

It's dirt weed—not good shit, strong mid at best—but you got a good deal on it. These people are drunk. They don't give a fuck. You sell each nickel for $15 to $20. You take that cash and use it to buy another zip. Now you're in the game. This is how I was paying my car note for a long time. If you sell each nickel for $15 to $20, you're looking at a cool $440 profit. That's after buying the first zip. If you just wanna cut out and make your money, do this once. But for it to matter, it's gotta be a repeat hustle. Take 28 grams, multiply that by $20, subtract $120 for the cost of the ounce—that's $440. Then take another $120 away 'cause you gotta buy the next pack with the profits from the first.

It helps when you've got upstart income. You've got the money to buy the sack, go to the party, have the clothes, the outfit. There's a little social network game to it, but once you're in, it's not hard to make some money. Now, I'm being a little hyperbolic with the prices. If you're selling a nickel for $20, chances are the person buying it is wearing boat shoes and a polo. But it's absolutely possible to sell that nickel for $10 or $15 and still come out on top. That's literally how the shit works. Just keep in mind: motherfuckers will try to rob you. Motherfuckers will try to finesse you. And you'll need to handle business like a G when that happens.

But here's the move: you're gonna take advantage of what I call the Six Flags phenomenon. You know how a case of water is like $5, but a single bottle at Six Flags costs $8 or $9? People pay that shit 'cause it's convenient. It's there. So, you're at a house party in the Domain in Austin, Texas—the richest part of Austin. Someone wants to smoke. Okay, well, you've got a backpack full of little baggies. You took a hair straightener, sealed it up, and broke down a whole zip into nickel bags. Now, you're gonna go to this party and move that whole pack. If you pull this off, you got the zip for $120.

If you really wanna know how that shit goes, let me break it down for you. You're gonna need some plastic baggies. You're gonna need some weed—not that good good, but some decent shit, you know what I mean. And you're gonna need to get yourself situated in a place where you know parties are happening. But I'm not talking about just any party. Don't go to the hood trying to do this shit, 'cause you're gonna get robbed, brother. You're robbing people with these prices, so you gotta be smart. A nickel bag is 0.5 grams. The average price for a gram if you're selling on the ground is about $10.

AS THE ECONOMY CONTINUES TO CRASH, HERE'S HOW TO MAKE SOME CASH FLIPPING NICKEL BAGS

Now you're making $320 per run. That's a good fucking return on your investment. And that's if you're only flipping the nicks for $10 each, with the right finesse, you can double this profit. Here's another thing: once you become the dude with the weed, you'll get invited to more parties. Even if you're just sitting there finessing motherfuckers. What I would do is bring some blunts, smoke on the patio, and be like, "Yo, you wanna hit this?" Next thing you know, they're asking, "You got any more of this shit?" Yeah, bro. Open up the backpack, make your money, make your deal. That's the whole finesse.
