

WHAT'S HAPPENING WITH 'THE LEFT' AT THE MOMENT?

No one worth their salt(ing the local McDonalds) is going to post about their activities on the internet to a degree wherein they can be used against said person, or if they are they are intentionally vague about it. You know what I think? I think 'the left' as it exists is basically been nearly fully re-routed away from actual revolutionary organizing by way of irony poisoning and reformism. What you see on the surface internet isn't the whole story. People IRL are continuing to prepare for a much higher degree of depression, the people, the masses if you will, are much more primed to accept a new social contract, everyone from the youth pastor to the supermarket worker to the guy running the corner store (and the guy running that store corner) is being squeezed, unemployment is going dummy right now while essentially no new jobs are being created.

No vanguard party though, lot of larp happening I'm gonna keep it a buck, the conversations I have with people who are not terminally online leftists are much more soaked in the juices of insurrection, but it remains to be seen if people are going to commit to the bit. It's a strong juxtaposition to hear people IRL talk about how bleak things are, in comparison to what I can only assume are suburbanites online complaining about "treatlers" and people being "inherently reactionary" (because actually talking to people is hard!) Irony poisoned nihilism in our own spaces that trickle into how we move about the world as (would-be) revolutionaries.

Damn near anyone who has seen any footage out of Palestine is blackpilled on the whole reformism thing. I mean I've dead ass had people who have never even heard of "guerilla warfare" start talking like that just out the blue. But again, no vanguard party. Do we even need one? Remains to be seen, and is of much debate. I've moved back and forth on that position over the last two years and still have a lot of thoughts there.

The people who have read all the books and spent the last watching well paid youtubers talk their talk are inactivated and perhaps demoralized, the people who haven't read shit are waiting for leadership, or at least that's what Huey would say. Lots of fell for it again awards being handed out to people who live in NY as of late, hope the rent freeze is worth advocating for regime change in the global south. We'll keep seeing this cycle I think, reformist politician goes viral and is pushed heavily by all your favorite dog shocking streamers. Looking like we've got some big sails but our wind keeps getting sucked out of em. We'll keep seeing brown people killed enmasse, or sent to black sites, or ripped from their families while mayoheads on the internet proclaim "nothing ever happens".

Gutrot leftism, we've drank the Street Trash liquor and our ability to actualize our belief systems even within a hyper local context has melted away. So I guess what I'm saying is: Anyone who's seriously organizing against the regime isn't talking about it openly, and in the void of this we are left with a hodgepodge mixture of reformism, nihilism and well paid patreon accounts.