is too much to explore them all here) we see this spell is also for attaining an aerial daemon helper, that a falcon will drop a stone which is to be made in to a talisman, but is actually a meteorite. I say it is a meteorite because right after this the papyrus says you will see a star descend from the heavens and an angel will appear and be your daemon friend. Like a Solomonic demon his functions include but are not limited to sending dreams and providing wealth, "he kills, he destroys, he stirs up winds from the Earth" and can make stars fall from the sky, he will also bring the magician to heaven as a god after death, rather than going to Hades, but even in life "you will be [worshipped] as a god since you have a god as a friend." (too many important details here to quote but see PGM IV. 2140-44 for a necromantic spell from Thessaly, which along with PGM XX. 13-19 could refer to Thessalian Witches, where as the translator Hans Dieter Betz in a foot note relates the calling of stars to the Witches.) The Sepher Ha-Razim shows itself to have many Watcher like motifs but also depicts many angels as if they were meteors or meteorites, sometimes it says an angel will appear like a fiery pillar which is a reference to Exodus and the pillar which lead the Israelites. Of special note are the fiery "mighty men" spirits of the third "step" in the second firmament, where as the spirits of the 6th step are "tall like giants" and the angels of the 8th step appear as "shining amber." In the 7th and highest firmament is the throne of the "limitless light" with his cherubim and throughout the work the winds often play a role and so it is all very much connected to the same traditions.

Some other spells of note from the papyri include an exorcism spell (PGM I. 195-222) against daemons and fate, it contains much of the usual symbolism and calls upon the god who set the angels in heaven etc. But given the papyri are a compilation with many sources, there are many spells which show it's more prehistoric Shamanic origins along with notions of the memory palace, so a little later is a spell for memory. (PGM I. 232-47) We can also read of a ritual used to collect ritual plants, (PGM IV. 2967-3006) this calls for the burning of kyphi, or incense which in at least some recipes is widely thought to have had cannabis in it, kyphi was also used as a potion and an ointment, but it was also placed on the head and allowed to drip down, so this also brings to mind Setne with the brazier on his head. Plutarch gives a recipe without cannabis, (Plut. De Iside 80) but says it helps with sleep and dreams and others say it was used as an aphrodisiac just as cannabis has been, but Plutarch also says it was used at night because it's ingredients have many qualities and "the air at night is a composite mixture made up of many lights and forces, even as though seeds from every star were showered down into one place." Plutarch also highlights 16 as the number of ingredients which he relates to the square, as it is the only square with the same area and perimeter, but here in the Papyri pine tree resin is also used and the plants are said to be the "dew of all the gods." (Other recipes are said to have 28 ingredients for the moon, or 36 ingredients for the sun, while $28+36=64$) Many deities are called upon here including Kronos, Hera, Hermes, "Good Fortune" and Mnevis etc and so this would likely also be used by the theocratic line. PGM V. 213-303 also makes use of kyphi for a magick ring of Hermes, where as Thoth here identifies himself as the “discoverer and founder of drugs and letters,” but also as the egg of various birds such as the Phoenix, so that we can surmise he was worshipped as the Benu stone, or emerald tablet meteorite, which was eventually stolen by “Moses” and put in to the ark. PGM XIII 1-343 tells of an “eighth book of Moses” and know that wormwood and myrtle and honey are used in various spells I have cited, while in PGM IV 2891-2942 wormwood is an offering to Venus, which certainly sheds light on Revelations, but even the Dioscuri are found in other spells.

Hermeticism sheds yet more light on the ambiguity of the daemons or Watchers in the text “The Virgin of the World” in which we learn that humanity is actually these same beings imprisoned in matter. That is according to the “Virgin” Isis as depicted in this text explaining to her son Horus, human souls were formed by the divine oneness (The All or “Father” though it is Hermaphroditic) and were created to help bring life to Earth and to shape physical reality as co-creators with that divinity. These souls created the animals first by creating astral forms in accordance with their own nature, the forms of physical animals then mirror the nature of the daemons and had the breath of life bestowed on them by the father. Interpreting this text we might say that animals were created in the image of the daemons, while the human form was created in the image of the fullness and all organic life forms serve as bodies of these daemons according to their karma. This is also reminiscent of the archons who likewise created animals after their own forms (as in the zodiac or zoo-diac etc) and likewise we see there was a certain rebellion. They had previously been commanded to stay in their proper place in the heavens, but we learn that, “as though they had done something grand, with over-busy daring armed themselves, and acted contrary to the commands they had received; and forthwith they began to overstep their proper limits and their reservations, and would no longer stay in the same place, but were for ever moving, and thought that being ever stationed in one place was death.” As these daemons are specifically referred to as stars in Hermetic texts, we can see with language like this and other places, many hints that this also refers to meteorites which the Hermeticists would have seen as rebelling by falling from the sky.

On some gold tablets used for Orphic funerary rituals we can see the dead were expected to explain in the underworld that among other things, “Moira overcame me and the other immortal gods and the star flinger with lightening. I have flown out of the heavy difficult circle... A kid I fell into milk.” Along with other gold tablets, this explains Gnostic ideas, as the Moira or fate, with Zeus as the star flinger cast the soul into the world against their will, but we are also gods/daemons destined to return. Likewise, in the “Orphic Argonautica” we read, “I sang, of the race of powerful Brimo, (Hekate) and the destructive acts of the Giants, who spilled their gloomy seed from the sky begetting the men of old, whence came forth mortal stock, which resides throughout the boundless world.” So then as psalm 82 tells us we are all “sons of god” of the “most high” or El Elyon and for Hermeticists we are gods in training, who disobeyed our teacher and creator and so were put in human bodies so that we might learn our lessons better. This Argonautica has more than I can say here, but I will point out that we can see Rhea wanted ancestor worship on Mt Dindymon, that Medea rides a star and that the golden fleece was protected by a 54 foot high enclosure with 7 circular walls that had towers and blocks of iron. The Argo is here said to be the first ship and so brings to mind the Ark of Noah, but when we remember that Orpheus, the Dioscuri, and Heracles were all crew members on Jason's ship it also brings to mind the Dioscuri of Sanchuniathon making the first ship. The Argonautica comes from the Byzantine empire around 500-600 A.D. and so was likely altered for Christian theocratic tastes, but it is still quite Pagan and interesting. (The Lithica is around the 4th century Byzantium) Figuring out what might have been added to the original Orphic material is complicated as many have pointed out Orphism and even this text specifically influenced Christianity, (scholars used to believe it was much older) however it is more accurate to say Orphism influenced Gnosticism, which then got ripped off to make Christianity.

This idea of daemon meteorites that are the source of all life is basically an ancient theory of pan spermia and so here the ambiguity of Zosimos is made much more understandable. In fact as we have seen the castration of Uranus caused Aphrodite to be born from the semen which fell and as she represents all fertility, she too is an important source of life. So then in the theogonies of the god's we read how Uranus had sex with Gaia and sometimes as in Hesiod and Sanchuniathon this was violent and even considered rape, so that we can well imagine the semen of the sky god being meteorites, meteorites which produced not only the Telchines, but the destructive Hekatonkheires and Cyclops. The Cyclops were not only black smiths for the gods, but also helped in revolutions against Uranus and Chronos and at various times are bound in Tartarus, there is also a style of architecture called Cyclopien Masonry which Freemasons also claim as an influence on their tradition. (There is also the “grand cyclops” in the Masonic KKK) Now we know Deucalion washed up on Mt. Parnassus, we also know this is where the Omphalos meteorite was and so it is suspicious that the myths say that Deucalion and his wife repopulate the Earth by throwing stones over their shoulders. In fact the warlike race of humans destroyed by Zeus's flood were called the bronze race as they were a cross breed between the silver race of humanity and the Melia ash tree nymphs created from the sperm of Uranus. While these stones are chosen specifically because they are the bones of Gaia or the Earth, just as Adam was created by Earth, it is something to keep in mind as a possible corruption of the original meteorite mythology. From Nonnos again (Dionysiaca 12. 15) we learn of the oracles written by Phanes, that after Zeus's rebellion “There was shown how the pine was in labour of the human race-- how the tree suddenly burst its tree-birth and disgorged a son unbegotten self-completed.” There is more in this book than I can write, but later Ganymede is referred to along with Ampelos the lover of Dionysus, who also became the constellation Bootes.

Now as for other Indo-European cultures we see that Yggdrasil is an ash tree and in the Norse myths the first man was named “Ask” because he was made from the ash tree, while his wife “Embla” is either made from a vine or the Elm tree. These motifs can also be seen in the Persian version of Adam and Eve named Mashya and Mashyana, figures who also come from a tree that sprouts from the seed of Gayomard who is like a heavenly and hermaphroditic Adam Kadmon who was also attacked by Ahriman. This tree in the Zoroastrian Bundahishn has 10 types of fruit, and we can also read how the couple have 6 pairs of twins (others sources say 15 pairs or syzygies) and so we might wonder if the tree of life and tree of knowledge originally played a similar role for Adam and Eve. (As I said Sophia was the tree of life and so too then probably Eve AKA Zoa or “life” was the tree of life and we have seen that Eve turned into a tree) According to the Bundahishn, (Ch 2) Gav, AKA the bull Gavaevodata seems almost like the first woman and came before Gayomard along with her tree, while in Chapter 4 we can read how Ahura Mazda gives her cannabis to ease the pain of injury before she dies and creates life on Earth. (See the translation by Behramgore Tehmuras Anklesaria though others say it is henbane as it seems to be poisonous) In this we can see that in some ways Gayomard seems to parallel Ymir which would make him something like Adam Kadmon, while Gav parallels Audhumla. Along with the bull Gav, as a hermaphroditic progenitor of humanity, Gayomard as especially in the Bundahishn where he is brought down to Earth by Ahriman can also be likened to Parusha or Purusha. While normally a human, we can even see that Purusha is linked to a bull and even depicted as a man bull or minotaur like creature and is called a four horned bull by Sri Aurobindo (Rik IV. 58.3) and that his name may be a conflation of “pu” or “putra” meaning man and “vrsha” meaning bull suggesting a common origin with Gayomard and Gav. We can also see a possible parallel to the Phrygian hermaphrodite god Agdistis, who was said to be conceived by Zeus and the great mother on a rock called Agdo, on which the great mother slept and from which the world sprang. (thus bringing to mind the cube of Cybele) Agdistis frightened the other gods and so he was drugged (some say by Liber or Dionysus) and his penis was tied to his foot so that upon awakening, he ripped off his penis and where the blood fell grew an almond tree, which brings us back to the mythology of the bull god Attis. (See also the Hurrian mythology I cited) One final and more loose parallel can be found in the Celtic god of the underworld Bile, who was like the world tree of the Celts and the counterpart of the Goddess of the waters Danu, who fed the tree and so brings to mind the Gaokerena tree. Along with the introduction, chapter 1 of “Celtic Myths and Legends” by Peter Berresford Ellis gives a very interesting reconstructed myth with many relevant details, Lugh can be seen like a comet, but also the Dagda and Brigid are said to come from Bile as a tree, (they are not humans but this is like Osiris and Isis and the Acacia tree) and some connect Bile to the Celtic deities Beli, father of Arianrhod or Bel another Celtic deity.

We can also see a sign of a kind of pan spermia in the myth of Erichthonius who was the son of Athena when Hephaestus tried to rape her, he did not exactly succeed though and only gizzed on her thigh. In disgust Athena wiped up the sperm with some wool and flung it to Earth, this formed in to a disfigured boy however and wishing to raise the snake child in secret, Athena placed him inside a box. The box was given to three princesses of Athens and Pausanias tells us one of them, Aglaurus had a “sacred enclosure” above a temple of the Dioscuri, these women were told not to open the box but two of them did anyway and went insane upon looking at him. However after stopping a usurper to the throne, Erichthonius eventually became king of Athens and taught the Athenians agriculture and how to make chariots and smelt silver and as he often raced his chariot, Zeus made him in to the chariot constellation. Erichthonius is also the name of the son of Dardanus and grandfather of Illus, at the acropolis he was also associated with Poseidon as Poseidon Erechtheus and on Crete in the city of Itanos, he was said to be the father of Tyche Protogeneia.

The theory of pan spermia was put forward by the Nobel prize winning geneticist Francis Crick, who I mentioned was the man who discovered the shape of DNA, a discovery made thanks to his penchant for LSD and so this is quite the coincidence given how DNA fits the universal fractal, not to mention the Greek practices at Eleusis. Strangely enough, the physical planet Jupiter does actually help protect Earth from many comets, though it also nudges a few asteroids in our direction, which if somehow understood by ancient peoples would certainly explain quite a few myths. Given the importance of Amanita muscaria in astrotheological religions like Zoroastrianism and Hinduism, not to mention Gnosticism, it is most curious the mushrooms can create the perception of objects being much larger than they really are. This effect is known as “macropsia” and is found in Alice in Wonderland, however it is like having a pair binoculars attached to your eyes and might explain some of the advanced astronomical knowledge possessed by the ancients. That is while I know of no scientific texts of Amanita induced macropsia, perhaps they used the mushrooms like a telescope to truly see the heavens better. So now that we know that meteorites are the sperm of the sky father and also that Yahweh was worshipped as a meteorite in the holy of holies, it becomes even more compelling that John Allegro says that the names Yahweh and Zeus share the same root source, that source being the Sumerian for “juice of fecundity” or “seed of life” and he goes on to explain these deities originally related to a penis and sperm. That there was 72 grandsons of Noah, and 12 tribes of Israel is clearly an astrological metaphor, but given that it relates to the origins of humanity, it is probably indicative of the pan spermia theories in the Pagan precursors to Judaism. However the meteorite demons are also heavily associated with causing sickness, as seen in the conversion of Ireland, Plato's prelude to Atlantis, the angels of Revelations pouring out viles of sickness, or just generally as the ghosts of the Nephilim, so then we might wonder could a virus survive in a comet and infect people here on Earth?

Well if pan spermia is possible then it is also possible a virus could survive, though it may just be that as with Ireland a cloud is created by a comet's tail which changes the environment in such a way as to make humans more susceptible to pestilence, but there is one other possibility I can think of. Christians have historically used more germ warfare than any other group of people, while the meteorite shield of King Numa supposedly cured sickness and so I would not put it passed the theocrats to purposely infect people during such astronomical events in order to put the fear of god in to them. In the essay by Eileen Reeves which I cited on magnets and the Key of Solomon, there is also a story of a man named Baruello, who in 1630 was recruited by a French priest to spread plague and work black magick with the Key of Solomon, though this was apparently done more for private gain and grudges, rather than to convert anyone. (again this is associated with magnets) Rankine and Skinner in their monumental work, “The Veritable Key of Solomon” (pg 42 of Volume 4 of their ground breaking and crucial series on Solomonic magick)) write on this, but also tell the story of Peter Mora, author of a Solomonic work called Zekorbeni and that he too was convicted of spreading plague, though in this case he confessed under torture from the church. For this reason Skinner and Rankine see this accusation as church propaganda, but the Lesser Keys and other Solomonic grimoires do say the demons can be used to cause sickness (for example #5 Marbas and #42 Vepar) and so given a French priest recruited Baruello, to me this is evidence of different conspiracies fighting for control.

Now some Christians might take offence to this accusation, but Cortez and his conquistadors did use germ warfare, as did other Christian colonists spreading the empires of their god. However let me digress a moment as Cortez is a most excellent example of the death cult's tactics. That is Montezuma is said to have seen a comet before the arrival of the Spanish, this comet fit an Aztec prophecy and from this he thought the Spanish were gods. While some scholars doubt he truly believed this, the story comes from Franciscan Spanish monks in Mexico and I do not find it hard to believe the conquistadors would pose as deities, nor that the horses and Spanish technology would greatly impress some locals at first. (As with "cargo cults") Cortez conquered the Aztecs by taking their capital city Tenochtitlán, and given this island city of canals, with a pyramid temple in the centre is so much like Atlantis, (though it is far younger) we can see that history repeats in a fractal kind of way. Cortez was thought to be the "plumed serpent" Venus god Quetzalcoatl, while these Franciscan monks attempted to use their euhemerist propaganda here, noting that Aztec religion was much like Christianity, they even claimed the apostle Thomas evangelized to them! In modern times I have heard of Christian missionaries going to South America and contacting isolated tribes of indigenous people, these missionaries then purposely infected the natives, only to give them antibiotics in the name of Jesus as if he had healed them! So with Christians using tactics like this later on, should it really be so hard to believe that Christianity spread in similar fashion in Europe? Hints of this are in the "Secret History" of Procopius which details the atrocities of Emperor Justinian and his courtesan wife. While it has nothing explicitly to do with the Keys of Solomon, Procopius does repeatedly say the Christian emperor was a demon and was the son of an incubus like demon who impregnated his mother, in a round about way he also blames the Emperor for a plague.

Getting back to the Virgin of the World, there is so much in it that is relevant that you should really just read it yourself, but it does give a creation story, history of early humanity and also speaks of the writings of Hermes on columns. While the text does depict certain spiritual hierarchies, these are as I have explained before more like radio stations and we are all still made from the same divine substance. We can also gain insight in to a Hermetic cosmology which is here based on the binary sequence of four worlds, the first has 4 subsections, the next 8, the next 16 and the last 32 for a total of 60 zones or firmaments. (comparing this to the 60 Fibonacci cycle, keep in mind the odd numbers from 1-9 each occur 8 times, while 0 and the evens occur 4 times each) In this text humanity became very warlike and polluted the elements, the four elements complained to the gods and so Isis and Osiris came to Earth and founded civilization. While the various gods (who are distinct from the daemons) still teach us, when humanity was created they endowed us with various gifts so that we might be free of our prison. As physical beings we are now subject to karma or fate and fortune, the causality of this world and our actions within it, so that as gods and goddesses in training, we must learn how to create physical reality by being a part of it. In this way we come to know first hand what effects our actions have, but we also serve as the organs of consciousness for the one force. According to our actions we can become more ignorant and less aware of our divinity through materialist and tyrannical behaviour, or we can become more divine and enlightened through a love of truth and according to the Corpus Hermeticum, a reverence of nature. From a Gnostic Qabbalistic perspective then we might interpret the Hermetic idea as the daemon Watchers mating with women as being symbolic of the divine sparks (or "children of Seth") unifying with matter (Women) and in this way falling out of favour with the divine oneness, our life here on Earth is the vain rebellion of our souls against that oneness by living in a fools paradise. The Pistis Sophia chapters 25-29 agrees with much of this, though it links it to Melchizedek, while texts like the Secret Book of John and On the Origin of the world seem to have turned the 7 gods who give humanity gifts into their hebdomad archons, though there is doubtless other influences such as the Zoroastrian demons here as well. Here then is a possible rationalization for theories of Witchblood, though it is within a wholly Pagan context and has nothing to do with either Cain or Lucifer, it is also quite different in that the Virgin of the World says that all humans are from these daemons. From this Hermetic/Gnostic perspective we might say the archons would be those daemons who are in the lower astral realm, or live on Earth as ghosts, but are helping the theocrats by trying to distract us and keep us imprisoned by feeding them with superstitious rituals, rather than engaging in theurgic rites which unify humanity with the true gods, or ultimate oneness.

In Greek, “The Virgin of the World” is called “Kore Kosmou” but “Kore” also means the apple or pupil of the eye and so it could be translated the pupil of the cosmos. (See Hippolytus Book V Ch 14 and Book X Ch 7 for a Gnostic interpretation of the eye which is the centre of the universal fractal, it is also crucial for interpreting the Alchemy of the Paraphrase of Shem.) Though no one knows exactly how old it is, (some say as far back as 5th century B.C. Others to 3rd century A.D.) this text does seem to be among the oldest Hermetic texts we have, if not the oldest and while some secular scholars are more skeptical, it is quite obvious to me that much of Hermeticism does go back to the inner mystery traditions of a very ancient Egypt. This text then is an important source of information for the creation of later Hermetic and Gnostic traditions and it's different view of the daemon Watchers would be because it predates the Gnostic rebellion and a good deal of the Roman empire. There are descriptions about how a certain soul comes to rule as king on Earth according to their karma, but in practice the Hermeticists themselves were not theocratic and did not force their beliefs on anyone. On the contrary as their schools would be like the universities of the day, they would not be able to meet the demand for initiates. So while maybe not as Anarchist as Gnostics, the Hermetic conception was definitely not tyrannical and in fact the heavens are described as “blessed republic of the Gods” from which the daemons lament that they must leave for their transgressions.

I have mentioned the Jesuit Athanasius Kircher before and his works do shed light Egyptian hieroglyphics which he tries to relate to the Adamic language and while his “translations” do not fit modern translations or transliterations of the hieroglyphs at all, he claimed to have a much more Qabbalistic means of interpretations, rather than merely literal translations. That while his work was no doubt flawed, his ideas on the subject should not be totally dismissed or at least, should be understood if you wish to understand the interpretation of the theocrats in the Jesuit tradition. (See also his interpretation of Noah's Ark or really the whole Oedipus Aegyptiacus text) In this we can see that the search for the Adamic or universal language was undertaken by both the theocrats and the mystics who fought for freedom. One group would prostitute the Virgin, the other would make her the centre of their world and this is indicative of the race to reconstruct the tablets of destiny, the tower and home of the prehistoric goddess which was usurped by Jahovah and the theocrats and turned in to a prison.

Egypt is commonly said to be the fountain head of the mysteries of the Occult traditions and so the modern idea of scholars that the hieroglyphics are nothing but a kind of primitive alphabet is quite obviously absurd to any magician. In the Hermetic text “The Definitions of Asclepius Unto King Ammon” we read that the Egyptians themselves were worried about how much information would be lost by trying to explain the mysteries to the Greeks in their own language. Egyptians believed their words and symbols contained the essence of the things they represented, that is the tones associated with the words and the symbols used to write them down were chosen for very specific reasons based on observations of nature and according to principles of natural magick and Qabbalah. Hermetic texts written and spoken in Egyptian had an inner meaning not apparent in other languages and “its very quality of sound, the power of the Egyptian names, have in themselves the bringing into act of what is said.” Then we read that by translating to Greek it would “take all the strength out of the solemn and the strong—the energetic speech of Names. The Greeks, O King, have novel words, energetic of argumentation [only]; and thus is the philosophizing of the Greeks—the noise of words. But we do not use words; we use sounds full-filled with deeds.” This idea should not be underestimated even if you do not believe the words to be magick, Egyptian hieroglyphs are older than Phoenician and Sanskrit alphabets and are also closer to the proto-writing hieroglyphs of the prehistoric times, the animal heads of the Egyptian gods suggest they are perhaps the oldest in the world, or at least rooted in Shamanism, so it would not be surprising at all if Egypt were the source of Qabbalistic knowledge.

Kircher as a Christian believed in the old testament and so believed all languages to come from Hebrew, but as I have tried to show, Hebrew and Kabbalah was the attempt to construct a universal language, rather than the origin of languages and so while his work is bias in this way, he was one of the most respected scholars of his day and could well have had insight in to Egyptian Qabbalah. (Not to mention he had access to texts that modern scholars do not have, as well as other texts which the church keeps securely locked away) We also know that the Ogdoad found in both Gnostic and Hermetic philosophy was part of Egyptian religion in far more ancient times and so at Hermopolis and Heliopolos and other places in Egypt, we have some of the oldest evidence for certain aspects of Qabbalah. However even if the roots of Qabbalah are in Africa and Egypt, this knowledge branched out in to Sumeria and India very early and so it is pretty impossible to say exactly what happened. That is looking for one source of Qabbalah is a fallacious endeavour when we understand that it is the syncretic natural magick of as many people's as possible, going back to the prehistoric Shamanism of various nomadic tribes.

That said, the political affiliations of Hermeticism are generally more neutral compared to Judaism, or likewise the Gnostics who rebelled against the Jews and the Romans. This should hardly be surprising as it is Pagan and Yahweh did not figure in Hermetic cosmology and while there is definitely antagonism to the daemons and to my surprise explicit evidence that they were thought of as infecting the brain, it is not an absolutist opinion and is based more on individual daemons and what effects they have. Again in The Definitions of Asclepius Unto King Ammon we get a later and different perspective from the Virgin of the World when we read, “So, marshaled in their ranks, they are the ministers of each one of the Stars, being in their natures good, and bad, that is, in their activities (for that a daemon's essence is activity); while some of them are [of] mixed [natures], good and bad. To all of these has been allotted the authority o’er things upon the Earth; and it is they who bring about the multifold confusion of the turmoils on the Earth—for states and nations generally, and for each individual separately. For they do shape our souls like to themselves, and set them moving with them,—obsessing nerves, and marrow, veins and arteries, the brain itself, down to the very heart. For on each one of us being born and made alive, the daemons take hold on us—those [daimones] who are in service at that moment [of the wheel] of Genesis, who are ranged under each one of the Stars. For that these change at every moment; they do not stay the same, but circle back again. These, then, descending through the body to the two parts of the soul, set it awirling, each one towards its own activity. But the soul’s rational part is set above the lordship of the daemons—designed to be a receptacle [of] God.” Then a little later, “The daemons, therefore, exercise the whole of this Terrene economy, using our bodies as [their] instruments. And this economy Hermes has called Heimarmenē.” In a Hermetic text called simply “Asclepius” or “the Perfect Sermon” we learn that Heimarmenē is “fate,” though it is not such a bad thing as with Gnostics, who saw the archons as trying to monopolize the astral economy, with the world being like a giant sweatshop in the truck system.

So while here in these later texts the daemons seem to be completely non human, if we are to think of them as a race of entities, we should not fall in to racist thinking and believe they are all the same and even Solomonic grimoires make it clear these entities are individuals with their own personalities. That is as a daemon is the same as a “genius” or tutelary spirit, some teach useful things, others destructive things, yet others lie and merely pretend to have knowledge to act as archons and parasites on their followers so that they can feed off sacrifices. As each profession was associated with a deity, a deity might have daemons handle each of the professions it rules over, or rather a daemon might take on some of the symbols of that deity to represent or impersonate it, so in these cases a daemon would be an egregore or even a basic form of corporation and so would be different according to who is working with it, mystics in syndicalist co-ops, or theocrats. Likewise, given the lack of orthodoxy, any number of small cults would have their own version of a particular deity and make use of the appropriate symbols according to their needs, sometimes this might violate Anarchism, but this too would largely depend on who might be acting as the guru or master of ceremonies. In the Abrahamic traditions, at one time all demons were angels in heaven created by “god,” so if we seriously consider daemons as real entities just as the ancients did, then like all real beings, they are more complicated than being purely good or evil and are capable of changing, or even attaining redemption as the Solomonic grimoires would have it.

After Kore Kosmou we can see that Hermeticism did carry on other ideas relating to the daemon Watchers, and in section 25 of the text “Asclepius” we learn of a prophecy that Egypt would be taken over by the ignorant and that the old ways would die and the indigenous religion would be outlawed. This is exactly what did happen through the rise of Abrahamic religions, but we also learn that fire and flood and pestilence would come and at the end of this section that when the gods leave, “bad angels only stay, who mingled with humanity will lay their hands on them” and bring about every kind of wickedness. In the same paragraph it adds that at this time “neither will the Earth stand firm nor the sea be sailable; stars will not cross heaven nor will the course of the stars stand firm in heaven.” This text gives perhaps the best explanation of evil I know of and much of it seems like a rebuttal to Abrahamic philosophy, for example it goes to some lengths to explain how the true universal divinity is beyond names or even groups of names as with the Shemhamphorash. Given how the stars stop when the angels cross breed we can see they are meteorite angels, but also thought of negatively here and so this relatively late text is explaining the rise of the Abrahamic death cult in Egypt and the corruption it brought. Just as Joseph modelled his palace on Egypt, Egypt is said in this text to be in the image of the heavens, so then must have been Joseph's palace, but it also tells of how blood will fill the river just as Moses plagued the Nile. Here we can learn how a spirit inhabits a statue, probably not unlike how baetyls were consecrated and also how they foretell the future by lots and dreams and other means and so overall it is a very important text in all this.

From Iamblichus in his work “On the Mysteries” we can get many kernels of truth, including an explanation of the Pagan conception of daemons that is about as detailed and coherent as anyone could hope for from an ancient text. When combined with the work of Apuleius, “the God of Socrates,” we can get a pretty decent understanding, though Apuleius does quote the Aeneid repeatedly and was himself accused of sorcery, he was famously found not guilty. Iamblichus does not focus much on their mythology or really their astrological or astronomical side, but he does explain them in a way that is often very much akin to archons as entities which during rituals distract people from the true gods and also create untrue divinations. As Gnostics were trying to free themselves from “Fate” we can see this is a reference to the Fate and Fortune goddess's of the theocracy and their dice/cube divination cult. That while the Gnostics did their own forms of divination and even used dice, as the theocrats relied on the daemon/archons which give false divinations, the Gnostics did not appreciate having kings and priests rule them through such corrupted forms of the practice, as with the Roman Sibyls or the urim and thummim. These entities whatever we might call them turn up in all kinds of religions and so then we should not be surprised that there is such a variety of interpretations as to their nature. Their influence in Gnosticism is most relevant in understanding their political implications in that Gnostics largely being in the Middle East, were subject to theocratic tyranny and those who were racially Jewish were especially subject to oppression and could be stoned to death by their own people for saying the wrong things. As the Jewish theocracy ruled in the name of the patriarchs and later kings who were mythologically the descendents of these fallen angels, it is not surprising that Gnostics would be more antagonistic than Hermeticists. While the references I found show Hermeticists definitely disliked a lot of daemons, the term daemon is more like the term angel, in that demons were once angels and they both belong to the same race, just as Socrates had his own daemon which was quite beneficial, this is like the holy guardian angel.

Hermeticists were not generally religiously oppressed like Gnostics (until Christianity gained power) and while Egyptian religion was definitely theocratic, it was quite distinct from Middle Eastern or Abrahamic theocracies and this is precisely why they bankers were always trying to infiltrate it. Hermeticism deals with Egyptian philosophy in general and so like Clement of Alexandria tells us, some of the books of Thoth quite possibly did have something to do with how the king conducts himself, yet this would be more in the vein of the theocratic Osiris/Horus Pharaoh religion. Most of the thousands of books supposedly written by Thoth had to do with metaphysics and yet it was the custom to sign all works in the academic genre to the god, (or to Hermes) as he is the Logos, he is ultimately the writer of all books. Hermeticists were not generally part of a theocracy like Jews (besides maybe at Hermopolis) and so while they clearly were weary of many of these daemons and seeking to free the brain of obsessions, not all daemons were thought to cause problems. Even when we see names in Hermeticism that appear in Sanchuniathon like Asclepius, it is not really a text that would help a theocrat, but it would be easy to see how such teachings could have influenced Jews who stole Egyptian wisdom. (Could it be from King Ammon that Tyre gained its emerald pillar from the Egyptians? Unfortunately no one knows who he is.) That is the Egyptian knowledge which the Greeks interpreted and became known as “Hermetic” would largely be the same kind of knowledge that people like Abraham, Joseph and Moses would have been after, then they twisted it and dumbed it down to create the Abrahamic religions as mind control.

Augustine in his very influential Christian work “The City of God” (Book VIII 23-26) gives a perfectly stupid and bias euhemerist interpretation of the text Asclepius and Paganism generally and specifically thinks of Hermes Trismegistus as a human. This book seeks to counter the idea that Christianity brought about the downfall of Rome and Augustine instead argues that it strengthened this autocratic and war mongering empire and that Pagan Romans weren't so different from Christians in terms of morality. Augustine also argues for a vision of history in which the so called lies of Paganism as the city of the devil are overcome by Jesus and the city of god as a New Jerusalem, but this is really euphemisms for the actual practice of the banker theocrats corrupting history for their own purposes, a tactic being used in this same book. While Hermes Trismegistus probably did have multiple human forms, as I explained all scholars signed their name as Hermes as he was the logos. Theurgists did try to unite with the gods but as the text Asclepius itself explains, the gods are not humans but made from the purist parts of nature and so do not come in to matter, where as humans are of a mixed nature and still divine and for this very reason are in some ways superior to the gods. Theurgy was certainly not practised exclusively by aristocrats or some banking elite and Apuleius explains how much of this functioned, he was even said to have translated Asclepius to Latin and at least parts of this survived even in to the renaissance. While some later Christians had high regard for Hermes Trismegistus, early Christians destroyed most of the Hermetic texts and this is because they feared it would give away their plagiarism or present a better explanation for reality. So as with Augustine, Christians were starting with the premise that Christianity is the true religion and then the works of Hermeticism were cherry picked for evidence to prove Judaism predates Paganism, or even that Hermes foretells Christianity as in Asclepius. Seeking to explain the monotheism and similarities between Hermeticism and mystical Christianity, some argued that Hermes Trismegistus was a contemporary of Abraham or Moses, that he even studied under one of them. Some modern people have already argued Abraham learned from Hermes and while Abraham is himself a mythological figure and it is true that “Hermeticism” is younger than Judaism, Hermeticism is based on far older Egyptian mysticism and so on the contrary, by weighing the evidence we can see that Paganism in general obviously predates Judaism and so “Moses” or “Abraham” must have taken their teachings from the Egyptians.

While he makes a number of weak arguments against dead philosophers who cannot defend their ideas in order to show how Pagan philosophy is faulty, it is clear Augustine does not understand theurgy or apotheosis. At best Augustine denies these concepts have any truth to them, though in these chapters he ignores the subject to make it look as if only con artist kings identified with the gods. But theurgy is basically the western version of Yoga and was open to anyone who wanted it and so just as a Yogi may identify with Brahma or Shiva, some Pagans identified with Hermes or other deities. Augustine here is seeking to demonize all non Christian religions and so sees Pagan priests as having hubris or wanting others to worship them as gods, so while I think he is probably more of a lying propagandist than incompetent, he does understand little of magick or how egregore daemons are useful for magick. Augustine cannot understand that humanity itself is to some degree divine and so cannot accept that the gods do not go in to matter as Apuleius explains or would use daemons as mediators so they can interact with us. So it is Augustine mostly ignores or misrepresents the general Hermetic explanation that through the statues and other means, good daemons work with humans to raise their awareness and bring them back to the heavens. Where as there were also clearly bad daemons in Hermeticism which sought to make us ignorant of our divinity and our place in the heavens, given that in Asclepius these bad angels cross bread with humanity, that there is allusions to them as meteorites and they in fact destroy the older and true Shamanistic Egyptian religion, they are the Watchers and Nephilim ghosts. At the end of Asclepius we see that Hermeticists were vegetarians and so they certainly weren't making such sacrifices to daemons as in the Solomonic magick.

Augustine does little to present the arguments of those he rebuts because he is making straw man arguments out of context, but as with Plutarch and those who thought Set was but a Jewish human, we can see from him signs of the Abrahamic religions taking from Paganism and also that some people tried to impersonate the gods so that they will be worshipped. In this it is implied that the ghosts of the impersonators were believed to steal the offerings intended for the gods and that this impersonation grew out of ancestor worship, but I should clarify that both the good and bad daemons might have the forms and symbols of the true gods and hence are like lower resolution deities as I explained above. Again I must stress his rebuttal of these Pagans is severely flawed and blatantly misrepresents the text Asclepius and other sources of Pagan philosophy, but we do know Pagans and Gnostics argued there was nothing new in Judaism or Christianity and that Paganism was the inspiration. So with this in mind I quote from Augustine, (Vol 2 Ch 26) "they who are of a perverse mind, and opposed to us, suppose that what he grieves for is that the memorials of our martyrs were to succeed to their temples and shrines, in order, forsooth, that they may have grounds for thinking that gods were worshipped by the Pagans in temples, but that dead men are worshipped by us in sepulchres." So here we are told that some Pagans were accusing the orthodox Christians of putting their martyrs in temples to impersonate the gods and there by strengthen a euhemerist interpretation. However as I have shown that Christians, and especially those followers of the Sibyls believed the Watchers and Nephilim ghosts to be servants of their god, so then we cannot take Augustine seriously as he quotes a Sibyl in this same work. We can also see at the end of book VIII of his "Confessions," Augustine admits to using the bible for divination but does so by opening the book at random and so for many reasons his character is suspect. So it is clear that the Asclepius text and especially it's adherents as quoted by Augustine were speaking of how the Abrahamic religions are destroying the indigenous Egyptian religion through these evil daemons.

Surely Jews and Christians did their best to destroy the idea that humanity is in any way divine as this was the height of blasphemy and so they are the servants of the archons who try to make humanity forget our divinity, so that we will all be imprisoned in their false reality forever. So as in Sanchuniathon and other places, we can see that Yahweh/Chronos/Abraham/Nimrod rebelled against heaven and the prehistoric traditions, that he was the king of the giants/titans and was tyrannical, but then the Jupiter king rebelled. As we have seen Baal Hadad was preserving the knowledge of "heaven" or Uranus, he was preserving the knowledge that all humanity is itself divine and comes from the stars. The Saturn cult was not completely destroyed however and taught as mainstream Abrahamic teachings say, that we are made purely of dust or Earth and that we are as slaves to Saturn, but this is because the Saturn cult appropriated the mystery religions of Jupiter and altered the memory palaces of history. This then is the basic story of almost all religions, a story which has been repeating throughout history, the esoteric Anarchist like rebels create the religions and point out that humanity is itself the divine, but this message is corrupted by the exoteric theocrats who teach us to be obedient slaves. Now El Elyon or Hypsistus is still used by these same theocrats like the Jews or Trojans, but that is because they will appropriate whatever symbolism helps in their ambitions. While Sanchuniathon and Orphism and other mythologies are more complicated than I can go into here, in many cases gods like Uranus represent the monist and henotheistic god behind all deities, that is all planets or “heavenly” beings are in the sky.

Writing in the early 5th century Augustine represents a later stage of Christian propaganda from say the heresiologists like Irenaeus, as Augustine was trying to cement the Christian theocracy in a increasingly crumbling empire. So it was that many aspects of the whole Watcher story and it's theories on the origins of evil became too hard to reconcile with their bible and Christians like him began to distance themselves from it more completely. Given that by this time Augustine could see the flaws in the propaganda of his predecessors, that they were even preserving the heresies in their rebuttals, he gives a new model for Christian propaganda which gives away less of the con and simply ignores the majority of non Christian criticisms. In this method he is better able to avoid revealing how pathetic Christian philosophy is, but also blot out Pagan philosophers from history altogether. Augustine admitted that Enoch had writings, but doubted the texts like 1 Enoch were authentic, he curiously avoids the topic even when discussing the fallen angels, even though knowledge of it is implied throughout his work. By this time a good chunk of the Christian censorship of Paganism and Gnosticism would have been complete, so with little texts available to contradict him and centuries of altered history to back him up, Augustine goes on to rewrite history for the upgraded form of Christian mind control. The Watcher story doesn't give a convenient or flattering explanation for the origins of evil and so when it comes to the problem of evil and the nature of demons, Augustine does his best to avoid answering the question directly as any Christian explanation is fraught with contradictions. Instead he waffles between his admitted ignorance and his verbose ramblings, but to sum it up briefly, the answer for Augustine is much like that of Judaism and he admits that “evil” angels were created by his god. However Augustine elaborates this Jewish conception with Platonic ideas and he sees evil as an absence of light or good rather than a force in itself, he is monist and admits the fallen angels come from the same purely good deity as part of some unknown plan. (Books 9-12) To me, Asclepius and the Corpus Hermeticum give far better explanations for evil, but as for my solution, aside from what I have already written, evil is caused by human ignorance. But you might ask then what is the cause of human ignorance? It is the desire to condense the infinite in to an authoritative symbol, this does not make the symbol itself evil, only the desire for it to be taken as an infallible authority on the infinite.

Christians didn't care much for Pagan architecture and so generally demolished Pagan temples and built basilicas on top, but there are certainly exceptions and in general these Christianized places would often house the bodies of martyrs and saints. Mithraic temples were the most likely to be converted in to a church, but in Rome itself there is plenty of examples. So we can see the temple of Emperor Antoninus and his wife Faustina was turned in to a church, with this emperor helping to further emperor worship by deifying his predecessor Emperor Hadrian, the emperor who put down the Jewish Bar Kokhba revolt. The temple of Romulus in Rome was also turned into a church and was dedicated to twin martyrs and saints named Cosmas and Damian. Of course there is also the Pagan Pantheon temple dedicated to Mary and the martyrs and St Peter's Basilica which was built on a Roman necropolis and a “little temple” and is where the remains of the “rock” St Peter are supposedly kept. The saints and martyrs were no doubt most often like their Flavian predecessors and agents of the banking death cult and so by placing them in the Pagan temples they could thus steal the worship of the gods and as I explained already, they would often take on the symbolism of these same gods. This is exactly the kind of thing that Jewish agents did as the Goetic demons or mighty men, albeit the Jews had to do so covertly, but by the time of Augustine, Christianity was to some degree starting to do so openly under the protection of the Roman state! This practice still needed time to really get going, but there is little reason to doubt the accusations cited against Christians by Augustine, as taking over Pagan temples later became commonplace when Christianity grew in power. Even to this day “relics” or pieces of a Saints body are venerated ritually by Catholics and used to work magick which they call “miracles” and this is but the remnants of the necromancy and ancestor worship which is the original basis of Catholicism. By stealing the worship of the gods, not only would the death cult make it harder for the gods to manifest their life giving influence on Earth, they believed it would aid the banksters in the afterlife and presumably help them to reincarnate or at least strengthen their ghosts. This worked so that future banksters could call on them for magickal purposes as in the Solomonic grimoires or saint worship. If you belong to a death cult who hates the Pagan gods, you might try to kill the gods by stealing their worship, you may even try to destroy the spirits of the Pagan ancestors by stealing their offerings or prevent them from reincarnating by imprisoning them in a false heaven. If we consider the idea that all things and all people and so all ancestors are themselves divine, that time is an illusion and we are all one in a higher dimension, then the argument of euhemerism is moot and so all such philosophies had to be destroyed for the theocracy to really take hold. More than this, by making people ignorant of magick and their own divinity along with that of their ancestors, the theocrats started the “disenchantment” of the world by severing our connection to the spirit world all together, they can thus make us ignorant of our oneness and set up some false heavens to trap souls in. In Revelations John is told to write letters to the “angels” of 7 churches which had lost the true faith in various ways, these angels are also identified as stars, but according to Epiphanius (Ch 25) and some scholars since, the angels are really Bishops of the Churches. The Greek word for “angel” means “messenger” and so Bishops as angels are messengers or intermediaries to their god and for archon infected churches, the Bishops would embody the archon egregore or genii. Some have argued the idea comes from Judaism as teachers were associated with the stars as in Daniel 12:3, so then John is urging the 7 churches to become Gnostic again and warning them to repent.

Most telling of all however is the Basilica di San Clemente, so named after Pope Clement I who was given his authority by Peter himself, but this church just so happens to be built over the home of Titus Flavius Clemens the writer of Clementine propaganda and the nephew of Vespasian. (Not to be confused with Clement of Alexandria AKA Titus Flavius Clemens who lived about a century later, but the identical names do show they belong to the same Roman theocracy) Many have already argued this nephew was Pope Clement I as there is Roman era Clementine literature which says just that. He was undoubtedly a Christian and married to his cousin, the daughter of Vespasian named Domitilla, who was herself a Christian and known to have donated to the early Christians a large set of catacombs under Rome containing the bodies of martyrs. These two Flavians then are prime suspects for co-opting Gnosticism and mixing it with necromantic works of ancestor king worship to form Christianity, the historian Cassius Dio tells us Domitian had Clemens executed for atheism, where as Domitilla was exiled. Atheism was a common charge against Jewish people and certainly makes sense if Clemens and Domitilla were part of a death cult which only worships human kings and is trying to kill the gods. These are just two of the aristocratic Roman saints related to Domitilla, other examples include the eunuchs Nereus and Achilleus (As from the Christian text the “Acts of Nerus and Achilleus) who were the servants of Domitilla, while the mother of Domitilla and wife of Vespasian has been identified as St. Plautilla. This identification is doubted today given that Domitilla and her mother officially share the same name, but Plautilla may be a name given to her to distinguish the two women, or at least this is some of the left over evidence of the Roman creation of Christianity. There is more to these Roman saints than I can go into, as with the family of M. Arrecinus Tertullus Clemens, Prefect of the Praetorian Guard mixing with the Flavians, but upon further investigation (see further reading section) it is easy to see how much influence on early Christianity the Roman aristocracy had. One last example I will give is Saint Petronilla, who was said to be the daughter of Peter himself, while some legends say she was so beautiful that Peter locked her up in a tower to prevent the sin of lust in men.

Eusebius tells some of this and even the Jewish encyclopedia says they were Jewish converts, while more than a few have noted the Talmud speaks of Domitilla (Avodah Zarah 10b and Deuteronomy Rabbah 2.25) as saving the Jews from genocide. If this interpretation of the Talmud is correct, then Titus Clemens would have met one of the most famous Rabbis of all time, a crucial Talmudic scholar and Pharisee Kabbalist, one Rabbi Akiva. This Rabbi is too important to explain it all here, but he was very influential in setting up Rabbinic Judaism, which itself is part of the Pharisee tradition and he even helped to define the Jewish canon or Tanakh. While he was very draconian in many ways, he also had a teaching like Jesus to “Love your fellow as yourself” which is a bit too much of a coincidence for me. Rabbi Akiva was said to have ascended to heaven in a Merkabah using the name of his god thus bringing to mind Samyaza and while I am not totally sure how he fits in, he was clearly instrumental in setting up aspects of the ancestor worship of the banking cult. (See Meditation and Kabbalah by Kaplan pg 25 for Akiva's vision which includes a Watcher) This can best be seen in a story in which the Rabbi helps the ghost of an oppressive tax collector escape punishment in the afterlife by teaching the tax collector's son to be a pious Jew. (See Kallah, ed. Coronel, 4b and Jewish Encyclopedia Vol I Pg 310, but see also Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai as he has a similar story told of him, he also has parallels to Josephus as a traitor who met with Vespasian.) So from this it would seem the theocrats knew they were doing evil things and sought to escape the torment of demons and improve their lot in the afterlife by stealing worship and offerings from Pagan deities. Rabbi Akiva also argued vehemently against the idea that humanity was in anyway divine, (Mekhilta Beshallah, 6) this comes up in regard to Genesis 3:22 which states that after eating the fruit from the tree, Yahweh said “ the man is become as one of us.” This exposes Yahweh as a liar as it did not bring about death as he said, though in the same verse he is frightened by the idea that we might eat from the tree of life as well and so gain immortality, this was however, just as the snake promised and so this surely played on the minds of Gnostics. As in other places this also shows that Yahweh was not so different from the angels and we can see it is a vestige of Jewish polytheism as with the Elohim and sons of god. We can also see that in Genesis 1:26 Yahweh says “Let US make mankind in OUR image, in OUR likeness” and hence the archons make the body of Adam in the Secret Book of John etc.

Now while comets and meteorites are generally a good sign of the theocratic death cult, such heavenly events were thought sacred in some sense around the world and we have seen that Hermetic magick makes use of such meteorite entities as daemons. That this would influence the banking death cult who appropriated this magick can be seen not only in Asclepius warning of the demon hybrids, but also in some Hermetic fragments preserved by a Christian named Stobaeus. Most notable here is a part that has been titled “Of the Deacons and the Stars” which gives a crucial explanation of Hermetic cosmology and explains that above the seven planets is the sphere of the zodiac, (the 8th variable of the ogdoad) and above this is the 36 decans and their stars and that although they are daimons they are not subject to all troubles laid out for other stars as they are “checked and settled in their course” and so from Kore Kosmou we can surmise they never fell or disobeyed. However we also read “Let us, then, think of them as though of Watchers stationed round [and watching] over both the Seven themselves and o'er the Circle of the All--or rather over all things in the World--holding together all, and keeping the good order of all things.” They are said to rule over the 7 and to cause the “downfalls of kingdoms, states' rebellions, plagues [and] famines, tidal waves [and] quakings of the Earth” but “dost thou not think that some of their activity extends to us as well--[who are] assuredly their sons, or [come into existence] by their means?” “They cast in the Earth the seed of those whom [men] call Tanes, (Titans?) some playing the part of saviours, others being most destructive.” They are said to be above the great bear constellation, of which is said “its energy is as it were an axle's, setting nowhere and nowhere rising, but stopping [ever] in the self-same space.”

We can learn more about these Watchers of the decans from the “Book of Nut” or see them on Dendera calendar but they are also found on texts written on Egyptian coffin lids and other places as “star clocks” and while I have not studied them in depth, the “coffin texts” do show themselves to be an important source of Egyptian mythology. For example, from the coffin texts we can read of Atum the first of the gods, and in spell 132 of the coffin texts he tells us “I have found the ropes which were severed in the boat of the flood; I have knotted them and moored it.” It is not clear to me if he is speaking throughout the spell and the following might refer to Osiris, but it says "I have appeared in lapis lazuli, Lord of Horns in On." Now various Egyptian gods were said to have flesh of gold, bones of silver and hair of lapis lazuli, (lapis lazuli was commonly used in Egyptian art) but the creation story of Atum is interesting to say the least and one of his eyes flies around independently, humanity is also said to be his tears. Atum figures in the ogdoad creation story and like Aion or Leontocephaline, he is wrapped in the chaos snake Apep, but this also involves the Benben stone and the Phoenix. Apep was also worshipped by the Hyksos king Apepi who took his name.

Now we have read how Geoffrey of Monmouth thought the Watchers to be below the moon (which would be the path of Tau on the Tree of Life) and so it is a striking coincidence that in Stobaeus there is an explanation of one tier of stars which are also below the moon and are "corruptible, deprived of energy, which hold together for a little while, in that they've been exhaled out of the Earth itself into the air above the Earth, which ever are being broken up, in that they have a nature like unto [that of] useless lives on Earth, which come into existence for no other purpose than to die, such as the tribe of flies, and fleas, and worms, and other things like them." (larvae?) It is said these lower stars cannot ascend very high due to their weight and Earthly origin but they fall to the Earth again and so could well be an explanation for meteorite. After this another class of "stars" is described as being in the order of the sun, but these are comets according to translations. These "long haired" stars "neither rise nor set nor are they broken up. These are the brilliant messengers and heralds of the general destinies of things that are to be. When, then, some chance is going to happen to the world, [comets] appear, and, shining for some days, again return behind the Circle of the Sun, and stay invisible, some showing in the east, some in the north, some in the west, and others in the south. We call them Prophets."

We can see from Pliny in Book 2 the more literal ancient views of the vaulted roof of heaven, comets, meteors and meteorites and astronomy, among other things, how they are thought of as javelins, spears, shields, torches and how the fire of certain comets was compared to the hair of a goat or in Ch 22 they are called "long haired" just as in Stobaeus. We also learn there was a meteorite worshipped at Abydos in Turkey and another at Cassandria, but of course I cannot quote it all here. However Pliny's Natural History contains a preface/letter to Vespasian and is dedicated to Titus, throughout the work it is clear that Pliny was a sycophantic tool for the emperor, that while it is an incredibly important text, it represents the establishment view of things and it promotes ideas about religion that would be used by Titus and Vespasian to make Christianity as the ultimate theocracy. This can be seen in Book 2 Ch V which explains Pliny's view of henotheism as folly, and despising the lack of authoritarian orthodoxy, he instead prefers a monotheistic view of deity, which if anything is best symbolized by the sun. Pliny explains "Frail, toiling mortality, remembering its own weakness, has divided such deities into groups, so as to worship in sections, each the deity he is most in need of. Consequently different races have different names for the deities, and we find countless deities in the same races, even those of the lower world being classified into groups, and diseases and also many forms of plague, in our nervous anxiety to get them placated. Because of this there is actually a Temple of Fever consecrated by the nation on the Palatine Hill" ... "For this reason we can infer a larger population of celestials than of human beings, as individuals also make an equal number of gods on their own, by adopting their own private Junos and Genii." He also gives a euhemerist interpretation saying that, "to enrol such men among the deities is the most ancient method of paying them gratitude for their benefactions. In fact the names of the other gods, and also of the stars that I have mentioned above, originated from the services of men: at all events who would not admit that it is the interpretation of men's characters that prompts them to call each other Jupiter or Mercury or other names, and that originates the nomenclature of heaven? That that supreme being, whatever it be, pays heed to man's affairs is a ridiculous notion."

Pliny complains of people following foreign gods and relying too much on superstitions and oracles, he blames the gods for the evils of the world and here gives a very dualist interpretation of his monotheistic deity. Then he says spirituality is obscured even more by an "intermediate" between polytheism and monotheism, this he explains is the cult of the goddess of fortune and that to her all things are attributed and that she is found in all religions. It is true the fates are often more powerful than the gods in mythology as they are in some cases more like deities of natural law, where as the gods are forces of nature and so are subject to natural law. Pliny also tells us that some reject the goddess of Fortune and instead rely on astrology, thinking that “god” has predetermined everything for an individual. This is pretty puzzling given that the goddess of Fortune is for other people sometimes associated with astrology, but from Pliny it would seem these schools of thought on Fortune are less fatalistic and look more to chance, or divination by things like dice. Speaking of astrological fatalism and how the shining of stars was thought to be connected to a persons fate, in Chapter 6 Pliny adds, “When the stars are believed to fall, what happens is that owing to their being overfed with a draught of liquid they give back the surplus with a fiery flash, just as with us also we see this occur with a stream of oil when lamps are lit.” This unnamed liquid must surely be ambrosia, and Pliny also tells us Atlas discovered astronomy and later that Venus is called Lucifer, Juno, Isis and “Mother of the Gods” (Rhea) and that Pythagoras discovered the morning star and evening star were the same and that it “scatters a genital dew” to make creatures fertile.

By this time the urim and thummim were lost to the Jews and so I believe this to be a sign of different factions struggling for dominance in the Roman empire and seeking to monopolize the powerful and common superstitions of the people. That while Fortune as a goddess is clearly more Pagan, those who hate the goddess but love astrology are more akin to the Pharisee factions of the banking cult which being Jewish are ultimately rooted in the same Fortune goddess traditions via Asherah, Cybele and the Shekinah. As in the text Asclepius, the dice cult and casting of lots and other divination systems of the goddess would be more Pagan and Gnostic (as with Tarot later on) and so the urim and thummim belonged to a less corrupted form of Judaism which still honoured the goddess, at least indirectly through using her practices. Given that it can be hard to fake a dice roll when people are looking, that Judaism has fatalistic attitudes is an indication of how Judaism co-opted these practices to establish more authoritarian forms of divination intended purely for political control rather than spiritual insight. You should read Pliny yourself, but we can thus surmise that Christianity was the empire's answer to these types of philosophical questions about fate, free will and the origins of evil, where as Gnosticism and Hermeticism was the answer of many magicians and mystics, but either way religious syncretism was exposing certain contradictions in very old religions and this was causing a lot of philosophical upheaval. Later the Christians would outlaw things like cards, dice and gambling, not only because of it's Gnostic and Pagan origins, but because they wanted to create a more objectivist, authoritarian, absolutist and fatalistic interpretation of reality created by their supposedly perfect god. It seems they decided that infiltrating oracles was too problematic and it was much easier to say the pope was infallible and the unquestionable spokesmen for “god” on Earth and so in this Newtonian scheme, chance has no place. In the Masonic text I cited before, Ms Constitutions, vows are given which the Masons must obey and included with this is also a prohibition against illegal games like dice and cards, though this seems to be more against gambling than divination. It's true gambling and relying too much on divination causes problems, but Christians also wanted to keep people from practising magick or having any independence from the “sanctioned” authorities as part of their strategy for the disenchantment of the world.

There are all kinds of cosmologies involving the daemons or archons and so while it would be quite the exception in Gnosticism, it is possible that some of them believed they carried on a line of knowledge as taught by some of the “good” freedom loving daemons, rather than the theocratic and Solomonic variety, just as Hermeticism has at least some good daemons. (Agathodaemon) From this perspective we can surmise that some of these good daemons escaped the flood as refugees and would teach resistance and be the ones who brought the book of Raziel to humanity to learn to controll the archons and so some could well work magick using them. However, I know of no Gnostic texts which actually say this and so it is all speculation. In general the teachings of the Watchers or Nephilim have to do with Freemasonry and theocracy and so while metal working and Alchemy is definitely not inherently corrupt, (nor gods such as Hephestaus or Hermes) those with capitalist ambitions would appropriate whatever metallurgy or physical discoveries Alchemists made. There were definitely charlatans and puffers, those who created illusions like a stage magician and hijacked the symbolism of real magicians and mystics, however just because there are quack doctors and predatory pharmaceutical companies in the world, it does not mean the science of healing and medicine is itself a scam.

At the same time in many places the texts found on the Egyptian pyramids known as "Pyramid texts" show themselves to fit the mythology behind the various pillars I have brought up extremely well. In fact there is too much to begin to list it all here and so we see there is very good reason to say they are the pillars of Thoth Hermes. Though obviously there is differences from the Mesopotamian traditions, the pyramid texts state that the Pharaoh is like a star, that he has metal or iron bones and that he should sit on his metal chair or throne etc. These are reoccurring themes, but so is the idea that the king is from Heliopolis, or from the sky and is trying to ascend once more and he even uses a ladder just like Jacob. Other familiar themes include a flood that comes from Nuit the goddess of the night's sky, the "morning star" also comes up repeatedly, which in one place is identified as the daughter of Nuit, then there is a boat 770 cubits long, but of course there are pillars or djed, with one pillar of stars being linked to the milky way and a "bull of the sky." (See sections 279-284 for the bull and pillar, which given the importance of Sirius in Egypt is especially comparable to Gayomard and Gavaevodata in the Bundahishn.) The barque of Ra, or some type of boat is a reoccurring symbol in Egyptian mythology, it is something of an ark of the ogdoad, it also takes the soul of the Pharaoh in the pyramid texts and coffin texts. I am not alone in seeing this as connected to Manichaenism, the Pistis Sophia, or the Books of Jeu and the lunar boat which transports the light from Earth to the treasury of light. (The same as the ferrymen Iynges of the Chaldean oracles? Or the prophet chariots of the Zohar?) Among other places see Pistis Sophia Ch 136-137 where the sun is an Ouroboros and the moon is a boat steered by two dragons, there is also talk of the archons engaging in "congress" or sex.

Now I have already cited the Muslim historian Abu l-Hasan al-Masudi as saying the pyramids were the tombs of Hermes and Agathodaimon, and while his "history" is believed to be more legend than anything, it is incredibly relevant. For example, in his text Akhbar al-zaman, Masudi (also spelled Mas'udi) tells us, the pyramids were built by a king Surid, 300 years before the flood, that the king had a dream where "the stars fell and clashed against each other with a terrible noise" Later "he dreamed that the fixed stars descended on the earth in the form of white birds; these birds caught men in flight, and threw them between two high mountains which then closed over them; then the stars darkened and were eclipsed." The king's wise man Philemon spoke too of a dream where he and the king sat in a lighthouse and the sky came down and nearly touched the Earth. So then the pyramids were made according to the order of the king to protect from the flood etc and were filled "the wonders and treasures of his people and the bodies of ancient kings. He ordered the priests to deposit therein the secrets of their science and precepts of their wisdom. But the most famous of the descendants of Ham, the Copts and Indians, are the wise." "He inscribed on the ceilings, on the roofs, on the walls, and on columns, all the secrets of science, in which the Egyptians excelled more than any other nation; and he had painted a picture of the great stars and lesser stars, with signs that permitted their recognition. He also engraved the names of plants and their properties, how to construct talismans, their descriptions, and the rules of mathematics and geometry. All who know the books and the language of Egypt can make use of these images and inscriptions." "He filled the western pyramid with emerald objects, (emerald tablets? Later Masudi also says that a king breached the pyramid walls to find an emerald vase which held gold coins and so we have an emerald grail?) images made with the substances of the stars, wonderful talismans, iron tools of outstanding quality, weapons that cannot rust, glass objects that can bend without breaking, all types of drugs (simple and compounded), deadly poisons, and a host of other things too numerous to describe. Into the eastern pyramid, he transported the idols of the stars, representations of the heavens, wonders built by his ancestors, incense to offer to the idols, books containing the history of ancient Egypt” etc ... “still other books comprising a proclamation of all that would happen in Egypt until the end of time, (as with the book of life) with a description of the paths of the fixed stars and their influence at every moment. He also placed vessels containing drugs and other similar things. In the third pyramid, he deposited the bodies of the priests in black flint coffins, and with nearly every priest he placed books which recounted all that he had done and the story of his life.” “Then he filled the pyramids with the treasures of the stars.” So too with the astrologer Abu Masar we can read in Ibn Abi Usaybia’s 13th century book Kitab Tabaqat al-atibba he wrote that Hermes/Enoch/Idris built the pyramids to preserve ancient knowledge from the flood.

Much more is written by Masudi, and later he speaks of a glass jug found in tunnels beneath the pyramids and a man being possessed by a Djinn, which fits if the pyramids are the Muslim tower of Babel. When the flood was about to come Masudi tells us the king of Egypt at that time, “wrote to Darmashil son of Yamhawil (Darshil ibn Lawil), king of Babel, to ask him to destroy Noah.” The Egyptian king even wanted to burn down the ark but did not as he thought he might need the boat to escape the flood, Masudi also says, “They built subterranean passages (under the pyramids) that they fitted with plated glass and within which they imprisoned the winds.” In the end Philemon is said to have gone to Babel to talk with Noah and was converted and even went with him on the ark.

So while it is hard to know what might be indigenous Egyptian religion, and what is the result of Mesopotamian infiltration, or Muslim exaggeration and myth, that is who first influenced who and when, Al Masudi and the pyramid texts themselves fits very well if the pyramids are to have the teachings of Thoth Hermes. Jewellery made from meteorites has also been found in Egyptian sarcophagi and not only is this the earliest example of a meteorite artifact, it is the oldest known example of metal working! Sanchuniathon explains, “And Cronus visiting the country of the south, gave all Egypt to the god Thoth, that it might be his kingdom. These things, says he, the Cabeiri, the seven sons of Sydyc, and their eighth brother Asclepius, first of all set down in the records in obedience to the commands of the god Thoth. All these things the son of Thabion, the first hierophant of all among the Phoenicians, allegorized and mixed up with the occurrences and accidents of nature and the world, and delivered to the priests and prophets, superintendents of the mysteries: and they, perceiving the rage for these allegories increase, delivered them to their successors, and to foreigners: of whom one was Isiris, the inventor of the three letters, the brother of Chna who; is called the first Phoenician.” Other translations say that Chna was the first to change his name to Phoenix which probably refers to the son of Agenor, (a little later it claims the Greeks took these teachings and invented allegories about the giants etc.) but it is also true that Haoma was sometimes conflated with Simurgh the Phoenix who lived in the Haoma tree, Haoma was also personified as Hōm and Zoroaster taught that Hōm was the first priest and so might fit as Thabion.

Here I will mention a most curious mythological parrallel, that while in Zoroastrianism and the Pyramid texts this is all relatively benine and profound, the most popular UFO cult of the New Age speaks of the “Pleiadiens” and also “star seeds” which are souls or human/alien hybrids from that constellation. These beings were supposedly sent here to be elite spiritual masters, where as pure humans are apparently incapable of much. Given the elitism and notions of hybrids, that 1 Enoch seems to say that the Pleiadies are the prison of the Watchers, this idea smacks of the theocratic Watcher cult and as I explained was quite possibly created by the American government. That New Agers are in to Merkabah, yet have little to no historical knowledge about it is also troubling, but what is even more eery is that another prominent UFO cult is that of “Ashtar Command,” with “Ashtar” being another spelling of the Venus or the Lucifer god Athtar!

At any rate all governments are corrupt and Egypt did have a theocracy and so while it was further corrupted by people like the Hyksos and international merchants, clearly Egyptian civilization was not Anarchist. Yet again I must point out how those Pagans in the ruling class practice religion quite differently from the working class or rebels, even if they all use the same symbols. Human rulers are those controlled by the archons, who follow theocratic religions like Judaism and Christianity and while they may too command the demons as in the Goetia, they do it through the power of the demiurge and for tyrannical purposes. The Book of Enoch, the Testament of Solomon and Goetia all have demons who do want forgiveness and so despite the mind's preference for clear cut either or logic and dualism, it is true the world and heavens are a very grey place, with Anarchism being the means of judging truly black magick.

While it is the exception, there is some black magick in the Picatrix and while parts of this book come from Harran and claim to be from the Sabian school, as I explained this city was very multicultural and the Picatrix itself is the most eclectic and intentional medieval grimoire I know of. Again we can see in "The Veritable Key of Solomon" by Skinner and Rankine, Trithemius played a stronger role in the creation of the Solomonic magick than I can explain here, but on page 22 these authors tell us that for Trithemius, the Picatrix was written by Solomon. (While I haven't been able to find a translation, for this they cite Trithemius's work Antipalus Maleficorum. The Veritable key also has a picture of a talisman which has Solomon on one side and Hekate on the other. There is also a story from the autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini where a priest evokes demons and four are seen to be giants, which Skinner and Rankine tell us is part of the Solomonic tradition, but they do not go into any detail.) Many different types of people claimed to be Sabians in order to escape persecution, so exactly who wrote the text, when and where is still open to debate, the text itself claims multiple sources, so in this one grimoire we can see the influence of the Chaldaens, Persians, the Sabians, the Sufis and Muslims, Hindus and more. Much of the book even claims to be based off a grimoire written by Aristotle for Alexander and this work contains much of the black magick, while much of the rest is quite innocent and white. However the idea that the curses and pharmakeia contained therein could have been used by Alexander to make war on the Persians is certainly of great interest. While I am skeptical Aristotle truly created the magick in this book, it is surely a great example of Greek theocratic magick and is in one way or another the product of Hermeticism being mixed with Middle Eastern magick. Parts of this grimoire are precisely the kind of Hermetic magick that Christian aristocrats like the Medici would be looking for to help them rule, or to destroy their enemies and as I briefly explained, it is among the most influential grimoires for these kinds of people. (Though Pico Della Mirandola himself does denounce the magick of Solomon, Enoch and Adam) While we cannot rule out the use of codes for the recipes, given the grizzly concoctions involving the most exotic and expensive ingredients and animal organs/brains, we can be sure that vegetarian Gnostics or Hermeticists would not want anything to do with much of the book, nor could anyone but an aristocrat afford to use the ritual props made from precious metals and gems. So then we can see that each government would want to do magick to destroy their enemies and conquer the world, that power can corrupt any philosophy and that while there is much important information in the texts, even the precursors to the scientific method, the Latin translation would especially be altered to create the kinds of grimoires which suit the Christian theocrats in their quest for global domination.

Solomon plays little part in the Picatrix, but we can see in the Arabic translation a Greek version of the cube, or rather 7 cubes, one for each planet, with the planet in the centre of it's cube. It isn't totally clear how the cubes fit together, but we are given 56 spirits, or 8 for each of the 7 planets, 6 for the 6 directions or faces, 1 for the centre of the cube or physical planet in the heaven, 1 which rules over them all. This seems to be describing 7 tesseracts in the language of ancient Occult philosophy, so that the 8 names assigned to each planet could relate to the 8 "cubic hyperfaces" as there is one for a central cube, then one name for each face of this cube on which a "trapezoidal prism" or distorted cube can be imagined, then one more outer cube containing all the others. As the Greeks assigned different planetary correspondences to the six directions than the Jewish cube of space, we can make an educated guess as to the planetary attributions of the 56 spirits from the Gnostic "words of power," which as I explained also assign planets to the 6 directions. (See PGM XIII. 734-1077 for the Greek vowels in the six directions or "The Greek Qabalah" by Kieren Barry for the most definitive book on the subject, he also goes into the Platonic solids.)

If the Earth be a school for gods, like any school then we should not be surprised there are some teachers who are better than others, or that some students enjoy their studies more than others. If we are all these same “sons of god” there is still those black magicians as in theocracies who use whatever magickal knowledge they have to keep the masses ignorant of this fact and under their control. These black magicians then have ambitions to be kings of the prison rather than seeking to make this place a paradise, (as this would require enlightenment) nor do they wish to transcend and rejoin the fullness or let others do so, as then they would then have no slaves to serve them. Just as I have pointed out the Orphic tradition which states we are a mix of Dionysus and the ashes of Titans, we humans are of a mixed nature, consciousness then is based on a monist reality which can progress towards the materialist theocrat, or towards the heavenly and divine Anarchist which is at one with all. While I wish to avoid espousing utopian ideals of universal enlightenment, it is not antagonistic to Hermetic ideas, that is at least once we graduate and overcome our vanity and ignorance, we can make of this world what we will and once again become co-creators with the divine. Now some Anarchists may not like the idea of the world as a school, but if you were to imagine the divine having children, children who can potentially grow to be all powerful, you should ask yourself, how could you raise such children without them becoming spoiled brats, or even going mad with power? The only way is for them to experience hardships and challenges in a world that shows them the full range of experience and so as the Gospel of Phillip says “If a pearl is thrown into mud, it loses no value, and if rubbed with balsam oil, it gains no value. It always is precious in it's owners eyes. Wherever they are, the children of god are precious in the eyes of the father.” This text not only explains how both Mary Magdalene and the Virgin Mary are the holy spirit, it also goes at some length in to the dangers of cross breeding with demons, but it also tells us the Gnostic god “took seventy-two different colors and threw them into the vat. He took them out all white. And he said, Even so has the Son of Man come as a dyer” and so we start out under the influence of the rulers and astrology, but in the end we all come out white, of the same divine substance, for the soul or pearl is ultimately incorruptable. (You should read the text to get the full context, but try comparing with the Gnostic text Melchizedek)

With this in mind we can also see the Heliades or sun nymphs cried tears of electrum/amber when their brother Phaethon died trying to fly the sun chariot of Helios. (Sometimes Apollo) Ovid says his mother Clymene, also cried and searched the Earth for his bones, just like Freya crying her tears of amber in search for her husband Odr. I have already mentioned the lapis lazuli necklace of Ishtar, but Freya also has a magick necklace called Brísingamen, coming from “brisingr,” meaning “amber” or “fire.” So too did Harmonia have a cursed necklace made by Hephaestus and the Telchines as she was the love child of his wife Aphrodite's affair with Ares, but like the necklace given by the lady of the lake to Sir Pelleus, it was said to make it's owner loved.

Now there are various Phaethons in Greek mythology but to my knowledge all of them are in myths highly suggestive of the same meteorite cult, suggesting they ultimately stem from the same place. So for example this is also the name of the son of Astraios and Eos, though at other times he is the lover of Eos and was swept up to be a daemon in the temple of Aphrodite, at yet other times he is identified as the planet Jupiter or Saturn. (See Nonnos on the oracles of Ophion and Phanes as this relates to the myth of Phaethon) Ovid (Book II) even tells us that when Phaethon went to the palace of the sun with it's “twin doors” he sat on a throne covered in emeralds, later (lines 301-328) he fell in to the river Eridanus, an event which Ovid explicitly compares to a fallen star. The way this is worded, his tombstone is seemingly identified as being the same as the man and while he denies it's physical geography, this suggests it is in the stars and Strabo speaks of myths where Eridanus is a river with “Electride” or amber islands. Along with “the Chariot” constellation that is also associated with Phaethon, (and other relevant myths) Eridanus is also one of the 48 constellations listed by Ptolemy and some scholars think it is based off the myth of Enki and Eridu, the city which Enki built on top of the Absu. (See “Enki and the World Order,” a text which also mentions the “mes tree.”) This city is also where Enmerkar built a ziggurat in the confusion of tongues myth!

The anti-Christian Pagan spokesmen Celsus argued this myth of Phaethon to be the same as that of Sodom and Gommorah, but he also relates the Tower of Babel to the Greek myth of the twin sons of Poseidon, two giants named Otus and Ephialtes who also taught humanity and founded some cities. By the age of 9 these giants were 9 cubits wide and 9 fathoms tall and they decided to try and carry off Artemis and Hera, so they stacked three mountains on top of each other to make war on heaven, they were also said to have imprisoned Ares in a bronze urn or jar not unlike a Goetic demon. Eventually of course they were defeated and were subsequently punished by being bound to a pillar with snakes and facing away from each other, so that picturing them brings to mind Janus.

Clement of Alexandria in Stromata book 1 gives a time line for many mythological events and says Phaethon died at the time of the Greek Flood, among other things he also says the “conflagration of Ida, and the discovery of iron” occurred at the same time. According to Seneca, the Babylonian historian Berossus says that when the planets align in Cancer the world is destroyed by fire, but when the planets align in the opposite sign of Capricorn, the world experiences a deluge. (Seneca Nat. Quaest. III. 29, I) This destruction is the basis of marking out the great year and the procession of the equinoxes as these events happen at what would be the solstices of the great year. So then as Pliny tells us (Book X, II) the Phoenix according to the learned Roman Senator Manilius came every 540 years according to the great year, meaning it comes four times in an age or aeon or sign in the great year, or 48 times total. Before going in to Atlantis we learn in Timaeus that the myth of Phaethon scorching the Earth in the chariot of the sun is a reference to a periodic destruction by either fire or water and that “there occurs at long intervals a derangement of the heavenly bodies, and then the Earth is destroyed by fire.” Astronomical knowledge of periods when meteorites hit the Earth is certainly worth encoding in to mythological mnemonic devices and would also certainly help a death cult who stole that knowledge in order to scare people. Even non destructive meteor showers would be important, so we see from August 30 to Sept 12 there is a meteor shower in the constellation Eridanus, then another shower peaks from Nov 1 to the 10, while at our new year, around January 1 there is Quadrantids in the constellation Bootes. Then in October there is a meteor shower called the Draconids in the constellation Draco which comes from the comet 21P/Giacobini-Zinner, while an asteroid named Phaethon is also the source of the Geminid meteor showers. Phaethon also had a friend and or lover named Cygnus, who became the swan constellation, a constellation which also represents the swan who mated with Leda. At one point in Timaeus the Egyptians tell Solon how they have the true ancient records, “Whereas just when you and other nations are beginning to be provided with letters and the other requisites of civilized life, after the usual interval, the stream from heaven, like a pestilence, comes pouring down, and leaves only those of you who are destitute of letters and education; and so you have to begin all over again like children, and know nothing of what happened in ancient times, either among us or among yourselves.” We learn there were multiple floods and this reference to pestilence is troubling given how much it comes up in regards to meteorites/demons, but also how Athens was founded by Athena and the “seed” of Hephaestus.

In his work on the Civil War Pharsalia, Lucan (Luc. 1.639) cites the Roman Senator, astrologer and prophet on the birth of emperor Augustus, one Nigidius Figulus on the topic of the end of the world and here we learn things like, “Had the star Of baleful Saturn, frigid in the height, Kindled his lurid fires, the sky had poured 'Its torrents forth as in Deucalion's time.” Now Nigidius (fragment 67) also spoke about how the Orphics believed the order of the gods changes by rebellion and Apollo may take over, but also relates Orphic beliefs to that of the Magi who believed in a kind of final “conflagration” and the end of the world by fire from above and scholars here say he attributed the discovery of the idea in general to the Magi. This idea is backed up by the "hymns of the Magi" by Dio Chrysostomus (Oration 36) which tells of the beliefs of the Magi, and that Zoroaster went up to a mountain to be alone because of his love of justice, then “the mountain caught fire, a mighty flame descending from the sky above.” We know this was a meteorite as the Persian king and nobles came to worship the “god” and found Zoroaster who then bade them to offer sacrifice “in recognition of the god's having come to that place” and it is said that from this time on Zoroaster began to teach his wisdom to the Magi and so this was the start of Zoroastrianism. Scholars note that the Magi here are said to have a cyclical view of the conflagration which is more like Stoicism, but that this seems to disagree with Zoroastrian texts. At any rate this is a very important text for understanding the role of meteorites in Zoroastrianism and Zeus is described as the perfect driver of a “perfect chariot” drawn by 4 horses who could be interpreted as representing the elements, but also explicitly the stars and they could well be comets as well, one brings fire like Phaethon, another likened to Poseidon brings the flood as in Deucalion's time. Among other things we learn “that the universe is constantly being propelled and driven along a single path, as by a charioteer endowed with highest skill and power, and that this movement goes on unceasingly in unceasing cycles of time.”

According to Pliny in his natural history, there are legends of more amber islands off the coasts of England or Germany which are called Basilia and Abalus and while he denies its historicity, he tells of the myth of how Meleager, another son of Clymene and lover of Atalanta was mourned by women turned in to birds, women who cried tears of amber after he died in India. Pliny gives explanations of both amber and electrum as separate, yet in terms of symbolism as we are starting to see, there is good reason to believe they were very much conflated. Crucially Pliny also considers the idea that amber is behind legends of the golden apples of the Hesperides, so too then the apples of Atalanta (who is symbolic of Artemis) or Eris (which started the Trojan war) and in other sources we can see Heracles learned from the nymphs of Eridanus how to get to the garden of the Hesperides. In various ways this is all connected to legends of Thule or Hyperborea, but we can also see a possible connection to the Celtic Isle of Avalon and also the Kaali meteorite crater which seems to figure in Finnish Kalevala myth. “Avalon” is literally the island of Apples and in the Life of Merlin Geoffrey speaks of apples repeatedly, he also says that “The island of Gades (known to be a Phoenician colony) lies next to Herculean Gades, (pillars of Hercules) and there grows there a tree from whose bark a gum drips out of which gems are made, breaking all laws.” Clymene is also sometimes said to be the mother of Atlas and as this Titan is said to support either the heavens or the Earth, he is symbolically related to the foundation stone. Keeping in mind that Sanchuniathon says Chronos cast Atlas in to a pit, as Atlantis means island of Atlas and he is father of the Hesperides, the Hyades and the Pleiades, this shows more connections between the founding myths of Troy, Atlantis and especially Tyre, which was founded on an island of “ambrosian stones” by Melqart/Heracles and had a magickal tree. (These places are also very comparable to the symbolism of the Epic of Gilgamesh)

Pliny also speaks of how amber was thought to come from tree sap and wash up from the ocean on to the islands, or was formed like sweat when the sun hits the Earth, which brings to mind how human souls are formed by the sweat and tears of archons in the Pistis Sophia chapters 26 and 131. Now as On the Origin of the World told us, the archons stole 70 years from Adam, but in agreement with Genesis it says Adam lived to be 930 so that he was fated to live 1000 years, precisely the lifespan which Hyperboreans were said to have lived. If they tired of life the Hyperboreans would fling themselves off a cliff, just like the festival of Apollo at Leucas, where human sacrifice was made, so that from this we are brought back to the most mysterious of mythical origins in utopia, which is generally on some lost island nation.

Ovid and Pliny tell us the Greeks believed the Heliades cried for so long on the banks of Eridanus that they turned in to poplar trees and that this is the source of amber, Pliny adding that amber was “known to the Greeks as 'electrum,' since they call the sun 'Elector' or 'the Shining One'.” This detail about poplars is itself important as Hades had a lover, Leuce who seems to be a form of Persephone and was turned in to a poplar tree after her death, a tree which supplied Heracles with leaves to make a crown when he went to the underworld. Nymphs called Sperkheides were also turned in to poplars by Poseidon who was trying to seduce one of them, while like Daphne, Dryope was eventually turned in to a poplar after a sexual encounter with Apollo and so all of these could have contributed to On the Origin of the World. Poplars come up repeatedly in the bible, but perhaps most provocatively in Hosea 4:12-14, in which they are linked to the prostitution cult. In the two main texts regarding Lugalbanda, each also happens to mention the poplar tree, in the story of the mountain cave it says that the poplar forms “a great staff” for the moon god Sin, while in the story of Lugalbanda and the Anzu it mentions that poplars grow along the Euphrates. In the book “Witchcraft Medicine” we learn that poplar salve made from poplar resin was used in the flying ointments of witches, but also how the ointment is related to Ambrosia, while Dioscorides says the resin was used medicinally. (Materia medica I.110) Pliny also cites Theomenes who says amber comes from poplars near Lybia, in another section he says they change round their leaves at the summer solstice, while later, (Book 16 Ch 35) he tells us there are three types of poplars but one is “very famous” for the mushrooms which grow on it. It just so happens that poplar is one of the few species of trees (along with pines) that Amanita muscaria grows on and so we are starting to see how psychedelic ambrosia became replaced by electrum/meteorite worship.

John Allegro also explains the myth of the tears of Helen of Troy, that they were the resin of the pine tree which he links to her name and to Amanita muscaria, a conclusion he makes as among other things Pliny tells us that “the fungi... are all derived from the gum that exudes from trees.” After bringing up Nemesis and linking her name to a synonym for ambrosia, “nectar,” he further explains the drug/plant “Helenion” named after our lady, was said by Pliny to come from her tears. (Pliny Book 21, Ch 33 and 91) As we have seen the theme of pan spermia has come up again and again with humans coming from pine trees and other types and so these tree women probably have some symbolic link here, but a sign of the older entheogenic religion may be found in Ovid (Book 7:391) which states that the people of Corinth believed humans came from mushrooms. I should also point out that mandrake, or man-dragora, or man-dragon has golden fruits not unlike small apples and was said to grow where the semen of a “hanged man” fell. John Allegro says that mushrooms were conflated with mandrake as for example one of it's Greek names, “antimimon” has a Sumerian root meaning “heavenly shade” in reference to the mushroom, but here he also says Atlas or Olympus is symbolic of this idea as they hold up the heavens. Allegro also explains that from this same root the Greeks got their word gigantes, from which we get the word giants, but also a title for the Dioscuri twins, “Anakes” and so clearly an Amanita cult was co-opted by the capitalist death cult. Allegro takes another Hebrew word for giant, “anaqim” and sees it's origins in the same root as the Arabic word for “garden of delights” and another Sumerian word for the mushroom, he also thinks this to be the source of the Hebrew word for “Zealots.” Allegro briefly considers both Solomonic magick and the Nephilim myths in his book as per exorcism and ancestor worship which I would add are classic hallmarks of Shamanism throughout the world, he sees giants as originally having to do with mushrooms, but if so, as his philology shows, it would be as through the mushroom traditions that the human “giants” co-opted. While it is possible the giants took on the titles of the Shamans they would replace, as it was the mushrooms that were venerated, it seems more likely the theocrats took on the titles of the mushrooms themselves, as with Jesus himself in regards to Titus. So then this adds to my theory that “giants” likely switched the mushroom entheogen with an opium scopolamine mix of sacrament. Allegro gives a variety of other evidence to show the Sumerian cult was originally based around mushrooms and sex, for example linking Cain, the dove and Phoenix to Amanitas, but even the palladium! While it is not his best argument he even links the mushroom to “lazuli,” as in lapis lazuli which is more definitely linked to the names Lazarus and Eleazar, he even brings up the Greek for sapphire in a round about way. As if with the schethiya in mind, though making no mention of it, a little later he explains ancient tablets were originally mushroom shaped. He goes on to explain that our word “tablet” as in those on which the commandments were written ultimately go back to a Sumerian word for the mushroom, translated as “twin cone” and he even interprets the commandments in terms of the mushroom. So then as the original words for these things and others referred to mushrooms, but later came to represent different things in the theocracies, we can see that the government destroyed the original practices in favour of their own meteorite death cult. The theocrats would mock the fertility cult in the process by appropriating their symbols and allegories as in the new testament, while doing the same for the old testament, but also changing around the vowels and spaces as suited them.

With this corruption of entheogenic practices in mind, we have seen his explanation of amber, but Pliny also gives a similar explanation for the creation of Honey by bees, saying that honey is produced according to the times when the Pleiades rises and sets and that sap on trees is gathered by bees. He also says that honey is believed to be the “perspiration of the sky or a sort of saliva of the stars” and that it falls from the sky and forms like dew. Others describe honey as “star-fallen” from the Greek “astron” and this is close to descriptions of ambrosia coming from the sky, where as ambrosia is even the name of one of the Hyades, the drink is brought to Olympus by doves and served in a cup by Ganymede, who took the job from Hebe the wife of Heracles. This then brings us back to the brain dew, or dew of Hermon, but dew also plays a strong role in some renaissance methods of creating the philosophers stone. Remember the golden jar of “manna from heaven” was placed in the ark and so given that Goetic demons were held in similar jars, it is likely meteorites were placed in the jars, though originally this would be manna mushrooms and so we see manna is described as tasting like honey and arriving with dew in the morning. Manna is also said to spoil quickly and get worms and hence it is like mushrooms, but if we interpret it as meteorites it brings to mind the shamir worm, or the Phoenix worm or larvae demons. Remember the Greek Magical Papyri's description of Kyphi involving the dew, and pine resin and know that recipes contained honey, not to mention Plutarch quoting Pindar about the stars producing seeds. Diodorus Siculus tells us (5.65.2) that the Curetes first discovered honey along with swords and helmets and a little later, that along with the titans they were basically deified for the inventions they gave to humanity. Astraios father of Astraea the virgin and Phaethon the charioteer is thought by some to be another version of Melisseus, who was a honey god of Crete (As with Melia the ash tree nymph, his name comes from the word honey which is “meli”) and the father of Adrasteia, and his honey, as in other traditions was used for preserving entheogens or for making psychedelic mead. At some times Adrasteia is associated with Amalthea, who is more important than I can go in to here, but she is known as the goat who suckled Zeus on Crete with milk and honey. This goat Almathea is not unlike Heiðrún the goat of Norse mythology, who feeds of the leaves of Yggdrasil and produces from her teat the famous mead. Amalthea was also the mother of twin goats and when she died Zeus made a shield called an aegis, or alternatively a coat from her skin,, (in some cases, as with Athena, Medusa's face was on the aegis) he also made a horn or plenty (this “cornucopia” horn was also associated with Fortuna and Tyche) from her crown and she and her kids were placed in the stars by the Chariot constellation as the constellation Capra.

The Homeric Hymn 4 to Hermes (550) explains how Apollo came to teach divination to Hermes, explaining that there were 3 Virgins (Thriai or Bee Maidens with wings) in a cave on Parnassus who foretell the future, it doesn't say specifically but they seem to have used pebbles, or according to archeology and some scholars, dice were used, but only with the help of divine honey, it also says Hermes holds the aegis. In the Cyranides grimoire magnets or load stones are brought up a few times, sometimes to be ground up or otherwise mixed with honey, along with the rest of the charm this was thought to induce visions and psychic means of attaining knowledge. Pliny also speaks of psychoactive honey and also medical honey which he says is equal to the nectar of the gods, other types, probably containing scopolamine cause madness. Various honey entheogens go back to the most prehistoric entheogen cults, such as the mushroom bee man painting of the Tassili mountains of Algeria and so it is to them which we must look for the original religious practices. At the Eleusis museum of Athens, a statue of Persephone can be found with an omphalos bee hive on her head and bees have further been linked to the goddesses Aphrodite, Artemis, Cybele, Demeter and Neith. So while mushrooms were the first to be mixed with honey, this became corrupted by the opium cult which also used honey, not to mention scopolamine is often found throughout the plants it is found in, including pollen and so is in the honey made from such plants. So then, from this came the theocratic electrum cult which grew out of it and was probably giving communion ceremonies with meteorites mixed with honey. This is seen in Judaism in all the promises of a land of milk and honey, but also the Prophetess Deborah, a name which means bee and we can see in Judges 4-5 she comes in to a story about meteorites in the form of King Sisera. King Sisera was a Canaanite King and was giving the invading Jewish colonists a hard time with his 20000 iron chariots, Deborah encouraged the Jews to fight him and in Judges 5: 20 it says that "the stars in their courses fought against Sisera." This King had to retreat and hid in the tent of a Jewish woman named Jael who pretended to help him, but nailed his head to the ground with a tent peg when he was asleep.

The Neoplatonist Porphyry in his very intriguing work "On the Cave of the Nymphs in the Thirteenth Book of the Odyssey" explains much of this, especially in terms of opium honey, "In Orpheus, likewise, Saturn is ensnared by Jupiter through honey. For Saturn, being filled with honey, is intoxicated, his senses are darkened, as if from the effects of wine, and he sleeps; just as Porus, in the banquet of Plato, is filled with nectar; for wine was not (says he) yet known. The Goddess Nyx, too, in Orpheus, advises Jupiter to make use of honey as an artifice. For she says to him":— "When stretch'd beneath the lofty oaks you view Saturn, with honey by the bees produc'd Sunk in ebriety, fast bind the God." "This therefore, takes place, and Saturn being bound is emasculated in the same manner as Heaven; the theologist obscurely signifying by this that divine natures become through pleasure bound, and drawn down into the realms of generation; and also that, when dissolved in pleasure they emit certain seminal powers. Hence Saturn emasculates Heaven, when descending to Earth through a desire of generation. But the sweetness of honey signifies, with theologians, the same thing as the pleasure arising from generation, by which Saturn, being ensnared, was castrated. For Saturn, and his sphere, are the first of the orbs that move contrary to the course of Coelum or the heavens. Certain powers, however, descend both from Heaven (or the inerratic sphere) and the planets. But Saturn receives the powers of Heaven and Jupiter the powers of Saturn." Porphyry goes on to explain a Greek interpretation, "the priestesses of Ceres, (Demeter) also, as being initiated into the mysteries of the terrene Goddess, were called by the ancients bees; and Proserpine (Persephone) herself was denominated by them honiéd. The moon, (Artemis) likewise, who presides over generation, was called by them a bee, and also a bull. And Taurus is the exaltation of the moon. But bees are ox-begotten. And this application is also given to souls proceeding into generation." The followig is Porphyry's Mithraic interpretation, "The God, (Mithra, who along with the bull is later identified as the demiurge) likewise, who is occultly connected with generation, is a stealer of oxen. To which may be added, that honey is considered as a symbol of death, and on this account it is usual to offer libations of honey to the terrestrial Gods; but gall is considered as a symbol of life; whether it is obscurely signified by this, that the life of the soul dies through pleasure, but through bitterness the soul resumes its life, whence, also, bile is sacrificed to the Gods; or whether it is, because death liberates from molestation, but the present life is laborious and bitter. All souls, however, proceeding into generation, are not simply called bees, but those who will live in it justly and who, after having performed such things as are acceptable to the Gods, will again return (to their kindred stars). For this insect loves to return to the place from whence it first came, and is eminently just and sober." So from this we can not only see that Chronos's love of opium honey was his downfall, but that for many honey was a symbol of semen and so this fits with Allegro's idea that Gnostics ate mushrooms symbolized as semen.

We can still see some traces of this prehistoric bee cult in the Freemasons, who use the bee and hive as symbols, but to them it symbolizes industry and inculcates the worker drone mentality. Porphyry must be the source of some of their interpretations however as according to Albert Mackey's Encyclopedia of Freemasonry "There seems, however, to be a more recondite meaning connected with this symbol. The ark has already been shown to have been an emblem common to Freemasonry and the Ancient Mysteries, as a symbol of regeneration--of the second birth from death to life. Now, in the Mysteries, a hive was the type of the ark. Hence, says Faber (In another Christian Euhemerist work, "Origin of Pagan Idolatry," volume ii, page 133) "both the diluvian priestesses and the regenerated souls were called bees; hence, bees were feigned to be produced from the carcass of a cow, which also symbolized the ark; and hence, as the great father was esteemed an infernal god, honey was much used both in funeral rites and in the Mysteries. The Bee was among the Egyptians the symbol of an obedient people, because says Horopollo, of all animals, the bee alone has a King.” “The Book of the Bee” written by a Christian bishop also explains the Christian meaning, that as a bee makes foundation of wax for the hive and collects dew to make honey, “in like manner have we the infirm, hewn the stones of corporeal words, from the rocks of the scriptures which are in the old testament, and have laid them down as a foundation for the edifice of the spiritual law.” There is much more to the bee cult but it is beyond the scope of this book, however given it's associations with heavenly honey, taurus, amber, the omphalos bee hive and that it was co-opted by the meteorite cult, we can see that among other things it is a symbol of reincarnation as through meteorites. There is more that is intriguing in Porphyry and I cannot quote it all, but the text gives many more important symbolic interpretations including an explanation for how souls come in to the world through caves and or winds in the north and the meaning of gates and also the idea of souls being bowls, tubs or vessels for holding water and so this is very useful for interpreting other texts I cite.

These traditions all refer to the same things, they are all very self similar and we can see they have a common and very ancient origin, so that upon decoding the seven seals, the oligarchs will have the “lost word” of Masonry needed to activate all the latent powers of the tablets of destiny. As today they belong to the tyrannical Abrahamic death cult, it would be easy to demonize the tablets of destiny, but as they also inspired Hinduism and Egyptian religion, we can see there is very old and true wisdom in them. This is especially true since the original source of the tablets would actually be less corrupted than even these traditions, so they can be used to take control of the archons, but it depends on who controls the tablets, that is who has the keys, the people, or some oligarchical elite.

It is not so much that Sumeria is the source of all mythology, Egypt contributed more to western civilization than Babylon in many ways, India and China certainly had their own things going on as well. What was happening was that Sumerian capitalists and especially Babylonians were the originators of truly propagandist mind control theocracies. They used these techniques to infiltrate a wide variety of preexisting prehistoric cultures and economies, across the same kind of distances as what would become the silk road and beyond. They took over the histories and spiritualities of indigenous peoples and planted GMO seeds in to the cultural ecosystem, erasing forever much of the knowledge of the ancients and replacing it with a history of their kings. In this way most prayers went to the spirits of the kings and the rulers gained the only historical context for reality, and so from this tactic they gained the monopoly on controlling the “Terrene economy” of consensus reality. Upon taking physical possession of the Kaaba, the bankers will have total control of the two main meteorite pieces and so gain control of the entire cube of space, or rather the archons will be able to have total control of the cube through their human hosts. Like good Watcher offspring, they have already consciously and overtly rebuilt a physical version of the tower of Babel in the form of the parliament building of the European Union, paying homage to paintings of the tower with the motto “many tongues one voice.”

As I explained, the Saturn death cult must sacrifice a pure red heifer and its ashes will be used to purify the temple mount in Jerusalem and only then can the Temple can be created. Once the temple is created, the two tablets of destiny will be reunited in the tabernacle and the theocrats will call upon their messiah using the “lost word” of Masonry to take over the world for them. Then in their minds the demiurge can rule openly as the king of the world, using the tablets of destiny to control the digital prison which houses all life on this planet. However, if enough people open the gateway to Dysnomia, the authoritarian apocalypse could be avoided and true Anarchist freedom could be achieved. This would mean that if Muslims, Christians and Jews could free themselves of their prejudice and hate, they would then treat each other and non Abrahamic people as equals and they could even build a temple together and live in peace. If this could be accomplished then the rest of the world would not have to be dragged in to their religious insanity which is actively seeking to end the world and instead, we could all live in Anarchy, achieving our true will which in my opinion would be global peace and equality. The Abrahamic faiths could even call on their various forms of “god” to settle their disputes peacefully, if they had Wisdom they would pray for forgiveness for what they have done to each other, themselves and everyone else, that is if they actually still have faith in him and are not merely trying to take over the world themselves. While you may not believe this, many apocalyptic nut bags with access to nuclear weapons do basically believe this and they are unconsciously manifesting the end of the world as a self fulfilling prophecy and so only by spreading Anarchy can we avoid these manifestations and steer the fractal to a more enjoyable parallel reality.

Just as this Earth gave birth to both bankers and Anarchists, we cannot say the cube is itself “evil” anymore then we can say the Earth is “evil,” though certainly some Gnostics might interpret it this way, the fact remains we must have gnosis or knowledge of it in order to stop being harmed by it. It may be Pandora's box, but hope remains inside, the cube is only a problem if you don't know how to get out, if you can't “think outside the box,” but once you realize you are divine and learn how to focus and so manipulate time, you have nothing to fear, not Saturn gods, not Satan, not bankers, not anything. (Now I should clarify here and point out Pandora actually had a jar and not a box, but Hesiod's “Works and Days” myth of Pandora is in more ways than one related to all this and the jar is not unlike the jars or vessels Solomon trapped his demons in.) All you must worry about is overcoming ignorance and acting accordingly, that is acting as an Anarchist. While all this binary symbolism suggests duality, if reality is a computer program or something like it, it strongly suggests our brains are quantum computers. In fact at least a few scientists believe this already, but what we have to keep in mind is that what defines quantum computers is that they are able to use a third variable, one that is both 1 and 0 and that this makes them much better at certain functions than regular computers. So it is the Gnostics and theocrats are in a race to decode the tablets of destiny, the Gnostics wanting to set us free, the Christian theocrats wanting to send everyone to eternal hellfire and glory in their domination over the Earth. Due to the brain virus, Christians are only capable of binary dualistic calculations, where as a Gnostic is like a quantum computer and so are able to function according to much different parameters, their goal being to increase everyone's consciousness. The Christian Babylonian archons are trying to decode the tablets of destiny completely, it has seven barriers before they can conquer the world for their demiurge, so if we do not figure out our divinity soon, the bankers may manifest a materialist literalist interpretation.

Whoever controls the tablets of destiny controls the electromagnetic energies generated by the collective brains of all who believe in Yahweh, or his derivatives. At the very least, whoever can get the most people to believe in their arrangement of vowels and spaces in the Torah, creates the story and also importantly the end time scenario and the religious utopian vision of the end times. So by controlling ideas of how Armageddon will play out, the rulers are able to use the believers as pawns to direct history, making them foot soldiers in their plans for world domination. I don't have an end of the world scenario other than the recognition the rulers are trying to destroy nature, the closest thing to utopia on Earth I believe in is Anarchism. People who surrender their energy to Yahweh as their god, surrender it to the black magicians who control the tablets and use it as a weapon to impose their rule on the world in gigantic ritual we call history, which is used to evoke their death god and bring about the apocalypse. If a hurricane happens they blame gay people, or Haitian Voodoo, but it is the result of their collective deluded egotism manifesting their hate on their scapegoats, then like a false flag attack they misdirect the followers in to more fear and submission. Their deluded actions also manifest as climate change which is irrelevant to them because it's either a “communist” conspiracy, or not their problem since Jesus is coming to save them. If reality is a computer program, or Quantum physics provides the key to the tablets of destiny, those who have that knowledge will be fully able to “hack” reality and they could be as powerful as a god, or it might just set us free, it all depends on who will have the power. We can wait and see and let the technology grow, watch the environment be destroyed and with it any hope of independence from the system, or we can seize power for the people right now!

As I have explained there are two basic factions, the Masons and the Catholics and each group is trying to reconstruct the meteorite, or fight over various pieces, but Helena Roerich gives us clues to this war in her book "On Eastern Crossroads." (Both Roerichs have a variety of writings about it) According to her the stone comes from the constellation Orion and I would find her history of the stone relates to her apocalyptic scenario involving Shambhala and the Buddhist messianic figure Matriya. There is too much here to quote it all, but she speaks of the stone as "the Chalice covered with the Shield" and how "by treason the servants of the temple usurped the Stone from the Ruler of India to glorify a foreign land." She tells us that Ravana hid the stone on Lanka, that "it will depart beyond the sea. In its wake, like the tail of a comet, happiness is still ablaze; but not for long." Curiously she goes on to explain how Timur the Mongolian emperor gained the stone and "the great one approached the wall of Amber." (Mongolian myths do have many familiar symbols) Then she explains "the way of the Stone turned westward" and later we learn, "On Mount Ararat lies the fiery Stone" and that "the best relic of the power of the Stone is symbolized by the serpent's Stone—symbol of a wise possession." Eventually "Uroil Zena, spirit of the air" gave the stone to Solomon, who had a piece put on to a ring and engraved upon it "the chalice of wisdom illumined with a flame." She also speaks of a vision of a pillar of clouds and that "the pillar dispersed into blue sparks." From a "Book of Tristan" named "Lun" she quotes, "When the Son of the Sun descended upon Earth to teach mankind, there fell from heaven a Shield which bore the power of the world. In the centre of the Shield between the three distinct marks were signs of silver predicting events under the rays of the sun. The sudden darkening of the sun threw into despair the Son of the Sun and he dropped and shattered the Shield. For ominous was the constellation. But the power remained in the central fragment—there the ray of the Sun touched." "It is said that King Solomon severed the central portion of the Stone for his ring. The legend of our priests also tells of the shattered shield of the sun." "When the Emperor of China possessed the treasure of the sun, he erected for it a turquoise temple of the colour of the azure sky" and then she says that while westerners have it now, the stone will go east.

While I have laid out the various steps of the ziggurat of Babel, each step is a map of the universal fractal, some of what I have written shows this more than others things. I can hear some critics now as they complain, but all those examples of pillars and stones give totally different gems! But what have we seen so far? Sapphire for the moon, agate for Mercury, emerald for Venus, the gold tablet of Atlantis for the Sun, iron as in most meteorites for Mars, tin from India for Jupiter and electrum for Yahweh or Saturn and so you see we have all seven tablets of destiny. Sure there are more tablets than this, but their metallic or stone composition is much more symbolic than literal, especially given we are dealing with meteorites. We must stop interpreting myths so literally, nor as if there is only one meaning! As the Taoist "Book of Lieh-Tzū" explains, "There may be similarity in understanding without similarity in outward form. There may also be similarity in form without similarity in understanding. The Sage embraces similarity of understanding and pays no regard to similarity of form. The world in general is attracted by similarity of form, but remains indifferent to similarity of understanding."

Now I can still hear others complain that I listed so many numbers that the probability of some of them having significant words is basically guaranteed and well they are right. However they fail to remember that those who wrote and read these texts in the old days believed in such codes and that if we want to understand what they meant to those people, we have to use their hermeneutics. We also have to remember that the gematria of the squares often groups different words and numbers together in meaningful ways which shed light on how to interpret the myths. That even if all this was unintended, it highlights the ancient belief that all language, even books on the most mundane subjects were subject to the patterns of the Adamic language and Qabbalah as through the natural processes of the subconscious and universal grammar inherent in all human brains. Even if you don't believe that, even if all this gematria is my own apophenia, it's lead me to very real interpretations of various texts, as with the subjects of this chapter, with many realizations I would not have been able to make otherwise. While you must pick and choose the words to make sense of the gematria, the book Sepher Sapphires provides so much occult knowledge, such detailed entries, that if you read them fully and have astrological knowledge, the kameas are an excellent way to learn about literal Kabbalah and make your own paradigm. Those who have the will to look up these numbers in more detail, to read the texts I have cited, they will see many many more common threads, they will see from their own experiments even more numbers which show this is far beyond an accident.

While there are demonic and scary themes brought up in all this symbolism we should not be scared by this, as in order to gain gnosis and escape from the cube we have to cross the abyss and the black hole of Abaddon or Choronzon to have our revelation and that means facing our fears. As I have shown, magick can be found in all religions, the same symbols show up all over the place and so the idea that some symbols will automatically damn your soul for eternity is, as I believe I have shown, a spell to enslave you. As some Gnostics did magick utilizing the archons once they had gained control of them, once again I want to stress the problem is not any particular symbol, but how it is used and with what mind set. You are divine, what have you to fear? The problems occur when authorities misconstrue the gods or symbols to make you think you will be damned simply by making up your own mind, any symbol can enslave, any spiritual system can potentially set you free, even Freemasonry or Catholicism. What matters is your will, your choices as to what aspects you want to interpret and the context you do this from, because whether we like it or not, this is the basis of our growth and doing so consciously is crucial to using the symbols correctly. Those with esoteric knowledge use the symbols as tools, those without that knowledge make the symbols in to rulers and call those who would set them free heretics, or even think they are demon possessed, but this is because they fear knowledge and love ignorance. If you know you are divine, or even if you just believe the true divinity will protect you, then no demon can harm you, they can only try and trick you in to thinking you are powerless. So do not worry about using the “right” symbols, instead focus on finding the ones that feel right and speak to you, or become a magician artist and make your own, but always focus on having the gnosis to use the symbols properly and in accordance with Anarchism.

So in conclusion, when we put all the pieces of the puzzle together, we can get a pretty good idea of how Judaism was created, that is the daemons of the 72 nations said, “let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole Earth.” At the same time, seeing how the new empires of the world were destroying the ancient ways, a group of international mystics convened fearing that their ancient knowledge would be lost and so they decided to make a mnemonic device or “name” which is the “strong tower” of YHVH. As we know that Thoth was equated with Adam, this means the book of Thoth is the book of Adam and so as “Adam” means “humanity,” the book of humanity was created by the international mystics who were the world's leading scholars and academics as with the scribe priests of “Thoth.” So they wrote the Torah in it's original form which is the book of life, (Zoa) or book of humanity and is one means of gaining the knowledge needed to cross the abyss of the universal fractal and return to the celestial paradise. However in the hands of theocrats, it is the tablets of destiny which they use to impose their mes or memes and set up their governments and religions and generally work their capitalist magick. Throughout history the the revolutions and spiritual movements created by those with access to the book of life have been degraded or corrupted by hierarchy and capitalism or even just innocent scribal errors and this has created a cycle of culture wars. This is as I explained in chapter 16 with more scientific and elaborate forms of Anarchist mysticism, followed by ever more powerful theocracies who try to monopolize that knowledge and so the Torah of today is quite a few iterations in to this fractal, a process which has been going on since the dawn of civilization at least.

As I have decoded the Zohar Sun square in relation to the strong tower, we can see it was intended to be the home of the prehistoric goddess of the abyss or Shekinah, but after being co-opted by the theocratic religion, the tower and “the world” on which it is based became a prison as in the myth of Sophia. That is YHVH is the four elements and also in extension as the 72 names it is the heavens and as YHVH is the primary formula of the Torah and the Torah is the programming of reality, YHVH is the god and king of “the world” and the Saturnian snake who wrestles with goddess of fate as in the tarot card. These daemons were forced to do the bidding of Yahweh and the spaces and vowels of the Torah were changed around to make a tower of false knowledge and patriarchal hierarchy. The daemons became more and more like demons and so helped Solomon to make his temple, which in turn housed the ark of the covenant, which as I have explained is symbolic of the Torah itself. Again we know the Zohar says the ark of the covenant is also the ark of Noah and that as the Gnostics understood in “the concept of our great power” the ark was the repository of many gods and so the ancient antediluvian wisdom. As Hermeticism teaches that there were some good daemons we can see the “men of the name” became divided and scattered and while for at least some of them it started out as a rebellion against the theocracy of the Babylonians, the myths basically agree that the rebellion was crushed or co-opted and so the ancient astrological knowledge was undoubtedly corrupted in to Yahweh worship. Because rebels would try to restate their mysticism using much of the same symbols, only to have that symbolism appropriated, not to mention because time and memes are fractal, the linear order of all this is highly “confused” and repetitious. We could say that it was at this time that the daemons became the “fallen” fathers of the Jewish Patriarchs and their mystical practices were co-opted by the 72 descendants of Noah, or kings who would rule the Earth.

Dogmatic literalism serves theocracy and so we must always look for the “good” and “bad” in all symbols and so we see the men of the “name” or Shem would be associated with both egotistical kings trying to create a reputation and also the men, women and probably transgendered folk of the international mystics who later became Gnostics and were seeking the name/formula for the universal fractal. Today we can see that Jews are the men of the name in that not only are the 72 demons the servants of their god, but that they generally do not say the name Yahweh or Jahovah as this is taking the lords name in vain, so instead they say “Hashem” which means “the name.” So then apart from some Kabbalists inspired from the teachings of Gnostic refugees, we see Jews and Christians worship the tower made by the daemons which is the strong tower of YHVH as in the Greater Keys and the tetractys of YHVH. But for the Gnostics who know the truth they seek the goddess of Wisdom which the followers of the Abrahamic death cult have imprisoned inside. The knowledge of the ancient magick was thus wiped out in a flood of censorship and through murder of those who held the keys to the mnemonic devices and what is more, this flood continues it's work today. Some rebels as through Egyptian priests of Amun managed to preserve the pre-flood Qabbalistic knowledge and among other influences, this would lead to the Gnostic rebellion in the Roman empire.

Given that even Plato speaks of the daemons in ways similar to the Watcher story, that I haven't even gone in to most of the Pagan myths of giants, as I have shown the idea was very wide spread. Plato's “Laws” section 713 A says outright that Saturn made them to be the rulers of humanity! There are even New World myths of giants and a flood and so it's relative exclusion from later forms of mainstream Christianity is very suspicious and among all the other political machinations involved in this, it is a clear sign that those humans who represent the archons, prefer us to be ignorant of this context for religion. While early Christians were clearly aware of the story of the Watchers and giants, it plays little to no role in the new testament and drawing on Gnostic works like the Book of Revelations, has instead been corrupted by the Christian theocrats in to a story about the rebellion of Satan and later Lucifer. That is the theocrats wanted to keep using the old testament but were trying to co-opt Gnosticism which was fundamentally opposed to Judaism, so they turned Ieou or the “Father” or Pleroma in to Yahweh, with Jesus as his son, then turned Mary/Sophia or the Shekinah in to the holy ghost in a trinity that no one has understood ever since. Then they turned Azazel from being the servant of Yahweh in to the image of Satan who rebelled in a “war against heaven,” eventually creating the notion of hell from Tartarus and the pit which Azazel was thrown in to. (Remember there is no “hell” in Judaism or even early Christianity as Christians today understand it) The fallen angels became rebellious demons under Satan who were motivated by a hatred of humanity, rather than a love of human women and we are lead to believe that “god” cannot deal with his own creations until the time of judgement. While there is some Jewish precedent for this, as in the angels stealing the book of Raziel so that they do not have to serve humanity, the Christian theocrats were careful to leave out many details and especially those which promote human divinity and our own magickal abilities. This would all be further modified and amplified by reinterpreting Jewish scriptures quite differently from how Jews interpret them and adding corrupted Pagan memes and Zoroastrianism etc, so that eventually Satan became a red man with a pitch fork, who was jealous of “god” just as Gnostics say Yahweh was jealous of the higher aeons. So then the theocrats tricked people in to accepting what we might call the Gnostic Satan, Yahweh as the true god, while the Christian Satan took on aspects of the demiurge such as being the lord of the world. Though Christians often do still think Yahweh or Jesus rules here, this is because their theology was shabbily constructed and is full of contradictions. Scholars have often missed much of this because with mystical knowledge, it often takes one to know one, that is they have not climbed the mountain themselves and so a purely intellectual scholar is unqualified for understanding the mystical and magickal schools of thought they generally dismiss. While such a notion will infuriate fundamentalists, they are intent on destroying anyone who disagrees with them about anything and so in the long run, showing the true origin of these religions may just bring about some peace from all the wars these people start.

As Gnostics were simultaneously promoting the truth and the stories which speak out against the Watchers, this process of co-opting was by necessity a gradual process, spanning centuries in fact. So by the time of Eusebius, Constantine and orthodoxy, the Christian religion was developed enough that Eusebius could in part use Gnostic ideas against Pagans, possibly in part even believing his own bullshit, because by this time he had no true context for the origins of Gnosticism or Judaism. To top it off thanks to Constantine and other theocrats like Justinian, the means of dealing with the fallen angels and their offspring would largely be destroyed or outlawed through the persecution of Gnostics and Qabbalists.

While it was more common for early Christians to have basically the same view of the Watchers as the Jews, it is true there are some Christian traditions in which there was no fallen angels at all, but that some of the “children of Seth” mixed with the descendents of Cain and that this was the source of what was commonly believed to be giants. However as I have shown the far older Ugaritic texts and Babylonian religion tell otherwise, and this was taken up by Jews as in the pre-Christian book of Enoch, so the idea that fallen angels had no role is probably some form of anti-Gnostic propaganda. Even still it doesn't really make much sense, unless maybe the Christian theocrats were trying to take the heat off themselves and justify kingship and institutional religion, that is like later Christians they wanted to destroy all knowledge of the giants altogether. Seeing that it is orthodox Jews and Christians that are the ones who actually practice the teachings of the Watchers is easy enough when we look at what the texts actually say the teachings were. That is the Watchers taught the use of metals and other technologies, primarily for war and monetary systems and also the Goetic magick used by the likes of Solomon and later the Christian aristocrats of Europe. So as it is always the rulers which start wars and handle the economies, and Judaism and Christianity were theocracies that only paid lip service to the ideals of peace and giving to the poor, (where as the Gnostics actually lived it) it is pretty undeniable that the Abrahamic followers would be the students of such “fallen angels.” Even if some descendents of Seth were the inspiration for the Watchers, they would not be Gnostics and given that all humans today would technically be descendents of Seth, (depending on how you explain the effect of the flood on the Cainites) this is rather a vague statement indicative of the racist eugenics cult of the theocracy.

So then we see a war of memes between theocrats and mystic magicians in which both sides have definitely “confused” each other since long before 600-500 BC and the writing of the Torah, demonizing and using each others' symbols until no one can tell who made what anymore. While the “Torah” existed in the pre-flood times as the book of Adam or Book of Raziel, this would be the interpretation of the international magicians and mystics seeking to create the universal language. As I have done my best to explain within the limitations of space, it is all alluded to in Sumerian mythology and so goes back right to the beginnings of civilization and the first Anarchist rebels of Tiamat and even the goddess of Gobekli Tepe with all her sacred pillars. (Crete also had pillars that were worshipped) Tiamat, the prehistoric mother goddess of Samarra used swastikas as her symbol and created the tablets of destiny for her offspring Kingu. Kingu we will remember was the indigenous “unskilled workers” who founded civilization and fought back against the gangster theocrats, but were defeated and had the tablets taken by what would become the Elohim, the pantheon of Sumeria and Babylon. The schethiya then seems to be some kind of special meteorite, with pieces breaking off and hitting various places in Mesopotamia, though as the myths say, the largest piece went in to the ocean and became symbolized as Venus or various goddess's of fate and natural law. It would seem that some form of divination was derived from the meteorites and the formations created on them as they fell, but more so this divination would become related to cubes and dice and wheels. So ever since, the mystical Anarchist rebels have been trying to reconstruct the meteorite, or schethiya Book of Adam and the universal language, in what is essentially known as “Tikkun Olam” and “Tikkun Hapanim” in a race against the theocrats and archons who are themselves trying to reconstruct the the tablets of destiny, all so that they can create their new world order. Both sides have also described their visions of utopia as the “New Jerusalem” with the Gnostics and Alchemists seeking a city of spiritual gold and wisdom for their consciousness, where as the theocrats seek a physical city of gold to be the capital of their global capitalist empire.

From Asherah and the Shekinah, to Binah the ocean goddess of the Zohar and the princess of the tower, we have seen and can see many symbols which show the original feminine nature of Yahweh. That the “god” of the original Hebrews was originally a goddess should not be so strange when we realize that like all religions, it is rooted in polytheism. More precisely we can see this in IAHU, which means “exalted dove” and was according to Robert Graves the daughter of Tiamat, a goddess which others since have linked to the name Yahweh through YAHO, which we will remember is the name used to make the cube of space. I am not very familiar with the work of Graves as I always read he was inaccurate in his “Great white Goddess” theories and so as I prefer primary texts anyways, I never got around to reading him. The more I learn however, the more it seems that at least in his broad thesis, he is right and so shame on me for dismissing him, I probably could have saved myself a lot of work! IAHU is the daughter, who would probably be an early version of Inanna or Ishtar, though would be an aspect of Tiamat herself, Graves also identifies her with a form of Eurynome. The myths tell us after defeating Tiamat, Marduk cut her in two in order to create the heaven and the Earth binary, and so in certain religious ceremonies a dove representing IAHU was cut in half to depict this. I have already shown how YAHO relates to IAO or the archon YAO who is associated with leviathan, but this name IAHU has also been linked to Elath Iahu, a Kenite or Cainite smith god, but also as a title of both Egyptian gods Set and Horus, and finally Iaachus or Dionysus. There is also a goddess Anat-Iahu as in Anath the goddess of Anatolia and so here we have basically all the usual suspects, but with the oldest being females or hermaphrodites. There was a bearded form of Aphrodite called Aphrodite Barbata, or a male or hermaphroditic form of Aphrodite called Aphroditus who was from Cyprus. IAHU then is the goddess of the schethiya, with the words of the Torah changed by the patriarchs when Chronos rebelled against the dove goddess Eurynome, (who is here like Tiamat or Nammu) they eventually changed the name to Yam which is one meaning of his attempt to become king of the gods.

Some, like Graves have argued that all the myths of gods doing battle with the Titans, Norse Giants or Fomorians etc are the stories of Indo-Europeans invading the indigenous peoples, but after considering this idea for a long time, given the lack of archeological evidence for invasions, I think something even more sinister is happening. Now for the most part, the myths do not say that the gods invaded a new land, but rather that they fought a revolution against the giants and in some cases even belonged to the same family. So then to me it is more likely that the religions have some pretty prehistoric roots, but that the giants are counter-revolutionary forces that “confuse” the people and myths in order to set up theocratic capitalist monarchies. A good example of this is Artemis, as she is a moon goddess she is definitely not a meteorite, yet at the mint/temple of the bankers in Ephesus she was worshipped as a meteorite, and so this is a corruption of the original goddess.

The Sumerians would be exceptional in some ways as they were the first people to have the “giants” totally co-opt and impersonate their deities, so in their war against Tiamat and Kingu it is a war against the indigenous. We just have to remember Tiamat and Abzu gave birth to the gods and that the blood of Kingu was used to make humanity in order to do the work of the Anunnaki/Igigi and so for the most part, the Watchers and their giant offspring would be on the side of the Sumerian gods who became Yahweh. There are plenty of reasons to think that Tiamat was originally on the side of the gods and that Inanna is even a form of her, and so while it is impossible to get exact details, the stories of wars against the giants are the stories of wars against those giant egos who twist the myths in to theocracies and who claim to exclusively be the gods themselves. We can also see a hint at this in all the myths from around the world of giants or ogres kidnapping women and then being saved by some hero or god. That is warlords or agents of the Saturn cult apparently came in and abducted the most beautiful women in the land to set up their patriarchal prostitution cult, only to have the gods or human heroes save the women in an act of rebellion. In fact the Enuma Elish does say that Tiamat was on the side of her children the gods against Absu, the text is not totally complete but it seems that the four winds of Anu were given to Marduk and he had stirred things up keeping Tiamat and the other gods from sleeping. From the W.G. Lambert translation we read, “He made a wave to bring consternation on Tiamat” and so this was done deliberately to piss her off, probably as a plan by Enki to get his son Marduk in control and gain the tablets of destiny. The text also tells of how Anshar is pissed at Enki for upsetting Tiamat and causing the war and so we see Enki was originally unilateral in his decision to make war against the primordial mother and father. The Enuma Elish does say that the Annuna gods or Anunnaki were originally on the side of Kingu, but then sold him out for a place in the new regime. This shows the original 72 mystics fought alongside Kingu, but after their defeat were made subject to Enki and Marduk, or were replaced by theocratic agents impersonating them, but this is hard to interpret as various beings are identified as the Anunnaki.

Like Sophia, Tiamat is a mother of the abyss turned in to the world of matter by her descendants and especially the craftsmen god Enki as the demiurge, (He is also the most theocratic god associated with the planet Mercury) but as On the Origin of the world says, their existed something before Chaos or Absu, that is the realms from which Sophia or Tiamat are from, are the heavens of the original mystics who lived before the theocrats, as with the Sumerian goddess Nammu being Norea. In the myth of Tiamat, Adamas or Anthropos in Gnosticism is like Kingu, who was given the tablets of destiny or book of Humanity/Raziel in order to preserve the tower of information. Kingu was able to decree the fate of his descendants, as in an egalitarian society the unskilled tribal people had access to the tablets of destiny! This means the Anarchists are written in to the book of life and have precedence as the rightful owners before the fascist theocratic coupe stole the knowledge. There are 12 archons often grouped together in Gnosticism and likewise, Tiamat had 12 children who fought for her including Kingu, but by this time Kingu is more like Adamas and there is of course a group of 12 aeons as well. In the Enuma Elish there is also talk of minotaur creatures, but as with Purusha the man-bull this was probably at one time a positive figure, as this was before Moloch or King Minos discredited that symbolism by instituting human sacrifice. Given that when Pagan kings existed at all, they were often originally elected and served short terms as war leaders and mediators for those who consented, that they even faced being sacrificed if they screwed up, this shows then that the gods are far older than the later autocratic monarchs created by the Trojans and Babylonians. As with the Pagan coronation stones for elected kings, they were not meteorites and so were not archons, at least not until they were co-opted by people like Snorri and the Jarls.

While this rise of patriarchy occurred in gradual stages as women were increasingly subjugated, given the symbolism it is not too hard to see what might have happened. The Greeks have their own version of a scapegoat which just so happens to have the same root of a word we already know, pharmakos, or plural pharmakoi was used to refer to criminals, or originally in some traditions, kings who would be sacrificed to cleanse the society of its sins. For the Greeks this occurred at the holiday of Thargelia, whereas the Romans had their own holiday which was somewhat different called Lupercalia and this occurred on what is now Valentine's day. Lupercalia was a fertility festival, but there were also purification rituals and a goat which would be sacrificed at the cave where Romulus and Remus were said to have been nursed by their wolf mother. These kinds of practices were found in other places and generally show the common theocratic symbolism I have outlined and often include some form of genital mutilation as in the rites of Attis or Jewish circumcision. However for the Pagans in a more egalitarian time, this was also highly associated with fertility and aside from cleansing the community of sins, the sacrifice would be seen to placate demons/ghosts which were preventing the fertility of nature. Originally prehistoric tribal chiefs, or ceremonial kings would be elected, if at any time they screwed up, the people could have a vote of no confidence and sacrifice the monarch. As time went on and the monarchy gained more power, substitutes were found, at first this would be nobles, or even princes as with Yehud the son of King Chronos. Though as from the story of Abraham, it would seem that he did not want to sacrifice his son Isaac and so found a new substitute to sacrifice on the meteorite altar, so Demurus was chosen to impersonate Isaac as I have explained. Later as impersonators would be hard to find, criminals or other people were chosen who would get to impersonate the king for a time and have some fun before they were sacrificed. However as the king represents the people and makes decisions for them, substitutes would not truly cleanse the society and so the sins only continued to pile up as despotic or incompetent kings could no longer be thrown out of power. While this was not a totally linear progression, with the occasional mystical rebellion that would eventually be corrupted, monarchs would work to find scapegoats that were increasingly distanced from the real cause of the problems, that is the monarch himself. This tradition of justifying political power by finding scapegoats continues to this day, with modern governments creating ever more sophisticated propaganda to justify the sacrifice of their modern scapegoats and avoid the real issues. We can see this in "the war on terror" and false flag attacks and I am not the first to notice that fear of some enemy is often used to take away more freedom, that if it was not for fear of some "evil" or another, there would be no justification for governments at all. Sometimes, as in the oldest Trojan culture the scapegoat would be drowned and we can see that there are tales of Scamander, a river god who fought on the side of the Trojans, whose ghost supposedly impregnated women who swam in his river like some kind of horny Watcher ghost. Scamander, AKA Xanthos is the brother of many important river gods including Inachus, the father of IO and Phoroneus and it is said that one of the Telchines, Lykos escaped from the flood to Lykia and built a temple to Apollon Lykios on the banks of the river Xanthos. Xerxes and his Magi also made offerings at Troy and according to Herodotus, it would appear they liked to do this by rivers as with Xanthos. (Histories 7.43, 7.113 but also at Hdt. 7.191 they do magick with the winds and Thetis.)

As we have seen the Sanhedrin are the Earthly representatives of the sons of god and so are basically the Watchers or Nephilim, they are the Rephaim ancestor spirits of the ancient king/judges of Babylon who ruled the known world. These kings then were enacting fertility rituals with priestesses to ensure the fertility of the land, but it would seem that as with invocations done with meteorites, the spirits would according to at least some forms of the religion, reincarnate in the new kings and possess them. (So for example all Pharaohs are Horus) In the Ugaritic texts and in Judaism the image of shade (as for example under a tree) is used as a metaphor for protection that comes from either the gods or kings, but when a king died, the people believed they would also go to Sheol, or the afterlife and live in the "shade" or phantom of the king's spirit. (See Lamentations 4:20, Isaiah 14:9-20 and Ezekiel 31, or even the dream of Nebuchadnezzar which Daniel interpreted. This is explained in greater detail in "Dead Kings and Rephaim: The Patrons of the Ugaritic Dynasty" By Baruch A. Levine and Jean-Michel de Tarragon) This would explain quite nicely why Gnostics feared that archons would take people to false heavens or consume people's souls, but also like free souls on the land, those with gnosis are free from being judged by these demon kings and can even break the laws of the demiurge without consequence. As the Ugaritic Aqhat text links the Rephaim to chariots, this is why the Zohar calls the patriarchs Merkabahs which bring people to heaven, as those who believed in the theocracy went with the kings to Sheol, where as the kingless race of Gnostics went to the true heaven or in Revelations and the Pistis Sophia, they share the "throne" with Jesus.

Jesus himself was accused of necromancy and plenty of scholars have explored the exorcist or necromantic aspects of early Christianity and Judaism, but as an Occultist I should point out if you can do one, you can probably do the other and so these would be key markers of the death cult of kings. However as Gnostics would seek to free themselves of the archons, exorcism was surely a central part of their practices, so as demons were thought to cause sickness, (like STD's) they were associated with filth and things that cause infection, where as that which dispelled them often promoted health. From this it would not be hard to see how ritual cleansing or baptisms (as among the Mandaeans) would create a connection between spiritual purity and hygiene, physical cleaning and the good health this would bring in a very unsanitary ancient world. (Hygieia was the goddess of hygiene and the daughter of Asclepius) One example of necromancy from the old testament is the story of the Witch of Endor, a figure who summons the spirit of Samuel, but the 5th pentacle of the Moon from the Greater Keys was also specifically used "against all phantoms of the night, and to summon the souls of the departed from Hades." We will remember that Samuel was the prophet who warned against kings, he also anointed the first two kings Saul and David who were involved in the genocide of Haman's people and lived at a time when the Philistines stole the ark. His name is more correctly spelled Shemuwel, literally meaning "Name of God." More than a few Roman emperors such as Nero and Elagabalus AKA Heliogabalus were accused of necromancy or some kind of black magick, but then as I have explained the imperial cult in general is black magick as it seeks to control the populace.

I should clarify however that technically necromancy is just divination through the dead, for more Shamanic and tribal peoples it is not really much different than certain forms of ancestor worship and is nothing sinister in itself. We should only be worried when some ghosts start telling the living things like that we should set up spiritual monopolies for them by stealing the offerings from temples and others' graves. Funeral customs were much more important in those days and as most Pagans believed funerals required cremation to prevent the spirits from lingering around the body, the Catholic customs of burial under a cross or tombstone would be seen almost like a prison for the soul. Mesopotamia and Egypt were exceptions to this however and it was important for Mesopotamians to take care of the dead spirits of their family members and provide them with offerings and things like water. I don't think I need to explain that funerary practices were central to Egyptian religion, but it is important that mummification sought to preserve the body. So that given that Judaism is Egyptian and Mesopotamian syncretism, it is not surprising Christianity would include burial practices. As Christian martyrs were agents of the banking cults, by burying Christians along with them, they may function in a similar way to the mummified Falcon in the Greek magical papyri. That is Christianity may have been set up to supply the capitalist theocrats with the souls of dead Christians who would have been conscripted as servitor slaves, or something like an ushabti familiar spirit for Pharaohs. We do know that some ancient kings were buried with their servants and their servants were even sacrificed upon the death of the king and so by creating Christianity, the theocrats would seek to create an army of slaves in the afterlife. When trying to convert Ireland, St Patrick invented the notion of purgatory, saying that is where the Celtic dead were and so from what I can see, it was standard practice for Christians to try and gain an edge in magickal power by destroying other people's abilities to commune with their ancestors and their gods. As depicted in the Judgement Tarot card, taken from a Gnostic perspective, Revelations says that Jesus will resurrect the dead at the end times and so this could mean he is freeing the imprisoned souls from the archons.

Azazel as the scapegoat and leader of the sons of god apparently got tired of being thrown in to the abyss and drowned in his human bodies and so he and the Watchers rebelled against the goddess, or the priestess's who would stay on after the kings were executed. Once people lost the right to have their vote of no confidence, the rulers lost their fear of being sacrificed if they screwed up. In this way the hierarchies became increasingly authoritarian and free to rule with an iron fist, draconian laws were instituted and king worship encouraged. So as the "demons" of karma were never really dealt with, the society could not be healed or made pure and egalitarian once more. As the Shamans were no longer allowed to treat the archon virus, it spread unabated and then in the confusion, the Watchers changed around the book of Adam/humanity and made Yahweh or Yam in the image of Iahu and with that they started to wipe out the goddess from history. The schethiya then is Venus, or Astarte, or Inanna IAHU and as she fell, it seems fragments broke off or smaller meteorites also fell at the same time and these were the sons of the goddess.

While it is much less explicit we can see then it is likely that the Gnostics were referring to all this in a broad and symbolic way, rather than a material way as with the theocrats, so that with the fall of Sophia we see she is the original Venus meteorite and the accidental creation of the demiurge and his archons were the other smaller "abortion" meteorites which broke off. In other myths, while here tears are said to be the cause of liquids, in some cases a kind of distant folk memory of a meteorite goddess might be seen in the Valentinian view of Sophia Achamoth, that like Freya with her "amber tears," the tears of this goddess of the night's sky were as sparks and became the spirits of all life forms as through meteorites, so that like with Cathars we are all the fallen children trying to get out of the prison. Given that Sophia is the syncretic form of so many goddess's, we can see that Sophia is the real name for this most sacred aspect of the schethiya, or Shekinah and the woman trapped in the tower by her rebellious descendants. So then the Gnostics and especially the Sethians were the ones who knew that Sophia was the uncorrupted form of the true prehistoric goddess and were thus engaged in rebellion against the rulers or 72 kings of the world, who were themselves continuing to invoke the ghosts of the giants, or the spirits of the kings that were created by their monopolizing the meteorite cults of metal working.

As a prime example of the confusion of translation, Revelation 1:15 ; 2:18 also describes god as "polished brass" or "fine brass" but in the Latin translation the word "orichalcum" is used which is none other than the mysterious metal of Atlantis. Some have argued this is referring to electrum and so as in other places John is clearly referencing Ezekiel, though in a much more Gnostic or Anarchist form, suggesting that along with his use of the mark of the beast, he knew the book of Ezekiel was altered. Bogomils and Archontic Gnostics reportedly made use of a text called the "Ascension of Isaiah" and so some Gnostics probably interpreted the old testament Isaiah differently as well. Bringing to mind the Lapis Exilis grail, Pliny also tells of a cup of electrum consecrated by Helen of Troy after the war to Athena on the island of Rhodes, so as Helen is Mary Magdalene and Jesus is the grail, then it should not be too surprising that he too is electrum. (Hephaestus was also said to have made special cups, one would go to Menelaus, the other to Priam) Hence we have all four tarot suits, as meteorites were made in to swords by Indian kings, Lugh's spear may be a comet or Abraham's rod is sapphire, the first coins were made of electrum, though pentacles could be stones or meteorites in general and last but not least the cups of Helen, Ganymede and Garuda etc, the latter of which hold the entheogenic honey brew ambrosia or amrita.

Ancient Arabic and Persian legends speak of the 72 kings known as Suleiman and so it was this cartel which eventually became known as Solomon, having it's headquarters in various places throughout the centuries. (This of course brings to mind Solaymān the helper of Kay Kāvus) SOL-omon was a Solar king in many ways and as there were 200 Watchers, this is the value of the letter of the sun "Resh," which is the 30th path and as the mystic number of 30 is 465, this is the gematria of King Solomon, while 466 is Simeon and other things. This cult of the ancient kings spread from the Sumerians, to the Babylonians and Trojans, to the Jews and the Romans and then on to the monarchs of Europe, where to this day it is continued by the British royalty. (That is from the Royals own traditions of “British Israelism,” as the “Windsors” are Germans who changed their name in WWI)

So with all this in mind, we can see the gematria of IAHU is quite astonishing, while I have already given YHV or YAHO as 21, if we add the Aleph the Hebrew would have a gematria of 22, which would show she is a goddess of the total alphabet, just as Sophia is with the “body of truth” for the Gnostics. Depending on how it is transliterated, if we include the alpha, IAHU would be IAHY in Greek and have a regular isopsephy of 419, which along with other numbers relating to the true goddess, just so happens to be a number that came up in the Mars kamea when I put psalm 72:8 in to it! 419 is Tuat, or Thoth spelled in Greek, but it is also the name of the Hebrew letter Teth spelled in full, we will remember it is the strength or lust card of the tarot which depicts this goddess for us. 419 is also “the limitless light” or “the Ain Soph Aur” and so the god Asshur, it is “the first matter,” “unities” and the “fountain of wisdom” and Sodom+Gomorrah. 419 is also “my sister” as in the Song of Solomon 4:12 “A garden enclosed is my sister, my bride” which Sepher Sapphires tells us, the garden is the pillow stone or “Ehben.” (See also #53, a number on the Jupiter prime square and remember both the altar and the book of Adam is the stone and so keep this in mind with the book of Baruch and the goddess Edem, mother of Omphale) So then my sister, my bride is the limitless light, the first matter and the unities of the fountain of wisdom, which gives “strength” and fell as a stone in Sodom and Gomorrah. If we do not include the alpha or use the rule of Colel it brings us to 418, which is ABRAHADABRA the word of the aeon and is so important to Crowley, (See Book of the Law Ch 2 for Crowley's take on everything) it is beyond the scope of this book, (See also ABRAXAS=365 and that these letters form a tetractys) but 418 is the name Cheth, or the letter of the chariot card spelled in full, it is also Tau, in that Tau is 406 spelled TV, and TV+VAV spelled in full is 418. In isopsephy 418 is “Foundation,” “Pallas Athene” and “I am Hermes,” while 420 is the Greek spelling of Isis, mistress or lady, Bacchante, Hawk (as in Horus) and also Ring or circle. Given that Greeks were the first to make letters for vowels, as IAHU is the most ancient name regarding this that I could find, 418 may be better than adding the alpha, in which case 417 applies by Colel, which is “Noah's ark” “a garden enclosed” and “tree of life + the way.” In ordinal values IAHU would either be 36 or 37, both numbers relating to the Sun square and so really all of those Greek mantra names which I gave like IAO or IEOU as referring to Dionysus, may originally be aspects of IAHU, who is the original goddess with the voice of seven thunders. (see “Thunder Perfect Mind”)

So then Jesus calls himself the morning star because he is her son or her lover, (just like Baal and forms of Astarte/Asherah, or Tammuz and Ishtar, or Kingu and Tiamat) the dual aspect of Sophia which was turned in to the patriarchy of Christianity with “Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone.” While it is not her only role, Sophia certainly comes off as a goddess of the abyss not unlike Tiamat and in the text On the Origin of the World, this is where she gives birth to the demiurge. Eros also comes up in this text where he is associated with the rose of Venus and with the vine of grapes that is the hallmark of Dionysus and so we see a strong Orphic influence here as Eros is also a child of chaos or Nyx or Venus. While their explanations have discrepancies and are obviously an over simplification, both Epiphanius (Book I Ch 31) and Irenaeus (Book II Ch 14) interpret Gnosticism as saying that Nyx corresponds to Sige (Silence) or the highest form of Sophia. Nyx interacts with Bythos (depth) and even gives birth to Chaos and the Valentian philosophy is said to have taken their cosmology of 30 aeons from Hesiod or Antiphanes. (I thank Dysnomia for giving me this understanding) So then if Sophia is Nyx, she is also Venus Urania and her tears would certainly fit symbolically as meteorites, though by the time of the Gnostics much of this would have been forgotten or reinterpreted using less theocratic symbols. So then we could say that Sophia as the virginal Barbelo is Aphrodite Urania and Tiamat, where as Sophia Achamoth would be IAHU and the more worldly and lusty form of Aphrodite. (Anat the virgin may have a similar relationship to Athirat)

There is too much meaning in the Naassene Sermon for me to explain it all, but it explains the limitations of language and makes many biblical references and speaks of the “gate of heaven.” Referencing Gen 28:17 where Jacob awakens from his dream of the ladder after using the pillow stone, the Gnostics say, “Mesopotamia is the course of the great ocean, flowing from the midst of the perfect human. (the heavenly Adamas) And he marvelled at the heavenly gate saying, How fearful is this place. It is no other than the house of god, and this is the gate of heaven. For this reason Jesus says, I am the true gate.” (John 10:9) So then Jacob is calling the place where he found the stone, the gate of heaven and so the stone itself is like the gate and as Jesus is himself the cornerstone, he too is the gate in this symbolism. As we saw, “gate of heaven” is also a title of the virgin Mary who is the “tower” and surely reminds us of what Babel translates to, the “gate of god” which was the attempt to reach heaven just like Jacob's ladder would do and so here we have a number of somewhat cryptic references, linking all these symbols. If on one level a flooded Mesopotamia is symbolic of the ocean, it means that all these stories of towers on the ocean relate to the tower of Babel, but also we can see that it is the abyss where the fallen angels came down. As the Samothracian mysteries are important to this text, and it is also very connected to the palladium, in context we can see the palladium is also the gate of heaven. To the Gnostics, as well as Christians, this gate of heaven would be the only means of salvation, though as in the Naassene Sermon, it was understood in multiple symbols including those of the Pagan mysteries and with an emphasis on the non-material symbolic meaning behind the stone. There are also references to the holy grail in this text and so if the Gnostics associated this with an electrum meteorite, it would certainly fit with the other symbolism, however there are likely to be a lot of layers to all this. (As with the whore of Babylon and her cup, or Sophia or Helen and her cup)

Hippolytus gives many other clues to how the Gnostics preserved the ancient Pagan Great Goddess religion from the Abrahamic death cult, so much that I cannot list it all here, but we can find many hints to see that for the Gnostics, the azure snake is the same as the snake/rod of Moses. In book 5 chapter 11 in the same section concerning the Peratae and their view of Nimrod or Nebrod and the snakes of the wilderness and the brazen serpent of Moses we read, “This serpent, he says, is the power that attended Moses, the rod that was turned into a serpent.” So this is the same serpent which Moses went to battle with against the magicians of the Pharaoh (Harut and Marut) and that “this universal serpent is, he says, the wise discourse of Eve. This, he says, is the mystery of Edem, this the river of Edem; this the mark that was set upon Cain.” Now we know from Deuteronomy the archon “snakes in the wilderness” were “fiery serpents” and so would be meteorites, where as the brazen serpent on the cross would on one level be Draco on the cross of the fixed signs. (the fiery serpents then are contrasted against the manna from heaven) The name Teth as in the letter with a gematria of 419 literally means snake, but according to Jewish and especially Kabbalistic tradition, Vav is the mark of Cain and is also associated with snakes. Among other places, this is seen in the Zohar a few pages before the Sun square cipher I decoded and we learn also “the letter Vav is related to Yesod, which is related to the sign of the covenant. This he merited when he (Cain) repented and agreed to keep the covenant.”

Back in Hippolytus we also learn how “life” was formed in the word or Logos and this “is Eve, mother of all living, — a common nature, that is, of gods, angels, immortals, mortals, irrational creatures, (and) rational ones.” So then for the Peratae this same snake is Sophia, who has as one of her forms Eve who gave life to all things, (The Gnostic Asherah) but also a river, blue or we might say azure, just as Marduk pierced the eyes of Tiamat and her tears flow as the Tigris and Euphrates. So that while in a different context and myth, this is the same azure snake of Heracles/Melqart or the Hesprides and a little later Hippolytus informs us how this snake is related to the constellation Draco, which is by the constellation Engonasis who is Heracles and on either side is the constellation Corona which is the crown of Ariadne. For the Celts this constellation was Arianrhod, a goddess mentioned by Taliesin who's name has been translated as “silver wheel” and so it may be connected to other wheels or crowns in this chapter. On the other side is Lyra, which is the lyre of Orpheus and was used in his magical goeteia epoidai songs, it is also the Lyre which Hermes invented from a turtle shell after stealing the cattle of Apollo, (Hermes also turned Battos to stone in this myth) while for Jews this was the lyre of the writer of their hymns, king David who's songs were likewise used for the 72 angels to control the Goetic demons. (This is also close to Cygnus and Ophiuchus) So as Sophia is the snake and in other sources the snake is azure stone, we can see that Sophia is the stone or Inanna/Asherah before the banking cult was created. Not only this, the turquoise stone of Thoth in the Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth is also described as azure, and on it is written a special language which others seek to corrupt.

Certainly some kings claimed to be the gods and may themselves have believed this to be the case, so if we were to force a literal translation on to all this, what would it look like? Magnets certainly played a role in magick and religion and so given that most meteorites are magnetic, we could well imagine an electromagnetic entity coming from the upper atmosphere and possessing the king and ruling through his body. As Jacob used his stone as a pillow we might also wonder if a magnetic meteorite might be capable of producing a trance state, as something like the Koren helmet, or perhaps meteorite fragments were placed in a crown. The electromagnetic patterns created by the Koren helmet are much more sophisticated than just putting your head on a magnet, but then if earthquakes can create trance states through generating piezoelectricity as Dr. Persinger says, then in conjunction with a knowledge of the Earth's magnetic/spiritual hotspots, who knows? As the ark was a giant capacitor originating in Egypt, and the Egyptians seem to have been aware of electricity and were even making crude batteries, (Bhagdad batteries) maybe, just maybe the ark was powered in some way by a magnetic meteorite. This could be done in a few ways and the word "electricity" actually comes from "electrum" as rubbing two pieces of amber together is how static electricity was discovered. Faraday also "discovered" the piezoelectric effect as when rubbing a magnet against a metal coil it produces a charge and so this could be the tablets and snake rod rubbing together as they were carried in the ark of the covenant. The snake/rod was said to be moveable at times and so could perhaps become a coil, this would also fit with the Ouroboros in Egypt, or best of all, the Orphic egg could be a meteorite wrapped in a snake. As I quoted, Pliny also relates the word "electrum" to the word "elect" in regards to the sun or Phaethon and while this etymology may not be true, if it was believed it could still be used in the myths as if it was true, so we see the "elect" in Gnosticism as in the spiritual elect of the New Jerusalem, or the sweat/tear souls of the treasury of light in the Pistis Sophia. However we also see it throughout the Bible and so in the Judeo-Christian tradition it would refer to the meteorite kings, where as for the Gnostics the elect represent the original and metaphysical symbolic meaning behind the meteorites, that is the sparks of light from Sophia.

Alternatively, the poisoning of waters as in the wormwood star, or the stories of people going blind as with Illus, Kay Kāvus, the pillar in Cnamchail, in the Book of Enoch and other places, it could all be a sign of radiation poisoning and we can see that the two "angels" struck the Sodomites blind as well. (though staring at bright comets could blind people too) Speaking of the stone Helena Roerich does say explicitly that, "the intoxication from it's rays is unseen but it's inner heat is mightier than radium." Whatever it means it is an unlikely set of coincidences and so must mean something, the Mahabharata describes a cosmic war which some cranks claim is an alien nuclear war, they think this because in India scientists have found soil that turned to a kind of glass, but this may be explained by a meteorite strike around Mohenjo Daro in the Indus Valley. This kind of glass is called a "tektite" as for example the emerald like moldavite of Czechoslovakia, but also "Libyan glass" which we know was used to make tools in the stone age, but along with Lapiz Lazuli, was use to decorate the necklace/breastplate of Tutankhamen, son of Akhenaten. This breastplate has a scarab beetle representing the god Khepri of the Ogdoad myths and was made of Libyan glass and was called the "rock of god" and given how this phrase turns up in the bible, it certainly brings to mind the khoshen breastplate. Libyan glass does look like amber and we know that other types of tektites can form in to tear drop shapes, but also rods and orbs and so this could explain the tears of the goddess or the gem like staff of Moses. King Tut also had a meteorite dagger found in his tomb and so along with the breastplate it gives much more credence to the stories of Al Masudi and the pyramids containing "the treasures of the stars" and "images made with the substances of the stars." Fulgurites form similarly to tektites but from lightning strikes instead and I have already quoted the Bundahishn about a comet or meteorite melting the Earth like molten metal, but Hesiod too in Theogony 820 ff describes the Earth melting from a hot wind created when Zeus struck Typhon with lightening. “Then, when Zeus had put him down with his strokes, Typhoeus crashed, crippled, and the gigantic Earth groaned beneath him, and the flame from the great lord so thunder-smitten ran out along the darkening and steep forests of the mountains as he was struck, and a great part of the gigantic Earth burned in the wonderful wind of his heat, and melted, as tin melts in the heat of the carefully grooved crucible when craftsmen work it, or as iron, though that is the strongest substance, melts under stress of blazing fire in the mountain forests worked by handicraft of Hephaestus inside the divine Earth. So Earth melted in the flash of the blazing fire; but Zeus in tumult of anger cast Typhoeus into broad Tartarus. And from Typhoeus comes the force of winds blowing wetly, except Notos and Boreas and clear Zephyros.” While it is true that any number of meteorites with rare and unusual compositions could have come down, it is more probable that such gems as the emerald tablet were some kind of tektite. At any rate, tektites would have been regarded as magickal and traded by the same precious metal merchants as those which controlled the meteorites.

While Kabbalists often interpret the term “giant” in a non literal way, it is pretty undeniable that many ancients really did take it literally and a case has been made that the skull of a Dwarf Mastodon was mistaken as the skull of a cyclops. The cavity created by the trunk in the skull certainly appears like the socket of a giant eye and so we should not be too hard on our ancestors for believing as such. We humans used to believe in dragons and giants, today we believe in “thunder lizards” and the taxonomy of even the most beloved dinosaurs are coming in to question, as it is no easy task to assemble the ancient skeletons correctly. Many giant creatures were even drowned in a global flood at the end of the ice age, this was a time when sea levels rose dramatically around the world and so if anything would survive through oral traditions, you would think it would be something like this.

Now Pliny's description of how amber is formed in rivers in India is even more important when we know that many Shiva lingams are even today made from meteorite fragments found in the Narmada river just before the monsoon season (the start of Gemini) and so are called Narmadeshvara Lingams. (A lingam is a kind of penis pillar, like the Herms for Hermes, only for Shiva) As the azure snake rod would be symbolic of the blue spinal chord or the milky way and given that the Kaaba and other things keep bringing us back to India, it would be the most likely candidate for the origins of this, though this meteorite fell long before civilization. Pliny in Book 37 Ch 54 speaks of various types of agate but explains the name comes from the Achates river in which they are found, to which I would add this river took it's name from the right hand man of Aeneas. One type of agate was called “coralloachates, spotted all over, like sapphiros, with drops of gold, and is commonly found in Crete, where it is also known as sacred achates.” Pliny does say shortly after that the stones of India have similar magickal properties and really wherever they were found they would be thought of as magickal. As Sophia is in part a river goddess, (and simultaneously a Star goddess like Nuit or Nyx) I should point out the Nile or river Jordan has been interpreted as symbolic of the spine by Occultists, but she can also be compared to the Celtic Danu, or the goddess of the Ganges and probably many other river goddess's of the primordial Pagan tantra.

It has commonly been noted by scholars that caves are often symbolic of the Earth Mother's vagina and so we see that the River Jordan in part springs from a cave in a place called Baniyas on Mt Hermon, the place where the Watchers landed, but also that the Nile comes from a cave, while the river Ganges comes from a cave called “Goumukh” which means “cow mouth.” (Jesus was baptized in the river Jordan and it certainly gives new meaning to being “born again”) Mircea Eliade in the Forge and the Crucible goes over this as well and from him I learned that “Delph” means uterus in Greek and from this we get Delphi, which not only has the Omphalos, but a river and spring, which while separate from the cave of the Pythia, does still have religious significance. Eliade also says the Babylonian word for river “Pu” is the same word for vagina and explains the Mesopotamian rivers were said to come from the vagina of the Earth Mother, he goes on to link the Sibyls of the Roman empire to caves with red Earth which are also symbolic of menstrual blood. The source of the Tigris does in part come from a cave and there are caves along the Euphrates as well. Another possible example is Swallowhead Spring in the UK, which has a cave from which the river Cunnit comes and is close to Silbury hill and Stonehenge, some even argue that “Cunnit” is the origin of our modern word “cunt.” At Avebury not far away we can see today there are cairns and rocks positioned along ceremonial pathways that many have noted are shaped like fallopian tubes and so this too would be from pre-Celtic neolithic tribes. John Allegro says the Sumerian word for “burden” was “gun” and through Latin this became “cunnus” and then “cunt” adding the “organ of burden,” “AR-GUN, appears dialectically in the name of Mount Hermon.” While the Narmada river does not spring from a cave, there are many caves along it and one important one is by it's source in a place called Amarkantak and here we see some of the oldest cave paintings on the planet. (Some say a the bull head is symbolic of the uterus, as at Catal Huyuk)

As Sophia is a river goddess of Eden and for Simon Magus the Eden story was an analogy for the birthing process with the garden as the womb, as he was likely carrying on older traditions, we could thus see the original myth probably saw the rivers as the menses of Gaia/Sophia/Zoa, impregnated by the meteorite sperm. In this way the menses and sperm of humans were the microcosm of the divine water/menses and meteorite/sperm, hence the Occult term “starfire” used for these secretions in Tantric rituals seeking to symbolically depict the universal fractal and the origins of all life, engaging in natural magick as a means of attaining gnosis of these mysteries. Because it contains phosphorus, an element discovered by the Alchemist Hennig Brand around 1669 and named after the Venus god, semen is also somewhat flammable. These Tantric Gnostics would eat the semen and menses after doing sex magick in an attempt to regain the light from the archons and thus purify and reunify the light of Sophia Alchemically through the processes of nature. So when we know that the “womb” refers to Eden or in personified form Edem, that semen is also meteorites, then the Paraphrase of Shem and other texts make much more sense. Remember the “navel” or centre of the Earth is the axis mundi, but for Simon Magus this would be the centre of the womb/garden which according to Hippolytus's relatively in depth interpretation, the navel itself is likened to the main river which “is divided into four channels, for on either side of the navel two air-ducts are stretched to convey the breath, and two veins to convey blood.” This makes 5 rivers total which are further said to symbolize the senses, but also the five books of Moses, so that Genesis to Simon explains the origins of life and the gestation process, Simon is also said to have interpreted the womb as a cave and specifically in reference to Jeremiah 1:5. Hippolytus also explains the ideas of the Sethians (Book V Ch 14) which also involve the womb, a snake, the wind and waters and how souls are incarnated by means of a trinity, but he also says they saw the heavens as resembling the womb. As with all the myths I have described above we can see the garden of Eden and it's tree and snake is in the heavens as well and this chapter from Hippolytus does even more to give context for the Paraphrase of Shem.

That so many myths are associated with paradise gardens and miraculous trees which are symbolically associated with the heavens is a bit too much to overlook and as various sources say humans are created from meteorites, it sure sheds new light on the “fall of Adam” caused by an “apple.” So as Adam for Muslims built his altar from a meteorite that fell in India, or as Jews say, Adam was created from the dirt around the foundation stone, we can see like Purusha, in some contexts he was originally symbolic of a meteorite. (Or is the snake a Prometheus stealing fire from heaven?)

The original 64 Jyotirlingas of India might be connected with this as well, though they are more commonly thought of as volcanic, the myth of why these 64 temples were created involves a story of Shiva and a “stambha pillar” from heaven. Lava may also be menstrual blood, but volcano goddess's are rare and there is much less textual evidence, however the baetyl of Aphrodite in Paphos is said to be a volcanic rock. Certainly there are those who have argued Yahweh was a volcano god, Hephaestus and Typhon also have volcanic associations which would fit given that obsidian has come up a few times in this chapter. Others too have argued that volcanoes were responsible for the bronze age collapse, or even the plagues of Egypt wrought by Moses in Exodus and surely any emergency would be exploited by the death cult to spread fear.

We can see a parallel to all this in some versions of the dice myth of Shiva and Parvati, the myth as before starts with the couple playing dice in the cave home in Mount Kailash, which is near the source of some of the most important rivers in India, including the Indus river. After having a fight Parvati becomes a yogi and creates a pillar and this is a “lingam” in honour of Shiva, which must then withstand a flood sent by Shiva! As agate is sometimes found in the meteorite lingams of the Narmada river, it would match the stories of Enoch and his pillars quite well.

“Helen” literally means “torch” in Greek and so given that brass vessels are repeatedly brought up in the Solomonic grimoires to hold the demons, it is most curious that Gideon put torches in the jars of his 300 men in Judges 7:16. Pliny tells us (Book 2 Ch 25) that some meteors are called “lampades” which means torches and I will also point out that Hekate also had torches and a chariot drawn by dragons. Pliny (Book 2 Ch 37) says “stars also come into existence at sea and on land” and this is interpreted as St Elmo's fire, however depending on the translation you read it also brings up meteors. For Pliny if there is one ball of plasma it is said to be bad and sometimes it even burns down ships and others say this single ball is called Helena, “When there are two of them they are considered auspicious, and are thought to predict a prosperous voyage, as it is said that they drive away that dreadful and terrific meteor named Helena. On this account their efficacy is ascribed to Castor and Pollux, and they are invoked as gods.” Even more, “Ketu,” the Sanskrit name for Cauda Draconis also means falling star, comet or meteor, but also banner or flag or “torch.”

This is even better since Mircea Eliade also links the letter Delta to the vagina, which as we saw before was placed on the agate cube. According to the classic “Book of Talismans, Amulets and Zodiacal Gems” Marbodius, Bishop of Rennes said that Aeneas escaped with the help of an agate talisman, where as Archbishop Parker gave queen Elizabeth an agate talisman depicting Vulcan and Venus. While I was not expecting such a literal cup, or a cup on public display and accepted by the Catholic church as the grail, it is also true that the best candidate for the holy grail known to mainstream scholars is a chalice found in the cathedral of Valencia Spain, a cup which happens to be made from agate! Given that the life of Jesus is mythical, we do not have to accept this grail as “genuine” exactly, but it has been linked to the Parzival story and so would definitely be sacred to the theocratic death cult.

If this is not enough, Hippolytus tells us in Book V chapter 15 when speaking of the Sethians that they were influenced by natural philosophers (demolishing the idea Gnostics universally hated nature) the Eleusinian mysteries, Musaeus, Linus, (Music teacher of Heracles) and Orpheus. He says Orpheus had similar teachings to the Sethians about the womb, he also explains how the Sethians have trinities like Adam, Eve and the Snake, and Cain, Abel and Seth, or Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and that there are three types of law in Judaism etc. We learn that the Sethians gained their knowledge from a portico in the Turkish city of Phlium that is older than Eleusis, Hippolytus also sees a connection here to the great mother. This portico or roofed porch with columns is not unlike the porch of the temple of Solomon or the temple which Hercules made in Tyre, both with their special columns. According to Hippolytus, this knowledge is in agreement with the 10 books written by Plutarch against the important philosopher Empedocles. However, given that Hippolytus brought Empedocles up repeatedly in other places as influencing the Gnostics, and especially Marcion and Simon Magus, it is unlikely the Sethian Gnostics agreed with Plutarch. This is also seen in that the pillars speak of the same mysteries as at Eleusis which Hippolytus said influenced the Gnostics, and in these books and on the pillars of Phlium is an aged winged man with an erection chasing an azure woman. This “azure” woman and the old man can be likened to the rape of Eve or Sophia who became a tree and so the old man could be Chronos, but given that over the woman is written a name for Persephone he must be Hades. (or Mott) This old man is related to the waters and due to the words of Homer, the Gnostics see this cosmic water as a bad thing (another layer to their antagonism to water baptism) and of course water would be disliked for it's associations with Yam and Enki and the flood sent by the demiurge, but this also reminds me of the cosmology of Pherecydes of Syros in which the seeds of Chronos are put in to the waters and these become gods. (See also Contra Celsum Book 6 Ch XLII for how Celsus relates this to Satan, Giants and Typhon) Eusebius (Praep 1:10) does quote Philo in saying that Pherecydes was inspired from the Phoenicians regarding his philosophy of Ophion, the god Chronos overthrew and I also noticed this is alluded to by Nonnos when he speaks of the tablets of Phanes. As these myths explain the source of life, it is tied to myths of sperm and menses and so if a flooded Mesopotamia is symbolic of the ocean, the seed or sperm is the fallen meteorites. As she is a goddess of both the night's sky and the Earth, Sophia then is the azure goddess of the universal fractal as seen through the other various symbols I have gone in to, that is the lapis lazuli tree, the brain and nervous system, the rivers with all their branches, the lightening flash, but also the veins or venous system of the body, so named from Venus.

While it is anti-Gnostic propaganda, Epiphanius in his Panarion does give us many more clues and so for example he links the Gospel of Eve to the mysteries of the menstrual cycle and that there is a very tall man accompanied by a short man, the tall man is said to be found in all life forms, which is not unlike Ymir, though there is not enough to go on, this would be more like Anthropos or Adam Kadmon. Epiphanius also gives an interpretation of Revelations 22:2 as referring to menses and sperm and many other teachings of the Gnostics, specifically the Borborites saying that “The archon who holds this world captive is shaped like a dragon. (Draco) He swallows souls that are not in the know, and returns them to the world through his phallus, here to be implanted in pigs and other animals, and brought up again through them.” For the enlightened “They say that he passes Sabaoth (the dragon) by and—with impudent blasphemy—that he treads on his head. And thus he mounts above him to the height, where the Mother of the living, Barbero or Barbelo, is, and so the soul is saved.” (Like Sophia with the seven headed serpent in the Pistis Sophia, compare with Genesis 3:14-15 and 25:24-26, also note Irenaeus Book 1 Ch 30 which explains that for Ophites the demiurge cast down his son the serpent of Eden from his heaven into the lower world of Earth.) So then this is another example of how Sabaoth was often not a positive figure and we will remember that John Allegro explains the names Yahweh and Zeus in terms of the penis and sperm and that Sabaoth in On the Origin of the World is in the heaven of Jupiter. Though as before it is unknown how many Sabaoths there could be and earlier Epiphanius says, “Some say Sabaoth has the face of an ass; others, the face of a pig. This, they say, is why he forbade the Jews to eat pork. He is the maker of heaven, Earth, the heavens after him, and his own angels.” This is especially telling as Set most commonly has the head of an ass, but also was said to have the head of a pig and so we see that Gnostics would be in opposition to Set as a Jewish god, but also potentially his Hyksos form of Baal Hadad.

Getting back to Musaeus, we can see he is generally pretty fascinating as well, though we know little of him, some say he was a student of Orpheus, (Hence the Orphic Argonautica is addressed to him) others say he was the son of Orpheus. Eusebius and a surprising amount of others speak of Musaeus as being none other than Moses and also Hermes! (See Praep Ev Book 9 Ch 8 which also mentions Jannes and Jambres and 27) To Musaeus is attributed the words “Shooting stars are borne up from Ocean and generated in the Aether” which certainly fits with Pliny's description of how amber is created. Furthermore Herodotus says (Book 7 Chapters 5-6) that Mardonius had great influence with the Persian King Xerxes, that he wanted to rule Greece and so encouraged the Persian invasion which would allow for this. With the help of “Onomacritus, an Athenian diviner” attempts were made to show the Persians were wanted in Europe. Onomacritus had previously been banished for changing the written oracles of Musaeus to say that the islands “off Lemnos would disappear into the sea” and throughout this he gave other oracles which would help the Persians. This ties together many things nicely as Xerxes is often interpreted as the Persian king in the book of Esther, so that Mardonius would fit well as Mordechai and as we already learned from Herodotus that Xerxes desecrated the tower Esagila, it could mirror Yahweh destroying the tower, the oracles of the islands sinking could certainly be related to theocratic myths as at Atlantis. The timing would be off for many myths as some of the tower stories are older, but see also the popular “Persian Imperial Authorization” theory of scholars which basically states that the Torah was written to give Persian law to Jews, especially in the province of Yehud, (roughly where Judah was) from which the Yehud coins come. In line with the old testament, this would mean that Haman would represent the indigenous people of Palestine, in part probably being the people who would be taken over by the Persians and have Judaism imposed on them.

According to Plato, (Republic Book 2.364) Musaeus was also associated with the magick of the same type as Orpheus, (perhaps even the same as comes from the Dactyls) though he despises it as the magick was used by some with a libertine morality, begging priests who would hold festivals and go to the rich and offer them rituals to absolve them from sins, but also he says, they would curse the just and unjust alike. Plato himself was relatively rich and undoubtedly an asshole and so given the conflict of interest in people of his class, we must be skeptical of his “moral” outrage. Surely from an Anarchist or Gnostic perspective Plato is no authority on who is or isn't “just” and as an establishment elitist he would have looked down on all the poor and thought them rightfully impoverished due to their moral inferiority, however it is surely important that Musaeus is connected to the magick of Orpheus. These begging priests taking donations is no different from any other religion asking for money, but these priests were clearly poor and so had renounced wealth. We can see an example of the magickal philosophy of Orpheus in the Greek “derveni papyrus” which gives an interpretation of one of the poems of Orpheus, along with a theogony and cosmology from what some scholars see as a atomist perspective, there is also explanations about oracles and how they originally came from Nyx, but also how the Magi deal with daemons. That the Orphics and Musaeus practised Greek goeteia would further explain how Gnostics would learn of the magick and given their common association with the Dactyls, this would likely be similar to some of the spells in the Greek Magical Papyri. These impoverished and begging priests were said by Plato to claim to control even the gods, as we saw the daemons of the Greek Magical Papyri can also influence dreams like the demons of the Goetia, but it is also true that the Carpocratians were accused of using daemons to do the same, while Marcus the Magician was said to take money from the rich. I still believe Marcus practised more of a Greek Gnostic goeteia rather than a Solomonic Goetia, but with Marcus we can possibly see Gnostic revolutionary tactics involving scopolamine pharmakeia and perhaps he sought to turn the archons against the human rulers on Earth. If so than I can hardly blame him, it is hard to say but the followers of Marcus could have been stealing from the rich to give to the poor, perhaps at their festivals they were even holding mass public exorcisms like a Gnostic Protest of Reality? Or perhaps Marcus merely offered the rich some good karma, getting archon demons off their back because of the inherent corruption in how the rich get their money at the expense of the poor. A powerful entheogenic experience could certainly produce a dramatic conversion and so quite apart from sorcery, the rich may have developed a conscience and willingly decided to give their money to the commune. Scopolamine does certainly have it's mystical uses quite apart from making zombie slaves, it can even produce astral flight to the heavens, but Marcus could have potentially used Amanitas for the poor and scopolamine plants for the rich, however this is all speculation with only the words of his persecutors for evidence. At the same time we do know there was a pretty diverse set of magickal subcultures in the ancient world, there were magicians for hire (or the Witches of Thessaly) and we do know something about the “curse tablets” and talismans and spells that people bought, sometimes these were even associated with Orpheus. As with the modern drug underground there was quite a variety of people and motivations for those who practised magick or sorcery or who would perform the mysteries outside the legitimate venues. Some would have been Anarchist rebels and outlaws like Abbie Hoffman selling cocaine to fund his activism and it is from this highly mixed and eclectic milieu that some Gnostic groups developed, others would have been criminal gangsters intent on infiltrating the government and it is from them that many of the practices of the bankster theocrats would be derived. (Just Colombian drug cartels have infiltrated the government, quite probably using scopolamine at times.)

Now Pliny says that along with Empedocles, Pythagoras, Plato and Democritus all studied the works of the Magi and the teachings of Zoroaster and as people like Simon “Magus” learned from the Magi, we know they weren't all bad and so here again we see the split from the theocratic form of Zoroastrianism. Pliny hates the Magi, but see Natural History Books 28 and 30 for some information on their magick as it brings to mind parts of the Picatrix, in Book 30 Pliny states the Magi religion originated with magick and drugs. Pliny also says the Jews practice a branch of magick as learned from Moses and Jannes, the Pharaoh's dualing magician, he also mentions Iotape as a sorcerer, a name which some scholars say is Yahweh! (He also speaks of the 12 tables of Roman law as being magickal) While all those Greek Philosophers taught magick to the Greeks, Pliny tells us Democritus was an especially important teacher of it and that they were "transmitted by memory" and were learned from Dardanus the Phoenician and also the human named Phoenix, but the most important teacher of Democritus and other Greeks was the Magi Osthanes. In PGM VII 795-845 we get two spells mixed together titled "Pythagoras' request for a dream oracle and Demokritos' dream divination" and so it starts with calling an angel which is said to come with a star on his head, or sometimes "he enters/ having a fiery star" but then later speaks of another angel coming from and "subordinate" to the Pleiades.

While we know little about the man behind the myth, Osthanes was said to be an important figure in teaching alchemy, necromancy and divination and so was clearly important in all this, Pliny tells us he worked for Xerxes. In the book "The Arabic Hermes : From Pagan Sage to Prophet of Science" by Kevin Van Bladel we can, among many other important things, read about how the Egyptian Philosopher Pebechius wrote a letter in Syriac to his Persian Magi contacts saying that he found the lost books/tablets of Osthanes, they were 7 in number and hidden behind 7 doors. The letter was damaged but contained the image of an Ouroboros and so fits with Naneferkaptah's story of the book of Thoth. These books of Osthanes in Egypt were said to be the origins of the Magi science, but were actually rooted in the teachings of (Thoth) Hermes! In the book Physika kai Mystika attributed to Democritus (but probably written by Bolus an Egyptian) we learn Osthanes died before he finished his teachings and so his students summoned his ghost, Osthanes then revealed his own textual sources hidden in a pillar in the temple in Egypt. While we might dismiss these as legends Van Bladel sorts out the underlying history quite well and cites another text written in Arabic which tells of Osthanes having a dream of seven doors which are guarded by a dragon hybrid creature, but Osthanes gets past him "in the name of god." On each door is written an inscription in a different language and so this implies the mystics of the universal language, the first is in Egyptian, the second in Persian and the third in Sanskrit and so Van Bladel ties this together with the letter of Pebechius. Then we learn of a text called "The 12 Chapters of Osthanes the Wise on Knowing the Venerable Stone" meaning the philosophers stone, it tells of a man living in western India named, Abu-*ç*alid Šaddād ibn al-Yazīd who mastered alchemy and the Occult, he learned from "more than seventy languages" (72 perchance?) and translated the works of Osthanes. Van Bladel explains how Zosimos cited Osthanes and their works were bound together, he also explains how the Magi claimed to be the source of the Egyptian science of Hermes and while I have already wondered if the Egyptian Phoenix bird stole the tablets of destiny as the Anzu, it is hard to say what is propaganda and lies in all this.

If this is not enough, Van Bladel explains how the Arabic historian Ibn Nawbaht's wrote in his Kitāb an-Nhmt'n about Hermes as being a scholar sage who went to Babylon/Iraq when it was ruled by Dahāk AKA Zakhāk the Persian Nimrod like figure I have already discussed. This Dahāk gathered together many scholars in 12 citadels symbolic of the zodiac and Hermes was one of them, it is said the people of this area obeyed the scholars until an unnamed prophet came and turned the people against the scholars. So the scholars left to foreign lands and became kings, so that Hermes is then said to have gone back to Egypt to have ruled as a king. The text gives no information about the prophet and so given all that I have gone in to in my own book, all the similar yet contrary forms of propaganda and myth, it could have played out a few ways. As I have already compared Zakhāk to Abraham, it could be the Prophet was Shem and the Jews co-opted his teachings, or it could be Zakhāk created the prototype for Judaism by co-opting the teachings of the Brahman prophet who was the real Abraham. Another possibility is that Nimrod as Zakhāk didn't like sharing power with the scholars and so the prophet "Abraham" was his agent and co-opted the universal language and confused the history with Nimrod and Abraham becoming conflated as I have explained. Persian propaganda makes these scholars in to kings to support the idea of Iranian diffusionism, and these could certainly be the agents of the banking cult who's ghosts were called upon in the Solomonic grimoires. The Christian Syncellus quotes the ancient historian Manetho as saying that after the flood Hermes translated writings from the "sacred language" written in hieroglyphs on monuments in the "Seriadic land." These were translated to Greek but still in hieroglyphs and these writings were said to be put in the most holy places in the Egyptian temples. No one knows where this Seriadic land was, some say it is the south of Egypt, but Syncellus here fits with Josphus, (Bk 1 Ch 2 Antiquities) though given their euhemerist political affiliations neither source is very reliable. At any rate Josephus speaks of the pillars of Seth being in Siriad in his day and given that Mesopotamia is a more likely candidate for the land which was flooded, some argue Perea was this land, others say Syria. However it seems most likely to me that the scholars gathered by Dahāk were the international mystics and that after the Prophet came to power, agents of the banking cult went to the various places where the mystics came from and established monarchies in a cartel. Van Bladel also theorizes the Hymn of the Pearl may be a story about an Iranian Hermes going to Egypt, but also how Alexander the Great destroyed and plundered Persian texts, he also goes into the role played by the city of Harran, and so for all this and more he is well worth reading.

While this is mostly beyond the scope of this book, I have found Empedocles to be a very profound poet philosopher who is rather crucial for understanding the origins of Gnosticism. For example his theories of vegetarianism and abstaining from procreation, but also that humans are gods or daemons exiled from heavenly realms for a time and that nature is ruled by chance and "necessity." (Ananke) Empedocles rebelled against tyrants and taught that humanity once lived in a golden age and worshipped Venus at Cyprus, but this was far back in time before the blood of bulls was used for sacrifice. So then his Aphrodite would be from before the banking cult and Phoenicians and he likely preserved some ancient traditions which the Gnostics took up regarding Sophia. Empedocles' natural philosophy was a major influence on the Greeks in general and helped to lead to science and he himself was influenced by Pythagoras and even had a theory that magnetic attraction was based on a kind of suction or wind created by the magnetic atoms. (the reason for magnetic "breathing" stones in the PGM?) We know he too knew Greek goeteia as a healer or "purifier" or "kathartai" (Magi and Magnet have the same root!) and this ritual catharsis quite probably entailed exorcisms of some sort. We know from fragment 111 of his words that he claimed to be able to teach others to control the weather and bring people back from the dead, while in other places we see was called "checker of winds" as he could stop them. Empedocles is most famous for being the first Greek to theorize about the four elements, but he also taught that Love (or "friendship" in Hippolytus) was the unifying principle of all creation which leads back to divine oneness, but this is countered by hate (or "strife") which divides and creates plurality, just as archons seek to divide and conquer through fear. From Hippolytus (Book X Ch 3) we can get a hint that the cube depicted his cosmology as we read, "the disciples of Empedocles supposed the generation of the universe to have proceeded from six principles. For in the passage where he says, "Four roots of all things hear thou first," he produces generation out of four principles. (the elements) When, however, he subjoins, - "Ruinous Strife apart from these, equal in every point, And with them Friendship equal in length and breadth."

What is more is that Empedocles (as with the four elements) and Democritus are the two main thinkers behind Greek atomic theory, so that along with Orpheus, Plato and the Hindu/Vastu atomic theories, we can see the atom is reoccurring theme! The Sepher Yetzirah does describe how "god" formed the universe, but in light of all this, it seems to have more to do with the basic building block of the universe, that is the atom. As Plato based his atomic theory on Platonic solids, it certainly has implications for Metatron's cube and as I have shown that Zoroastrianism is intimately related to these pre-flood traditions, it is certainly possible they had their own atomic theory. What are the odds that I could decode a modern quantum physics formula that would have so much in common with various ancient mystical traditions which specifically relate the cube to atomic theories? Now some may dismiss this, but I ask you, what are the odds that my rather casual research in to the adinkra would directly lead me to research traditions that later turned out to be the most important keys to understanding all the theories I had previously made regarding Gnosticism, Pagan Tantra, the schethiya and the theocratic Goetia cult?

There are other Kabbalistic texts which shed light on all this as well, especially in regards to Jewish uses of the magick squares. While I am not well versed in them, they deserve some serious attention by future researchers and probably a book unto themselves in light of what I have written in this chapter. Now I have already cited Aryeh Kaplan about Draco, but he goes on to cite the opinions of the practical Kabbalists who say “the Teli is actually a place under the firmament of Vilon, and that it is inhabited by humanoid beings, which deport themselves in holiness and purity like angels” and that they teach divine mysteries to humans and there is magick to contact them. While I couldn't find a translation the footnote cites the text “Shoshan Yesod Olam” which translates to “the Rose, Foundation of the Universe” and from what I have read about it, it is crucial as it goes into angel magick and magick squares, gematria and exorcism. Along with his translation of the Sepher Yetzirah, this text is explained somewhat in Kaplan's book, “Meditation and Kabbalah” which I have already cited and has many germane topics, it has a whole chapter dedicated to magick squares. (On page 156 he cites Shoshan Yesod Olam for possible references to the Kabbalistic use of psychedelic grasses, though this may be psychedelic herbs in general.) Meditation and Kabbalah also explains Talmudic and Merkabah mysticism and also the role of the Watchers in Merkabah mysticism, where the angels decide who gets to ascend through the heavens, and as we have seen, this is a role not unlike Gnostic archons. I also found some good information in the book “Between Worlds: Dybbuks, Exorcists, and Early Modern Judaism” by J. H. Chajes which explains important aspects of Jewish magick and cites an exorcism spell given by Joseph Tirshom, the author of Shoshan Yesod Olam. This exorcism spell (pg 67) calls on the 72 names and seeks to remove a demon into a flask like a genie, it also “adjures” a demon “by the utterance of the Watchers.” It is rather frustrating that I couldn't find a full translation of Shoshan, but Kaplan also links this book to some other Kabbalistic works involving the squares and such things. While I have not been able to study these in depth either, in terms of Kabbalistic works, the most promising for further research include the works of Abraham Abulafia, but also “Evven Hashoham” (The Onyx stone) and “Sheirit Yosef” which are two works by Joseph Taitazak. There is also Toledot Adam (Generation of Adam) by Rabbi Eljah Baal Shem's which brings us back to the importance of Gen 5 and also Sh'nei Luchot HaB'rit (Two Tablets of the Covenant) by Rabbi Isaiah Horowitz which explains magick squares and their relation to the tablets of Moses! Given the importance of Draco for the Archontics, that they said the Jews were the offspring of the devil, this would fit nicely as the angels inhabiting the Teli. While it is true that dreams are important to mystics around the world, page 379 of Kaplan's Sepher Yetzirah has a footnote 27 which says that in the Shoshan Yesod Olam, a method is given to contact the Teli angels in dreams. While there is a large gap in time, if this tradition is as old as the Sepher Yetzirah, it could explain why the Archontics believed the Jews to be the offspring of Draco and to have been taught black magick by the Watchers.

As with Gnostic symbolism in general, the references to meteorites are much more abstract than the other examples I have gone in to and it is unlikely that Gnostics who gave up the use of money would themselves have control of such valuable objects. In fact this idea of Sophia being imprisoned by the archons could be an allegory or distant folk memory of how the original meteorite was captured by the rulers, who then appropriated the Pagan tantra and created Judaism after the captivity. So as in other places the Gnostics gave up the use of material expressions of the divine and instead focused on the underlying symbolic meaning behind the mythical allegories and ritual props, as this is far more important for working on the appropriate parts of the brain.

One layer of this allegory then would also be how the “holy grail” became the “gate of heaven” as the bearer of the entheogenic sacraments, as in the Pagan mystery traditions. Simon Magus is the ultimate scapegoat for Christians to blame as he is the true Christ, the Nous or mind of the divine and so we see his name Σίμων ὁ μάγος in isopsephy is 1484 and is the gematria of Psalm 118:20, “This is the gate of the lord through which the righteous may enter.” According to Tertullian, the Marcosian Gnostics thought that “the rock which followed (the Israelites) and supplied them with drink was Christ” so that it is like a grail and this is also the same stone upon which Moses hit his serpent rod to bring up this water, but it also says that Christ was a “stumbling block” for the Jews. Furthermore Helen is 98 in isopsephy and in gematria is the “Stone of Adam” which “the builders rejected [but] has become the cornerstone” as IAHU reborn, the Virgin “emerald” of Thoth Hermes and as the stone is the grail and the grail is the symbol of the goddess, the cup literally holds the sweet entheogenic honey and is the gate of heaven and gives access to the gods. Simon Magus was the pillar “Dynamis” as he called himself, “He who standeth, has stood, and shall stand.” this is also the Greek translation of geburah, or “strength” and so he is the pillar of strength while Helen is the stone. (Metatron too was called Dynamis, see Gershom Scholem “Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition”)

While Seth is a more common association, for some Gnostics like the Naaseni, they associate the hermaphroditic and unfallen heavenly Adam with Jesus or the Logos, which fits with the primal being of the Hermetic Poemandres being the logos, or Thoth being like Adam for Zosimos. So speaking of Adam in Hippolytus Book V we read, “they suppose that the knowledge of him is the originating principle of the capacity for a knowledge of God, expressing themselves thus: The originating principle of perfection is the knowledge of man, while the knowledge of God is absolute perfection. All these qualities, however— rational, and psychical, and Earthly— have, (the Naassene) says, retired and descended into one man simultaneously— Jesus, who was born of Mary.” Then a bit later we read, “This, he affirms, is Adam: The chief corner-stone become the head of the corner. For that in the head the substance is the formative brain from which the entire family is fashioned. Whom, he says, I place as a rock at the foundations of Zion. Allegorizing, he says, he speaks of the creation of the man. The rock is interposed (within) the teeth, as Homer says, enclosure of teeth, (This refers to the Odyssey just after when Circe puts Odysseus on to a silver throne with a footstool, she tries to drug him with scopolamine, but fails due to Hermes having warned him to use the Moly plant.) that is, a wall and fortress, in which exists the inner man, who there has fallen from Adam, the primal man above. And he has been severed without hands to effect the division, and has been borne down into the image of oblivion, being Earthly and clayish.” This is quite similar to the myth of Parusha, the androgynous Hindu Adam Kadmon and the gematria of his/her mandala. We can also compare Adam Kadmon to Dionysus Zagreus son of Persephone, that is after the titans killed him, the Orphics also conflated him with hermaphrodite Phanes, so too then there is Osiris and Kingu as Adam Kadmon like beings imprisoned by the false gods. While in the Gnostic text “Dialogue of the Saviour” we read, “That which supports the Earth is that which supports the heaven. When a Word comes forth from the Greatness, it will come on what supports the heaven and the Earth. For the Earth does not move. Were it to move, it would fall. But it neither moves nor falls, in order that the First Word might not fail. For it was that which established the cosmos and inhabited it, and inhaled fragrance from it.” Thus we can understand the union of the two tablets representing Jesus/Adam and the Shekinah/Asherah or Iahu/Eve, aka IAO through the number 343, or 7³ which is the number of IAO YHSVH as the unfallen hermaphrodite. From the Gospel of the Egyptians we read how Seth came in to being, “the great Logos, the divine Autogenes, and the incorruptible man Adamas gave praise, (and) they asked for a power and eternal strength for the Autogenes, for the completion of the four aeons, in order that, through them, there may appear [...] the glory and the power of the invisible Father of the holy men of the great light which will come to the world, which is the image of the night. (Nyx) The incorruptible man Adamas asked for them a son out of himself, in order that he (the son) may become father of the immovable, incorruptible race, so that, through it (the race), the silence and the voice may appear, and, through it, the dead aeon may raise itself, so that it may dissolve.” Then as Norea is the uncorrupted Astarte and the Earthly Sophia we read in the Gnostic text the “Thought of Norea” that “there will be days when she will behold the Pleroma, and she will not be in deficiency, for she has the four holy helpers who intercede on her behalf with the Father of the All, Adamas. He it is who is within all of the Adams, possessing the thought of Norea, who speaks concerning the two names which create a single name.” (In Greek ordinal Norea is 52, while Adam is 18, so $52+18=70$)

As Enoch in some traditions placed a gold Delta or a “golden triangle” in front of the pillars and on the cube, we are given a clue to all this, as Delta was for the Greeks associated with Hermes and the tetractys, but was Daleth in Hebrew which as explained before is Venus and so together we have the Hermaphroditic Adam. Now we know the 5 pointed star is a symbol of Venus, but this is because its orbit make a pentagram every 8 years! In Mayan religion too, Venus and Gemini were especially important and twins make up the two protagonists in the Popol Vuh, they also fight the demon bird Vucub-Caquix who is the big dipper. Aztec and Mayan mythology does seem to explain meteorites and much of this with their various ages of humanity, so while this is largely beyond the scope of this book, for the Aztec giants were made in the first age and were before humans, we do know of at least two meteorites the Aztecs thought holy, the “Casas Grandes” meteorite and the Huizopa meteorite. There is also the myth of Quetzalcoatl and Tezcatlipoca creating the Earth with the leviathan like Cipactli, then the god Tlāloc who brought a rain of fire and then Chalchiuhtlicue who flooded the Earth. Quetzalcoatl was also said to have banned human sacrifice, and in the myth of how he created humanity, he was trapped in a pit in the underworld. (See also the twin Aztec deities Xochipilli and Xōchiquetzal and the Mayan god Itzamna who invented writing, the calendar and made humanity. There is also the Navajo myths of the giant killing twins Nayenezgani and Tobadzistsini who lived at the start of the fourth age.) The Mayan calendar is depicted as wheels within wheels, and from what I know does present similar numerology to all this, for example, 260 days is one “Tzolkin” while 144000 is also the number of days in one Mayan “Baktun.” The Mayans and others in the old world noted that Venus aligned with the Sun and Earth every 584 days (called an “inferior conjunction”) and that over 8 years this creates the pentagram, but a perfect alignment or “transit” of the Earth, Sun and Venus occurs every 113 years, or 130 years to make a 243 year cycle. This works so that whenever these perfect alignments occur, another happens 8 years after to make a pair or twin transit at the same time as the completion of a star. (64 as Doni or $\text{Twins}+49$ as $\text{Venus}=113$) This also relates to Gemini in that Greek geometers related Gemini to two types of isosceles triangles, one called Castor triangles and the other Pollux triangles and these relate to any pentagram or five pointed star, a shape which has within its geometry the golden ratio in a number of ways, but as a symbol of the 5 elements, also relates to YHSVH. These two types of triangles when related to a pentagram and the golden ratio create two intertwining spirals not unlike the caduceus and so for those with eyes to see, there is some pretty profound symbolism in relation to Metatron's cube as the flower of life.

Now to make this even more amazing, the Phoenix came to my attention only after appearing in so many important texts relating to the meteorite cult, so then one obvious interpretation might be that it is a comet that comes around every 500-600 years. After searching online it was easy to see that a few other researchers have already theorized this, some like George Junghanns in this book, “The Phoenix: Circa Anno Domini” even linked it to Halley's comet, and while this comet comes every 75 years, it turns out that when the Earth, the sun and Venus are all aligned in their “transit” then unusual gravitational effects come in to play. This then would explain how the Phoenix could symbolize Venus, the sun and a comet all at once, that during such a rare transit if Halley's comet came by, this would create incredible visual effects in the sky. This could also potentially send meteorites our way, so that if the “tail” of this “bird” comet created a meteorite shower, then it would explain nicely how the tablets of destiny became associated with meteorites and also why there are so many myths of a bird stealing it from the gods in heaven. Edmond Halley himself theorized the flood of Noah was caused by a comet and he also theorized that humanity might meet its end in such a way. Previously I quoted On the Origin of the World where it explains that Sophia punished the archons by sending them to Earth as if they were meteorites, but in the middle of this I also noted in brackets that this section includes references to the Phoenix. So although there is some textual damage, if the Phoenix here is a comet it makes sense, the text also says the Phoenix is a “witness” to the crimes of the demons and the judgement put on them. There are actually 3 Phoenixes here though, the first was sent from paradise by Sophia, and in general the Phoenix is a sign of the “consummation of the age” and so while I do think a comet is involved there is more going on here.

This perfect alignment of Venus, the Earth and Sun also occurred in the years 60 and 68 AD with the latter being the year of the Jerusalem temple siege, but as a transit it is also related to the Phoenix comet as I have explained. While I have already speculated regarding the Sibylline prophecy about Jesus and the guiding star as a reference to a meteorite “stumbling block,” after further research I found that others have also theorized a comet was involved in the biblical nativity myth of the guiding star. As it turns out Halley's comet appeared in the year 12 A.D. and again in 66 A.D and as Jesus is symbolic of the Phoenix according to Clement, this is pretty good timing as it is in the 8 year “twin” cycle of the Venus pentagram. Josephus in his book “The Wars of the Jews” (Book 6 Ch 5) tells of an omen of the destruction of the temple, that “there was a star resembling a sword, which stood over the city, and a comet, that continued a whole year” and that a light shone from heaven on the temple. The Christian theologian Origen even specifically states that a comet was a sign of Jesus being born and he links this to Numbers 24:17, “a star shall come out of Jacob.” (See Contra Celsum Book 1 Ch 49-50) However given the meteorite cult was generally theocratic, we can see that Josephus tells us that this prophecy in Numbers, along with the comet was a major reason for the Jewish revolt. At the end of the chapter, Josephus even says this comet was misinterpreted by the Jews who thought the messiah was one of them, but really refers to Vespasian being the Jewish Messiah! In Book 6 Josephus also glorifies war and says, “For what man of virtue is there who does not know, that those souls which are severed from their fleshly bodies in battles by the sword are received by the ether, that purest of elements, and joined to that company which are placed among the stars; that they become good demons, and propitious heroes, and show themselves as such to their posterity afterwards.” (See also Daniel 12:3)

While there are undoubtedly many other details to explore regarding his influence on the theocratic cult, I should also point out that Rabbi Akiva believed Simon Bar Kokbha to be the Messiah through this prophecy and named him Bar Kokbha as it means “son of the star.” Rabbi Akiva actually met his end as a Jewish martyr during the revolt and we can see on the coins issued by Bar Kokbha the facade of the temple with four pillars under a star, while on the reverse is some myrtle and other plants in a vase. (the lulav) Given the theocrats attempts to make a kind of golem worker zombie and also fundamentalist warriors, it is entirely possible that at various times their creations got the better of them and even rebelled like Frankenstein's monster as with all the anti-semitism in Christianity. (A modern example is Islamic terrorism, as created by the CIA) Once the virus spread, it took on a life of it's own and it's Fascistic memes evolved ever more sophisticated means of mind control and authoritarianism, especially as history continued to be rewritten. However the formation of Catholicism is a long and complicated history, with many twists and turns and various conspiracies involving other Rabbis as well, and on the day that Rabbi Akiva died, it is said that Rabbi Judah HaNasi was born, who was also incredibly influential in setting up Rabbinic Judaism. According to the Talmud (Avodah Zarah 10a-b and other places) he was good friends with Emperor Antoninus and actually gave him political advice, it even says he told him how to assassinate the emperor's enemies. More than this, the emperor was said to have basically acted like a servant around him and to have had tunnels between the houses of the two men, and the emperor would kill slaves down there. Really the whole text is incredibly suspicious and speaks of money being left to R. Akiva and others, so overall it is about as blatant an admission of infiltrating the Roman government as you could get.

Tacitus in his Annals, (15.47) also speaks of severe lightening storms and a comet in the year 64 A.D. and that “Nero always made propitiation with noble blood” and that there were two headed phoetus's being displayed, human and otherwise. Tacitus also refers to a Jewish prophecy that they would rule the world, but that “this mysterious prophecy really referred to Vespasian and Titus.” (Tacitus, Histories 5.13) Book V by Tacitus provides a very illuminating history of the Jews which ties together so many things in this chapter it is well worth reading. I cannot quote it all here but Tacitus tells us "famous cities were once destroyed by fire from heaven" and he explains theories of Jewish Saturn worship, or how they worshipped Liber (Dionysus) and how they were hated by the gentiles for their financial practices and bigotry. Tacitus also explains their origins, "It is said that the Jews were originally exiles from the island of Crete who settled in the farthest parts of Libya at the time when Saturn had been deposed and expelled by Jove. An argument in favour of this is derived from the name: there is a famous mountain in Crete called Ida, and hence the inhabitants were called the Idaei, which was later lengthened into the barbarous form Iudaei. Some hold that in the reign of Isis the superfluous population of Egypt, under the leadership of Hierosolymus and Iuda, discharged itself on the neighbouring lands." "Still others report that they were Assyrian refugees, a landless people, who first got control of a part of Egypt, then later they had their own cities and lived in the Hebrew territory and the nearer parts of Syria." "Most authors agree that once during a plague in Egypt which caused bodily disfigurement, King Bocchoris approached the oracle of Amun and asked for a remedy, whereupon he was told to purge his kingdom and to transport this race into other lands, since it was hateful to the gods. So the Hebrews were searched out and gathered together; then, being abandoned in the desert." When combined these theories suggest a Hyksos theory as I have explained and to Tacitus, Judaism is the antipode of every other religion, he also points out their special hatred of the Egyptian god Amun.

Also according to Tacitus the Jews worshipped the donkey as it helped them find water by a rock during the wanderings in the desert, as in the story of Moses with his staff getting water. Now as "coincidence" happens, the Ashvin twins were depicted as having horse heads, just as the demon who stole the Vedas, Hayagrīva was said to have a horse head, (As in the Hayagriva Stotram, v.32. he was also described as being crystal or jewel like) just as the Egyptian Set had a donkey head. Remember also that Astarte as the "Syrian Venus" in the Solomonic text translated by Eliphaz Levi is said to have either the head of an ass, or that of a bull and so given that Isis became conflated with Astarte for the Hyksos, this fits with Sanchuniathon and Plutarch's euhemerist story of Isis and Osiris. The Gnostic archon Sabaoth had a donkey head (Epiphanes 26:10:6) or the Jewish god specifically is said by Gnostics to have a donkey head, (Epiphanes 26:12:1-4) and in the Secret book of John, the archon Eloaiou has the face of a donkey, while in the Pistis Sophia Ch 145 murderers are punished by a horse headed demon when they die. Origen explains (Book VI Ch XXX) the Ophites had a donkey headed archon named Thaphabaoth or Onoel AKA Thartharaoth which we can see is close to the name of the "Spirit" of the Mercury kamea Taphthartharath. In the astrological work, "Liber Hermetis" the first decan of Gemini is attributed to Manuchos, a spirit described as having an ass's face and ruling the climate of the Trojans. Best of all Christ is depicted with a donkey head on the cross in the enigmatic "Alexamenos graffito" found on Caligula's palace wall next to the Palatine hill. While it is graffiti and no one knows who made it, it is perhaps the oldest depiction of the crucifixion of Jesus and Tertullian does say Jews were accused by Tacitus of worshipping such a deity and through others this went on to Christians! (Tertullian Ad nationes 1:11) This idea of Jews worshipping a Donkey headed deity is no doubt strange to modern ears unaccustomed to Pagan views of Abrahamic religions, but that traitor and liar Josephus also brings up the idea when he denies the accusations of Apion that, "the Jews placed an ass's head in their holy place." Some of the 72 Goetic demons are also depicted somewhat like this, especially in the pictures from the Dictionnaire Infernal and so if Jews worshipped a donkey god, it was only done openly in the most corrupt banker sects. However we do not have to believe Jews worshipped a donkey head, because even if such accusations were designed to mock the Jewish god, the choice of a donkey head is telling and shows that for the critics of Judaism like the Gnostics with Sabaoth, the religion had links to the donkey headed deities as found above, or perhaps even king Midas with his donkey ears. So while donkey heads are not found in later mainstream Judaism, this text (Against Apion Book II Paragraph 7) gives theories that back up the theories that Tacitus conveys, such as that Jews caused the plague in Egypt and so points to the meteorite plague demon cult. Now westerners often ignore these kinds of things because they apply exceptionalist standards to Judaism and Christianity which includes taboos about critical thinking, however even Exodus says that Moses used black magick on the Egyptians, causing boils to infect them, not to mention making hail and fire come down from the sky. (In Joshua 10 there is also a story of a Canaanite king of Jerusalem, Adonizedek, who took shelter in a cave as Yahweh destroyed his army with hail stones, all so that the Israelites could conquer his land.)

Historian Cassius Dio in his "Roman Histories" (the start of "Epitome of Book 65") also remarks about the Jewish star prophecy as in Josephus and also (in the Epitome of Book 64 section 8) that while Vespasian was off fighting in Palestine, "A comet was seen, and the moon, contrary to precedent, appeared to suffer two eclipses, being obscured on the fourth and on the seventh day. Also people saw two suns at once, one in the west weak and pale, and one in the east brilliant and powerful. On the Capitol many huge footprints were seen, presumably of some spirits that had descended from it." This is not so different from parts of Revelations, but along with Josephus and his demons, the huge "footprints" as craters would point to the Watcher/giant meteorite cult. In the "Epitome of Book 66" at the start it says a comet appeared as an omen of Vespasian's death, but also that the tomb of Augustus miraculously opened. This last detail is important because others have compared the birth of Jesus to that of Emperor Augustus being conceived miraculously by Apollo and his mother. While this would fit with the prophecies of Nigidius Figulus, this story is told by Suetonius (The Lives of the Twelve Caesars chapter 94)) but he also speaks of how Vespasian is the messiah, (Life of Vespasian 4.5) and this is because Christianity is emperor worship and these historians are their tools.

Pliny Book 2 also speaks of eclipses occurring and in Ch 22-23 he tells us "Titus Imperator Caesar in his 5th consulship" wrote a famous poem about a comet and so these celestial events were clearly central to the Roman theocracy, we also learn there were comets "during the civil disorder in the consulship of Octavius, and again during the war between Pompey and Caesar, or in our day about the time of the poisoning which secured the bequest of the empire by Claudius Caesar to Domitius Nero, and thereafter during Nero's principate shining almost continuously and with a terrible glare." If a comet is "in the private parts of the constellations it portends immorality, if it forms an equilateral triangle or a rectangular quadrilateral in relation to certain positions of the fixed stars, it portends men of genius and a revival of learning, in the head of the Northern or the Southern Serpent it brings poisonings. The only place in the whole world where a comet is the object of worship is a temple at Rome. His late Majesty Augustus had deemed this comet very propitious to himself; as it had appeared at the beginning of his rule, at some games which, not long after the decease of his father Caesar, as a member of the college founded by him he was celebrating in honour of Mother Venus." "The common people believed that this star signified the soul of Caesar received among the spirits of the immortal gods, and on this account the emblem of a star was added to the bust of Caesar that we shortly afterwards dedicated in the forum.' This was his public utterance, but privately he rejoiced because he interpreted the comet as having been born for his own sake and as containing his own birth within it; and, to confess the truth, it did have a health-giving influence over the world." In Ch 23 he says Aristotle claimed when there are multiple comets it creates severe winds, while in Ch 55 it says the Tuscans divided the heavens in to 16 parts. In Ch 71 Pliny mentions a constellation named by Augustus called "Caesar's throne" which some scholars say is where the comet appeared and this can be seen in coins where a star is on a throne, Augustus was also known as the "divi filius" or "son of god" as he was the adopted son of Julius Caesar and this too was on his coins. (Nero and Domitian were also called divi filius) During the life of Augustus we do know that famine and plague occurred and so with all these natural disasters and signs in the sky, the time was ripe for the death cult to spread fear.

In Book 54 Section 29 of Roman Histories, Cassius tells us that when a close friend of Augustus named Marcus Agrippa died, there was also a comet and that crows lit the home of Romulus on fire. This Marcus Agrippa is not to be confused with the Herodian Kings, and in fact the Herodian kings were named after him and so given that he was an architect and he helped Augustus become the first emperor, he is a prime suspect for being one of the Masonic creators of what would become the Christian imperial religion. Again Tacitus in Book V tells us, "Antony gave the throne to Herod, and Augustus, after his victory, increased his power." From all this and the Sibylline Oracles it is pretty clear that Vespasian and Titus worked elements of their comet/meteorite worship in to Christianity as in the nativity story and this is the meaning of Clement's Phoenix as Jesus. Cassius Dio also tells of the Zoroastrian King Tiridates of Armenia, who in 66 A.D. came to Rome with his entourage to meet with Nero and get his blessing to be a puppet under the Roman empire. This has already been theorized by others as relating to 3 Magi in the nativity story and there could well be something to this, some even claim this King to be the major influence in the spread of Mithraism in Roman civilization and so I would add ultimately Christianity. We can also see in Pliny Book 30 it explains how Nero learned magick from the Magi and "pimps and harlots" and engaged in human sacrifice, all to no avail, but this is because Nero was a slave to his ego. It is not hard to see then, that all these comets and meteorites in such a short space of time would no doubt have added to all the philosophical debates of the time regarding the nature of the gods and daemons and fate and the problem of evil.

Now as Stobaeus told us, for Hermeticists the comets signify the coming of bad men, but also good prophets, so given the Gnostics were rebelling at this time, we can also see some of their interpretations of these astronomical events in that the "Mandaean Book of John" tells of the miraculous birth of John the Baptist and that "the [heavenly] wheels and chariots quaked." In another place this is given in a very similar way to the Christian nativity story and given their view of Jesus as a false prophet, they could have been interpreted this as relating to Titus or Vespasian linking their own messianic claims to the birth of John. So then we read how priests in Jerusalem had a dream regarding this, but then one lied about the following vision, "a star appeared and stood over Enishbai. (John's Mom) Fire burned in Old Father Zakhriā; (his dad) three heaven-lights appeared. The sun sank and the lights rose. Fire lit up the house of the people, (the synagogue) smoke rose over the temple. A quaking quaked in the Throne-chariot, so that Earth removed from her seat. A star flew down into Judæa, a star flew down into Jerusalem. The sun appeared by night, and the moon rose by day."

Given other Gnostics have an affinity for the Phoenix, we should also look at this astronomical event from a Gnostic perspective, even if we must resort to making a prophecy for the future. So while the author gives the most egregious propaganda and lies, the Pseudo Clementine Homilies Book 2 tells of Simon Magus and how he was a disciple of John the Baptist, but while most of this story is false, we do learn that Simon used the symbolism of the number 30. There is little reason to doubt this part and we learn that this is due to Helen, who is symbolic of the moon so that 28 days is a lunar Month, she and Simon make the 2 extra to have a sum of 30. These transits of Venus and the Sun usually happen in the sign of Gemini (sometimes sagittarius) and so I could thus see that on June 6 2012 in the exact centre of Gemini, the 130 year cycle returns to this alignment and marked an important date in the Mayan calendar, so that symbolically it could mark the spirit point of the pentagram during that 8 year cycle. So as Jesus or Simon is a twin, he is the morning star, just as Mary or Helen is the Earthly embodiment of Aphrodite and so in the right context, we could say this is also the 30 days/degrees of Gemini split in two groups of 15 as at June 6. 28 as the mystic number of 7 reinforces this as the letter of the lovers, zayin, is also 7 and so at this time the couple are Adam and Eve in perfect balance, participating in the Hieros Gamos and together they make the Herm-aphrodite. So then it is also easy enough to see they would each have 14 days of the lunar month, or two solar weeks each and so the four weeks represent the elements. The exact meaning of all this I will leave for others to elaborate, but keep in mind the ruler of this decan is variously ascribed to Venus or Mars, that 49 reduces to 13 which is the 7th Fibonacci number and is found in the centre of the 5X5 Mars kamea, where as 25 the number of Mars is on the centre of the Venus kamea, 13 further reduces to 4 which is the value of Delta/Daleth.

Here I will point out that while there is no real biblical evidence for the claim, many have theorized about Mary Magdalene collecting the blood of Christ in the holy grail during the crucifixion and it is indeed true the New Testament does say she was there. Symbolically this does make perfect sense, so we see that Christ is the Sun on the cross of the fixed signs, Mary or Venus comes to visit him as during the conjunction, he is pierced by a “spear” or Halley's comet as it would appear from Earth. Finally the grail of electrum/amber collects the energies of the sun as was previously described, it is then taken away by Mary, IE the gravity of Venus sends a meteorite to Earth.

Here then we can find meaning in some cryptic Gnostic symbolism regarding garments or robes, as in the Paraphrase of Shem the teacher saviour figure speaks of his “garment of the light” which is the same as the “star of the light” and we learn this uncorruptable garment will be worn by a different saviour at the end times, a saviour who would more than likely be Jesus as in Revelations. As Jesus is Lucifer this garment/star then is probably Venus and the text does speak of how in the end the “stars will cease from the sky.” The garment or robe motif comes up quite a bit in Gnosticism and so for example is used by Simon/Jesus to descend through the heavens appearing as an archon, which he does so that he may sneak past their defenses by looking like one of them. The hymn of the Pearl with the robe of “sapphire hues” is an obvious example, but there is also the “starry robe” of Heracles. (Less astronomical meanings to the robe are given in the Corpus Hermeticum)

With the help of Dysnomia and her time magick, on December 21st 2012 I was there at Palenque as a rumble in the AUM and could see the world Rainbow family gathering as it met for the New Age version of the “Mayan” prophecy, there I saw the rains come down the night before and flood out the camp of clueless hippies. Then in the morning of the prophecy, when nothing seemed to be happening, I saw how the hippies, confused and heart broken were blocked from the pyramids by the protesting Zapatistas. These modern Mayans had been banned from their own temples by the Mexican government who sought to cater to tourists, but these revolutionaries have the truth unpoluted by the comercialized New Age religion, and from this I knew the resistance would continue after my death, that 2012 wasn't what the hippies thought it would be, it was much more real than that.

That we may be inside a kind of digital simulation means that if the Anarchists win we will all come to be as gods, but if the theocrats win, they will probably exterminate their obsolete slaves or at best keep us enslaved in their prison forever. So now here we are in the new millennium, the age of terrorism has begun with the destruction of the “twin towers.” This happened on September 11 which is not only the Egyptian new year, it is the anniversary of when the towers and the pentagon had their ritual “laying of the cornerstone” as in Free Masonry, as with King Hiel and his son, or Abraham with Isaac on the meteorite altar/cornerstone. What is perhaps best of all, Sept 12 is also the last day of the meteor shower in the constellation Eridanus! The rulers using it as an excuse to invade or arrest whoever they want, have signalled that they have effectively destroyed the context of the ancient knowledge and bred the perfect slave in the American Evangelical movement, a group that yearns for an apocalyptic Zionist crusade. Museums were plundered in Iraq and we can only wonder what other knowledge has been destroyed, what archeological sites were bombed or will be destroyed, either by the west or Islamic fundamentalists. On the site of their human sacrifice the rulers have built up the third pillar and in their mendacity they call it the “Freedom Tower,” a monument to the giants of industry and financial magnates of their New World Order as a temple in the religion of money. The Muslims join together to meet the battle and any person on either side who calls for peace is called, “unpatriotic” or a coward or even a heretic. Then in 2006-2008 they decided embezzling war funds wasn't enough, so to make things worse, these same “giants” who were “too big to fail” robbed the people in a contrived depression. Will the truth be revealed? Will the true context of the Abrahamic religions be understood and understanding through a universal language be achieved? Only time and the actions of Anarchists will tell.

If we can decode the universal language we can show the unity of all religions, but not only this, we can unify them with science and people will have the greatest obstacle to their knowledge of true equality overcome. As misunderstanding between people creates the supposed justification for hierarchies, a language which can overcome that would help more than most would realize to spread Anarchy. The archons primary means of control is dividing people by spreading ignorance and derision and so a universal language which can improve communication and our ability to think properly will be crucial to overcoming them. (Not that we should only speak one language) The Zohar even tells us that Adam was advised to hide his book from the angels, that later it's knowledge was misused as it gives a person power over all the angels. As the book was intended to teach us how to rule over the angels, these same angels/archons have a vested interest in keeping us ignorant and hence the story of the book being taken and thrown in the "ocean" or Binah. The Zohar also tells us the confusion of languages was done so that people would not have the magickal words necessary to control the angels and keep Yahweh from interfering with them. As Genesis 11:6 tells us, even Yahweh fears a united humanity which understands each other, for when humans have the universal language "nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do." With the creation of a new universal language, the name and practices of the goddess can be restored without fear of legal persecution and then Mother nature in all her forms will be taken back from the bankers and Dysnomia can come back to this Earth. If humans do not learn to treat each other as equals and also find balance with nature we are doomed, if we do not have mutual understanding of our common foundations and instead focus only on the supremacy of our individual paradigms, we are doomed. So then the creation of the universal language is as the reconstruction of the schethiya or sapphire book of Adam, that even if there was no literal Adamic language, we create one through the study of all religions. Those Occultists which did seek to uncover a literal and historical Adamic language effectively created the beginnings of their own through this work, which we can use and build upon today. The schethiya is the foundation of the world or universe and as the universe is the universal fractal, the sapphire is the singularity or black centre and as it so happens, scientists say the singularity of a black hole is deep blue in colour.

Fundamentalists of both the Abrahamic and materialist atheist variety are poised to destroy this planet, either through bigotry and intolerance for each others' paradigms, or through the technocratic dream of becoming robots who are so far "advanced" that human biology is obsolete. More than a few scientists already dream of the day when humanity can be made extinct because we are somehow transformed in to some kind of artificial intelligence, an existence which to them is indistinguishable from real life forms. The American crusade in Eurasia is largely thanks to the prejudice and ignorance of Christianity and capitalists and their support of imperialism and so while an Anarchist uprising is important, without some level of understanding between people it can only be a failure. Having been misled by institutions of black magick, there are many people eagerly awaiting the apocalypse, hoping their god will smite all their enemies and so actively pursuing political goals to manifest this reality. So it is if we are to avoid this mass sacrifice to the archons, we must learn to speak a new language which can destroy ignorance and miscommunication. Given the number of religions which speak of a final conflagration coming from the heavens, the number of sources which warn of meteorites coming periodically to destroy civilization, the inevitable question to ask is if it is truly the fate of humanity to be destroyed in this way. Even modern scientists warn of this inevitability and so meteorites are perhaps the best argument against a primitivist way of life, so that if Sophia is on one level the information of nature, by freeing her from matter and collecting such knowledge to make a truly philosophical stone, I do believe we can defeat fate and ascend to the heavens as free beings. If we are to avoid spreading the archon disease as we terraform and colonize the universe, we must have an Anarchist society before hand and so creating an Anarchist universal language, one which is integrated with scientific research and the Occult is crucially important.

The English language, like all languages currently in use, can in some ways work to limit consciousness, so since consciousness most obviously expresses itself through language, in order to have a functional society, having a language that is in line with all of consciousness, brain plasticity, quantum physics, metaphysics and clear articulation is crucial. The advent of a new global language, created specifically with these principles in mind, will go a long way to clearing up all the loop holes and misconceptions that archons use to control the minds of their host brains. The language of Esperanto was an attempt to create an auxiliary international language and was respected by Anarchists at one time. The Esperantist notion of "anationalism" is important and there is doubtless lessons we can learn from Esperanto, even if it is outdated or flawed in some respects, with an international group of linguists and scientists working together, along with Occultists, we could make something quite amazing. The ideal would be a language that is specifically designed for rational articulation, but also leaves room for intuition and imagination, which can clearly articulate consciousness and emotion and allow for the inherent relativity of word symbolism to be apparent.

In this way we can maximize the abstracting abilities of the brain and different kinds of arguments and statements could be clearly delineated through the syntax, so that inductive and deductive logic would be more clearly differentiated to the laymen. While it could get pretty complicated, different specialized kinds of grammar systems might be useful for different topics and intentions, highlighting the difference between opinion and fact, or arguments and statements. Another way to avoid misunderstanding would be to create a language which utilizes various grades of literal speaking, so that given the syntax of a statement, a person will know according to a predetermined scale, how literal and explicit, or metaphorical and implicit the statement is intended to be. Qabalah already provides a frame work to do this and so by integrating hermeneutics with syntax, we could make a language in which the various grades or types of syntax could activate specific areas of the brain, which would specialize in interpreting each grade or sephirah. (Irony and sarcasm could also have specific designators) Other vectors of language which could be designated through syntax would be certainty/uncertainty, time, as in past, present, future and non local time, the number of layers of allegory, or the depth and number of possible and applicable contexts of the metaphor, oneness/plurality, subtle/not subtle and whether or not a statement is in context/out of context, but perhaps most important of all, we need more non-gendered pronouns and terms. The scale between implicit and explicit is similar to the scale of how concise a statement is, as oppose to how verbose it is. The more concise a statement is, the more powerful it can be, especially for magick, but it is also necessarily more implicit and so it is applicable in more contexts and yet can be more prone to create misunderstanding. Each person should probably have their own magickal language of some sort, even if it draws from various traditions, but their individual development depends on their ability to sculpt their own awareness according to will. That is according to their own idea of Anarchism and so we will probably have to create a new language from scratch which we can use in every day life.

First and foremost an emphasis would take shape that helps to sculpt the brain consciously by each individual, as well as an emphasis to limit or at least make obvious the attempts at dissemblance or manipulation through logical fallacies. I am not a linguist and so I am not up to the challenge, but hopefully some people out there are and can integrate this with "information science." We need a language that will help people to root out all of their misconceptions and illusions of objectivity and materialism, as well as providing them with the ability to root out all of their cognitive dissonance.

A society without money or private property can be likened to a totally liquid economy, at least in that no one would really own anything, but one challenge that Anarchists will still face is the measurement of supply and demand. While its all well and good to say everything will be collectively owned, the needs and desires of people still need to be measured in some way according to changing realities in time space. If the cube of space is so related to the tablets of destiny, they are the key to understanding the stock market in many ways and as astrology, the golden ratio, physics (See "econophysics") and magick squares for statistical analysis are all potentially used by stock brokers, this is pretty literally true. I have no business education, nor am I part of the plutocratic cult of black magick which has monopolized the international markets, but some could be using the cube. At any rate along with the debt cycle, the Alchemical information dug up by the Templars seems to function in a way that creates investing strategies which have a risk of 0%, (or nearly 0%) thus allowing the plutocrats to accurately predict and or control human behaviour enough to always win in the casino. (Fractional reserve banking being another obvious Alchemical tactic of creating "gold") Dubbed the "midas formula" the "Black-Scholes Formula" was thought to function something like this, (It won its creators a Nobel Prize) it works with hedge funds and by placing bets in such a way as to reduce risk through a kind of symmetry in how stocks are chosen. In practice however, after awhile this formula lead in large part to the economic crash of 2008 as through the LTCM corporation. This was due to the chaos of human nature and all kinds of corruption, though having the demiurge corporations in your pocket and being “too big to fail” sure helps, as your buddies in the central bank can just print out more money sigils for the business cycle to continue, thus we spiral in to that abyss of debt more and more.

While I am not suggesting Anarchists should start investing on the stock market like capitalists (besides maybe in syndicalist communes) there may be some way the cube can help to structure society in an Anarchist way. For example it is a fractal, but also the magick squares distribute numbers in an even and balanced way, so it may provide a model for how various co-ops can distribute shares with other co-ops in order to ensure people in the barter network get all the goods they need. Magick squares were used to design cities and they may be useful for showing the most sustainable layout of population density in a given area. It's hard to say specifically without having all the technical knowledge to really design such Anarchist systems and it should be a collective effort anyways, but my intuition tells me the cube could be useful and that intuition has lead me this far. Certainly a universal language will help to create an Anarchist society, and if the cube fractal is the universal fractal as it seems to be, then no doubt there will be advantages to structuring society according to this programming of nature. While it may superficially be seen as a hierarchy, the cube fractal could just as well serve as a model of Anarchist federations. However, if the Alchemical knowledge of the plutocrats could be discovered and everyone knew it instead of just an elite few, it could well provide ideas for measuring supply and demand, but also methods of wealth distribution and even collective decision making which would be useful to completely Anarchist societies.

A gematria wiki could be created online, one which has multiple gematria/isopsephy calculators so that as each word is searched, its' total would link it to a page for each number, or alternatively you could search a number and see what words have that gematria. In this way the internet could be used to create the most comprehensive gematria dictionary ever made, and as it could link various languages and alphabets, it would be very useful for understanding the universal language and consciously designing a new language around such principles. The entries could be organized as with a normal wiki so that the information and words for any given number can be organized and prioritized, thus “consensus” among the magicians could be reached. Each word calculated would be added to the total list of entries for any given number, as this would be a site which publishes all information so long as it accurately fits the gematria. There are already sites somewhat like this, but from what I know they are run by magicians who are bound by oaths of secrecy and so their pages are not nearly as complete as they could be. These gematria numbers could further be correlated to wiki pages for Occult correspondences and so would be part of a kind of wiki grimoire or 777, one which is specifically created in order to study the doctrine of signatures in relation to the universal language.

Were John Dee and Francis Bacon “evil?” Well they were fighting the Catholics and helped to usher in the renaissance, they certainly weren't Anarchists though and so we can see this as various archons fighting each other. Which is worse, Catholics or Protestants? It is kind of like asking who is worse, Hitler or Stalin? That is, it is possible to have a debate, but it is pointless because they were both monsters. Francis Bacon did depict the pillars of Enoch in his works, most important here being a title page illustration in his “New Atlantis,” a text which explains the potential he sees for America. (the Zohar too has a title page illustration of the pillars) For Bacon, the New Atlantis was “Solomon's House” and this later influenced both Freemasonry and also Rosicrucianism, a philosophy which not only gave rise to science, but started after Paracelsus predicted the comet of 1572, a comet which he believed marked the start of a Revolution and the “Reformation of the World.” Then there is the Protestant Newton and his feud with Leibniz and his Jesuit contacts, however the Figurists were hated by the Catholics and the Jesuits themselves and so while I am still not the most knowledgeable person on this later history, I can't help but wonder if the Figurists themselves were not all so bad. Whatever the case, after writing this chapter I would find out another man, Thomas McClatchie had many theories which mirror my own and believed that Noah and his family were themselves symbolically related to the Ba gua! So while his theories were rejected by basically everyone, you should keep him in mind for further leads in research regarding Figurists in China.

At any rate we have to face facts, if a new universal language is not created which understands these things and which can be used to help consciously program the brain's circuits, then English will become that global language. All hierarchies are corrupt and again and again we see that the types of conspiracies you recognize or don't notice, largely depend on your politics, or as they say "one mans terrorist is another's freedom fighter." However I will say this, while John Dee himself was a monarchist and the British empire itself is absolutely tyrannical, I can't help but wonder if at least some of the spirits he contacted were of a benevolent Gnostic character, that perhaps they tricked him in to spreading some Gnostic ideas. All people recognize there is corruption in the world, or what has been termed "evil," and we all have our scapegoats, our own conspiracy theories based on who we blame. Some blame blacks and the poor of the world, some blame Jews, some blame the left or right wings, some blame Satan and some blame Yahweh and so in the end, the only people who are not conspiracy theorists, are monists like me.

In this way both sides use the same symbols, just as you might look in a mirror made by silver, it is your own image reversed and yet to someone looking at both you and the mirror image looks the same, and this is because they are united by light. Those who mistake the two images for two separate realities are like Narcissus, that is they lack self awareness and do not recognize their own image in the waters. Those who have gnosis can see themselves as one with the mirror image and so can stop wasting their time grasping at it in vain, either trying to fight it or make love to it. Here in lies a great truth, that we tend to become what we hate, just as capitalist Christians may think they oppose the tyrants of Babylon, and so with oneness we find true universal love and with that we become what we become according to will. It is all too tempting to try and create a scapegoat, to chase your shadow either in the form of Yahweh or Azazel, but the more you project your own problems on to external realities, the more you are enslaved to the archons and the more you try to iterate the fractal. Surely I can think of few leaders who's sacrifice would greatly help to make the world a better place and if we are to have leaders at all, such a vote of no confidence would certainly improve the government and the quality of electoral candidates. Archon kings and their death cult should be opposed at all costs and a love of life and fertility restored, but we must not lose site of the fact that leaders represent the sum of the communities "sin" and so to create Anarchy we must take responsibility for our own mistakes and then love and life will flourish like never before. So by crossing the abyss you lose the urge to see yourself as separate from anything, for equality will not be achieved by killing all the Jews or burning all Occult books or Witches, it will be achieved when people stop paying so much attention to petty differences in symbols and start paying attention to how these symbols are used. That is those who belong to the Abrahamic faith are admittedly bent on setting up institutions to gain power and take over the world, where as even the Christian critics of the Gnostics said they were unorganized and treated all as equals and that this was precisely why Christians hated them.

Monists are the ones who realize we are all one and that "evil" is an illusion created by the process of unfolding awareness of universal oneness. However even if John Dee and Francis Bacon had good intentions in this regard, the English language is far from ideal and the British empire even less so. Ultimately unless you're an Anarchist you are in error and many of them are in error as well and so intentions to make the world a "better" place will just create another oppressive hierarchy, unless it can create understanding free of these errors. So while I'm no linguist, as an Occultist I can give some ideas for how ritual could be used to utilize neuroplasticity and integrated with gematria number systems.

Tower Magick

Now as we know the kameas must refer to the pillars of Enoch in some way, we can see that if we wish to stack them like a step pyramid we can do this using all 7, but geometrically speaking, if we are to make rings within rings like Lull, then the kameas must be split in to even and odd squares. In this way we can more neatly stack the odds as a step pyramid and the evens as their own and this creates two new squares, the odds having the moon square as their base and the evens Mercury and this gives us the two pillars, solar and lunar. So then if we look at a Moon kamea, the centre nine numbers would be overlaid by the Saturn kamea, then around it would be a ring made up of the perimeter numbers of Mars, then around this a ring of perimeter numbers from the Venus kamea, then around this the numbers of the perimeter of the Moon kamea. The Solar or Mercury based pillar would be stacked similarly with Jupiter in the centre, then the sun perimeter, then Mercury. Gematria is very interesting for both these pillars and further shows the patterns in the kamea fractal according to how their ordinal sigils are depicted. (not the sigils of the spirits and intelligences) The even/solar pillar has patterns based on the diagonals, but also the top half and bottom half, where as the odd/lunar pillar even provides us with a two rows of 173 and so we have the keys of Enoch. Perhaps best of all, the sum of the lunar pillar minus the centre equals 2160, or the number of years per sign in the Platonic year, meaning that if we multiply by 6 for a cube, we have half the great year!

Now as I knew the Sri Yantra is found as an ordinal sigil along a diagonal axis on the odd squares, I could see this relates to Metatron's cube, so as we know Metatron's cube is created by 13 circles, we can see this on the lunar pillar of squares. So to make Metatron's cube we only need the Mars kamea with the Saturn kamea overlaid in the middle and this creates 3 axes coming from the centre number, one going diagonally, the other 2 split the square into quarters along the horizontal and vertical axes. If we add the numbers which make up each of the 6 arms which come out of the centre number we can get 6 very relevant numbers, but we can also see that each axis or two opposite arms sum to 36 and totals 108! (See also the corresponding numbers on the regular Mars kamea and the Hebrew SATOR square)

While it is not a "polygonal number," there are also "star numbers" which make a star of David like on the American dollar bill, these are numbers like 1, 13, 37, 73... This hexagram star on the dollar bill is made up of 13 five pointed stars, so that $5 \times 13 = 65$, with 65 being the number that is the sum of any row or column on the Mars kamea, with 13 being the centre number. This hexagram star is also surrounded by 28 lines or divisions and is found above an Eagle clutching a shield and so in light of everything else, can only be a version of the meteorite, while the shield may refer to the Ancilie shield meteor or the shield spoken of by Helena Roerich. That Henry Wallace knew the Roerichs is revealing enough, but the great seal of America was created primarily by Charles Thomson and William Barton, the latter proposing in the third design committee to use a topless tower and on a shield, a flaming Phoenix atop a pillar. Barton was trained in the theocratic sigil magick of European aristocracy known as "heraldry" and so was charged with the task of creating the American crest. So while there is no evidence of him or Thomson being Freemasons, they were friends with the Mason Benjamin Franklin, Barton was also a member of Franklin's philosophical society and so given how specific the symbolism of the American seal is, he clearly had strong Occult interests. The other proposals for the American seal all show a number of Occult motifs such as the Phrygian cap and so for many reasons, it is safe to say the American government is carrying on the Trojan traditions.

In keeping with our theme of time there are 13 full moons in a lunar year and 13 weeks in a season and as 13 is a Fibonacci number, it is alluded to in many of the numerologies we have been dealing with apart from the dollar bill. So while I won't go into too much detail here, 13 along with its correspondences such as the letter Nun pertaining to the 13th tarot card (Which is in the centre of the SATOR square) and its mystic number 91 are the numbers which provide the "seed" and "branch" of the fractal out of "chaos" and this is reflected in the gematria of the full lunar pillar. If we continue adding numbers as through the same snowflake 6 armed pattern as on to the Venus and Moon kamea, we get yet more important numbers on the 6 arms. I will give one hint here as to a secret meaning, $32760^2/25920 = 41405$ Platonic years and through 13, this number shows the unity of Venus and Mars.

So then looking at this I realized the odd pillar up to the Venus square fits rather perfectly with my Ogdoad sigil as revealed by Dysnomia! The Saturn square refers to the planet Earth in the centre, plus the 5 elements and the 3 Alchemical principles, where as the ring of Mars is the zodiac and the planets Eris, Pluto, Neptune and Uranus, while the ring of Venus is the other 8 planets, the two Mercuries being the diagonal axis as with the Sri Yantra, the others being at 45 degrees from each other. The remaining 16 numbers refer to the geomantic variables which can be placed according to their couplings in the adinkra cube, they also happen to sum to 400 or Tau! You will also notice this makes a 3, 5, 7 pattern, but what of the 8? Well if we look at the number of intersections of lines at the outer rim of the Venus square, we will notice there are 28, the same number of numbers on the outer perimeter of the Mercury kamea and so we have 3, 5, 8! This Venus square with the Dysnomian octagram overlaid then makes a rather excellent magick circle, but if you so wish you can add the moon perimeter around it to give an additional 32 numbers which can correspond to the paths of the tree of life, as per the cube of space. Notice that if we take out the centre number of the odd pillar, 5 or Heh, the four elemental arms of the pentagram and fixed signs sum to 72, (ending in Tau's on the SATOR square) two arms of 16 and two arms of 20, or 40 and 32.

Herein lies the mystery of Lawlessness, the root of self awareness is also the source of free will and the "new name" is that of Dysnomia in the aeon of silence, that is she is the final Heh and strength returned to understanding through life. Those who seek to set up hierarchies are controlled by archons and even if a law be "good" by all opinions, such as a law of love, those who seek to enforce the law as authorities, over time build up their towers of hierarchy and with it false knowledge and so eventually come to do more harm than those who break the law. So then know that Dysnomia in English gematria is 100 in ordinal and 600 normally, I have also spelled Dysnomia in Hebrew, דיסנומיה and this totals 175 so that all three numbers pertain to the Venus kamea, while in isopsephy she is Δυσνομία=775. When you create the Mercury binary sequence square you will also see 98 and 100 which is on the square of 64 and so we have Helen, Dysnomia and Aletheia on one square. $9+25+64=98$ for Helen is the avatar of Dysnomia and $98+260=358$ as the three together are a pillar of Strength based on the square of Malkuth/Binah which is 10X10 and the basis or Earth on which the tower is built, it is the level where all things are seen as equal. $3X5X8=120$ and the sum of the factors of 120 is 360, but also $98+13=111$ and $120X13=1560$. So on the octagram magick circle we have 4 levels to the Fibonacci scale which group the variables, each having an "order" and "geometric form" 3 alchemical processes, 5 elements, 8 planets and 13 zodiac signs with yourself as the serpent bearer.

As I have shown, her name is 100 and so she is the goddess of the Earth, Malkuth, so then below is her magick square, taken from the Shoshan Yesod Olam, for she is the Rose in the foundation of the world. For the Kabbalists it is said to be a square of Kether, but as the planets are musical notes and Malkuth is the Kether of the next tree below it, it is a Saturn square at a higher octave, just as Saturn is the planet of Kether, just as the Earth recognized as being unified with heaven is itself divine and so she is the final Heh returned to understanding. (remember $1:3:5:8=17$) I found this square in Aryeh Kaplan's book Meditation and Kabbalah, the use of it was largely lost on him, but I have already explained the use of magick squares and through numerological reduction, we can see it is most definitely a square of Malkuth, we can also see how the rows correspond to the sephiroth.

As for the solar pillar, we could say the square of Jupiter is elemental subsections or court cards or if you choose, Enochian magick could also be integrated here. The Jupiter kamea is then surrounded by 20 numbers of the sun perimeter relating to the major arcana, minus the Fool and World card, these are surrounded by the 28 numbers of the Mercury perimeter and relate to the mansions of the moon. If you wish, you can then add the 10 by 10 perimeter from the square of Dysnomia to signify the 36 decans and the minor arcana cards from 2-10 in each suit. If you do this, remove the centre numbers and the sum is 3200. The four aces can rule over the elemental subsections, where as the Fool card and World card can be the bindu point, or heaven and Earth, or top and bottom of the apertures respectively.

As an aside note, while I did not find his work until after I wrote this chapter, I would find that many of my theories are backed up by the evidence given by researcher Llyod D Graham in his essays, "The Seven Seals of Judeo-Islamic Magic: Possible Origins of the Symbols," "A comparison of the Seven Seals in Islam esotericism and Jewish Kabbalah" and "The Seven Seals of Revelation and the Seven Classical Planets." These works are so important I would have to quote the whole texts and so you should just read them, and basically consider them an addendum. These essays speak of 7 "seals" or symbols, found in Kabbalistic magick such as the Shoshan Yesod Olam and Toledot Adam, Sepher Ha Razim, as well as in Christianity and Islam, (appearing among other places on Islamic agate talismans) and also a variety of Pagan traditions. For Jews the seals were said to create a name of god, while in Islam they are said to give "the greatest name of god." The seals are organized on the magick squares in many cases and while no one knows who created them, Graham explains the various theories, most notably that they come from Sumerians, Babylonians, Egyptians or India, ideas which in light of this chapter we can see is actually evidence of international mystics and syncretism based on the idea of creating or finding a universal language. Graham is very conservative in his scholarship and does not believe they are found in so many traditions because of diffusionism, but then he lacks context provided by my own work. For example, he shows how the symbols could relate to the Iynge top of Hekate, or the Pistis Sophia, though while he explains the 7 symbols are arranged in 7 different ways on the Venus square, he misses how this fits the 7 voices or 49 keys. However he does present an argument that the 7 symbols are derived from "phosphenes," which are images created when you gently press down on your eyes when they are closed, these can also be created with magnetic fields interacting with the brain, or psychedelics and so these symbols are archetypal and inherent to how our brains function. This then can be seen as evidence that these 7 seals are related to universal grammar and so the universal language created by the international mystics, who we have seen were utilizing neuroplasticity through occult ritual.

Alchemical formulas and Set Theory

From all my research I have made great progress with kamea sigil magick and so will now show you methods that are ideal for writing out alchemical formulas for brain tantra, but will also give your sigils and familiars much more detail. You simply use the 7 kameas to each describe some aspect of your intention, for example, the Saturn square might be used to determine the time limits of your intention, or when you want it to manifest, the life span of a familiar spirit etc and each planet in turn would describe some aspect of the intention or familiar and so make a “subsigil.” While each planet can simply define things like who, what, where, when and how, there is no need to do this the same way each time and so depending on the purpose of the ritual, you just have to think for yourself what you want each kamea to define. So after you have a sigil describing some aspect of your intention, you can get a numerical total based on the letters/numbers used for that subsigil and then do the same for the other subsigils until you have 7 sum totals. Each of these 7 subsigils will also have a word which can act as a mantra so that during a ritual you would individually charge each sigil, using the corresponding mantra. Now you can simply make one big and complex sigil on the Dysnomia square by taking each letter from each of the 7 sigils, but if you want to be able to visualize this sigil or trace it in the air, it will be helpful to simplify it. If these totals happen to be rounded nicely you can simply use Aiq Bekar to find a place for it on the Dysnomia square of 10X10, however this is unlikely to happen and you will most likely have a number that is not round at all. In this case you numerologically reduce each of the 7 sums individually until you get a number that is below 100, you simply use whatever number from 1-100 on the Dysnomia square to represent the reduced form of the subsigil sum. By putting the 7 sum totals on the corresponding numbers on the Dysnomian square in their planetary order you will have what I will refer to as a “talisman” which is a sigil representing all of the information in the 7 subsigils as through the magick of gematria.

You can make a “subsigil mantra” a few ways, the first and easiest is simply to take all the letters used for it and remove all those which have already appeared, so that you only use a letter once. If you have a long intention or a lot of letters, you can combine the first letter of each word as an acronym as in Notarikon. As you will likely need to add vowels, I suggest you make your own alphabet, but as with Greek, you associate each vowel with a planet, so that for each sigil sum, if you need a vowel, you add the corresponding vowel for the planet of the square you use for that sigil sum. Do not add vowels unless absolutely necessary, you can just use the Greek Alphabet if you prefer, or if you want to use Hebrew, it has no vowels and so use the Greek vowel which corresponds to the planet of the subsigil you want. If you make your own alphabet of desire, it is most practical to have 27 letters with numerical values organized as in the “9 chambers” of Aiq Bekar, IE nine letters with values from 1-9, nine letters with values from 10-90 and nine letters from 100-900, thus chambers are organized 1, 10, 100, then in the next chamber 2, 20, 200 etc. (A 28th letter could have a value of 0 to multiply by 10, or you can have a letter for 1000 as with the Arabic alphabet, but this is up to you.) The third method is best for “talisman mantras” and so for symbolic reasons you should probably use it for subsigil mantras as well. Here you take a subsigil's sum and rewrite it using the least possible amount of letters, hence for this your letters should have numerical values organized in the same way as Aiq Bekar, so that if one of the 7 sigils had a sum of 496, you would rewrite this using 3 letters, or 400 then 90 then 6 or Tau, Tzaddi, Vav and then you would go on to the other subsigils and do the same for each sum. If using Hebrew letters this would produce the mantra TTZV and if needed you can likewise add vowels according to planet of the subsigil. So to make a “talisman mantra” you simply add all of the 7 subsigil sums together, (without the added vowels) then write out this sum of sums as before, using the least amount of letters possible for that number. Thus the talisman mantra would be composed of different letters and so produce a new mantra, but the gematria would equal the sum of the 7 subsigils. If a mantra sum is greater than 999 you will have to numerologically reduce and then find the fewest letters needed for this, but do not reduce any further than you have to. This technique will add a lot of depth to your sigils and will get your mind thinking more like a programmer, then you can start to build up a symbolic vocabulary for adding details.

To add another dimension to this we can work with cubes, but to do this we must utilize some basic ideas from “set theory,” I will explain enough here that you can vastly improve the standard kamea magick, but I strongly suggest you learn more about set theory on your own as it will provide you with an ideal language for making sigils. Know that while he faced persecution in his time for his mathematical heresies to the point he was eventually driven mad, Georg Cantor believed he was chosen by the divine to reveal the mathematics of infinity as through set theory and what would become known as fractals. Set theory will allow you to maintain the sigil information of the 7 kameas by symbolizing a set theory formula as a sigil on the Dysnomian square and through such means, you can embed ever more information in a relatively simple looking sigil. While further research on your part will help, the symbols/variables used in set theory formulas are traditionally just Greek letters and so can be given new, more aesthetic symbols so as to differentiate them from other symbols/letters you might otherwise use. As you will be overlaying these set theory symbols on a kamea style sigil, something like the Sanskrit alphabet, Ogham letters, Runes or the symbols electricians use for circuit diagrams would be ideal for such a magickal alphabet as it needs to overlap and fit together as something like “bind runes.” Another possibility is to use the Qabbalah of nine chambers alphabet which is part of the Aiq Bekar system, which produces 9 letters based on the edges of the square, which is turned into 27 letters through the use of dots. If using a checkered floor or grid pattern on the ground, or even just the lines of the octagram, this square alphabet will overlap nicely with kamea sigils and so if you don't know of this I suggest you look it up. The set theory symbols will be combined in sigils with other programming variables, thus allowing you to represent all the information needed to create very detailed and specific programming sigils, making sigils so explicit and yet concise, that they are ideal for self directed neuroplasticity and other magickal workings.

Now before we used each of the 7 kameas to describe some aspect of the “talisman” we make on the Dysnomian square, but when working with cubes we will use the various faces of the planetary cubes to describe the different aspects. While we could try and come up with 56 aspects this would be rather cumbersome and so instead, while we may have more or less than 7 subsigils making up the talisman sigil, we will only make as many sigils as deemed necessary for a particular intention. So for example, the Mars face could define the realm of manifestation on any planetary cube, that is where we want our intention to manifest.

For example if you want to manifest your intention in some specific area you would write out it's name, one of the 4 elements might be used here, either metaphysically speaking, or in terms of a brain circuit's elemental designations. Or, if you want to work on a specific part of the brain, the Mars face is where you will sigilize that intention, IE Mars limits the intention in space through the process of “separation.”

The Venus face could define our intention for a particular entheogen, each entheogen will thus have a face on a cube according to it's astrological classification and it's sigil will explain how you want the entheogen to effect you during the ritual. IE do you want visions? Gnosis? Do you want to converse with plant spirit rather than a corresponding planetary deity? Do you want to anchor that entheogen to a specific state of mind or brain circuit? Do you want it to help you with some psychological problem? or some philosophical issue or question you have? Do you need inspiration regarding something?

The Mercury face can define the intention for whatever ritual/alchemical operation is assigned to that particular cube's planet and the zodiacal signs it rules, we might even use more than one operation throughout a total ritual, but have a sigil for each operation.

The Jupiter face can make a sigilized form of the name of a deity, angel, demon or elemental or any other entity you wish to associate with that cube's planet. You can write this name into a prayer to that entity and sigilize all of this on the Jupiter face, or you can integrate the sigil of the name on the talisman with other sigilized directions, as for example connecting it to a Mercury face sigil so as to give that entity an Occult operation to perform, or you might connect it to a Mars face sigil to tell it where to manifest. You can also use the Jupiter face for programming your own familiar spirits, or working with them in some way, the methods found below can also aid you in writing out algorithms or flow charts and then creating sigils for them. (As described in Chapter 5)

Boolean logic, named from another mystical mathematician George Boole, could be helpful for programming familiar spirits, but the details of this are too complex for this book. See especially Boole's book "An Investigation of the Laws of Thought" for how this might apply to the universal language or grammar. Also see "A Geometry of Logic" by David Miller for how this relates to 16 variables in Boolean logic which can be given geomantic designations in the same way as I did with the adinkra, this is then mapped on to a hypercube or octagram within an octagram! With the help of Hermes I discovered, or rather noticed the "Boolean lattice" is actually the key to understanding the mathematical link between western geomancy and the I Ching, but also a crucial key to understanding the structure of geomancy. Like the rhombic dodecahedron adinkra we are given an axis with the two Cancer signs, and another with the two Leo signs, but it also organizes the geomantic signs into a form which matches the trigrams of Fu Xi's "Earlier Heaven" version of the Bagua! You will have to make this yourself to see, but if the trigrams had one more line each, it would match the geomantic variables, the exception being the signs of Virgo and Capricorn are out of place from the Bagua trigrams of Kan and Li. (Compare with the adinkra, they are still found as opposites here on the vertical axis of the lattice) You can use the Boolean lattice as a guide for placing the signs, but construct a similar arrangement from the four primary subdivisions of Yin and Yang which are the core basis of the I Ching, what is called the Si Xiang. The first variable is "Taiyang" which looks like == and is two solid yang lines in the south, which is opposite "Taiyin" as two broken lines in the north like this, = = and then in the east is "Shaoyin" which has a broken line on top and a solid line underneath it, with "Shaoyang" in the west with a broken line on the bottom and a solid line on top. I had been looking for a way to fit geomancy into a diagram with the four elements of the west and their constituent parts, hot, cold, dry, moist, but figuring out which sign fits what variable was surprisingly difficult, however I knew an octagram shape was implied and that the Boolean lattice was probably the most symmetrical arrangement. So seeing the octagrams I remembered the Bagua and the Si Xiang and realized two signs from the Si Xiang can be combined to make a geomantic sign! I knew these four Si Xiang variables corresponded to the seasons and that the seasons corresponded to the four Chinese zodiac signs (like the vermilion phoenix) and these zodiac signs in turn correspond to the four directions, thus making a kind of cross. So by this I knew the four directions of the Si Xiang and when I combined two signs in a clockwise direction (One Si Xiang symbol on top of the next, a broken line is 2 dots for geomancy, a solid line is 1 dot) I got a geomantic sign, and I could do this for four times. I got four more geomantic signs by combining the Si Xiang in a counter clockwise direction, the next four by combining opposite Si Xiang signs in top and bottom positions, with the last four being found by doubling each Si Xiang symbol and stacking it on top of itself. The Boolean lattice simply arranges the geomantic signs in the best order, and in a way that nearly matches the Bagua. However by drawing lines from each geomantic sign to its constituent Si Xiang symbols, it creates a new diagram which also sheds light on certain energy dynamics in Dysnomia's octagram. Study this well as its mysteries are deep.

The moon face can be used to sigilize the name or coordinates of a particular astral realm or heaven, so that each moon face will refer to the astral realm of that cube's planet, but also things like the zodiac signs ruled by that cube's planet. If you wish to be more specific, you can signify a decan, or one of the 6 quinances of a sign, or even each individual degree in a sign. You can of course sigilize the name of your own astral temples and in this way you can make a sigil that is like coordinates on a kamea cube, so that using your magick circle as a launch pad, as with the Dysnomian rite you can aim the hyper-dimensional Salvia cannon to launch you where you want. Remember also, the 7 cubes within cubes map the 7 heavens in the 6 directions surrounding Earth, so by using additional programming symbols, you could refer to a specific direction/face in terms of physical space, then use the numbers on all the faces of the various kamea cubes to write out coordinates on the moon face which refer to a specific area in physical space. (If you wanted you could also use set theory to map out 3D sigils through these nested cubes, but I will leave that for you to figure out on your own.)

Finally the Sun face will be used in a general purpose way as magick squares have traditionally been used, so that the sun face defines your overall intention for the ritual, or if you want to work with the pure energy of the cube's planet you will use this face, along with any other intentions you may need. This sun face would thus be used in all or at least most sigils, or if you have need of many other sigils which do not fit the purposes of the faces as I have described, you can have multiple Sun face subsigils.

In many cases you can simply write the talisman as before, by utilizing the planetary order for the order in which you inscribe the subsigils onto the talisman, but depending on how the various subsigils will interact, (as with entities getting instructions from the Mercury subsigils etc) you may need to work out an order to express them in the talisman. This will be different according to what your intention is and what programming sigils you use to elaborate their interactions. However this will be more or less strait forward as the subsigils describe aspects of intention, you just put them in the order which best expresses your intentions or makes a statement of intent grammatically correct.

To do this, we can obviously see that on a magick square are found numbers, in this magick system these numbers each represent "slots" which can have all kinds of various "variables" plugged in to them, with these variables themselves being organized in to "sets" and each "set" being designated by a specific symbol. So for example, the symbol of the planetary set of variables might be an octagram, the symbol of the 3 alchemical principles set might be the triquetra, and the symbol of the elemental set could be a pentagram. A square of numbers can thus represent our cosmology with each slot having multiple set symbols that can be plugged into it according to which set variable we want and how we want to depict or organize that cosmology on the square. Each set organizes the variables on the number slots and so while there may be less variables than numbers on a square, the set can be imaged as a skin which overlays the square and shows how the variables are laid out in specific points on a square grid. For example, I have explained how the angels and demons can be overlaid on various cubes, or how geomantic symbols fit on the Jupiter square etc and these are sets of variables, so while you generally only need one set for each group of variables, you can have as many as you want. For another example, the odd kamea square above has my octagram cosmology overlaid and this could be designated as the "astrological set," with the variables plugged in to specific numbers according to their physical position in the square, but you may choose to organize variables according to numerical symbolism, or some other geometric cosmology. However, you need a unique number for each position on the square and so the odd kamea pillar cannot be used, so while in the rituals below we will actually be using a 7X7 portion of the Dysnomian square to organize the octagram cosmology, for the purposes of this example, this same astrological set could potentially be placed over the Venus square. Here we see that slot/number 4 of the Venus kamea is in the top right corner, it could thus have a symbol overlaid on top referring to the "astrological set" or octagram set. By looking up what slot 4 refers to in this set, we see in the top right corner is found Mercury, and so by putting the astrological set symbol in slot 4, we activate the Mercury variable which is in that slot in this set, on that square. If we put the same set symbol in a different slot on the square, it would refer to a different variable in the astrological set. So in this example, in this set we have 8 slots determined by the positions of the 8 points of the octagram, each slot has a number on the square and a planet and we can thus activate a specific planet depending on which slot we put the one astrological set symbol. When making the talisman, the astrological variables might have different symbols associated with them for aesthetic purposes and reasons of space, but the meaning would be the same.

For starters, the Dysnomia square is where sigil programming will be and so by knowing which variable corresponds to each slot on this square, we can integrate various variables from various sets in to one sigil along with the subsigils of the 7 squares. If we put the octagram cosmology over the Dysnomia square, we also have space for a ring of 32 slots around it, as with the perimeter of the 9X9 square, but we are still left with 19 slots forming an L shape over two sides which can have other variables. As before you find the gematria sum of a subsigil created on the planetary kameas and then integrate this in to a talisman, but in this case you will add more detail using other programming symbols and you will also write out an “address” to show which face of the planetary cube that subsigil is coming from. In my example, one set refers to octagram cosmology and it's mainly astrological variables overlaid on top of the numbers, but this refers to the energies used in the talisman, rather than to designate a square face or cube in an address. So, in order to write out the address of a subsigil, we must utilize at least 3 other sets to differentiate the parts of the address on the talisman.

So to sum it up, when drawing a talisman, if you wanted to refer to a variable within a set you would find the appropriate slot/number on the square and overlay the symbol which designates the set, so that the same slot/number will have different meaning according to which “set symbol” is overlaid. This set symbol is then connected to others and the addresses and reduced gematria sums of the subsigils from the 7 kamea cubes to form a very complex and detailed talisman, indeed it could get more complex than I wish to explain here, but can also be relatively simple if you wish it to be. As the variables used to write the formulas of set theory each have a symbol, you can draw a sigil line as a link between the various Occult variables in an “alchemical formula” (IE planets, elements and zodiac signs) and their numbers/slots/positions on a kamea and on top of and along these sigil line links, starting beside the set symbol in that slot, you can overlay the appropriate set theory symbol/s to identify how it relates to the other numbers/variables in the sigil.

As I said, set theory formula symbols can be changed for aesthetics, but they should be clearly differentiated from the other symbols, especially those which are used to designate which set is being plugged in to a slot. In this manner a finished talisman might look something like a Goetic sigil as with the tiny Maltese crosses on it, or a Veve sigil as in Voodoo. For example, the Maltese cross is found in many Goetic sigils and for the purposes of example could thus signify a particular set theory variable used to make “set theory formulas.” (rather than alchemical formulas) So that in our example it will depict how one Occult variable found in the astrological set, is itself a set which contains the variable in the slot that comes after it, which itself is designated a “subset” of that first Occult variable and that this subset is being activated in some way according to intention and the other programming symbols used. This basic idea is already found in Qabalah, each sephirah is a variable within the the tree of life “set,” but each sephirah traditionally contains a whole tree within it, so then each sephirah is itself also a set. This means that this tree within a sephirah has 10 variables that make up a “subset,” each of these subset sephirah variables in turn can refer to yet another whole tree, which in turn acts as a subset of a subset and this can potentially go on forever. In my sigil magick the subset does not need to be similar at all in terms of form or variables to the set it is found within and could be an octagram or pentagram or whatever else you want to put within each set, there could even be multiple types of subsets within a particular set according to how you organize your paradigm. As a face on a cube is a variable of a planet's cube set, this allows us to write out an address on the talisman. This can be depicted on the Dysnomia square by drawing an Occult variable/set symbol with a small Maltese cross overlaid (or whatever you like) next to it in the appropriate slot, then drawing a line to the next Occult variable/set symbol, thus signifying that the second variable is found within the set of the first symbol. That is using set theory symbols with the kameas you can depict a sigil which shows the Alchemical formula, so that connecting the numbers one way would show the Mercury aspect of Jupiter, or if you put the Maltese cross beside the opposite variable, an otherwise identical sigil could show the Jupiter aspect of Mercury. Here we only have a line between the Jupiter slot and the Mercury slot, and on both slots is depicted the same astrological set symbol, but depending on where the cross is marked, one variable is a set that contains that which comes after it. (This method can also allow you to join variables from totally different sets) If a set has more than 100 variables, you can break it up in to various subsets and so potentially have unlimited numbers of variables depicted in the talisman.

So then to write out an address to depict one of the subsigils you would take the first subsigil and find its sum, then you find the slot on the Dysnomia square which has that cube's planetary variable and overlay the symbol designating the "cube set." This cube set symbol designates a set of 7 variables corresponding to the kamea cubes, it is the first part of the address and signifies which planet's cube you are using for that subsigil. Then for the next part of the address you draw a line from that symbol and slot to the slot of the planet variable which corresponds to the face you want and then you draw a symbol for the "face set," which is a set composed of 6 variables for the 6 faces. For both these sets you may use the same slots as are used for the planets in the astrological set, but by putting different set symbols on the same slot, you designate either the cube you want, or the face you want according to its ruling planet. (With the astrological set symbol, you can use the planet of that slot to modify the subsigil intention in some way, but we will get to that later) Next to the face set symbol you put a Maltese cross symbol to show the next variable connected in the sigil will be a subset of that cube face set symbol. Finally you draw a line from the Maltese cross/cube face variable, to the slot/number which represents the gematria number sum of the subsigil letters and here you overlay the set symbol which designates the "gematria set" of the slot is intended and this set has 100 variables corresponding to the numbers 1-100. While at the first part of the address you could also put a Maltese cross next to the cube set symbol to show the face set is a subset of the cube set, this is always implied and so somewhat redundant, if you choose to get more complicated as with the instructions below this could also get rather crowded and so you may choose to leave that Maltese cross out, though you could also use a smaller symbol rather than the Maltese cross. (it is just an example) However the number/gematria set may be used in other instances and so it is important to show that in this case, the gematria number is a subset of a cube face.

So an address has three parts, the cube, the face and the number of the gematria sum, but there may be times when you want to use a face which corresponds to the same planet as the cube you are using, or the number sum happens to be the same slot needed to designate the cube or cube face, or even all three require the same slot. For this, as with regular kamea magick you could put two little bumps overlaid on the slot/number to show it is activated twice, or three bumps to show it is activated for all three parts of the address. As with sigils in general, you will want to alter it for aesthetic purposes and reasons of space, so that you may put the address set symbols over the bumps or combine them in some other way. Given that some of the other subsigils may use the same slots, for the cube set and the cube face set, as well as the gematria set, you will want to have small and very simple programming symbols so that you can have a lot of overlap.

This is one example, but once you understand the jargon and symbols, set theory is easier than it seems at first and so I want to encourage you to challenge yourself and learn variables other than just the Maltese cross function. So to clarify, we have a "set" of astrological variables, or "pure variables" which refers to a variable that is used by itself, such as those I overlaid on the odd kamea square, IE geomantic signs, zodiac signs, planets, elements, alchemical principles etc. However, each pure variable can also have their own subset which contains the whole astrological cosmology and all of the same variables, or each of these subsets can be unique and provide completely new variables. When variables are part of a subset I will call them "subset variables" as they represent some mix of variables, such as the fire of water of Jupiter etc. These subset variables can themselves have new subsets thus creating a third tier, but really this layering of subsets can potentially go forever. This means that by using the Ogdoad astrological cosmology as a template for organizing the variables of the other sets in to slots, depending on how you use the set theory symbols, not only can you write out an address to link the various cube face subsigils, you could potentially incorporate unlimited numbers and combinations of subsets, so that you could have the air of Jupiter in Aquarius etc. From here you could even create your own sets, or tie together symbols from completely different traditions and sets such as the I CHING or Runes or whatever you like. In this way you can write a sigil which depicts the water of the Jupiter aspect of a rune aspect of an I CHING hexagram etc and all you do is put them in the right order and use the Maltese cross symbol to show which variable contains which other variable. In this way you can define very specific energies by combining disparate variables with set theory as a universal language for all the magick variables of the world, or at least your paradigm. Then you can explain how these variables interact using the subsigils and other programming variables to form a talisman.

Other sets might include the I Ching, or the Runes, or in astrology when different planets are at different angles to each other they have different effects, so that these “aspects” like “trine,” “sextile” and “square” etc should have a set of their own as this set can be used to show how various variables interact with each other. Sets can be made for any other magickal symbol systems you want, the variables of which will each have a corresponding number designating it's slot. You can also designate sets for things like the angel and demon cosmologies, or a set for the astral realms and another for all the Occult and alchemical operations you might use and you can integrate these with the subsigils which explain your intentions for the variables involved. All you have to do is find a way to organize it on the numbers found on the Dysnomian square, then you will want to write a book of shadows which details the various sets and their symbols, as well as the variables of that set and their corresponding numbers/slots on the Dysnomian square. (IE 1-100) Each set could have up to 100 variables and we could make as many sets as we want, as for example the tables of 777 could each have a set symbol. Each of these tables is organized according to the 32 paths of the tree of life, but these would be the 32 variables of a particular set/table and these variables could be organized on the square of Dysnomia around the 7X7 Ogdoad cosmology where the slots of the 32 paths are, or as 22 paths have an astrological correspondence, the variables in the tables could go in the slots according to the astrological set. Each variable in a 777 table set would thus have their own appropriate slot, but would be activated by the same set symbol that designates the set/table.

At the appropriate time each of these sigils will be manipulated through various ritual operations, using rituals and ritual props and correspondences (as in 777 or better yet the book “The Complete Magician's Tables” by Rankine and Skinner) that can all potentially pertain to sets which are overlaid on the squares. So while it is rather needlessly complicated to make a sigil that symbolizes the props in your rituals, the props can be used as physical symbols of the variables in various sets, so that the props are then linked on the magick circle with yarn to form a “prop sigil.” (More on this later) So long as you have a predefined vocabulary, with a few modifications this method could be used to make coded messages and it is all potentially symbolized in the same talisman when using set theory. So to be perfectly clear, one type of symbol designates the set, and the number on the square designates the slot, each slot potentially has unlimited sets that can be overlaid to signify one of the variables in that set, according to how you organized things in the slots. Then another group of symbols represents the set theory variables and these are used to write out addresses for the subsigils and any subset variables being used. During a ritual then you would charge each subsigil and then at the climax of the ritual you charge the talisman. To write out a simple talisman you only need the addresses of the subsigils and you connect them in the planetary order, you may choose to use different colours for this but that is up to you.

The subsets can be helpful to give more definition to your intent, but they mostly help you to organize things and give you more variables to work with and can be used to modify the subsigils or show how they are related and interact. If you want to use the slots to signify circuits in your brain you can do this on the Dysnomian square, but there are also plenty of other magick squares out there as in Enochian or Abramelin, or even non traditional magic squares that can easily be integrated in this, you just need to be able to write out an address using the basic method I gave you, or get more complex with set theory. I gave you a method to express the most basic address for a number on a cube face, but if you wanted you could expand the address so that you could write an address which refers to a set variable in a slot on a planetary cube (rather than only having variables on the Dysnomia square) and then if you want you could even go on to some subset, or even subsets of subsets. Here you do not necessarily have a sigil sum or gematria and so in this case on the Dysnomia square you could signify the cube, then the face, then the Maltese cross beside it, then connect this to the number of the slot on the planetary square you want, which would then have a set symbol overlaid. Then if you want you could continue on to subsets in a similar way, extending the address to a fourth slot which has that subset variable, with it's own set symbol overlaid. If you want to integrate this with a subsigils gematria, you go from the last set symbol you used and on to the number which represents the gematria sum with the gematria set symbol overlaid as before.

This method can be helpful for organizing all the various sets and allows you to use the planetary cubes to do this, as they have different sizes and numbers which can aid your memory or provide a more rational cosmological correspondence than the Dysnomia square. For example the variables can be plugged in as I did with geomancy on the Jupiter square, or the demons and angels over the cubes etc, so that if you write out the address, you can overlay a set of variables over a whole cube and not just one face. The cube of Saturn has 54 slots and so given the octagram cosmology also has 54 variables, (plus 16 geomancy symbols=70, though 14 of the geomantic variables can already be signified by some of the 54 symbols, this would make 56 total symbols.) it is especially suited to depicting the octagram cosmology. In this case the astrological Earth symbol goes on a centre number, and the triquetra and pentagram are plugged in around it and all on one face, the octagram would be on the opposite face, and the zodiac can go in a ring around the middle row of numbers, the remaining 24 slots can fit the rest of the variables or have an alphabet of your choice. When you identify sets with the planetary cubes it can add to the symbolism, so for example we could make a dice divination system and organize 216 possible answers on to the cube of the Sun. You could roll a dice to find which face of the magick cube has the answer, then two dice to find which of the 36 numbers is meant, or you could even combine different dice in the shape of the platonic solids. (2 tetrahedron dice could make rolls for the cube of Jupiter, while 2 octahedron dice make 64 possible rolls for Mercury)

When it comes to writing a talisman for these types of subsigils, you will probably want a numerical value for each variable you add to the address, this numerical value can be designated by the slot number used for it, plus a number for the set it belongs to. Having a number for each set will come in handy for organizing what can become a very complicated book of shadows, but it also allows you to represent the set symbol and variable in the gematria sum along with any letters you use. When it comes to writing such a subsigil on a planetary square, you can start it on the appropriate slot and overlay it with the set symbol, then you continue on as before and spell out your intention for that variable. If needed you can then go on to another slot and designate another variable in a set and then continue to write instructions for it, but all this should be included in the gematria sum for the talisman address.

While it is quite distinct from the system I have been explaining, for further ideas on advanced kamea magick I recommend some books by the author "Nineveh Shadrach." The first is called "Magic that Works" and gives practical Middle Eastern kamea magick methods and explanations of the squares which to my knowledge are currently found nowhere else in English. The next book is the "Occult Encyclopedia of Magic Squares" and though many of these numbers are too big and unrounded to use Aiq Bekar on or spell out words on to them, they can certainly be used to organize sets and variables and will provide you with many more slots and addresses. This book has squares for elemental subsets of the planets like the fire of Venus etc, but there are even specific squares for the 72 angels or decan angels etc. Here Shadrach also gives some other ways to derive numbers from the squares for further gematria work, he also gives some practical ideas, but the book is mostly squares.

Next is a book called "Magic Squares and the Tree of Life" and here we are given a 100X100 magick square and so each number on the 10X10 square of Dysnomia can be used to provide an address which symbolizes a 10X10 portion of that 100X100 magick square and each portion will be sigilized in the same way as a subset. Shadrach cites a legend which says Alexander brought this square to the battlefield and that it has many important numerological properties in Islamic magick. To me this giant square is symbolic of the macrocosmic cosmology of Dysnomia, as she is the mother of the “ten thousand things” which you can designate according to your personal cosmology. You will notice that in the cube set of variables used to designate which cube is used in an address, I said there should be 7 variables, but if you want to get more complicated it can have 10 variables, or really as many variables as there are cubes you want to use, such as from the encyclopedia, or Abramelin etc. This allows you to have 6 planetary cubes, +3 Mercury cubes + a cube for Dysnomia, and while all 3 Mercury cubes are identical, by having different slots on the Dysnomia square, you can designate 3 different Mercury cubes, one can designate macrocosmic intentions and one is for microcosmic intentions, the third can be used for Mercury in general and all would work much like the others, you just use the appropriate variable slots to designate this. (You can use the quicksilver slot to designate the regular Mercury cube)

The Dysnomia square itself can make a cube which has faces that have their own functions all together and so the top or “above” face, (IE the Mercury face of a cube) is used to write out the talismans as I have already explained, but know that it is the spirit square, while the four side faces can be used to designate the four elemental realms of manifestation, or they can function as elemental magick squares for whatever purpose you choose. That is Malkuth is a mix of the four elements and so is 400 and so the planetary squares can program the seeds and explain how you want to interact with them using Occult operations, but these elemental faces of the Dysnomia cube can represent the fields in which you plant the seeds. They don't have to correspond to the elements if you don't want, but the number 4 implies this and could correspond to the four Qabbalistic worlds nicely, each elemental face having 10 sub trees. By numerologically reducing the Dysnomia square you can more easily see which row corresponds to which sephirah and the Shoshan Yesod Olam does already divide the square according to the sephiroth. Whatever symbolism you associate with them, these four squares can act to provide coordinates or addresses for the Mars face subsigil part of the talisman.

Really, as with the planetary cubes you can make sets that apply to the whole of the Dysnomian cube and cover all or some of it's 600 numbers and in this case you would make a subsigil for it to be integrated in the talisman. To do this you would start the address in the slot which applies to the Dysnomian cube, IE the slot used for astrological Earth on the octagram and here you would put the set symbol you want next to the “cube set” symbol, this cube set symbol can simply be a square and could contain the set symbol you want and thus you can designate which variables are in the slots on the Dysnomian cube. Then you just go on as before and write out the rest of the address and show which face and slot you want, or any other subsets.

The bottom face of the Dysnomia cube can be used however you like, or you can use it to refer to the 100X100 square, in which case you will find that even if the gematria of a subsigil is large, so long as it is less than 10000, you could use it to write a talisman without numerologically reducing the gematria sum. By the time you are ready for this you will not need me to explain how to do it, however given that numerologically reducing a sum works well enough, you might be better off using the 10000 slots for further addresses, or fields to sow your seeds. Physically writing out a sigil on such a large paper square would be too big to be very practical, but it could have applications for prop sigils on a magick circle broken up in a 100X100 grid, yet still has the octagram cosmology overlaid as through the microcosm of the 10X10 square. You could also use the 100X100 square to organize all the cubes in the encyclopedia, or perhaps the set symbols, thus providing their numerical values. Huge sigils are more practical when drawn on computers, in which case the larger numbers can be used to provide the gematria numbers for talismans which have bigger coded messages. If all this sounds confusing start simply, I have laid out various stages of complexity for the programming language, then after practice you can reread my instructions and you will naturally come to understand what I mean or come up with your own methods.

The Aura and rules for directing Energy

For group workings we could place a trident in the centre instead of having a head magician, while appropriate with any circle, in the latter case this would refer to the signs of Jupiter and Mercury, not so different from the quicksilver symbol which is a mix of Mercury and Sagittarius, bringing to mind the Zoroastrian cosmology. Whatever circle you use, the trident can be the focus of the groups energy and could be modified so that a detachable bowl/skull could be placed on top, perhaps with a crystal ball inside for a brain, or some type of entheogen. The staff part of the trident could be carved in the form of a blue snake/dragon with the 16 sigils of geomancy on it, it should be standing in the exact centre of the circle, in the astrological Earth symbol behind the altar, which is itself placed over the centre of the triquetra. If you like the trident could be placed or set inside a stone base just as the traditional axis mundi. While you will have to work out the details yourself, the staff could have wheels or boards placed on it for the magick squares or whatever variables you want to work with. Lull's combinatorics can also be applied to set theory to turn the various wheels/kameas in different positions so that an alchemical formula can be depicted on the staff for the group. In this way, every variable on the top wheel, Saturn, can be combined with every variable on the next lowest wheel and each of those variables can be combined with those subsets below. Then if you want, you could run a metal wire or coloured yarn through the wheels to connect them in the applicable way and thus form a 3D sigil, you may even want to stack cubes instead of just squares or wheels.

By using my octagram Ogdoad symbol, (or your own paradigm) you could have a magick circle in your temple which relates to the macrocosm, while another smaller yet identical symbol would be found on the altar for the microcosm. For me these have their tops facing opposite directions, so that in the circle you are facing the bottom, but on the altar the top of the octagram is on the opposite side of the altar in front of you. This then is like a kind of Merkabah which you can visualize as an aura chakra system around you, depending on how complicated you want to get, you can have two octagrams of the same size with points touching, the one on the front of your body having the octagram as it appears on the altar, the one in the back having it as it appears on the circle. While specializing is important for brain circuits, this gives each hemisphere control over each variable, these two Ogdoads can then have different ritual functions, perhaps one being solar and the other lunar.

You could even visualize a vertical pair of octagrams, which are then crossed by a horizontal pair of octagrams giving 4 octagrams in your aura. As Sophia is depicted with the sun as her head and standing on the moon and also sometimes holding two caduceus wands, I have had great success with experiments interchanging the two Mercury symbols with the sun and moon, with the caduceus wands in each hand being like an axle for the wheels of an Ogdoad chariot. However this is rather needlessly complicated for you at this time and so for the following we will be working with only one Ogdoad, if you choose, after practising this you will be able to see for yourself how complicated you want to get. You may have noticed that on my octagram the elemental arms of the pentagram can better fit the ruling planets of the fixed zodiac signs by having Jupiter at the tip of the spirit point, while Mars goes over Scorpio and the Sun would go at the tip of the Leo point. This fits the traditional order of the planets and also creates a spiral, Mercury then refers to the magician or trident in the centre of the star, while the moon is the altar. However there are other reasons to have the planets as I do and so you should consider this carefully, then do what you think is best for your own paradigm.

Using the octagram as an aura I have thus worked out a few rules that allow me to represent my will according to which body parts and ritual props I use, so then the athame is used for banishing, the wand for evoking energies, the cup for invoking energies, where as I use a crystal ball resting on a pentagram in the centre of my altar for evocations. In the centre of my octagram is found the astrological symbol for Earth, (rather than it's elemental symbol) and for me this represents the "crucible" and will be referred to as such, it is where all of the elements are mixed, just as the 10X10 square is where I mix the subsigils. On the magick circle it is the navel or centre of the Earth and so it is where magician stands, or for groups where the trident goes in the circle. On the altar the crucible is where the crystal ball would go, if I am charging a sigil I put it on top of the crystal ball, if consecrating a potion in a cauldron or anything else, I put it in to the altar crucible. The cauldron on the altar can be thought of as the crucible, a fondue set or at least the burner is useful for this and will allow you to do some ritual work cunning. When I make potions it signifies the element of water, you can also get a tripod to put the crystal ball over the rim of the cauldron for skrying or charging energy and this is its Earth function. (though some skry with water, sometimes with a bit of oil in it) You can also put a charcoal in a cast iron cauldron to burn incense which is its air function and this metal cauldron is a good place to burn your sigils at the climax of the ritual as its fire function. I put my elemental weapons on the appropriate corners of my altar around the octagram, while a pentagram is part of the octagram altar design, I use a smaller additional pentagram in the corner of Earth to make things more balanced. During the calcination ritual found below, I light a candle in the spirit point of the altar pentagram directly above the crucible, this candle is used to light any other candles used in the ritual as well as the charcoal or any sticks of incense that will be placed out in the circle. The spirit candle can be placed in a lantern which is closed off so that only a single beam of light shines out onto the crystal ball, this opening in the lantern can have a slot in which you can place different coloured lenses so that the beam of light can be of different colours. The crystal ball thus gets a beam of coloured light and can be on a tripod so that incense may simultaneously suffumigate it. (You could make a lantern as a tower with 7 possible openings, but the beams of light should all be aimed at the crystal ball.)

As for my aura, the navel is the crucible where I generate all the various energies with my hands, then I direct the energy where it is needed, IE the altar crucible etc. While there are traditional taboos about going counter clockwise or widdershins, or using the left hand, such symbolism could be utilized to activate the right brain, so that the left hand is lunar and right brain, the right hand is solar and left brain. While doing the exact same ritual movements, the left lunar hand is used to manipulate energies in the inner and astral world, the right solar hand is used for energies in the outer physical temple itself. For me the left nipple corresponds to the “head of the dragon” and macrocosmic realms, the right nipple is microcosmic and the “tail of the dragon.” This works so that when doing a ritual and going around the circle, one hand designates the inner or outer destination for the energies and holds one of the four elemental weapons, the other hand designates the micro or macrocosmic aspect and is placed on the appropriate nipple. The microcosm refers to a subset or subset variable found within a particular set, the macro refers to a set as a whole, that is the total subsets under say a particular planet, or a variables' pure energies, that is to say Jupiter itself as a “pure variable,” rather than some subset of Jupiter. At the same time the micro refers to a subsigil and so you would have your hand on the right nipple when charging these, where as the talisman corresponds to the macrocosm and the left nipple. This may sound needlessly complicated and for most magickal intentions it may actually be so, but if you want to get in to self directed neuroplasticity and consciously wiring brain circuits, it is important to be able to differentiate these things. This also allows for the creation of much more specific programming variables, not to mention creating familiars and more complicated intentions.

So moving Clock Wise (CW) with your hand on the Head of the Dragon (HD) = empowering a pure variable or the talisman to mix with other variables on the macro circle. Moving Counter ClockWise (CCW) with HD = banishing all variables but the chosen pure variable, thus allowing you to purify and isolate a variable. So tracing a counter clockwise spirit pentagram is the best means of purifying an area as only spirit remains in this case, spirit is there as nature abhors a vacuum and you always want spirit, though in my banishing ritual, the intention is for each element to remain in its appropriate corner in a purified form. CW Tail of the Dragon (TD) = Empowering either a subsigil or a subset variable in isolation from the macro circle, that is you are charging some subset found under a particular corner's pure variable or square, IE “the fire of the Sun” etc, in this case starting at the Sun position of the circle. CCW TD= Banishing only the subset variable on the microcosm, IE banishing the fire of the Sun, starting at the Sun's position in the circle. You can also banish subsigils if you like, in that you might make a sigil to represent some circuit in your brain on a Mars face and then use ritual to transmute it or destroy it. All these rules allow for formulas to be worked out and directed to the outer world for manifesting, or the inner world for things like astral projection and neuroplasticity. You can either mix variables or remove them and this applies to pure variables or subset variables, you can also modify variables through alchemical processes and or remix them to form new compounds, or sigils, especially in your brain.

As your fingers each have three segments, you can further create mudras, so that each segment relates to a zodiac sign, while each finger tip is a planet, the thumbs would correspond to the two Mercuries. The sun and moon are total hands, the four fingers would be the four remaining planets, thus by joining the thumb to a particular planetary finger tip you make a mudra for that planet. There are also more traditional mudras for this if you so wish, but the sun and moon mudras would be an open hand, while Mercury would be all fingers on a hand joined together to form a five pointed star when viewing the tips from above. From this view your fingers form the pentagram with the thumb as the spirit point, so then the pointer finger is Jupiter, the pinky is Saturn, the ring is Venus and the middle finger is Mars. If you join the thumb to the finger tip you have the corresponding planet, but if you put the thumb to the fingernail you could signify the element, with all fingers over the thumb nail for Spirit. Uranus is the thumb joined to the pinky and pointer, Eris is the middle and ring joined to the thumb, Pluto is the pointer and middle joined to the thumb and Neptune is the pinky and ring joined to the thumb. Sulphur would be pointer and ring joined to the thumb and Salt would be middle and pinky joined to the thumb, finally Quicksilver would be a fist with the thumb inside. When I concentrate the energy, as in the crucible, I simply have my hands in a prayer like position, but spaced apart about 4 inches, though at certain times I may direct the energy as to a sigil or a ritual prop, with both hands in the appropriate mudra. So the hand which covers a nipple would be in the appropriate mudra, if you are not holding an elemental weapon then both hands would be in the same mudra, as for example when intoning a particular mantra or while doing inner alchemy.

When charging energy I do something like the middle pillar ritual and the “circulation of light” around my octagram aura but use different “breath cycles” according to how I wish to direct the energy. So standing in the circle crucible I will chant a mantra for a particular variable, but the mantra comes out at different times according to my intention. In my aura I move my hands from the bottom Mercury up towards the sky when I want the energy in the macrocosm, where as I bring it down from the top Mercury to direct energy to the microcosm. I move the energy from one of the Mercuries with my hands along the outer part of my body/ aura and intone the mantra at this time when I want to do evocations, where as for invocations I intone the mantra as I bring the energy from a Mercury going up or down the centre and inner part of my body along my spine from head to toe or toes to head. Whether doing an invocation or evocation I cycle around the energy so that my body is standing straight in the centre of a torus within the octagram and my hands go around to nearly the edges of the donut. To help visualize this, know that if I was standing in an X position with my hands and legs stretched out, this would be close to the outer limits of the top and bottom of a horizontal torus and also the diagonal points of the octagram. So then with such body positions I can charge energy while simultaneously designating invocations or evocations, in the microcosm or macrocosm. So for example, evoking on the macro I would start with hands together pointing to the bottom mercury visualizing the appropriate coloured energy, then slowly bring it up with hands stretched out in opposite directions. I bring the energy up the sides around me and the outer part of the torus while intoning the mantra, bringing hands together in prayer at the top I bring it down the centre of my body to the bottom Mercury and repeat until I have charged enough energy. This can further be synchronized with the four fold breath using an appropriate number at each count, doing the mantra on the exhale count, in this case inhaling as I move my hands down the centre of my body.

When charging energy this way, micro invoke for spirit and god invocations, micro evoke for states of mind and for most specific ritual operations like tarot, consecration, skrying etc. Where as you macro evoke for manifesting intentions in the physical world and for spirit evocation, you macro invoke for astral projection and path working. When making sigils, these last rules are only applicable with the final talisman because it is at this stage you are setting your intention to the energies. When charging a subset variable, IE the fire of Mars etc, you are more just calling up the energy rather than directing it and so as with the head and tail of the dragon, for a pure variable use the macro evoke breath cycle and the micro evoke breath cycle for a subset. When performing a ritual and circulating the energy with mantras as described above, you may choose to face the direction of the planet as found on the octagram magick circle, or as is more traditional, in the position of the physical planet/zodiac sign as it is found at that time in the night's sky. So by using these techniques with an octagram chakra system you can empower a particular planet, you can also trace out the appropriate symbols either on key places on the magick circle, or on the altar to further designate how the energy will manifest.

While the mudras work well enough, these can be combined with various body positions (“asanas” in Sanskrit) for the Ogdoad cosmology as well, so for example while you normally stand strait, you could put your left leg out 45 degrees for Mars, or your right leg out for Venus, in both cases you want your foot pointing to outer side, and if want both out at the same time, I signify this by calling Alethea. Left arm up 45 degrees is Jupiter and right arm up is Saturn, both together I think of as the aeon Nous. Right arm out with hand stretching slightly down to the Sun part of your aura is the Sun position, right fore arm out 90 degrees from side, with your elbow touching just above your hip and halfway up your body is Pluto, which I designated by “Caen” which means “power.” Left arm stretched out to moon is the moon position, left fore arm out 90 degrees as before is Neptune which I have designated “Akhana” which means “glory.” Eris is hands in prayer on top of head which I designate “Ennoia,” Uranus is hands in prayer at knees and is “Bythos,” top Mercury I designate “Anthropos” and here I extend arms up as high as they will go with hands in prayer, while “Ecclesia” is the Mercury at your feet. For the elements, spirit has hands in prayer over your forehead or third eye, right arm out strait from shoulders is air, left arm out strait is water, for fire put your leg in the same position as Mars, but have your foot pointing strait in front of you, likewise for Earth put your leg in the same position as Venus, but with your foot pointing in front. Right hand in groin is sulphur, left hand groin is Salt, both hands groin Azoth/quicksilver. The top half of the whole cosmology I think of as “Barbelo” and this refers to the heavenly aspect of Sophia, while the bottom half I think of as “Achamoth” and this refers to Sophia as found in matter. While most of these correspondences are not based on ancient texts, each of these last two principles to me relates to a snake, so that both together make up the snakes of a Kundalini yoga caduceus and as with some alchemical art, each bites the tail of the other to make a two snake Ouroboros. Barbelo is associated with the Lunar planets, as with geomancy, Jupiter is the head and Saturn is the tail, but this tail is also wrapped around the Sun, while the head bites the Moon, which is itself wrapped in the tail of the Achamoth snake. Achamoth is associated with the solar planets, as with geomancy, Venus is the head and Mars the tail, with it's head biting the Sun. Don't get too hung up on these associations as the snakes move about the aura and can twist around or take different positions, they can even form a figure 8 along the axes created by the fixed signs. I also loosely think of Barbelo as the head of the dragon and the macrocosm, or Achamoth as the tail of the dragon and the microcosm. If we assign our own designations to the octagram as a cube, as we will see, the Z axis is the caduceus and so the two Mercuries are the top and bottom faces, the sun and moon are the snakes on the caduceus and if you like the X and Y axis. The four remaining tips of the octagram and their planets make up the four remaining faces, while Malkuth is in the centre of the cube.

As for sex magick, I am only familiar with hetero positions, but for those who are different, pick a person to be the sun, the other is the moon. Each planet should have a position, so for me, the Sun is fellatio, the Moon cunnilingus, Mercury a 69, Jupiter is woman on top with both facing each other, Saturn is reversed cowgirl with the woman facing away, Venus would be missionary where as Mars would be doggy style. The zodiac signs each have their body parts so that depending on the intention, a solar or lunar hand could go on the corresponding part of the body of your partner, and in this way a planet through it's mudra can go on an applicable sign. You can also find 64 sex positions within the Kama Sutra and so this tradition certainly fits well too. If doing the sex magick solo, you can try masturbating using the appropriate mudra, or as close as you can get.

If you wish to have an elemental subset for a variable you can put the appropriate ritual prop on the applicable place on the octagram found either on the circle or the altar in order to make a "prop sigil." So as with before, incense for air, candles for fire, a vial or sprinkling of a herbal decoction for water and a crystal or piece of metal for the Earth, you can also use a little statue of an appropriate entity for "Spirit." Now there are potentially a few ways you could make such a prop sigil, especially given the various levels of possible complexity when writing set theory sigils. So depending on how your own paradigm works and how complicated you want to get, this magickal system I have been outlining will certainly evolve and change as people experiment more, but I think that the methods given below will provide an excellent framework for you to make your own system.

To start with, you will ritually charge each of the subsigils, you will use yarn to depict their addresses in the circle or the altar, but when making the talisman, you also have to connect them and depict how they relate to each other. Depending on what level of complexity you make your sigils with, your subsigils will mostly be words and you will also want to depict set theory symbols along the yarn connections, or even add additional programming symbols and Occult variables which further modify the intention of the subsigil in relation to the talisman. You will thus use the five basic types of props given above, along with other simple and cheap props such as tokens which can be made from small coloured tiles, or clay, or wax, magnets, or slices of various types of tree branches with all the symbols of the variables in your sets carved or drawn on them. (IE I CHING hexagrams or Runes, or whatever variables you use in your sets, along with tokens depicting set theory symbols) You could even just make paper tokens, or Tarot cards work for some variables, but you will want a bit of weight to them to hold down the yarn and so you might also paint symbols on rocks. Clay will be especially useful as you can make your own statues or idols, but then you could also use play dough just as well and just make the props and tokens as you need them, then reuse the play dough in the next ritual. However you choose to make the tokens, make sure you can insert sticks of incense into them, though you can get small incense holders and put these on top, or use small cones of incense, though these burn faster.

Now while I have given the 5 types of props elemental designations, this does not need to refer to your intended realm of manifestation, (though it might) but instead can refer to the 5 most common set symbols you will need, especially in terms of astrological symbolism. So for example, if spirit is statues, you can use small idols to refer to the spiritual entity set which is made up of as many variables as you want. So that while the Jupiter face may give instructions or a prayer to a spiritual entity, a statue of Hermes can be placed on the Mercury slot and thus while you may have many different statues, all statues represent the entity set of variables, thus the Hermes statue signifies you are evoking or invoking Hermes. The props then are just like fancy tokens with natural magick correspondences, the tokens being set symbols or if you want to be more specific, you could have individual variable symbols organized in to different groups. So that while you can get away with using a universal I CHING set symbol in different slots on the magick circle, it is more psychologically evocative if you use props or individual I CHING hexagram tokens in the slots, or along the yarn connections.

So the five types of props represent the 5 most important set symbols and have individual props according to what variables are actually in that set, or at least the most common variables in those sets, IE astrological variables. You might also use the props along the yarn connections to denote a subset of a particular variable, so that you would have a variable depicted by a token which then has a prop on top to denote a subset. You could even stack tokens to make detailed subset addresses, though you can also just connect a prop or token to the appropriate slots with yarn to depict an address for the slot on which the prop is placed. (especially if you choose to make sets for the other cubes and not just the Dysnomian square) So the statue acts as a set symbol on the prop sigil, but that set symbol might look totally different on paper sigils, or even with other slots/variables, but which depicts your intentions none the less. Fire and candles could be the set symbol for the pure metaphysical energies of a variable, while water and potions/decoctions/tinctures and even solidentheogens can refer to states of mind created by a particular variable as with invocation, IE Mercury consciousness, or Sagittarius consciousness, or, if you prefer, a type of Rune consciousness which can then be used in further operations. Not only will this help with consecratingentheogens, it will allow you to direct your trips much more fully and after the talisman prop sigil is charged, you can combine the water variables, take theentheogen and do inner alchemy. Air and incense can be used as a set symbol for astral realms for a given variable, while Earth and crystals might refer to Occult operations for a variable. So that depending on the words you use for the subsigils, you can thus make a prop sigil with coloured yarn under the variable tokens to connect them and depict prop sigils which explain your intention for a deity to manifest in a certain astral realm and perform a certain operation. Other examples might be for yourself to invoke a certain state of mind before doing an operation, or direct a metaphysical energy from a sun face subsigil to a different and specific subsigil, or you might yourself travel to a specific astral realm and perform an Occult operation, or create a new familiar that lives there. Not all variables necessarily need all 5 props, there isn't nearly enoughentheogens for that, though the astrological variables certainly have traditional correspondences and I personally use them most, you might not need a deity for every I CHING hexagram, but you could do if you wanted and putting a candle on top to denote a hexagrams energy is certainly useful. All you need to do is make the tokens for your variables, you will need duplicates of some, especially the set theory symbols, then you put the appropriate prop on top in right place, either in a slot, or along yarn connections between subsigils to define their relationship along with other tokens and set theory symbols. You can thus make prop sigils with set theory symbols, subsigils drawn on paper and Occult variables on the altar and or the circle to empower your talismans and you can do so ritually through the various Alchemical processes I will outline below. So while this is not intended for a beginner of ritual magick and could potentially get so complicated that I would need to write a very detailed grimoire, by experimenting and researching set theory and books in the further reading section, you can DIY.

I will however give some ideas about how the processes used in some traditional formulas for the philosophers stone might be used and from this you can use the same procedures for all kinds of evocations and Alchemical/Occult rituals, or as a ritual to make the philosophers stone in your brain. The following vague descriptions of ritual operations/processes are attributed to the standard astrological variables, so that each time you use the Mercury face on a cube for one of the following variables in a sigil, it will refer to the following designated ritual intention. The planets and elements below are assigned the more common Occult rituals, where as the Zodiac would best be assigned to rituals and forms of introspection which are conducive to specific aspects of self directed neuroplasticity. As I described in chapter 19, the processes change things in to different states of matter, the four parts of a brain circuit relate to the elements, the physical circuit in your brain is Earth, your feelings about the circuit is water, the name or symbol of a circuit is air, and your intentions for a circuit is fire and so the processes can help to manipulate specific parts of the circuits. Each of these four circuit designations should have a set of variables, thus allowing you to work with them in specific ways with alchemical processes. There are traditionally and potentially many more processes I have not listed, not to mention different designations for the variables according to different Alchemists, so while I will give some ideas, as usual, you will want to designate their meaning and the variable symbol yourself. The following list of zodiacal processes includes those which create changes in the states of matter, but I have given a few more suggestions as to their use, however there are certainly other possibilities and so I suggest you learn about each process and try to apply it to the brain and mind, or any other Occult operations you might use. At the very least you will want to be able to plant a seed/circuit, duplicate a circuit, strengthen a circuit, remove or destroy a circuit, link a circuit to another, or separate a circuit in to different parts through your rituals and sigils. I am sure that those who already have ritual experience will be able to create their own programming language and kamea brain grimoire using my ideas for inspiration, as with all things, DIY and Solve et Coagula!

Now the previous list of processes has zodiacal attributions, but the formula for the philosophers stone from the Emerald tablets is different. So I have broken up the following rituals according to the tablet's formula for the philosopher's stone, but these rituals should not be confused with the zodiacal processes of the same name. As you will want these to be quite differentiated in your mind and brain circuits, I have also given a second name for each ritual found below. I have chosen a largely Greek version of this ritual, but you should have a colour, mantra and a deity or spirit for each variable in the octagram. If nothing else you can make a mantra by spelling the name of the variable in your alphabet, then write out it's gematria number using the least amount of letters possible. By combining various Qabbalistic colour scales I have designated the following to the planets which is a bit weird if you are used to the Queen scale, but consider it in relation to the octagram. Top Mercury is Yellow, Mars is Orange, Sun is Red, Jupiter is Violet, Bottom Mercury is Black, Saturn is Indigo, Moon is Blue and Venus is Green. Eris is multicoloured translucent iridescence or rainbow, Neptune is turquoise, Pluto is rust and Uranus is grey. Quicksilver is yellow, Salt is blue and Sulphur is red.

If you don't like how I have designated this, you can change it as you like and for traditional correspondences in general from a variety of religions I suggest the book The Magician's Tables by Rankine and Skinner, (this has the “Gnostic words of Power” which I use for planetary mantras) but also “The Middle Pillar” by Israel Regardie, though you should get the Chic and Sandra Tabatha Cicero edition as they have multiple versions of the Middle Pillar ritual with different god names, they also provide music notes for the zodiac, this is also where I got some mantras for the following rituals. (For musical note correspondences regarding planets, see Joscelyn Godwin's book, Harmonies of Heaven and Earth, though this has no special function in this system, you can intone your mantras in the correct note.) All together the 7 rituals will allow you to make the philosopher's stone, but after the “Separation” ritual you can plug in different mantras and colours etc into the general scheme of things so as to evoke/invoke various energies for various purposes according to intention.

Calcination – The Rite of Secret Fire

The intention is to activate the magickal self by purifying the microcosm chakras and burning away materialist consciousness through an affirmation of your divinity, starting from the crucible in the circle, this is for the generation of the secret fire in your navel, the light of which will be used to consecrate your temple. In the “Conjunction” ritual the “Triquetra formula” will be used to generate the energies of the 3 alchemical principles and the Pentagram formula will be used for generating any elemental energies. In that case you will go clockwise and use the same variables and colours throughout, while here you are purifying the all energies and so will go counter clockwise. Even though you are invoking/evoking, the intention is not to banish the elements, but to enter in to a trance state that activates the magical self and gives you power over them. I have already given the rules and so for calling up energies you can modify this ritual as needed with the breath cycles, mantras and mudras etc.

1. Standing strait intone: Hekas Hekas Este Bebeloi
2. Micro invoke cycle, slowly bring up hands in fist mudra from the sides while stretching them out, visualizing yourself surrounded by white energy that comes from your hands, then join hands at top and bring energy down the middle while intoning AZOTH – at least 3 times

3. Triquetra Formula

Keeping hands in place and in fist mudra at crotch, say “By the sign of Azoth, I call upon the power of Quicksilver.” Visualize in white flame a triquetra being drawn out counter clockwise over your body as depicted in the octagram as if you were backing in to it, starting from Quicksilver in the crotch, then to salt, then to sulphur.

Bring hands up to crucible in navel but keep them on either side of it, about 6 inches apart, or a place where you can feel the energy you will generate between them.

Say, “ I generate the prima materia through the mystery of creation, Igne Natura Renovatur Integra” ('by fire is all nature renewed intact')

Then visualize a white ball of fiery energy between hands in navel crucible as you intone AZOTH one more time. (This is end of Triquetra Formula)

4. Micro invoke - Bring hands down along with the energy as a pillar, then bring hands and energy up from the sides just as before, then join at top and bring down the middle intoning IAO – 3 times at least, 5 times is better

5. Pentagram Formula

Once your hands cycle down to navel crucible, forearms go out 90 degrees in power and glory position, Say “Through the union of opposites, to know, to dare, to will, to keep silent, from the outer reaches of awareness, to the centre of life.” (charge white energy in both hands while separated)

Bringing hands together over navel crucible while making ball of energy intone “IAO”

Bring both hands up in prayer to forehead, then bring down left hand to HD and say, “By the sign of ---”IAO,” I call upon the power of “Abrahas”. (emphasis in intoning italics)

Go into pentagram position – (make a star with your body, arms and legs out) visualizing white flame as you trace out the pentagram in a counter clockwise manner around your body, at each tip of the star evoke the appropriate elemental, seeing the elemental in the circle around you in it's appropriate corner.

“In the corner of Earth I call upon the Gnomes to guard this circle from interference”

“In the corner of water I call upon the Undines to cleanse my heart”

“In the corner of air i call upon the Sylphs to clear my mind”

“In the corner of fire I call upon the Salamanders to unify my will”

Bring the white fire up to the spirit point and intone IAO say: By the Hypostasis of Spirit I forge this circle by the power of the elements, for about me burns the pentagram and within me shines the eight rayed star.

Give an extra burst of energy to fatten the lines making the pentagram, while visualizing your head filled with white light/energy. (this is end of pentagram formula)

6. Use hands to take energy ball from head and as you say the following, put energy ball into a candle on your altar in the spirit point of the pentagram.

“By the shining of the secret fire, I consecrate this temple in the name of IAO”

(Saying IAO as you put the energy into the candle)

As you light candle making sign of the enterer say: “may it be filled with the purest light”

Dissolution – The Rite of the Waters of Nun

Intention is to purify the planetary and zodiacal chakras, you also call down the macrocosm, thus opening the temple you activate the power of the Ogdoad formula and spread the spirit energy you generated in Calcination in order to consecrate the temple. You are simultaneously evoking the aeons to dissolve reality and enter into a deeper trance state and awareness of the non physical.

1. Macro evoke cycle - This time, bring up hands from the sides intoning “Arrarita” and join at top and bring down the middle while being silent, but doing the usual visualizations with white light.

– 3 times

2. Octagram Formula

As you bring hands up sides put your legs out 45 degrees in Mars and Venus position,

Say: “Aletheia the gnosis” (charge Venus and Mars points with white)

Then bring arms upward 45 degrees as if making a V in Saturn and Jupiter, so that your body should look like an X as your legs are still out

Say “Nous the Beholder” (charge with white)

Bring hands together in prayer just above your head in the Eris planet position,

Say: “Ennoia the epiphany,” (charge with white)

Bring legs in so you are standing strait and bring hands down to knees and say: “Bythos the eternal” (charge with white)

Put right arm in Caen position and say: “Caen is the power”

Put left arm in Akhana position and say: “and Akhana is the glory”(charge both with white)

Say: "Eis tous Aionas ton Aionon”

(meaning “to the aeon of aeons,” pronounced "ace tooce eye-oh-nas, tone eye-own-own,")

Then bring hands together in navel crucible intoning “Arrarita”

*Hands still around the crucible say, “By the sign of Arrarita, I call upon the power of Sophia”

Bend down bringing energy ball down to bottom Mercury, then stand up strait and going counter clockwise from the bottom mercury, visualize in white light an octagram being drawn around your body, at every second point of octagram intone “Arrarita” finishing the octagram in bottom Mercury.

Bend down and bring energy ball up to navel crucible. (End of Octagram Formula)

3. Zodiac Formula

Say: "I bare the serpent of the zodiac, let the gates of time and space open and consecrate this temple by the power of the Ogdoad"

Then intone "Aion teleos" while visualizing the ball being spread out in 8 arms/arrows to the 8 points of the magick circle octagram. (Aion teleos is for me the mantra of Phanes, it means "broadest aeon" and is used only when you want to activate the whole zodiac or call Phanes)

Separation - The Rite of the Fourfold circle

Intention is for banishing and forming the circle, the boundary which separates the inside of the temple from the outside, so that nothing can come in unless called in magickally, this also cloaks you on the astral and keeps any energies you call up contained in the circle. When doing a general banishing as explained here, you will draw in a counter clockwise fashion the "shape" of all four orders of variables in the four corners, IE the triquetra, pentagram and Ogdoad and the zodiac. You can use the zodiac symbol from the Golden Dawn Rosie Cross ritual for the zodiac, it is a circle with a cross in it like the astrological Earth symbol, only with the cross extending outside the circle. For a specific banishing of only one variable, as might be done for a brain demon, you only draw one corresponding shape of the order from which the variable is derived, IE for elements draw a pentagram etc, then you put the variable's symbol, for example the fire symbol in the centre of the pentagram in a similar way to the Conjunction ritual, you would also use the appropriate mantra, mudra and colour instead of Arrarita and white. Normally you call the triquetra energies in the corners of the two Mercuries and the Sun and Moon, you also use these corners for the planets of Mercury, Sun and Moon. You call the 4 elements in only the corners of the circle which have the 4 elements, you also use these corners for Mars, Venus, Saturn and Jupiter, along with the zodiac. You evoke Spirit in the top Mercury corner and in the four elemental corners, but it is unique in this. So then, in the following ritual we are doing things a little differently and you will draw all the geometric forms appropriate to a given corner, starting at the tip of the form that corresponds to the variable of that corner, you will use the individual colours and mantras of the 5 elements, but will use "AZOTH" as the mantra for all the alchemical principles and white for all the triquetras, likewise "Aion Teleos" for the four zodiacal corners in white. In this case a white octagram is used in four corners and Arrarita is the mantra each time, as it represents all planets. (If banishing a subset variable, IE the fire of the sulphur of Mercury, start with the biggest variable corresponding to the ruling set and use only it's corners, in this case Mercury, then trace out sulphur, then trace out fire and do so in all of the 4 Mercury corners, however you only intone with the subset variable you want, in this case use the mantra of fire.)

1. Macro evoke - Standing strait bring white energy down to bottom Mercury then up sides intoning: "Arrarita" at least 3 times
2. Pick up athame in right hand, left hand on the head of the dragon and go to bottom Mercury on the outer rim of the circle, standing strait. As with the Rite of Dysnomia, when making the circle you can synchronize the four fold breath when drawing out the various shapes. First, standing strait with arms at sides, visualize a pillar of energy in white, (or appropriate colour) draw a triquetra going CCW starting in quicksilver, bring energy up from feet and make sign of the enterer pointing into centre while intoning "AZOTH" then go in to sign of silence. Standing strait make another pillar of white and draw an octagram going CCW starting at Bottom Mercury, intone "Arrarita" making sign of the enterer, then go in to sign of silence.
3. Stand strait, then make sign of enterer with athame and trace circle in mid air from the centre of the octagram and with your left hand in the Head of the Dragon go to fire corner.
4. Standing strait make a red pillar of energy as before and draw a red pentagram going CCW starting in fire point, intone "Theion Pyr" making sign of the enterer, then go in to sign of silence

Standing strait make white pillar and draw zodiac symbol, start with vertical line, then horizontal line, then do circle CCW, make sign of enterer while intoning "Aion Teleos" then go in to sign of silence.

5. Extend athame and draw circle in mid air, starting from where you had been intoning, around to the next corner of the temple, which would be Moon corner, as with all variables and all geometric forms, make the pillar and draw out the form, in this case a triquetra starting in the Sulphur tip, yet still intone Azoth (Even though salt and sulphur have their own mantras and this is for quicksilver) and then do white octagram as before, intoning Arrarita, but starting octagram in the Moon tip.

6. Make circle in mid air and go on to Jupiter corner and after blue pillar draw out Water pentagram in blue, then intone "Theion Hydor" and then as before do the zodiac symbol, intoning "Aion Teleos."

7. Then continue circle on to Top Mercury, draw quicksilver triquetra as before and intone AZOTH, then make white pillar and trace out spirit pentagram and intone IAO, then do octagram with Top Mercury, then intone Arrarita.

8. As before, make circle then go on to Saturn corner and do Air pentagram in yellow intoning "Theios Aer" and then do zodiac as before, then go on to Sun corner for Salt triquetra and Sun octagram. Then go on to Venus corner for green Earth pentagram, intoning "Theia Ge" and then do zodiac, then close the circle in the bottom Mercury part of the temple.

9. Still moving in a CCW direction return to the centre crucible position of the magick circle and put down the athame. Standing strait in the circle crucible say, "I stand in the centre of the world." Then MICRO evoke - Standing strait bring white energy down to bottom Mercury then up sides intoning: "Arrarita" at least 3 times

10. When hands are at top bring left hand down and put it on the head of the dragon, then while saying "As Above" trace with right hand in a CW direction the zodiac symbol above your head, making sign of enterer with both hands intone "Aion Teleos." In the same manner and place, trace the top Mercury octagram, then intone "Arrarita" with sign of enterer. Then bring both hands down and point down to altar where you will say "So below," put left hand back on HD, then trace a white spirit pentagram in CW fashion with right hand, then you intone "IAO" while making sign of enterer, then trace quicksilver triquetra CW and intone "AZOTH" with sign of enterer.

11. Go into X position with arms in Nous and legs in Aletheia and say, "to accomplish the miracles of the one thing" Then intone "Arrarita" and charge white energy in in all 8 parts of your surrounding aura. (When banishing a specific variable, do the one corresponding geometric shape, IE pentagram etc, in both above and below position, traced out in a CCW manner and using only it's mantra, using that mantra in step 11 as well. Do subset variables in the same way as you did for it's four corners and also in CCW fashion.)

12. Bring legs in and arms down, standing strait bring up white energy through the middle, then down sides in macro evoke cycle, intoning Arrarita at least 3 times. (For banishing a single variable, use the same breath cycle throughout and use only the appropriate mantras and colours, but still use all 8 points in your aura.)

13. When hands are at bottom, after last intoning bring right hand up to Caen position, and say "Caen is the power" and then bring left hand to Akhana and say "Akhana is the glory"

(In both hands charge white light or appropriate colour as you put hands out)

Then say, "By the power of the triquetra, pentagram, Ogdoad and zodiac, let this circle be cleansed and purified, contained and cloaked!" (If banishing a variable, say "By the power of the ---"N variable's order," I banish ---N variable from this circle")

Bring hands together intoning "ARRARITA!" Direct energy to your feet and bottom Mercury, then spread it out in 8 arms to the 8 directions and the outer border of the circle, 14. Once arms slowly reach outer border of circle, intone "ARRARITA!" once more, simultaneously visualize the circle in a cylinder of white light, with top and bottom also closed off in white light.

Conjunction - The Rite of Heaven and Earth

Intention is normally for evocations and invocations of energies, in this case we are making the philosopher's stone and so will be evoking the most spiritual energies of each order. IE Quicksilver, Spirit, Top and Bottom Mercury and Ophiuchus with some differences from the usual conjunction ritual highlighted below. Each order of variables has it's own formula which we have already seen, though the zodiac order will make use of the same Ogdoad formula used for the planets, you will trace the zodiac symbol in the corners with the zodiac sign's symbol in the centre, rather than tracing an octagram. When tracing the geometric forms and variables in the corners, the instructions will be much the same as with banishing, though of course here you will be going clockwise. We are not making a sigil here, but if you want to make sigils this ritual will potentially be much more complicated, but from this example ritual, along with the additional instructions and practice, you should be able to figure it out and modify according to your needs.

To make sigils, start with each subsigil than finish with a talisman, with subsigils you will trace the sigil in the appropriate corners, the talisman is composed of the subsigils and will likely be complicated and so you will not need to trace it out in the four corners. When tracing the subsigils in their corners you will do an as above so below formula in that part of the circle to activate it, then you will connect it using yarn as necessary to make an address. After all the subsigils are charged you will start to connect them via yarn for the talisman prop sigil, while the paper talisman should be put on the crucible on your altar, on top of the crystal ball and you would do the above and below for it there. Each subsigil from a face of a cube will be put in the corner of the cube's planet rather than the face's planet, then to write the address you take yarn from that paper subsigil and bring it to corner of the planet which has the appropriate face. Here you put a tile or token down with the "face set" symbol, then from here go to the place in the circle where the appropriate number slot would be and put the "gematria set" symbol down. If there are multiple subsigils in a given corner put them side by side in the general area along with any corresponding props that might be used. While you want to get everything in it's appropriate slot within the circle, do not worry too much if you run out of room in a slot, your intentions are well defined in the sigils themselves, including the correct addresses and the slots themselves will not really be totally defined in a grid pattern, so use the octagram shape more so, which is then surrounded by square slots, as it is overlaid on the Dynomia square. So long as you can put the yarn under them without making a mess you are fine, however, keep this issue of circle space in mind when writing out your sigils before the ritual. As you can stack them on tokens to depict the address, or put them on top of the subsigils, the 5 types of props can be used to save room by eliminating the need for some of the simpler subsigils, if each slot is a square foot or bigger you can fit a pretty decent amount in each one, but do not get carried away with too many programming details. Prop sigils will be done in the microcosm on the altar which should also have a 10X10 grid with the Ogdoad cosmology overlaid, you can then use yarn and small props as with the magick circle. One further suggestion is that you can drill 100 holes or slots in the appropriate places and have little pegs with play dough on them instead of tokens, you can also use the pegs to tie your yarn to the appropriate slot. (You could use the altar to make the talisman sigil, but it is useful to have a way to differentiate between macrocosmic sigils and microcosmic sigils which work on the brain specifically.)

Start by doing one of the breath cycles according to intention and circulate the energy around your aura, in this case we will be but evoking on the microcosm to make the philosopher's stone by consecrating the crystal ball with the most powerful variables. As you will be using the crystal ball for later rituals this is a good ritual to start with, but if you wanted to make the philosopher's stone in your brain, you would micro invoke the variables. If you were making a sigil for your brain, you may work with pure variables and so use the macro invoke for subsigils, but you would micro invoke the talisman. If making a sigil, start with the first subsigil variable, IE the planet of the cube (not the face) you are drawing the sigil on. From here you will go on to evoke the variable in the four corners, but this will be somewhat different than the banishing ritual and extra steps are given below to show how you intend to direct the energy, or to call up a subset variable.

As with most magick systems, you will be tracing geometric forms in the four corners, I also trace additional symbols in the centre of these forms to further signify my intention. As we are working with a cube, we also need to trace these forms in the Above and Below positions and I have integrated this into an "Above and Below formula" so that these can work with the following rules to further designate your intentions. As usual, to evoke or invoke an element or planet or variable, you start on the tip of geometric form assigned to that variable, IE to evoke fire you trace a pentagram starting on the fire arm of the pentagram. So then, tracing the same variable's geometric form in Above and Below positions signifies you are working with that particular pure variable. Tracing the geometric forms of two different variables in the above and below positions signifies you are creating a link between two variables, as with say a brain circuit or subsigils being linked to the talisman, or in the separation ritual we made a link between all four orders of variables to signify the unity of the whole cosmology. Tracing a circle around the outside of the geometric form signifies you are containing the energy in some way, as with say channelling it into a sigil or crystal ball. You can also signify you want to charge the face of a cube by tracing the octagram of that cube's planet, then in the centre of the octagram you put the symbol of the planet which corresponds to the face you want.

If you want to charge a subset variable, like say the water of Jupiter, you do the geometric form of Jupiter, IE an octagram, intone Jupiter mantra, then in the centre you put the water symbol, but with a circle around that inner symbol only. Then you intone the water mantra, but right after this you say "Entos" which is Greek for "within" and this signifies the variable you intoned is found "within" the last variable you intoned. The Zodiac symbol does not have 12 points to start your tracing from and so in this case you always draw the zodiac symbol the same way, then within you draw the zodiac sign you want. If there are subsets of subsets, or more than two tiers, like say a Rune aspect of the Earth of Mercury in Aquarius, you simply draw multiple geometric forms one after another, so while you will use "Entos" after intoning each subset variable, it is important to use the right breath cycles and have one hand on the tail of the dragon nipple to help differentiate this in your mind and brain. So in this case you start by drawing the zodiac symbol, then Aquarius in the centre, intone, then you would draw the appropriate Mercury octagram, intone Mercury mantra, then say "Entos," then draw the Earth symbol in the centre of the octagram, encircle it, then intone Earth mantra, then say "Entos" and then as there is no geometric form for Runes you draw the rune, then encircle it and intone it's mantra, then say "Entos." If you want to do the address of a subsigil, you do not need to use the word Entos unless a subset is involved, you simply trace the octagram of the cube's planet, intone, then in the centre you put the symbol of the face's planet, then intone the face's planet's mantra, then you would draw the subsigil itself, encircle it and intone the subsigil mantra. Each time you trace out a subset variable you will let the last variable and its geometric shape disappear, and draw the next part of the address in blank space. Once you have intoned the variable, subset variables, or the subsigil, you will visualize a new pillar in your body and then direct that energy with the sign of the enterer in to the symbol, but here you will see the energy coalesce in to a ball with the symbol of the energy you want overlaid, you will then see the ball of energy congeal or harden in to a gem with the symbol etched on top and this signifies that you are materializing this energy.

1. Micro Evoke cycle with AZOTH mantra -3 times,
2. Pick up the wand and moving CW with left hand on HD go to the bottom Mercury corner of the magick circle. As before, draw up a pillar of white light in accordance with 4 fold breath, then trace out triquetra in white and make sign of enterer while intoning AZOTH. DO NOT go in to sign of silence just yet, still standing strait, raise another pillar of white energy in your body as you inhale, then trace a circle in CW fashion to enclose the triquetra, then make sign of enterer once more and intone AZOTH once more as you visualize the energy forming a ball and crystalizing into a gem. (There is no subset in this case, but we use the circle for consecration)

3. Put wand into centre of triquetra and continue in CW fashion to the sun corner of the circle, then draw the next triquetra in the other corners and repeat step 2 and step 3 until you have closed the circle and then return to the circle crucible position in CW fashion.

(If charging a macro subsigil, before you go back to crucible, place the sigil on the ground in the corner as you close the circle, when circumambulating you can hold it in the hand which touches your nipple as you make the mudra. Here you will perform the subsigil variant of the As Above so Below

Formula, simply trace the octagram of the cube's planet with the face's planetary symbol in the centre above you and the subsigil paper while saying "As Above" and then intone the cube's planet mantra with sign of enterer. Encircle the above octagram, then while saying "So below" trace out the subsigil over the paper on the ground and then intone the mantra of the planet of the face where you wrote the subsigil, then encircle the subsigil. Go into Caen and Akhana position with wand in one hand and your free hand in mudra and say, "to accomplish the miracles of the one thing" then charge energy in hands and bring together intoning the subsigil mantra, then place ball of energy into the subsigil.

Addresses will be made and tokens will be used after all the subsigils are charged, but the same basic As Above So Below formula structure applies to all tokens according to it's place in the address. There are multiple possible ways to do this, especially if you use the more complicated programming as with the planetary cubes with sets overlaid, but from the following you will get a basic idea how you can apply this formula. To make an address take a piece of yarn of an appropriate colour and place it under the subsigil, then moving in a CW manner go to the slot of the planet which corresponds to the face you want, or the second part of the address. Your altar should be table with legs so that if needed, you can easily put the yarn underneath it, to connect the parts of the address. Put a face set symbol token down on top of the yarn in the slot, do the octagram of the face's planet in the above position and use it's mantra, then do the subsigil's mantra and sigil form traced below. Make sure you encircle the octagram and subsigil after you intone them. "Conjunct" the two by using the Caen and Akhana positions and saying "to accomplish the miracles of the one thing," then intone the subsigil's mantra once again. Take up the strand of yarn and continue to the slot of the number you want and put the gematria set symbol token down on top. Here you will do the cube's octagram and mantra above, but with the face's planetary symbol in the centre, then you encircle the octagram and below you will trace the subsigil over the token, then intone subsigil mantra and encircle it. However, when you conjunct to make the one thing, intone the talisman mantra and place that energy over the gematria token. Take a white piece of yarn and connect it to the next subsigil in it's slot and then proceed to make it's address in the same way, until all subsigils have an address and are wired together with white yarn.

Once you have charged all of the subsigils and their addresses you can start to make the talisman prop sigil, you do this by going to the first subsigil and with one hand on HD do a top Mercury above with the subsigil in the centre, but using the talisman mantra, then for below you put the same hand on TD and use the bottom Mercury with the subsigil in the centre and the subsigil's mantra. If using tokens for further programming, do the subsigil and it's mantra above in the colour of the subsigil's cube and encircle it, then do the token symbol and it's mantra below. IE use the colour white and it's name if nothing else, conjunct them as "one thing" using the subsigil mantra and then put the ball of energy into the token. If the programming symbol is a subset with an address that has many tokens stacked, as with say the fire of Mercury in a Rune of an I Ching hexagram, do the above as before with the subsigil and it's mantra, then do the below starting with the I Ching hexagram symbol, intone it, encircle it, then do the Rune, intone it, encircle it, say "Entos" then do the remaining variables in the same way, then finish with the one thing as the subsigil mantra and put the energy in to the stack of tokens. If using incense or a candle as a token, light it up as you make the sign of the enterer, you can hold the lighter in the opposite hand of the wand, or there are butane lighters you can get in the shape of a wand, sometimes called "oven candles" or "lighter pens." Once an address is done, then you continue to the next subsigil and do the same, only with it's symbol in the centre and its mantra used below and you proceed like this until all of your subsigils are tied to the talisman. If making a micro subsigil, you will do much the same, only stand in the circle crucible and place the subsigil in the appropriate place on the altar.)

4. Say "I stand in the centre of the Earth." Perform As Above so Below Formula over the crystal ball, the same basic formula applies to all pure variables in each order, you simply insert the appropriate geometric form corresponding to the variable's order, as well as appropriate colour, mudra and mantra. In this case we trace the triquetra symbol CW using the right hand, with the left in a fist on HD, all while saying "As Above." Intone AZOTH, encircle, Intone Azoth again. Then we do the same over the altar while saying "So Below" left hand in fist of TD. (Normally keep hand on the same nipple, but for making the philosopher's stone this is a fuller conjunction and will be done with the following variables used in this ritual as well) Then put down wand and go into X position with hands in Nous and legs in Aletheia, say "To accomplish the miracles of the one thing" then at the 3 points of your aura charge white energy as you intone AZOTH, (use all points of a variables geometric shape) but unlike the separation ritual, here you will also visualize lightning striking all four limbs simultaneously as this is the conjunction of Heaven and Earth.

5. Perform Triquetra Formula, (step 3 of calcination) only with Quicksilver in all three positions, put ball of energy into crystal ball, if you have no crystal ball simply put it in the altar crucible. (If making a subsigil, perform the Ogdoad formula with the cube's planet variable of that subsigil in all four points of the octagram, use the mudra, colour and mantra which is appropriate. Repeat this same process for each of the subsigils and then skip ahead to step 13 and read bracketed instructions)

6. Do Micro evoke cycle with IAO mantra – 5 times

7. In a similar way to step 2, pick up wand and with left hand in HD and go to TOP Mercury position and evoke spirit in CW direction. First you trace the pentagram, intone, then you encircle it with the second breath, intone. Then repeat in remaining elemental corners and close the circle. (I only evoke spirit in 5 corners, for elements four corners is preferable)

8. Return to circle crucible and perform As Above so Below Formula over the crystal ball, but do CW spirit pentagram in both above and below positions while using IAO as spirit mantra. Put down wand.

9. Perform Pentagram Formula, but in pentagram position, move in CW and instead of calling elemental spirits, say "in the corner of –element (Spirit)-- I call upon the power of IAO" using white energy in each corner. (if evoking a different element use the appropriate mantra and colour)

10. Do Macro evoke cycle with Arrarita mantra using sun and moon mudra throughout – 8 times

11. Go to bottom Mercury, wand in right hand and left hand in HD, trace bottom Mercury octagram, intone Arrarita, then encircle it, intone bottom Mercury mantra. Tracing circle around with right hand, go CW to sun corner and trace Sun octagram, intone Arrarita, encircle, intone Sun mantra. Go to top Mercury position and make it's octagram, intone Arrarita, encircle, intone Top Mercury mantra, then on to Moon corner, make it's octagram and intone Arrarita, encircle, then Moon mantra. Then close circle.

(Of course when evoking planets normally you would evoke the same octagram in each corner and use that planet's mantra rather than Arrarita, but this ritual is special. As with both elements and planets, if you want to evoke an entity, trace the appropriate geometric form in a corner and intone variable's mantra, encircle then intone deities name or the name of the race of elementals. This can be used for a simple evocation, along with a modified as above so below formula so that you can direct the entity into the crystal ball, or the same basic idea will be used with the Jupiter subsigil if applicable, or any entity/deity tokens used in the prop sigil. If it is a demon or antagonistic entity, evoke an extra spirit pentagram over the crystal ball and then say, "I confine you to this circle," then you may destroy it or transmute it according to intention.)

12. Return to circle crucible and perform As Above So Below formula, with top Mercury above and encircled, bottom Mercury below and encircled, using Arrarita as mantra for both.

13. Still standing in X position, perform the Octagram formula and call on Nous and Aletheia, when it comes to the part after Caen and Akhana, intone Arrarita, then as we are evoking the astrological Earth to make the Philosopher's stone and she is it's goddess, with hands in prayer separated by about 6 inches (the mudra of astrological Earth) still around the crucible say, "By the sign of Sophia*, I call upon the power of Arrarita" From here we move the energy ball from the navel crucible down to bottom Mercury and use Arrarita as a mantra, we also move energy in aura CW to form the octagram, intoning in every other corner.

(If evoking a specific planet, where I put the * call on an appropriate deity instead of Sophia and use that planets mantra instead of Arrarita, move one hand to either HD or TD, move your other hand with the ball of energy to the appropriate corner of the octagram aura, if Venus or Mars use your hand to direct energy down your leg which goes out to that point of the octagram. For example, "By the sign of ---- "Venus Mantra" I call upon the power of ---- "Freya" and from that point visualize the octagram in your aura as you direct the energy around you, intoning in every other point. Thus at this time we use the unique mudra and bodily position or "asana," as described above for each variable. You can intone in 8 corners, but 4 is sufficient. To evoke Eris, Neptune, Uranus or Pluto, simply start from that planet slot and visualize a line to the tip of the octagram point, so for example, if doing Eris, draw small line from Eris to Top Mercury, then continue octagram as normal. If evoking zodiac signs you should use the octagram formula, when tracing out in your aura, start from the octagram point of the zodiac sign as in their elemental groups and for the body position also use the elemental groupings but make the zodiacal mudra. You do not need to do zodiacal formula as this is primarily for evoking Ophiuchus or Phanes, or the whole "sphere" of the zodiac at once. If evoking elements, start in the appropriate pentagram part of your aura, if evoking salt move energy ball to salt and start triquetra from there, or if evoking sulphur start triquetra from sulphur position.

If you want to evoke an entity, say "By the sign of ---variable mantra, I call upon the god/dess --- " Or for elements say the name of the race of elementals you want and for spirit I say Abraxas for the deity of spirit, you may also use IAHU or whatever you prefer. I do not associate the three alchemical principles or zodiac with entities, but you can certainly use this method for them.

Making a talisman is easy enough, after evoking the variables you simply state your intention and then do the appropriate breath cycle using the talisman mantra. Go to top Mercury and make sign of enterer pointing to the ground below you and circumambulate CW once around the magick circle while tracing a circle on the ground. Once you get back to Top Mercury, do not turn to the corner but stand there facing the CW direction and make sign of the enterer. From here you will start to trace the line inside the magick circle as you will be tracing out a spiral back to the circle crucible position. As you circumambulate around, you will make a sign of enterer in the spirit position, then circle once more and make sign of enterer in quicksilver position, then circle around to crucible and stand there. Then you do the As Above So Below formula, starting with the first subsigil, you do the subsigil's cube's planet octagram CW with the subsigil traced out in the centre in the above position, then intone subsigil mantra and encircle the subsigil in the centre, then intone talisman mantra. In the below position, over the physical talisman on the altar crucible you trace over the portion of the talisman which depicts the address pertaining to the first subsigil, intone subsigil mantra and encircle the whole talisman CW, then intone talisman mantra. You do this for all of the subsigils in their order as found on the talisman, you can do more variables if you want but this is quite sufficient. Then do top Mercury octagram CW with astrological Earth in the centre in Above position, intone AUM as the astrological Earth mantra, then encircle around the octagram. Finally, do a bottom Mercury octagram CW over the talisman on the altar crucible, trace over the talisman in the centre, intone the talisman mantra, then encircle the octagram, you then end with something like "so mote it be" and go on to Fermentation.)

14. Do macro evoke cycle with "Aion Teleos" -13 times

15. Do Zodiac formula, only instead of visualizing the energies going out in 8 directions, see the energies coming from the circle corners to the crystal ball.

16. Say, "I call upon you Sophia to join the Heavens and the Earth, so that I may form the philosopher's stone and gain gnosis of true wisdom."

17. Do As Above So Below Formula CW and encircled with the zodiac above with Ophiuchus symbol in centre, then below do bottom Mercury octagram with astrological Earth in TD and all encircled, then do Spirit Pentagram Above in HD and encircled and Quicksilver Triquetra below in TD and encircled.

Fermentation - The Rite of Strengthening

Here the intention is to ferment or strengthen the energies that were evoked for the subsigils, they will also be further mixed for the talisman sigil. If making a sigil to work on your brain, you can use the nostril breathing as I described in Chapter 19, activating the brain hemisphere which you want the circuit to be planted in, or which already has the circuit you want. Use the hand on the opposite side of your body from the brain hemisphere you want, plugging the nostril which is on the same side as the hemisphere you want, but with the hand in the appropriate mudra. When making the philosopher's stone, you can use this nostril breathing technique according the variable you are charging, the Sulphur, Saturn and Venus being wired to the left brain, Salt, Jupiter and Mars for the right brain, where as Mercury and Quicksilver is both nostrils open. (Remember Ida and Pingala have opposite sides in the genitals to their ruling brain hemisphere)

Depending on what you are taking, right after conjunction is a good time to imbibe your entheogens, though if you had previously consecrated it and it takes a long time to kick in, right after the separation ritual is sometimes appropriate too. If making a potion in your cauldron, this ritual will be joined to that process, in which case you start by going back in to the circle and in a CW direction spiral back in from the outer rim, picking up all herbal decoctions and entheogens used in the prop sigil. Add the ingredients in the order of the subsigils they belong to, their energy has already been added to the talisman, but as you put them in the cauldron, trace out the corresponding geometric form and symbol for each ingredient and intone. This is best done with a consecrated ladle, so that you can stir the potion by tracing the geometric forms and symbols, then make the sign of enterer as you intone the mantra. For the non entheogenic herbs especially, it is not a bad idea to leave a little bit of residue in the vials for symbolic purposes, as after you have added the ingredients, you will spiral out and put the vials back where you found them so that they can act as tokens on the prop sigil. If you are not taking any major dose of entheogen the Fermentation process can be repeated until you feel the energy is adequately charged, but if you do take an entheogen you should repeat this process until you get close to peaking. If you are smoking Salvia or DMT you will want to wait till after the congelation ritual. From here the rituals will all be "inner alchemy" and you will be sitting cross legged in the circle crucible performing visualizations and chakra working as the following rituals are designed as a kind of Alchemical Kundalini Yoga, hence the four fold breath and pranayama are to be used from here on.

1. Sitting cross legged, with hands in correct mudra over your body crucible, say the name of the corresponding god/dess three times while charging energy in the colour of the cube of the first subsigil. For the philosopher's stone we have no subsigils, so simply go CW through the planetary order of the octagram starting with Top Mercury. Intone "Tehuti" (Thoth) and visualize a yellow ball of energy being formed, then move the energy with your hands still in mudra into it's chakra area within the octagram aura, then put your hands on your knees still in the same mudra.
2. Say the mantra of top Mercury while visualizing the ball of energy turning into a gem with 8 edges. (For sigils, use the mantra of the first subsigil's cube's planet once, you may also choose to use a symbolic number for the breath count, or use 4 or better yet 8 throughout.) Then intone the mantra of Astrological Earth and visualize it's symbol in white engraved on the gem. (For sigils, use the subsigil's planetary face mantra, but switch to that planet's mudra and visualize it's symbol engraved on the gem in that planet's colour.)

Then for the third breath intone "Sophia" while visualizing the gem spinning as you intone.

(For sigils, use subsigil mantra)

3. After last mantra hold breath with empty lungs for count of 8, visualize energy line in white to next chakra in CW direction on octagram (Mars) to the count of 8 while inhaling, hold breath to count of 8. From here you repeat step 2 only you do the Top Mercury symbolism in the Mars chakra area, so you start with the Mercury mantra intoning at roughly the count of 8. You then repeat this in each chakra position until you get back to the Top Mercury position. While sitting cross legged, this should create an octagram around you in the colour of Top Mercury, the middle of which is your belly button. The top of the octagram extends past your head as when you were standing up, the bottom points extend below the ground beneath you a bit more than the distance of your feet from your belly button.

4. You then repeat steps 1-3 with Mars energy, then solar energy etc, until you have done steps 1-3 with all 8 planets.

(If making a sigil you repeat steps 1-3 for each subsigil, though if you are lazy in step two you can do every other point, or you could even just use steps 1-2 for each subsigil, but the more energy you put in to it, the more you will get out of it. If you want, in between each subsigil you can do more programming sigils, even those with a large stack of tokens. So for this you do steps 1-3 for a subsigil, then in the area of top Mercury chakra you would visualize the first programming symbol found between the first subsigil and the second. You visualize this while saying "As Above," then you visualize the same symbol in the bottom Mercury position and say "So Below." Then you would say "to accomplish the miracles of the one thing" and then intone the talisman mantra while visualizing the programming symbol in the centre. If you want to use something like the fire of Mercury in Aquarius of a rune, you do the rune above, then Aquarius below, then Mercury above and fire below. If you have an odd number of variables do the last variable in both above and below positions. If using an address for a programming symbol, either odd or even numbered, as you say "to accomplish the miracles of the one thing," you will visualize the symbol of the last variable in that stack of variables/tokens, but you will intone the talisman mantra. In this way you can charge incredibly detailed instructions into your aura, all the information is encoded in the talisman sigil circuit and so depending on the sigil it might be redundant and unnecessary, but for the more important programming symbols, especially if you only have a few subsigils, it is definitely a good idea. You will definitely want all this planned out long before the ritual and especially when first learning this system. While I like to do the inner alchemy with my eyes closed, you may prefer eyes open, but in either case, you may want a cheat sheet to list the order of variables and mantras that will be charged. If this sounds terribly complicated, after awhile you will see the logic of the ritual and it will make it easier to remember all this. You can always simplify or adjust the rules to suit your needs, you could even make it more difficult by utilizing the subsigil symbols more.

As the creation of the philosopher's stone is not attained by spiritually lazy people, when creating it you should really do this completely, especially as it will produce stronger brain circuits for those new to this system. The ritual for the philosopher's stone then is great practice as it uses all the main variables and will provide a strong root to the ritual circuitry needed to perform other rituals. That is you may perform the same ritual many times before you make the philosopher's stone in your brain, but once you have truly done this, the circuits will be strong enough to transmute any other circuits in your brain. There are no shortcuts to this, though using entheogens will certainly help to strengthen those circuits, you should make sure you have the ritual well memorized before attempting it on entheogens. If waiting for an entheogen like Mushrooms to take effect, you cannot rush this either and so take your time and do the ritual fully. You may even have to repeat this part in it's entirety to give you enough time to come up, but if you redo it, redo it fully, you don't want some subsigils charged more than others. The only time you might want to do the shorter version, is if you have a whole bunch of subsigils, as you will ideally be peaking on entheogens during the congelation ritual.)

5. For making the Philosopher's stone, after doing the 8 planets you will repeat steps 1-3 for the 5 elements while starting in Spirit. In this step you will visualize your body surrounded by the pentagram, but within the area of the centre of the octagram, rather than it being in your limbs. You do not need to keep visualizing the octagram, but be aware of the space it occupies and previously you should have made it big enough that you can fit a decent sized pentagram and triquetra around you and in the centre of it. After the pentagram you will repeat steps 1-3 using the triquetra in your aura. For the triquetra in step 1 you can simply use their mantra, or you may find an alchemical entity to assign each principle, for example, a Red lion for Sulphur.

(If making a sigil, after the subsigils you can charge one element for where you want the sigil to manifest, especially if tying the sigil to a face of the Dysnomian cube or some part of your brain, though in this case you might want to use the Eris planetary symbolism and then denote the face of the cube as with something like the subsigils.)

6. Now that you have charged the energies a bit more we will energetically mix them all together and into the crucible and charge them as one gestalt energy. Say, "As Above," then starting on your right side and halfway up your naval crucible, or about the height of your right knee, you will intone "Barbelo" as you visualize a pure white snake of arcing energy sweeping over the outer rim of the octagram and forming the top half of a circle around all the variables on the top half of the octagram. (This is the CW direction when viewed from the front) As it moves over the rim of the outer border of your aura it also creates an arc of white energy around the circular crucible which fills the entire top half of your aura. Then in a similar way say "So Below," only here you will visualize a second snake as an arc of white energy below you and sweeping over from left to right along the bottom half of the outer rim of the octagram and you will simultaneously intone "Achamoth." You should now have a white snake above you and another below you, they form an outer rim around your octagram aura. The colour white contains all colours and so represents all the energies used in the ritual.

7. Say, "to accomplish the miracles of the one thing" and then you will intone a long drawn out AUM as the white snakes of energy above and below you bite each others tails and encircle the energy while turning around you as if on the outer rim of a wheel. As they encircle you, they shrink down and pull in the white energy, encompassing it and condensing it, thus creating a ball of white energy in the crucible. Then intone AUM once again, the snakes are still spinning around the crucible but in their minimum size around it's circumference and visualize the astrological Earth symbol in translucent iridescence and overlaid on the ball of white energy, then intone AUM a third time and visualize this ball spinning. (If making a sigil these last two steps will be identical, remember that according to Gnostics, the 72 colours all come out white in the end.)

Distillation – The Rite of Purification

The intention of this ritual is to purify the energy according to your intention, to purify your intentions for the sigil in general and thus you use this ritual to attain gnosis. In western Alchemical art, distillation is the process which is most obviously like Kundalini Yoga and there are various chakra systems given. In Taoist alchemy too, the process of distillation is intimated by a traditional meditative technique called "The 'Microcosmic Orbit'" which some claim was invented by Fu Xi. The intention for Taoists was the creation of a light body, but also to create immortality and it is one of the best known practices used by these alchemists. A great book on this is "The Secret of the Golden Flower" which explains all this and more and is relevant in terms of this chapter as a whole. Unlike Kundalini Yoga the chi, or pranic energy is driven up the back with inhalation, then it is directed back down the front of the body back to the base of the spine. While the Chinese have gone in to more detail about the energies of the bodies and nervous system than anyone I know of, (as with Qigong and acupuncture etc) in this exorcise they primarily work with three chakra like centres, though they do also speak of less important points around the body as the energy circulates. These three centres are depicted as ovens or cauldrons, and as we have seen magickal cups are certainly important to the primordial Tantric alchemy. (See the book, Taoist Yoga: Alchemy & Immortality by Lu K'uan Yu) As with something like a "soxhlet" used for distilling essential oils, the light is purified as it moves up from the lowest cauldron to the middle cauldron in the heart and finally on to the highest which is in the brain. This idea of three cauldrons in the body is also remarkably close to a Celtic conception of this, as described in the text, "The Cauldron of Poesy."

The Chinese practice is also known as the "circulation of light" as it seeks to purify the light, this of course brings to mind the Qabbalistic ritual I have already mentioned, which is often used in conjunction with the middle pillar. What is more, the Sepher Yetzirah (Ch 3) says that "god" associates the three "mother letters" Mem, Aleph and Shin with the human body as a microcosm, assigning Mem to the belly, Aleph to the chest and Shin to the head. At the end of Chapter 2 we read, "He hewed, as it were, immense column or colossal pillars, out of the intangible air, and from the empty space. (Chaos) And this is the impress of the whole, twenty-one letters, all from one the Aleph." At the start of Chapter 3 we read, "The three mother letters [Aleph, Mem and Shin] are the foundations of the whole; and resemble a Balance, the good in one scale, the evil in the other, and the oscillating tongue of the Balance between them." On page 96 Aryeh Kaplan explains this and shows that Aleph is the scale, Mem is the merits (Hanged man) and Shin is the sins, (Judgement card) which of course brings to mind the scale of Libra, but even the scale of Anubis weighed by the feather of Maat on one side and the heart on the other. (Remember Eliphas Levi thought the Sepher Yetzirah is about Egyptian mysteries) Now we know Aleph is the vertical axis of the cube and so the column, but this column is also made of Air which is the designation of Aleph. Aleph is also a scale and Libra is also an air sign, but another connection may be seen in that some Kabbalists link the letter of Libra, Lamed to a floating tower. This then is the floating tower of the Zohar, and also the floating pillar on the cornerstone in Solomon's temple, but if the tower acted like the ark as in the Paraphrase of Shem, as the value of Lamed is 30 it would also fit with the ark and also the number of Gnostic aeons etc.

With all this in mind I have assigned three cauldrons to the body, the first is found from the base of the spine to the navel and is basically the crucible cauldron we have already been working with. This cauldron corresponds to the principle of Salt and functions to generate energy or transmute energy and is associated with the stomach and digestive tract. This cauldron is the first to be purified so that we know we are working with the right energies and exclude those which are not in resonance with the intention. The second cauldron is found in the heart area and is associated with Quicksilver, it is surrounded by the two snakes which given their Solar and Lunar natures direct it's polarities until we find balance. This cauldron is how we feel about an energy, it is our own energetic polarity in response to a metaphysical energy, in terms of sigils, it is how we feel about the intention and it's subconscious connotations. This needs to be purified so that we overcome doubt and have no fear that our intentions will not manifest, so through this we become detached from the outcome of our ritual and no longer "lust after results." The third cauldron is visualized in the head as the brain and is representative of Sulphur, as the brain is the home of the spiritual energies and consciousness we work with. We purify this to attain the fullest gnosis and to achieve the philosopher's stone, as especially in the brain and through this we can physically augment the brain through the addition of the energies purified from below. (Remember, the stomach, heart and brain all have neurons) When the energies in the Sulphur cauldron are purified we achieve single pointed concentration on our intention, if making a sigil this intention is symbolized as the talisman mantra, but in this case we focus on Sophia/Wisdom made tangible and use the AUM mantra. So to make a sigil in the ritual below, use the talisman mantra instead of AUM.

1. Now the energies we fermented are concentrated as a ball inside the crucible/salt cauldron, visualize this cauldron extending from the base of the spine to the sides of the hips to the height of the belly button. On the octagram it includes the genital region of the triquetra, this triquetra generates the energies while the crucible contains them. Imagine now that this ball of energy is being heated, you do not need to feel heat so much but visualize the energy turning to a luminescent liquid which starts to boil. With hands in Salt mudra, do the four fold breath 3 times intoning AUM on the exhalation to heat this energy, then continue doing this breath and upon inhalation visualize some of the white energy liquid becoming steam and going up the spine until it reaches the head. After inhaling you hold your breath for the same count, and see the steam condense back into liquid as "brain dew," then as you exhale to the same count, see the liquid come down the front of your body until it drips back into the Salt cauldron. Then you will hold your lungs empty for the same count and this will reheat the liquid and start the circulation over again.

2. When first trying this, repeat the circulation according to the breath a few times, the white energy is the compound of all the elements or variable's you have been working with and at this stage you should try to get a feel for the gestalt feeling of all these variables. Then as you inhale visualize a little bit of the steam condensing in the quicksilver cauldron in the heart, the diameter of this cauldron is the distance of your two nipples, the base is the solar plexus and the rim is the bottom of the throat/top of the rib cage. The rest of the steam will go back to the Salt cauldron, but will be recirculated until you feel all of the liquid finds it's way to the quicksilver cauldron. Do not rush this, when you feel in your gut that the compound energies are intimately related to your intention, you are done purifying them and they will all be in the Quicksilver cauldron.

3. Now we do much the same thing, with hands in Quicksilver mudra using the four fold breath, visualize the steam going up the back and down the front as liquid and recollecting it in the quicksilver cauldron. Here you must examine your feelings about the intention, in this case your feelings about enlightenment. What resistance do you have? What is it you fear? How can you be comfortable and loving if your intention does not manifest? As you examine and face and overcome all fears and doubts and resistance regarding your intention, visualize part of the energy steam condensing into the Sulphur cauldron. Once you have no attachment, no desire or repulsion regarding the intention and know in your heart that it will indeed manifest, then the Sulphur cauldron which is your skull will be full.

4. This time with hands in Sulphur mudra, according to the four fold breath, visualize the liquid being heated in the bottom of the skull, it turns to steam and rises to the top of the skull, it condenses and as you intone mantra and exhale, some of it goes down the front of your body and eventually refills the Salt cauldron crucible. Try your best to quiet your mind and focus only on AUM or for sigils, the talisman mantra, in this case you should not count in your mind the breath, but try your best to keep the four parts equal in length. By the end your only thought should be AUM and you should be in a pretty high state of gnosis with single minded concentration, but we will add to this in congelation. When all you know in your mind is the mantra, then you are done and the liquid is returned to the Salt cauldron.

Congelation - The Rite of Crystallization

Intention is to take the energies generated and solidify them according to the intention of the ritual, then the energies are placed in the talisman. First you form a cube around you, then the snakes will move around the ball of energy to help solidify the energy, then you direct the energy into the crystal ball, or for sigils the talisman. (After this ritual you can perform any other Occult operations you might do, for example skrying or astral projection using DMT or Salvia, or you might engage in some form of sex magick. While anointing the talisman with semen or menses is a good idea before burning it, this is optional, especially in terms of having a partner. If you want a more traditional Gnostic ritual, in some cases, as with making the philosopher's stone as an entheogenic potion, you might want to do the sex magick at the end of Conjunction, then add semen and menses to the potion you make. While I have written the formula to not need a sigil, or rely on entheogens, in this case, you would make a sigil for your intention to make the philosopher's stone, or use previously consecrated entheogens, then add them during the Fermentation ritual. I suggest you use the entheogens of the Sun and Moon, you may also add the entheogen of Mercury, but if you cannot get both the Sun and Moon at the same time, use simply Mercury. Of course the more entheogens you mix, the less dose needed for each! If making a sigil for any other purpose, it is best to do the sex magick after the congelation ritual, then anoint the talisman and burn it in the cauldron, to my knowledge menses is not flammable and even semen can be troublesome, so you might want the help of some high proof alcohol, lit by the flame from the spirit candle from the calcination ritual.)

1. Hands in prayer mudra around navel crucible, doing four fold breath to count of 8 and intoning Sophia (or talisman mantra) visualize the ball of energy in centre slowly expanding till the crucible is absolutely full and the energy actually covers the whole crucible so that all you see is the energy.
-3 full breath cycles
2. Still doing four fold breath, as you inhale, visualize a ball of white energy forming above your head at the tip of Top Mercury. As you hold your breath visualize this ball hardening into a gem, then as you exhale, visualize a ball of white energy forming below you at the tip of Bottom Mercury, and as you wait with your lungs empty, visualize this ball hardening as well.
3. Then we do the same thing in front and behind us at the borders of the magick circle, but at the height of our belly button, inhaling seeing white energy ball in front, holding as it hardens, exhaling as energy forms in back, holding empty lungs as it hardens.
4. Then we do the same for the right and left at the edges of the circle, inhaling for the right side, holding as it hardens, exhaling for the left side, holding as it hardens. (Sepher Yetzirah has the letters YHV in permutations which are intoned at each face, these can be used as mantras if you want)
5. As you inhale visualize a line of energy as thick as the gems forming between the front and back gems, (X axis) then as you hold breath visualize this line of energy also hardening, but keep the energy in the salt crucible unhardened. As you exhale do the same with the side gems, making a line crossing the first, (Y axis) then as you hold your lungs empty, visualize the line of energy hardening.
6. On the next four fold breath, as you inhale see a line of white energy going from the bottom Mercury to the top Mercury, then as you hold hold your breath see this line crystalizing and hardening. You should now have the ball of energy in your navel crucible surrounded by 6 lines from the 6 faces, making 3 axes but separated in the crucible by the ball of energy. Here you will exhale quickly and forcefully all at once and as you do so you will see the lines of energy going to their respective faces and as quick as your breath, forming the six faces of the cube around you in white energy.
7. For your next breath, as you inhale and then hold your breath, just as your stomach should be sucked in with this practice, see the cube shrink down, as you exhale and hold your lungs empty, see the walls of the cube grow brighter. After 3 breaths like this, the cube should be almost blindingly bright and should contain the ball of energy within the crucible and in fact becomes merged with it as it's container.
8. Where the Z axis was, a Caduceus staff is now visualized, with wings in the head as the brain emanating from a ring around your third eye which looks like the circular head of the Mercury symbol atop the staff. As you inhale for your next breath, visualize the white snakes rising up the centre column along the spine and twisting around it as with a caduceus, they twist around the cube but also climb up further, they twist around the heart and go up further. As you hold your breath the snakes stay at the top in the skull, bringing up their whole bodies and forming a circle as they bite each others' tails and horizontally chase each other CW around the third eye sun disk, or ball top part of the caduceus. These snakes then form a ring around the caduceus and as you exhale see them descending down in this ring formation, till they surround the energy cube, encircling it clockwise. (This is like the Iyngge wheel as it goes down the string/staff/spine, there no need to visualize the actual cauldrons at this point, but the cube is still inside the salt cauldron.) As they encircle it, intone "Sophia" (or talisman mantra) and visualize the cube congealing and solidifying, but as your breath runs out the snakes return to the bottom of the spine, and chase each other there as you hold your lungs empty. I do this breath at least 3 times to the count of 8, then I do one more breath, but before snakes go down, with hands in Mercury mudra I pull the hardened energy cube out of my body crucible and put in to the crystal ball, (or talisman on the crystal ball) intoning a few more times the appropriate mantra.

Requiem of Lawless Resurrection

Anarchy the alpha and the omega,
As above so below, through the golden ratio,
Broken through by the boundless centrifuge,
Round corners of the wheel of time and space
Spokes united in the navel of the Earth,
Secret fire a singularity of virgin whore wisdom,
With two polarities it is one thing in the heart
A “child of Earth and of starry heaven”
Balanced in reflection twin spirals round the spine
Twisted round the crucible, a step of the caduceus ladder
The mirrored head and tale of the dragon eating itself in iteration
Unified opposites wrapped in the coils of coitus,
Forming the three fold principle, the anatomy of the creative process
Giving birth to the microcosmic quintessence
Sensory images a synecdoche of Chaos in the iris of the all seeing third eye,
A cosmic egg the gift of Thoth Hermes, growing as the seed of gnosis, Laid in a nest in the centre of the elements of the star of creation,
Anarkhos crowning the fifth, the context for the processes of the middle region,
Emanating as an ideal aura which through eight fold expression circumscribes all,
A fiery horizon with the mane of a lion,
A circle squared by a torus in an octagram opening as a tesseract hypercube,
The doorway through to the aeon of a cup bearing woman
Dipped within is the head of a serpent held by the talons of an eagle,
Crushed underfoot in to the waters of Mnemosyne
Milking venomous pure knowledge to overflow as the fountainhead of freedom,
The tincture of the philosophers, fertilizing so that all might have the stone
The bridge from mystery through truth to the world of the outlaws, Hatching the egg grows as the tree that holds the worlds,
And from this sight you take hold of the serpent, to become the forgotten thirteenth sign,
The one who does not fear the guardian and climbs the branches of knowledge
Love who is pure will and with time all things are inevitable
From Barbelo to Achamoth the circle of anarkhos is the temple of life,
An astral launchpad for the hemispheres of mind which form the body of light
The doorway to the land of the true unbroken free, the wild folk of Chaos.
The home of the wise and the spirits of nature's embrace
It is the garden of awareness from which grows the fruit of all things
Nourishment for the seeds of the next generation,
All times united by choice, so what the future holds,
Is the world and what you do with it.

Here ends the Chronicles of Anarchy and the knowledge revealed to me by Dysnomia.
